CATHOLICISM.

The following article contains, in our opinion, matter of fact and matter of serious import to the friends of Republican government.

The editor of this paper, suggested last year, the possibility, that as the Catholics were losing power in Europe, the Pope might be turning his eyes to America, with a hope of establishing it here and of ultimately transfering the seat of the Beast to this country.

How far his anticipations in this respect may extend may be doubtful, but we do not hesitate to say that every movement of the Catholics strengthens our suspicions, and we now find that the writer of the article below boldly avows this as his opinion; and certainly the facts which he gives go very far to support it.

We sincerely believe that the day is not distant when the political power of Papists in this country will be felt, will be seen and acknowledged, and deprecated as one of the greatest curses our nation has ever experienced. Nothing can arrest or avert this evil, but the united exertions of Protestants, in disseminating the Scriptures and enlightening the minds of the rising generation in the truths of the Gospel. The Battle is to be fought in the valley of the Mississippi. It has already commenced. On the effort now making for the establishment of Sabbath Schools there, it will ultimately depend, whether the Protestant religion or that of the worshippers of Images shall prevail. Surely patriots, philanthropists and Christians have enough, we should think, to awaken and call into exercise all their energies in this great and benevolent interprize.

EFFORTS OF THE JESUITS IN THE U. STATES.

I have numerous documents in my possession which confirm the fact that the Jesuits, driven from Europe, turned their attention to the West and have conspired to gain the American Republic to their interests. This plan is to secure the valley of the Mississippi originally leavened by a Catholic population. Immense funds have been placed, for this purpose, at their disposal.—The Catholic powers of Europe contribute bounteously to this object. In the Catholic and political circles at Rome, a year ago, the subject of general conversation among the satellites of the Pope was the best and most efficient means to gain speedily the ascendancy in the U. States. It was taken for granted that they would gain it. & we have evidence that lately in a meeting in Pittsburgh, the Catholic bishop uttered these words to the Protestant ministers, "Gentlemen, you are too late in your measures to secure the valley of the Mississippi to the Protestant cause, you should have begun 20 years ago; we have gained our object; and we now bid you defiance." And it is well known that the Catholics are finishing a Cathedral in Pittsburgh, which is one of the most splendid edifices in the United States. And the Pope has contributed $50,000 to that building alone. This is well known in Pittsburgh. I would also state that in the western states they are building chapels in each prominent situation, even where there is scarcely a single Catholic family, and they are at no loss for funds. From New Orleans to Baltimore, says Lorenzo Dow, the number of Roman chapels and schools and academies, now going forward, is almost incredible. The Jesuits, even now, have the control of the best male and female academies along the Mississippi, from St. Louis to New Orleans. And I have in my possession several anecdotes that would pain the soul of every sincere Protestant. You have no idea of the diligence and activity of the Jesuits. I heard it stated, a few days ago, that in one vessel from France no less than fifteen Jesuit Priests arrived on our shores. They proceeded directly to the valley of the West. The Jesuits lately bought an Episcopal church in Hartford. The money was paid and the receipt was taken by the Austrian Consul! Another Catholic power paid the money and took a receipt for another building, a few months ago. In Monroe county, Michigan, the Catholics are so strong that they show their genuine spirit, and actually control the elections.

I have a letter before me, from that place, stating that the priests contrive to have their tickets printed on colored paper, and all who vote against them are thence marked and denounced.

And the increase of the Papists in the United States is beyond the belief of those who have not attended to the subject. They count from 35,000 to 40,000 in New York city. They are already the most numerous denomination in Philadelphia, that is to say, they have 12 distinct and crowded congregations every Sabbath, in 4 large chapels. That is, the 12 officiating priests say mass 12 times; three times in each chapel, three distinct congregations who succeed each other, morning, afternoon and evening, and they are building two new chapels.—The Catholics are in the habit of distributing some 20,000 to 30,000 religious papers weekly. They have the Jesuit of Boston; a paper at Hartford, Con.; The Truth Teller of this city; the Metropolitan of Baltimore, and the Catholic Miscellany of Charleston. They have papers in the West. In a word, I have now before me letters from Boston & all over the United States, to New Orleans and St. Louis, stating the astonishing pains, zeal, activity and success of the Jesuits in making converts to the Roman superstition. And I am warranted to say, that if they increase in the same proportion for the next 50 years, the population of these states being, say 50 millions, the Roman Catholics will have a majority in the West. Then comes a Catholic government and the overthrow of your institutions.

This is the very idea advanced by the famous ex-bishop Pradt, in his admirable volume on Jesuitism, written in French, "The Jesuits, says he, "expelled 37 times from the European governments, turn, now, their zeal to the United States of North America: and soon will it be seen," says that truly wise man, "whether they shall not embarrass the government of the United States."

It is not generally known that besides the "De Propaganda" of Rome, the "De Propaganda" of France has been the most efficient in France and our county, and spreading Catholic tenets. The blow received by the Catholics in France, has been very fatal to their cause. But so much the worse for us. They turn their surplus funds and surplus labors, with a stimulated zeal, to convert the United States, now that country is nearly lost to them.

THE SENTIMENTS OF CATHOLICS WITH REGARD TO THE SABBATH.

We some time since, published a series of letters headed, "from the inside of a Roman Catholic College," signed by S. C. Snyder of Charleston, S. Carolina. He has been answered by a Mr. Pise, a Catholic Priest. The whole of it is a complete specimen of the sophistry of Jesuitism. We have only room for the following extract which shows the views of Catholics with regard to the Sabbath.

It is true we did occasionally walk over to the race ground, and once or twice witnessed a race: but we were kept at a distance from the crowd, and under the immediate inspection of the prefect. As to "bad words" you know as well as I do, that the utmost severity was exercised against the boy, who was heard to swear, blaspheme, or use indecent language. Indeed, expulsion was the ordinary chastisement of such a delinquent. It is pitiful to read the observations which you introduce respecting the custom of playing ball, &c. on Sundays, after the duties and devotions of the day. Is it not infinitely better for boys to occupy themselves at such exercises within the retirement of the college walls, aloof from the city, and with due decorum, than to loiter about, as is the case in some of your Protestant colleges, from house to house, from tavern to tavern, indulging in vices, the very names of which were unheard of in our Alma Mater. You may cite as many passages from scripture as you please, you will never be able to convince an ingenuous mind of any thing like impropriety in those innocent Sabbath amusements.

Extract from a letter written by Mr. Colany Nee, of Leme to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church.

"In France and Switzerland the awakening is scarcely begun, while in yours it appears already in full splendor. Still we are in circumstances well suited to bring it into our souls, and to show us visibly that our God makes every thing contribute to the advancement of his reign.—Our brethren of Vaud and Berne are, by his goodness, about to enter again into the enjoyment of all their rights. A new era as to religion has also begun in France, since the astonishing revolution in July. The obstacles to the spread of the gospel, which the ancient government always suffered more or less to remain, have almost entirely disappeared. It is no longer necessary to obtain permission to spread the word of life and hold religious meetings. Already three new protestant churches, which do not receive any stipend from the State, have been organized at Paris. Others of the same kind have been and will be formed in the country. Like those which I serve, they follow the same discipline as yours with respect to the holy supper. We admit to the table of the Lord only those who appear to have experienced the efficacy of his sacrifice, and to have felt the sanctifying influence of his Spirit. With you, I am sensible that this discipline is intimately connected with the purity of the church, and the extension of its limits. It is truly desirable that it should be introduced into all the Protestant churches of France; but alas! it meets with great opposition in them, although it is conformable to their ecclesiastical discipline. Notwithstanding this, it is still considered a dangerous innovation, and many minds have already been excited against it. Yet this opposition, and that which the gospel meets, more or less, in all unregenerated hearts, do not prevent its advancing in the greater part of our churches. Almost every where the people begin to rise from that lifeless state, into which they were sunk. Many souls are renewed in Christ. Indifference and credulity daily lose some of their partisans. The old doctrines of the reformation resound in many pulpits. The work of God is spread abroad. Domestic worship is re-established. Bible classes are formed, and Sunday Schools organized. Our religious societies prosper.

A religious movement most favorable to the Gospel, begins to be manifest, among the Catholics of this kingdom. A large number of them have separated themselves forever from the Romish church. Some have entered into our communion, and others have formed the new FRENCH CATHOLIC CHURCH, not paid by the state. Among the latter there are some converted priests. At first there were but about ten ecclesiastics, one of whom was a curate who served the papists of one of my parishes, and whom I believe to be truly renewed by the Holy Spirit. After a little while, about fifty more priests joined the others, to establish the principles of their new church. Their first step was to shake off the yoke of the Pope and of their bishops, to constitute themselves an independent church, to celebrate worship in French, and by means of the press to offer to serve, gratuitously, those communes which would receive them, and adopt their principles. This did well. Their voice was echoed in France. Demands were made upon them for clergymen; even from within the Pyrenees; and they are already unable to furnish as many as are asked for; so greatly is the number, of them increased and increasing daily, both at Paris and in the provinces. All this it is true does not prove that their hearts are already renewed by the Holy Spirit, and purified in the blood of the Lamb. The love of novelty, the spirit of independence, and hatred of Jesuitism may have had much to do in producing this change, but a great actual advance towards true religion has been made, and a terrible blow given to popery in this kingdom. In vain the Beast and the Dragon strive to stop this defection, and forbid the reading of the Bible. All their efforts are useless. The religious movement advances, clearly, day by day, in the minds of men, in spite of the numerous enemies and obstacles that it meets. Never have I seen so great a return towards the Gospel; never so many doors opened, never so many religious books sold among the Catholics. We cannot procure sufficient supply from Paris and London, so great is the sale in this country. This is the more remarkable, as there is extreme distress among us, occasioned by the total prostration of commerce, and the rumors of war and revolution that are unceasingly circulated! There is much ground for hope that God will make use of this distress and these political agitations to draw souls to Him, who being rich became poor to enrich us, and who alone can make us truly free. Let us then hope, act, and pray."

Time.—An Indiana paper complains that $30,000 have been paid to pedlars in that state, within six months, for wooden clocks; and calls for legislative intervention. They are generally sold at $30 each.—Sav. Georgian.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

THE BLACKSMITH'S BOY.

When I lived in N——, I used often to notice a very worthy, industrious blacksmith, who kept his shop on the corner of Gray street.—Here he was always found at work, early in the morning, and late at night, and always singing, or talking with some one, as he worked. I had not passed that way many times, before I found out that his songs, which he took so much pleasure in singing, were all religious hymns; and I have often thought as I heard him, 'that man's thoughts are in heaven more than on earth.' A happier man I never saw.

One day, as I was passing, I saw a man coming down the other street, to whom I wished to speak, and I stopped right against the door of the blacksmith's shop, till he came up. The good man was busy as ever at his work, putting his irons into the fire, pulling them out and hammering them into different shapes, while a little boy, with whom he was talking, was blowing the bellows. Just as I stopped before the door, I heard the little boy say—"Well but, father, I could not tell what he meant, when he said that 'the wind of prayer must blow all the time on the heart, or religion would go out.' I thought it all over and over, and I was afraid I never should know what it meant." "Your teacher," said the father, "did not make his language quite so plain as he ought to, but what he said was very true, and very good. You remember in the 3d Chapter of John, which I read before prayers this morning, we are told that we must be born again before we can enter the kingdom of heaven; and the good Saviour then says that being born again is like the wind. We cannot see how it comes, or where it comes from, but only what it does. Now this wind is the Holy Spirit, which God breathes into the heart, and makes it new, just as he breathed on the dry bones, that Ezekiel tells us about, and made them live. Do you remember where?" "O yes, father, it is in the 37th Chapter, and it was in a great valley." "Well, when the Holy Spirit comes, like a breath of wind, into the heart, the heart becomes, like these coals on the hearth, all afire, and then the heart is said to be warm with love to God. Now can you tell me why these coals do not go out?" "Because, father, I keep blowing the bellows all the time." "Well, now, prayer in the heart, is just like blowing the bellows on these coals,—it keeps the Holy Spirit always breathing there, and so keeps the fire of religion always burning." "O yes, father, now I understand, and when God promises, in the lesson I said last Sabbath, to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him—he means that as long as any body keeps praying, the Holy Spirit will keep blowing into his heart—don't it, father?" "Yes, my son; and the good hymn says,

'For only while we pray we live.'"

The man I was waiting for now came up, and I heard no more, but the good father broke out into a happy strain, and sung the verse, from which this line is taken, as if he knew all about it, and felt it in his heart.

ANECDOTE OF TWO LITTLE CHILDREN.

I have lately heard of two little children, who were seen by the person who told me the fact, sitting together with the bible before them, reading and weeping over that affecting passage in the prophecy of Jeremiah, "The harvest is past, and the summer is ended, and we are not saved!" They were mourning in bitterness of spirit, that they had so long neglected the care of their souls, and trembled, fearing the time of God's mercy to them, had gone by forever.

Their cries for mercy were afterwards heard, and they became interested in that salvation, which alone can save us from the power and consequences of sin. And they love to tell how sweet it is to believe in Jesus, and how much more happiness their hearts now feel, than they ever felt before. They would fain persuade every child to come and be made happy like them, and consecrate their lives to the service of that gracious Saviour who loves to hear the cries of children, and save them from their sins.

I suppose no little boys and girls who will read this can be younger than these children; And I hope they will resolve to follow this example, and immediately give their hearts to Jesus Christ lest they become forever hardened in sin.—Sab. School Herald.

VALUE OF SAB. SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

A little boy, seven years old, had been sitting long silent one evening, when he suddenly spoke, "Mother, I know one thing." "What is that!" said his mother. "I will never, while I live, drink a drop of spirits, or make a bet, or buy a lottery ticket," and his face flushed with earnestness as he spoke. "That is a good resolution," said his mother; "but what made you think of it now?" "Something I read in my Sabbath school book," said he, "and I shall never forget it."—Ibid.

HOW TO PLEASE YOUR TEACHERS.

If you wish to please your teachers, always go to the Sabbath school having your lessons well studied, and then be very attentive to all that is said to you. I have seen some scholars, while the teacher was explaining the lesson, and talking with them, look at pictures in their books, whisper, eat apples, and look about the school. Now this is very wrong. It makes your teachers, who are laboring for your good, very unhappy.—S. S. Treas.

EARLY CONVERSIONS.

The pious man as he looks over the operations of Christendom, will not fail to rest his eye, with peculiar satisfaction, on efforts made for the young. In this field of benevolent enterprise he cannot but wish to see the energies of the church more powerfully enlisted; for the promises towards this interesting portion of community are, peculiarly, full and encouraging.

The object of this article is not to give information, for the writer is but a babe in knowledge, but to call the attention, especially of mothers, to what is already known upon the interesting subject of early conversion.

We have frequently presented to us a list of worthies who, in extreme youth, surrendered their hearts to God. Biography has, recently, added another—and while we look at the lamented Payson, weeping for sin at the age of three years, and then follow him through a life of such eminent usefulness, must not every mother awake to the important subject, and with strong crying and tears beseech God to help her to train up her children in the way they should go! And ought we not to institute a faithful inquiry into the causes which operate to prevent early conversions! The evidences of the times require holy men, men whose good habits have been forming from reason's earliest dawn—whose good purposes have grown with their growth and strengthened with their strength and they require women, who will walk before their households blameless, and who will train up their children for God. The foundation of such characters must be laid in childhood.

Should we not then seriously inquire in what way we may reasonably hope to gather these lambs into the fold of the true Shepherd! With diffidence a few things will be suggested, which in the mind of the writer, appear to operate as hindrances to early conversions.

The most prominent is, undoubtedly, unbelief. We limit the grace of God, and because we do not see how the great truths of our holy religion can be brought to the capacities of little children, we pronounce them too young to be the recipients of saving grace. If mothers would but make the attempt, they would find that nature had fitted them, wonderfully fitted them, for making all that is necessary to salvation, clear at a very early age.

Another thing is, we think too little of the extent and spirituality of the law of God, and too lightly of the sins of our children. We turn off our eyes from the requirements of God, and drawing the veil of parental tenderness over the judgment, become wilfully blind to their real condition. Is it not the duty of parents to be awake on this subject, and to feel more deeply for the sins of their children! When we look over the church, how few we see who seem to be seeking for their children, as the only object of real importance—a portion with the people of God: oh, here is indeed an obstacle, which we have no right to expect that even the grace of God will surmount. The Almighty has styled himself a jealous God.

If then mothers will shake off their unbelief, realise that even their little children are sinners—if they will, in language adapted to childhood, plainly and perseveringly present this subject, urging it home on the conscience of the child—daily manifesting by their whole deportment that they look upon their conversion as the business of life—while their whole souls are engaged in pleading for covenant mercies—there is not a doubt but there would be an entire change on the face of the moral world, and angels in heaven would rejoice in hosannahs from our babes. C. L. A.

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter from Steubenville, Ohio, in which is given a very interesting account of revivals of religion in that place and in Athens, in the State of Georgia. We are permitted to make a few extracts. —S. S. Instructer.

"I must tell you how the Lord has blessed the Sabbath school in this place. Last Sabbath was communion and thirty-eight came forward to join the church. Eleven of these were from the Sabbath school—ten teachers and one scholar, a little girl thirteen years old. It was a very interesting day to me, as it was the first time I sat down to the Lord's table in this western wilderness. How merciful and gracious is our Lord, in thus spreading a table for us, and permitting us to sit together in heavenly places in Christ, wherever our lot is cast in this world.

"A revival of religion commenced in Athens, a few days after —— arrived there, and she was permitted to rejoice over the conversion of an only son. There is a more powerful work of grace going on there, than ever was known in that part of the country before. It commenced in a Sabbath school, kept about four miles from Athens, by some of the students in college. In consequence of the state of feeling in that school, the session of the church in Athens thought proper to appoint a four days meeting. Then the delightful work began. The 4th day, when the meeting was to have closed, the house was crowded, and a large portico round the church was also full. One hundred and fifty persons came forward and asked the prayers of the church. After such a scene, Christians and ministers could not consent to dismiss the meeting and send the multitude away fasting. It was continued another and another day, and when my sister wrote, it was the eighth day, and the meeting had not broken up. The seventh day, two hundred had come forward, owning their guilt and wretchedness, and asking the prayers of Christians.

REVIVALS.

From the New-York Evangelist.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON REVIVALS. NO. XXIX.

Human devices in revivals.

Doubtless revivals are often obstructed and even terminated by human devices. These are contrary to that wisdom which is from above. They are inconsistent with the plain dictates of the Bible, and with the principles which are involved in Divine truth. Many persons are extremely fearful of every measure which they deem new in a revival. All such measures are at one proscribed as dangerous innovations and human devices. Such persons often fail to discriminate between what is really new, unauthorized by the Bible, and what is new merely to them, and on account of their own ignorance.—If they speak of revivals in which they have taken the direction or have borne an active part, they are almost sure to say that the measures employed and the exertions made, were free from human devices. It is truly astonishing to see what ignorance they often manifest. They condemn the very principles which are plainly revealed in the Word of God, because these principles are developed in those measures which they are pleased to denominate new, and to stigmatize by the opprobrious title, "human devices."

The measures which they assert are free from human devices, are those which accord with their own preconceived religious views and dogmas. But these views and dogmas are at a great remove from sound theology and from the simplicity of the Gospel. They have taken it for granted that their own views were right; and perhaps have never even thought that there could be an unhallowed admixture of human devices in the means and measures which they employ. Analyze their views of Scripture doctrines, and you will find that instead of having copied the plain simple, and therefore powerful exhibition of Divine truth, by which the Bible is characterized, they have cast their views in a theological mould, which has left deeply imprinted upon them, the stamp of human devices!—Examine closely the language they employ in relation to revivals and conversions, and you will find a wisdom which is not from above—you will find that they speak with great precaution, and are wonderfully guarded when inspired men did not feel themselves bound to be guarded but used great plainness of speech. And it is worthy of remark that those very persons who have deviated most from the simplicity of the Gospel, done most to darken counsels by words without knowledge, who are most idolatrously attached to their own dogmas and their own measures, and who trust most complacently in their own discernment, it is worthy of remark that such persons generally, are tremblingly alive to the purity of the Church, and are exceedingly fearful lest revivals and revival measures should be polluted by human devices.

In many cases where the measures employed in revivals, are reproachfully branded with the stamp of human devices, there is, in reality, a successful effort to free the truth from such devices, to restore it to its native simplicity, and to bring it to bear with unimpaired energy, upon the naked heart. I am not theorizing but recording matters of fact. And it is high time that the public, high time that religion was disabused in relation to this point, high time that some Edwards arose to detect and drag before the bar of public opinion those who are filching away the simplicity and power of the Gospel; and at the same time screening themselves by crying "thief—thief!" Thousands who have more self-complacency than discrimination, in their own views of Divine truth, most sadly entangle the sword of the Spirit by their own cumbrous trappings; and when others draw it forth, and are bringing it to bear with its sharp point and two edges upon the naked breast, they parry it off by crying; "dangerous errors"—"human devices!" How many impenitent sinners—how many ungodly professors have remained in all their impenitence and ungodliness, and have soothed their waking consciences to renewed and fatal slumbers by this syren song, that encourages and perpetuates the very evil which it so mournfully deprecates! A. R. A.

FOUR DAYS MEETINGS.

It is supposed by many, that meetings of this kind are uncommon in the Episcopal Church.—This is an entire mistake. In the Diocese of Maryland and Va. they have been held for years, though by the name "Association." For the last four or five years, they have been common in this Diocese, and have been attended with the most blessed effects. I use the word Four days, as that is the usual time among many denominations. Ours, however, have not been confined to this, or to any number. At one meeting of the "Association," held in the Parishes of Rev. Messrs. Bull, Clemson, and Brinkle, we were together nine days in succession last Autumn, having at least three services each day. Two years since, there was a three days meeting connected with St. Paul's, St. Andrew's, and St. John's Churches in this city, and it is purposed, God willing, to hold a similar meeting in the fall.—I well remember that the exercises were well attended, and the impression valuable. May I be permitted to suggest to any reader of this short article, who may be acquainted with the history of "Associations for special religious exercises," to give us some account of the origin and progress of those of Virginia and Maryland, and in some of the states composing the Eastern Diocese? Such a history at this time, with the detail of the method in which the religious exercises are conducted, would be highly useful at the present time. B.

PROGRESS OF REVIVALS.—A young gentleman writes from Andover, Mass. that the students returning to the theological seminary, bring delightful tidings of the commencement, increase and power of revivals in various portions of the country. The progress in the New-England States, especially, seems to increase rapidly.—Western Rec.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION PROMOTED BY TRACTS.

First Fruits of a Revival of Religion brought in by means of a tract.

The Rev. J. G. H. of North Carolina, applying for a grant of Tracts, urges the great destitution of several counties in the Eastern part of that State, of all the means of grace, especially the preached Gospel, and adds: I feel encouraged to make this application from the fact that tracts have been useful among us. A young lady, gay and thoughtless, was brought to serious reflection by reading a Tract. She is now rejoicing in the hope of the Gospel. She was the first fruits of a revival of religion. A number of others have since been awakened and brought, as we hope, to accept of Christ as their portion.

The Whiskey Burnt—and Four Souls Converted.

The Tract Earl of Rochester, says a Clergyman in the Connecticut Reserve, Ohio, was distributed in a very dissipated neighborhood, and one man was awakened by it. His wife, seeing his distress, began to think of her own state as a sinner; and not long after, another man and his wife, both of whom were intemperate, were greatly distressed in mind. The drunkard burnt up his whiskey and broke his jug, and the four are now indulging a hope of pardoned sin. Religious meetings are now established in the neighborhood, where before the means of grace were almost entirely neglected.

Tracts in a Revival of Religion in Massachusettss.

A lady of M——, Mass. says, never did I realize the value of tracts as in the revival of religion we have recently enjoyed. The Sinner Forewarned, the Day of Judgment, the Way to be saved, the Sinner Directed to the Saviour, and especially the Questions and Counsel, were blessed to the awakening and to the hopeful conversion and establishment of several individuals.

Revival of Religion in a Moral Waste, occasioned by Tracts.

The Secretary of the Auxiliary at M—— M——, N. Y. says, one of our members, after having read her Tracts, sent them into a destitute town where no religious meetings were held, and few, if any religious books read.—They were received with such eagerness, that neighborhoods collected together to hear them read, and for lack of hymn books sung the hymns upon the covers of the Tracts. A revival of religion commenced very soon, and when we last heard, a powerful work of grace was in progress.

An Anecdote for those who think Tracts useful only to Children.

In a remote part of my congregation, writes a clergyman of Virginia, there lives a man of great wealth, but who has been entirely without God in the world. Not long since, he received from a member of our church, the third volume of Tracts. He read one or two of them, and the impression they made upon his mind was so great, that he began to think of the salvation of his soul. He read a third, and sent to know if the other volumes could be obtained. Being informed that they could not for some months, he said to one of his family:—"I will shut up the book now, and read but one Tract a-day—I shall get through the book too soon. When he came to Dr. Payson's Tract, The Bible above all Price, (No. 81,) he said, "It ought to be written in letters of gold. I have read the Age of Reason until I believed the Bible to be a tissue of falsehoods—and now I believe it to be the word of God." This gentleman has ever since been a regular attendant on public worship; and many of those interested in his spiritual welfare, have hope that a work of Divine grace has been begun in his soul.

MISSIONARY.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Extract of an Address of Rev. Mr. Moffatt of Lattakoo.

"It had frequently been said, by persons unfriendly to the great cause of missionary exertion, that psalm-singing was all they taught the people; but he could appeal to their humble endeavors, to convince the prejudiced that missionaries did more than sing psalms, for in many instances; their efforts had the effect of turning almost devils into men.

"I speak from experience," continued Mr. M., "I appeal to the mission in which I am employed, and to the various stations which I have visited. I appeal to Lattakoo, where there is a church gathered from barbarians, who, a few years ago, were in an awful state of moral degradation, and on a level with the beasts that perish! I appeal to a well filled chapel, marked with decorum which would do honor to a British congregation. I appeal to the change which has been effected in the persons and habits of those residing in our station.

"It must be recollected that the Bechuanas are altogether ignorant of a future state. They suppose that all the pleasures, enjoyments, and honors, of this world terminate in annihilation. When the spirit leaves the body they suppose it has ceased to exist: and, if a Plebian's, the body is dragged away, and left a prey to beasts; and, if that of one more honorable, the body is committed to the grave, with many unmeaning ceremonies, while the females chant a dirge, deploring the eternal loss, and then return from the graves without one pleasing hope of immortality.

"The consequence of such a deplorable ignorance is that they participate in every species of sin, and think as little of plunging their spear into their neighbor's bosom, as of killing a dog.—A traveller among them like a bird of passage, may be led to form a favorable opinion of their humanity, their fidelity, and sense; but far different will be the judgment of those who have half the acquaintance with the native tribes which the missionaries possess. There you will see man tyrannizing over the females; the weaker vessels doomed to bear infirmities and afflictions of which their husbands are comparatively ignorant. There you will see the men reclining under the shade of a pleasant tree, while the females are preparing the ground, and sowing the seed, and gathering in the harvest. There you may see the mother of twins without compunction allow one to be strangled by the hand of her attendant, when it has just entered the world. If there be one of each sex, the weaker is cut off. Their minds are debased; they are earthly, sensual, and devlish. There might be a nation seen looking at a man called 'rain-maker' to open the windows of heaven, and cause it to rain upon the earth; and while such deceivers maintained their influence over the people, the missionaries were made the butts of their indignation, and were treated as the supposed cause of every evil which befell them.

"In endeavoring to convey a knowledge of true religion to the natives, we taught them that they were men, fallen and sinful men, and we exhibited to them the character of that God against whom they had sinned. We disclosed to them the doctrine of the eternal state. They were startled as if they had seen the Judge descend, the graves open, the dead arise, and the adjudication of the awful day. We unfolded to them the meaning of the gospel. In fulfilling the ministry committed to us, our faith was tried; and often have we hung our harps on the willows, and mourned over the condition of thousands who were saying to us 'away away,' and threatning to drive us back with the spear and with fire. One wave of affliction followed another; one cloud darker than another hung over our prospects, while we were exposed to the mockery and rage, of a lawless and independent people. Full oft have my worthy brother functionaries and myself prayed together for faith to maintain our posts, even though we appeared to spend our strength for nought. We felt determined never to leave our post, although our external resources should fail. In the mean time the language was acquired; portions of scripture translated; catechisms and hymns composed; and while our eyes were weary of looking upwards; while we were even yet praying; the blessing descended; it ran from house to house, from heart to heart, and, in a short time, the whole station seemed to be filled with prayer and praises.

"That season was one I cannot easily forget. It was indeed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Many received the truth, and a church was formed. The natives have acquired a taste for reading and writing, and are taught in their own language. We trust we have also taught them to hold converse with heaven, and to meet the king of terrors with unshaken faith.

"I wish I could take the mission and place it before you. You would see what would do your souls good and arouse you to increased exertions in the cause of missions. How great the change! The untutored savage, instead of entering the church with a wild stare, now decently enters the court of Jehovah, and listens with attention to the gospel of peace. How great the change in those that believe! I have seen the contrast in death-bed scenes. I have attended the couch of some of the more respectable and informed of the natives; but ah! how gloomy and how distracting! The untaught Bechuanna, on the article of death maintains profound silence. The subject of death is revolting to him, and if he happens for a moment to look at the gloomy prospect, his thoughts start back with horror. Far otherwise is the experience of those who have tasted of the powers of the world to come. I have recently seen the same people on the brink of the grave, rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God, telling their weeping brethren that they die not as the brutes, but die to live forever.

"They have been taught industrious habits, and to appreciate and be greatful for the boon which has been handed to them by British Christians. A temporary place of worship has been built free of expense to the society, but this being found insufficient, the foundation of a large building has been laid, to which many have subscribed of the little which they possess. A watercourse extending four miles in length, six feet wide, and from two to ten feet deep, has been ng, and is kept in order by a public subscription made on the station. The station is increasing in size. Its capabilities are great; its prospects are encouraging. The natives have now acquired an unbounded confidence in us—indeed they would trust their property and their lives in our hands. Wherever we travel we are viewed as friends, and even our names are sometimes used by travellers into the interior to ensure safety.

"Our own station is very frequently visited by parties of natives from the interior, and what they see, and the treatment they experience, inspire their confidence in us, and are preparing the way for the advances of the heralds of the cross. They now begin to appreciate our labors, and would deprecate our leaving their territories. We maintained our post when the natives themselves were driven from their homes by hostile bands; and when ourselves were surrounded by war, blood-shed and rapine. From this circumstance they consider us the lawful owners of the country.

"We have an extensive field of missionary labor. We have hundreds on the mission premises and thousands in the neighborhood. It must be recollected that the Buchannans congregate in towns which contain from one hundred to twelve thousand. They call for your sympathy, your assistance, and your prayers. I am persuaded that you have been gratified to hear that considerable portions of the scriptures have been translated into their language, and are ready for the press."

SOUTH SEAS.—EIMEO.

Extracts of a letter from Rev. J. M. Orsmond, dated Griffin Town, Jan. 13th, 1831, addressed to the Directors of the London Missionary Society.

During the past year, nearly 20 from among the vilest of the vile have come forth and have joined our church. Not one has been suspended or excommunicated. We have not as yet had one tainted with false doctrine among us; and those who have been sent here from Bunauia and Papeete, by the hand of what I consider persecution, because of their erroneous doctrine, have, without exception, been reclaimed, and are re-united with us as members. A little friendly dispassionate reasoning does more than fifty public judgments. I like to meet such poor deluded creatures on their own ground, if possible, and so carry the palm of victory in the hand of conviction. On the whole, I feel encouraged from a review of the past.

Rum has been brought to our people's doors in casks, but they would not buy it. As far as I can discover, only two of our church-members purchased it at all. One had four bottles, which he sold the next day for cloth; the other had ten which he bartered away for property.

Maoae's Death.—The Gospel of Jesus, indeed, is no fiction.—It drives ignorance from the mind, and enlightens our passage to the tomb; points to a glorious immortality, and shows to whom it is ensured Maoae, who has lately quitted this world of sorrow, was one of those whose office it was to rally dispirited warriors. Whole nights he used to go from house to house, to stimulate the halting, and give assurance from what some god had told him, of success in a coming war. From the day of his embracing the Gospel till the day of his death, he maintained a profession, which even the tongue of envy could not impeach. He was an ornament to the little sphere in which he acted. From the hands of our respected brother Henry he received the ordinance of baptism; but he has been a member with us ever since I came to Griffin Town; and from his intimate acquaintance with his language and country, I have been on the most familiar terms with him, and have seen him in all his relations. To the sacred ordinances of religion he always attended with apparent delight, and from his habit of treasuring up passages of Scripture in his mind, though his eyes were so bad that he could not read, he had obtained a sound knowledge of the great and essential doctrines of the Gospel. Several times he appeared near his end, when I always found him happy. The blessing which maketh rich was upon him. He did not know, he said, nor did he feel, that death had a sting. At length, age and increased infirmity brought him down. I often visited him, and never left him without observing the same placidity and contentment. Often did I feel shame to think that with all his privations, he never murmured in my hearing, while I, who am so much more comfortable, can hardly pass without it. God forgive my sin! On seeing that his end was fast approaching, I said to him, "Maoae, are you sorry that you ever cast away the lying gods, by which you used to gain so much property!" He was aroused from his lethargy and tears of pleasure sparkled in his eyes, while with vehemence, he said, "Oh, no, Otamoni!—oh, no, no, no. What! Can I be sorry for casting away death for life!—Whole nights I have walked about to encourage others in the devil's work, and had well nigh lost my own soul. I wonder that I was not levelled by club or spear before I heard of the name of the Messiah. He is my great rock, the fortification wherein my soul takes shelter from all foes."

I said, "Tell me on what you build your hopes of future bliss!" He said, "I am a vile man—my life has been vile; but a great king sent his ambassadors from the other side of the skies to our shores with terms of peace. We continued to fight, nor could we tell what those ambassadors wanted, for many years. At length Pomare obtained a victory—ordered all maraes to be broken up, and invited all his subjects to come and take shelter under the wing of Jesus, of whom those ambassadors spake, and who had given them victory. I was one of the first to do so. The blood of Jesus is my foundation. You tell us, that it is the only way to God. I believe that Jesus will save me. He is my staff now.—What I grieve at, is, that all my children do not love him. Had they known the distress we used to feel in the reign of the devil, they would be glad to take the Gospel in exchange for their follies. Jesus is the best king; he gives a pillow without thorns." Here he seemed overcome.

A little after, I said, "Maoae, are you afraid to die!" "No, no," he replied, with almost youthful energy; "The ship is in the sea, the sails are spread, she is ready. I have a good pilot, and a good landing place before me. My outside man and my inside man differ. Let the one rot till the trumpet-blowing time; but let my soul go to the throne of the Messiah."—Here the tears gushed into my eyes, I thought myself by the side of some experienced Christian in England, and said, in my heart' "in my last moments, may I feel as happy as this poor Tahitian feels."

Thrice blessed Gospel—thrice blessed people, who by means of Christian benevolence, are led to results so precious. Here is one going down to the shades of death supported by a hope full of immortality, and saying, "But for English Christians, I had died a miserable slave of sin." Will he not through eternity sing Alleluiah to God and the Lamb, because of the South Sea Mission!

Tuahine.—A short time since, a young man, named Tuahine came loitering about my house in an unusual way. Knowing him to be one of the baser sort, I said, "Friend, have you any business with me!" Tears gushed into his eyes—he could at first hardly speak—at length he replied, "You know I am a wicked man. Shame covers my face and holds me back. To day I have broken through all fear. I want to know is there room for me! can I expect mercy!" I said, "O, you and all your friends must be happy: you need no Jesus to save you. How came you to have such a thought as that!" His countenance blushed—tears started from his eyes, and he said: "I was at work putting up my garden fence. It was a long hard work and only myself to do it. All over dirt and greatly wearied, I sat down on a little bank to rest and said within myself, I cannot tell why, 'All this great garden, and death for my soul—all this great property, and death for ever! Oh, what shall I do!' I went immediately and bathed; then went to my wife, and told her my thoughts and wishes; she agreed to my desire, and we, on that evening, left our work, and came to this place where the word of God lives, and I have been wishing to speak to you ever since." I was quite affected to hear his tale, gave him all the instruction and encouragement which I conceived the Scriptures warranted, and am happy to say that the man continues to live happily and worthy of the Gospel.

REVIVALS.

From the Religious Intelligencer.

Since our last notice of revivals, we have heard of several places in this region, where God is pouring out his Spirit in copious effusions. In fact, whenever inquiry is made after the state of religion, we learn that in many places revivals of which we had no knowledge before, have been in progress for some time. On some the blessing is descending like the gentle rain, that revives and strengthens "the things that are ready to die," and causes the seed that has lain long in the earth to bring forth new and thrifty plants; on others it descends in more copious showers, refreshing the earth, and producing in either case an abundant harvest.

Of the latter class are Bridgeport, Huntington, Waterbury, Harwinton, Southington, Jewett-City, Griswold, Lisbon, Marlboro', East Hampton, and Millington. In some of these places the work is great and powerful, bringing in a number of the most influential characters, subduing opposition, and converting to the faith of the Gospel, Universalists and Infidels. In all these places we believe the revival has been commenced or greatly promoted by protracted meetings.

In Litchfield, Ct.—A correspondent in Litchfield, under date, June 13th, says: "The revival here, goes on with power.—100 or more, give evidence of a change of heart, and numbers are anxious to know what they shall do to be saved. It is truly a blessed time; so great a revival, for the time since it commenced, never has been witnessed by this Church. All ages feel the influences of the Spirit, and are subjects of the work."—Ib.

A four days meeting was recently held in Southington; but we have not learned any thing definite respecting it, only, that they have a revival of religion, and many are pressing into the kingdom.—Ib.

We learn also, that God is pouring out his Spirit in Millington, and in East Hampton, on the east side of the river.—And the voice of one crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," is heard in several other places.—Ib.

GEORGIA.

Extract of a letter to the editor of the Religious Intelligencer, dated—

Macon, Georgia, May 28, 1831.

Dear Sir—I improve a leisure moment to inform you, that the gracious influences of the Spirit so copiously shed on the Churches of the North, are experienced also in some places at the south, particularly at Athens. A meeting was appointed for four days, and commenced the 12th inst. At the expiration of the four days, the interest had so much increased, that it was prolonged until the close of the eighth day, when 30 expressed a hope of having passed from death to life. Of this number, eight or nine are students of the College. The Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians, form one congregation, and attend the preaching of the respective clergymen in rotation. In the revival so happily commenced among them, they all have shared, and the desire appears to be to bring sinners to Christ, and not to this or that Church. There has been no noise except the sighing of the prisoners for liberty. The officers of the College express gratitude, that God has not passed them by while he is blessing in so remarkable a manner the other Colleges of our land.

Will not the Churches of the North remember in their prayers, Athens and Franklin College!

A. Merwin.

In Orange Co. Vt.—The protracted meeting at Chelsea, which commenced on Tuesday and ended on Friday, of last week, was a season of deep interest,—especially on the last 2 days. On Thursday afternoon, between 75 and 100 took the seats appropriated for the anxious. On Friday, a meeting for the anxious and those who had indulged hope was appointed in the court-house, at which 300 were supposed to be present.—During this meeting, several, it is hoped submitted themselves to Christ. One who left on Friday afternoon, had heard of at least 20 instances of hopeful conversion during the meeting.

On the same days, a similar meeting was holden at Post Mills Village, from which we only hear, that it was deeply interesting.

In Tunbridge, we were told by one who attended a meeting there on Friday last, the state of things there is scarce less interesting than in Chelsea, though the number of anxious inquirers is far less.

In Washington there is a pleasing revival—about 20 instances of conversion at the last accounts, mostly in the Sabbath School.

In Brookfield, there have been a few instances of conversion, and the hopes of Christians are raised.

In Braintree, the church was divided, and the minister about to ask dismission; but a revival there has made them love each other too well to quarrel. The number of conversions we did not hear.—Vt. Chron.

"REVIVAL ANECDOTES."

The Boston Telegraph of June 11th says, "we recollect no instance recorded in the Evangelists, embracing the whole period of his ministry, in which our Saviour could properly be said to relate an anecdote."

We must wonder what sense can be here attached to the word anecdote. Dr. Johnson says the word means "something yet unpublished," or "secret history;" and that "it is now used after the French, for a biographical incident; a minute passage of private life." Dr. Webster says that in common usage it means, "a particular or detached incident or fact of an interesting nature; a single passage of private life."

If either of these lexicographers, or any other is to be regarded, we may be permitted to say, that Jesus Christ in his discourses related the anecdotes of the good Samaritan, the unjust steward, the rich man and Lazarus, the sower, the tares and wheat, the woman who lost her money, the lost sheep, the marriage of the king's son, and the leaven in three measures of meal. The eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the discourse of Stephen abound in anecdotes. One reason why the Bible excites such general interest, and why its doctrinal dissertations are not so dry as those of uninspired men, seems to us to be this, that it abounds in "minute passages of private life." Indeed, we have no more than one set biography in the sacred volume; but it abounds with anecdotes of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apostles.

If preachers could imitate the concise, chaste, and pungent style of the Bible in relating anecdotes, and would select such alone as are well suited to illustrate, enforce, and apply truth, every one of their sermons would be greatly improved by containing at least half a dozen of them. They would be remembered when every other part of the discourse containing them should be obliterated from the memory. The truth impressed by them would also be realized, when the effect of pages of sound dogmatic theology would have been lost forever.

It is because some preachers detail silly anecdotes, or such as are inappropriate, or such as display their egotism, that people of good taste are often disgusted with them. Should ministers of the gospel generally communicate more facts to their audiences, and make them better acquainted with God's dispensation of grace in ancient and modern times, they would convey to their minds more truth than by half of their dull arguments.

THERE WAS SILENCE IN HEAVEN.

Can angel-spirits need repose
In the full sunlight of the sky?
And can the veil of slumber close
A cherub's bright and dazzling eye?

Have seraphim a weary brow,
A fainting heart, an aching breast?
No; far too high their pulses flow,
To languish with inglorious rest.

How could they sleep amid the bliss,
The banquet of delight above?
Or bear for one short hour to miss
The vision of the Lord they love?

O! not the deathlike calm of sleep
Could still the everlasting song;
No fairy dream, or slumber deep,
Entrance the rapt and holy throng.

Yet not the lightest tone was heard
From angel-voice, or angel-hand;
And not one plumed pinion stirr'd
Among the bow'd and blissful band;

For there was silence in the sky,
A joy not angel-tongues could tell,
As from its mystic fount on high
The peace of God in stillness fell.

O what is silence here below?
The quiet of conceal'd despair!
The pause of pain, the dream of woe
It is the rest of rapture there.

And to the wayworn pilgrim here,
More kindred seems the perfect peace,
Than the full chant of joy to hear
Roll on, and never, never cease.

From earthly agonies set free,
Tired with the path too slowly trod
May such a silence welcome me
Into the palace of my God!

From the Connecticut Observer.

Died at Torringford on the 9th of May last, Mrs. Esther Skinner, in the 100th year of her age.

If the following extract from the sermon preached on the occasion of her funeral can find a place in the Observer, it will gratify her surviving friends and acquaintance.—

Mrs. Skinner was born at Bolton in this state, February 26, 1732. In travelling back to the commencement of her existence, we find ourselves carried through almost half the period of New-England's history—The landing of the pilgrims being but little more than a century antecedent to her birth. To hold converse with her while living, was calculated to call vividly to mind events of former generations, of great religious and political interest to our country. She was of sufficient age to notice and remember the great revival of religion which overspread New-England in 1740—41, and to have a personal share in the alarms and distresses and perpetual anxiety of the protracted French and Indian wars that harassed these colonies.

There are some incidents of her past life of so remarkable a character, as to deserve particular notice on this occasion. These are connected with the war of the revolution. Our national independence with its attendant blessings, which the present generation are enjoying in quiet repose, was purchased by our fathers, at the expense of great sacrifices and severe struggles.—The amount of contribution which our departed friend thus paid for the benefit of posterity, was no less than a brother, who died of a wound received in the early part of the war—a husband who fell a victim to the contagious diseases which war propogates—and two sons who were butchered at the famous slaughter and conflagration which took place at Wyoming, besides her whole property plundered and destroyed.

The name of Wyoming, associated with events of thrilling interest to the bosom of every American, will long be remembered by the friends of the deceased. It was a Connecticut colony, on the east branch of the Susquehannah in Pennsylvania, comprising eight townships. To this place our friend with her husband and eight children had removed in the year 1777—just in time to be overwhelmed in the catastrophe which befel this settlement the following year. A coalition of tories and savages, who seemed on this occasion to vie with each other in deeds of cruelty, had sworn vengeance on these unhappy settlers. Their commander is represented to have been "the most ferocious being ever produced by human nature; often too prodigal of similar monsters," and the cruelties he practised on this occasion, "without an example in the history of inhuman men." The whole of this fertile and thriving settlement he speedily converted into a field of slaughter and devastation. Every victory, as the fortifications of the place fell successively into his hands was signalized by selecting the men among his prisoners for more conspicuous slaughter, and burning alive the women and children in the conflagration of their houses and villages. When asked by the commander of a fort what terms of capitulation would be granted on condition of their surrender, his reply was, The hatchet.

Such was the character of the foe that fell upon the settlement where the deceased with her family resided. It was in the month of July, 1778. Remote from all military succors which government could afford, they had no other means of defence than what their own population could furnish, already drained of much of its sinew & strength to replenish the continental army.—Their remaining force, comprising every man capable of bearing arms among them was mustered for their defence. The main body of this little army, consisting of 400 men, among whom were the two eldest sons of Mrs. Skinner, just emerging from youth to manhood, were allured from their intrenchments by the artifice and perfidy of the enemy, and drawn into ambush. A desperate conflict ensued, in which the firmness of the Americans had well nigh repulsed their enemies; when a false cry of Retreat from either a treacherous or cowardly soldier, was the means of breaking their ranks and exposing them to all the fury of an exasperated foe. A scene of carnage and horror followed which beggars discription. "The fugitives fall by missiles, the resisting, by clubs and tomahawks. The dead and the dying are heaped together promiscuously. Happy those who expire the soonest! The savages reserve the living for tortures! and the infuriate tories, if other arms fail them, mangle the prisoners with their nails! Never was rout so deplorable; never was massacre accompanied with so many horrors." About 20 only of these 400 are said to have escaped alive. Our departed friend, who had buried her husband but a short time before, saw her sons no more.

A particular incident of this scene of distress may serve to give us a nearer view of the picture. A young man who afterwards married a daughter of the deceased was among the survivors.—Driven to the brink of the river, he plunged into the water for safety, and swam to a small island. Here immersed in water, protected by the bushes at the water's edge, and screened by the darkness of the night, he happily eluded the search of the pursuing foe thirsting for blood: while about twenty of his companions who had retreated likewise to the same spot, were all massacred within a few yards of him. He heard the dismal strokes of the tomahawk and the groans of the sufferers, expecting every moment himself to become the next victim. One savage foot trod upon the very bush to which he clung. A solitary individual besides himself was left at the departure of the savages, to weep with him over the mangled bodies of their friends.

In the mean time the news of this day's disaster was conveyed in the night to the village where the women and children were left; who were warned at the same time that their only possible escape from the fury of the advancing savages, was immediate flight. The confusion and distress into which these bereaved and unprotected females and children were thrown by this intelligence, can be more easily conceived than expressed; "flying," as they are represented, "without money, clothes or food." Mrs. Skinner with her six surviving children, the youngest 5 years old was in this company. Her son who is now among the mourners, can well recollect that he came off without hat, shoes, or jacket; such was the haste and confusion of their departure. The little children of our departed friend, as they hastened to the water-side, (where boats were prepared for their conveyance down the river,) were ready to cry with the anguish of their bruised & lacerated feet: but the chidings of the weary mother, and the dread of being heard by the suspected savage in ambush, repressed their weeping & made them tread with breathless silence their painful way. O when will the inhabitants of the earth learn war no more!

With what feelings she must have left this place—her little property plundered, her dwelling laid in ashes, her husband laid in his grave, and her two sons lying mangled and unburied on the field of battle, can be more easily conceived than described. To the land of her nativity her thoughts and her course were now bent,—a formidable journey, we should think, for a feeble mother with six tender children to make on foot, without money, clothes, or provisions. Much of her way lay through Dutch settlements, to whom she could neither tell the story of her sufferings nor make known her present necessities, except by signs. Fame, however, which went before her, had already related the tale of woe, and secured for her many kindnesses from this people of a strange language. After a journey of 100 miles by water and near 300 by land she arrived in safety at the place of her former residence, whence she removed some years afterwards to this place. All her children she outlived by many years, except the one with whom she resided, whom Providence appears to have spared for the grateful service of sustaining and comforting her in her decrepitude.

The character of Mrs. Skinner is deserving of particular notice on this occasion, as affording an example worthy of imitation. To great natural equanimity of temper, was added a uniform spirit of piety and devotedness to God. Her natural temperament imparted a cheerful & amiable cast to her piety, which rendered both her religion and her society particularly inviting. Uniformly placid under all circumstances, she appeared to have learned practically the lesson of the Apostle—In whatsoever situation she was therewith to be content. The relation which she would sometimes give, when solicited, of the scenes of suffering through which she passed never betrayed a repining or complaining spirit.—The mercies of God and the kindness of her fellow men, were the most prominent events of her narration.—"The Dutch people," she used to say, "were very kind to me, though I could not understand their language." Their refusing in some instances to admit her into their houses in her suffering flight, she would incidentally notice without the least apparent resentment. "They had nice barns," she said, "with clean straw, where my children lodged very comfortably."—Under the infirmities of age, she was equally an example of patience. Though decrepid and helpless for many years before her death, she appeared not to live in vain; for she was a bright illustration, as long as she remained with us, of the excellence and the consolatory power of the religion of Christ. Such a serene old age, I can truly say, without any intended disparagement to others, I never witnessed. The path of her declining life appeared eminently that of the just, which like the shining light, shineth more and more unto the perfect day.—And though with her to live was Christ, to die she esteemed gain. To the inquiry put to her a few hours before her death, if she would like to recover, she replied, after a short pause, "I think not—if it is the Lord's will I had rather go now."

A HAPPY ILLUSTRATION.

At a late meeting of the Convention of Congregational Ministers of Massachusetts, which includes the Unitarians of that state, there was a long and spirited discussion on the subject of choosing their preacher, as noticed in our last. The Unitarians thought it very hard and unchristian, that the orthodox majority should always act on republican principles, and control the decisions of the Convention, and thus elect annually an orthodox minister to preach the Concio ad Clerum. They were unwilling both to discontinue the sermon, and to have the majority elect the preacher. Such is the liberty of self-styled liberal Christians! After much debate, Dr. Beecher addressed the meeting, a sketch of whose remarks we subjoin from the Christian Watchman. The closing paragraph contains an excellent illustration of the matter in dispute. —Southern Rel. Tel.

Dr. Beecher followed Dr. Lowell, commencing in a strain of complimentary humor on the good nature, good sense, and intelligence of the Convention. With such advantages, he hoped there would be no difficulty which could not be surmounted; for that he did not doubt but every gentleman would act according to the honest convictions of his own mind. We might, indeed, view subjects differently, and continue to do so from the fact, that we cannot see with each other's eyes. Religious liberty is the great object which we would all attain, though from various causes we may differ in the means by which we would obtain it. As I understand it, said the Doctor, it is the liberty of thinking and judging for ourselves, and of acting according to our own convictions, without abridging the liberty of others to do the same, with all the means of information which each has the power to choose and to command. But this liberty must not prevent our acting or speaking in defence of our own opinions, though by doing so we may contradict the feelings of others, and occasionally give them mental pain. If the reasons on which our principles are founded do not convince others that we are right, they have the privilege of disarming us of our shield, and of exposing the fallacy of our notions, and vice versa.

There appears to be an essential difference of opinion in this convention, on religious doctrine. And the difference is so great, that our ideas cannot be made to harmonize. Now what does religious liberty teach us! What does it teach us in relation to the different denominations of Christians! Does it not teach us, instead of obliging us to harmonize in things in which we cannot agree, that we ought to separate without strife or contention! The Doctor observed, that the Baptist, though generally agreeing with the Orthodox Congregationalists in cardinal doctrines, yet the views of the two were so different in reference to baptism, that they could not in all things operate together. So is it with Episcopalians. Their opinions of ordination and of church order are so variant from other denominations, that they voluntarily separate themselves from all the others. Now the principles of the two parties in this Convention, are exceedingly variant,—so much so, that we cannot concientiously harmonize on some very essential points. These are so opposite, that the prevalence of the one will destroy the opinions of the other. In this dilemma, there are but two courses to be taken.—Either the minority must content themselves to permit the majority to rule, according to the principle of republican freedom,—or there must be a voluntary separation of the parties, for the purposes of peace.

The Doctor alluded to the period, fifty or perhaps not more than thirty years since, when this Convention were in harmony of principle. The Orthodox say, that the minority are advocating new doctrines, unknown in this body fifty years since; doctrines which the majority of this Convention disclaim. The principle set up, is something like this. Let us suppose a number of farmers to be the owners in common of an extensive field, in which for many years, they have been accustomed very harmoniously to sow wheat and to reap the harvest. But in the art of agriculture, new theories were brought forward, and a minority of the proprietors had imbibed the opinion, that wheat was not good, that it was the best to sow the field with tares, and should claim the right of doing so, according to their numbers. They might, indeed, reproach the majority with being bigoted, and narrow minded, and oppressive. Now would it be expedient for the majority to yield in this case, even though the minority might be very sincere in their preference of the tares, while the majority knew that wheat was better than the tares, and in fact that tares were nothing worth! He then spoke of a dispute which might arise, should an agricultural oration be proposed, as to the person who should be the orator.

REVIEW

"Critical and explanatory Notes on many Passages of scripture, (of the New Testament chiefly,) which to common readers are hard to be understood: containing, also, an illustration of the genuine beauty and force of several other passages. By Ezekiel J. Chapman, A. M., minister of the Gospel. Second edition, with many additions and improvements." Utica: Hastings & Tracy, 1831. p. p. 308, 12mo.

The title of this book expresses with much exactness, the general character of its contents. The work is not to be regarded as a commentary on any entire book or chapter of the bible; but as a book of explanatory notes on particular passages of the new testament. Nor is the selection of passages very copious, considering the design of the work. The writer seems to have taken in hand chiefly those which are either obscured by an imperfect translation, or rendered difficult by the allusions they contain to the ancient manners and customs in society. In several instances, it is true, he deals with passages which have been made the foundation of endless polemical discussions.—Yet he never considers himself a polemic. On matters of doubt he expresses himself with modesty, adapting himself rather to the common sense of ordinary readers, than to the acute sagacity of the critic, or to the cultivated precision of a professed theologian. His criticisms seem to be sound and fundamental, rather than minute and circumstantial. He has aimed every where to be useful rather than curious.

There is a number of passages scattered throughout the New-Testament which men of ordinary instruction are in the habit of referring to clergymen for explanation. The author seems to have seized on these, as furnishing the proper basis of his undertaking; and his method of treating them appears to be at once judicious and satisfactory.

The times in which we live calls for sound exposition, rather than for hair-splitting distinctions and definitions. This is particularly the case, so far a ordinary readers are concerned. The great problem is, to be made wise unto salvation. But where the house of faith is divided against itself, in reference to non-essentials, or occupied with keen debates about the minuter parts of theology, the all-important interests of the soul will infallibly be seen to languish. We are gratified therefore, with that feature of the authors plan, which is so well adapted to promote knowledge, without the affectation of literary display. It is well, that while the real critic may find something worthy of his attention in the pages of the work, that the unlearned inquirer may at the same time be sitting by his side, and feel that he can "understand something whereof the writer affirms."

It is not, however, the intention of your present correspondent, to write any thing like a critique upon the work. He leaves that labor for abler hands, who have the leisure and the disposition required. For himself, he has read the book rather cursorily, but is willing the public should know that on the whole he is pleased with it, and desirous of promoting its increased circulation.

The author uses language which is adapted to the dullest apprehension; and if he is found guilty of occasional negligences of style which are inexcusable, he is nevertheless sure to be understood. His meaning is always obvious.

Among the great mass of those who read the bible, the portion that have access to a good commentary is very small. The rest, to say the least will derive great benefit from the perusal of such a work as the one now before us. Teachers of the Sabbath school, and students of the bible class, will also be benefited by it; and we hope they will avail themselves of the advantage. P.

The Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, with all their deputies, are engaged in preparing for the press the legislative and executive documents authorized last session to be printed by Gales and Seaton. Many important documents have been found relating to the early legislation of the United States, which were never printed. Among them is a volume of correspondence between General Washington and Mr. Jay, in relation to the Treaty made by the latter with Great Britain. Also a very able report of General Hamilton; and a great many communications relating to the campaigns of Harmar, St. Clair, and Wayne, against the Indians North-west of the Ohio.—Jour. of Commerce.

The following letter, which we copy from a London paper of May 24th, contains some additional particulars in regard to the late geographical discovery in Africa.—Jour. Com.

The River Niger.—We have the gratification to state that the great question respecting the course of the Niger, which has puzzled geography and literature for many centuries, has at last been determined by British courage and perseverance. We have just received the annexed letter from our esteemed and intelligent friend Mr. Fisher, surgeon of the Atholl, well known to the world for his own interesting voyages and travels; and we lose no time in communicating the important information to the public through the pages of The Literary Gazette.

"His Majesty's ship Atholl, at Sea,
Bight of Biafra, Feb. 2, 1831.

"Dear Sir—I take this opportunity of writing to you a few lines, by a vessel that we have just now met on her way to England. My object in writing in this hasty manner is to acquaint you that the grand geographical problem respecting the termination of the Niger is at length solved.

"The Landers, after having reached Yoorie, embarked in a canoe on the Niger, or, as it is called there, the Quarra, and came down the stream until they reached the sea, in the Bight of Biafra. The branch by which they came to the coast is called the Nun, or Brassel River, being the first river to the eastward of Cape Formosa. On their way down the river, they were attacked by the Hibboos (a fierce nation that inhabit its banks,) and made prisoners, or rather captives; but the King of Brasse happening to be in that country, buying slaves, got them released, by giving the price of six slaves for each of them. In the scuffle that ensued at the time they were taken, one of them lost his journal.

"Whilst at Youri they got the prayer-book that belonged to Mr. Anderson, the brother-in-law and fellow-traveller of the celebrated Mungo Park. They were upwards of a month at Fernando Po, whence they embarked, about ten days ago, in an English merchant vessel bound to Rio Janeiro on their way to England. From their taking that circuitous route, I am in hopes that this will reach you before they arrive, by which you will have it in your power to give the first news of this important discovery.—*Lit. The past two or three weeks have been uncommonly fruitful in deeds of villany. Within the last eight days we have recorded the death of four married women in this city and Brooklyn, most or all of whom, there is reason to believe, perished by the hands of their own husbands!! Three of the husbands are now in prison, awaiting their trial. Burglaries are committed almost every night, and with such a uniformity in the mode of operating, as proves the existence of an organized gang among us. All the efforts of our active Police are necessary to ferret out the villains.

Of the cases of death above mentioned, three can be traced directly to the effects of intemperance, either in the subjects or their husbands or both.—Jour. Com.

A daring robbery was committed on Wednesday evening upon the person of Benjamin Knower, Esq., President of the Farmers and Mechanic's Bank of Albany, while on his passage in the steam-boat Ohio to this city. After the arrival of the boat, Mr. Knower discovered that his pocket-book had been taken from him while he was asleep, and a draft for $800, drawn by the Rochester Bank on one of the Hartford Banks abstracted together with about $20 in small bills. A large amount of drafts upon the U. S. Branch Bank in this city remained in the pocket-book untouched. The villian is supposed to have left the city this morning in the steam boat Superior for Hartford.—Ib.

A sad Catastrophe.—One day last week David, son of John Carhart, of Chatham, aged twelve years and two months, hung himself. A few days previous he had obtained and read the pamphlet containing the confession and execution of Gibbs, one of the pirates who was executed in New York last month, and it is supposed, that after reading it he had an itching to know something about the sensation produced in hanging, thinking that he could receive himself at any moment he pleased, from its producing fatal effect. Thus is the only conjecture which can be formed why he should commit the rash act.—Hudson Gaz.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1831.

CELEBRATION OF 4TH JULY.

This anniversary was celebrated in this village by the Sabbath Schools of the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist, and Methodist Societies, agreeable to the arrangement published in this paper last week.

The day was also observed by many of our citizens with the usual military parade—of their exercises particularly we know nothing, and do not design to speak. One feature in the transactions of the day we noticed particularly, and with deep regret. Although there were fewer people, apparently, from the country than is usual on this occasion, and although the crowd in our streets was much less than formerly, yet it was noticed that there has not been in years as much of beastly intoxication, and of that noise and disorderly conduct among the lower class which invariably follow this excessive indulgence, as was exhibited in our streets on Monday. We are informed that the liquor-selling groceries were thronged and that the temptations afforded by the display of bottles were effectual in luring the thoughtless multitude to a very free use of the poison. Indeed it has been suggested by some of our most respectable citizens, that there was probably an effort made by a few of the most unprincipled and worthless of these licensed leeches on the community, to produce as much intoxication as possible, either to show their contempt of cold water societies, and how profitable the traffic in ardent spirits still is—or to show their gratitude to our Trustees for granting them the special privilege ("for Thirty Pieces of Silver") of manufacturing drunkards, and making tenants for our poor-houses and jails. Whatever may have been their motive, they labored very assiduously and successfully at their calling.

It may be, however, that these grocers found more ready purchasers than heretofore. Some of the intoxication which was witnessed here may be accounted for on the supposition that those who now indulge in the use of ardent spirits, have had their understanding enlightened on the subject—have perhaps resolved and re-resolved to obey the dictates of their consciences, but not having sufficient moral principle to resist the temptations of the bottle, have relinquished the idea of reformation as hopeless, and as is usual in such cases, have given the reins to their depraved appetites and have submitted more unreservedly to their control, and have become tenfold more the children of the devil than they were before their eyes were fully opened to the abominable folly and wickedness of habitual indulgence in the use of ardent spirits. If we may account for the increase of intemperance in this way, we may have the satisfaction of indulging the hope, that as this class is composed of those whose habits were formed before the commencement of the temperance reformation, they will soon pass away, and their places will not be filled by the rising generation whose characters and habits have been formed under happier auspicies.

We would just add, that we hope our village Trustees may have spent a part of the glorious fourth in looking into the groceries which sell ardent spirits by their permission. We hope too that they cast their eyes about the streets and saw some of their fruits—floods of alcohol returning the way it went—the "muscle and sinew of our country," lying in the ditch, and wallowing in the mire—black eyes and bloody faces—After having taken such a survey, they must be prepared to decide how much of this may be placed to the account of the permits which they granted for———"Thirty Pieces of Silver."

We would not be disrespectful or censorious, yet we are confident that such a scene as our streets exhibited on Monday, may afford them some profitable hints on the subject of Grocery Licenses.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

The Editor of this paper had reason to expect that he would have been furnished with an account of the proceedings at the 2d Presbyterian Church by some gentleman who were present. But having been disappointed in this, although prevented by indisposition from attending himself he cannot omit saying a few words on the subject.

The testimony of those who were present on this interesting occasion is uniform. They all speak of the exercises as peculiarly appropriate. The house was filled at an early hour. The attendance of the children and teachers of the several schools, embracing those of the Baptist, Episcopal, Presbyterian and Methodist churches, was very general, and the house was not sufficient to contain the great number of spectators who assembled to witness this interesting novel and appropriate manner of honoring the anniversary of our emancipation from a foreign yoke.

Rev. Mr. COLTON, of the Episcopal church, addressed the children, and it is sufficient to say of the performance, that it was appropriate,—conveyed in language which the children could understand, and that their attention was fixed upon the speaker during the whole time of delivery, with intense and delighted interest.

Rev. Mr. WISNER, of the 2d Presbyterian Church addressed the Teachers, laying before them in the most solemn and impressive manner, the tremendous responsibility of their station & carrying them with their several classes forward to the judgment day. Immediate repentance was the point pressed upon them to be urged upon their children, and the consequences of stopping short of this in their instructions, were exhibited in a manner calculated to produce an impression not easily to be erased.

Rev. Mr. FILLMORE, of the Methodist Episcopal church, addressed the Throne of Grace. Rev. Mr. PENNEY of the 1st, and Rev. Mr LYONS of the 3d Presbyterian Churches, and Rev. Doct. CONSTOCK of the Baptist church, also assisted in the exercises. A Hymn composed for the occasion by Harvey Humphrey, Esq., was sung with good effect by teachers & scholars.

We are confident, from the high terms of approbation with which the exercises of the day are uniformly spoken of by all who attended, that those who were there, and can hereafter observe the fourth of July in this manner, will not feel a very high relish for the noise and display attendant upon military celebrations.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION IN OGDEN.—Gentlemen from this village who attended the Sabbath School Celebration in Ogden on the 4th inst. express themselves as highly gratified with the exercises on that occasion. The whole body of the church was filled with the children and teachers. Appropriate addresses were delivered by several gentlemen. The occasion was one of peculiar interest to the friends of Sabbath Schools. But our friends who were there were especially gratified with the fact that neither ardent spirits, gunpowder nor any military parade were thought necessary—that they were not seen in this celebration of our national jubilee. The object appears to have been to show the children and teachers the value of our free institutions—to exhibit to them the character of the men who achieved our independence, and especially to lead them to recognize the hand of God in directing the counsels and blessing the arms of our ancestors in this great struggle for liberty and self-government. It was not deemed necessary to excite feelings of patriotism with ardent spirits—to make men drunk that they might know how to appreciate their high privileges, or prepare them better to defend their dear-bought inheritance. They were told that the great bulwark against tyranny was intelligence and public virtue. That these have their only sure foundation in the religion of the bible, and that there is no way in which these blessings can be so readily, economically and generally diffused, as through the instrumentality of Sabbath Schools. Let it be remembered that the church of Ogden is the first Presbyterian church in this state that passed a resolution making total abstinence from the use, manufacture, or traffick in ardent spirits a condition of admission to the communion and fellowship of the church.

Few churches, perhaps none in this region have been more highly favored of the Lord.

THE CHILD'S GUIDE.—This is a small School Book from the press of the Messrs. MERRIAMS of Brookfield, Mass. and from a cursory examination of it we are satisfied that it combines the two most essential qualities for books designed for the use of children—it is intersting and instructive. The child that can read cannot fail of acquiring ideas from reading it. It explains its own meaning—Definitions are given of all the important words. Parents who wish to amuse their children at the same time that they would improve their minds will find this little book admirably calculated for that object.

On Tuesday last a young girl of about 18 years of age was taken up and examined before W. S. Bishop Esq. on charge of wearing men's apparel. Indeed she appeared in court in male attire, and was ordered to find security for her good behaviour, in default of which she was committed to jail. When taken by the constable four young men stepped forward for her rescue, and one of them for his resistance to the civil authority, was apprehended and committed to prison. We are informed that there is a female well known on the line of the Canal, who acts as a rider, dressed in male attire. There is, we are informed by those who profess to know, an amount of prostitution, gambling, and all species of vice practised on our canals, that would, were it laid before the public in its abominable details, astonish this community. The Canal was once called by Gen. Root, the "Big Ditch." The name might not be inappropriate with an addition. It should be called the "Big Ditch of Iniquity," and unless a determined and persevering effort is made to produce a reformation among those who navigate it, its desolating influence upon public virtue must be felt through our land.

We may slumber over it now, but the time will come when the eyes of this community will and must be opened to this mass of corruption which is borne upon the bosom of these waters from one end of this state to the other.

The following letter to the publishers of this paper, dated Simcoe, U. C. June 18, 1831, affords us gratifying evidence that our labors are not altogether in vain, and that our friends even in Canada duly appreciate them, and feel disposed to patronize the Observer.—How much more might be done in this way.

Gent.—A few weeks since I wrote you desiring to have the Observer sent, (which I have received), since which time a Temperance Society has been formed, consisting now of a hundred members and upwards, and since the formation of which, an uncommon attention to religion has taken place among the inhabitants in this vicinity, and several have obtained a hope in Christ Jesus of the pardon of their sins, and others are inquiring what they must do to be saved. The consequence of this is, people are disposed to seek for religious intelligence from periodical publications, and the four persons whose names are sent herewith have desired me to write you, requesting to have the Observer sent them for one year, for which I enclose the money.

PROGRESS OF REVIVALS.—A young gentleman writes from Andover, Mass. that the students returning to the theological seminary bring delightful tidings of the commencement, increase and power of revivals in various portions of the country. The progress in the New-England states, especially seems to increase rapidly.

For the Observer.

Mr. Editor,—Mr. B., a teacher in the Sabbath School, was absent from his class last Sabbath—Reason—was burning a brick kiln, which could not be finished during the six days preceding. Now, Mr. Editor, I would inquire of you, Ought Mr. B. to be considered as breaking the Sabbath under these circumstances—and ought he or any other professor of religion to engage in business which cannot be prosecuted without laboring on the Sabbath, even tho' he be conscientious in the matter! H.

The question of H. is an important one, and one which we have no hesitation to answer in the negative, but we should like to see a thorough investigation of this subject, and would refer it to some of our readers who have leisure to do it justice.

As we are unable to give the information called for in the following, we publish the article that those who have the means may answer it. The subject is one of some importance. The proposed establishment were it undertaken by the proper persons and with a view to do good, might be of immense benefit to our country; to the cause of philanthrophy and religion.

MR. EDITOR:—In your paper of June 21 I saw an article purporting to have been published by request stating that the Emigrants who propose to colonize, or emigrate to Oregon Territory were requested to rendezvous at St. Louis in January or February 1832, and that they would from that place proceed to Oregon in the manner and under the encouragements set forth in a circular which it appears has been published and circulated—Now sir I presume it is not known to the mass of people in this section of the state what the contents of said circular are; consequently they are ignorant what encouragement is given by Government to those who will emigrate. Except that they are to have a lot of land, which was published in your notice.—Would it not be well to give publicity to said circular by publishing it in your paper, in order that your readers might become acquainted and know what encouragement they are to expect should any of these feel disposed to emigrate, also what number of acres these lots of land contain which are offered as inducements to colonists also how near the mouth of the Columbia said settlement is proposed to be made; whether the Indians occupying said Territory in the vicinity of said settlement are friendly or hostile, also whether the land is generally wood land or interspersed with intervales of prairie; also whether there is a minister of the gospel to attend said emigrants, and settle with them in the place where they propose stopping, and whether the emigrants themselves in order to insure and receive the protection of Government and the encouragement which is offered are to be men of good moral characters and steady habits &c. You can perceive that it is very desirable that the above interrogatories should be answered in order that those who propose emigrating may be fully satisfied, what they may expect and not go blindfolded. To me it appears that the known good character of the emigrants and the probability of not being deprived of gospel privileges which we so abundantly enjoy in this favored land would have the most beneficial effects as many would probably feel disposed to engage in the arduous task of colonizing a new country who would otherwise be deterred from the consideration of being thrown into such society as adventurers are too often composed of, and being deprived of the ministrations of the Gospel. The emigrants should also be men of such habits that the beneficial effects of their conduct would extend to the Indian Tribes. R.

ACCESSIONS TO THE GOSPEL MINISTRY BY MEANS OF TRACTS.

A Clergyman in New England, says the report of the American Tract Society at Boston, informs that, when he was about twelve years old, he read aloud to his parents the Tract Dinah Doudney, till deep emotions and loud sobs prevented his proceeding. He retired into a secret chamber to weep there. At night he could not sleep lest he should awake in hell. That seriousness continued, in greater or less degrees, for some years, when he trusts his heart was renewed by Divine grace. A Student in Theology also states, that his attention was first arrested by the same Tract, and about one year afterward, he hopes, he submitted to Christ.

A Swearer and Gambler converted by a Tract.

A minister of the Gospel informed me, says an Agent in Alabama, that about two years ago he had a neighbor who was a profane Swearer and a Gambler. The Minister conversed with him as he had opportunity, and at length put into his hand 'The Swearer's Prayer.' He at first determined to throw the Tract away without reading it; but, influenced by curiosity, when he was alone he began to read it. When he had read the first page, he paused, and reflected thus: "This is the prayer which I have been offering nearly all my days!" He now saw the dreadful import of his oft-repeated prayer, and trembled with apprehension lest God should grant his impious request. He read the Tract through, and stood still for some time, reflecting what he should do. At first he resolved to go home, take his horse, and dissipate his serious impressions among a club of Gamblers. But on reaching home he relinquished that resolution, and resorted to his Bible; he read it, but the more he read, the more clearly he saw himself ruined by sin. In a few days he was rejoicing in hope of pardon. Two or three months afterwards, he united with the church at C——, and he has since given good evidence of being a true convert.

CIRCULAR.

The Executive Committee of the American Tract Society beg to invite the attention of the friends of Zion to the subject of the following resolution, unanimously adopted by the Society at their recent anniversary, viz.

"Resolved, That this Society should embrace in their operations the spiritual interests of their unenlightened fellow men in distant lands; and with reference to this object they will endeavor, by the Divine blessing, to supply Evangelical American Missionaries in foreign countries with as many approved Tracts, or the means of procuring them, as shall, in the opinion of the Executive Committee, be needed in the prosecution of their labors."

This resolution has been adopted in view of existing facts and solemn obligations resting on the churches of our favored country. The known wants of unevangelized nations, the usefulness of Tracts among them, and the reiterated claims made upon the Society by Foreign Missionaries, induced the Committee, some months, since, to open a correspondence with all the Institutions of our country known to be engaged in Missionary operations abroad. The results of that correspondence and information otherwise obtained, as detailed in the Society's Annual Report, give evidence that at least $10,000 may be annually appropriated by this Society for Tract operations in foreign fields, with the fairest prospects of usefulness.

Among the seventeen millions of Burmah, of whom large numbers of the male population can read, the attention of the first Christian inquirer is said to have been arrested by a Tract; and incitements for Tract circulation are most powerful and animating. The Missionaries at Ceylon, laboring among a population of eleven millions who speak the Tamul, say, "No method of doing good in India is so promising, with the same sacrifice, as the distribution of Tracts." The smallness of their size gains them a reading, and they "feel not the sun and sink not under the climate as does the living Missionary." The Missionaries at Bombay, among twelve millions who speak the Mahratta, bear essentially the same testimony. "Portions of Scripture, or Tracts," says the Rev. Dr. Marshman, "have had something to do in the conversion of almost every individual who has joined the Christian church in India." The untold millions of China, who, though they speak different dialects, read the same language, have at length become accessible through the medium of the press, and Christian Tracts are now in circulation among them. In the Sandwich Islands, Tracts are devoured with an eagerness resembling that of the famishing for bread. In Syria, Armenia, Modern Greece, and other countries on the Mediterranean, there are wide openings for their circulation. France now presents a field which may, by the Divine blessing, prove of unparalleled interest. South America, notwithstanding the spiritual bondage under which her population groans, affords many encouraging opportunities for usefulness by this means; and the fading aborigines of our own country have strong claims upon our sympathy and aid.

But it is not the object of the Committee in this document, to urge minutely the claims of different portions of the Foreign field; for their validity is recognized perhaps by the entire Evangelical community. They wish simply to remind every friend of the Society, and the officers of every Auxiliary, that, weighty and imperative as these claims confessedly are, they cannot be met without PECUNIARY MEANS.

The calls upon the Society in behalf of the increasing millions of our own country have thus far exhausted all its receipts from year to year, and their interests, it is plain, must not be neglected in our efforts to extend the blessings of the Society to distant lands. The Committee, therefore, invite their fellow-christians, while they continue their liberality for the spiritual benefit of the destitute at home, to consider, that the Society's determination and endeavor to extend its benefits abroad cannot be accomplished, unless the friends of the Redeemer are excited to further this particular design by a prayerful consecration of free donations to a fund exclusively appropriated to its promotion. Thousands of Christian and Pagan hearts may be made to leap for joy, if every individual will but promptly contribute and send forward the amount which, in his own judgment, he can consistently afford. These little streams, there is reason to believe, would supply the demand, and as they should flow in, from year to year, would continue to supply it till the day of millennial glory. Let each individual feel that his obligation is personal, and present, and fulfil his obligation; and, by the Divine blessing, every benighted pagan on the globe may soon have at least as much as a Christian Tract to tell him of salvation through a Crucified Redeemer.

A separate department of the Society's receipts is opened, so that, whatever monies shall be contributed for its foreign operations, or for any distinct portion of the foreign field, will be sacredly appropriated according to the will of the donor.

ARE PACKET BOATS ON THE ERIE CANAL FURNISHED WITH RELIGIOUS TRACTS?

I was led to conclude, from the exertions of the Seamen's Friend Society on this great thoroughfare of our state, that every boat was visited and offers made of religious books, and especially the Packets. But I have recently learnt that one at least, and how many more I cannot tell, has been neglected—that not even an offer has been made. What reason may be assigned for this, I am not able to determine.—There may be a good one. But I am not able to find it by any circumstance occurring to me, as I thought measures were taken sometime ago to effect this laudable object. I have learnt in reference to this one boat, that for want of reading materials, ostensibly, recourse was had to card-playing, to the no small annoyance of some of the passengers. Whether such persons would be forward to read religious publications, does not affect the question. They, at the present day of benevolent and pious effort, ought to be put within the reach of all classes; that not even a pretence shall be found for killing precious time, by gambling it away. I do hope that the Tract distributer will fearlessly do his duty, in making a respectful offer to every Packet Boat, every month. In the case referred to, I was informed that the Captain would receive donations for his Boat, from the Seaman's Friend Society. A.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman—Some time ago and recently I have been travelling in the Packet boats on the Erie Canal. I readily acknowledge the satisfaction I enjoyed in the convenience of their cabins and the efforts of the Captains and crew to make us contented and happy, for which they will receive my sincere thanks. I must be allowed to express my regret, however, that they should so far mistake the general character of the community they endeavor to please, as to suppose they are fond of surrounding the card table, or are entertained with its exhibitions, and conversation, which is sometimes loud and disgusting.

A very unfavorable opinion must be formed by respectable foreigners of the public morals when they enter our Packets, and are first greeted, "Will you play a game of whist!" It ought to be known to such, and remembered by the owners and commanders of these boats, that our laws prohibit the practice in our public hotels, and the good sense of an enlightened and patriotic community reprobate it as pernicious and hostile to the existence of our republican institutions.—Shall it be told abroad that the Packets on the Erie canal are schools of vice, as indeed they are so long as this gross practice is allowed! I have seen men whose years should teach wisdom, urge the reluctant young man, to engage with them in it, thus forming their character, perhaps for woe in time and futurity. I have seen them in these boats pass round the intoxicating cup, again & again thus making the card table an occasion for intemperance. Now, I ask, ought such things to be allowed, and should not community make known its opinion! And should we not be friendly enough to the proprietors of the boats to inform them that their interests will be promoted by prohibiting these things. It certainly will not be a source of satisfaction to know that that portion of society which contributes as much or more patronage than any other, are displeas'd with them. I do not wish to be considered as dictating in what I have said or may say, when I would recommend that Packet boats be furnished with proper books and newspapers of various descriptions. Some boats have small libraries, and well selected.

A FRIEND TO GOOD SOCIETY.

STATE OF RELIGION IN LYONS, WAYNE CO. The following gratifying intelligence is contained in a letter from Rev. Lucas Hubbell to the Editor of the Rochester Observer.

You will be gratified to learn that the revival which commenced in this place last winter, has not yet subsided. The state of feeling in the church is as interesting as it has been at any former period. In some parts of the parish, cases of conviction have lately occurred. The Holy Spirit is evidently operating in some measure on a large portion of the congregation. Many who reside in distant portions of the parish, and who were entirely unmoved during the most powerful period of the revival, now attend public worship, and listen to the word with intense interest. A very deep and awful solemnity seems to pervade the congregation, which is much more numerous than it was even in the height of the revival.

Since the first of April last, 74 have been added to the church on examination. Many others, who, we trust, have been brought into the kingdom during the revival, are expected soon to present themselves.

I am yours respectfully,
Lucas Hubbell.

MARKETING ON MONDAY.

To the Christian community, and all who respect the Sabbath Day, in New York.

The object of the present notice is to call your attention to the common practice of going to Market on Monday morning, especially for the purpose of obtaining fresh meat. Is it not possible to abandon this practice, and would you not, if by doing so, you could lessen an evil which so universally prevails in this city and country—I refer to the profanation of the Holy Sabbath.—Do you know that the Sabbath is made a day of butchering in order to supply you with meat on Monday morning, and that many butchers and their boys are thus detained from the house of God! The scene that I witnessed last Sabbath, when attending a funeral, made a very solemn and awful impression on my mind. Several slaughter houses were open, and the work of death was going on. Such was the haste, or insensibility, or cruelty of the butchers, (a gentleman informed me,) that the poor sheep were struggling when hung up, and thus were flayed alive.

Can nothing be done to prevent this blood and slaughter on the Sabbath day! Much can immediately be done. Let families obtain supplies on Saturday. My family experience little or no inconvenience from this practice. I never visit the market on Monday. The same reason that keeps me from the market on Monday, induces me not to purchase the clams, oysters, berries, &c. that are carried through our streets on that day. In either case, I think that I should be a partaker of the sins of others, or should encourage Sabbath violation. I have seen the good effect of saying to the market men and women, we cannot buy your fish, and clams, and berries, &c. because you have gathered them on the Sabbath. A kind reproof is long remembered, and sometimes will be felt throughout a whole neighborhood. Will not all the friends of the Sabbath take a stand on this subject, when they can so easily do away a vast amount of Sabbath desecration. N.

We would ask christians in this village whether the above does not suggest considerations to their minds worthy of their most serious attention. As to the practice of our butchers, we cannot pretend to say what it is—whether they slaughter their meat on the Sabbath which is seen in their stalls on Monday, or whether it is prepared for market before or after the Sabbath. Report however says that our slaughter houses, in the vicinity of this village exhibit scenes very similar on that day to those mentioned above. Let the propriety of the practice of purchasing fresh meat on Monday, then, be examin'd into. Our butchers, we will venture to say, would not slaughter their cattle &c. on the Sabbath, could they not sell their meat the next day. By refusing to purchase on Monday no injury would be done to them in a pecuniary point of view—they would then sell in five days what they now sell in six.—Ed. Obs.

A HOGSTY DISGRACED.—The following anecdote is extracted from an address delivered before the Temperance Society in Bristol, Conn. "A certain person whose relatives gave me the information, returning home one evening intoxicated, mistook his hogsty for his dwelling house; and on attempting to enter it a little error in calculating the comparative height of the door sill and his toes, caused him to make a speedy fall at full length within. Instantly relieved from the burden of carrying his head the highest, he gave himself up to the full enjoyment of drunken inaction. Startled at his abrupt intrusion, the inmates of the sty had made a precipitate retreat to the remotest part of it; but seeing no further movement, they began to reconnoitre the animal who had surprised them by conduct so much more grovelling than their own, and by degrees, venturing to approach him, they came up around at length, and commenced a closer examination by gently rooting him alternately on each side. This hoisting by the swine at length became so violent as rather to disturb him; at which time the comfortable condition in which he imagined himself, may be conceived from the exclamation which he sluggishly uttered,—Do leave off tucking up and come to bed."

Thrashing in these Machines is performed between cast iron plates, having teeth arranged in circles upon them, which are attached to a wheel, and pass through a corresponding cast iron bed piece, as the wheel revolves.

They require less velocity, are less expensive and more durable, than those made with a cylinder, or any other kind heretofore in use. A specimen of them may be seen at Allcott Watts & Langworthy's rolling and slitting mill, next door north of the cotton factory, near the falls.

Persons wishing to procure the article for their own use, will do well to supply themselves with this kind. Rights for territory, may be had on advantageous terms to the purchaser, by applying to the patentee, No. 25 Exchange-street.

CHRISTIAN CONSOLATION.

Oh! why "should the heart of the christian be sad,"
Or his eye ever dimm'd with a tear?
Oh! why should a gloom his countenance clad,
Or his voice speak the language of fear?

Oh! why should he sigh, when his visions of bliss
Pass away like the meteor's gleam,
Or his hopes from a world false and fleeting as this,
Are 'whelm'd by affliction's dark stream?

Oh! why should he look with dismay at the grave,
Though 'tis cheerless and dismal and lone,
Or dread to launch forth on death's surgy wave,
Though it bear him to regions unknown?

Has Jehovah, the gracious, the wise, and the great,
Pledg'd his word, that his saints he'll defend;
In every dire conflict, their foes he'll prostrate,
In adversity, comfort he'll send?

Says he not, when thou passest thro' waters of wo,
Or walkest amid the red flame,
With thy weak, fainting spirit, my presence shall go,
To protect thee from danger and shame?

Points he not to a world, bright, enduring and fair,
Far above yonder star-spangled dome,
Where free from all changes and sorrow and care,
His children shall find a sweet home?

Then courage, my soul! no more be dismay'd
By the clouds which hang over thy head;
On the word of thy God, be thy confidence stay'd,
Assur'd thou hast nothing to dread.

Soon the wearisome journey of life will be o'er,
Then on wings of the cherubim borne,
To the realms of pure bliss, thou shalt soar,
And rejoice in eternity's morn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WISDOM & GOODNESS OF GOD.

Before the eye can behold a landscape, and be charmed with its beauties, it was requisite that three humours should be formed, of different sizes, different densities, and different refractive powers—three coats, or delicate membranes, with some parts opaque, and some transparent, some black, and some white, some of them formed of radial, and some with circular fibres, composed of threads finer than those of the spider's web. The crystalline humour required to be composed of two thousand very thin spherical lamina, or scales, lying one upon another, every one of these scales made up of one single fibre, or finest thread, wound, in a most stupendous manner, this way and that way, so as to run several courses, and to meet in as many centres.—This curious and delicate piece of organization required to be compressed into the size of a ball of only half an inch in diameter, and a socket composed of a number of small bones, to be hollowed out and exactly fitted for its reception. A bed of loose fat for this ball to rest upon, a lid or curtain to secure it from danger, a variety of muscles to enable it to move upwards and downwards, to the right and to the left, and a numerous assemblage of minute veins, arteries, nerves, lymphatics, glands, and other delicate pieces of animal machinery, of which we have no distinct conception, were still requisite to complete this admirable organ. Even in this state it would be of no use for the purpose of vision, unless it were connected with the brain by the optic nerve, through the medium of which the impressions of visible objects are conveyed to the soul. Still, in addition to all these contrivances, a wonderful machinery requires to be in action, and an admirable effect produced, before a landscape can be contemplated. Ten thousand millions of rays, compounded of a thousand different shades of color, must fly off in every direction from the objects which compose the surrounding scene, and be compressed into the space of one eighth of an inch, in order to enter the eye, and must paint every object in its true color, form, and proportion, on a space not exceeding half an inch in diameter. Were any one of the parts which compose this complicated machine, either wanting or deranged; were it changed into a different form, or placed in a different position; were even a single muscle to lose its capacity of acting, we might be forever deprived of all the enchanting prospects of the earth and heavens, and enveloped in the darkness of eternal night. Such is the skill and intelligence requisite for accomplishing, even in a single organ the purposes of Divine benevolence.

Again, Before we could enjoy the harmony of sounds, the charms of music, and the pleasures of conversation, an instrument no less wonderful than the eye required to be constructed. In the ear, which is the organ of hearing, it was requisite, that there should be an outward porch for collecting the vibrations of the air, constructed, not of fleshy substances, which might fall down upon the orifice, or absorb the sounds, nor of solid bones, which would occasion pain and inconvenience when we repose ourselves—but composed of a cartilaginous substance, covered with a smooth membrane, endowed with elasticity, and bent into a variety of circular folds, or hollows, for the reflection of sound. It was farther requisite, that there should be a tube, or passage, composed partly of bone, lined with a skin or membrane, and moistened with a glutinous matter, to form a communication with the internal machinery of this organ, where the principal wonders of hearing are performed. This machinery consists, first, of the tympanum or drum of the ear, which consists of a dry, thin, & round membrane, stretched upon a bony ring, so as actually to resemble the instrument we call a drum. Under this membrane is a small nerve, or string, stretched tight, for the purpose of stretching or relaxing the drum, and increasing or diminishing its vibrations, so as to render it capable of reflecting every possible tone. Behind it is a cavity, hewn out of the temporal bone, the hardest one in the body, in which there seems to be an echo, by which the sound is reflected with the utmost precision. This cavity contains four very small but remarkable bones, denominated the hammer, the anvil, the orbicular bone, and the stirrup, all connected together, and necessary for contributing to the extension and vibration of the tympanum. In this cavity are also formed various windings or cavities filled with air; and, in order that the air may be renewed, there is an opening which communicates with the back part of the mouth, called the Eustachian tube.

The next apparatus belonging to this curious machine is the Labyrinth which is composed of three parts, the vestibule or porch, three semicircular canals, and the cochlea. This last is a canal, which takes a spiral course, like the shell of a snail, and is divided by a very thin lamina, or septum of chords, which keeps decreasing from the base to the top. The air acting on either side of these diminutive cords, produces a motion, nearly in the same manner as the sound of one musical instrument excites a tremulous motion in the cords of another. All these tubes and winding canals, may be considered as so many sounding galleries, for augmenting the smallest tremours, and conveying their impressions to the auditory nerves, which conduct them to the brain. Besides the several parts now mentioned, a number of arteries, veins, lymphatics, glands, and a variety of other contrivances; which the human mind can neither trace nor comprehend, are connected with the mechanism of this admirable organ.

All this curious and complicated apparatus, however, would have been of no avail for the purpose of hearing had not the atmosphere been formed, and its particles endowed with a tremulous motion. But, this medium being prepared, a sounding body communicates an undulatory motion to the air, as a stone thrown into a pond produces circular waves in the water; the air, thus put in motion, shakes the drum of the ear; the tremours, thus excited, produce vibrations in the air within the drum; this air shakes the handle of the hammer; the hammer strikes the anvil, with which it is articulated; the anvil transmits the motion to the stirrup, to which its longer leg is fastened; the stirrup transmits the motion it has received, to the nerves; and the nerves, vibrating like the strings of a violin, or a lyre, & the motion being still farther augmented in the Labyrinth,—the soul, in a manner altogether incomprehensible to us, receives an impression proportioned to the weakness or intensity of the vibration produced by the sounding body. Such is the exquisite and complicated machinery which required to be constructed, and preserved in action every moment, before we could enjoy the benefits of sound, the pleasures of articulate conversation.

* * * * * * *

Let us now endeavor, if we can, to sum up a few of the blessings which we enjoy from these wise arrangements of our Beneficent Creator.—In our bodies there are reckoned 245 bones, each of them having forty distinct scopes or intentions, and 446 muscles for the purpose of motion, each having at least ten several intentions. All these are ready every moment to perform their functions; and every breath we draw, whether we be in motion or at rest, asleep or awake, a hundred muscles are in constant action. In the act of breathing, we respire at least twenty times every minute; the heart exerts its muscular force in propelling the blood into the arteries sixty times every minute; the stomach and abdominal muscles are every moment in action, and the curious little bones of the ear are ever ready to convey sensations of the softest whisper to the brain. So that, without any hyperbole, or the least extravagance of expression, it may truly and literally be said, that we enjoy a thousand blessings every minute, and, consequently, sixty thousand every hour, and one million four hundred & forty thousand every day. For, if any one of these numerous functions were to stop, or to be interrupted, pain, and even death itself might be induced. Let us ask the man who is gasping for breath, under an incurable asthma, or him who is smarting under the pain of a toothache, or him who has wounded a nerve, an artery, or a vein, or him who has dislocated his shoulder-blade, if he would not consider it a peculiar blessing to have the functions of nature restored to their original action! And if one member out of joint, or one function out of order, produces so much pain & uneasiness, how grateful ought we to feel for the thousands of blessings we enjoy every moment, while the wheels of the animal machine are moving on with smoothness and harmony! If we consider the number of years during which these blessings have been continued,—if we consider the mercies received in childhood, which have been long overlooked or forgotten,—if we count the many nights which we have passed in sound repose, and the many days we have enjoyed without bodily pain,—if we reflect on the numerous objects of sublimity and beauty with which our eyes have been delighted, the numerous sounds which have charmed our ears & cheered our hearts, and the numerous gratifications which our other senses have received; ministered for the nourishment of our bodies, and from how many visible and invisible dangers we have been delivered—and, if we view all these countless blessings as proceeding every moment from Him, "whose hands have made and fashioned us," & who "breathed into our nostrils the breath of life," can we forbear to recognise our Almighty Benefactor as worthy of our supreme affection and our most lively gratitude!—Dick's Philosophy of Religion.

PROPOSED INSCRIPTION TO VOLTAIRE.

An English gentleman being in Paris, when a subscription was circulated by a number of the Philosophers of the Voltaire School, for the purpose of erecting a statue to the memory of their oracle, put a stop to the whole proceeding by writing the following

INSCRIPTION FOR AN INTENDED MONUMENT OF VOLTAIRE.

Behold Voltaire; deserving of a stone,
Who in Poetry was great,
In History little,
Still less in Philosophy, and
In Religion
Nothing at all.
His wit was acute,
His judgment precipitate,
His dishonesty extreme.
Loose women smiled upon him,
The half-learned applauded him,
And the profane patronized him;
Though he spared neither God or man.
A junto of Atheists,
Who call themselves philosophers,
Scraped some money together,
And raised this stone to his memory.

From the New-York Evangelist.

UNBELIEF, versus ENTHUSIASM.

Mr. Editor—In a late number of the Evangelist, we are told that at the present rate of Missionary success, it would take a hundred & fifty thousand years to convert the present population of the world.

I have not examined the calculation on which that assertion is based, but shall take it for granted that this is correct; and, if it be, is not this a shame to the Christian world! Is it not a shame to the Protestant world! Is it not a shame to the ministers and churches!

If the statement to which I have referred be correct, how is it to be accounted for? Doubtless by the unbelief of those who profess to be the friends of God—who profess to love him with all the heart—who profess to love their neighbors as themselves—who profess to have the Spirit of Christ, without which they are none of His.

But I shall be thought censorious. Well, be it so; truth is truth, and must be told. We know from Jesus Christ, that if the churches had faith, as a grain of mustard seed, they could remove mountains of difficulties—that nothing would be impossible to them. It follows then of necessity, that there has been no faith in the churches—or next to none. It follows then as a certain consequence, that nearly all the prayers (so called,) which have been offered for the conversion of the world, have been destitute of faith; for Jesus Christ has promised to grant "any thing," "whatsoever," which is asked in his name. He has particularized saying, "That will I do—it shall be done."

Thus it is evident that the damnation of the world, in these last days is, in a great degree, chargeable to the unbelief, to the atheism of the churches. I said the atheism of the churches; and they are certainly guilty of very great atheism, of heart and practice.

Am I called upon for other proof than that which I have assigned? Then I answer—but few attend the concert of prayer for missionary success. The few who do attend in general, pray as though they felt no interest in the subject. These give indeed, or some of them; but they do it grudgingly, or most of them; and giving thus, they do it without faith, and without charity, and God blows upon their offering.

It is vain to deny this. Look at thousands in our churches: their tables, their dress, their equipage, their houses, their income, their pride, their every thing shows at once, that they are much more concerned about this world than the next—much more concerned about property than about the salvation of the nations.

Do these men pray? So did the Pharisees, and were damned for their covetousness, unbelief and hypocrisy. These men pray? Yes: and so did the Jews in the days of the prophet, and were a smoke in Jehovah's nose—a fire that burned all the day. They give, indeed; but the poor widow, with her farthing, was more charitable than them.

Yet, Mr. Editor, if they see one who begins to feel and pray a little—who begins to urge others to awake and pray, we hear the oft repeated cry, "Enthusiasm!" Those icy hearted men are wonderfully afraid of enthusiasm—zeal without (their) knowledge; wildfire; turning "the world upside down." Well, they are consistent with themselves in this; for if they were to become as zealous as the Apostles, and the Christians of their time, it would cost them something. Yes: their sacrifice, their denial of self, would be very great. They would be necessitated to part with much of their property—they must change their style; they must pray as they never did; pray as they hate to hear others pray; must spend many hours, day and night, in ardent, agonizing prayer.

They are consistent with themselves, for they evidently dream that the way to heaven is wide—that no great effort is necessary to pass the gate of life. they think it useless to strive to enter in at the strait gate; useless to run in the Christian course—useless yes madness to think of taking the kingdom of Heaven by violence.

This is unbelief against enthusiasm, or satan pretending to rebuke sin. Now carry those sleepy, dronish, unbelieving, uncharitable, Christless Christians up to heaven; place them on the right hand of Jesus and the Father; how would they look there? See them still hankering after earthly things; looking back like Lots wife—unhappy because they have neither silver, nor gold, nor farms, nor merchandize—mean as devils—base as hell.

But why so much afraid of enthusiasm? The world needs something to wake it up—something to keep it awake: and why not go to hell, enthusiasts, as well quite as well, as to go there misers, idolaters, atheists? What will be the difference between the cold, calculating, money loving hypocrite, and the merest enthusiast, when they get to hell! It may be this—one was a fool; the other mad. Do you think, Sir, they will cry enthusiasm, when they are in a lake of endless fire! OBSERVER.

FIVE WITNESSES.—Zion's Advocate, a paper published by the Baptists in Maine, stated a short time since, in a revival notice, that several Universalists had bowed to the Prince of Peace, &c. This statement was afterwards contradicted in the same paper, by one Mr. St. Clair, who denied that a solitary instance of the kind had occurred. In answer to this, a certificate soon afterwards appeared, which closed in the following manner; no doubt, much to the confusion of the Universalists:—

"We feel it our duty, for the truth's sake, to say to you and the public, that we have been advocates for the doctrine of universal salvation. But during the winter past, we hope God has had mercy on us, by convincing us that without repentance there is no remission of sin, and has made the gospel to us, both the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

"Respectfully your's,
"Samuel Uran, Daniel Wilkinson, Sylvanus Gibbs, Nathan Hammond."
James Simpson, jr.

"WHERE ART THOU?"

This momentous and solemn question, ought to be felt with peculiar emphasis by all christians at the present day. It is perhaps as applicable to us as it was to Adam. God seems in a peculiar manner to be visiting the nations of the world. Those of the eastern continent are undergoing great political and moral revolutions.—To an observing eye, the hand of God is manifest in them. He seems to be overturning the kingdoms of the earth, and preparing the way for the spread of the Gospel, and the millennial glories of the Messiah's kingdom. Never were the American churches more signally favored than at the present time. Revivals succeed revivals, and converts are flocking to Jesus, as clouds and as doves to their windows. In view of this I would seriously put the question to every professing christian, "Where art thou?" Art thou up and doing in thy Master's cause, and with thy whole heart and soul endeavoring to advance its interests! Or art thou quietly resting with a few cold and heartless desires for its promotion, unwilling to make any sacrifices for thy Saviour! If so, arise from thy slumbers which lay hold on death, and hear the voice of thy Lord and Master calling on thee to work while the day lasts. And thou, young convert, who but a short time since, wast rejoicing, with all the ardor of first love in the glorious hopes of the gospel, and resolving, that with unwavering constancy, your whole life should be devoted to the service of Him who died to redeem you, Oh! 'where art thou!' Hast thou already become faint and weary in his service? Can you so soon forget the love of your espousals! If not, why this backwardness to appear at the social meeting?—Why so little engaged in the great interests of religion? You who have but recently professed to the world your faith in the Redeemer, rest not, I beseech you, in mere profession; but show your faith by action. Remember all ye who profess the name of Christ, your great obligations to live consistently with your high profession. Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and share for him the burden and heat of the day. Do you want motives? Remember the crown of glory that awaits you; think of the Saviour's blood, of his dying groans and suffering, and this for you.—Can you then do too much for him? Come with sincerity to the feet of Jesus, and earnestly inquire, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?"—Encourage the hearts of those "who are over you in the Lord," by your presence and your prayers. Assemble with your christian brethren where prayer is wont to be made, and offer up a morning tribute of thanksgiving to Him, who will if you are faithful unto death, bestow upon you a crown of glory, which can never fade away. Hartford, June 16.

Archives du Christianisme.—We have just received three numbers of this work from Paris, but have only a few moments to glance at them. The following notices may possess some interest.—Vt. Chron.

Italian Tracts.—Several religious tracts translated from the English, have been published at the expense of a pious lady, who has devoted considerable sums to their circulation. They have been printed at Florence, Sienne, Naples, and Rome, and are sanctioned by the censorship. A cardinal was induced to translate several of them. Christian travellers, visiting Italy are exhorted to procure a supply for distribution.

Holland.—Religious Influence of Political Events.—Our churches are better filled than they were. A national fast is loudly demanded; also, the appointment of houses and days of prayer, and that the people should, en masse, confess their sins, and the sins of their fathers. But this desire has met with opposition from persons of influence, both in church and state, who do not own the hand of God in the events of this world. The work has commenced among many classes and in the hearts of many individuals; but nothing has yet been decided. Among the pamphlets published, many are of a religious complexion. One has for its object, to render all the Hollanders attentive to the promises and threatnings of God. Another is addressed to pastors, and invites them in these trying times, to hold special meetings for prayer. A third is a sermon of Pasior Gaurson on conversion."

Bibles in Austria.—Since 1826, Bibles from Leipsic without the Apochrypha, have been circulated among the Protestants of Upper Austria. In 1828, many of these Bibles were seized by the authority of government, and their further circulation prohibited. In March, 1830, a decree of the government ordered them to be restored, and permitted their circulation among Protestants, but not among Catholics. The reason assigned by the government for this permission is, that the apocryphal books are not essential to a Protestant Bible! These Bibles were published in the name of a Bookseller at Leipsic. Had they been published in the name of a Bible Society, they would not have been restored.

SUBTLETY OF LUNATICS.

The subtlety of Lunatics, in avoiding the exposure of their weakness, is illustrated as follows. It is told by Erskine, in lord Mansfield's own words:—"A man of the name of Wood had indicted Dr. Munro for keeping him as a prisoner when he was sane. He underwent the most severe examination by the defendant's counsel, without exposing his complaint; but Dr. Baillie having come upon the bench by me, (lord Mansfield,) and having desired me to ask him what was become of the princess, with whom he had corresponded in cherry-juice, he showed in a moment what he was. He answered, that there was nothing at all in that, because having been (as every body knew) imprisoned in a high tower, and being debarred the use of ink, he had no other means of correspondence, but by writing his letters in cherry-juice, and throwing them into the river which surrounded the tower, where the princess received them in a boat. There existed, of course, no tower, no imprisonment, no writing in cherry-juice, no river, no boat, but the whole was the inveterate fancy of a morbid imagination. "I immediately," continued lord Mansfield, "directed Dr. Munro to be acquitted; but this man, Wood, being a merchant in Philpot-lane, and having been carried through the city on his way to the madhouse, indicted Dr. Munro over again for the trespass and imprisonment in London, knowing that he had lost his cause by speaking of the princess at Westminster; and such," said lord Mansfield, "is the extraordinary subtlety and cunning of madmen, that when he was cross-examined on the trial in London, as he had successfully been before, in order to expose his madness, all the ingenuity of the bar, and all the authority of the court, failed to draw from him a single syllable upon that topic, which had put an end to the indictment before, although he had still the same indelible impression upon his mind, as he had signified to those who were near him; but conscious that the delusion had occasioned his defeat at Westminster, he obstinately persisted in holding it back."—Law Mag.

A PREVENTATIVE OF FEVER.

The best commentary we can offer on the murderous practice still too general in sickly districts, of the inhabitants using daily their bitters: viz. spirituous tinctures and infusions of vegetable bitter and astringent substances, with the hope of warding off fever, is for us to lay before our readers the following from a higly respectable source.—The author is speaking of the malaria fevers in the country around Rome—diseases similar to our bilious remittent and intermittent fevers.

Pucinotti attributes the severity of the Roman fevers in many cases to the use of the bark, spirits, and other stimulants, which are by some used as preventatives; and he relates the case of an old man, who had come from Romagna every second year, to labor during the harvest, in the Campagna of Rome, who never had the fever; and his beverage in the morning and through the day, was cold water and a little lemon juice. This practice his father had adopted before him with the same success; but his two sons, who would use spirit (brandy,) and even mixed with it at one time gunpowder and at another time cayenne pepper, both fell victims to the fever.—Journal of Health.

A GROG-SHOP FROLIC—My attention was attracted this morning by a crowd which I saw near the door of a grog-shop, on one of our public streets. On approaching, I found a man lying on the pavement, in the agonies of death. By inquiry, I learned that he had been indulging himself the preceding night in a frolic of drunkenness, in the shop near whose door he was then breathing his last; and that the owner of the shop had been his companion, and was then dead in the house.—Balt pap.

A girl of Philadelphia lately suffered great agony by having the head of a pin drop into her ear while picking it. A surgeon extracted it, and thinks that she must have died, had it remained much longer.

The Duchess of Wellington died on the 24th April.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Observer.

TO THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES IN GENESEE COUNTY.

Brethren,—I do not know how I can better awake your attention, to a subject that greatly concerns the cause of the Redeemer amongst us, than to address a few thoughts to you thro' the columns of the Observer. Should I expose your faults and delinquencies to the eye of the public, it is not unnecessarily; & I trust you will forgive me when I assure you, it is your best interests I seek; and when I also say, that I have kept silence as long as either sense of duty, or my feelings would admit.

The subject that now burdens me, and has burdened me for a long time past, is our want of energy and union, and perseverance in efforts of Benevolence as a county. The question has often been asked, "Why is Genesee county so much wanting to the general cause of Christ and of man? What are you doing in the Temperance reform!—in the County Sabbath school cause!—What are you doing for the Bible, as a county! Is the monthly distribution of Tracts generally adopted in this county! Are Home and Foreign Missions duly supported amongst us! How do we stand as to that noble Institution, the American Colonization Society!" These are questions frequently put, and objects we all confess to be of the very first importance. And whatever we be doing as towns, or congregations in these objects, is it not a painful and humiliating fact, that all our county Societies are either dead, or going fast into their graves! Look at the Bible Soc. of this county. We undertook to supply every family in the county, a long time since; and I have good reason to believe that all are not yet supplied with the word of life.

We voted $500 last year, to the Am. Bib. Soc. as a donation to help forward the great American effort, of supplying the United States, with a Bible to each family:—But I suspect not half of that donation is yet paid over to the treasurer of the county Society. Two years ago, the Society was indebted to the parent institution six or seven hundred dollars, and I fear not more than the half of that debt has yet been cancelled. Now what distressing facts these?—Ought they not to be spread out before every Christian in this community; not to censure—far from it:—But that our brethren in the Lord might know where we stand; & wake up to the duty which God in his providence has assigned us. What! shall a Bible Society languish and die, on the rich and highly favored soil of Genesee county!—Preposterous! Shall I say, that at the last anniversary of the County S. S. Union, and I think also the Bible Society, there was hardly any attended;—and not an officer, nor a record, nor report, out of which to hold an anniversary meeting with any interest! But these things, it appears to me, must be told; and they must be rung in our ears, until we are made to feel it, and come up to our duty. Why can we not have a prosperous Bible Society in this county! Are not Christians becoming more and more economical in their living! Is not the land fertile! are not Christian farmers making property, and some of them hoarding it up every year!—Are not Christian merchants, mechanics,—and professional men, in our villages making property fast enough! Why can we not have a Bible Society flourish! Are not means plenty! Has not the Great Head of the church gathered by the revivals of last winter, not far short of 500,000 into the visible kingdom of our Saviour in this county! Suppose the five-hundredth part of it could be spared to the Bible cause, this would make a revenue to the parent Society of $600, for the present year. And what shall we allow for the means the church had before these revivals! How easily could this county render to the parent Society, at least $1000 a year.—But instead of it, we fear that $500 will not be forth-coming; and not that, without great and sore angling, and distress. Look at other counties which are not much more wealthy than this, & which have come forth with thousands! How great the responsibility of this county! How exceedingly culpable if she do not come up to a reasonable proportion in the benevolence of the day! But alas! there are not wanting amongst us, those followers of the Lamb, who will do nothing for such objects until they have paid all their own personal debts first; and I may add, contracted a few new ones. Ah! what reckoning for such christians when the Lord Jesus Christ comes! Brethren, these things ought not so to be. We must place a higher standard of christian duty before us. We must come up to the help of the Lord.

At the anniversary of our Temperance Society last year, in Attica I think, in October, not half the county sent in any report at all; nor were the town associations generally represented at the county annual meeting. Shall it be so this year! Is it impossible for us to know what we are ourselves; and to let the public know what we are doing in the cause of temperance! Let me beseech the officers of town associations to do their duty in this respect; and have correct statistical reports handed to the Secretary of the county Society, at latest before the close of Aug. next. If this plain and easy matter is attended to in season, we shall have an interesting report at the county meeting. This, with the smiles of Providence, may give a new impulse to the great cause of temperance over the county.

The only other object I wish to spread before our churches, and brethren in Christ, at present, is the Genesee County Sunday School Union. I feel desirous to do this, thus early in the season, that we may come prepared to pay up old accounts standing against the Society, which have never been settled since 1827. I have now before me a document of the 1st June last, from the Depositary at Rochester, with an account of S. S. Books and interest of rising of $62. Now, if it be inexpedient to have a Depository any longer in this county, owing to its nearness to Rochester, we certainly ought, in all honesty, to pay for the books which have been ordered by the Society, and used in this county. It cannot be that this rich county will take $60 out of the funds of the Am. S. S. Union:—far more becoming to put $600 in, than take a cent out of these sacred funds.

Brethren, will you not unite with me, and help to give life, and vigor, and usefulness to our county efforts. They ought not; they must not decline. Let me affectionately and earnestly commend these sacred and great objects of Christian benevolence to your best efforts and prayers.

Le Roy, July 6, 1831.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

Extracts from the sixth annual report of the Massachusetts Sabbath School Union.

In Royalston, seven teachers and fourteen scholars have made a profession the last year, besides about 30, from 60 in classes for mutual instruction. Most of the 161 added to the Congregational church in Holden, during six months in 1830, had attended their pastor's Bible class for the last six years. Nearly 60 had, within six years been scholars in the Sabbath school.—And if we look beyond the limits of our state, we shall find similar facts. Before the revival commenced in Yale College, most of the students had attended a Bible class every Sabbath, under the instruction of Prof. Goodrich. In New Haven for months previous to the present revival, there had been several adult classes connected with most of the Sabbath schools in the city. In one school, out of 40 adult males, 20 have become hopefully pious; and out of 55 adult females, 40 are reckoned among the converts.—In another school out of 100 adult males and females, 76 have apparently passed from death unto life.

Charlestown Baptist Soc.—During the past year the Lord had been pleased to manifest his approbation by giving to six of our teachers and eleven scholars, in the behalf of Christ, to believe in his name, and to witness a good profession before many witnesses. Eighteen children of pious parents have been added to our church since the last report.

Con. Society.—Eight in the Bible class have given evidence of having passed from death unto life.

Princeton.—In the revival we are still experiencing, our Sabbath school has shared largely. Nearly every scholar over 8 or 10 years of age, has attended our inquiry meetings, and become the subject of more or less seriousness.

Fifteen of them have already made a profession of religion; several more indulged the hope that they have passed from death to life, and from 40 to 50 more continue to attend the inquiry meeting, most of whom are serious, some of them deeply anxious. To the church of Christ in this place, we may say, in a word, and to the dear children of the church, our Sabbath school has been a great, very great blessing.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

The following is an extract from a letter just received from a friend, in the eastern part of the state. We publish it, as an instance, in addition to many, which have already been published, of what may be accomplished by the faithful labors of a single warm hearted friend of Sabbath schools—and we hope it may encourage and stimulate many more to go and do likewise. If every Christian, or if every one who is friendly to Sabbath school instruction, felt the unspeakable blessing, the establishment of Sabbath schools would be to our state, our nation, and the world—if they could bring before their minds, the lamentable destitution of them, in various paats of our state, we should see not only those who remove into places that are destitute, actively engaged in getting them up, but we should also find many willing to leave their homes, and their schools, and to visit those fields yet untouched by the hand of the cultivator, and plant there those seeds which will bear fruit to eternal life. But we ask not this now. We ask only that teachers in those favored places, where Sabbath schools are in successful operation, would do all they can to collect into them all the children of a suitable age, and that they would use their exertions to establish them in the regions round about them. To the teachers in Sabbath schools in Portland—to every teacher in Maine, we would respectfully address the questions—What are you doing for the Sabbath school cause! Are all the children in your respective towns gathered into your schools! Are all the children in your immediate vicinity, blessed with these privileges! if not, there is much for you to do;—and let no teacher say, "there is nothing for me to do." Rather let him ask, "what shall I do! and having found out what he can do, prepare to do it now. Read this extract and take encouragement, one and all.

* * * * "For two years there has been no Sabbath school here. An effort has been made to establish one this season. It commenced 22d May, and instead of 25 or 30 scholars, as we expected, we had 48, although it was a very wet day, and we had no preaching to call the children together. The second Sabbath we had 65—the third Sabbath, 78. In several houses, where my business called me, during the first week or two of the school, I noticed children of almost all ages, apparently studying the Bible. On being asked if they attended the Sabbath school, their reply was, "No, Sir, but we are going the next Sabbath,"—thus, much interest appears to be excited in favor of the school. We are teaching lessons in course in Matthew: we propose every Sabbath, an appropriate question to the whole school, to be answered from the Bible, on the succeeding Sabbath; and the interest that is taken in this course, is abundantly manifested by the multitude of appropriate answers that are usually collected, both from scholars and teachers." * * * *

DEATH BED REFLECTIONS OF A SABBATH SCHOOL TEACHER.

—— How solemn the hour to which I have come! My strength is failing;—my life is ebbing fast; death is setting his seal upon me.—I am now called to bid adieu to all the scenes of earth, to close my eyes upon all my long-loved friends and companions, and to leave forever all the duties in which I have been heretofore engaged. The places that have known me shall know me no more; no more—shall I enter the doors of the sanctuary;—no more listen to the warnings and invitations of the gospel;—all these privileges—all these means of grace will now cease. But there is one thought that pains my heart more than the loss of all these blessings. The Sabbath school!—I shall no more be there; my dear little class!—I shall never instruct them again. Oh—never shall I gather them around me again to tell them of their souls' immortal destiny, of Jesus' love, and the bright world to which I trust I am going.—Oh—how solemn the reflection, that all my instructions are now ended! How sad the recollection, that I have so often neglected my duty to my little class! How many times, when I might have spoken to them upon the great concerns of their souls, have I suffered the precious season to pass away unimproved! How much more fervently, I might have prayed for them!—How differently do my instructions appear to me in this solemn hour, when the light of eternity is flashing upon me, from what they did, when I looked upon them in the dull and uncertain light of time! Oh, my dear scholars, if I might but enjoy a few more Sabbaths with you!—but my account is sealed up till the great day to which I am hastening.—O, that I had been more faithful! Oh that I had been more prayerful, more watchful over the souls of my dear scholars! Father in heaven, hear my last prayer, my dying request; oh save my dear scholars;—save their precious souls;—for if they perish, will not their blood be found in my skirts!——

TEACHERS—you are rapidly approaching a death bed. What, think you, will your reflections be in that hour! Will they be more pleasing & satisfactory than those I have described! If you would not have your last hours embittered by reflections more painful even than these, be faithful to your dear scholars now. Teach them every Sabbath with as much earnestness and prayer, as you would, if you knew that Sabbath was your last opportunity of meeting them this side the grave. Then your death bed reflections will be sweet. You will part from the delightful exercises of the Sabbath school—from your dear children, without experiencing bitter remorse for having been unfaithful. Should your little ones be standing around your dying bed, to see you depart and receive your last counsel, you will be able to say, as a dying mother once said to her children, "I am weak and cannot say much to you now: remember the things I have said." Her children knew that this was enough, that she could not say more than to refer them to her past instructions, for she had been a faithful mother. How often have I desired to be able to say the same words upon my death bed, to my weeping friends! Every Sabbath school teacher should be able to say them to his scholars. Blessed will be the death bed of that teacher, or that parent who can, amidst the solemn realities of death, point his children to his past instructions, as sufficiently plain and faithful to guide them in the way of life!

EXAMPLE AND PRECEPT.

"There goes my teacher, if 'tis Sabbath day," said a little boy, five years old, to his mother, on observing his Sabbath school teacher taking an unnecessary walk. Precept is nothing without example. Unless teachers will daily live as they desire their scholars to live, they ought never to expect any good effects to result from their instructions. When we tell a child he must keep the Sabbath day holy, and do no unnecessary labor on that day; what does it avail, when he sees us do that which we condemn in him! Children are apt to look up to teachers as patterns of piety, and the least deviation from the path of duty, at once leads them to suppose there is no reality in religion, and it will be almost a miracle if any good results from our labors. I long to see the time, when all who are engaged in this cause will feel the responsibility of their stations, and that the time spent in the instruction of their scholars on the Sabbath, will be a faithful index of their conduct, not only through the day, but through the week.—S. S. Treasury.

BEGGAR BOY AND HIS BIBLE.

A few days ago, a beggar with two children about seven or eight years of age, came into the house where I was. Seeing one of the children with a Testament in his breast, I asked him where he had been to school; he answered by naming one of the London Hibernian Society's schools. I then inquired if he was fond of that book. "Yes," he replied; I read a portion of it every night when I go to rest." I asked the father if he could read. "No," said he; "but when we are tired of travelling, we sit down under a hedge, I get the child to read, and this enables me to endure with patience and submission, the hardships and distress I meet with.—S. S. Instructer.

THE PRAYING SCHOLAR.

A mother, on entering her little daughter's chamber, observed that she had been to prayer, and on questioning her, this little girl, only six years of age, said that she had been praying for her Sabbath school teacher! How encouraged must those teachers be, who know that they are remembered in the prayers of their scholars! Dear Sabbath school children, do you pray for your teachers!—Youth's Comp.

PRAYERS OF THE UNREGENERATE.

Mr. Editor,—A serious and sensible writer, over the signature of SYLVANUS, has commenced a series of numbers in the N. Y. Evangelist of February 19, which he entitles Thoughts on Prayer. This is truly an important subject, and one which of late has received an uncommon share of attention. Without stopping to enquire whether the term prayer, is ever used in sacred scripture, in what this writer calls its "largest sense," i. e. as 'comprehending all the worship which we render to God'—and whether it is "a positive institution" or "one of the duties of natural religion!"—I would express my entire assent to his observations, when he says, that "no duty is more plainly and fully inculcated in the sacred scripture, than that of prayer"—that in the scriptures, this duty "is made one of the discriminating marks of a good man"—that "prayer is an internal character," without which, "the external of the duty does not gain the divine approbation," which internal character "is entirely wanting in all the prayers of the unregenerate." I am pleased also to find my own sentiments expressed by Sylvanus, in his answers to the first and second of his Enquiries.

First.—"Does not God require unregenerate men, as well as others, to pray?" Certainly he does, answers S. and pertinently quotes Isaiah, LV. 6, 7, in proof of it.

Secondly.—"What is the character of those prayers required of the unregenerate! S. truly answers, "the same as of the prayers which are required of other men—the unregenerate are required to make the same humble, penitential, believing, submissive prayers as the regenerate."

Thus far, S. appears to me to give a correct and scriptural answer to his enquiries. But when he comes to his third and fourth enquiries, he says some things on which I wish to make a few remarks.

Thirdly.—"Are men required to know that their hearts are right, in order to give them a warrant to make the attempt to pray?" I dislike the terms in which this enquiry is stated.—A warrant to make an attempt to pray—when it is acknowledged they are required to pray, and it is their duty to pray, and, consequently, they are well able to pray aright!—The terms in which S. answers this enquiry, are, in my view, equally exceptionable. He says, "The command which is addressed to them to call on the name of the Lord, is a sufficient warrant for them to attempt to pray." Why is not such a divine command a sufficient warrant for them to pray, as well as attempt to pray! Does it not require a "rectified heart" to attempt as much as to perform a duty! S. makes a distinction between prayer and other duties, where, in my view, there is no material difference. If "the prayer of the wicked is sin;" I do not see why it is not necessary to have 'satisfactory evidence of a right heart,' in prayer, as well as in professing religion, or performing any other duty. By comparing the attempt of a sinner to pray, to the attempt of a man to stretch forth his withered hand at the command of Christ, S. seems to me, (contrary to his own belief, I presume,) to represent the sinner as naturally unable to pray, without a miracle accompanying his attempt to perform the duty. The natural effect of such a representation upon the mind of an enquiring sinner, I should think, must be, to lead him to conclude that he can attempt to pray, with such a heart as he has, and that he cannot be blamed for not doing any more, till God shall be pleased to give him a better heart.

Fourth.—"Are the prayers of sinners, while remaining in unregeneracy, of any use?" I must here object again to the terms of the enquiry.—The "prayers of sinners"—And do sinners, then, the unregenerate, ever pray! They may use a form of words, and think they pray: but is there "the internal character," which is an essential ingredient in prayer! Do they ever pray according to the definition of the Assembly of Divines'—"Prayer is the offering up of our desires to God, for things agreeable to his will, in the name of Christ." As the hearts of unrenewed men are admitted to be "unreconciled to God;" if they should express their real desires, it is presumed the reason would be very apparent, why their seeming prayers are "all vain oblations" and abomination to God.—"But," says Silvanus, in answer, to the enquiry, "there is a point of light, in which the prayers of the unregenerate, especially when their minds are in a state of excitement, may be considered of great use. God makes use of the eyes of the unregenerate to read his word, and of their ears to hear it; by means of which they receive that knowledge of divine truth, which has a great influence in effecting their conversion. In like manner he makes use of their tongues to state their case in the way of prayer; and these statements of theirs, God often makes use of to deepen in their minds that work of conviction which is the necessary precursor of regeneration." This is plausible; but I must think very exceptionable. Is it true, that God makes use of the false or hypocritical "statement of their case," made by sinners in their selfish prayers, as means to prepare them for regeneration! Has He any where in scripture, appointed the 'abominable sacrifices of the wicked,' as means to be used for the conviction and conversion of sinners, as He has the reading and hearing of his word! True, God may make the seeming prayers of sinners, the means of "deepening their conviction," as He sometimes does their acts of gross immorality; but it seems to me a perversion of language, to call either of them "means of grace."

Silvanus does not infer from his answer to the enquiry, that the unregenerate should be exhorted to pray with such hearts as they have, in order to deepen their conviction and prepare themselves for regenerating grace; indeed, he says, that they "do not themselves, in any proper sense, use the means of grace." But what is the inference which the unregenerate themselves will be likely to draw, "especially when their minds are in a state of excitement," from the doctrine, that their reading, hearing, and praying, are "means of grace," which God is using with them, to enlighten and convince them, in order to "effect their conversion!"—Though God may, sometimes, overrule the prayers as well as the other sins of the wicked for their good: yet the natural and direct tendency of all such "unregenerate doings," is, to feed their self-righteousness with the imagination, that they have done some part at least of their duty, and commended themselves to the divine notice and favor, and thus to harden their hearts against the sovereign grace of God. And this, I apprehend, is the more common effect of those religious services, which sinners are encouraged to perform with impenitent hearts; and which are not unfrequently followed by an Antinomian conversion. As sinners "never use the means of grace," so there are no means appointed for them to abuse. They are required, as their immediate duty, to "repent & be converted"—Let them do this, and then they may read, and hear, and pray, and use all the means of grace, in a manner pleasing to God, & savingly beneficial to themselves.

REPROACHES OF CONSCIENCE.

It is now fourteen years since, as I think, the Lord appeared in mercy for the relief of my soul, by speaking pardon through the blood of Jesus. O miracle of grace, if ever so faithless and unprofitable a servant as I have been, shall attain to the mansions of the saved! During the first summer after I entertained the hope of pardon, my mind was much exercised in behalf of the unconverted. I felt that I could persuade almost any man to be a Christian, if he would only listen to me, till I could have time to communicate my views. In this belief, I wrote many letters to acquaintances abroad, as well as held numerous conversations with individuals in my immediate neighborhood. But alas, soon I began to find that my efforts were unavailing. Probably my zeal was not according to knowledge, or I was working in my own strength; for I have never learned that much fruit resulted from my labors. I sunk down into a state of despondency and inaction, during which the following circumstances occurred.

There lived near me an intelligent negro, of more than usual cultivation and business talent. This man was much abroad in the community, and had acquired a familiarity with men and things, which rendered him a fluent and adroit disputant, on almost every topic of common discussion, and few of the common people cared to get into an argument with him. He was, however, entirely ignorant of religion, so far as I have been able to learn, and in his life and conversation, gave too much reason to believe, that he was immoral and profane. My compassion was excited for his soul. I thought I would certainly speak to him about the things of eternity. Soon an opportunity offered. But his bold look, deep toned voice, and well known character for disputation, overawed me, and I put it off. Another occasion, and again another, came and went, unimproved; each furnishing, as I then thought, some apology for deferring the duty.

At length, I heard that the man was sick, and under circumstances where I could not very conveniently gain access to him. I then reproached myself with my negligence. "Perhaps he may die," thought I, "and no one has warned him to flee from the wrath to come. I certainly will embrace the first opportunity, to exhort him to take care of his soul." But still I neglected to fulfil my resolution immediately. I waited for an opportunity, instead of making one. What was my surprise and compunction of mind, when at the end of three days, I learned that he had been carried off by a violent disease, without one word of instruction or of prayer having been offered at his bed-side, and that he had gone into eternity, in all the deep pollution of his sins! O then, how did my bleeding heart beat painfully within me, at the thought that the blood of that soul might be found in my skirts. And how often, in the street and the crowd; as well as in the secret retirement of my closet, has that negro's form appeared to stand before me, and upbraid me with my guilt, in not saying, at least one word of warning. I trust I have repented, and that God has forgiven me; but I can never forgive myself that crime.

I have penned this brief account, because I would have my Christian brethren avoid the stings that I have suffered. Since then, I have tried to be faithful to sinners, though alas I have done but little, after all. Still no other case of neglect haunts my conscience like the one I have detailed. And yet, reader, you are exposed to just such neglect and compunction, unless you "watch and pray" against the fearful evil of procrastination.

From the Same.

In the town of D. there resided a family, with whom the writer from his boyhood maintained a familiar and pleasant intercourse. They ranked among the most respectable and prosperous families of the place. Their habitation was retired and peaceful. The traveller came upon it unexpectedly, as he issued from the grove, which had seemed to limit the improvements of a thriving town; and saw just before him with delight, a stately, snow-white dwelling, succeeded by several others of an inferior but cheerful aspect. The neighborhood contained no vicious characters, no idlers. But the pride of it, was the family in the white dwelling; being numerous above the rest, and distinguished for the superior taste, and beauty, of several brothers and sisters, which a second marriage had gathered into one domestic circle. Of the five sisters, it might have been difficult to decide, which was the most amiable; but one was pronounced fairer than the rest. I have still a vivid recollection of her thoughtless gaiety. Her vivid eye and smiling countenance, were no deceitful indication of a heart, almost solely bent upon enjoying life as it goes. Never do I recollect to have heard from her lips, a solitary expression, that disclosed a serious state of mind. The confession must however be made, that there was little in my conversation or deportment, by which such expressions should have been elicited.

The hours passed rapidly away in this lively circle, while as yet Divine Providence, had not passed over it the hand of bereavement. None thought of impending chastisements; at least, none thought less of them, than the fairest of the sisters. The season had arrived for the great ball, which the youth were accustomed to get up once or twice a year, in despite of the counsels of their Christian friends. It was a time which elicited the anxieties of many a parent, and yet no substitute had been devised for an amusement which added little to the improvement of the young, while it involved them in the guilt of setting at naught the prudent advice, and, in some instances, the authority of their natural guardians. The ball was resolved upon, and became, as usual, the topic of conversation. Even the place, the day and the hour, were understood to be fixed; though, as yet, to keep back the urgent counsels of the old folks, no public announcement was made. The minds of the pleasure-seeking youth were quite absorbed with the prospect of a splendid scene. The whisper respecting managers, partners, &c. invaded the sacredness of the Sabbath, and was indulged even in the sanctuary. None were more interested in these arrangements, than the circle I have described. Among them, the beautiful sister was most unreserved in the expression of her approbation. We shall have the ball, she said to some of her companions, who, during the interval of worship, occupied the same pew with her, and all of us are to have invitations. Is it rash or fanatical to pronounce, that an arrangement so got up, in opposition to the wishes of pious parents, and perfected, if not begun, on the holy Sabbath, must have been displeasing to God! I had, as I well recollect, feelings of disapprobation of the course pursued. My mind, even then, was shocked at the profaneness of agitating such a subject in the house of worship. That Sabbath passed away, and another succeeded, bringing in the week of youthful expectation. At length the day arrived, (it was Tuesday, as I think,) and at the appointed hour, I passed through the grove to the snow-white dwelling of the beautiful ——. Her sisters were all there; and so were the young companions that had encircled her in the pew, and the numerous youth of both sexes, who had planned the splendid ball. The stately dwelling was thronged with those that came to weep. We took up the lifeless corpse of ——, and bore it in solemn procession through the grove, and over the tedious causeway, to the place where now repose the hopes of many mourners.

There was nothing in the unexpected decease of this beautiful but thoughtless youth, to alleviate the poignant grief which it would naturally occasion. She experienced an attack of fever, which in a few days put a period to her life. It did not, in the first instance, threaten dissolution. From the time her life was despaired of, her reason had fled. It only remained for her christian friends to pray, that she might not be consigned to the second death. On the day of her burial, a venerable parent stood by her coffin, and wrung her hands in such anguish as a christian parent's heart alone can know, who commits, without hope, the remains of a beloved child to the grave. O, said she, could I but have hope that my dear has gone to heaven.—But there was heard no voice from the lifeless clay; no promise of God, to quiet her apprehensions.

Reader, be thou also ready, for in such an hour as thou thinkest not, the Son of Man cometh.

SICK-BED REPENTANCE.

I was called, a few years since, to visit a young lady, supposed to be dying. In the early stage of her illness, she was quite careless, as indeed she had been all her days; but now in the near prospect of eternal scenes, she saw herself to be a poor lost sinner. Frantic with terror, she cried for mercy, in an agony of spirit that pierced the heart of every beholder. I endeavored to give her such instruction as her situation demanded, and opportunity afforded, and then knelt with other friends around her bed, and commended her, whether living or dying, to Him who is mighty to save. Before we left the house, her distress began to subside, and she to derive some hope from this source. Had she died, her pious friends would probably have indulged a trembling hope for her, but her disease, which seemed to form a crisis at this juncture soon disappeared, and with the return of health her passion for frivolity returned. I was absent for some months, but often thought of her, as the scene had made an impression on my mind, not thus soon to be effaced. Among the first questions after my return from a distant missionary tour, was an inquiry respecting her spiritual welfare. I was alike surprised and shocked, to be informed that upon her recovery she had no recollection of the scene just described, and treated every allusion to it with the utmost levity.

This narrative of facts will probably recall to any clerical reader, and to many others, similar scenes which have fallen under their own observation. To such the article can have none of that interest which is due to novelty; but to them it may be useful, as increasing their suspicion of sick-bed repentance, and stimulating them to greater diligence in seeking the salvation of sinners, whether old or young, while in health. It may meet the eye of some gay and sportive youth, who is presuming upon repentance, in the hour of sickness, if no earlier period should afford a "convenient season." To such a one I would say, reflect a moment upon the scene above described for your admonition, and then read and pray over the counsels of divine wisdom, which you will find in Proverbs, 1st chap. from the 24th verse to the 31st inclusive.

BRATTLEBORO, VT.

A letter from Brattleboro', Vt. states, that God is pouring out his Spirit there in such a manner as has never before been witnessed in that region. The people have until lately continued happily united in a wonderful manner in one (an Orthodox Congregational) society. But during the past year strenuous efforts were made by some of the members to dismiss the minister because he would not exchange with liberal preachers, and to settle one who would be more accommodating in that respect. The efforts were however, fruitless and in consequence that portion of the society withdrew their connexion. From that time, or very soon after, there began to descend upon the church a deep spirit of prayer and supplication which has continued to increase. In consequence, according to promise, there soon began to appear evidences of the presence and operation of the Holy Spirit, upon the people. Sinners began to inquire what they must do to be saved, and some found peace in believing on a Saviour whom they had despised. Last week a four days meeting was held there, which was numerously attended—and the last day the meeting house was full. The succeeding Saturday evening an inquiry meeting was held, when about 130 took the seats appropriated for those who were anxious and determined to seek the salvation of their souls.—On the following Sunday there was a larger congregation than ever attended before on a Sabbath or any other occasion. There was solemnity on every countenance and many were weeping in view of their sins and danger.

Of 26 men and women employed in the paper-mill, all but three were either rejoicing in hope or deeply anxious. The church are all united and active and from the examples which it has pleased God to make, it is believed all must be constrained to say, "the hand of the Lord has done it." The subjects are from all ranks and conditions in society. God's people themselves are astonished at his great mercy and goodness, for he has "done infinitely more for them than they even asked or thought."

A protracted meeting was also held a few weeks before at Marlboro' an adjoining town which was followed with a blessing.

Elyria, Lorain County, Ohio.—The Rev. J. J. Shipherd, pastor of the church in this place, in a letter to the editor of the Observer and Telegraph, says: Monday, the order of exercises was as on Saturday. More were in the anxious room, and more (perhaps 50) were present, and more expressed hope. Such was the state of feeling at the close of this fourth days exercises, that the question was again tried, shall we continue the feast another day! A large majority decided in the affirmative. Accordingly the exercises were continued till Tuesday night, and with increasing interest. Some 60 or 70 were in the anxious room in the morning, among whom were numbers beginning to hope. At the close of the afternoon service, those who felt that they had found Christ precious to their souls, and desired to invite others to come to him, were requested to rise and sing a hymn of entreaty. Forty or more arose, various in their ages and characters, like to the Pentecost converts. How many of them are Christians, is known only to the Searcher of hearts. Many of them were from adjacent towns. Wednesday morning about as many were in the anxious room as on Tuesday morning. These joined the brethren in the prayer room, where we took a melting leave of the old and young disciples of our blessed Jesus.

Leading men of advanced age, and others from neighboring towns, who came to us in their sins, departed hoping in Jesus for the great salvation. In one place, professional men, merchants, mechanics, and others of influence, of whom we were constrained a few days since to say with weeping, "they are the enemies of God," now say, "we will serve the Lord." Every age from childhood to three-score and ten, and every character from the most moral, to the stanch infidel, are among those who hope. It is interesting to notice that many of the hopeful subjects of this work are heads of families in the prime of life, and leading the business of our flourishing village and of this new county.

REVIVALS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

A gentleman who has recently visited the western part of this State has favored us with the following statements.

The attention to religion in the western part of this State continues to gladden the hearts of the people of God, while in many places converts are multiplying almost like the drops of the morning. The following particulars are supposed to give correct information concerning the present state of things in the towns named:

Blanford.—As many as 30 persons have recently given evidence of conversion, and many more are anxious.

Westfield.—The attention to religion is of some months standing; 40 now stand propounded to the church, and others are still anxious.

In two or more of the parishes in West-Springfield, the state of things is deeply interesting. 10 or 12 persons have been hopefully converted in the 2d parish and Christians through out the town are looking and expecting great things.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

The first Parish in Springfield is in a very interesting state. Meetings for inquiry are thronged, and the great question concerning salvation for the soul, appears to lay with weight upon very many minds.

Chickopee parish, Springfield.—A pleasing revival is in progress, and as many as 50 are already hoping that they have passed from death unto life.

South Wilbraham.—Nearly 40 are supposed to be deeply anxious, 8 or 10 having recently obtained hope.

Monson, has frequently been favored with revivals of religion, and is not forgotten in the shower of mercy which is now refreshing the vineyard of the Lord. About 50 hopeful converts are there to be found, principally among the young people, and about 30 more are still inquiring.

Brimfield, is now the scene of a great work. About 100 persons, principally of middle aged people, have become interested in religion, about one fourth of whom give evidence of a change at this time.—These towns are all in the County of Hampshire.

The adjoining Counties are also favored.

South Hadley, two parishes in Granby, Belchertown, and Ware, all in Hampshire County, revivals of religion are now enjoyed. In South Hadley and Granby, the work is powerful, beyond any thing which has been witnessed there for many years. In Belchertown, and the old parish in Ware, the attention to religion is very recent. It commenced in both places in connexion with a meeting of several days continuance. About 100 anxious souls are to be found in each place. In Ware Village the state of religion has been interesting for some months. It is now deeply so, and about 30 hopeful conversions are numbered.

The towns in Worcester County bordering on those which have been named, are also in a revived state. In West Brookfield it is hoped that at least 30 have recently passed from death unto life, while many more are still anxious. In South Brookfield, many are also inquiring what they must do to be saved. The same remarks will apply to the adjoining town of Hardwick.

Western.—The Church is greatly revived, and are anxiously expecting the conversion of souls.

Sturbridge.—About 20 are quite anxious, while 8 or 10 give pleasing evidence of recent conversion.

Southbridge.—There is more than usual attention, and in Uxbridge nearly 50 are either quite anxious or indulging recent hopes.

In the foregoing list are 22 towns or parishes where revivals are now in progress. In these towns at least 300 persons have been hopefully converted within three months past, and as many more are now in an anxious inquiring state of mind. The churches are greatly excited, the ministers much engaged, and the people expecting to see still greater things than these. Surely the Lord is visiting his people, he is refreshing his heritage when it was weary, and many liberated souls are shouting hosannas to Him who made them free.

REVIVAL AT SEA.

The Lord in mercy has heard the prayers of his people, and is beginning to fulfil his promise to convert the abundance of the sea. Of this we have evidence in the following interesting facts.

A Ship has recently returned to this port in which the saving operations of the Holy Spirit have been wonderfully displayed. During the outward bound passage, the mate became exceedingly anxious for his salvation, and eventually obtained peace in believing, but nothing more of the kind occurred till they were returning home. In a long passage from India, there is much leisure, and it seems that this was employed to some degree in reading and reflection. The influence of the mate, with that of one or two pious seamen, was felt among the crew, and an anxiety for salvation began to manifest itself. The first person who was awakened was a young Englishman, of correct habits and good behavior, but who had imbibed infidel principles. A well known pamphlet entitled, "A Call from the Ocean," providentially came in his way. He read it and was convinced of sin, for although the pamphlet was addressed to landsmen, in order to excite an influence in favor of seamen, yet the remarks were calculated to show him what had been his course, and to awaken in his mind a desire to flee from the wrath to come.—Others soon after became anxious for salvation, and during the remaining three months of the homeward bound passage, a deep seriousness pervaded almost the whole crew. Profane language was laid aside, the use of ardent spirits was abandoned by almost every man, and once each day, when circumstances would allow, the sailors assembled in the forecastle for the purpose of reading, singing and prayer. These things were all voluntary acts on the part of the sailors, without any personal aid whatever, and without any influence except that of the mate. It is now three months since these events began to transpire, and this space of trial gives reason to hope that the mate and at least three seamen have become renewed in the spirit of their minds during the voyage. Possibly the apparent seriousness of some of the others was temporary, but even for them we will still hope and pray. As an evidence of the benevolent feelings of the crew, it may perhaps be well to state, that before landing, a subscription was proposed among the sailors, and upwards of Thirty Dollars was raised to aid the Boston Seamen's Friend Society in their labors. REVIVAL IN MORGAN, OHIO.

We copied some weeks since from the Observer & Telegraph, an interesting account of a four days Meeting in Austinburgh. From the same paper we learn that a similar meeting was held the latter part of May in the adjoining town of Morgan, at which 35 or 40 indulged hopes of an interest in Christ, and in the town of Rome where the writer of the account, the Rev. W. Childs labors half of the time, there is also a very considerable seriousness, and an increased attendance upon religious meetings.

Mr. Childs also communicates extracts of a letter written by a lady at Niagara Falls, to her son in Ashtabula, which will not only be interesting to our readers, but will afford encouragement to feeble churches, destitute of the preached word to "labor and faint not."

My dear son—

Never did I address you with feelings like the present. Manchester, this strong hold of the adversary, is shaken to the very centre, by a Power far more visible and astonishing, than ever it was by the thunderings of this cataract before us.—And not only the village of Manchester, but the whole town of Niagara, is shaken by the powerful energies of the Holy Spirit. I can truly say, that this revival commenced about 3 months ago, when, with almost despairing hearts we endeavored once more to establish weekly prayer meetings in the village, which had been long discontinued; about two or three families had been disposed to attend, and often not more than ten or twelve persons on the Sabbath. Your father then observed, that the attempt to establish those meetings again amidst so many discouragements and with no minister, seemed like a dying struggle. And truly, I believe it was such—for then we were enabled to die to ourselves, and to grasp hold of the naked promise of God; and although our hold was often almost let go by unbelief, yet our merciful heavenly Father did not leave us. Our prayer meetings became so crowded that we were obliged to remove them from a private dwelling to the school house."

Here the writer mentions, that a youth of sixteen, who had lately become a subject of the work in Rochester, returned to his parents much engaged in the cause of his Saviour: soon one of his youthful companions found peace in believing.

"We had, however, no minister, and your father had very little assistance in meetings except these two children, who took hold of the work with a zeal and courage, attended with modesty and humility, that ought, and I believe did make some old and sleepy professors ashamed. We soon found a number in the village distressed about their souls. Those christians that were awake were engaged in warning sinners, and in beseeching God to send us a minister—as we plainly saw there was no help but in God. We knew of no minister that we could obtain, and saw no way to support one if obtained, unless there was first a revival.

About three weeks ago the Lord sent us a minister. Yes, I say the Lord sent him; for we do as firmly believe that he was sent in answer to prayer, as that he is now here. After preaching his first sermon, he observed that "the field was evidently white, ready to harvest."—The solemnity now became general all over the village. Although there were some bitter opposers, yet they only made the power of God more manifest. They were many of them soon bro't under deep conviction, and were seen trembling and begging of christians to pray for them."

Here are mentioned a number of individuals, the first in the place as to influence and property, whose conviction and conversion show in a conspicuous manner the triumphs of God's grace.

"This is but an imperfect view of the wonders of grace that are daily passing before our eyes. More than forty have obtained hopes, and there appears to be scarcely a house in the village or town, but some are anxious, or else rejoicing in hope. I know you will pray, and thank God, and take courage."

LETTER FROM INDIA.

Mr. Tracy.—I have just received a letter from the Rev. William Hervey, who left this country last summer in company with Messrs. Reed, Ramsey, and Jones, for the Bombay Mission. I send you some extracts, and if you think they will be acceptable to the readers of the Chronicle, they are at your disposal. It is dated Dec. 10, 1830, Bay of Bengal, Lat. 16° 53° North, Long. 87° 40° East.

"My Dear Brother,—A few words respecting our voyage may not be uninteresting to you. This is the 130th day that we have been on the "restless ocean." We have not seen even the appearance of land, since the day we left Boston harbor. Day after day, and night after night, we have had the same broad heavens above us, the same wide and blue waters around us, and the same floating, rolling, plunging prison beneath us. We have sailed above 16,000 miles, and must sail 3 or 4,000 more, before we reach the field of our labors.

The tedium of such a voyage can be known only by those who have experienced it. Nearly all of us have suffered considerably from sea-sickness, and of late about as much sickness of the sea. The general health of all, however, has been and still is good. Until the 3d of October, we had almost uninterrupted fair weather. But on that day, in Lat. about 35° south, and Long. 5° west, we encountered a pretty severe gale, which for 10 hours kept us on the alert to preserve our heads and limbs unbroken, amidst the rattling trunks, boxes, barrels, and furniture within, and the conflicting elements without.—we all escaped unhurt, except Br. Jones, who was thrown against an iron knee of the ship and jammed among the jumping chests and boxes, by which he was bereft of reason for a few hours: but on recovering he found he had experienced no very serious injury. Afterwards we had two other gales in rounding the Cape, but they did us no essential hurt. Since we crossed the equator last, we have had several squalls, which broke one or two ropes and rent in tatters some light sails. But the voyage on the whole has been thus far prosperous, and quite as pleasant as any of us anticipated.

In Capt. Spaulding we have found a friend, of whose kindness it would be difficult to speak too highly. We are now not more than 350 miles from Calcutta and with as fair a wind as we have sometimes had, could make port in two days; but the N. E. Monsoons are dead against us, so that we are obliged to "beat" slowly up the Bay. We may be 10 or 15 days in "making port."

Calcutta Dec. 29.—On the morning of the 19th our eyes were cheered with the sight of land. An island appeared in the distant horizon, like a faint cloud resting on the sea. Before night we were within 2 or 3 leagues of Sauger's Island, and with telescopes could distinctly see the trees waving on shore. At 7 o'clock P. M. of the same day, I left the Corvo, with all her precious freight, about 120 miles below town, and came up with the supercargo & his clerk in a small, open rudely constructed native fishing boat, manned by 10 Bengalese, to make arrangements for the accommodation of our company. I arrived here the next day at 5 o'clock P. M. The ship came to anchor in the Hoogly off the town in the morning of the 25th, it being the 145th day from her leaving Boston.

It has been for several weeks past quite sickly in Calcutta. Intermittent and billious fevers, the cholera, &c. have swept into eternity 1500, or 2000 souls a week! Native and European, residents are more affected than strangers.—Cart loads of dead bodies in coarse rough boxes, are often seen passing along the streets to be thrown into the Hoogly.

Europeans bury their dead. Natives of the higher castes burn theirs, those of the lower castes, who are too poor to be at the expense of burning theirs, throw them into the river, with all such as have lost their caste.

In coming up the river I saw several corpses floating on the surface of the water, upon one of which 4 or 5 crows were feasting. The city is almost literally alive with crows, kites and a large kind of birds called Adjutants, and at night Jackalls venture into town. These all are the scavengers of the city. It is against the law to kill any of the birds; and if I mistake not, Jackalls have legal protection. Hence they all become very tame. Crows often steal meat from the Cook-houses and from children's hands. The Jackall is much like a fox, but considerably larger. They go in droves and scream and halow almost exactly like noisy children just let out of school.

Calcutta is about 15 miles in circumference, and contains from half a million to 810,000 souls. The European population is from 6 to 10,100, mostly English. Such a heterogeneous race of beings, I never saw before, as are seen in these streets. Here are people from almost every nation under heaven, dressed in their own native costume and exhibiting their own peculiar manners. The natives of the lower castes are entirely naked, except a narrow strip of cloth round the waist. Their features are generally good; not as dark as a Negro's but nearly. Their moral condition is truly deplorable. But the Gospel, which alone can elevate them; may be considered as already established here, and its influence is to some extent felt through the city and in some parts of the country round.

There are in the city about 20 missionaries of all denominations. Some preach only in English, but most of them in Bengalee to the natives. There are several native churches; but how many members they contain, I have not been able to learn. Many schools have been established in the city, embracing as many as 10,000 children, most of them receiving Christian instruction.

The attachment of the heathen to Hindooism is daily becoming weaker, and their most intelligent men acknowledge the superior excellence of Christianity. Nothing but the disgrace and other circumstances of losing caste prevent hundreds from disclosing themselves Christians. In the country, some whole villages have renounced idolatry and are eagerly drinking in the doctrines of the cross. I believe the time is not far distant, when the banner of the cross shall float in triumph over all India. We expect to sail for Bombay about the 10th or 15th of Jan. and shall probably be 30 or 40 days in making the place of our destination.

Jan. 3d 1831. Yesterday I had the happiness to sit down at the communion table with the Baptist missionaries here. This was a new and a pleasant scene to me. The Baptists here have no bars, to shut out other disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ from the table of their Lord and Saviour Would not this denomination flourish better in our country, if they should follow the plan!

Now my dear brother, The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit, Pray for us."

Yours, William Hervey.

Reports respecting the death of Asaad Shidiak.

Under date of Nov. 12, Mr. Bird wrote that Asaad Shidiak was probably dead, as mentioned at p. 149. The report which led Mr. B. to form that opinion has since been contradicted. The very fact that such contradictory reports and so much uncertainty prevails respecting the case of this persecuted man, and that too in the immediate neighborhood of his imprisonment, shows very plainly that there is little honesty or truth in the country. It is a circumstance of great interest, that no report is circulated, that Asaad has gone back to the Romish faith, or that his steadfastness has been in any degree shaken.

Respecting the situation of our persecuted friend, Asaad Shidiak, it is very difficult to obtain any satisfactory information. In October last, his relatives received an official letter from the patriarch announcing his death; and stating that he died of a fever, after an illness of ten days. This statement seems to have been fully believed by the family, and they observed, in consequence of it, the customary season of mourning. As it was corroborated by some accounts which came to us from other sources, and for a considerable time was not contradicted, we were, also, induced to believe that Asaad was dead: though we thought it quite as probable that his death was only the natural effect of his protracted sufferings, or of some recent augmentation of them, as that it was occasioned by a fever. But it has since been reported in several quarters, and even by Maronite priests, who may be supposed to have some knowledge of the subject, that he is still living. The patriarch, they admit, reported that he was dead, but they say he only meant that he was dead in sins. Some other circumstances induce us to doubt the patriarch's statement; especially, the fact that he has so repeatedly caused a false report of his death to be circulated, threatening to excommunicate any person who should contradict it. Still great doubt and uncertainty rests upon the subject. Of one thing, however, we are satisfied—there is no evidence of any change in his views or his conduct since his imprisonment; but a great deal of evidence that he has continued to hold fast his profession; to defend the truth; to exhort to repentance all who have visited and talked with him; and to bear his sufferings with Christian meekness and patience, during the whole period of his confinement, which is now more than four years; and all this, notwithstanding that the utmost efforts which malicious ingenuity could devise, have been constantly used to bring him back to his former faith. Let God be praised for so illustrious a testimony to his truth; and let all who have sympathised with Asaad remember that his sufferings probably continue.—Let them continue their prayers. Let them pray that he may endure unto the end and be saved; and that many others in this land may imbibe his spirit and imitate his faith. Surely it is not unreasonable to hope that some, even among his persecutors, may be led to a serious examination, and hearty reception of that religion for which he has suffered, and by which, according to our best information, he has hitherto been so wonderfully sustained.

We are by no means certain that some minds have not already been roused to reflection, by what they have seen of the power of the gospel in the fortitude and piety of Asaad, and others who have been persecuted for it. We know not but many are convinced of the falseness of the old system, and are deterred from renouncing it, only by the fear of persecution. There is at least, reason to believe that many are dissatisfied with the religion which is taught in these churches and exemplified in the lives of the priests, and people. It is almost universally conceded that there is no such thing as vital godliness to be found in this country; and that the man or woman who should seriously pretend to walk according to the gospel would be the object of general ridicule, if not of something worse. Of course, then, those who know that the gospel requires vital godliness, know that there is need of a universal reformation.

In this country, as in every other, nothing will so effectually recommend the gospel, as the holy lives of its professors. This is an argument that is intelligible and convincing alike to the learned and the ignorant. It is an argument that no adversary of Christianity can refute. It is a recommendation which in these regions of depravity and hypocrisy will be known and read of all men—Turks, Christians, Jews and Infidels—and as Chrysostom says, will be more powerful and convincing than miracles. We therefore entreat our patrons and friends to pray for us, that we may walk worthy of our vocation—be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation; and that among them we may shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life to the end, that we may rejoice in the day of Christ, that we have not run in vain, neither labored in vain.

TEMPERANCE.

A meeting of the citizens of Boston was held at the Court House in Court Square, on the twentieth day of June, A. D. 1831, at four o'clock, P. M., called pursuant to a Resolution of the Massachusetts Society for the suppression of Intemperance.

Hon. Chief Justice Shaw was chosen Chairman, and William J. Hubbard, Secretary.

On motion of Col. Joseph Jenkins,

Resolved, That a committee of seven persons be appointed to consider the legal provisions now existing in this city concerning the sale and use of ardent spirits, and to report whether any and what alterations can be therein made which will tend to prevent the unnecessary use of ardent spirits, and which will also tend to improve and advance the welfare of human society, by preventing such consumption of ardent spirits as all well informed and considerate persons believe to be injurious to the general interest, as well as destructive to the well being of those who daily and habitually indulge in the use of such spirits.

Mr. Jenkins, in supporting the Resolution moved by him, observed, that its provisions had reference to the manner of granting Licenses. He felt deep interest in the subject—he considered that it had much to do with the philosophy of human nature, which we were bound to regard in all our plans and efforts for doing good, in a society of human beings. It had been the policy, nay it seemed to have been an inherent principle in our systems of legal administration, that all power to grant special privileges, which in its nature was adapted to affect the popular interest, should proceed from men who were not dependent on popular favor for the office they held. Mr. J. gave a history of the causes and origin of victualling establishments (which have now universally become grog shops) in Boston. He mentioned that these shops had from the beginning been licensed by the Court of Sessions, until the adoption of the city charter, when the power to recommend was transferred from the Selectmen, and the power to license from the Court of Sessions, to the Board of Aldermen. He mentioned an attempt to curtail the growing evil of accumulating grog shops in the early part of the city administration, the failure of which he considered as having its foundation in the fact, that those who controlled this matter had not nerve to breast the shock, which such a measure would produce.—The evil was suffered to continue and increase. He asked gentlemen to consider the political power which now resided in the 600 tippling shops, with their 6000 dependants and supporters in the city of Boston. He remarked, it was not extravagant to say, that all power was in their hands, if they were inclined to exert it, and they had sometimes tried its strength—effectually, too! Were we not slaves, then—and to masters of our own choosing! Some had adopted the strange philosophy that many shops of this kind were in their consequence less pernicious than a few. That the frequency of them would disgust and deter men from entering them. That this

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mien,
That to be hated, needs but to be seen."

It was indeed frightful enough—but the conclusion nevertheless was false. The temptations were increased with the number of these nuisances, and of course the more the worse. Sir, said Mr. J. no young man is ruined at once, vice is progressive and inducive. These tippling houses are made the pander officers of a vice more dreadful if possible than intemperance—they are the resorts of seducers—the very antechambers to "her house which is the way to hell—going down to the chambers of death."

However necessary it was that the law should be modified on this subject, and without its arm we could not begin the work of reform—after all, public sentiment was our only confidence, as to final success. It must be a reproach to use ardent spirits, and he rejoiced it was already so in many parts of our country. Conscientious and honorable men must relinquish the traffic in this article—our efforts must be greatly increased; a wise and kind Providence would bless our endeavors. This pest would, he trusted, soon be swept from our land, and this nation of drunkards, as we had been called, uncharitably it might be—but with too much truth—would soon become as it had been, a nation of puritans.—Daily Adv.

AN IMPRESSIVE WARNING.

Mr. Editor:—The following is from my recollections of men and things in my native town. If any doubt should arise as to the truth of such degeneracy, the testimony of the church in that place can be brought to sustain it.

Yours, D. H.

In the town of C——, Connecticut, Mr.—— sustained the office of deacon in the Congregational church. He was a man, who, at the time of his conversion, discovered great zeal in the cause of religion, and for some time after his election to the office of deacon, gave evidence of a thorough change of heart. His example for several years had a savour of holiness. His labours among the people seemed to be blessed.—His exhortations and prayers, though destitute of any excellencies of method or style (for he was very illiterate), always came home with great prower to the hearts and consciences of all who heard him. The most uncharitable had no reason to doubt his piety; but all were constrained to say, "surely, that man is a monument of Grace."

But the fashion of the times was not then, what it now is. There were no temperance societies then. No voice had been raised against the use of ardent spirits. But every man manufactured and bought and drank what he wanted. This deacon too had an appetite that could relish strong drink; and there being no one to sound the alarm in his ear, he would constantly indulge it. Before he was aware, however, he had acquired a permanent desire, not only for strong drink as a beverage, but also for the sensations that follow the use of it. He felt as though he must use it constantly. There was no abstaining. A few hours' abstinence would generate an appetite as inexorable as death. Rum, brandy, gin, cider, every thing in short, in the whole family of intoxicating liquids, wasted away before him. Stores and taverns were haunted by him. Every public meeting where rum was to be had, was blessed with his presence. His neighbors, and especially those who kept a supply of cider in their cellars, found his visits frequent. Not an ox or a swine was slaughtered in the village, but he was there and ready to chalk for his half-pint.

Ah! what an example for a deacon! Many good people saw this, and sighed and wept in secret for this wayward brother. Others kindly admonished him of his error; but all in vain. Destruction had robbed him of his conscience; she had led him into the downward course, and made his passage sure.

When the temperance reformation commenced he was the first to declaim against it. Many times have I been pointed to his example by the friends of strong drink. He had also acquired a dislike for other benevolent institutions. Missionary, Bible, and Tract Societies, he held in perpetual abhorrence. Nothing would kindle him into a rage sooner than to ask his contribution for the support of these institutions. And yet he continued to serve the church in the capacity of deacon. Oftentimes in this state of degeneracy, have I seen him distributing the sacramental emblems to the people of God.

But Providence would not permit him to continue always in this course without giving him and the world some intimations of his condition. "A cloud of ills at length came over him." Destruction began to stare him in the face; and while he sought here and there for relief, nothing but disappointment met his eye. His account with the merchants had increased to an enormous amount, and debts poured in upon him from every quarter. To satisfy these demands his house and farm were taken from him, & his goods sold under the hammer. Meanwhile his family were turned out to tax the sympathies of their fellow men.

I might pursue the subject of these remarks still further; but I forbear. He has left New England, and gone to infect some other region with his example. I cannot but feel grateful that he has left the place of his former residence, though I pity the community that must receive him.—The Lord have mercy upon them and him!

From the Journal of Humanity.

As the present Editor is about to leave the Journal, it will be nothing more than respectful to his successor, that he should confine himself to suggestions merely, in speaking of the subject of ecclesiastical discipline as connected with Temperance principles. He will not be here to defend any position that he might take, and does not wish to impose on another the task of doing it for him.

The question is, whether a man who uses ardent spirits as a drink, or traffics in them, ought to be admitted to membership of a Christian Church.

1. Some persons have probably been startled by the form in which this question has been stated. It has to them the appearance of a new and independent rule respecting admission to the churches. Such a view of it has been too much countenanced by the way in which it has been publicly discussed, and by the form of the resolutions adopted by some churches. The great question on admission to a church—we speak of those churches in which this subject has excited most attention—is, whether the candidate gives such evidence of being a good man, as to warrant the belief that he will live worthily of the Christian profession. And in reference to the point in debate, the question is, (1.) Whether a man who, with all the light that has been thrown on the subject, will not refrain from the use of and the traffic in ardent spirits, can give such evidence! and (2.) Whether it is advisable in the present state of things, for the churches to adopt resolutions expressing their belief that he cannot! (This last point demands a separate consideration, because the churches do not consider it necessary to adopt any such resolution respecting other immoralities, such as profanity, theft, gambling, &c.)

Let the question be discussed in this shape, and we presume good men will much sooner come to see eye to eye respecting it. The argument on which Professor Maclean principally relies will be found not to touch it.

2. The society of Friends and the Methodists seem to have had no hesitation respecting the right of a Christian Church to adopt the rule proposed.

3. A Rubric of the Protestant Episcopal Church is in this form: "If among those who come to be partakers of the holy communion, the minister shall know any to be an open and notorious evil liver, or to have done any wrong to his neighbor, by word or deed, so that the congregation be thereby offended; he shall advertise him, that he presume not to come to the Lord's table, until he have openly declared himself to have truly repented, and amended his former evil life, that the congregation may thereby be satisfied; and that he hath recompensed the parties to whom he hath done wrong; or at least declare himself to be in full purpose so to do, as soon as he conveniently may." Now, the writer could not drink, or traffic in, ardent spirits, without feeling himself to be "an open and notorious evil liver;" and there are thousands who agree with him. "I would as soon dip my hands in blood, as be engaged in the traffic," said a distinguished clergyman on a late public occasion. Persons not connected with the churches regard such conduct as inconsistent with the Christian profession. The professed Christian, who continues to drink spirits, or traffic in them, is a stumbling block and an offence, both to his brethren and to "them that are without." What does the above Rubric require a minister to do respecting such! Yet in the churches in which the question under consideration has been most agitated, the rules of the Episcopalians are often complained of as not sufficiently strict.

4. There are at least many Congregational and Presbyterian churches, which do not hesitate to make attendance at the ball-room and the theatre matter of discipline. It is generally understood by the community, that members of those churches do not frequent such places,—regarding it as inconsistent with their profession. It will assist us in coming to a correct decision of the question in hand, to compare the sin of the drinker and the retailer, with that of him who visits these places of amusement.

A young man by the name of Wm. Sparling, late from Ireland, recently set up the Wheelwright business in this place, and immediately on his settlement, he turned his attention to the moral improvement of the place; and feeling a just concern for his fellow youth in particular, determined to throw his weight into the scale of temperance. Accordingly he drew up a temperance constitution, and set off from house to house with it in his hand, and after having patiently endured the reproaches of the Sons of Bacchus, he obtained thirty-four subscribers.

An opposer of temperance societies, in a communication to the Orange Herald (N. Y.), says: "For my part, if I should say I did not love it [ardent spirit] I should do as I am afraid these cold-water men have done, that is, strain the truth out of all manner of reasonable shape."—Undoubtedly; and this is acknowledging a bias which renders him an unfit judge of any thing connected with the temperance reformation.

Flagellation.—Passing, a few mornings since, one of those shops where the principal articles kept for sale are "good liquors at three cents a glass," we observed a gentleman tapster sallying forth from his door with a cow-hide whip in his hand, as though he were intent upon inflicting punishment upon some transgressor. Nor was our conjecture wrong; for he no sooner reached the street, than he fell to whipping a poor drunken fellow, who had just made his escape from the shop. The poor fellow remonstrated most bitterly against this summary mode of punishment. But the only reply made to his remonstrance was—"Go to the shop where you got drunk!" If it be the business of these rum-sellers to whip the rum-drinkers, whose business is it to whip rum-sellers! Certainly some one ought to do it.—Gen. Temp.

THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1831.

THE PROTESTANT.

On the first appearance of this paper a year and a half since, we spoke of it in terms of high commendation. It obtained a considerable circulation in this region and its object was highly approved. We however, in common with most of its readers, in this village, after a few weeks become rather disgusted with the spirit which it breathed in its editorial articles, and regretted to see so much severity and such harsh expressions, and so many hard names as were applied by its editor in speaking of the tenets and practices of the Romish Church.

But we acknowledge that within a few months, having examined the subject more deliberately and having seen more of the corruptions of American Catholics exposed, and having become more fully convinced that an intimate connexion between them and the Romish Pontiff exists, and a deliberate plan formed to obtain, through the agency of Jesuits, a controlling influence in this country, we are now not only inclined to wish that the Protestant may be sustained, but to urge it as a duty upon every christian—upon every Protestant, to aid in sustaining this paper. Supposing the abhorrence which the editor expresses for the tenets and practices of Papists, leads him sometimes to raise a pile of epithets rather higher than we, who have not examined the subject so thoroughly, may approve, yet the object is one of vital importance to the cause of pure christianity, and we are persuaded that were we to make ourselves better acquainted with the ancient and modern history of the church, we should be less inclined to censure the strength of language and the tone of indignant denunciaiton, so often complained of by the readers of the Protestant.

This publication is calculated to open the eyes of the American people on the subject of Popery, and whatever objections there may be to the language of the editor, he gives us facts which every Protestant ought to know. From these we can judge, and act understandingly.

The Protestant is the only paper exclusively devoted to the developement of this Mystery of Iniquity, and we regret to learn that its patronage is so limited as to endanger its existence. The Catholics have their papers established from Boston to Charleston, and they are every day assuming a bolder tone of defiance, and denouncing as heretics, all who dissent from their creed, with the same abusive, contemptuous and threatening language, that the most bigoted catholic would utter in Rome itself. They are increasing in numbers, at least 50,000 a year, and are, even now, in some of our cities, exercising a controlling influence at the Polls of our elections. What is strange about it is, that we hear of no alarm sounded by our politicians, about a union of church and state—and yet the very essence of catholicism is a subservency of the civil, to the ecclesiastical power. It is true that its abominable principles have at length been seen by the people in the catholic countries of Europe. The people are rising and the Pope is trembling upon his throne. He sees that his power in Europe is in a great measure lost, and we have no doubt he is looking for its re-establishment in America.

And will Americans shut their eyes to the danger that threatens them! Will they not examine? Shall the spirit of Jesuitism and Protestant indifference suffer the Protestant to go down for the want of patronage?

We do hope that the eyes of the people will be opened, and opened speedily and effectually to the importance of sustaining this paper, and through it, of informing themselves as to the amount of danger which is to be apprehended from this source.

CORRECTION.

Notwithstanding the guarded, or rather incidental manner (for it was nothing more) in which we spoke of the Military Celebration in this village on the fourth inst—we learn our remarks have been, by some, entirely misunderstood. In speaking of those who were seen intoxicated in the streets, we had reference, as the whole tenor of our remarks will show, to that class of our population, who do not unite in any regular celebration, but are called together by the noise and parade usual on such an occasion—who hang about groceries and grog shops and amuse themselves with what they can see in the streets. It is on this class that our military celebrations exert a pernicious influence, by giving them an occasion to indulge their depraved appetites and passions.

That there was more intemperance visible in the streets than has been witnessed on this anniversary, since the commencement of the temperance reformation, is true—for the probable causes of this, we refer to our article on this subject of last week.

But we are far from believing that the beneficial and restraining influence of temperance measures are not very apparent upon that class of our inhabitants who usually attend either in a military capacity or in that of private citizens, to hear the address and partake of the refreshments usual on this occasion. We said last week that of the exercises particularly we knew nothing & did not design to speak. We meant as we said, and our article when candidly examined will convey no other meaning than we designed it should. We have not enquired how much liquor was drank at the dinner, nor whether there was more or less of it regularity than usual. We might doubtless ascertain, with little trouble, but we choose to adhere to our original determination to let those who attend the celebration at the Mansion House give their own account of their proceedings.

We can only say that we have heard of nothing which would be termed disreputable or disorderly. It is to the tendency of Military celebrations we object. They will, wherever they are attended, have a powerfully counteracting influence upon the cause of temperance, and consequently, an injurious effect upon the morals of community, and believing this, we regret to see men of standing and respectability, giving them their countenance and support.

WITHOUT BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

In the proceedings of the Fourth inst., at Canandaigua, it is stated that the clergymen of that village refused to officiate. The celebration was in the usual style, with military parade, toasting &c. We need not say to our readers that we cannot but rejoice at the stand taken by the Ministers of Christ in refusing to participate in, or give countenance to that which they believe injurious to the cause of religion, and therefore would be displeasing to their Lord and Master. They cannot be good subjects of an earthly government who prove traitors to the government of God. We could not but be amused with the toast given by the Marshall of the day, in which he expresses his determination to celebrate the 55th anniversary of American Independence in a rational manner, although deprived of "the benefit of clergy." Very patriotic and very independent to be sure! How much benefit, we would inquire, did the majority of those assembled on this occasion anticipate from the presence of the Clergy! Any thing more than to countenance, and give their sanction to the manner of observing this national jubilee? It is a little singular that the presence of the clergy should be deemed so desirable to these patriots that they should anathematize them for acting their own pleasure on the occasion! We say anathematize—for there were a number of toasts given, which are probably to be construed as being of that character.

We do not regret that so much prominence is given to the refusal of the clergy to officiate, as we trust their example thus made public, will have a more extensive influence.

4TH JULY ACCIDENTS.

We learn that two men were injured by the firing of a cannon on board the Steam Boat on Canandaigua Lake on the fourth.

Another was killed on the same day by a plug discharged from a 56 lb. weight at the head of Seneca Lake.

Celebration of the 4th in New York.—The Journal of Commerce gives a list of TWENTY-FIVE buildings, many of them valuable stores, destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th July, occasioned by firing of Crackers. Fifty or sixty families unhoused—from $30,000 to $40,000 worth of property destroyed, about half of which was insured. This was no doubt a very splendid, but rather an expensive illumination.

Two buildings were set on fire in Troy on the 4th inst. by the firing of Crackers.

TOLERATION.

The Editor of the Boston Transcript says, in speaking of the 4th July,

"We are firmly convinced that a man, who, in defiance of public opinion, orders his store or shop to be opened on that day, commits a sin as grievous as that same public would consider it, if he should open his shop on the Sabbath!"!

This is toleration indeed. We wonder whether the editor would think it right to fire cannon, make a military display, drink to excess &c. in honor of the day? Which would the editor think the greatest profanation of the day, to keep the shop open, or to observe it by attending exclusively to religious exercises? Indeed would he not consider this the most exceptionable of all the ways in which this anniversary could be kept?

"Sin against public opinion"!! Suppose public opinion requires us to sin against God, what then?

WHITEHALL, WASHINGTON CO.—A letter dated 25th June, from a gentleman in Whitehall to his brother in this village, says, "Last Sabbath fifty united with the church in this village. It was a solemn and interesting day. A number more are expected to come forward at the next communion."

GRANVILLE, N. Y.—The same letter adds:—"There has been a very extensive revival in Granville within a short time. There have been about 100 conversions—10 or 12 a day.

WEST-GRANVILLE.—We further learn from a gentleman who resides in Whitehall that in W. Granville 70 have united with the Presbyterian church.

In HARTFORD, between 70 and 80.

In WHITEHALL, East Parish, a revival is now in progress.

BADGER'S WEEKLY MESSENGER.

We have just received the Specimen number of a newspaper under this title. The Editor has been one of the conductors of the Christian Advocate and Journal. It is "to be devoted to the interests of Religion, Literature, Science, Agriculture, Commerce and public occurrences." The sheet is one of the largest in the United States, and contains a great amount of reading matter.

It is not to be of a party or sectarian character, and from the talents of the editor and the subjects embraced in the design, we have no doubt that it will be an interesting and valuable paper.

Price two dollars and fifty cents in advance. The second number will be issued early in August.

J. M. is received. The sentiments of his communication are correct and important—calculated to do good, but the language needs correction. We decline publishing it in its present shape, but would suggest to the writer to submit a copy of it for revision to some judicious friend. The clergyman of V—a, would doubtless assist him in pruning it. Should this be done and a revised copy forwarded, with postage paid, we shall be happy to lay it before our readers.

The Post-Master General has changed the name of the Post-Office at ERIE, N. Y. to NEWSTEAD, to correspond to the new name given to the town by the late Legislature.

POWDER PLOT.—Some fellow who took in high dudgeon the order of the Mayor of Albany, prohibiting the firing of crackers on the 4th, showed his contempt of this anti-republican act, by letting off a cannister containing four lbs. powder in the stoop of the Mayor, by which considerable damage was done to the windows in his house and to those adjoining.

BOOTHS IN NEW-YORK.—The Journal of Commerce says that the order prohibiting the sale of liquor at the booths had the effect to diminish the sale, although it was very extensively disregarded. Out of 130 booths erected on the 4th for the sale of liquor, all but ten were occupied by foreigners.—This, according to the estimate of some of our sticklers for equal rights, shows that the patriotism of foreigners is, to that of our own citizens, as twelve to one. This must certainly be a very free country where foreigners can thus trample upon our laws with impunity!

N. B. Most of these booths were erected on the Sabbath!

OUR SABBATH SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

It is with peculiar gratification that we call the attention of Sabbath School Teachers, children, and the friends of this institution to our Sabbath School department.—We have long felt the want of some publication from which we could transfer to our own columns something that should afford instruction on this important subject—Something that should aid teachers in the discharge of their highly important duties & that should set before them the vast responsibilities of their station. Such a publication we think we have found in the S. S. Instructer.—All of the articles in this department, we have taken from that paper—some of them were selected by its editor from other similar publications.—We hope that it may find an extensive circulation and a liberal support.

SABBATH ACCIDENT.—As some carmen in New York were washing their horses on the Sabbath, they got into a dispute with some young men who were amusing themselves with a walk, which resulted in a fight and in the death of one of the carmen.

PASTORAL LETTER.

The Pastoral Letter of Rev. Mr. Crawford of Le Roy, addressed to the Churches of Genesee county, will be found on our first page. It contains much important matter and we hope that the salutary admonitions and instruction it contains, will receive the attention of those for whose benefit it is designed.

PROTRACTED MEETING AT PITTSFORD.

A Meeting commenced at Pittsford on Thursday last and still continues. We do not think proper to say more about it than that the power of God is strikingly manifest in the conviction and conversion of sinners. To his name be the Glory.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

Mr. Editor:—Protracted sickness, and absence from home, for some weeks past, have prevented me, from sending you some additional remarks on the importance of a thoroughly educated ministry. I regret, that continued illness will not allow me, to give that attention to the subject, which it demands at the present time.

I shall endeavor, to consider, what constitutes an educated ministry, and, Providence permitting, to enter somewhat at length, into the subject of its vast importance to the safety and purity of the churches.

If the example of Scott and Fuller would be followed, or the advice of Edwards would be taken, no remarks on this subject, would, at this time, be required;—but, I think I perceive a growing disposition, in many, to undervalue systematic education in the ministry; and also, a desire, arising I doubt not, from most benevolent feelings, to supply the lamentable deficiency in the ministry, by adopting a more expeditious method of introducing young men to its labors. This course demands the most serious consideration before it shall be adopted; for once adopted, its evils, if such shall be found to arise, will be almost past remedy. We might, in the Presbyterian church, make ministers as easily and as numerously, as some other denominations do, and what should we gain by it! In my humble opinion we should lose the sublime elevation we now hold, and more than three fourths of our usefulness would be instantly destroyed. Talent and education, is influence, and influence rightly directed is usefulness.

This commendable desire to add to the number of the ministry, by the hasty admission of half educated men to its labors, will unquestionably defeat the very object in view. Was it my sole object to fill any profession in life, to do so, I would make it as respectable and influential as possible. The number of the ministry holds an intimate relation to the character and spirit of the ministry. Let the ministry be intelligent and active, and they are in good demand; called, settled, and respected at once. Let them be half educated and poorly prepared for the complicated and arduous duties of their office, they soon become almost itinerant, if not wholly out of employ, and rather discourage others from entering the ministry, than supply the existing deficiency themselves: But this point I hope to consider more at length hereafter.

The question may here arise, may not some uneducated ministers be useful? Certainly; and no doubt much more so if they had more Biblical and Theological learning. That ignorance contributes in any sense, either to devotion or usefulness, must not be granted: And yet this seems to be the strong impression of many; and they will borrow the scripture declaration, 'hath not God chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things that are mighty,' to fortify the impression; overlooking alike the perversion of this passage and the general strain of the Bible on this subject.

The question will be asked, are not some uneducated men more useful, than some educated men! I answer, yes—and nothing is lost or gained by the admission. Still, I maintain that education never of itself makes a man less useful; nor does the absence of it make any man more so.

The minds of some, I am aware, will still be inquring, are there not some men, whom education would have injured; are they not as they now are, better fitted for their place, in the field, than if they had been thoroughly educated!—As an unqualified negative would not satisfy, I shall place the burden of proof on the arm of the inquirer. Show us if you can, that their usefulness would not have been vastly increased by additional acquisitions in science and literature, as well as Biblical and Theological learning!—This cannot be done. The contrary very few will question. I think it is Dr. Humphrey who says, "no doubt, the aggregate amount of a minister's usefulness will be increased, by studying till he is 30 years old."

We are often incompetent to judge of the exact amount of a man's usefulness. The immediate and visible effect of his labors, are by no means a safe criterion. He may be reaping in joy a redundant harvest, where others before him, now in heaven, have ploughed and sowed in tears. I ask, is the glory his! , His is the least of the labor; and if honor belongs to the simple instrument in the hand of the Great Agent, his is the least of the honor. And while we may be estimating all the present and apparent usefulness of men, we may not be capable of perceiving subsequent and remote evils, which a more expanded view, more experience and more acquaintance with intellectual and moral causes might have enabled them to have foreseen and prevented. As to usefulness or want of usefulness, it is possible, that the record of heaven will disclose a result vastly different from the opinions & testimony of men. I fully allow, that there are some men highly gifted of God; of powerful minds, bold and lofty in conception, rich in resources of illustration, capable of originating thought in a moment, where others might study days and weeks, and fall far below the same region of intellection still. To such men, I give all due honor. I rejoice at their usefulness. To such I freely yield my hand, my heart, my pulpit, and every possible facility for usefulness: But here let us be careful. There are few such men—and if we would not sully their lustre, eclipse their brightness and ruin their reputation, let us place them where God has placed them; as exceptions to the common class of men, and who are to travel in a solitary tho' brilliant orbit. That every man can make such a minister is not to be supposed, and they who with unfurnished minds attempt it, fail and fail, disgracing both themselves and the man they vainly attempt to imitate, as well as cruelly wound the cause, they honestly, prayerfully, but unadvisedly attempt to advance. I say, that there are few such men, and their peculiarities are not for our imitation. Whitfield was one of those splendid luminaries that visits our hemisphere, but once in a thousand years. When young men without Whitfield's mind and knowledge of mankind undertake to be Whitfields, they must fail—and fail too, with a vast injury to the church. I once said to a highly respected Brother, (whose success has been great and who has borne no small amount of reproach) you have been more injured by your friends and followers, than by your own imprudencies. He replied, "I know it, they have grieved me to death." Let no one then suppose, that I would discourage or detract from the usefulness of such men—Not at all. I would increase it, and encourage them with all my heart. Yet I would watch them; for if they mistake in trifles, they leave a deep and lasting injury: for their errors, if such they have, are more likely to be caught and imitated than their excellencies: An ordinary mind may seize the first, while none but an intellect of their own superior mould is equal to the latter.

Ill health must be my excuse for the imperfections of the foregoing remarks. I shall hope soon to resume the subject.

Yours, &c. A. D. EDDY.

FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION AT MENDON.

The anniversary of our National Independence was observed by a portion of citizens in a manner both novel and interesting. The Sabbath School children to the number of about three hundred assembled at the Baptist church near Mendon corners, and moved in procession accompanied by their Superintendents, Teachers, parents and other friends through the village to the Presbyterian church, where after prayer by Rev. Mr. Weaver, Pastor of the Baptist church, an address on the subject of Sunday Schools was delivered by Rev. Mr. Hart of Avon. A recess was then had during which refreshments were served in the church to children, teachers and others who were disposed to participate. After the recess an address to the children was delivered by Rev. Mr. Kelsey of the Baptist church, Avon. The report of the town Society was then read and the following Resolutions adopted.

On motion of Rev. Mr. Taylor, seconded by Mr. Woodbury,

Resolved, That the report just read be accepted and adopted.

On motion of John C. Chamberlain, Esq. seconded by Rev. Mr. Sill,

Resolved, That the utility of Sabbath Schools having been tested in this town for a number of years past, this meeting unhesitatingly declare them worthy the encouragement of every christian patriot.

On motion of Doct. Milton Sheldon, seconded by Mr. Sternes,

Resolved, That the members of this society pledge themselves to persevere in their endeavors to bring all the children in this town under Sabbath School instruction.

Upon offering and seconding the resolutions, addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Taylor, John C. Chamberlain, Esq., Rev. Mr. Sill, and Doct. Sheldon. The services were concluded at 3 o'clock, P. M., by prayer, singing and the Apostolic Benediction.

The addresses and other services were appropriate and interesting, and calculated to make an impression on the minds of all favorable to such celebrations.

Such a spectacle as three hundred children in a country town with their teachers and other friends to nearly the same number, moving in silent procession to the house of God on the morning of our nation's birth day, each school preceded by a banner and upon it some such motto as "Youth is the time to serve the Lord,"—"Be ye followers of Christ as dear children,"—"Suffer little children to come unto me," was calculated to excite in the mind the most interesting reflections.

The report stated that there were 384 children in the several Sabbath Schools in the town and all had access to Libraries of greater or less extent. Not quite half of the children between the ages of 5 & 15 years have as yet been brought into the Sabbath Schools. This celebration will do much towards exciting a deeper interest in the good cause, and from the feeling which was manifested I should expect that another 4th of July would exhibit a greater assemblage.

SPECTATOR.

P. S. This celebration in which near 600 persons united was conducted without the use of spirits of any kind, or the burning of gunpowder. The refreshment at noon consisted of Cake and Cheese, furnished by the friends of Sabbath schools in different parts of the town and pure water.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

There is a magical influence which plays around this day and renders it sacred in the eyes of freemen. The visions of the past are recalled to memory and our bosoms thrill with the vibrating emotions of anticipated happiness and glory. But in the midst of our joyous feelings does it not become us deeply to reflect upon the primary cause of that civil and religious freedom we so highly prize? And how shall we more satisfactorily evince that our hearts are turned to the true source of all these enjoyments, than by direct addresses to the great God who inspired the heroes of the revolution with the unconquerable spirit "to do or die!" We think the Sabbath School celebration in this village today was highly appropriate, solemn and peculiarly adapted to leave those impressions which alone it is salutary to make on the minds of youth on this occasion. Is it possible there should be a christian whose heart has been warmed with the love of that 'truth' the knowledge of which delivers from every species of bondage, who will not say, Amen, to this mode of celebrating the 4th of July?—On our own mind the impression was deep, solemn, and we hope will be lasting. The vast number of infant souls there congregated—the intensity of interest with which they listened to the simple and unadorned narration of the first orator—the fearful responsibility of the teachers as portrayed by the second—the solemn and appropriate appeals to the throne of divine grace—together with the reflection, that those who were honored with an active part on this occasion, might, under God, be wielding the destinies of unborn millions, by the influence they would exert on this youthful assembly—these were the circumstances calculated to arrest, to overwhelm, and lead the mind to the true source of those blessings which we are accustomed to associate with the 4th of July. S——R.

Celebration of the fourth July at EAST-BLOOMFIELD.

The 55th anniversary of our National Independence was celebrated to-day, at this place, by the Young men's Temperance Society.—After the usual religious exercises, and the reading the Declaration of Independence, an Oration was delivered by Lorenzo H. Brooks, highly creditable to its author as the friend of Temperance and civil liberty. After the services at the church, the procession returned to Mr. Boughton's, under the direction of capt. Joel K. Salmon, as Marshall, where about 200 ladies and gentlemen partook of an excellent dinner, prepared for the occasion. The day passed pleasantly, and the company dispersed in good order at an early hour. By order of the committee.

GLORIOUS MEETING AT AURORA, ERIE CO.

The following letter has just been received here by a father from his son in Buffalo, and is dated 4th July, 1831.

It may be interesting to you to hear what the Lord is doing in this region. A four days meeting was appointed in Aurora a town about 16 or 18 miles from Buffalo, a week ago last Wednesday. The first day but about twelve could be got together to pray. Christians who were acquainted with the place remarked when they left Buffalo to attend the meeting that they were going to a place noted for its Infidelity—but christians appeared to go in the strength of the God of Hosts—the means used were simple—the word of God exhibited in a plain and pointed manner was set home by the Holy Spirit to the hearts of many. When we collected for worship on the Sabbath, the house was not sufficient to hold but a small share of the people assembled—consequently we repaired to a grove a few rods distant where seats were provided, and from 2000 to 3000 persons assembled as it would seem prepared to hear what the Lord would say by the mouth of his servant. It was truly a solemn time—such as I never before witnessed—after the forenoon service was closed seats were left for the anxious, which were soon filled—probably 75 persons—at the close of the afternoon service, between 100 and 200 persons flocked to the anxious seat—some crying aloud for mercy—So much deep feeling I think I never before witnessed, scarcely a dry eye could be seen among the whole number on the anxious seats—probably twice this number would have flocked to these seats if it had not been for the crowd which circled around—The meeting still continues—Since the sabbath spoken of above, about 200 per day have occupied the anxious seats—the number of conversions of course not known—several hundreds at least—although this is with farmers a very busy season of the year, yet they can find a plenty of time to attend to the concerns of their immortal souls. To use the expression of one just returned from this meeting, "some felt like staying on the ground until Christ's second coming." One circumstance quite interesting I will relate.

A tavern-keeper in the immediate vicinity of the meeting—an avowed Deist or Atheist, and who but two days before forbid a person the privilege of leaving a tract in his house, on the 4th or 5th day of the meeting came out decided on the Lord's side, and opened his ball-room for an inquiry meeting, which, on Monday was filled with persons deeply anxious for their soul's salvation; and I believe has been filled every day since.

For the Observer.

"Something must be done,"—said Mr. W. at the monthly concert last evening, after the contribution had been taken up, and the money counted, "something must be done quickly; and let each of you determine to night what you can do; what plan you can devise to increase these monthly contributions." In obedience to this command I went home and devised which I hasten to communicate to you, Mr. Editor, with the hope that unless a better is proposed, it will be immediately carried into execution. Let the pastor request each leader of a section, or class meeting, who belongs to his church, to call on all the individuals that compose his section and ask every man, woman and child, how much they will contribute monthly, for the spread of the gospel among the heathen. It is believed there is no member of a Presbyterian church, in this day and place, who has health, that will not feel it a duty to give something. Let the sum which each engages to contribute, be set opposite the individual's name on the leader's paper.—Let each attend the monthly concert, pay their subscriptions there. Let those who do not, carry theirs to the sectional meeting the Saturday evening following, and give them to the superintendent. Let the absentees from this meeting, if there are any, pay their subscriptions to their superintendent, when he calls on them the succeeding week, to learn the cause of their nonattendance. Thus the leader of a sectional meeting can act as collector for his section, without any extra trouble. It is important that he always obtain the subscriptions from his section before the close of the second week after the monthly concert, as the money should be paid over to the treasurer during the first half of the month. Let it not be supposed that where parents and children are members of the church, the amount which the family contributes may as well be paid by the father only;—every one who loves the Lord Jesus Christ, should have the privilege of contributing something toward the advancement of his kingdom, and where the means of contributing in a family are very small, they should nevertheless be divided among all its members who are members of the church; though the sum which each could give, were only sixpence a month. And I think we may confidently say there is no member of a church in this place (the sick excepted) who cannot with a little self-denial obtain that sum every month to put into the Lord's treasury. But let every one before he writes the amount of his monthly subscription, think of the present state of the foreign missionary funds; of the state of the world, and of what would have been his own state, had not One "who was rich, for his sake become poor." Let those who have been in the habit of giving little or nothing, and who think they have nothing to spare; ask themselves seriously whether they cannot make some sacrifices; whether there are not some articles of dress, or food, they have been in the habit of using, which they can better do without, than the heathen can do without the Gospel. Let those who are considered liberal in their donation, who give from five dollars to one dollar at the monthly concert, reflect whether even they, cannot double their contributions.—Let them not say, "I formed my opinion long ago respecting the amount I ought to contribute for the spread of the Gospel; and do not think I shall alter it." Eternity may tell them, that that opinion was a wrong one. When lying on the bed of death, their season of laboring for the Lord past, when looking back on their lives to see what they have done for him, and thinking of that account which they are just about to render of their stewardship, they may feel, that they might have done, that they ought to have done, twice as much as they have, for the salvation of the heathen. If this plan is not approved, let a better be proposed; let it not only be devised but executed now. Let those who intend to do something not waste time in talking, but take these words of Cecil for a motto—"Do it, do it, do it."

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT MONROE.

This venerable patriot and satesman closed his earthly career on Monday afternoon at half past 3 o'clock the glorious anniversary of AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE,—at the residence of his son-in law, Samuel L. Gouverneur Esq. in this city. ADAMS and JEFFERSON died on the FOURTH OF JULY, 1826; MONROE on the FOURTH OF JULY, 1831.—Thus of four Ex-Presidents of the United States deceased, three have died on the memorable FOURTH OF JULY! And two of them on the same Fourth of July. A coincidence so extraordinary is scarcely to be found in history. Adams died in the 61st year of his age; Jefferson in the 84th; Monroe in the 73d.—Jour. Commerce.

SECULAR.

From the N. Y. Spectator, July 8.

ANOTHER GREAT FIRE.

A most destructive fire occurred last night in the upper part of the city, which nearly destroyed an entire block of buildings, bounded on the north by Charlton, on the south by Vandam, on the east by Varick, and on the west by Hudson street, the value of which, with furniture, &c. is estimated at upwards of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. The fire spread with such rapidity, that many families barely escaped with their night clothing, and in one instance, a person was dragged from his bed, after the bedstead was on fire. In addition to the property destroyed, we regret to add that several persons are missing, whom it is feared have perished in the flames. Two children, who were left locked up in a room by their parents, who had gone to the Theatre, have not been found. Several firemen, we understand, are seriously injured.

The fire broke out in the carpenter's shop of Wm. J. Burke, in the rear of 66 and 68 Charlton-street. Mr. B. had a large quantity of lumber on hand, which was all on fire before the engines could reach the scene of conflagration; and unfortunately the distance from a supply of water was so great that a dozen buildings were in flames before a drop could be thrown on them. The chief supply was from the Hudson River, and when the fire broke out the water was so low that the suction rooted in the mud, and soon gravelled the boxes. From appearance this morning we have no doubt that many families are in great distress. It is computed that not less than one hundred and twenty-five families are rendered houseless by this disaster, several of whom who resided in the rear, are reduced to beggary. One family we saw, a widow with several children, who had saved nothing but the few rags on them when they retired to rest.

* * * * * * * * *

So far as we have been able to ascertain, about one half of the property destroyed was insured.

Yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, the roof of the drug store, on the corner of Fulton and William-streets, was discovered to be in flames, but by the extraordinary exertions of an engine company, whose house is nearly opposite, the fire was soon subdued. This fire, and it is believed the extensive one of last night, were caused by the violation of the corporation law, in throwing squibs and crackers about the streets and into houses and yards. Besides the great loss of property, lives have thus been sacrificed.

We have just learned that a little son of Mr. Grinnell, the painter, aged about eight years, in attempting to take hold of the drag-rope of engine No. 24, was thrown down and trampled to death, by the company, who were not able to stop the machine in season.

ACCIDENT.—On Monday, near West Point a small boat containing seven persons came in contact with the steamer De Witt Clinton, as she was on her passage to Albany. One man had his back and collar bones broken, and one child was drowned. All the persons were taken to Newburg.—Jour. Com.

DISTRESSING CASUALTY.—The following account of a lamentable occurrence is from J. P. Anderson, Esq. Postmaster at Cold Spring, and addressed to the editors of the Gaz.:—On the 26th inst. Mr. John Milton Partridge, late merchant in Tarytown, Westchester county, went with several others to Butterhills, about two or three miles above West Point, and attempted to climb up the precipice in search of iron ore.—Mr. Partrige had succeeded in climbing about 150 or 200 feet, up an almost perpendicular rock; when by some means, he slipped and fell head foremost about 30 feet, and struck a rock which was made slippery by the trickling of the water down it; from this he bounded and fell the remainder of about 150 feet, and struck among the rocks at the foot of the precipice! He expired immediately. Mr. Partridge has left a wife and four small children to mourn their loss.

CHARLES CARROLL.—Intelligence was received on Saturday that the venerable survivor of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was dangerously ill, and not expected to recover.—N. Y. Spec.

A student of the Virginia University, lately made a calculation, founded on data derived from the most accurate tables of mortality, that the chances were more than 1721 millions to one, that Jefferson and Adams would not both die on the day upon which they actually expired.—Ib.

Five Points.—On Friday night and Saturday morning Ald. Strong with a detatchment of the Police officers made a descent on the Five Points, and captured 75 of all ages, sexes and colors. Of these, 54 were sent to the Penitentiary for 60 days each, of whom are 23 white grils 29 black grils, and 2 men.—N Y. Spect.

FEMALE COURAGE.—With respect to courage' the author of 'L'Apologie de beau Sexe,' relates a story which if true, has seldom been equalled by man. A servant girl of Lisle, remarkable for her fearless disposition, laid a wager that she would go into a charnel-house at midnight, without light, and bring from thence a dead man's skull.—Accordingly, at the appointed time she went, but the person with whom she had made the bet, intending to terrify her, had gone before, and hid himself in the place. When he heard her descend and take up the scull, he called out in a hollow dismal voice, "Leave me my head!" The girl instead of discoverrng any symptoms of horror or fright, very coolly laid it down, and said, "Well there it is then," and took another; upon which the voice repeated, "Leave me my head!" But the heroic girl observing it was the same voice that had called before, answered in her country dialect, "Nae, nae, friend, ye' cannot ha' two heads!"

POPERY IN AMERICA.

The London Protestant Journal furnishes this condensed notice. "Popery has lately made way very much in America. Every thing must be done to secure its predominance; any thing and every thing for the church, is the maxim by which the unchanged and unchangeable system is actuated. Every engine is at work, and those successful agents who, in every state and government for centuries back, have been so serviceable to Rome, are in active operation in North as well as South America, in England and Ireland. As an evidence of this, the PROTESTANT of New-York says, "we are seriously troubled in this republic with the influx of the Jesuits." Are they busied there, and is all arranging to organize the operations with which this country was recently threatened to be attacked from that quarter of the globe!"

FOURTH OF JULY.

Haul down our country's banner—let its folds
Be gathered in, nor float upon the breeze!
Our eagle must not soar aloft to-day,
But close his powerful wings, and stoop his crest!
Ye 'red artillery,' your thunders stop!
Quench out the thousand fires which wildly blaze
Up to the kindling sky from field to hill!
It is not meet that the sweet trumpet's voice
Should rouse our sluggish blood & nerve our hearts!
Forbear, ye vaunting fine-spun orators—
Ye mincing fools, all fustian, noise and rant,—
Ye wound our ears with sickening rhapsodies!
Be hushed the general shout—let sadness brood
Over the land, and joy disperse its smiles!
For Liberty lies prostrate in the dust,
With hair dishevelled, and with zone unbound;
Her cheeks are colorless, save when a blush
Of deepest shame doth o'er them fitful steal;
And the deep brilliance of her large fair eyes
Is now extinguished in a flood of grief;
For here, in this her sanctuary and home,
Hath Slavery boldly raised his iron throne;
And men, like household goods or servile beasts,
Are bought and sold, kidnapped and pirated;
Branded with red hot irons, scourged with whips;
Laden with chains that pinch their tender flesh;
Driven in droves e'en by the Capitol;
Imported from afar, then secretly
Thrown into narrow cells and prisons drear,
Till bones and sinews in the market rise.

* * * * * * * *

Then haul our strip'd and starry banner down—
Our cannon freight not—stop the noisy breath
Of heartless patriotism—be our praise unsung.
To day we'll not discourse of British wrong,
Of various feats in arms by freemen bold,
Nor spit on kings, nor tauntingly call names;
But we will fall upon our bended knees,
And weep in bitterness of heart, and pray
Our God to save us from his threatening wrath:
We will no longer multiply our boasts
Of liberty, till all are truly free. G——n.

ELEGY.

ON THE DEATH OF THE LATE REV. ROBERT HALL.

Though lofty his spirit, though brilliant his name,
The chains of the victor have bound him;
Though matchless his genius, though glorious his fame,
The night of the grave is around him.

Thou mournest, O Zion, and well may'st thou mourn,
A spirit so rare should have fled,
And well may thy sorrows bedew the cold urn
Where Hall is entombed with the dead.

The Pastor is taken, bereaved is the fold,
Dissevered the holiest ties,
The tongue of the eloquent, silent and cold,
And quenched are the soul-piercing eyes.

There's a wreath on his bier, there's a light on his grave,
The light of religion and truth,
The wreath is the chaplet that genius did weave,
To garland his temple in youth.

We heard him, and fancied a seraph had spoke,
Enshrined in a mortal's disguise;
We listen, but ah! the enchantment is broke,
The seraph has passed to the skies.

Ah, his was the melody, lofty but sweet,
Of intellect rich and refined,
When learning, taste, genius, and piety meet,
In one rare and beautiful mind.

Thy champion, O truth, in the infidel war,
That grasped the foul hydra and bound him,
Despoiled to the wheels of his conquering car,
With plaudits of victory round him,

Retires from the contest, his helmet and shield,
The sword by his General given,
Are all laid aside; he has passed from the field,
To rest in the splendors of heaven.

His holiest joy, in that blest repose,
Is not that his talents were bright,
But that he devoted them all to His cause
Who crowns him with glory and light.

O Thou who canst brighten thy churches below,
With stars as the seraphim bright,
Or guide them in safety through darkness and wo,
By lamps of the feeblest light;

We still would remember, the brightest and best,
Compared with their Saviour, are dim,
And when he is pleas'd, he their course may arrest,
To centre their glories in Him. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FROM WALCH'S NOTES ON BRAZIL.

'Nothing can be more unfounded, or, indeed, more absurd, than to say, that they are reconciled and happier in slavery in America, than in freedom in their own country. They seem to have as keen a sense of bondage, and to repine as bitterly at their lot, as any white men, in the same state in Africa; indeed, if we might judge from the effects, still more. I have never heard that suicide is common among the unhappy Europeans, detained in slavery on the barbary coasts; it is the daily practice in Brazil. Besides the instances I have mentioned elsewhere, the harbor is constantly covered with the bodies of blacks, on whom no marks of violence is found, and who are known to throw themselves in, to escape from insupportable life. This is particularly the case at Bota Fogo, where several respectable persons have told me they frequently encountered dead bodies when they went to bathe. I have seen them myself left by the tide on the strand, and some lying weltering just under our windows.'

'But we were all eye-witnesses to a very striking and melancholy fact of this kind. One evening some policemen were conducting a woman to the calabuoco, along the road leading to Catete. Just when they came opposite our door, where there was an open descent to the strand, the woman suddenly rushed down the rock and cast herself into the sea. The place in which she fell was too shallow to drown her; so, after lying on her face a moment, she again raised herself, and rushed forward into deeper water, she sunk and disappeared. The policemen made no attempt to save her: but Mr. Abercrombie ordered some of the blacks of our house to follower her. They immediately did so, brought her up apparently dead, and carried her into our hall, with her head hanging down, and exhibiting the supposed mortal symptom of froth hanging on her lips. The negroes who humanely saved her, supposing her dead, threw her down on the bare stones, just as they would be treated themselves; and she lay there like any other worthless or despised object; but, on examining the poor creature, we had reason to suppose that it was possible to restore suspended animation; a bed was therefore brought, on which she was laid, divested of her wet and tattered garments, and wrapt in a warm blanket.—Friction and other usual means were then resorted to; and after having been persevered in, for some time, showed symptoms of returning animation. She was seized by convulsions, succeeded by a violent shuddering; then ejected a quantity of water from her stomach, opened her eyes, and muttered some incoherent words, and at length fell into a slumber, from which she awoke in a sensible state.

'She gave the following account of herself.—She was a native of Minas on the coast of Guinea, where she was one night seized in her hut, dragged on board a slaver, brought to Rio, and sold at Vallongo. She was then baptized at the church of the Candellaria, by the name of Francisca, and brought by her master, a captain Philipe, to his chorn, near Bota Fogo. She was employed in washing, which she willingly performed; but her master treated her with the greatest cruelty and inhumanity, and in proof of this she showed her arms and side, which were greatly swelled and inflamed from the effects of blows she had received a few days before. She could endure it no longer, and fled to the woods. Her master immediately gave sixteen milreis to the Capitao do Mato; she was pursued and overtaken, and was on her way back to her former state; but she conceived such a horror, at again returning to encounter the brutality she had before experienced, that she determined not to be brought home alive, so in passing along the shore, where there is an opening to the sea, among the rocks, just opposite our house, she rushed down, and hoped she had effected her purpose.

'She appeared very grateful for the kindness with which she was treated, so different from any thing she had ever experienced in Brazil before, and proposed to do any work with alacrity, to which she was put; but when we spoke of her returning to her master, she expressed a degree of horror, both in her looks and manners, that amounted to distraction, and seemed to think she was but little indebted to those who saved her life, if she was again to be given up to that suffering, than which, loss of life was more tolerable.

'The next day I went to Bota Fogo, to learn something of her master, and to interest some friends in her behalf, who, I knew, were very kind and humane. But a slave I found, was no legitimate object of compassion; and they, whose deepest sympathies would have been roused by a European so situated, had not the smallest, for a black African. In reply to my statements, I was assailed by stories of wickedness and worthlesness of the race in particular to which she belonged. I inquired if they were adicted to theft, or other immoralities; it was admitted that they were not, but they were notorious for a practice equally dishonest, that of cheating their masters, who paid their money for them, by daring to kill themselves when life was no longer tolerable. I further learned that her master could come and claim her, as he would his horse or his mule; that she could be sent to the calabuco, to be first punished for her dishonest attempt on her own life, and then restored to him, to be dealt with as he pleased.

'In effect, in a day or two her master did come and claim her, and his claim could be no more resisted, than if he had demanded any other article of his property. Her arms and side were still greatly inflamed, but she had no other alternative, and was obliged to go away with a stern fellow sent for her. All that could be done, was done, by his Excellency, lord Strangford. When a slave flies and returns, or is brought back, he endeavors to procure the interference of some one, who becomes his podrinho, or sponsor, and intercedes for his forgiveness. If the person consents, he is always sure the fugitive will be forgiven, for it is considered a high offence to refuse. This kind office lord Strangford undertook, and secured the poor creature from present punishment, but could be no protection against future cruelty, which, no doubt, will end in determined suicide.

'This horror is carried to such an extent, that the slaves not only kill themselves, but their children to escape it. Negresses are known to be remarkably fond mothers, and all I have seen confirms the observation of others; yet this very affection impels them to commit infanticide.—Many of them, particularly the Minas slaves, have the strongest repugnance to having children, and practice means to extinguish life before the infant is born, and provide as they say against the affliction of bringing slaves into the world. Is it not a frightful state that thus counteracts the first impressions of nature, eradicates the maternal feeling from the human breast, and causes the mother to become the murderer of her unborn offspring!

'The yearning after liberty is the strongest feeling of the negro's mind. It is usual with people, at their deaths, to emancipate their slaves, particularly ecclesiastics, as if to make atonement for having kept them in that state, as long as they could hold them in their grasp. Slaves, who have expected this, and had their hopes frustrated, sink rapidly under the effects of bitter disappointment, and die of broken hearts.—An incident of this kind occurred at San Jose, a few days before my arrival. An ecclesiastic in the Minas Geraes died, and all his slaves were emancipated by his will. It is requisite however, to pay a certain duty on such manumission, and as no provision had been made in the will for this, it was necessary to sell one or two of the slaves to pay for the rest. One of them was brought to San Jose where he sank rapidly under the feelings of disappointed hope. He refused to take any sustenance, and it was necessary to have his mouth held forcibly open by other blacks, while it was poured down his throat, but he persisted in his determination to emancipate himself, as he said, and in a short time succeeded. He was buried, as well as I emember, the day before we arrived.

'But this irrepressible horror at a state of slavery, is the parent, sometimes of the greatest crimes; and when negroes expect a testamentary freedom, they anticipate the time by the premature death of the testator; and thus, a humane and benevolent intention is often the cause of the death of the intended benefactor, and becomes a frequent incentive of poison and assassination. I knew a man in the Organ mountains, who displayed a most frightful picture of the effects of slavery in the different relations of life. The man's name was Felice, a gamelleiro, or one who undertakes to cut down woods, to convert the timber into gamellas, and sell them through the country. He was a mullatto, the son of a white man, by a negro slave. You will suppose that his bondage ceased at his birth, and that the offspring of a whiteman could not be the bondsman of his parent. No such thing; he was liable to the condition of his mother, and the father kept his own son a slave, to sell him, as he would his mule. Being ill however, and near to die, he made his will, left his child his freedom, and apprised him of it. After sometime he recovered, and having some dispute with his son, he threatned that he would alter his will, and that he should be sold with the rest of the stock. This boy determined to prevent, assassinated his father in a wood, got possession of the will, demanded his freedom, and obtained it. This circumstance was perfectly well known to every body in the neighborhood, but no process was instituted against him; and I saw him every day driving his mules, loaded with gamellas, and not chargeable, as I could hear, with any other delinquency, except the horrible one of having murdered his father, to obtain his freedom.'

POWER OF CONSCIENCE.

Letter received by a Mercantile House in Boston, dated May 23, 1831.

GENTLEMEN,—A number of years since, I purchased some goods of you, the amount about $130, and many more since that time; but when I received the bill and goods, I found that I had, [naming an article,] that was not mentioned in the bill. I don't know but there might have been something else. I have no distinct recollection that there were—but at any rate, what was not mentioned in the bill was so trifling, that I presumed that you gave them in; I don't know now but you did. I ought to have mentioned it to you; I have been at your store a great many times since, and I don't recollect as I ever thought of it. But this is a time for great searchings of heart—and since God in his great mercy, for some months past has been pouring out his Holy Spirit over the land, I have seen mentioned in the papers that many people have come forward and made restitution, whose case was somewhat similar to mine. I have inclosed to you, Gentlemen, five dollars; if this don't make you restitution, please to write me what will, and I will send it. I ask of you that charity and forgiveness which the Apostle Paul recommends.

I am, dear sirs, yours, very respectfully.

The above $5 was received as a donation to the American Tract Society.

AARON RUSSELL, Agent.

ORIENTAL ILLUSTRATION OF PSALM XXII. 5.—"I confess," said Captain Wilson, "that since my return from India, I have been forcibly struck with several things, which prove the Scriptures to be an Eastern Book. For instance, the language of one of the Psalms, where David says, 'Thou anointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over,' most likely alludes to a custom which continues to this day. I once had this ceremony performed on myself in the house of a rich Indian, in the presence of a large company. The gentleman of the house poured upon my hands and arms a delightfully odoriferious perfume, put a golden cup into my hand, and poured wine into it till it had run over, assuring me, at the time, that it was a great pleasure to him to receive me, and that I should find a rich supply in his house. I think the inspired poet expressed his sense of the divine goodness by this allusion."

From the Southern Religious Telegraph.

BIGOTRY—PERSECUTION!

Mr. Converse.—I send you a single paragraph from an infidel pamphlet, which has recently made its appearance in South Carolina, in defence of Dr. Cooper. It is as follows—

'The United States is a country tolerant in theory, and most bigotted in practice. The laws control no man's opinions; they control his conduct only. They guarantee freedom of conscience, of profession, and of discussion to every creed and form of worship; the framers of them well knowing that the result of conflicting opinion and open discussion can only be truth; and that no opinion deserves to be protected which cannot protect itself. But the Clergy in this country are united in persecuting every man, who calls in question their metaphysical opinions, or who hints at their views of ambition and aggrandizement." H.

It appears by the above that the advocates of infidelity are dreadfully persecuted!—and persecuted too by the Clergy!—And how do the Clergy persecute them?—Why, by preaching the Gospel—by publishing the truth—by exposing their delusions and refuges of lies. This is sore, very sore persecution! And they greatly need the sympathies of the people to enable them to endure it: Hence they cry out "Persecution" "Bigotry:" But of what intolerable bigotry are the Clergy guilty? To preach that there is no way of salvation for sinners—for creatures who have violated the laws of God—except that which he in infinite condescension has revealed in the Bible—who can endure bigotry of this character?!'

But the use of this stale artifice of Satan—this cry of persecution won't do. It is folly—ludicrous folly. They may excite the sympathy of their weak and silly followers, but no man can have any cordial sympathy or respect for them (whatever degree of pity he may feel for them) who knows that christians have the same political right to publish and defend the truths of their religion, that the disciples of Fanny Wright have, to publish the old discordant creeds of their sect, which they have borrowed, and are industriously circulating as something new, and as a proof of their superior wisdom.—The moral right of defending the truth against the assaults of those who hate it, is a question which we will not debate at this time.

From the Genius of Temperance.

ALL IS NOT LOST THAT IS IN DANGER.

The day has been when few people believed, that an unfortunate or an abandoned female could be reclaimed or become virtuous. The following is one case out of many that have lately taken place in our own happy country.

A female, of respectable birth and education, by Providence was left in youth, without a father's protection or a mother's counsel; but having a sister that was happily settled in life, she sought a home under her roof. There it was, as is too often the case, that those in prosperity lose all benevolent feelings, and oppress those who have none to look up to who can lighten their burden, though it should be an only sister.

After a long continuation of ill treatment, this fled for refuge to a house of ill-fame, where she continued more than a year. But he who has no pleasure in the death of a sinner, sent the messenger death, and took a child from the evil to come, and by death called all the wretched dwellers in the house, to a thought of judgment and eternity. Such was the effect of this providence upon these people, that they could not think of burying the child, without sending for a minister. The minister obeyed the call—preached Jesus and repentance;—this sister was pricked to the heart, and inquired, "what shall I do!" The direction was given, "repent and believe the gospel; cease to do evil, learn to do well." An asylum was granted her in the minister's own house, where she abode for a length of time. From thence she was taken to a neighboring city, to a Magdalen house, from which she was taken out by her sister, who was the first cause of her ruin—and now they are happy together. P.

"Your churches must be cautious not to be imposed upon by men, who having lost their character in England, flee to America for refuge. Use your influence in preventing the reception and employment of any, who do not come to you, accredited by the body to which they belonged in this country."—N. Y. Obs.

From the Canadian Watchman.

TRUE DIGNITY AND POLITENESS.—If the reader has ever seen—and who has not—a little great man on board a Packet, or at a public hotel, looking contemptuously on all around him, and acting as though he thought it was his due to receive all the accommodations and all the attention, whatever might be the necessities or claims of others, he will find in the following anecdote, a pleasing contrast to the picture.—Howard was a gentleman of fortune; and when all others in his circumstances, imbibe his spirit, there will be an end of the wickedness and folly of factitious highmindedness.

"On his return to England, about the middle of August, Mr. Howard and his son took their passage in one of the regular Packets to Holyhead; and in the course of their short voyage, two little incidents occurred, which have been rescued from oblivion by an anonymous correspondent of the Gentleman's Magazine, who happened to be their fellow passenger; and as they are both strikingly illustrative of the benevolence of that great and good man's character, I transcribed them here, in the words of their narrator:—'While we were on the deck of the packet, young Howard spoke with great roughness to a child that was playing with his coat, and drove it from him. This appearance of inhumanity his father instantly took notice of, and reprimanded him for not behaving with greater tenderness. But at night Mr. Howard had an opportunity of showing his disposition more plainly. On coming to take possession of his berth, he found that a maid-servant belonging to some of the passengers was not provided with a bed, and immediately giving up to her his own, he spent the night upon the cabin floor, choosing rather to discommode himself than to disturb his son. 'In these little incidents,' continues my author for relating them 'we see a man alive to every feeling of humanity; uneasy with a word spoken with harshness to a child; submitting to an inconvenience to relieve from a trifling distress a stranger whose rank gave no claim to attention; and leaving his son in possession of an accommodation which his own age rendered almost necessary. I knew not he,' adds, 'Mr. Howards name during these transactions, and learned it only by accident, a short time before we landed.'

The Sea Serpent.—If there are any (says the Portland Courier) who are still incredulous as to the existence of an enormous sea monster on our coast, we think the following narrative must remove their doubts. We have been satisfied on the subject ourselves for years; but this is the strongest testimony we have ever met with. We know well the place described, & the witnesses, & can warrant the accuracy of their statements. The editor of the Wiscasset Yankee, who went from Wiscasset to Boothbay on purpose to get a correct statement of the facts, gives them as follows:

"He was first seen this year, on Sabbath last, by Mr. Chandler, the keeper of the light in the harbor; but on Tuesday last, the nearest & most accurate view of this monster was had, we ever heard of. This was from a northerly point in the western harbor so called, very near the dwelling of Marshal Smith, Esq. As he passed slowly by this and another small point of land, nearly parallel with the same shore, there was a better opportunity of examining his length than was ever before afforded more particularly as he passed very moderately within sixty feet of one of those points where Mr. Smith and his brother were standing to inspect him. He also passed and repassed several times within 150 feet of Mr. Smith's wharf where 10 or 12 men were viewing him. As we were on the very spot, and the different points at which his length was estimated, and as he was again seen the very morning we arrived, the public may rest assured, that the length of this monster, as estimated by 10 or 12 respectable citizens of Boothbay under the circumstances named, cannot be so very remote from the truth.

"We are well aware that the imagination may picture an animal of almost any length or size when excited by such an incentive as curiosity, (for there could be no fear in this case,) but here curiosity had been in some measure allayed by the previous views of this 'monster,' and some who saw him, concentrated all their observation to the single point of comparing him with some object on shore, by measuring which, they could give the public something more satisfactory than the various discordant reports of what has been called a 'Sea Serpent.'

"No one of those who saw him would make oath that he was under 150 feet, but most of them would be willing to testify under oath that his length could not be much less than 200 feet. Of his size no very accurate estimate could be made, as only parts of his body from his undulating motions, could be seen at a time. No part of it, however, appeared larger than a hogshead. All agree as to this, and his general form, which resembled that of an eel more than any other animal known. His color was so distinctly seen as the sun was shining on him, that there was no difference of opinion—it was brown on the back, and yellow brown on the belly. All agreed there were no bumps on his back; but his undulating motions in swimming were like those of a Leech or Blood Sucker, which gave to his back precisely the appearance of the bumps hitherto described by those who have seen him. The shape of his head which was most distinctly seen, was compared to a snake's—flat on the top, and tapering before and behind. Although of such immense length, he made several very short and quick turns, from which may be inferred, his body cannot be very large in circumference. His head and tail in one of these turns appeared within less than 20 feet of each other. Neither dorsal nor lateral fins could be discovered by any one.

"What astonished us most was the boldness of this monster; for even after he had been glutted with schools of Menhaden which he had evidently chased in, and was devouring with great avidity, and when he appeared sluggish, a Mr. Webster put off in a small boat to have a still nearer inspection, when he turned, made towards the boat immediately, and followed it very nearly to the shore."

WARSAW, May 12.—The State Gazette contains an official communication from Lithuania to the national government. It exhibits in a clear light, the causes and present state of the insurrection in that Province. The following is an extract: "Col. Bartolomaus who was sent from Kowno with 1000 men and 4 field-pieces, took Rosienna by means of a superior force, and demonstrated both in this and subsequent engagements, the barbarous manner in which the oppressor carries on war against the insurgents. Amidst plunder and death, wherever the eye is turned; whole villages and towns send up their flames to the skies, and whoever is unable to escape, is bayonetted without distinction of age or sex, and given up a prey to the devouring element. The same doom awaits the prisoners taken on the field of battle. The soldiers drive them into huts and dwellings, ten or fifteen in a group, and burn them alive!!!

Thrashing in these Machines is performed between cast iron plates, having teeth arranged in circles upon them, which are attached to a wheel, and pass through a corresponding cast iron piece, as the wheel revolves.

They require less velocity, are less expensive and more durable, than those made with a cylinder, or any other kind heretofore in use. A specimen of them may be seen at Allcott Watts & Langworthy's rolling and slitting mill, next door north of the cotton factory, near the falls.

Persons wishing to procure the article for their own use, will do well to supply themselves with this kind. Rights for territory, may be had on advantageous terms to the purchaser, by applying to the patentee, No. 25 Exchange-street.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON REVIVALS. NO. XXX.

Is the minister blame worthy, where the people are not revived?

This is a momentous question. It is feared that many ministers hastily answer the question so as to acquit themselves, while Jehovah holds them guilty. Those who have acquired the name of orthodox and faithful ministers of Christ, are peculiarly in danger of this fault; especially when they have been sticklers for certain modes of doctrines, and certain efforts for a revival, which were never known to be extensively blessed, as the instrument of bringing saints and sinners up to immediate duty—of bringing them to feel that duty may and must be done without delay! Their failure of success, they ought to view as evidence of unfaithfulness on their part. There can be no reason to doubt that blame rests also on the church, and on the impenitent. I have in a previous number spoken of the blame as resting on these three classes. But my present object is to speak of it more fully in relation to ministers. They exert on the church and world an influence so powerful, that it is of the highest importance, that they feel deeply their responsibilities to labor according to the Word, in dependence on the Spirit of God, expecting that success will attend their faithful labors; and with honest and penitent souls charging upon themselves blame, whenever they fail to become the instruments of quickening the saints, and of bringing sinners to repent and embrace Christ. It is true that individual sinners may have become so obstinate and unyielding, and consequently so forsaken by the Spirit of grace, that no ministerial faithfulness will ever reclaim them or bring them to Christ. Still it is utterly unsafe, yea, awfully presumptuous for ministers, when unsuccessful, to quiet their consciences, by any view, which they may take of divine sovereignty. They need no such opiate. Those who take it generally doze away a barren ministry, dreaming that they greatly mourn over their unfaithfulness, and want of success! How dreadful this, when they need all the stimulus of a pressing responsibility, and a goading conscience to arouse their sensibilities, and to secure their prayers and efforts for the conversion of perishing souls! Instead of receiving such an opiate, administered either by their friends, or by their own self-justifying spirit, they should encourage their awakened conscience to a diligent and faithful research for the cause of this calamitous failure of success. There is so much imperfection; so much unfaithfulness, even in our best ministers, that whenever they are unsuccessful, they should immediately inquire, "Is there not a cause!" If faithful in the research, they will find themselves most alarmingly deficient in many of those very things which give efficiency to the ministry!

1. They are very deficient in ardent desire for the saving conversion of sinners.

If ministers felt, as they ought, for sinners, they would give neither themselves nor the wicked any place. They could not rest. Guilty sinners would continually lie, a crushing burden, upon their souls! Oh they would be in agony! They would feel that they could not live, and see sinners unconverted, unconcerned! This anxiety would hold their eyes in midnight watchings, and filch away the sweetness of their slumbers, and the pleasure and nourishment of their food. Unsuccessful ministers sleep too much.—Through apathy their conscience sleeps too much!

2. They are very deficient in faith, and expectation of success.

When they preach, when they converse with sinners, they do not expect to bring them to repentance! At least, they do not expect to be instrumental of their immediate repentance.—When they pray they do not expect that sinners will be converted immediately, in answer to their prayers. The most that they expect is, that their supplications and prayers may secure at present the conviction, and at some future time the conversion of sinners. They do not believe in the promises of God. They do not feel that Christ has called them to labor, and that the Spirit stands ready to render their labors effectual, if they are humble and faithful! This unbelief—this want of expectation, is an immense evil, in many respects. First, it prevents the gracious aid of Heaven. Such distrust—such unbelief, is awfully offensive to God, and provokes him to withhold the blessing. It prevents Christ from standing by them with his guiding and sustaining power. When on earth, he required faith in those, who requested him to perform his mighty works for the healing of themselves or friends. Much more when exalted to Heaven, doth he require faith in those who would obtain, for themselves and others, the mighty works of his grace. And he cannot do many mighty works because of their unbelief! By their guilty distrust the Holy Spirit is grieved to depart from them, and then their efforts are few, unfaithful, unsuccessful. Secondly, their unbelief exerts on sinners, a pernicious influence. The impenitent see that such ministers do not expect that their prayers will be heard, and their exertions rendered effectual. This destroys the influence which their prayers and exertions were designed to exert on sinners. Sinners are moved as moral agents. When they see ministers faithful, expecting a blessing to attend and follow their labors, their attention is arrested, their feelings are aroused, and unless their obstinancy prevent they are convicted of sin, and persuaded in penitence and faith, to give God their hearts. When ministers manifest a want of this faith and expectation, sinners fully believe that the exertions made for their conversion will be ineffectual; and this impression, fully fixed upon their minds, operates directly and effectually to prevent the designed, and legitimate influence of these exertions. Thirdly, this unbelief cuts the very sinews of their own exertions. The hope of success is indispensably necessary to secure successful effort. When ministers are destitute of this hope, their exertions will be restrained, or if put forth, they will be few, and powerless, and unsuccessful!

Whenever, then, ministers discover that they are not successful, they should immediately take the alarm! However unfaithful their churches, and their impenitent hearers may be, however much God may be exercising his sovereignty in relation to their impenitent hearers, who are rejecting for ruin, certain it is that these unfaithful ministers can find no ground of excuse, no palliation for their sin, in the unfaithfulness of their hearers, or the sovereignty of their God! Let them then awake to duty; correct what is wrong in their own heart and practice; sound the alarm in the ears of stupid, ungodly, unconverted professors; and with trembling anxiety bid the impenitent sinner, "Escape for thy life!"

MISSIONARY.

From the Missionary Herald.

Ordination and departure of Missionaries.

Mr. John S. Emerson, recently of the Andover Theological Seminary, was ordained as a missionary to the heathen, under the direction of the Board, at Meredith Bridge, New Hampshire, May 19th. The sermon on the occasion was preached by Rev. Jacob Scales, of Henniker, in the same state.

Mr. Wm. T. Boutwell, and Mr. Sherman Hall, also of the Andover Seminary, were ordained at Woburn, Mass. June 7th, as missionaries under the direction of the Board. Rev. Milton Badger, of Andover, preached the sermon.

On the 13th of June, Mr. Boutwell, and Mr. and Mrs. Hall left Boston on their way to Mackinaw, with the expectation of proceeding from that place to the country lying on the south-western shore of Lake Superior, for the purpose of commencing a mission among the Chippewa Indians. The gentlemen engaged in the fur-trade in that quarter, and the Indians through them, have repeatedly, during the last three years, earnestly requested that a mission might be established among them; and the former have made very generous offers towards defraying the expense of such a mission. The opening, and the indications of Providence in regard to it have been worthy of regard, and it is hoped that the way is prepared in that direction, for communicating the blessings of the gospel to many of the Indians.—Mrs. Hall will probably remain in the mission family at Mackinaw, till the country shall have been explored, and the site and plan of the mission fixed.

CHINA.

Communications have been received from Mr. Bridgman, dated as late as Feb. 10th. He had a few Chinese boys under his instruction, who were doing well; the number of foreign residents and seamen who attended Christian worship on the Sabbath was increasing. A few natives attended a service in their language, conducted by Dr. Morrison.

Rev. David Abeel, who accompanied Mr. Bridgman to Canton, as missionary of the American Seamen's Friend Society, to the seamen in the river and port of Canton, has, according to an arrangement which was contemplated at the time of his embarkation, become a missionary of the Board. About the close of December he sailed from Canton, expecting to land at Angier, and proceed thence to Batavia, on the island of Java. His object in this tour is to visit and ascertain the state of the Dutch churches established two centuries ago on that, and other islands in those seas.

ARMENIA.

Intelligence has been received from Messrs. Smith and Dwight, on their exploring tour in Armenia, of as late a date as Dec. 27. The date of the last information previously received, was Oct. 1, when they were at Shousha. On their way from Tiflis to Shousha, the health of them both, especially of Mr. Smith, suffered severely. On this account they remained at Shousha till about the 1st of Nov., when they started for Etchmiazin, by way of Nakhchivan, & Erivan. Their journey was through a mountainous country, much of which was covered with snow; and the weather was severely cold. The health of Mr. Smith was improving, and with some slight exceptions, was good, till they reached Etchmiazin; but on their return to Nakhchivan, & thence through Khoi to Tebreez, Mr. Smith became much more unwell, and his symptoms were at one time alarming. By the merciful kindness of his heavenly Father, and with the facilities furnished by English residents at Tebreez, he was enabled to reach that place. There he was cordially received and treated with great tenderness by the English ambassador and two English physicians, and by other gentlemen of the same nation residing there. At the date of the letter he was daily gaining strength, and the physicians expressed a confidence that he would be entirely restored, though they had advised him not to resume his journey till the severity of the winter should be over.—In obtaining information respecting the Armenians, they had been more successful than they expected.

From the Vermont Chronicle.

SOUTH SEAS.

The London Missionary Chronicle, just received at this office, contains the following extract of a Letter from Mr. John Williams, Missionary at Raiatea, dated Tahiti, Oct. 21, addressed to the Treasurer.

I am happy to inform you that Mr. Barff and I had a most interesting and important voyage. The Samoa group will, I hope, shortly excite as much interest as did the Tahitian. Two of the islands are considerably larger than Tahiti, and the population (if the parts we visited afforded a fair specimen of it) must be very great. The natives are a very fine race of people. I should not hesitate a moment to settle among them; indeed it is my full intention, if possible, to spend two or three months with them before we sail for England. Six or eight European missionaries will be very soon wanted for that group.

We fitted out twelve native teachers with their wives and families, and in our voyage visited all the Hervey Islands; supplied the wants of the teachers and made presents to the chiefs of the Islands in which they were laboring; visited Savage Islands, Tognatabu, the Hapais, and the Samoa or Navigators' Islands above mentioned. Our missions are assuming an aspect highly interesting and important. I sincerely hope the Directors will see the necessity of following up our labors.

Another letter from Mr. Williams of the same date gives a detailed account of their voyage to the Samoa Islands, which possess much interest. Touching at Aitutake, Mr. W. received $412 from the teachers and people which they subscribed for the Missionary Society. From thence they proceeded to Savage Island, intending to place two native Aitutakean teachers there; but the islanders were so excessively wild and frantic they could not persuade the teachers to land. From thence they sailed from Tognatabu, where they were kindly received by the Wesleyan Missionaries, who stated that the good work was going on there. At Togna they found a chief of the Fiji Islands, who strongly importuned them to send teachers to his brethren. From thence they proceeded to the Hapai Islands. The king received and treated them with respect, but refused any overtures for the introduction of Christianity among his people. Arriving at Samoa Islands, they were cordially received by the chiefs, who immediately gave up for their use a commodious dwelling-house; for the purpose of worship and instruction, and four good dwelling houses for the families of the missionaries. Fierce war was raging between two of the principal Islands. While they were landing they saw on the shore of a neighboring island; houses and plantations burning, and the natives engaged in actual battle. The missionaries tried to induce the chiefs to give up the war, and they promised to put an end to it as soon as possible, and come and learn from the teachers the lotu, or word of the Great God. The missionaries describe these Islands as a noble field for christian enterprise.

INQUIRY MEETING AT SEA.

A letter from the Rev. John H. Hill, Episcopal Missionary to Greece, who sailed from Boston last autumn, gives the details of an interesting attention to religion on board the Palestine, the vessel in which he sailed. Rev. Mr. Robinson and himself established regular morning and evening prayers on board, and preached sermons on the Sabbath. On the day after his last sermon was preached on board, Mr. Hill was walking the quarter deck, when a young man at the helm put a note into his hand soliciting an interview for religious conversation, signed by himself and another seaman. "On reading the note," writes Mr. Hill, "I was greatly overcome—I could not but weep—I went forward where no eye could see me, and humbled myself before God for my unfaithfulness—and glorified him for his rich grace, and prayed that it might appear that the excellency of the power of that grace might be manifest in the conversion of some of these precious souls, through the feeble instruments, the earthen vessels, whom he had sent."

The meeting was repeated down in the forecastle, and while Mr. Hill was instructing the circle around him in the things that belonged to their salvation, he looked up and saw the poor fellows, whose turn it was to watch on deck, peering over the companion-way to catch a word for themselves.

Geneva, June 23, 1831.

Editor of the Rochester Observer,

Dear Sir: As the friends of missions would be gratified to learn the results of the labors of the Western Agency for the year now closed,—as the favor of God eminently rests on the work of the Home Missionary Society—as passing events evidently award to this Society an increasing responsibility in supplying the destitute in our land with the bread of life, and as we deem it both a duty and a privilege to commend this work to the eye and the prayer of those who love Zion; will you insert in your next paper, our fifth Report as given in, to the parent Society, in the month of May last.

Yours, &c. M. P. SQUIER.

THE WESTERN AGENCY OF THE A. H. M. S. FOR THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

THE "WESTERN AGENCY," which is a board of inquiry and reference, for the district embracing the seventeen western counties in the state of New-York, has been reappointed for the year commencing May, 1831, and is composed of the following gentlemen, viz.;

Rev. HENRY DWIGHT, Geneva, Chairman.
Rev. MILES P. SQUIER, do. Cor. Sec. & Ag.
Rev. ELIAKIM PHELPS, do.
Mr. ABM. B. HALL, do.
Mr. H. H. SEELYE, do.
Rev. JAMES RICHARDS, D. D. Auburn.
Rev. JOSIAH HOPKINS, Auburn.
Rev. D. C. AXTELL, Auburn.
Rev. A. D. EDDY, Canandaigua.
WALTER HUBBELL, Canandaigua.
Rev. JOSEPH PENNEY, Rochester.
Rev. WM. WISNER, Rochester.
Rev. SYLVESTER EATON, Buffalo.
Mr. JOSEPH STOCKING, Buffalo.

EXTRACTS FROM THE 5TH ANNUAL REPORT.

The section of our country, which it is our privilege to occupy in behalf of the H. M. cause, has from its first settlement, been one of unusual interest. Occupied principally by the sons of the pilgrims; lying on the great thoroughfare of intercourse and business between the East and West; possessing every advantage for the pursuit of agriculture and commerce; increasing rapidly in all the results of that industry and enterprise for which it is proverbial; and signalized, of late, by the Spirit of God, as a theatre of his redeeming influences; it has claims to the regard of the philanthropist and Christian which are of no common character.

Only about forty years have elapsed since the first christian settlements were made on this ground, now containing a population of more than half a million of souls. Sixteen years ago, but one Presbytery had been formed within these limits, (some congregations belonging to another lying within their eastern border,) embracing about forty churches and thirty ministers of the Gospel. There are now on this ground, nine Presbyteries, and one Consociation, numbering not less than one hundred and fifty ministers of the gospel, and having two hundred and twenty-five congregations, or upwards, under their care. More than one half of these congregations, including those at the largest centres of population and influence, either have pastors installed over them, or are statedly supplied with the word and ordinances of Christ's house—one half of the remainder have the labours of a clergyman, for half of the time each, while the residue, in our more recently settled, and feebler districts, are less frequently blessed with the feet of him, who publishes the tidings of grace.

There is yet room for the planting of more congregations on this field. As its borders are becoming more densely peopled every year, and as many from the folds of christian instruction are crowding upon it, we may safely calculate, that within five years, forty or fifty more churches will be located within the limits assigned to this agency.

Of the congregations already supplied, in whole or in part, more than one hundred and twenty have, in succession, been sustained by the A. H. M.; seventy-two of which have this year derived benefits from its funds. Our number of missionaries has this year been fifty-eight, making, together with the Secretary of this Board, fifty-nine laborers on this field.

The aggregate of the Missionary expenditures within our bounds, (so far as from a careful estimate, they should be included in a Report of the year ending May 1st, 1831,) is somewhat rising of $5000; but to assist in balancing the appropriations of the year, $500 have been raised, or pledged, in behalf of our funds by Auxiliary Associations, or otherwise, at the stations occupied by our Missionaries.

The receipts of the year have been $5721,40. This amount, besides providing for the expenses which have accrued on the field, will, we trust, furnish some help for the more destitute in the regions beyond us.

This sum has been derived, as heretofore, from Auxiliary Associations, both Male and Female,—from the annual public collections on the Sabbath, on the state Thanksgiving Days, at the Monthly Concert for prayer, and from individual donations. The last has been the most efficient source of income. The church has friends within this agency, who are resolved, that the cause of Home Missions shall not languish by reason of a deficiency of the silver and the gold, that may be requisite to sustain it; and their number is increasing from year to year, as our work moves on, and its results are progressively unfolded.

The largest individual donation to our treasury, the present year has been $1000. One individual appropriates to this department of benevolent efforts $250. Several others sustain each one missionary. Two individuals in one of our farming congregations, besides associating with eight others in sustaining a missionary, contribute $100, for the support of another laborer in the valley of the Mississippi, who shall devote himself more especially to the cause of Sabbath Schools. Several gentlemen of our Auxiliary Associations sustain each one missionary. This may be said in commendation of the Ladies' Auxiliaries of Auburn, Rochester, and Buffalo—of the young Ladies' Auxiliary of Rochester, and of the young people's Auxiliary of Geneva. Some congregations have assumed the expense of supporting one missionary each, and forwarded the requisite sums, and it is a fact worthy of record, that more funds have accrued to our treasury this year, without the personal application of an Agent, than at any previous period.*

The Missionary work, with us, has this year been clothed with unusual interest. Ours have been the consolations of that man, who, when he has "gone forth weeping, bearing precious seed, has returned rejoicing, bringing the sheaves with him." The present has become the year of Jubilee to the churches in this region. Christians here, have never seen such a time before. The Heavens have dropped down in mercy upon us, and salvation, like a river has flowed through our streets. More than fifty congregations within this agency, have been visited with seasons of special refreshing from the presence of God, gathering sinners in great numbers to the fold of Christ. Our most important villages, and centres of strength and influence, have been distinguished in the descent of the Divine Spirit, the cloud of mercy has dispersed its blessings, in grateful measures, on various portions of this vineyard, widely remote from each other.

Enterprise, talent, wealth, and influence, have been sanctified, and truth has gained rapidly on the empire of sin and error. It is safe to conclude that from four to five thousand souls, have been added to the "number of the believers" from within the field under review, since the commencement of the revivals in Sept last. Nor is the work yet stayed. Every hour's intelligence furnishes proof of the advancing movements of the Spirit of God, and justifies the confident expectation of his people, that the "day spring from on high" is to be on all our border, and give new life and strength to all the churches.

In this dispensation of the spirit, our beneficiary congregations have extensively shared, and it has been to them like "the former and the latter rain." In several of them the face of society is altogether changed; the cause of the Redeemer has been delivered from the persecutions of a spirit of prevailing impenitence and irreligion; and Zion has been obliged to enlarge the border of her tent, saying, "the place is to strait for me, give place that I may dwell."

Among the congregations the most distinguished, as the seat of the Spirit's influences, are Castleton, in Ontario Co.; Marion, in Wayne Co.; North-Penfield, in Monroe Co.; Bergen and Leroy, (Congregational Society,) in Genesee Co.; Evans, in Erie Co.; Ripley, in Chautauque Co.; and Richford, in the County of Tioga. The average number of Conversions to Christ in each of these congregations, is, in the judgment of our missionaries, from seventy-five to one hundred.

Other congregations have been gladdened with gentle showers of grace. Several others are now, exhibiting the presages of a special work in them, while the great body of those, to whom the bounty of the society has extended, have been confirmed in the faith and fellowship of the gospel.

The work of Home Missions is closely associated with every other department of christian effort. Our Missionaries, as charged in their instructions, had done much to help on the cause of benevolence around them. They have been efficient instruments in circulating the Bible; and the christian Tract in advancing the interests of Sabbath schools, and of Temperance, and the sanctification of the Sabbath day; and in stirring up the infant churches, for whom they have laboured, to a benevolent sympathy in behalf of the nations that sit in darkness, and the shadow of death.

Several houses for public worship have been erected this year at the stations occupied by this Board, and several more are under contract, and will be built the present season.

It is evident from a review of the operations of the year, that much advancement has been given to the cause of truth among us, and that the work of domestic missions has approached nearer to its accomplishment within this Agency. Still there remains even here much land to be possessed, to the occupation of which the friends of Christ should now hasten with redoubled energy, and a quickened step. The Spirit of God is leading our way, and crowning our exertions with unexampled success. This day of revivals, urges the necessity of our work, while it multiplies our facilities for its accomplishment. Christian converts from the enclosures of Zion, are thrusting themselves out upon the waste places, and from thence in their extremity, are calling for help and we are looking with an intense solicitude to the labours and results of the year now to commence. Darkness is fleeing upon the outposts,—new fields of toil and encouragement are opening in rapid succession before us; many of which of inviting promise we hope soon to see supplied with a preached gospel. Let there be union of counsel, and an efficient and systematic charity in the work, and it need not be long before this entire border shall be brought under the influence of the preached gospel, and become as the garden of the Lord.

The harvest is ready for the reaper's hand.—The aspects of providence encourage every friend of the missionary cause to minister help now. Opposition, more than ever, is powerless before the march of truth. "The Spirit says come." Nor can we anticipate permanent results for Christ, without the administration of gospel truth, nor must we, when the power to help is in our hands, let there be "a famine of the hearing of the word of the Lord," in such a day as this.

We are sensible, too, that the time has come for the churches within this Agency to look beyond their own wants. We lie in the vicinity of the great western valley, and in the channel of communication to it. We are associated with it, by every law of relationship and love. We would embrace, then, in the arms of a common fellowship, the aggregate wants of our country, and in the might of Him with whom is the residue of the spirit, would we thrust out laborers upon the yet extended devastations of Zion; that the word of Christ may have free course, and be glorified, and that our whole land may become Emmanuel's—"a mountain of holiness, and a habitation of righteousness."

THE BLACK ASTRONOMER.—In the year 1739, and for several years afterward, Benjamin Banneker, a black man, of Maryland, furnished the public with an Almanac which was extensively circulated through the Southern States. He was a self-taught astronomer, and his calculations were so thorough and exact, as to excite the approbation and patronage of such men as Pitt, Fox, Wilberforce, and other eminent men, by whom the work was produced in the British House of Commons, as an argument in favor of the mental cultivation of the blacks, with their liberation from their unholy thraldom.—Lynn Mirror.

DEPRAVITY.

A highly respectable tradesman, residing at Preston, in Lancashire, has, within these few days been thrown into the most poignant grief, in consequence of the wretched fate of his two daughters, both of whom had received a liberal education, and are now at the age of twenty-one. About three years since, the two sisters, whose names are Betsy and Dorothy Clayton, absconded from their paternal roof, and all endeavors to discover their retreat unhappily proved abortive. About a fortnight since, a relative of the family, named Bostock, who had some years ago retired upon an immense fortune, died possessed of considerable wealth, bequeathing in his will ample property to the unfortunate girls. Mr. Bray, a solicitor of Preston, connected with the firm of Mr. Walmsley & Co, of Chancerylane, came off immediately to Lodon, for the purpose if possible, of discovering their retreat. Bills were printed and advertisements inserted in several of the London papers, giving a description of them, but all in vain, until a few days ago, when Mr. Bray received a letter from James Gillmor, an officer, informing him that one of the sisters, Dorothy Clayton, had a few sessions since been tried at Old Bailey, and convicted of a felony, and that the other was a prostitute of the lowest order. Upon inquiry made yesterday morning of Mr. Wontner, it was ascertained that the miserable girl, had been convicted of robbing a gentleman of his watch and money, and had been sentenced to transportation for 14 years, and had been removed pursuant to her sentence, on the 4th of December last, and is now on her voyage to New South Wales. The question is, whether the girl, being a convicted felon, can receive the property left to her.

On a careful and minute inquiry into the condition of a portion of the female sex in London, it has been calculated that the number of females of a certain class exceeds 80,000, that there are at present 15,000 girls, children of the poor, who have no visible means of subsistence, the greater part of whom are trained to every variety of vice, and are without shelter or home. It is also ascertained that the number of female servants in London, is 165,732; that the time each servant remains in one situation, by an average taken at different periods, is 462 days; consequently on an average, 858 leave their situations every day. —London Paper.

ROCHESTER SAVINGS BANK.

To the Editors:

SIR—A bank having been chartered by the legislature of this state, entitled the "Rochester Savings Bank," to be located in this village. It is proposed to give to the public an epitome of the provisions of the charter, and of the bye-laws with which it may be useful to the public to be acquainted—presuming that this subject has not received that attention which its merits demand, especially by that class of community which a Savings Bank is more especially designed to benefit. The charter creates a corporation of fifteen trustees, or managers, with the usual powers and liabilities of other monied incorporations, with, however, two exceptions:—First, that the clear annual value of the real and personal estate of the corporation, exclusive of the profits arising from the interest accruing upon the stock, or from the sale of stock, in which the deposits made, may be invested, shall not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars, that the trustees shall receive no pay for their services, shall issue no notes and make no discounts. Secondly, that the funds of the corporation shall be used and appropriated for the interest and advantage of the depositors and their legal representatives.

The charter then provides, that the association shall receive, as deposits, all sums that may be offered for the purpose of being invested, as aforesaid, and that it shall be so invested, that it shall be repaid when required, of such times, with such interest, and under such regulations, as the managers shall, from time to time, prescribe.

The regulations shall be conspicuously posted in the bank, and shall not be altered to affect deposits previously made. The officers are not to use the funds in any way, except to pay current expenses. All evidences of deposits are made, bending on the corporation, and gives the corporation power to make bye-laws and regulations for the institution; but it is made the duty of the managers, to regulate the rate of interest, so that the depositors shall receive a ratable proportion of all the profits of the bank, after deducting authorised expenses.

Five of the trustees, if the president, or the vice president is present, shall constitute a legal meeting for business. The trustees have power to fill vacancies by ballot, to appoint a fit person for accountant, he is to give security for his good conduct in his business, and to appoint a clerk, if necessary, to remove them and appoint others, and to fix their rate of compensation.—The corporation are authorised to pay to any depositor, being a minor, any sums deposited by him, not exceeding $200 00, without guardian, provided the deposits were made by the minor.

The corporation are to make an annual report to the legislature, and the books are to be at all times kept open to the inspection of the comptroller, and to such other person or persons, as the legislature may designate.

The act is declared a public act, subject to repeal, dissolution, or modification.

The bye-laws, (at present established for the government of the institution) of general interest to be known, are, in substance, the following:—That the concerns of the institution shall be conducted by a president, one vice president, with thirteen trustees, constituting a board of managers.

That they shall meet, at least, four times in each year, six of whom, with the president, or vice president, shall be a quorum; they shall select a treasurer for their own board, and appoint others to be employed in the bank, if necessary; and three of their own number shall be appointed as a monthly attending committee, whose duty it shall be to attend the bank, when open, and to have the general superintendance, during the recess of the board, to keep minutes of the proceedings, and to lay them before the board of managers, at the regular meetings, noting the amount deposited and drawn out on each day.

No fractional parts of a dollar to be deposited.

On the third Wednesdays of July and January, in each year, there shall be a dividend of two and a half per cent. declared on all sums above five dollars, which shall have been on deposite for six months previous to the days aforesaid, and one half that amount, on all sums, or deposite, for three months thereto.

No interest to be paid on any sum withdrawn for the period elapsed since the last dividend, nor on sums withdrawn before a dividend is declared.

All sums deposited, except reservations for immediate purposes, to be invested in government securities, or in stock of the United States, or this state, or on bonds and mortgages.

All dividends not called for within three months after they are declared, to be added to the principal of the depositor and draw interest.

Dividends may be received personally, by order in writing, or by letter of att'y.

Depositors, or some person legally authorised by them, can only draw out money; but no person to receive any part of their principal or interest, without producing their original book, that each payment may be entered therein; and no money can be withdrawn, except on the third Wednesday of January, April, July and October; one weeks notice, of the intention to withdraw, must be given to the treasurer; and no sum less than five dollars can, at any time, be withdrawn, unless the deposite did not amount to that sum. The money offered for deposite, must be in specie, or in bills taken at par at the banks in this village. All checks must be drawn by the treasurer, and countersigned by the president, or by the vice president, provided neither of said officers act as treasurer.

All deposits to be entered into the books of the institution, and a duplicate given to the depositor, which shall be a voucher, and an evidence of the property of the depositor in the institution.

On the decease of a depositor, the amount standing to his or her credit, shall be paid to legal representatives.

At their meeting in January, the managers shall make a statement of their accounts to exhibit to the legislature.

There shall be a funding committee of three managers, who, with the treasurer, are to meet every Monday afternoon, for the purpose of investing the funds.

On making the first deposite, the depositor is to subscribe the bye-laws.

The bank is to be open to receive deposits on Wednesday evenings, for females, and on Saturday evenings for males. The treasurer is to receive the money for the committee, on Monday of every week, and deposit the same under the direction of the managers, and inform the funding committee of the sum on hand.

No transfer of stock shall be made above five thousand dollars, without the order of the board of managers.

The managers may return all, or any part of deposits, on giving two months notice. All monies are to be deposited and invested in the name of the president and trustees of the Rochester Savings Bank.

D. SCOVILLE,
Secretary of the R. S. Bank.

Upon an offer of 50 cents, a lad at Cincinnati, ascended the cupola of the Court-house, and climbed the staff on which the vane was placed, and straightened the rod which had been crooked by the wind. This was 150 feet from the ground. He descended, but claimed of a public officer, one dollar for the job, which the officer would not pay, saying he only offered 50 cents! The boy turned away in disgust, and refused the trifling sum. Shortly the officer cast his eye to the vane, when lo! the incensed lad had again climbed the dizzy steep, and bent the rod more obliquely than before!

LETTERS TO THE EIDTOR.

Cove, November 10 1830

After enjoying the unexpected hospitality and kindness of "the brethren" on Mallow, for a week, I came to this place on the 3d inst.—Cove, on Great Island, is pleasantly situated on the southern side of a hill; at the foot of which, the two channels of the Lee, after circling the Island, come together, and empty themselves, immediately in front of the town, into the Atlantic. It is ten miles from Cork, and about ten, on the other side, from Cloyne; to which Diocess it belongs. It was over the Diocess of Cloyne that the celebrated Bishop Berkeley presided. The clean streets, the southern aspect, the pure air and the beautiful scenery on every side, are its peculiar attractions to an invalid. It is accordingly much resorted to in the summer months particularly, and is called the Montpelier of Ireland. The population is about 7000, the majority of whom are Roman Catholics.

This morning on passing the door of the Catholic free School room, I observed over it a board, on which in large and well turned characters, I read the following singular inscription.—"No admittance here for proselyting dames or insidious tract droppers." The priests are exceedingly jealous of Protestant interference, and so unlimited is their authority that their people are almost inaccessible, Popery is a system that hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest its deeds should be reproved. A few facts will enable you to judge for yourself.

Some weeks ago a charity sermon was preached in the Church (of England) in behalf of the protestant Infant School. A Roman Catholic gentleman, for being present, was spoken of by the priest, on the next Sabbath, in his chapel, by name, and severely condemned.—Two years ago, when the Infant School society was formed here, the managers rented a room for its use belonging to a Catholic gentleman of the town.—When the priest heard of it, he annulled the bargain, and the society lost that summer in fruitless efforts to obtain another.—The children of some Catholic servants, a few doors from me, were taken into the master's house occasionally, and taught to spell and read. When the priest heard of it, he forbade their going, and now they run idle in the street.—In Mallow, a girl of 14 years old, who went to the Charity School, was told by the priest that if she did not leave the school he would curse her to the seventh generation.—Another little girl was persecuted by her parents, even to bonds and stripes, for going to the same school, on the Sabbath.—The man & maid servant of Mr. J. whose very kind & christian hospitality I enjoyed for some days, formerly attended the family worship. But having been solemnly warned by the priest, they now religiously stay away.—A few Sabbaths ago, four persons in Waterford were loaded with the impious anathema's of a Catholic excommunication, because they would not withdraw their children from a Protestant school. Yet the teachers are selected without regard to sect; no catechism or creed of any kind is made use of; but the Bible is made a reading book! It is the Bible they are afraid of, and no marvel. The Bible and Popery are not agreed, and unless one or the other be changed they cannot dwell together. Here, I may add, is seen the distinctive peculiarity of the Protestant & the Catholic. The genuine Protestant will change his creed; the staunch Catholic is tempted to change the Bible. To feel the truth of the last part of this remark it would be only necessary to look into a French New Testament, published by the Jesuits, at Bordeaux, in 1688, from which I will give you, as they are literally translated, in a little work before me, the following texts.

1 Cor. iii, 15. But he shall be saved himself, yet so as by the fire of purgatory.

1 Cor. vii, 10. But those who are joined by the sacrament of marriage, I command, &c.

1 Tim. i1, 1. Now the Spirit says distinctly that, in the latter times, some shall depart from the Roman faith.

Heb. xi, 30. By faith the walls of Jericho fell, after a procession of seven days.

1 John v, 17. But there is a sin that is not mortal but venial.

Acts xiii, 2. Now as they offered unto the Lord the sacrifice of the mass.

It is said that Monsieur Veron, when asked why he had wrested this last text from its natural meaning, gave, as the reason, that "he had often been asked by calvinists what scripture affirmed that the apostles said mass."

Surely it should be one of our daily prayers that the Bible, the Bible alone, may speedily become the rule of all faith and practice. I could always unite in saying that the Bible was the only rule, but now I feel it. The truth, as contained in the scriptures, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, should be the motto of every christian.

THE LATE MR. BISSELL.

Our readers, we have no doubt, will be highly gratified by the following interesting extract of a letter, received by a gentleman in this city, from a minister of the gospel, who was near Mr. Bissell, and attended him in his last sickness.—New York Evangelist.

"But though this letter may be of no importance now, in respect to the information you requested; yet I thought it might possibly, even at the present date, be some satisfaction to the friends of that departed worthy, whom all the friends of Zion in this land will long remember; whose example of activity, decision, and self denial, has given so powerful an impulse to the benevolent movements of the age; and whose name however much reviled and slandered by his enemies, has, we trust, been written in the Lamb's book of life; a name, that will live, and be heard of on earth in the ages of the millennium.

"You are aware that he had been dangerously sick at Rochester, in the month of February, previously to his coming to this place. He came here as was supposed in a convalescent state; though evidently his health was not firm; as he still manifested in his countenance and voice the effects of the disease from which he had recently recovered. I saw him the evening after he came. He was cheerful; and spoke with animation of the revival at Rochester, and many other places at the West. The next day, after some considerable fatigue in attending to his business, he was suddenly taken with slight symptoms of bleeding at the lungs.—He retired immediately to his room at a public house, and called in a physician. Nothing very alarming appeared in his case; though advised by his physician to be quiet as possible, and to refrain from speaking, or doing any thing that might tend to irritate the lungs, or produce hemorrhage. In the course of two or three days he was removed from his lodgings at the Inn, to the house of his friend Robinson, for the greater convenience of attending upon him. He continued about the same—no bleeding of consequence till after the expiration of two weeks, when his symptoms became more alarming; the discharge of blood from the lungs in considerable quantities several times in the course of a few days. During the first two or three weeks, the nature of the disease required that he should not speak audibly, even in a whisper, any more than could possibly be avoided.—What he wished to communicate, was done chiefly by signs, or with a slate and pencil. Consequently, during that period, though I frequently visited him, I had little opportunity for any thing more than to kneel by his sick bed, offer a short prayer in his behalf, and immediately retire.

"After the bleeding had ceased, the disease assumed a different character; and so far as his strength would permit, he could give utterance to his mind with safety. And during the last few days of his life, debilitated as he was, he conversed some, occasionally, though in brief sentences;—his words few; but like himself to the last, emphatic and full of meaning. On one occasion after prayer, he said, 'I am decidedly better;' and then asked, 'Have you faith to pray?' To my answer, he added, 'Have a good deal—have strong faith.' I then said to him, 'The Lord reigns, and does all things well; I trust you feel resigned to the good pleasure of his will?' He answered, 'O perfectly, perfectly,' with a tone and look, expressive of sweet and filial confidence in God. He paused a moment, and then, speaking to himself, repeated the following passage: 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance and my God.' As he uttered the concluding words, his countenance brightened into a smile. It was the smile of hope, and of joy and peace in believing; and at the same time, looking steadfastly upward, as if looking away into heaven, he seemed to have full in his eye the unutterable glories of 'that eternal world of joy.' I shall never forget the expressive, but indescribable significancy of his look and his voice, at that moment. On Monday morning, April 4th, the day before his death, he expressed a wish, that the Elders of the church here might be sent for, which was done. I went with them; and we had a little season of prayer in the chamber where he lay. By his request, also, we united in singing part of a hymn.

"He was sensible that he could not long survive. Among other things he said: 'The time of my departure is at hand. I have perfect confidence in God. Why should I fear to die? The Lord knows I have loved his cause more than all things else.' After that time, I did not again see him alive. Being called away some distance, I did not return, until his soul had departed, Tuesday, 4 P. M. The next day, his mortal remains were carried to Rochester. There sleeps the dust of Josiah Bissell—that distinguished, that indefatigable, that undaunted 'doer of the word.' His example, 'yet speaketh,' and will speak. It cannot die. May his mantle fall upon hundreds and upon thousands, who, like him, shall be 'doers of the word,' and thus, its most effectual preachers.

"P. S.—One of the attending physicians, has since become hopefully pious; and he refers his first serious impressions to his having seen, in the death of Bissell, 'how a Christian can die.' And surely no one could witness such a scene, without feeling the desire spring up in his soul, 'Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

The evils attendant on Slavery.—The following notices of trials before the Fayetteville Circuit Court are from the Western Luminary.—

The Court since Monday of last week has been occupied in the trial of negro slaves on the charge of committing capital offences.

In the case of Armstead, owned by Cooper & Boswell, tried for an attempted rape, the jury did not agree and were discharged.

Moses, owned by Joseph Rogers, was tried for a similar offence. During the progress of this trial there was great popular excitement. The counsel were repeatedly interrupted by the cheering and murmurs of the bystanders. After a protracted and minute examination of witnesses the case was left with the jury on Thursday evening. Saturday morning they brought in a verdict of guilty.

Henry and Harriet, two slaves belonging to Hector P. Lewis, have been found guilty of the charge of attempting to poison their master.

Philip, the property of Mr. Harrison, was acquitted of being an accessary with Henry and Harriet in an attempt to poison Mr. Lewis.

Billy, the property of John Rogers, has been convicted of the murder of Mrs. Dodd and an attempted rape on her daughter, a mute.

LOTTERIES.

We promised last week to favor the N. Y. lottery dealers with a little more notice, and now proceed to fulfil our promise.

We wish our readers first to understand, that lotteries can never add one cent to the wealth of the country. They do not even profess to do it. They only transfer money from one man to another. If all who are engaged in the traffic were to quit it and go to raising potatoes, the amount of valuable property in the country would be increased. Lotteries deprive the country of all that they would otherwise earn.

Consider next, the influence of lottery gambling on a man's habits. His object is, to get rich suddenly and easily—more suddenly and more easily than he can by industry and economy. Keeping a man's mind agitated with hopes of becoming suddenly rich without labor, must make him more and more dissatisfied with the sure and steady gains which are the reward of industry—must render his ordinary business insipid and tiresome, and lead him so to neglect it, as to become a bankrupt. This is the history of most of those who are induced to speculate in lotteries.

Consider, again, what sort of men lottery dealers expect to prevail with. You may learn this, by considering the arguments they use.—If it were in our power, we would here insert some of the cuts, with which lottery advertisements are decorated. You may see them, however, in other papers. Look at them. Look at the whole parade of dancing goddesses, and misshapen, grinning dwarfs, with money bags as big as themselves. What powerful arguments these! How well adapted to persuade reasonable men! The ticket seller hopes that you are silly enough to be induced to buy a ticket, by looking at the supremely silly giggle on that face in the newspaper. If you are not silly enough for that, he has no hopes of you. He does not attempt, for he does not think it possible, to gain custom from any but the silliest part of community. In this, he doubtless judges correctly.

Look at the published schemes of lotteries.—You will find—so many prizes, amounting to so much—a very splendid parade of temptation; but you will not find how many blanks. The dealers know, that if they should tell you that, you would not buy their tickets.

Do not suppose that all the money which is paid in for tickets is paid out again in prizes.—No such thing. Fifteen per cent. on the prizes goes at once to bear the expenses of the lottery, i. e. into the pockets of the managers,—where it stays, till a little of it is screwed out of them for some public object, by a legal examination, which they know very well how to evade. And then, the price of tickets is, just what the dealers can get. A writer in the Vermont Watchman shows, that on the sixteenth class of the N. Y. consolidated lottery, there is left to the managers and dealers, the nice little sum of $181,641 60. One such lottery in six weeks would amount to $787,113 60 in six months, and $4,722,681 60 in three years. Besides all this, Mr. Canfield, formerly a manager and extensive lottery dealer, has shown that the business may be so managed, that the tickets which remain unsold in the hands of the managers and dealers shall have the best chance to draw high prizes; and observing men have noticed, that high prizes are seldom drawn by any but those who are concerned in managing and selling.

Besides; if you should draw a prize, how do you know that you should ever get your money? One dealer somewhere on the Hudson, a few years since, sold nineteen quarters of one ticket. It drew a prize, and he ran away. If it had been a blank, the fraud never would have been known. How do you know, when you buy a ticket, that the same number is not sold to twenty others, and that, if it draws a prize, some of them will not receive it instead of you? Indeed, how do you know that the fact will not be concealed from the public altogether?—Verily, if there is such a thing as legalized swindling in the world, this lottery business is the thing. And we are astonished to see how many printers, for the paltry consideration of five or ten dollars, will help lottery dealers to swindle the public, by inserting their advertisements. How such printers must love the "dear people!!"

CELEBRATION OF INDEPENDENCE.—Our Independence was bought with blood, and blood is shed every year to perpetuate the memory of it. Not a fourth of July passes, without being celebrated in many places by putting some of our citizens to death. There is no previous selection of places and persons; but in many places, crowds are assembled, and fire arms and gunpowder are used in such a manner that all cannot reasonably expect to escape with their lives. The yearly result is, in some places, a mere loss of money and morals; in others, an additional loss of limbs and human life. And though this is known to be the uniform result, the public sentiment demands, at every return of "our nation's birth day," a repetition of these doings, which, if general, will certainly result in the shedding of blood. We believe that many more have been killed and wounded in celebrating independence, than in the most sanguinary contest during the revolutionary war.

FOURTH OF JULY ACCIDENTS.

We are led to these reflections, by hearing that the right arm of one man and the left arm of another were blown off by the discharge of a cannon at Woodstock on Monday.

Since writing the above, we learn from the Woodstock Gazette, that of the two injured, Mr. Wm. Cone was blown 18 feet, and his arm broken above the elbow, and amputated by Dr. Parker; Mr. Isaac Raymond's hand was blown to pieces, and taken off by Dr. Palmer at the wrist. Strong drink, it is said, had no agency in the disaster. If so, it confirms our suspicions, that there is a power of expelling sound judgment in the festive use of gunpowder. Fifty dollars were immediately contributed for the sufferers, and further exertions were to be made for their relief.—Vt. Chronicle.

The Kingston, Ulster Plebeian says.—At the late celebration at Coxsakie, two men were killed by the bursting of a cannon—and another who still survives, was deprived of both of his hands. We have not learned what caused the bursting of the piece—but in all probability the cannon was everloaded.

Mr. John Dunning was killed by the bursting of a cannon at Washington City on the fourth of July.

We learn from the Orange Palladium, that a man by the name of Marvin Pierce, was killed on the Fourth inst., while engaged in loading the cavity of an Anvil for the purpose of firing it in honor of the day.

At Poughkeepsie, Wheeler Hurd had his leg so injured, as to make amputation necessary.—Mr. Berrien received a charge of wadding in his head; but it did not prove fatal.

From the Salem (Mass.) Register.

MELANCHOLY EVENT.—A most afflicting dispensation of Providence took place on Saturday last. The Rev. JOHN E. WESTON, late Pastor of the Baptist Church at Lechmere Point, having attended the recent religious meetings of the Baptists in this town, was travelling in a chaise towards Nashua village, where he had engaged to preach on the Sabbath, having another gentleman in company with him, (Mr. BACHELLER, of Lynn.) When they had reached the town of Wilmington they drove into a pond on the road side to refresh their horse; but only a few feet from the edge of the pond, the water is 20 feet deep of which circumstance they were not apprized—and they instantly found themselves sinking.

Mr. Weston could not swim; Mr. Bachellor held him up as long as possible, but was at length compelled to leave him, and saved himself by swimming to the shore. The unfortunate Mr. Weston immediately sunk in deep water. His body was taken out in forty minutes afterwards, but the spirit had gone to its rest! "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Mr. Weston has left a wife and five children.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES.—A rumour has reached us from the west, on the authority of a letter from a gentleman in Illinois, that Gen. Gaines, who had gone on in advance against the hostile Indians on Rock River, with 500 regular troops, had been defeated with the loss of 300 of his men, and himself wounded. The letter adds—"Our Governour has gone on with 1500 mounted volunteers; and has sent back for 3000 more, from this state, Indiana and Missouri." This rumour is contradicted in the Lexington Observer, but it is feared that disturbances of a serious nature will occur before these differences are settled. They grow out of the unwillingness of the Indians to remove from their country.—Buffalo Jour.

CASUALITY.—A man by the name of Johnson, fell over board from the Steam-Boat Superior on her last trip up, off Salem, O., and was drowned. Johnson belonged to the boat, and has friends residing in Boston, in this county.—Ib.

SUICIDE.—Mathew Middleditch; of Boston, put an end to his existence on the 3d inst. by hanging himself in his Orchard. He was about 48 years of age; a farmer in easy circumstances, and no cause but that of occasional intemperance can be assigned for this last foolish and criminal act.—Ib.

TEMPERANCE MEETING IN MENDON.

The quarterly meeting of the Monroe County Temperance Society, was held at the Methodist Church in the village of West-Mendon, (formerly Norton's Mills,) on the 28th of June. The address was delivered by CHARLES M LEE, Esq. of Rochester, to an audience comprising nearly all the active and business men in the place. After the address, several resolutions were offered, and addresses made, in relation to the subject of Temperance, and about twenty of the males present came forward and enrolled their names as members of the Temperance Society of Mendon. The meeting passed a unanimous vote of thanks to Mr. Lee, for his very able and pertinent address, and requested a copy for publication. The Temperance Society in this town is large, and in the village of West-Mendon, a very large majority both of males and females, are members of it Daily Adv.

INSTALLATIONS AND PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

We are requested to give notice that the Installation of Rev. Luke Lyons, as pastor of the 3d Presbyterian Church, in this village, will take place on Wednesday next, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the Church. And that the Installation of Rev. Mr. Wisner, as pastor of the 2d Church, will take place the day following, at that church, at the same hour. Also that a Protracted Meeting will commence on the day of the first installation.

A letter dated SHELDEN, Genesee Co., July 5th, says that a work of grace is going on in that place—the names of a few recent converts are given.

ORANGEVILLE.—The same letter says that a protracted meeting commenced in Orangeville on the 25th June, and continued eleven days—there had been 50 hopeful conversions.

Since the above was writen, we are informed that the number of hopeful conversions during this meeting was at least 90. An unusual proportion of whom were persons of from 50 to 70 years of age.

THE DIFFERENCE.

When a case of hydrophobia from the bite of a dog occurs, in one of our cities or villages, how prompt are the authorities to take effective measures to prevent the recurrence of such a dreadful calamity, but notwithstanding deaths from the brutality of drunken husbands—notwithstanding deaths from intemperance in various ways, are matters of every day occurrence, yet with what perfect indifference do the trustees of our villages, and the common councils of our cities look on this havoc of human life—when the madness is caused by the poison obtained from the groceries and grog shops which they have licensed.

In the one case "Puppy whelp and hound," are made to pay the forfeit of their lives, although perfectly innocent of any overt act, while in the other, the same authorities, the conservators of the peace and public morals, instead of applying an effectual remedy, give the sanction of their authority.

Now we would suggest two queries:—

The first is, Supposing madness and death from intemperance were of as rare occurrence as that of madness by the bite of the canine species, what would be said of public officers who should refuse to lend their authority to prevent it?

The second quere is, Whether, if dogs could vote, at village and city elections, they would not be considered and treated as less dangerous than those bipeds who cause the death of their species by furnishing them with a slow but more deadly poison?

MURDER.

A young man by the name of John Warner, in the city of N. York, while closing his store in the evening was shot by some person on the opposite side of the street and instantly expired. He had united with Rev. Mr. Baldwin's Church two Sabbaths previous to his death.—"Be ye also ready," is the admonition which this case affords to all who are putting off a preparation for death to a more convenient season.

AVON SPRINGS.

The Editor of this paper was called on business, one day last week, to this New Bethesda of the West. Although aware that it had within two or three years, become a place of considerable resort, we were astonished at the great number who were found at the springs, and at the public houses in the vicinity, who had been brought there to test the curative properties of the waters, or to enjoy the society, and the delightful scenery of this rural retreat.

Although the day was unfavorable for invalids, there were carriages with visitors constantly arriving and departing, and in the short time we were there, we saw acquaintances from most of the counties in a circuit of 50 miles. We were informed that 500 persons have visited the springs in some of the warm days in the early part of this month. There are two large public houses within a few rods of the principal spring, at which we are informed, the accommodations are excellent and every attention paid to their customers. The charges are said to be very low.

Besides these two houses, there is within three fourths of a mile, on the main road, the Hotel which has for a great number of years been kept by Mr. Hosmer, the long established reputation of which, always ensures it a large share of patronage. A better table we have never seen at any public house in the country than is uniformly to be found at Hosmer's Hotel, and the kind attentions always paid to their guests by Mr. and Mrs. Hosmer, render their house peculiarly pleasant, and the stranger, at once, feels himself at home.

The public house kept by Mr. Comstock a few rods distant, we observed was thronged with company, and every thing about it had the appearance of comfort and convenience.

The invalids at the Springs, uniformly, bore testimony to the beneficial effects of the waters, in relieving their diseases—and were ready to recommend them to others.

One thing we saw that was much to be regretted. A Nine Pin Alley has by some one, been deemed an important accommodation for this resort of the sick and infirm. The constant rumbling of the balls cannot afford very agreeable music to the ears of those whose sense of morality will not allow them to participate in this species of amusement. We know not who the owner of this Alley is, but we would advise him to convert the building to some more valuable purpose. We will venture to say, that it has no attractions for most of the company who are brought to the Springs for the benefit of the waters.

EDITORIAL CHANGES.—Rev. Wm. R. Collier has accepted the editorship of the Journal of Humanity, the Rev. E. C. Tracy its former Editor having left it to take charge of the Boston Recorder.

The Vermont Chronicle is hereafter to be conducted by Rev. Joseph Tracy in conjunction with its former editor Rev. J. Richards, whose health will not allow of his performing the laborious duties of editor without assistance.

NEW PAPER.

A new paper has just made its appearance, published at Brockport by J. Carpenter and J. R. Adams, devoted to Religion, Morality, Literature, Agriculture and the Mechanic arts.

It is a large sheet, well executed, and promises fair to be a respectable and useful paper.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.—In Fayetteville N. Carolina, it was resolved to show their patriotism, on the 4th by releasing the debtors in prison. Only one however was found who was set at liberty. Quere. How many poor debt'rs might yearly be set at liberty with the money paid for powder to be burnt on that occasion.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. Chipman:—We have examined Mr. Chapman's notes, and think them well calculated to assist those readers who are not acquainted with oriental customs, and Jewish history, in understanding the Holy Scriptures. WM. WISNER.

The following extract from these Notes will give our readers a specimen of Mr. Chapman's talent of illustrating difficult passages of Scripture, by reference to oriental customs.—ED. OBS.

II. CORINTHIANS.

Chapter 2d, Verse 14—16.

"Now, thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place. For we are unto GOD a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life."

The Greek word here rendered causeth to triumph, occurs also in Col. ii, 15, where it is rendered triumphing over. The apostle may be understood as giving thanks to GOD, either because He had triumphed over his pharisaic pride and obstinate temper, by the renewing and sanctifying agency of his Holy Spirit, and had made both himself and his fellow apostles, as individuals, the trophies of his grace; or rather, (as the English version implies, and as the two following verses most directly show,) because He had made him and the other apostles triumphant, as such, by crowning their labors with such signal success. In these three verses, the apostle is supposed to allude to a practice among the Romans which was this:—When their generals returned as conquerors from a successful campaign, they were accompanied by some distinguished persons, whom they had taken as captives. When they entered the capital city, the streets were paved with roses, and other things of a sweet odor. Of their captives some were pardoned and allowed to live, and some were put to death. To the former these sweet smelling roses were reviving indeed; they were a savour of life ending in life, of prolonged life. To the latter, also, they were reviving at first; but the revival was short; it was like the revival before death, a sort of death-revival, rather threatening than otherwise. In short, to them these same sweet smelling roses were a savour of death unto death. The main spiritual instruction of the whole appears to be this, viz: that the same odoriferous and blessed gospel, or the scheme of truth therein taught, produces very different effects on different hearers, even as the beams of the sun do on wax and clay. Some it softens, and some it hardens. Some the truth "prepares unto glory," and some it ripens for destruction. And in either case, the effects produced will be according to the dispositions of the persons, and the manner in which they treat the messages of reconciliation. How important, then, the admonition, "Take heed how ye hear!"

For the Observer.

MR. CHIPMAN,—In my last communication, I freely admitted the usefulness of some uneducated Ministers, and would here repeat my firm conviction, that education would have rendered them still more useful, and also, that they are not set for the imitation of others who are less gifted by Providence and less acquainted with mankind. These men are engaged in the cause of Christ: I would continue them in that cause; I would increase their usefulness; and hence I regret any thing that shall induce others to follow their example, when they are incompetent to sustain their reputation.

Before enquiring, what constitutes an educated ministry, I shall, in this communication, endeavor to fortify the position which I have taken, by the opinion of others, who are acknowledged as well qualified to judge in relation to this subject.

First—The opinion of President Edwards.

He says, "a minister is set to be a light to men's souls, by teaching or doctrine: and if he be a shining light in this respect, the light of his doctrine must be bright and full; it must be pure without mixtures of darkness, and therefore he must be sound in the faith, not one that is of a reprobate mind; in doctrine he must show uncorruptness; otherwise his light will be darkness. He must not lead his people into error; but teach them the truth only, guiding their feet into the way of peace and leading them in the right ways of the Lord."

"He must be one that is able to teach; not one that is raw, ignorant or unlearned, and but little versed in the things that he is to teach to others; not a novice or one that is unskillful in the word of righteousness; he must be one that is well studied in divinity, well acquainted with the written word of God, mighty in the Scriptures, and able to instruct and convince gainsayers." This opinion the writer, sustains by the declaration of the Scriptures, as he adds, "he must speak the things that he knows and testify the things that he has seen and not be a blind leader of the blind. Thus he must be a scribe well instructed in things that pertain to the kingdom of God; one that brings forth out of his treasure things new and old."

The same author adds, in immediate connexion, "In order to his being a shining light, his doctrine must be full; he must not only be able to teach, but apt to teach; and faithful and careful to declare the whole council of God, and not keep back any thing, that may be profitable to his hearers. And in order to do this, Ministers should be diligent in their studies."

In his work, "on the Revival in New-England," very much is said on this subject in an incidental way, and no one who is familiar with that work, can doubt that it was written in part at least in consequence of certain evils which at that time arose in the churches under the ministry of uneducated and imprudent, though well meaning men. He speaks, in this inestimable treatise, of such with peculiar tenderness and advises others not to be uncharitable or prejudiced against the work, on account of their youth or imprudences. And while he declares that God may and does sometimes bless their imperfections even to the salvation of men, he looks upon this as by no means sanctioning their conduct. Taking the writings of President Edwards and his example, in the most laborious and active part of his ministry, I say, without hesitation, no man valued more highly and recommended more forcibly, high intellectual attainments in the Ministers of the gospel.

Did my time and limits permit, it would be profitable here to insert the opinions and examples of the early Ministers of New-England.—To this day we are reaping the blessings not only of their piety, but of their permanent attainments. There is not one department of our government; not one section of our church, but feels the influence of their minds, and while their memory and their labors live, I trust, that no judicious Minister of the gospel, can undervalue thorough and systematic education is his important department of intellectual and moral influence.

In the next place, I will adduce the opinion of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and consequently the opinion of this church generally in the United States.

In the chapter entitled, "of Licensing Candidates to preach the gospel," it is recommended, that the candidate be required to produce a diploma of bachelor or master of arts from some College or University or at least authentic testimonials of his having gone through a regular course of learning."

"Because it is highly reproachful to religion and dangerous to the church to entrust the holy ministry to weak and ignorant men; the Presbytery shall try each candidate as to his knowledge of the Latin language and the original languages in which the Holy Scriptures were written. They shall also examine him on the Arts and Sciences; on Theology Natural and Revealed, and on Ecclesiastical history, the Sacraments and church government. He shall be required to read a Latin Exegesis—a critical exercise—a lecture and a popular sermon: and it is recommended that no candidate, except in extraordinary cases, be licensed, unless, after having completed the usual course of Academical studies, he shall have studied divinity at least two years, under some approved Divine or Professor of Theology." Here I would add, that this time is thought to be too short, hence all our Theological Seminaries, have established a course of three years. This is the opinion of the Presbyterian Church. The opinion of the Congregational and Dutch Reformed denominations is the same. The Episcopal, Baptist, Lutheran and Methodist Churches, have already established their Theological Seminaries, having found that they must yield to the force of public opinion, which now imperiously demands a learned ministry and which will be satisfied with no other.

And here, I feel, that I am well sustained by public opinion. The most illiterate congregation in our land, connected with us, will not long be satisfied with the labors of uneducated men: and when I plead for learning in the ministry, I am urged on by sympathy for those kind hearted and pious men whose advantages have been inadequate to the responsible and laborious stations which they attempt to hold. Whatever other causes may contribute to their charges and their failure, no one can question, that this is the chief.

Now sir, shall this concentrated opinion have no effect upon us! I confess, that if, in view of all this, any young man, can set his face toward the ministry without at least the attention of some years to studies and pursuits connected with the profession, he must be well supplied with confidence, whatever qualification he may want beside. I rejoice, that, with us there are but few such. Yours &c. A. D. EDDY.
Canandaigua, July 15, 1831.

For the Observer.

Mr. Editor:—I noticed a query in your paper of the 7th inst. questioning whether a certain Mr. B. who was absent from his class at the Sabbath school on the 3d inst. was to be considered as breaking the Sabbath in consequence of his being employed on that day in burning a brick kiln and whether he or any other professor ought to engage in business which would require to be continued on that day—This last question I think you made no hesitation in answering in the negative—but still it deserved a thorough investigation by some one who could do it justice. It may be so: but for one I think very little investigation of this subject is sufficient to satisfy all, who are any acquainted with the business of burning brick that his conduct is perfectly justifiable. Reasons—The burning of a brick kiln seldom is accomplished in six days, generally takes eight or nine, and frequently twelve days with the strictest care and attention to complete one. In the present instance, it required eight days before the kiln could be finised, Sunday was the seventh from its commencement—What was to be done? I would ask any reasonable person if his conduct was not perfectly justifiable in continuing the burning of the kiln on that day.—Could he with any propriety I ask have left it in that situation to have attended to the most important affair. Surely not: it would have ruined it entirely. Little more then need to be said, in justification of Mr. B. He, wishes to inform the public, that he does not by any means believe in violating the command of God, in respect to laboring on the Sabbath. In no other case but those of absolute necessity and mercy, does he consider it justifiable to labor on that day. In the present instance, he thinks (as indeed was the case) that the continuance of the burning of his brick kiln on the Sabbath, was an act of absolute necessity and of course pleads not guilty. Mr. B. as well as many others of professed Christians, have manifested considerable surprise, at your answer to Mr. H's. second query with so little hesitation in the negative.—Ought any professor says he, engage in any business which would require to be prosecuted on the Sabbath following! A very important one to be sure, but is misapplied in this present instance; if he had made the exception of necessity or mercy, it would been well enough. But as we understand you now, neither necessity or mercy pleads in Mr. B's favor—consequently then, if all brick makers were to agree with you in this respect, we certainly as a people, should be under the necessity of doing entirely without brick, for no one even the most experienced hand (some instances excepted) will engage to burn a kiln in any less time than seven days at the least. Thus much I have said in justification of Mr. B. I hope it is sufficient, if not, at yours, or any other professors request, I shall hold myself obliged to write farther on this subject.
Yours &c.
N

The above communication we insert with pleasure in the hope that some one who has the time, and is qualified to do it, will take up this subject and give it a thorough investigation.—ED.

We have answers at hand, for all the arguments of N. in favor of the practice of brick makers laboring on the Sabbath; but we shall make no remarks of our own hoping that the above will call out some one, who does not believe that God requires us to engage in any business (sailing on the Ocean excepted) where we must of necessity disobey his positive command. But we are aware that professing Christians are divided in opinion on this subject, and it is for this reason that we think it ought to be thoroughly investigated, and if possible harmony in sentiment and practice produced.

We should like to have a case made and brought before the Presbytery for its decision.—We view this question as highly important and as demanding the attention of our ecclesiastical Judicatories.

NARRATIVE OF THE STATE OF RELIGION.

The Presbytery have the grateful privilege at this time, of reporting, that the work of the Lord has prospered within our bounds, since the last meeting of this body. From all the churches represented at this meeting, something of interest has been communicated to cheer our hearts, and animate our praises. None indeed at the present time are rejoicing in a special work of grace; but all from whom we have heard, declare what God has done for them within a few months past.—The revivals, which were reported as in progress in some of our churches, at the last meeting of this body, after continuing a while, subsided; but their precious fruits and effects are abundantly manifest in the enlargement of Zion, and in the increased number of the humble fellowers of the Redeemer. Some of the Churches, which then had not been favored with the special outpourings of the Spirit, have since been greatly blessed of the Lord. Such has been the fact with the churches of Rush, Bergen, Lyme and Sweden, in each of which, God has manifested the glory of his power and grace in the conviction and conversion of sinners. In the churches just mentioned, and some others, protracted meetings of several days continuance have been held, and most eminently blessed in the reviving of religion, building up of the churches, and promoting the conversion of sinners. Not one appears to have been held unattended with the blessing of the Great Head of the Church. The Presbytery would farther state, that while no special revival is now existing in any of our Churches, yet it appears, that in nearly all, occasional conversions occur; that there still remains a good degree of the spirit of prayer, and some engagedness in the work of the Lord. None appear to have relapsed to that fearful state of apathy and lukewarmness, which preceded the glorious refreshing seasons, which our churches so recently have enjoyed. The additions to the Churches have already been numerous, and the prospect is, that still farther accessions of hopeful converts will be made to their numbers. It is also gratifying to be able to say, that the converts generally run well, and appear to be growing in grace.

With respect to the Sabbath School cause, it is with pleasure that we can state, that Sabbath Schools are established in our Congregations, & at this time appear generally to be very flourishing. There is also cheering evidence that they have been the nurseries of piety, and the birth-place of souls.

The Monthly Concert is generally attended in our Churches, but not with that interest or punctuality on the part of their members, which its great importance demands. Other meetings for prayer, religious conference and instruction are attended with a considerable frequency and interest in our Congregations.

The cause of Temperance is evidently holding on its way with a good degree of prosperity, and is diffusing more widely its salutary influence through the community. God, too, has manifestly owned it as his cause, by following it with the blessing of his Spirit. The Presbytery is more and more convinced of this interesting fact, that the Temperance Reformation and Revivals of Religion have a peculiarly intimate relation and bearing upon each other, and mutually promote each other's prosperity and success.

But while we have so much to gladden our hearts, and call forth our praises, there are nevertheless dark shades to the picture. The fact that the work of the Lord no longer moves onward with mighty power in our Congregations, but has subsided to a great degree, is one of fearful and most solemn interest. The cessation of a revival is like the drying up of the very streams of life.—It therefore becomes the Churches most earnestly and seriously to inquire, wherefore has the work of the Lord thus ceased! and why do the rich dews of heavenly grace no longer descend in copious effusions! Are all the sinners among us converted! The vast companies whose feet now seldom or never stand in the courts of the Lord, who daily make void Jehovah's law, and who make light of the Gospel of his Son, return no uncertain answer. Probably a large majority of the population of this region, notwithstanding the wonders of grace that have been wrought, are still unconverted sinners. Is then, "the Lord's hand shortened, that it cannot save; or his ear heavy that, it cannot hear!" or have his promises failed! and will God no more wait to be gracious! None of us believe this. Why then has the Spirit so much withdrawn his influences from us! We must answer "our sins have separated between us and God, and our iniquities have hid his face from us."

It is also an affecting fact, while so much has been done, or is doing to bless the rising race, and while so great a blessing has attended the efforts put forth, that there should still be a vast company of children and youth among us, growing up, like the young of the Ostrich, without that instruction or restraint, which might make them wiser and better for time and Eternity.—Much, very much is yet undone, which must be done, before our children and youth generally will be brought under that influence, which with the blessing of God will make them wise unto salvation.

It is also a mournful and humiliating fact, that many professors of godliness, either are unfriendly to the cause of Temperance, or stand aloof from the efforts employed for its promotion. The almost numberless evils of Intemperance, the blessing of heaven which has descended upon the Temperance cause, and their obligations as the self-denying followers of the Redeemer, fail to induce them to come out on the Lord's side in this work. The use of ardent spirits some will unblushingly advocate, while others refuse to take a decided stand against it, and in both cases, they present some of the greatest obstacles in the way of its progress, with which this cause has to contend.

In conclusion, the Presbytery would say, that the great goodness of the Lord, which the churches under our care have so largely experienced, calls upon us to glorify the Great Head of the Church with the offering of praise; that our sins, unfaithfulness and unbelief, which have grieved the Holy Spirit from us, should fill our souls with the deepest humiliation, and repentance; and the much that remains to be done, before the Kingdom of Christ will fully come in all our borders, should excite Ministers & churches to more earnest and believing prayer, and to greater and more persevering efforts, than we have ever yet offered, or put forth in behalf of the Redeemer's cause, which above all other things, we profess, is the desire of our hearts, and the object of our lives.

OWENISM IN OHIO.

Mr Editor:—A short time since, I had occasion to make a tour in the state of Ohio, and during a stay of a few days in the pleasant village of C———, situated on the south shore of Lake Erie, I met with a disciple of the notorious Fanny Wright, and Robert Dale Owen. His business was to get a pamphlet printed, entitled "a series of Letters to Alexander Campbell," and to lecture on the infidel principles as taught by the above named freethinkers. The burden of his lectures, was to overthrow Christianity!—So zealous was this missionary from the camp of the enemy, that he repeated his harangues three or four evenings in a week, besides Sunday. The verbal and written notices of these meetings, he had the unenviable honor of giving himself! a fact which tells well for the intelligence of that village. He also made himself busy in circulating a book inculcating the same principles from the infidel Press in the city of N. Y. The untiring zeal of this deluded man in the cause of infidelity, should be a reproof to many who have enlisted as soldiers under the "great Captain of our Salvation." They are engaged in a cause which the word of God declares shall prosper; shall eventually accomplish the evangelizing of the earth; shall bring in the redeemed of the Lord from the four quarters of the globe; shall sound the grand Jubilee of the world, on the mountains of Zion, when all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest.—On the other hand, Infidels have much to discourage them in prosecuting their wicked purposes, although the threatnings of God have no terrors for them! Leaving then the Bible out of the question, they have to proceed against every principle inherent in man, against the dictates of conscience, the reason and common understanding of mankind. ANTI INFIDEL.

At a village in ——— County, which is known abroad for the morality of its inhabitants, the celebration of the anniversary of our national independence has just closed. A good dinner was provided by Mr. ———, after the regular toasts were drank, there was a great and confused noise of voices and gun powder. Some of the respectable members of society (so called) were the most prominent actors in this scene of riot and drinking. In the evening the situation of the village (to one who believes there is a God and another world,) was truly solemn. At one house was mourning for a departed wife and mother; at another was heard the sound of the riot, and mirth, and dancing; at another was heard profane swearing and the obscene song of the drunkard; at the fourth was heard the voice of prayer, calling on God to have mercy on these abusers of his great mercy.

Now Sir, I should like to know whether the fourth of July was celebrated in a similar manner in other villages! If so were any professors of religion present giving their countenance to these scenes of riot and revelry?

It is time that the church of Christ awaked to this subject. Let not the birth day of our nation's liberties, be any longer the occasion of scenes of riot and debauchery, displeasing and dishonorable to God, and destructive to the morals of our citizens. Let christians remember that the law of God—the precepts of the gospel are not suspended on the fourth of July.

Yours, A FRIEND TO GOOD ORDER.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman,—We had at Le Roy, a christian celebration of the 4th of July.—It was the first effort of the kind ever attempted in this place; and from the manner in which it was received by all classes, so far as I can learn, I cannot but indulge the hope that its effect will be happy.

We commemorated the independence of our great and growing Republic, not with that sort of patriotism that shows itself in the evanescent flash of powder and tow, (although I have no objection to such demonstrations from those who desire it;) our patriotism was directed to the more permanent materials of the Sabbath School, and the cause of Temperance.—These two institutions, I consider the bulwarks of our invaluable privileges.

At the time appointed, the children of the different Sabbath Schools in town, met in the basement room of the Presbyterian house of worship; they were formed into a procession, and moved into the house, the boys and girls by themselves, and the teachers at the head of their respective classes. The juvenile procession was headed by the Board of Managers, and as many of the Clergy as were then on the ground.

After the children got seated in perfect regularity and silence, it was truly gratifying to see the body of the Meeting House chiefly occupied with these young immortals, whose blooming faces and sparkling eyes, seemed to point them out as the hope of the Church of God—and the ornament of Society, and the State, in their coming day.

The exercises commenced after a piece of sacred music, by an appropriate and introductory prayer by Elder Clay, of the Baptist church. After this an address to the adult assembly, by Rev. Mr. Crawford, and then Mr. Kniffin, principal of the Academy, made some remarks to the Sabbath-school teachers and the children.—The assembly was then dismissed, and after a short intermission, we again convened to hear an address from Mr. Kniffin on the temperance cause: after which quite a number came forward and joined the Society. We were particularly happy to witness such perfect harmony of feeling between Sabbath schools and teachers of different denominations; and have no doubt, were the object of the meeting more fully understood beforehand, it would have been attended by other schools, who were not present, and by many more of our fellow citizens. CELEBRATION AT BERGEN GEN. CO.

Mr Chipman—Before giving an account of the celebration of our country's birth day in this place, permit me to state a few facts in relation to the cause of temperance here. A Temperance Society was organized here in 1827, which although it had to struggle with long established practices in the church, made some considerable progress, and now numbers fifty members.* Last winter Mr. Yale visited the place, and his faithful labors resulted in the organization of a Youths' Temperance Society, which increased with a greater rapidity, and now contains eighty eight members. Soon after the formation of this society, God was pleased to pour out his spirit here, and more than one hundred gave evidence of having passed from death unto life. The revival in its progress kept very near the line of temperance even following it into families, and taking those who had united with the society, and leaving those who had not. One habitual drunkard had given up his cups previous to the revival, and now gives hopeful evidence of piety: and others who had gone far in the road to ruin, are now numbered among the disciples of Christ, and the evidence that the God of heaven smiles upon the institution has become so convincing that members of the church, who have hitherto stood out, seem now to be almost persuaded to enlist on the side of temperance.

Our country's birth day was celebrated in the following manner. The Sabbath Schools of Riga, and Byron, (including superintendants and teachers) met the Sabbath School of this place at the meeting house, at 10 o'clock A. M. when a sermon adapted to the occasion was delivered to a large assembly, by Rev. Mr. Mead of Riga. A collection was also taken up for the benefit of the Colonization Society. The Sabbath-school children were then served with food, (cake and cheese) prepared for the occasion. At 12 o'clock the members of the temperance society retired and partook of a rich repast, furnished by Capt. A. Wilcox, where bottles of small beer had fearlessly usurped the place of decanters, nor once suffered the "good creature" to be seen about the table. After dinner the company repaired to the meeting house and listened to an address delivered by Rev. Mr. Oaks, of the Buffalo Presbytery, followed by some pertinent remarks from Mr. Mead. They then retired in the order that might have been expected.

Besides this society there are two other societies extending into the town, one in the vicinity of Stone Church, and the other in that of Lyme Church, the number of which are not in the statement.

THE RETAILER'S MORNING PRAYER.

Lord thou hast kept me through the night,
And cheer'd my soul with morning light;
With grateful heart I'll praise thee still,
O, grant me grace to do thy will.

Thou know'st O Lord, I would not sin,
Thou seest how faithful I have been;
And should I fill the pois'nous bowl,
Charge not the sin against my soul!

Thou know'st I have a family,
Dependant on my industry;
O, wilt thou send prosperity,
And let thy mercy follow me.

May I maintain a conscience free
From all offence to man or thee;
And should I deal the deadly bait,
May I repent ere 'tis too late!

And when my work on earth is done,
And I retire to worlds unknown;
Disturb me not through endless years,
With widow's groans, or orphan's tears!

I. P.

From the Western Recorder.

The 4th inst. was celebrated in this village variously, according to the taste of different individuals. A little of almost every thing, good, bad, and indifferent, seemed going forward at the same time; while nearly the whole village was in motion. Drinking, burning of powder, exploding of crackers, military parades, training of fire companies, processions, orations, dinners, balloons, sky-rockets, bonfires, &c. on the one hand, almost enough to turn the brain of a sober man; while on the other, the claims of Sabbath schools were illustrated in a delightful and impressive manner.

A more gratifying exhibition of Sabbath schools, we have never witnessed. It was the "Jubilee" anniversary held by the Western Union. Between ten and twelve hundred children and teachers, including the infant schools moved in procession through different streets of the village, accompanied by many of our most respectable citizens, and by strangers and visitors from the neighboring towns, finding a temporary retreat from the heat of the sun, in a pleasant and shady orchard, towards the western part of the village. Here a hymn was sung by the thousand voices of the scholars and teachers; when the procession moved to the large Presbyterian church, the body pews of which could scarcely suffice to seat the children, while the citizens and strangers were obliged to take the galleries. The house was thronged. The exercises, as usual on such occasions consisted of prayer, singing of hymns, reading of the report and of resolutions, accompanied with short animated addresses, followed at length with the benediction.

The only addresses of any length were those of Rev. Messrs. Bethune, and Loss. The former descanted in an interesting manner upon the excellence of Sabbath schools; and the latter followed up the argument by the exhibition of striking facts. Among other things, he mentioned that in Otsego county, more than four hundred conversions had been reported within the Sabbath schools; also, that nearly two hundred had been reported in Tompkins county: while within the limits of the Western Union, the number had amounted to nearly one thousand! Such facts as these find ready access to the heart of the wakeful Christian.

On the morning of the 4th inst. the two Sunday Schools, attached to the Presbyterian churches in this town, were assembled at 8 o'clock.—They listened with much interest and attention to a plain account of the first settlement of this country, by those who fled from religious persecution in England, of the causes that led to the Declaration of Independence, of the revolutionary war, and the blessings we enjoy in our free and peaceful country. A brief history of the origin and progress of the Sabbath Schools was also given. It is certain that the minds as well as the manners and morals of children are improved in Sabbath Schools.—West. Luminary.

Steam-Boat Accident.—The Steam boat Chieftain, Capt. Shallcross, on her passage from St. Louis to Cantonment Lavenworth, when about 80 miles above this city, burst one of her boilers, and was compelled to return. The accident, we are informed, was occasioned by the connecting pipe becoming choked and thus stopping the supply of water. The flue of the boiler collapsed and was blown out forward, carrying two men (a fire-man and a deck hand) overboard—one of whom was drowned. The other, badly scalded, swam ashore, and there is some hope of his recovery. No other damage was done to the boat. She is now repairing and will be under way again in a few days.—St. Louis Repub.

HYDROPHOBIA.—Died, at Black Rock, on Tuesday last, a child of Mr. Pennhollow, aged about 6 years, of the hydrophobia. The deceased was bitten in the hand by a dog in this village, the latter part of last March. It being suspected that the dog might be mad, he was immediately pursued and killed, and the wound dressed with such medicine as was at hand, to guard against the dreadful disease which followed. The wound soon healed. But on Saturday previous to his death, he was seized with a violent pain in the hand which was bitten, and was occasionally thrown into convulsion fits until his death. This ought to admonish the public to guard against mad dogs.—Buffalo Patriot.

COMPASSION FOR THE POOR.

CIRCUS.—A strolling company of Circus gentry, have again been permitted to exhibit their feats of buffoonery in this village, for ten or twelve days past. Last evening's performance was announced as their last in this place, and was "for the benefit of the poor." It would be a greater benefit to the poor, and to the morals of our inhabitants, if our village authorities would do their duty, and prohibit entirely such exhibitions.—Ontario Repos.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESSING.—We understand that Mr. C. Swan who has for ten years past, kept a public house in Otisco, 13 miles from this village on the Hamilton and Skeneateles turnpike, has "Reformed" ardent spirits out of his bar, being convinced that the good of community is of more consequence than the profits of the trafick.—Skan. Col.

About $10,000 has recently been subscribed for foreign missions by churches in New York, through the agency of Mr. Anderson, Secretary of the American Board. Other churches yet remain to be visited. Similar efforts, no doubt, will be made in other places. How many wealthy christian professors are there in this county, each of whom might contribute $10,000 to this cause, without denying themselves or families a single luxury, while hundreds of millions are perishing for lack of vision.—Western Recorder.

DEATH FROM INTEMPERANCE.—We understand that on Wednesday, a Mrs. Pigeon, who some years since kept a millinery store in Court street, was found in Theatre alley, senseless, and, being taken up, a physician was called, who stated that she was dying, probably from intemperance. She soon breathed her last.—Boston Patriot.

FOREIGN.

EXTRACTS FROM LONDON PAPERS.

IRELAND.

We extract the following from the Dublin Freeman's Journal of May 26th. We trust that there is exageration in the afflicting details communicated by the following correspondents of our contemporary, and of an evening paper:—

The Police.—Nine persons killed, and seven mortally wounded.—In what country do we live? Is there to be any mercy for the people of Ireland? Or for the slightest causes, which in England are severely punished by the constable's staff, are they to be slaughtered like wild beasts?

The city was indignant at the outrage on one woman, but wanton and sanguinary as that might be deemed, what is it to this massacre by the paid guardians of life and property? Lord Anglesy surely will bring the murderers to instant trial. All the outrages in Clare put together, do not equal the enormity of this, if the following statement be true, of which we have not the slightest doubt.

CASTLEPOLLARD, May 24th.—The melancholy event which took place in this town yesterday, at the fair, exhibits another instance of the character and conduct of the constabulary force, who are paid by the country for protecting the lives and property of the people, as well as the peace of society. During the fair, which was in general orderly and quiet, some trifling disputes took place. One of these occurred in the afternoon about six o'clock, the police, some of whom were at a public house, suddenly entered their barracks, and having taken their arms and ammunition, advanced from thence into the fair, which is held in the square of the town. They had just appeared there when the quarrel had ceased; seeing no occasion for their presence longer, they were returning, when some women and children, collected about a show in the middle of the fair, began to shout and hiss. The police suddenly wheeled round, and without giving any caution, opened a destructive and murderous fire of ball cartridges in all directions, the effects of which on many poor defenceless victims, whom business or curiosity detained there to that hour, and now welter in their blood, are before my eyes. Seven of those, five men and two women, are dead—they were killed on the spot.—Another is in the agonies of death, and seven more, as far as I have yet heard, are wounded, some, I fear, mortally, as amputation of their shattered limbs is absolutely requisite. The bullets entered the shops and windows of the inhabitants, and it is almost miraculous that in those houses no blood was spilled. While I write, the Coroner, Mr. Dixon, and a Jury are viewing the bodies. I understand the magistrates of this session have forwarded a report to the castle, requesting an investigation of the affair, which, it is hoped will satisfy the ends of Justice. The police were not satisfied with the first fire, but primed and loaded several times, and took deliberate aim at some hiding and others running away.

FAMINE.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Dombrain, Inspector General of the Coast Guard, Ireland.

BALLYNASS, May 25.

As it would be impossible for me to portray any thing like the distress—the awful and appalling visitation of the Almighty in those parts—so shall I not attempt it; it is heart rending—he people are dying; having lived on the common sea weed, they have been suddenly afflicted with swellings all over their bodies. It has the appearance of dropsy, but attacks all parts. They are sinking under it. I am still housing in the food, and have received nine cargoes of potatoes.

Extract of a letter from Rev. Mr. Ellis, received through the Dutchess of Beaufort.

I write to lay before you the dreadful distress at present existing in Connemara, and to beg your advice and assistance in endeavoring to relieve it. Famine and fever are stalking hand in hand through this miserable region; and if some relief be not immediately found, thousands upon thousands must perish.

As a last resource, some are now bleeding the cattle, boiling their blood and eating it. I see nothing before us all this summer but famine and pestilence—any thing that can be done for us, ought to be done quickly: another month's distress may cause the death of thousands.

SUMMARY.

Common Salt, put into water where domestic calicoes are washed, will prevent the colors fading. So says a dry good's merchant, and desires us to give the fact publicity. A female friend of ours says two spoonsful of beef gall is still better.—New Haven Gazette.

A seal of extraordinary size, was recently shot by Mr. Isaac Nelson, Jr. in the Hudson river, near Sing Sing landing. This animal, which is very uncommon in this climate, had been noticed for several days, and was at length pursued and shot through the head. When taken out of the water, he weighed about three hundred pounds, measured seven feet in length, and yielded nearly fifteen gallons of oil.

SINGULAR DEATH.—Accounts have been received of the death of Mr. James Haze of Bristol. This gentleman was travelling in Egypt; and in attempting to ascend one of the Pyramids without a guide, fell, and was killed.

The death of Lieut. Gen. Sir Thomas Sidney Beckwith, acting Governor of the Presidency of Bombay, and Commander in chief, which took place on the 15th of January, was officially announced at Calcutta on the 4th of Feb. The government of the Presidency devolved on John Romer, Esq.

William M. Todd proposes to publish at Frankfort, Ky., The Harbinger of the Mississippi Valley, devoted principally to the cause of Temperance, African Colonization, and Sunday schools. It is to be edited by Dr. L. Munsel, and will appear in monthly numbers of 16 pages 8vo.

Mr. Green Æronaut, April 30th, 5 P. M. at Chelmsford, England, ascended to the height of 60,000 feet, where the balloon stopped in a quiet atmosphere. Dr. Foster accompanied Mr. G. He describes the view to have been beautiful in the extreme. The pressure on the tympanum of the ear, arising from the rarefaction of the atmosphere, was so painful to Dr. F. that they were obliged to descend, which they did in safety. Dr. F. thinks an ascent might cure some kinds of deafness. Sounds, however loud below soon became perfectly inaudible as they ascended.

The Wilmington (Delaware) Free Press, mentions that within the last six or seven weeks, there have arrived at that port ten hundred and ninety-seven Irish, and one hundred and ten English emigrants, for each of which, one dollar was paid into the treasury of the poor for Newcastle county.

The receipts of the American Board for Foreign Missions, for the month ending June 15, as reported in the Missionary Herald are $11,397 48 in donations, and $5,199 69 in legacies. Total $16,597 17.

A party of hand-cartmen in Boston to the number of twenty-five, celebrated the anniversary of Independence by a trip down the harbor and among the islands. The terms of subscription to this party involved entire abstinence, during the day, from the use of ardent spirits—a condition that was religiously observed throughout.

In New-York there have been lately given in the course of four days 433 premiums for dog-killing. Some most distressing cases of hydrophobia have occurred there in consequence of bites by mad-dogs.

Rev. Mr. Finney, after preaching a few sermons in Utica and its vicinity, has set his face toward New England. The kindest wishes attend him.—Western Recorder.

PRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.—There have been (including the present) seven Presidents. The names of four of them ended in the letters ON. The names of three of them ended in the letters SON, but neither of these three had a son. All of them were married; but three of them were childless. The son of the only one that had a son, was one of seven. Four of the seven are dead, and three of them died on the fourth of July.—Boston D. Advertiser.

SIGHT RESTORED.—A man by the name of Hempstead, of New London, Con., who had been for some time so blind as hardly to be able to distinguish between night and day, had his sight suddenly restored by striking his eye with a good deal of force upon the end of a stake, when suddenly stooping down.

SECRETARY OF WAR.—The appointment of Gov. Cass, as Secretary of War, is officially announced in the Globe. Gov. Cass, is a native of Exeter, New Hampshire, and was appointed Governor of Michigan Territory, on the resignation of that office by Gov. Hull.

RESTITUTION.—One hundred dollars was lately received through the Post Office, by the Treasurer of the United States, with the request that it might be returned to the Treasury, to which it was due.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.—The Steam Boat Chieftain, on he passage from St. Louis to Cantonement Leavenworth, burst one of her boilers, by which two men were thrown overboard—one of whom was drowned, and the other was so scalded that, although he swam ashore, he cannot survive.

INSECTS ON SUGAR.—Wrap a piece of gum Camphor in a clean linen rag, and place it in the sugar tub. Not an insect can be found in the sugar an hour after. Try it.

MEDICAL MANSION.—Jacob Lorillard Esq. has erected and finished, with noble accommodations, for sick strangers or citizens, a medical mansion, on the site of the old state-prison, corner of Amos and Washington street. It was constructed at an expense of $100,000, and the establishment covers a bout two acres of ground. The patient pays for his board and attendance, and has the choice of his own physician.

Seventy dollars have been obtained by Mr. Pierce of Gorham, Me. of a teamster, for causing the destruction of his chaise, &c. by keeping in the middle of the road. At the same time the teamster upset another chaise.

TRADE AND COMMERCE OF N. ORLEANS.—Notwithstanding the very unusual and unprecedented number of vessels, which have loaded at New-Orleans the present year at the last dates, there was not a vessel in port unengaged, although the number exceeded 200 sail, making about 40,000 tons. The stock of cotton on hand for export, was 80,000 bales and of tobacco 11,000 hhds. and every other kind of produce in proportion. If the produce of Louisiania continues to increase for five years to come, in proportion to the last five years, New-Orleans will requre all the shipping of the United States to carry it to market.

THE SPRINGS.—The Saratoga Sentinel of Tuesday states, that there were then twice as many visitors at that place as at the same period last year. And the Ballston Gazette states that several families from the south have already taken up their residence at the watering place for the season.

FORESIGHT.—One of the stipulations between William Penn and the early settlers of Pennsylvania, was that, in clearing the land, one acre of trees should be left standing for every five acres cut down, and especially to reserve the mulberry and the oak, for silk and ship building.

A Colony for the Great Valley, is forming at Benson, Vermont, to remove in the autumn to some place of usefulness in the valley of the Mississippi. It contemplates the establishment of primary and Sabbath Schools, the preaching of the gospel, &c.

A Sabbath School Teacher in North Carolina, writes to the Southern Religious Telegraph, that during one of his nine years superintendence of a Sunday school, viz. the year 1828, 74 persons, connected with the school, became pious.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Gazette, states, that there have been five hundred and twenty-nine dogs taken up and killed in that city, between the 6th of May and the 8th of July. The "catchers" have been out day and night for the last ten days.

There were two Sabbath School Celebrations in Boston on the 4th of July, viz: by the Schools connected with the Congregational and Baptist churches. Addresses were made by Dr. Wisner and Rev. Mr. Knowles.

BEES.—Mr. Buel, of Albany, a distinguished agriculturist, says that the moth can be kept from bee-hives, by sprinkling spirits of turpentine every two or three weeks about the hives, & near the holes of entrance.

OFFICERS OF THE LATE WAR.—A meeting was recently held in Boston, at which General M'Niel presided. A committee of seven was appointed to petition Congress for a grant of land, as a remuneration for their services and deprivations in the last war.

POPULATION.—It is estimated that the increase of population in the United States, by means of emigrants, is about 1000 a week; while the natural increase is more than 1000 a day.

We understand the proprietors of the steamboat Benjamin Franklin have altered the day of her leaving Providence for New York from Sunday to Saturday, in consequence of the objections which many of the stockholders had to her starting on the Sabbath.—Sentinel.

The town of Lee, the second largest manufacturing town in the county of Berkshire, Mass. has not in it a store, shop, dwelling, hovel or cellar, in which ardent spirits of any kind is either bought or sold.

IMPORTANT.—It has recently been decided in the District Court of the United States for the District of Maine, that under the prohibitory clause of the Post Office law, packages of various descriptions, such as packages of merchandise or of bank notes, can be carried by mail carriers without incurring the penalty, but not packages of letters.

Letters received during the week.—A. Porter; S. Van Campen; Marshall Foreman, & Co.; G. B. Rich; A. Leonard; M. H. Tucker; H. Galpin; A. E. Campbell; R. Trall. J. C. Hutchinson.

TEMPERANCE.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

Mr. Editor—Some person, unknown to me, lately left in my house a pamphlet, entitled, "An Address to Females." It purports to be the writing of a female. I know not whether it has been left in every family in the city or not. If it has, I think some extracts from it will be useful to your subscribers in the country. It is thorough going. That part which makes it the duty of women to expose this sin is very weighty. The women have suffered nearly enough in this matter, and it is time for them to take the reform into their own hands. Let every wife make it a rule to smash all bottles, and decanters, and destroy all poison, the moment she can lay hands on it in her house. I wish you would publish some parts of this address.

NEW YORK.

INTRODUCTION.

In the curse pronounced on man, for disobedience, woman has shared largely. She too must toil, she too must suffer; and, as though the draught were not bitter enough, for being first in the transgression, man has contrived another ingredient. He has taken her from the loved home of kindred and friends, won, and bound her heart to his, by a thousand endearing promises, lacerated, and left it bleeding, with no other consolation, than, "Poor woman she has a drinking husband." To you who have temperate ones, I would say, you "know but in part, you see but in part, the miseries of life."

KEEPING OUT THE RAIN.

I will relate an incident trivial in itself which laid the foundation of the following remarks, and led to an investigation which resulted in the candid belief, that wives, and mothers, must have a mighty account to render, for the intemperance of the present age. On a visit in the state of Vermont, a good woman invited me to take a seat in her carriage, and accompany her home. A son of ten years, was with her, already a "spoiled child," by indulgence, and a cloud presaging rain was gathering. I saw her give him a sixpence, sending him across the street, with some private directions, and thought no more of the circumstance. Riding a few miles the rain began to fall, the careful mother in the greatest perturbation drew from under her cloak a phial, and forgetting the forms of etiquette to me, as a stranger, applied the phial to the mouth of her son, saying, "take a good swallow it will keep out the rain." Then taking the same timely precaution for her own exposed stomach, bade him hurry on. Indignation and disgust induced me involuntarily to exclaim, what, will you give your son a relish, for this liquid fire, at so early an age, and thus prepare him, for a more awful one! A pelting more powerful than the rain beat upon me, for my superstition, and though she stood pre-eminent in her church, for sanctity, in vain I pleaded the effect upon morals and religion. "Prudence to keep out the cold was necessary, and God made all these things for our use, and it was best to let people do as they pleased," &c. reminded me, I was not in my own carriage, while the exulting squint of the boy, toward the mother, assured her the victory was hers; and we pursued our journey in silence. O deluded deceived woman, should your son prove a drunkard, I shall remember the pelting storm, and you may think yourself the instrument. Now mothers draw a rational inference from this simple fact. Are your children taught from the cradle that rum is necessary to "keep out the cold," how many days think ye in the three hundred and sixty five, will not plead the necessity! If a little sugar be added to sweeten the poison, the necessity soon becomes doubly urgent, and a little fatigue calls for the same as "Keeping out the cold." Thus has many a kind mother, gradually opened the flood gates of dissipation, and then wept over the profligacy of her son, claiming the pity of the world, without ever imagining her own false kindness was the procuring cause.

DUTY OF EXPOSING THE HABIT.

Another evil which has fostered this sin to an alarming degree, is the caution, which females have ever shown to conceal this habit of their friends from the world. I confess I am touching a tender string, and many an affectionate wife is ready to exclaim, you never knew the tender sensibilities of life; but hear me patiently.

Who has ever marked the progress of drunkenness, but must have seen it is peculiarly attended with shame, and a dread of exposure, especially among the more respectable class. A few advances, regard to character vanishes—excessive drinking in the most public places—and staggering home, excite no blush. Now, did every man before he put the cup to his lips, know assuredly a disclosure would be made, and the infamy due to it be the result, would the world be deluged by rum as it now is? I would apply this particularly to church members, and exemplify it by facts within my knowledge. A lady and her children, a few months since, took shelter under my roof from the wrath of an intoxicated husband, who had the evening before turned her into the street, saying, "I shall live with her no longer." How long have you suffered the trial!—"Oh, many years, but have ever kept it a secret from the world, and church." Is he a church member, then? "Yes, we both belong to a respectable church in this city, and have respectable friends." But how have you succeeded in covering this sin so long from the world! "Why, during his hours of business, from ten to three, he remained sober, (and to use her own words,) then called at a porter house, took his dram—hastened home usually before quite drunk—raved like a maniac through the night, or sunk in sottish insensibility till nine, when a cup of coffee so far revived him that he resumed his business—unsuspected. This he continued for some years—till within a few months, he tarried late at night, and the faithful wife, to prevent a discovery, tarried in the hall waiting the sound of his footsteps—lest a rap might lead to some suspicion. Thus, after suffering years, he rewarded her faithfulness by thrusting her upon the world, and compelling her to expose him willing or not. Let common sense answer. Did this woman act judiciously? Doubtless she acted from the purest motives, bearing in mind the example of Sarah, "who obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord," "and that the wife see that she reverence her husband." But had she, at the onset, faithfully admonished, then took the steps enjoined in the 18th of Matthew, much sin on his part might have been prevented, and a multitude of troubles on hers.—Custom, it must be acknowledged, has bestowed much praise on those forbearing wives, who have, without murmuring, suffered hunger, poverty, and abuse of every kind; but is this christian forbearance? Is it showing that abhorrence to sin, that is calculated to reclaim the sinner?—Should a husband imbrue his hands in the blood of his neighbor,—and reveal the secret to his wife, enjoining her, as she values his reputation and life, she must forever hold her peace—think you this would be her duty? Would she not justly be styled a partaker of his sin, equally as though she had shared stolen property, which she knew to be such? But you say the case is not parallel. True. For murder is but one sin, and drunkenness drags in its train the sum total

HE USED TO BE SO KIND.

But I hear one good woman saying, my husband was once so kind, so affectionate to his children, what then! So Lucifer, "the son of the morning," was once an angel of light, but is he any better devil now, and are his subjects treated less rigorously for his original good qualities! Another, I fear consequences, he will hasten to destruction, with none to pity. It may be so. The steps of the drunkard take hold on hell, and the sooner there the less the suffering. Pardon this severity. Naked truth stands before me.

THE MILLENNIUM.

The millennium is approaching. Then "Holiness to the Lord" will not be written on bottles of rum. Then the sign of a porter house will not be found in all the mountain of Zion. Then shall woman attain her true rank, and no longer be the "slave, but companion of man." Then shall the domestic altar be annointed with the "oil of joy and gladness," and the incense of the morning and evening sacrifice be no more contaminated with the breath of rum.

WOMEN IN THE HIGHER WALKS.

In the higher walks of life, they are in an eminent degree accountable to God, and their fellow creatures for the needless practice of using ardent spirits in the social circle. Such have emphatically taught their own, and the children of the poor, that generosity is measured by decanters of rum, or flagons of wine. Many of the latter class, have actually deprived themselves of the necessary comforts of life, that they might walk in this highway cast up by the rich. What is implied in "condescending to men of low estate." An anecdote occurs which ought to be recorded and practised by all in exalted stations in life.

A lady, in a populous town in New-England, wife of a minister, missed from the house of God, the son of a poor woman, and visited her, to ascertain the cause. On enquiry, she learned he had no shoes. She made no comments, nor arrangements to procure any, but to the wonder of the congregation, her two sons the following sabbath were seen in church barefooted. The next Sabbath the son of the poor woman appeared likewise. And who would not give more for the luxury this woman enjoyed when she saw the feet of that poor boy treading the sanctuary, than all the exhilarating draughts of wine in Christendom. This was true benevolence, and it cost nothing but a Christian independence. It was not giving, but condescending, meeting the poor on the ground of equality. Christian female, "go and do likewise."

A WORD TO YOUNG LADIES.

You in an emphatical manner hold the hammer and nail to fasten the head of this Sisera "to the ground," & though Abimelech like, he may fear, man will say, "A woman slew him," yet the mill stone would be mighty to "break his skull."

Would every young lady of respectability, keep aloof from all parties of pleasure where the intoxicating cup would be present, and receive no marked attention from the man, who occasionally "tarried long at the wine," this necessary beverage would soon cease to be so urgent for the "stomach's sake," & often infirmities. Then I would entreat such to be cautious, your future peace may turn wholly on this hinge, and now the power is almost entirely yours, and never let the hand of dissipation wrest it from your grasp.

A SUBJECT FOR THE SATIRICAL PENCIL.

On the 22d day of March, 1631, Sagamore Massasoit, the most powerful Indian monarch in the vicinity of Plymouth Bay, approached the pilgrim settlement. He is represented in the quaint language of those times as being "a very lusty man, in his best years, an able body, grave of countenance and spare of speech; in his attire little or nothing differing from the rest of his followers, only in a great chain of white bone beads about his neck; and at it, behind his neck, hangs a little bag of tobacco. His face was painted with a sad red like murrey: and oiled both head and face, that he looked greasily. After salutations, our Governor (Carver) kissing his hand, the king kissed him; and so they sat down. The Governor called for some strong water & drunk to him; and he drunk a great draught, that made him sweat all the while after."

The pencil of a Hogarth could scarcely find a richer subject than this scene affords to embalm in the colors of a ludicrous immortality, were it not connected with associations almost too solemn to justify the use of satire. If the matter went no farther than the first view, it would be well enough to paint the powerful forest monarch sweating under the enormous potation of strong water given him by the first Governor of Christian New England. But the heavy draught of fire-water which rolled torrents of rank perspiration down the oily face of the Sagamore, was the first drink of liquid damnation, to use a phrase of the late distinguished Robert Hall, to an entire race. Well might the savage sweat as the poisonous fumes whirled around the lobes of his brain—for he had tasted that which was to sweep his kindred, root and branch, into oblivion!

SECRETS OF TRADE.—The N. York Journal of commerce says of the liquor market in that city, "Foreign spirits are dull of sale; EMPTY CASKS brisk, at very high prices." Our readers are aware that casks, in which foreign liquors have been imported, are bought by manufacturers of spurious articles, to be filled with their own trash, which is thus easily got off as genuine. What shall we think of such a business? The dishonest can so easily cheat, and to such an extent, that none but men like themselves can compete with them. It would seem that all who engage in the trade must either become dishonest, or fail.—Jour. of Humanity

Boston, Erie Co. N. Y.
June 22, 1831.

GENTLEMEN,

Since I have acted as Agent of the N. York State Temperance Society, I have passed thro' the counties of Orleans and Niagara, visiting every town, and expect to complete the entire tour of this county on the 29th inst.

On the 17th May, a County Society was formed for the county of Orleans. Hon. A. Ward, President. On the 30th a Village Society was formed at Middleport, Niagara co. consisting of 40 members; Wm. Adams, Esq. President; and on the 11th June, a Young Men's Society went into operation in Buffield. This last excludes, not only all distilled liquors, but also wine, beer, and cider; L. G. Marvin, President. This is a society of much promise, and they have set about the work of reformation with much spirit and zeal.

In the progress of my tour, I find much to encourage and but little to produce despondency. The friends of Temperance are multiplying; old stale apologies are disappearing, & on the whole, the cause is rapidly progressing. This county was not particularly embraced in the Annual Report of the State Society; but there are societies in every town except this, & I trust to have one here before sun-set to-day. But I still find some professors of religion on the side of the enemy. At Lodi, is one who runs a distillery, and sells personally by the barrel, and by proxy by the glass. HE IS A MEMBER OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH!! Tell it not in Gath.—Yes, tell it—let the wicked know that we mark and detest such men. Let them know that we have no fellowship with them, or charity for them.

In this place is another—A MEMBER OF THE METHODIST CHURCH. He has just rented a distillery for three years—gives $400, besides other immunities. Oh!

"There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart—
It does not feel for man."

There are, as near as I can judge, about 1200 Temperance members in this county, and on an average, 100 in each of the towns in Niagara & Orleans counties.

When I was at Youngstown, I crossed the river to Fort George. It was on the 4th of June, the King's birth-day—a high day. It was also the day for regimental training—and surely Satan reviewed his troops that day.—Whiskey—whiskey flowed in torrents, and oaths and curses were heard on every side. Not a man could open his mouth without an oath. Women as well as men drank. I saw one girl take two half-tumblers of raw brandy in fifteen minutes, besides a little whiskey to stay her stomach between the drinks.

At Niagara Falls the Society had gone to decay; but they were just making efforts to revive it. I staid there two days, and fifty united with the Society. In New Fane, Niagara co. I found a minister and a deacon who would not unite in the cause. They were in the habit of taking their morning bitters. In P——, a woman, ashamed to send or carry a bottle to the store for whiskey, usually sends her tea canister!! In O——, two men with their wives, lately went to the store to trade. After making a bill of ten or twelve dollars for calicoes, &c. the old gallon bottle was presented to be replenished. The merchant advised them to purchase a barrel, as haying and harvesting were near at hand. After a little consultation, they rolled the barrel into the wagon. Their wives, seeing this, turned aside, and my informant said he saw the big tears fall silently, but freely. O! there was anguish in those hearts! How can men be so brutish!

In the town of S. the following conversation lately occurred:—"Neighbor A., can you tell me the time of day! I have a good clock, but I have become so forgetful lately that I do not remember to keep it wound."

A. "I can put you in a way effectually to remedy this evil."

B. "Can you! I would be willing to give you ten dollars if you will give me the receipt."

A. "Well then, set your bitters bottle on a shelf near your clock, and my word for it, you wont forget to wind your clock."

Neighbor B. was so much chagrined at the sarcasm, as wholly to forsake his tippling, & is now a warm friend of Temperance.

I find no Temperance papers circulating in this region, and but few Temperance tracts. I much wish some wealthy, zealous friend of the cause would furnish me with a few thousand pages for distribution. Immense good might be done by them. Yours, &c. CHARLES YALE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SLAVERY & SABBATH BREAKING.

A Missionary in Tennessee, thus writes:

One little incident, illustrating another subject may not be uninteresting. On last Sabbath, a man of color, a slave, professor of religion, called at my house. He had walked nine miles that morning, to get some necessaries at the store for his wife who was sick, and was about to return the same evening. Knowing that he had spent several Sabbaths in the same way, I asked him if he did not feel guilty of breaking the Sabbath. He said he did frequently but he could not help it. His master would not spare him from his work, to come up on any other day of the week; sometimes, after work, all day he had come up in the night and returned before day light to labor all the next day without sleep; once he came up in that way, and after knocking & calling in vain at the stores for some time, was under the mortifying necessity of returning the same night, without accomplishing his object. When coming up on the Sabbath, he prayed all the way, that the Lord would not lay to his charge, the sin of Sabbath breaking or forgive him if guilty.—But there were some things, it seemed to him he must get, and could not without trespassing upon the Sabbath. I urged him to submit to his lot, even though it might seem a hard one, & not by any means to violate the Sabbath. His conscience appeared tender, and he wept freely.—But should he let his wife suffer, pine away in sickness and perhaps die, for want of certain necessaries which he could get for her in no other way! I confess, on imagining myself placed in the situation of this poor slave, I was somewhat staggered at this question. I knew it was not right "to do evil that good might come," but at whose door would the sin of Sabbath breaking, in this case, lie, that of the poor slave, or his master!

THE GREAT QUESTION NEGLECTED.

AN AFFECTING FACT.

A short time since Mr. —— a young merchant in one of our large cities, was seized with a dangerous illness, which brought him to the very confines of the eternal world. In this situation the past neglect of a Saviour, rushed with power on his conscience, and in the most solemn form, he vowed to lead a new life, & serve his Creator, if he recovered. Unexpectedly to himself and to all others, he recovered by slow degrees, to his usual degree of health, and during this period, he regarded his promise, and at length professed to obtain a good hope through grace. But alas! when he got well, and resumed business, the duties & pleasures of life led him astray from God; and he again indulged in all the vanity of a fashionable life. A friend, who had heard, and was deeply affected with his solemn vows, when in trouble, reminded him of that affecting scene; he remembered it, and declared his intention of fulfilling all he had said, as soon as he had accomplished two or three pressing items of business. Then he would give up his whole soul to the work; then he would seek God with all his heart. A few days after the admonition, he attended a fashionable and splendid ball; in the midst of his gaiety & mirth Mr. —— was in high spirits, and partaking in all its merriment, thinking that this was "the time to dance"—when suddenly, the angel of death entered the festive hall, and the young, the gay, the thoughtless merchant, sank to the floor a lifeless corpse! Oh immortal sinner, beware of neglecting the Great Question, "What must I do to be saved!"—Parent's Gift.

THE TRIALS OF EMIGRATION.

A meeting, to devise means to assist the sick and destitute emigrants, flocking to this western world, was lately held at Montreal, and was attended by numerous respectable citizens, who subscribed with praiseworthy liberality. Every successive arrival brings an addition to the host overflowing from Europe, & they have, in many cases, barely enough to bring them to the shores of a country, wide in territory, of a fertile soil, but of which much is uncultivated, and quite unlike that they have left. If there be any thing which can arouse the stupid indolence of man, to a lively gratitude for the kindness of that Providence which has given competence and quietness to those settled in this province, thankfulness will arise upon reading details like the following in the Montreal Courant's notice of the meeting above mentioned:

We state it to the world and we hope it will be made known on the other side of the Atlantic, that thousands who have arrived at Montreal this season, as emigrants, have been compelled to lay their humble beds in our streets, and on our wharves, as the only attainable places of repose.—The hardships experienced in such a state of wretchedness, when added to the fatigues of a long sea voyage, and the more distressing (though not of such long continuance,) fatigue of a crowded steam-boat, have, in almost innumerable instances been the cause of severe indisposition. The consequences are now visible; our hospitals are crowded, and the general hospital, after filling every apartment, even the passages and committee room, has been under the necessity of erecting sheds on the green in the rear of that building, to receive the invalids that arrive, at the rate of twenty or thirty per day, to beg the aid of this truly valuable institution.—Some of the Medical Students who attend the hospital, prompted by that spirit which actuated the good Samaritan, continue attending the sick, and assisting the medical officers from early morning till late bed time, and some have even continued the whole day without food or refreshment. Yet, notwithstanding all that has been done, numbers yet remain unassisted, and hundreds in sound health, are wandering through our streets with looks of dejection, wretchedness and despair, begging for work or food. We have lately heard of an instance of misery, which, for poignancy, is without a parallel in any tale of distress we have heard in this country. A few days ago, an emigrant was landed from on board one of the steam-boats, in a state of extreme debility, and laboring under severe indisposition. After lying some time on the wharf, he was told that there was an hospital in town, these tidings gave him renewed strength, he rose, inquired for it, and after wandering through the streets for some time, was assisted to the steps at the entrance of the Camp de Mars in rear of the gaol, where he for the first time, came in view of the hospital. His strength, however, failed him, just as he came in view of the desired place, and he sank down on these steps, for some time quite exhausted. A second effort, however, brought him to the hospital, but after waiting some time in hopes that some person might arrive, properly qualified to give him a ticket, which would entitle him to reception, his patience became exhausted, he withdrew, and after tottering a short distance, fell in the street, and expired!!

Is this a solitary instance of the miseries of these people! Stern facts compel us to say it is not. The rains that have fallen with such unusual violence since last Saturday, have poured their ruthless fury on thousands who have no other shelter than a few boards extended between the heads of empty casks, and thus formed a kind of awning for their beds. Some have not even this humble covering, and we have ourselves seen the wretched matron, in a certain state which requires the utmost care and attention surrounded by her little children drenched and shivering, wringing her hair to extract the water from it. Shall we continue this agonizing picture by introducing numerous other groups of misery! Materials are not wanting; but we wish to be as sparing of the feelings of our readers, as the circumstances of the case will admit, and we therefore drop the curtain on this scene of human sufferings.

"When scarce seven years of age I was placed along with my brother who was two years older, in a school at Maheres, and have every reason to believe that my father wished it particularly to be understood we were on no account whatever to attend a Roman place of worship. He had, however, no sooner left the town than we were obliged to accompany the rest of the scholars almost daily, to the cathedral in that city. As we were, to the best of my recollection, the only Protestant children in the school, we were particularly watched over in all the spiritual things which were by them considered of importance to salvation, and most agreeable to the spirt of Popery. At every corner of the streets there were images bedaubed with paint; before these we were forced to bow the knees, and our caps were either voluntarily taken off, or else removed by force, this was not only gratifying to the rest of our school-fellows in a religious point of view, who saw in it a conquest over the 'Petit Anglais,' but also was regarded as a kind of national triumph. The same feeling led to my being selected to carry a candle during some of their processions, when hardly another of the boys were even allowed to be present. The priests were extolled as demi-gods, and nothing could exceed the veneration with which I was accustomed to regard them, except that impressed upon my mind as due to the Virgin Mary; all that I knew of Christ was a child in her arms. I viewed the priest as above the king. He was clothed with the snow-white garment of perfection; infallibility sat upon his brow, and the keys of everlasting bliss or woe depended from his girdle. Such was my opinion of the priesthood, and these principles were instilled into my mind. Our Sundays were given completely up to amusement: and every Sabbath evening one part of our school-room was fitted up as a small theatre for a display of puppets, who performed a variety of farces and comedies. This was always under the superintendence of one of the masters, and a halfpenny was exacted from all who were admitted to be present."

PURGATORY.

A gentleman recently from Delaware has communicated to us another specimen of the manner in which American Papists are robbed by French Jesuit Priests.

"A Papist at M. —— recently lost by death, two of his children who were twins. They were interred in a Protestant grave yard. The Roman Priest who resided at some miles distance, having ascertained the fact, immediately threatened him with his wrath, and tormented his wretched disciple, by assuring him, that his two children were roasting in the fire of purgatory. Finally, however, the priest agreed to give him a dispensation for burying the corpses in heretical ground, and to deliver the children from purgatory, provided, that the man would give up a Bible which he had shortly before obtained, and also give the priest, ten dollars, five dollars for each child, as penance to the church."

This is a genuine and common specimen of the manner in which the personal rights of our citizens are despoiled—and their money pilfered by the lawless agents of the Popedom.—Protestant.

ROME.—An official publication, printed in 1831, authorised by the Papal Court, declares that twenty-six pictures of the Virgin Mary opened and shut their eyes in 1796 and 1797; & a statue of the Virgin at Torrice, changed color and perspired.

New Arrangement in the Hardware Business.

HENRY BUSH and GEORGE BUTLER have formed a connection in business which will be carried on under the firm of Bush & Butler at the old stand of H. Bush, where they are now receiving their spring importation of Hardware, Cutlery, Saddlery, Fancy Goods &c. direct from the Manufacturies in England together with a general assortment of American goods in their line, which they offer for sale at wholesale & retail on as good terms as any house in America. Their stock being very heavy, and patterns new, we hope to receive a share of public patronage;

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON REVIVALS. NO. XXXI.

"I know I am wrong, but I cannot help it."

This excuse is in the mouth of thousands. Its baneful influence produces incalculable evil. From the little child, that can only lisp its plea, to the aged sinner, whose head has blossomed for the grave, all are naturally ready to justify their delinquencies. The stupid and the anxious sinner, the cold and the unconverted professor, are alike ready to justify their fault, by saying, I know that it is wrong, but could not help it.—Those who make this excuse are far from any thorough examination into its propriety and influence. For the benefit of such I would suggest a few considerations.

1. This plea is a full denial of the very first principles of moral obligation.

It is equally the dictate of the Bible, and of common sense, that a man is not under obligation to do what he cannot do—that he is not worthy of censure for neglecting what he knows he has no ability to perform. Our moral obligation is commensurate with our ability. We are under obligation to do that only which we have power to do. It is then an utter absurdity, a contradiction in terms, to say that we are blameworthy, for a thing and still cannot help it—have not power to avoid that which deserves the blame. The plea, then, strikes at the very root, at the first principles of moral obligation—principles so plain and self-evident, that the little child that just begins to lisp his excuse, can read them as they are written on his own heart. Take away from the doctrine of moral obligation, this corner stone, that what ought to be done, can be done, and the whole fabric will totter and fall.

2. It charges injustice upon God.

The very plea represents that God has made it the duty of his creatures to do what they cannot do. And we know that it would be totally unjust for any being to require impossibilities of his inferior subjects; still more it would be unjust and tyrannical, to punish him for neglecting to do that, which he could not perform. That parent would be viewed as a tyrant, yea a very monster, who should require of his child, what he knew it could not perform, and then severely punish its neglect. Thus do they foolishly charge God—charge him with injustice, who say, that they are blame-worthy, for that which is beyond their control.

3. It destroys a sense of their guilt.

The very object of the plea is to do away a sense of guilt. So far as we believe that we cannot obey God's commands, just so far we feel absolved from the guilt of our disobedience. This plea, then, so far as its influence extends, operates directly to destroy or to prevent conviction. Hence those persons who offer it are destitute of clear and discriminating views on the evil of sin, and the extent of their own vileness. They may be greatly distressed, and talk much of the number and the aggravations of their sins, and tremble under the forebodings of merited wrath! But still their self-righteous efforts, their hard thoughts which they harbor (sometimes secretly) in their bosoms towards those who press upon them their obligations and guilt, and the dissatisfaction which they feel towards those who enjoy the complacent smiles of their Savior, all prove that they have a good opinion of themselves, prove that they are far from deep and pungent conviction. No man who attends to the operations of his own mind, and with unobscured vision reads the law, written upon his own heart, feels that he is blameworthy for neglecting what he cannot avoid. By preventing conviction, this plea effectually prevents the conversion of the unregenerate, and the returning obedience of the erring people of God.

4. It counteracts the sanctifying influence of God's Word and Spirit.

When sinners are converted, and when believers grow in grace, they act freely, in view of motives, through the influence of the Holy Spirit. The influence of the Holy Spirit in the work of salvation, is adapted to man as a moral agent, and to divine truth as the means through which moral action is produced. It is through this two fold influence that sinners are regenerated. This great moral change is not produced by the truth without the Spirit; nor have we evidence that it is produced by the Spirit, without the Word of God. This is true in regeneration and in progressive holiness. The act of turning from sin to holiness, of transferring the affections from the world to God, is a moral act, an intelligent act, performed through the Spirit in view of the motives which God's Word presents. In this act regeneration takes place. Now the plea of which I am speaking, in its tendency, counteracts directly this influence from the Word and Spirit of God, and opposes this change in the moral agent. No motives, however winning or alarming, can possibly induce a moral agent to attempt what he fully believes is impossible. No man ever forms the resolution, or puts forth the effort to do an impossibility, fully believing it to be so. Such a resolution and effort are impossible in the nature of the case—are utterly incompatible with the very constitution of a moral agent, and with the laws which govern his conduct. The prospect of good to be secured, and the expectation of success are ingredients, without which, motives are powerless. Take away this mainspring of moral action, from motives, and they would produce no more influence on mind than on matter. And this plea, so far as it is believed and cherished does this. Under the influence of such an excuse, the sinner feels that all efforts which he might make to secure his salvation, would be unavailing. And, consequently, he will neither form the purpose, or make the exertion, which are absolutely necessary, which are indispensable, if through the energies of the Holy Spirit, he repents of sin, and embraces the righteousness of Christ.

A. R. A.

IMMEDIATE REPENTANCE.

In support and illustration of the sentiments advanced in our last number respecting the means of bringing sinners to immediate repentance, a case or two of recent occurrence may be adduced. Near the close of a meeting for anxious sinners, the pastor proposed, that all who were willing to submit to God immediately—to accept of the Lord Jesus Christ for their Savior (various expressions being used to prevent misapprehension) should signify it by rising, in order that prayer might be offered with express reference to their condition. After some little time during which the offers of life were made anew, several arose; others who appeared deeply exercised, remaining upon their seats. These latter, as a class, were again addressed; their danger and their remedy again set before them. They were urged to accept salvation as offered in Christ, to give up the service of Satan and enter the service of God. The Holy Spirit was most evidently present. At a moment of slight suspense in the pastor's remarks, impenitent sinners were told by another speaker, that they would never have an occasion to regret their choice if they adopted the resolution proposed. Several immediately arose, and if we may judge converts by their fruits, they with those who arose before them, are now the true followers of Christ.—There is every reason to believe that they deserted the service of Satan, and chose the Lord Jehovah for their God. In another case, when in similar circumstances several had arisen, others were addressed by one who saw as he had never seen before, that sinners while hesitating to give themselves to God—to cast themselves upon the mercy of the Lord Jesus Christ, are most foolishly and wickedly rejecting the only chance of escape from hell, and deliberately preferring death to life. They were reminded how evidently just it would be in God, if they refused the offers then made, to cast them off entirely, as also how much reason there was to fear they would, by a single moment's more resistance of the Holy Spirit grieve Him away forever. The speaker uttered the clear and deep convictions of his own mind, in representing the fault as entirely their own if their souls were unsaved for a single hour. Several of those thus addressed, arose, and are now hopeful converts to Christ.

These cases are not given as at all peculiar, but as tending to establish important facts, which are often practically overlooked. It is evident in the first place, that sinners are to be addressed as reasoning, deliberative beings. They are to be urged to repent—to change their minds (the original meaning of the verb to repent,) just as if the arguments drawn from the word of God, and the facts of their case were sufficient to produce the desired result. These arguments would produce the result, if the truth were believed. In removing their unbelief God alone has the power to work successfully; but his aid may be confidently calculated upon, if sought in the appointed way, while the preacher does all in his power to persuade men to accept the offers of life. It is undoubtedly true that God converts the sinner by the influence of his Spirit, but in what circumstances! While they are not urged by the motives which the Bible presents! Then were preaching a superfluous business. Is it when they are virtually taught that they are under no obligation to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ! Then should the devil himself be the best preacher in the world. He insists upon such points. The Apostle Paul, however, seems to have entreated and besought men to accept the Saviour, as if all depended upon his arguments; still, believing that the power was entirely of God. He does not work against or without means in the conversion of men, but strictly in accordance with such as are appropriate to produce the change of mind called the new birth. These means are of a definite character, and more certain in their results, than is supposed by those who have used only that semblance of them which cold and heartless preachers of the gospel always adopt.

Again: those who have witnessed scenes like those briefly described above, must feel satisfied, that the simple answers given by the Apostles to inquiring sinners, when applied in their true spirit—in language that is intelligible to the sinner, comprehend all that is necessary in the way of counsel to those who are anxious. All counsel that supposes a long process of unregenerate doings before conversion serves to distract the attention from the simple point, that the sinner is a condemned rebel, must submit to God and seek forgiveness through his Son. The preacher must use such preliminary measures as seem calculated to subdue the impenitent heart, not because the sinner can be excused for a moment's delay in coming to Christ, but because his blindness and obstinate self-will can only be removed by the influence of Truth and the Spirit of Truth. A stubborn, disobedient child is required to become quiet and dutiful, and no apology is allowed for a moment's continuance in its rebellion; but still the parent resorts to various artifices, and often consumes much time before an obedient temper is produced. In the case of the impenitent sinner, his business is with the obligation that rests upon him to obey the Gospel of Christ—the minister must proceed in view of the known facts of the case.—Christian Index.

Speech of Rev. Peter Jones, a converted Indian, before the LONDON RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, May 13th, 1831.

The Rev. Peter Jones, (an Indian) of Upper Canada, was next announced. [This intelligent looking young man was habited in the same manner as when we last noticed him. On presenting himself he was loudly cheered. His speech, although marked with a foreign accent, was extremely good as to pronunciation and matter, with, probably, as will be seen rather too much repetition on one or two topics. When speaking he was particularly animated.] "I rejoice, fathers, brothers and sisters, in being permitted to have a place among you, & of turning or looking over in our minds the things for which we have come together in this place to-day. I feel at a great loss to address you, my Christian friends, because I find it very difficult at times to find words to express my meaning. I wish you could all understand the Chippeway language. [A laugh.] I hope you will not look at my broken English but at what I mean. [Approbation.] I do truly rejoice to meet with you on this occasion to talk about the distribution of religious tracts. I have seen some of the benefits of religious tracts in my own country—the wilds of America. I have seen these little light-winged messengers flying among your brethren the white people; and some of them have got among the people of the forest—the red people I mean—my countrymen. I believe that the Great Spirit, through his beloved Son, Jesus Christ is among us. [Cheers.] I feel my heart warm with gratitude towards God, and I am a believer in the Christian faith. Will you permit me to give you a statement of the condition of my brethren in Canada! [Applause.] My friends, allow me to state to you our ideas of worship, our notions of our souls, and of a future state. [Loud approbation.] I have, my Christian brethren, been brought up in the religion of my forefathers. I have been taught after the manners of my Indian countrymen; therefore I can with more readiness detail unto you our forms of worship, with our ideas respecting religion. First, let me tell you with regard to our notions of religion. The Indians all believe there is a heaven made by the Great Spirit, & that the Great Spirit is the Father of all the children of men. We all believe that the Great Spirit made both the white man and the red man, i. e. the Indian; but there is a wide difference from yours in our mode of worshipping the Great Spirit. You worship the Great Spirit through the Lord Jesus Christ, but we worship Him in darkness or superstition; sometimes through the sun, or the moon, or other gods. We have an idea that the Great Spirit will not hurt us, but that there is a wicked spirit—very bad indeed—who does every thing to injure us. We make sacrifices to this wicked spirit in order to keep in friendship with it. We have no idea like yours of heaven or hell, but we believe in a future state. We think that when the sun goes down in the West there our future world is. We do not think that the white man's spirit goes to the same place. We think it goes to a different place. This is the opinion which many of my countrymen have when I attempt to preach unto them the Lord Jesus. [Applause.] They say that the Great Spirit gave us a country different from yours where the sun sets, for our souls to go to when we die. In speaking to my countrymen on this subject, I have frequently told them that they were very much mistaken about their Indian country for souls to inhabit in the West. I have told them that the good book says, that the righteous shall go to heaven and the wicked to hell. I have often told my countrymen that the white man had sailed all over the world, and that he had with his big canoe visited the West, where they thought the souls of the Indians went; [continued approbation.] and that he had never found out such a country. You see then, my Christian friends, how great is the darkness of our minds on the subject. With respect to our civil condition I will now speak, as it may be interesting to know about our modes of life, our dress and our amusements. [Repeated cheers.] The Indian's mode of life for existence is in chasing deer or catching fish out of the great lakes of Canada. O! many times have we been brought to great extremity of hunger.—Sometimes in roving about, as our mode of life is, to arrive at places where there are no deer to be found, nor any fish to be met with: ah! then we get very hungry and some of our people starve to death. [Hear, hear.] Let me tell you what happened once on account of this dreadful suffering of hunger, two or three years ago. But I do not like to mention the circumstances [after a slight hesitation,] yet I believe I must [with great firmness of expression;] I will mention it, for the purpose of showing you to what an extremity we are reduced in those seasons of famine to which, I have alluded. The circumstances happened on our native shores, off the great Lake Huron. A man and his wife were out in the woods and could get nothing to eat. They remained a great many days searching for food, without meeting with any thing to eat. The man at last fell asleep. The woman killed her husband whilst he was sleeping. She killed him for the purpose of eating him. She did it to preserve her own life. After committing this horrible act—for all the Indians abhor such acts as murder—she was obliged to flee away. She went off and was shunned by all who saw her. I myself saw her last winter; she was then an outcast from her fellow-creatures,—she was called by them "Wendegoo," that is, "a man-eater." The Indians thought the deed so wicked that she ought to be left to perish.—I will now state to you something about the dress and amusments of the Pagan Indians. [We regret that he forgot to relate any thing respecting the amusements of his countrymen.] We do not dress as I am now dressed.—[He wore a large blue frock coat, with a sash around his waist.] I think I am dressed too much like a white man. [Laughter, in which he good humoredly joined.] But we dress very fine, in skins and furs, and sometimes paint our faces red. We also wear feathers on our heads, and ear-bobs in our ears. [Continued laughter.] We also put rings into our noses, something in the same manner as your pigs have rings in their noses; [roars of laughter] and being tipped off in this ridiculous manner, we strut about and look very big and are proud of our appearance. Let me ask you, do not you occasionally see your own children fond of dressing themselves out in finery, something in the way I have described! My friends, I am happy to inform you that ignorance which we had of the Lord God is being dissipated. Eight years ago the Lord God brought me to a knowledge of his ways, when I was but an Indian youth. It pleased God to open my eyes—to shew me the path which conducts to everlasting life. He brought me to the foot of the blessed Jesus.—Blessed be God for all his mercies! He has done great things for my countrymen. Ever since that time I rejoice to think that the Lord is spreading abroad the knowledge of his holy Word. Yes, my Christian friends, there are now about 2,000 of my countrymen receiving Christian instruction from the Methodist missionaries, besides many who are taught by members of the church of England. Among the converted Indians you will be rejoiced to hear that there are fifteen schools established for the education of the children of the Indians, and that 450 children, before I left the country, were receiving daily instruction. This, my friends, is a matter of "exceeding great joy" to me. We are now all taught the great truths of the Gospel. There was no book in the Chippewa tongue. There was no written or printed language among us. But since we have found the Great Spirit—the true God—we have tried and succeeded in making books. My brother, an Indian chief, and myself were engaged some time in translating portions of the holy Scripture into the Chippewa tongue, which we accomplished. [Loud cheers.] I have bro't with me what we translated, the Gospel of St. John, to get printed by your Society: [continued approbation] and I hope, if God spares my life, to be able to translate some of those good little tracts which your Society has, and have been printed and distributed among my people. [Loud demonstrations of satisfaction.] My dear friends, since we have the Great Spirit, our hearts are improved and our manners also. We have got into houses which are comfortable to dwell in; we are better clothed and fed than we formerly were; we have cows, oxen, sheep, & hogs to make us comfortable in the world now. [Applause.] But let me tell you that the Indian, wild as many believe him to be, and with justice, is by no means so ignorant as many persons conceive. [A laugh.] We have a Chippewa alphabet, and there is now an Indian newspaper in that tongue printed and circulated amongst them. I will not detain the Meeting with further details. It is delightful to see how we are engaged in this Meeting, in order that the knowledge of God may be spread from one region to another. I hope that the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in this Resolution will be industrious [laughter,] and that they will soon cover the face of the world with the little tracts, "as the waters cover the sea," and that in a future world we shall all meet again in the kingdom of heaven through our Lord Jesus Christ. I thank you for the kind attention you have been pleased to give me. Since George Ryanson sent us these tracts, which first awoke my attention to Christianity, for which my thanks are due, they have done infinite good among our Indians in Canada. I hope that the blessing of God will rest upon this great city, and upon your great and excellent King, [the applause was here so overwhelming, that it was some seconds ere the Rev. speaker could finish his sentence,] and upon all mankind. At the conclusion the approbation was loud and long. It was perfectly obvious that a powerful impression had been made by the simple and excellent speech of this gifted young convert to Christianity.

The resolution was here put and unanimously carried.

BIBLE CAUSE.

GERMANY & SWITZERLAND.

"I have continued to distribute this invaluable seed of life, wherever the Lord was pleased to give me an opening, among the poor: and I hope that a day will come when many a saved soul shall own the blessing which has thus been bestowed upon them by the liberality of your society. A considerable number of New Testaments have been distributed among the Catholic inhabitants of the neighboring villages of Alsace; fifty copies have been distributed by a Catholic priest in the Grand Duchy of Baden; and others have been sent to different villages near the Black Forest, where I am happy to hear that their distribution has also been acknowledged and rendered more effective by a priest. Some copies have been given to the poor in Altorf, Canton, Uri; and others have found their way up into the fields of ice and snow on the Mountain Grimsel, where I have met with a very pious man belonging to the inhabitants of the Hospital, in which they are stationed to save the lives of travellers who often lose their way in the immense snow that covers the top of that mountain. This man who comes once a year to Basle to gather contributions for the support of that benevolent establishment, last year brought me the agreeable news that the Catholic inhabitants of the villages in the neighboring valleys have a great desire after the word of God, which is very scarce amongst them. I consequently gave him six copies of the New Testament, and three Bibles, for distribution. He was with me this moment, on his this year's journey. Paying out his own pocket 4 francs, which was all he in his poverty could afford, he expressed, in the most heartfelt language, and with tears in their eyes, the joy and gratitude of his poor neighbors, whose simple faith in their Lord and Saviour has thus been strengthened. I again supplied him with 4 Bibles & New Testaments.

A great part of the Bibles & New Testaments have been distributed among the Baptists in the Canton of Bern; others among the reformed churches in the Canton of Argovia; others again in the Grand Duchy of Baden; and some have been sent to Wurtemburg and Bavaria, where I found several villages both Protestant and Catholic, the inhabitants of which were not able to buy, but still very desirous of reading the word of God. One thing that often strikes me, is a great desire among the Catholics to possess the whole Bible; and even the name of Luther, inserted in the title-page of your Bibles printed at Frankfort, does not prevent them from taking it, as long as they forget or avoid consulting their priests."

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

From the Subbath School Instructer.

Extract from the Journal of the General Agent of the Maine Sabbath School Union.

After I had addressed the people in——, Elder B— arose, and gave his testimony in favor of Sabbath schools, with an eloquence which, I doubt not, thrilled the bosom of every hearer. On closing his remarks he said, "My dear hearers, one of the greatest discouragements which I feel in the way of my continuance among you, is, the little interest manifested in the Sabbath School. There ought, and might be, at least three times as many scholars in this Sabbath school as there are now. I feel determined myself to make increased efforts to enlarge this school, and I do cherish the hope of succeeding. The want of a library has hitherto been a great obstacle in the way of our success. But this obstacle shall no longer exist. A library you must have—and a library you shall have, if I have to purchase it with money from my own pocket." I saw the tear start in many an eye, for they are a very benevolent people, but are feeble and few.—Now that minister receives from his people, only two hundred dollars a year. Besides this, he obtains about as much more by teaching a small school, and by other personal efforts. Out of this four hundred dollars, last year, he gave away to various objects of benevolence about one half, i. e. the whole of his salary. He now says, his ministerial labours have so increased that he must give up his school—and yet, with only two hundred dollars support, as a testimony of the interest he feels in the cause of Sabbath schools, he ventures to say, a library you shall have, if I have to purchase it with money from my own pocket.

This exhibition of deep interest in the good work, really seemed to give a new life to all my energies; and gave to Sabbath schools an importance such as I had seldom felt before.—When looking round upon the greatness of the work, I have some times almost yielded to feelings of discouragement. But if ministers will manifest an interest such as was exhibited in our Baptist brother referred to above, then shall I be encouraged under the direction of the Board, to go forward, nor remit my efforts, till the whole of our great State is brought under the influence of Sabbath school instruction. God grant such a time may be hastened.

CONTRAST THIS WITH THAT.

So strong was the opposition of a certain class of professors in——, that one of the females who had taken a part in the school, said she hardly dared attend while her minister was in town. Think of that, Christians! a professor of religion hardly dared to attend the Sabbath school, while her minister was in town!—What would he who took little children in his arms and blessed them, declaring of such is the kingdom of heaven—say to such a minister as this! What would he who rebuked his disciples when they forbade little children to come to him, say to such a disciple as this! We very much fear, he would rank him with those hypocrites of whom he once said, ye shut up the kingdom of heaven—for ye neither go in yourselves, nor suffer them that are entering to go in.—Ib.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

DUTY NEGLECTED.

I once visited a Sabbath school and was requested to take the place of an absent teacher. After their lessons were recited, I commenced an explanation of the lesson, when two or three of the scholars smiled, and one of them said "Our teacher never says any thing to us after we have recited our lesson." Can it be possible, thought I, that a teacher is so unfaithful as to neglect this important, and I may add, his whole duty! For if a teacher does not feel so deep an interest in his children's eternal well-being, as to warn them faithfully to flee from the wrath to come, it must also be true that he never brings them before his heavenly Father, to agonize for them in secret. At the last great day, if any of these dear children are lost, in whose skirts will the blood of their souls be found! Unfaithful teacher, what is your answer! IIII.

CAYUGA CREEK SABBATH SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Sabbath School Society of Cayuga Creek, was held on the 4th inst. when an address was delivered by John C. Lord, Esq. of Buffalo, before a large assembly of citizens, and friends of the society, and rising 200 youth and children belonging to the schools. From the annual report, it appears that there are five schools under the care of the society, with five Superintendents, and thirty Teachers. The condition and prospects of the schools, were never more encouraging, than at present.

The following resolutions among others, were passed:—

Resolved, That the thanks of this Society be presented to J. C. Lord, Esq. for the interesting and appropriate address delivered on this occasion.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Society be presented to the Superintendents and Teachers of the respective schools, for their unwearied diligence and exertions the past year, in promoting the benevolent objects of the Society.—Buffalo Patriot.

REVIVALS.

From the Episcopal Recorder.

Your pages have been enriched by accounts of the revivals of religion, with which God has been so abundantly blessing our country during the past six months. It must be peculiarly gratifying to your readers, to find that so many of our Episcopal churches have been favored with these seasons of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." To the number already named in the Recorder, may be added that of St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, under the pastoral care of the Rev. Dr. Henshaw. About six months ago, a deep solemnity of feeling, and an increasing spirit of prayer on the part of many of our pious people, together with an enlarged number of attendants on the religious meetings held in the lecture room, gave ground for encouraging hope that the Lord was about to make in the midst of us some glorious displays of his saving mercy. Here and there, one and another was found in the congregation, awakened to a sense of the evil of sin, and disposed to prosecute to an immediate and successful issue, the great inquiry, "What must I do to be saved!" From week to week, the religious meetings became more solemn and interesting—the number of inquirers gradually increased, till very many became deeply interested in the concerns of eternity, and every day brought to the knowledge of the Rector, several individuals burdened with a conviction of guilt, or rejoicing in the hope of pardon. As the fruits of this revival, eighty have already been added to the communion of the church; many others are candidates for the same privilege; and many more are still anxiously seeking for the way of life. In the judgment of charity, one hundred, at the least, in this congregation, have been brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, within the last six months. The means which have been most signally owned and blessed of God, are frequent and pointed appeals to professings Christans, in reference to their solemn obligations and deep responsibility as "lights of the world," and "the salt of the earth." Pastoral visitation from house to house, in which the paramount claims of religion have been faithfully pressed home upon the hearts and consciences of individuals—the exhibition of the great principles of evangelical truth—such as man's ruin by sin—his enmity against God—justification by grace through faith—conversion—the personal responsibility of the sinner, and his guilt in remaining unconverted. The necessity of immediate repentance & submission—the ability and willingness of Christ to save, and God's readiness to give the Holy Spirit to all who ask him. No extra means were resorted to, until they were manifestly called for by the spiritual condition of the people. Among these, were union meetings, held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and the evenings of Communion Sundays, in the lecture rooms of St. Peter's and Christ churches alternately, and attended by the Rectors of both churches: these were highly esteemed by the serious people of both congregations, delightful to the Pastors, and eminently beneficial to the crowded audiences that attended them.

An Association was held late in May, attended by the Rev. Dr. Bedell, and the Rev. Mr. Tyng of Philadelphia, and Rev. Mr. Osgood of Virginia. Large and deeply anxious were the congregations that attended morning, afternoon and evening; the gospel was preached amidst the effusions of the Holy Ghost, and the "arm of the Lord was revealed" in the conviction and conversion of sinners. For a considerable time before the Association, meetings for prayer had been held at six o'clock on Sunday mornings, but during the Associations, such meetings were held every morning, and have been so continued ever since; they have been attended by large numbers, and manifestly crowned with the Divine blessing. In addition to these, there have been a few inquiry meetings, and as a substitute for them, found, upon experiment, to be more satisfactory to himself and the people, the Rector has appointed stated times every week, when he would be at home to receive the visits of persons desirous of conversing with him on the subject of religion. The influence of this revival, though chiefly exhibited among the youth of both sexes, has not been confined to any particular class, but has been felt by the rich and the poor, the old and the young, the learned and the illiterate. In several instances, husbands and wives, parents and children, have wept and rejoiced together; and in some, whole families have, to a greater or less extent, become the subjects of its power. In no instance have the religious meetings been protracted beyond their ordinary length, nor has there been any irregularity or censurable excitement; but "all things have been done decently and in order."

Let us fervently pray that Almighty God would "send down upon all our Bishops and other ministers, and the congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of his grace, and that they may truly please Him, pour upon them the continual dew of his blessing."

Baltimore, July 4, 1831.

From the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR—I was much interested in the communication of your correspondent "S." last week, touching the case of several professedly christian families, which remained unaffected during a powerful work of grace, in a town alluded to, without name. That the ill-timed scrupulosity, and continued unbelief of such parents, should shut out the blessing from their own habitation, was naturally to have been expected; nor is it wonderful, that amid the general prostration of opposition at such a time, the children of such parents should have been the only open opposers to the work.

Sir, this tells loudly upon the side of truth, of zeal, and of ardent love to God and man. The facts set forth by your correspondent are not solitary. Such things have been too often witnessed. They show the influence which parents have upon their children; especially parents, who, while they profess to believe in the same covenant which was made with Abraham, and for his seed after him, practically set that covenant aside, as of no value.

Such facts, also, go far, at least in my opinion, to show how God regards the conduct of his professing people, in those seasons when he makes them a special visit from heaven.—His conduct towards them, shows how he regards the views and feelings, of worldly professors, who are afraid of ardent zeal, and great efforts, in behalf of perishing souls. He seems to send his withering blast upon those who are so ready to resist the Holy Ghost, and to set up the cry of enthusiasm, where he has come down to work in an extraordinary manner. I say extraordinary; yet I do not suppose such glorious displays of his saving mercy would be extraordinary, if Christians were heartily willing that he should thus work, and were truly prepared to work with him, as humble, obedient instruments.

Concerning the unconverted, opposing children of such parents, the writer asks who will be guilty of their blood? Truly, who will?—who will answer for it, if they are finally lost? Can such parents take refuge behind a broken covenant? Oh, ye luke warm, fault-finding, worldly professors, who are afraid that the ark of God will move on too rapidly; afraid that souls will be converted too soon; who will answer for your childrens blood, if they are lost as many others have been, because their parents were afraid that they should be too hastily converted! Are you willing to run this dreadful risk? Dare you say that the charriot of salvation rolls onward too fast, when God says, by Providence no less than his word, "O, fools, and slow of heart to believe!"

God says, through the mouth of a prophet, "Behold, I work a work in your day—a work which ye will in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." An apostle has applied this to worldly superficial, opposing pretenders of religion, and in view of it, I tremble to think that he said, "Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and perish!"

Now let me affectionately plead with such professors, to beware, lest both they and their children, finally perish together; for though children shall not die for the sins of their fathers, yet the parents sins may occasion the sin and death of the children. The drunkard for example, may teach his children to become drunkards, and lead them down to hell; the infidel may lead his children to become unbelievers, till they fall with him into the pit; the hypocrite may, in like manner, shut his children out of heaven; and the cold hearted Christian may do his incalculable mischief, if not ruin them.

Parents may also assume a responsibility for themselves and their children, which will last for ages. When Pilate wanted to know what he should do with Jesus, the scribes, and priests, and people said—"His blood be on us, and our children." God took them at their word. The curse remains till this day.

Let the lukewarm, misguided professor beware. Let him take warning, lest he be found at the last day, on the left hand, and his children with him. If God pass by the children now, with his converting mercy, he may do it again, and again—he may do it forever,

Three Days Meetings in New Hampshire.—The Concord Observer of July 2, says: "We are informed that during the last week, 3 days meetings have been holden in Hillsborough, Amherst, Warner, Chester, Nelson, Gilmanton and Goffstown."

In Hillsborough, the meeting was interesting and solemn.

In Warner, we understand fifty or more appeared as inquirers, and desired the prayers of the church.

In Amherst, it was a season of great solemnity which pervaded the whole assembly. The state of religion in this town is truly encouraging.

From Chester and Nelson we have heard nothing further than that the meetings were well attended and peculiarly interesting.

In Gilmanton the meeting was highly interesting and affecting to all present. Before its close many were inquiring with deep solicitude, what they should do to be saved. A considerable number have since expressed a hope that they have passed from death unto life.

At Goffstown, the meeting commenced on Thursday The concourse of people was immense; the meeting-house was filled to overflowing. Ten or twelve ministers attended, whose labors were appropriate & signally bless'd. Many were awakened, and some appeared deeply convicted of their danger while remaining impenitent, and others expressed a hope of pardon previous to the close of the meeting.

Weathersfield, Vt.—A revival has commenced in Weathersfield, Vt. At present it is chiefly among the youth, tho' not confined to them. At an inquiry meeting held on Saturday the 2d inst., 60 attended. We learn since, that 25 express hopes of being renewed. This revival it is thought, owes its origin to the influence of the protracted meeting held at Windsor, in the early part of June. Rev. Mr. Converse related to us a fact concerning the church in Weathersfield worthy to be known. In 1810 there was a revival in which 44 heads of families were added to his church. In 1820, ten years after, another revival was enjoyed, when 50 of the children of those heads of families, the fruits of the preceding revival, were added to the church.—That the revival now so happily commenced after the end of another ten years, may become general, as those were, is greatly to be desired. Will not Christians in this vicinity pray specifically for this church, that the work of grace may be perfected!—Vt. Chron.

Middlesex, Vt.—Rev. E. B. Baxter, writes to the Editor of the Chronicle, July 2, that the revival heretofore noticed is still progressing, and spreading into other towns, especially Moretown, where there has just been a four days meeting, well attended, and evidently useful.—There have been some conversions in Waitsfield and Waterbury; and finally, we do hope that the spirit of inquiry is becoming more general through this county. Pray for this county, especially Montpelier. I understand there are indications of better days there." More than 20, connected with the Sabbath school in Middlesex, have lately indulged hope; and all the teachers, and all the scholars over nine years of age, either indulge hope, or are anxious. The whole number of those who have lately indulged hope in Mr. Baxter's congregation is from 50 to 80, most of whom reside in the village.—ib.

The revival in New Britain, Ct. is chiefly in the Sunday school, which embraces about 300 young persons.—In Marshfield, N. Y. a revival has commenced.—On the second day of a late protracted meeting at Bennington, Vt. about 150 took the anxious seat. The meeting continued nine days or more. In New Haven, Vt. 80 persons have united with the Congregational church since Nov. last, and the revival still continues.

At a late four days meeting at Albia Village, N. Y., business was suspended in the factories, that the workmen, from 150 to 200, might attend.—Within a few weeks, 190 persons have been added to the first Baptist church in Richmond, and more than 100 to the Baptist churches in Powhatan and Cumberland counties, Va. —A letter to the editor of Connecticut Observer from Lewis county, N. Y. says:—the work is very great and marvellous in this and Jefferson county, and beginning to spread with very hopeful prospects in St. Lawrence county.

Augusta.—We learn that the protracted meeting held at this place, a few days ago, was attended with the most desirable results. The work of grace moves onward with power. The subjects have not been enumerated. —West. Rec.

Penn Yan, N. Y.—A correspondent at Penn Yan, says,

"The revival in this place is not so powerful as it was last winter. Professing Christians are not so much engaged as they were, we of course cannot expect conversions. We had on the last Sabbath another addition to the church, making the whole number added for the last 3 months, 105, besides a number of other hopeful converts. A year ago, the most influential men were very hostile to the Presbyterian church, now many of them are members, and others friendly to the church.—Rel. Int.

Danbury, Conn.—A letter to the editor of the N. Y. Obs. says:

"A pleasing revival has been in progress for several weeks past in this place. The number who have expressed hopes of having passed from death unto life is more than 60. We hope there are many others who are yet to be brought into the kingdom of Christ. In Bethel also, a parish in the town of Danbury, a very interesting work of grace is now in progress. The number is not less than 60 or 70 who have expressed hope. Perhaps it may be proper to state that the revival in both places commenced during protracted meetings of three or four days.

In various places in New Hampshire, God is accomplishing his purposes of mercy in awakening and renewing sinners. In Gilmanton, Sanbornton, Dover and Somersworth in the county of Stratford. A friend recently from Gilmanton Corner, informs us that the revival in that place is rapidly advancing—that thirty or more, express a hope of having experienced renewing grace; and a large number, in different parts of the town, is under serious impressions. In Francestown, Dunbarton, Goffstown, Peterborough, Henniker, Amherst, Mont Vernon and Hillsborough.—In Plymouth, Haverhill and many other places, in the county of Grafton, is a special work of grace. In Plymouth, we are informed, the work is more powerful than was ever known in that region. It embraces all ages, characters and degrees of men—and some of the first respectability, talents and influence, are so warmly engaged in the cause of the Saviour, that they go from house to house, and ride from town to town, to warn and admonish sinners, and persuade them to become reconciled to God. This is one of the few towns in our country from which the soul-destroying monster,–ARDENT spirit—has been banished! Have we not reason to believe that similar results would follow the abolition of this infernal spirit from other towns where its ravages are yet unstayed!

It may be justly remarked, that in no revival that has taken place in this country, has there been so many men of all classes, of licentious principles, and such a large number of gentlemen of first rate education, and high standing in society, been called into the kingdom of Christ. All this goes to prove that it is not the effect of imagination, nor of the excitement of the passions, but the pure work of the holy Spirit.—N. H. Obs.

DAYS OF PENTECOST.

Would it be extravagant or impracticable to expect the conversion now of three thousand souls in a day? Was there any thing miraculous or peculiar in the multitude of conversions on the day of Pentecost, so that we are never to witness such an exhibition of divine power again?

Having given considerable attention to this subject, I am fixed in the most sanguine belief, that Christians ought now to pray for and expect the return of such pentecostal seasons; and that to expect the conversion of thousands in a day, in one place, is in perfect accordance with the promises of God, the known operations of the Holy Spirit, and the indications of Providence. The conversion of three thousand at Jerusalem was effected by the same process as the conviction of sinners now. Christians are not straitened in God,—his hand is not shortened that it cannot save; they are encouraged to pray for and expect the most extensive blessings. And surely, if by their prayers and exertions, and the preaching of the gospel, one sinner may be turned from the error of his way, why not two, ten, fifty, or a thousand, by the same means and at the same time! The recent and extensive revivals in our country present us the well attested fact, that five, twenty, or even sixty have given decided and satisfactory evidence of conversion in a day; and when the means shall be understood and more directly applied, and ministers and christians shall be more thoroughly imbued with the spirit of their master, we may confidently expect not only fifty, but thousands of conversions occurring nearly at the same time.

In "Flemming's Fulfilment of Scripture," a book that may be studied with great profit at the present time,—we have an account of a prayer meeting at the Kirk of Scots in Scotland, June, 1630, at which in one night, one hundred and twenty souls were brought to repentance; and the next day, under the preaching of one sermon, by Mr. Livingstone, about five hundred more were, in the judgment of charity, savingly converted to God, and evinced the reality and genuineness of their change by their subsequent lives.

Why may not the preaching of the gospel be attended by such power in our day? Surely, if there is no obstacle, but the want of faith and zeal, and proper exertion on the part of God's people. One great reason why greater success has not attended their prayers and exertions is, that they have not expected success. They have not acted with a view to an immediate effect, nor believed that immediate and great success was practicable. Ministers have preached, and christians prayed under a slight impression that at some future time, something good might be the result. Having no expectancy of immediate success, their efforts have been feeble and heartless, and the world has proceeded in its downward course with increasing velocity.

The time has been when, if the question were asked of the Christian Minister, what is your object in going to the house of God to day? the answer would be,—why, to preach a sermon.—Well, what good do you expect will be accomplished! Why, to prove an important doctrine, —to settle some disputed point,—to exhibit a harmonious system of orthodoxy; and perhaps, at some future time, God may make use of it for the good of some of the congregation. Ah, "the hungry sheep look up and are not fed."—The great secret of a successful ministry is, aside from personal piety and pulpit qualifications, to preach with fixed determination to convert and save sinners,—and special effort to fasten the truth on their consciences and bring them to an immediate decision,—accompanied with fervent prayer that is offered with unhesitating expectation of immediate success.

TEMPERANCE.

From the Connecticut Observer.

ERROR CORRECTED.

Mr. Editor—I have resolved to improve a few spare moments in exposing an error, which I was not aware, until a few days since, had an existence among the intelligent friends of total abstinence from spirituous liquors.

Conversing with a very intelligent gentleman, who has long been one of the foremost in the Temperance cause, he incidentally alluded to what he supposed to be an obvious fact, that all vegetable substances contain spirit.. I was surprised at his ignorance on this subject; and his surprise was equally great on being shown his error.

In an extract from Dr. Belknaps address to the inhabitants of New-Hampshire, found in the American Preceptor, a book which many of us, (and among the rest, the gentleman alluded to,) have read over and over at school, it is said that "Nature has indeed furnished her vegetable productions with spirit; but she has so combined it with other substances, that, unless her work be tortured by fire the spirit is not separated, and cannot prove pernicious," &c.

From this passage I imbibed the impression, while a school-boy, that rye, wheat, corn, apples molasses, and other substances of the vegetable kind, contained spirits. But every one who has only a smattering in chemistry knows better. And though, from some cause or other, you will find the sentiment exceedingly prevalent among the mass of the community, even now, yet I had hoped it was chiefly rejected by the advocates of the Temperance cause.

I am not aware, Sir, that many friends of Temperance in this region still retain so fundamental an error. If so, however, I deem it important to the success of our cause that it be removed. So long as the community suppose that the substances whence spirits is obtained naturally contain it, they will not distinguish between the supposed use of it in bread and other articles of food, and the same amount mixed with water in the form of drink.

Let it however be distinctly understood by every man, woman and child in the country, that strictly speaking, the Author of nature has made no spirit; that it is formed from other substances by the ingenuity of man—prompted, perhaps by the suggestion of Satan; that it is formed moreover from some of the most nutritious vegetable principles in nature—and formed by the destruction or annihilation of those substances.

If 50,000,000 gallons of spirit are consumed in the United States in a year, the vegetable substance which was destroyed to make it, would have sustained in comfort nearly a million of human beings a year, while the whole 50,000,000 gallons of spirit do not contain one single particle of nutritious matter.

Let these facts, I say, be dwelt upon and illustrated till they are clearly understood by every individual, and they would do much for the Temperance cause. Let it be clearly seen, that it is necessary to the existence of Alcohol, that sugar, or the saccharine principles be changed by a chemical process; or that starch be changed into sugar, and then the sugar into alcohol. Without these changes from nutritious to innutritious matter, we can have no alcohol in any form, either in its pure state, or mixed with other drinks.

E.

An Experiment.—Not far from the year 1796, a brig from Russia laden with iron, ran aground upon a sand-bar that makes off from Newport, R. I.

The master was disposed to unlade and get her off; but the weather was extremely cold, and none could be found to undertake the task, as the vessel was at a distance from the shore, covered with ice, exposed to the full effect of wind and cold.

Capt. G——, a packet-master at Newport, respected for his integrity and who abstained from the use of spirits, at length engaged to unload the brig and procure his own hands. Six men were employed in the hold, which, (the vessel being bilged,) was full of water. They began the work with free, but temperate use of spirits; thinking they should need it then if ever. But after two hours labor, they all gave out chilled through. After refreshing and warming, they made a second attempt, using cider only the remainder of the day. They now succeeded better, but still they suffered much from cold.—The second day they consented to follow the directions of Capt. G., and drank nothing but milk porridge made rich and taken as hot as the stomach would bear it. The weather was equally severe as before, but they were now able to continue their work for seven hours at a time, and then came up as Capt. G. expressed it, smoking hot." With this simple beverage handed around every half hour, they continued their work from day to day, without one single drop of spirits, till the iron was all handed out, and brought to shore and not a man had a finger frozen.—Journ of Com.

TEMPERANCE AND REVIVALS.

Mr. Editor;—If the following will contribute to advance the cause in which you are laboring they are at your disposal:

In the town of B.——, Ct. a revival commenced some time in April last, and was quite powerful, numbering upwards of a hundred hopeful conversions, and still continues. I had the pleasure of spending about four weeks there in May last, and was permitted to participate in the delightful refreshing. In looking at the subjects who had joined the Temperance Society were included in the number, though some others were brought in who had not joined the society.

One fact was particularly interesting; viz. that, of a Young People's Temperance Society formed last fall, all but one, (except one or two very small children,) were hopefully converted.

Another fact occurred, of which I was witness. A young man, who had been thought in danger from intemperance, was solicited one morning as he was on his way, leaving the place, to give his pledge for total abstinence. He complied and signed the constitution by the way side;—was providentially detained from leaving the place that day;—attended a meeting in the evening where he became a subject of conviction;—and in four or five days was hopefully converted. In view of this circumstance, I could not help remarking to myself the connexion between temperance and the operation of the Holy Spirit; and how true it is, that rational men will act rationally; and when, in full possession of all their faculties, will attend to their most important concerns the first thing.

There were some cases, in the same place, illustrating the connexion between temperance and the work of the Spirit. Three cases were known in which persons of intemperate habits were awakened, and stifled their convictions with rum.

Another individual (a female) of like habits, was awakened,—attended meeting in great distress of mind,—went to the store of a professor of religion, after meeting, and bought rum; and, from the quiet which inebriation occasioned, indulged a hope! I leave every serious mind to make its own reflections.

TEMPERANCE HOUSES.

I think I have seen in the columns of the Journal, an occasional enumeration of such temperance houses as have been heard of. My object in this communication is to send a list of such houses, extracted from the Temperance Advertiser of Sandy Hill, N. Y., to which list I have an addition to make, and I wish to add a remark upon the subject.

To establish a good hotel, requires a considerable advance of capital. Temperance houses have had to struggle with opposition in many, perhaps most places, where they have been established. Hence it is a matter of considerable risk to set one up; to a man of capital it may be a very heavy loss; and a poor man may in the attempt be ruined by his public spirit.

But, for the majority of travellers who are decent, and quiet, and commonly genteel people, a temperance house has great attractions. Such persons seek for rest, for quiet, for comfort, and safety; and all these are more likely to be found where spirituous liquors are unknown. There is therefore an opposition between the interest of the traveller, and the real or supposed interest of the persons about him. He desires to find a temperance house; and I have known, in at least one or two large towns, a combination of stage drivers and others, probably instigated by some of the other hotels, to keep passengers from the temperance house. But though the local opposition will be considerable, yet experience proves, so far as I have heard, that the temperance houses are well sustained from the travelling public. I know at least one instance. One of the houses in the list annexed was wholly deserted by the town boarders and custom, as soon as it adopted the motto of temperance; but it is well sustained by travellers merely.

The individuals who risk their property and living in such a cause, deserve all the support we can give them.

My suggestion is, that there should be published from time to time in the Journal, a regular series of the temperance houses on each of the great routes in the country. It should be published when travelling on the respective routes is most frequent. When a person expecting to take any such journey, sees a list, he may copy it or cut it out, or keep the paper.—He can then order the stage where to drive to, without being baffled by the driver, pretending that he does not know which is the temperance house. In this way our temperance houses may be sustained; and I hardly know any measure more likely than that, to give tone and stability to the cause,

Let me remark, that in obtaining the names of houses great care should be taken to know their character, and to avoid imposition. I do not know all the houses in the list below, but have no doubt that all are respectable. But I know several of those in the larger towns, and say without hesitation, that they are among the most convenient, comfortable, best furnished and kept, and most respectable hotels in the country.

JUDGING FROM EXPERIENCE.

I have observed Mr. Editor, that the great cause, of which your Journal is so great an advocate is not unfrequently injured by the injudicious deportment of its most zealous advocates. Intemperate zeal in every cause is to be deprecated; and not the least so in this. We need here the countenance of such men, as are not apt to be influenced by declamation or denunciations—such as are looking for reasons—such as call themselves, and, in the common import of the term, are temperate drinkers. An instance of the judicious and successful efforts of a friend of temperance came to my knowledge within the year past which pleased me much.

A. & B. have been neighbors and friends for more than thirty years. They are both farmers. A. had joined the T. S.; B. continued the use of intoxicating liquors in such quantities as he honestly believed his health required. As they met one day, the following conversation, in substance passed between them.

A.—I am glad to meet you, Mr.——, as I have an opportunity of soliciting your attention to a subject, which I deem of great importance for the promotion of temperance has done something for the cause; but we greatly need the influence of more of our respectable citizens.

B.—I am glad that you are in any degree successful. I hope you will banish intemperance from the town.—I cannot think with you, however, that total abstinence is a duty.—In my own case I am convinced that my health is benefitted by a temperate use of ardent spirit; at least, I am made comfortable by it,—and therefore get through my hard labor more cheerfully.

A.—But how are you convinced of this?

B.—I am convinced of it by forty years experience.

A.—If you had tried total abstinence for half that time, are you sure that you might not have come to a different conclusion?

B.—My experience day by day, is enough to convince me that I am benefitted. I am troubled in the morning, particularly in the Spring, with a sensation of "sinking and heat" at my stomach. One half a glass of bitters, which is my usual quantity, entirely removes that, and gives me an appetite for my breakfast. At 11 o,clock, I take a glass of spirit; and before I set down to my dinner, I take half a glass to give me an appetite. At four P. M. I take another glass, & after my days work is done, if I am very tired, I take a little more. Such has been my practice of using without abusing for forty years, and as I am now about seventy, I am contented to go through, without trying any new experiments.

A.—I am sorry to hear you say so—for, setting aside the duty of making a little sacrifice for the good of others, I was going to recommend an experiment to you for your own personal comfort—I was going to ask you to try total abstinence for six months. I think I should be willing to put that short period against your forty years.

B.—It may be so—But as I am satisfied with the course which I have so long pursued, I must decline your invitation, at this late day, to enter upon a new one.

Thus these neighbors separated, with their mutual esteem probably increased by this candid and temperate conversation. Nothing more passed between them on the subject, until the term proposed by A. had expired, and they met again, and B. referring to their previous interview, said, "I was gratified by the manner of your conversation; and on reflection I saw nothing unreasonable in your proposition. I commenced the experiment; six months have passed, and I am ready to tell you the result:—I have uniformly, a better appetite, better spirits, better health. I can do more in a day; I can endure greater fatigue; and, in short, I am convinced that the spirit which I drank was the cause, and not as I then supposed, the remedy, of the evils to which I was subject."

He joined the T. S. and is one of its most worthy and substantial members.

INFLUENCE OF CATHOLICISM AND PROTESTANTISM COMPARED.

The principles developed in our revolution, and in the forms of our national government, resulted from a train of causes that had operated for ages before the settlement of this country. These causes are to be found in the elements of the Saxon character, called into action, and matured by the Protestant reformation. To the leaders of that reformation the world is indebted for all the liberty, civil and religious, that has existed in modern ages. A distinguished philosopher said, "Loyola would have governed the world but for Luther and Calvin." Let any man look at the Catholic countries, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and South America, where the human mind has stood still, if it has not gone backward, for centuries. Then let him look at the Protestant countries, Britain, Holland, and the United States, in which the progress of intellectual and civil improvement has been more rapid than the world has ever witnessed in the same period; and then let him tell,—I do not say as a christian, let him tell as a philosopher, as a statesman,—what has made this mighty difference in the national character. There is but one answer. In Catholic countries, men are so held in bondage, by a dire system of superstition and arbitrary power, as scarcely to know that they have souls. In Protestant countries the Bible has taught them that hey have souls; that they have rights of opinon, rights of conscience; that no human authority is obligatory if it contravenes the authority of Heaven: that rulers exist for the people, not the people for rulers. The foundations of our republic were laid by men trained in the school of the Bible. Men whose spirit of liberty, no sanguinary laws, no terrors of the prison or the stake could extinguish. The sword of power might hew them in pieces, but could not subdue them. Death or exile they could endure for their principles, but they could not abandon their principles. Such were the men from whom we are descended. Had the puritan ancestors of New England landed on the shores of South America, and with their light, and inflexible love of liberty planted republics there, what communities would inhabit those fair regions, blessed with civil and religious liberty, with the light of Bibles, and revivals, and Sabbath Schools, instead of the ignorance, and anarchy, and bloody violence with which they are overwhelmed! God be praised that our national institutions have been reared on foundations laid in faith and prayer; by a patriotism enlightened and exalted by the sacred Scriptures. Wo to us, if in our madness we prove recreant to the principles of such fathers!—Dr. Porter's Sermon.

IRELAND.

Mallow. "Rev. Mr. Owen, for whom I preached last evening, conducted me through the town of Mallow. It contains about 8,000 in habitants, 7,000 of whom are Romans, and was formerly one of the finest villages in the island. It was much resorted to by invalids on account of a spring, which was in repute for scrofulous and consumptive cases, but the visitors are not now numerous.—In the suburbs of the town I was shown a holy well, called Tubber Ruthine, or well of Little Ruth, much frequented by Catholics for the cure of diseases.—It was simply a spring of lime-stone water, in the midst of a grove of small trees and bushes, and in which I at least could neither discover nor imagine any peculiar virtue. Still the branches on every side were decorated with thousands and hundreds of thousands of dirty rags and strings, of every colour, left as mementoes by those who had enjoyed its benefits. I took the liberty of cutting off a twig with a score or two of rags as a present for some of my Virginia friends. A gentleman remarked that were I to carry that twig exposed through the town, my life might be in danger. I could hardly believe him; however I thought it was well to deposit the precious relic in my hat.

INTERESTING FROM FRANCE.

We are much indebted to the friend who has allowed us to copy the following interesting extract from a letter written by an American gentleman in Paris, dated April 16, 1831:

I am indebted to you, for the means of becoming acquainted with the wife of Baron, P. a member of the Chamber of Deputies. To her I might add a sister of the Vice President of that body; also the Dutchess of Broglie and the Countess San A. whose husband is now the Ambassador at Rome and several others. And I should say of them, that they are a group showing what society would be, were it moulded of the principle and the spirit of the Gospel, in its force, and simplicity, and affection, and presented through French manners in the highest rank. But my chief reason for mentioning these names in connection with their standing, is to illustrate a general remark—that truth and religion have gained a position here altogether new, and unanticipated. Various neat chapels have been opened all over the city of Protestant services, which are occupied by different interesting, and efficient ministers, who have come on purpose, and are very well attended. Attached to them, are as many, or more Sunday Schools; and various proofs occur through the city of a remarkable desire for instruction, and religious instruction, too. Every Thursday evening there is a meeting for religious exercises, and remarks from various clergymen present, either at Mr. Wiles, Mr. Waddington's, or Mr. Lutteroth's, and the room is full, and they know not how to separate. The Protestant clergymen of course have enough to do; and they are as a band of brethren. There is a most noble spirit of Marbeuf chapel, Rev. Mr. Lovet of Ireland, having been appointed chaplain there by Lord Rawdon, who has taken it from the hands of Mrs. Way on a lease of four years.

The Anniversaries of this year, are of course peculiarly interesting: indeed I have never attended any so much to my mind. There is more of simplicity, and feeling, and direct business intent, than with us; religion in the United States being injured in its development (if it be made more sure of a first formation,) by its being a creature of education. Indeed all the meetings here, as well as my own private intercourse, remind me of a remark of yours, that you found a mellowness in Christians on this side of the water, such as one does not obtain on the other.

This sketch of the state of things since the late revolution, intends not only a freedom of thinking and acting on religion as on other matters, nor has the advance of Prostestants been confined to external arrangements, and multiplying the means of influence upon the public mind. Actual results have been obtained—an inner work has been going on—and God has taken it into his own hand. I speak of actual conversions; and in some cases a whole family as it were by one operation of the Spirit. In short, comparing the past with the present, I consider it an era in France as strikingly illustrative of the grace of God, as it has been in the United States. And in the latter I am happy to be informed is most wonderful. At a full meeting last Thursday evening, Mr. Wilkes read (translated into French) extracts from the accounts I have received, and they were received with an electric sympathy, and followed by important remarks from various persons And Mr. P. would fain have Mr. Wilkes lay the extracts before the meeting of the Missionary Society yesterday, but the other exercises were too long. To-day a young man has been ordained as a missionary to Africa. What a delightful testimony to the religion of the Gospel! I need not say how dear a part of experience, the oneness of the feelings and movements which belong to it in different climes and ages.

From the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor—I have recently had the privilege of attending a prayer-meeting in an episcopal church, at half past 5, A. M. in the city of Philadelphia. The meeting has been held daily for several weeks and received good attention. The pastor presided and commenced the exercises with prayer; after which, he gave out a hymn, which was sung with much spirit. He then gave a brief account of a revival which was in progress at two episcopal churches, in the city of Baltimore. He mentioned that at an anxious meeting held the morning previous, at half past 9, about sixty attended; and that at an anxious meeting in his own parish, held the evening before, about thirty persons were present. After these remarks, several prayers were offered by members of his church, and by several Presbyterians who were invited to lead our devotions. The prayers were all extemporaneous, and the whole congregation offered them kneeling. The exercises were exceedingly devout, and offered most pleasing evidence that the operations of the Divine Spirit are the same in every denomination of evangelical Christians. Let all believers pray and strive for the furtherance of the gospel, and not fall out by the way, about things that are unessential.—Who cannot discern the signs of the times!

BROTHERLY-LOVE.

Pilgrim's Progress.—"I must express my delight and surprise to see that valuable book put into a Shinghalise dress. The Pundit, who sat with me, a very intelligent and learned man, formerly a heathen priest, often was so affected with the book, that I found it difficult to get him to proceed. The setting off of Christian, and his resolution in leaving the City of Destruction, amused him vastly. When he found that Christian had got into the Slough of Despond, he really felt great sympathy for him; but on his arrival at Mount Sinai, with the interviews which took place between him and Legality, and afterwards with Evangelist, he looked very sad, and said to me, 'Sir, what man can be saved!' I replied, 'Let us go on a little farther:' and when he read that Christian got in at the wicket gate and at the cross, the poor Pundit was so transported with delight, that he laughed, he clapped his hands, and actually shouted and danced for joy; crying out incessantly, 'Delightful, O Delightful!' We may fairly calculate upon this book being made an extensive blessing to this people."

GEORGIA AND THE MISSIONARIES.

In our last we had hardly time to notice the arrest of the Rev. John Thompson, by the Georgia Guard. A few particulars relating to this affair may be interesting.

It appears Mr. Thompson had removed his family to Brainerd previously, before the expiration of the ten days allowed him by Col. Sanford, upon the authority of a letter from the Governor of Georgia, which we published some time since. The health of Mrs. Thompson, and other circumstances made a change of residence, in the view of Mr. T., necessary; while at the same time he intended to pursue his missionary labors, in preaching from place to place. He had commenced his tour for that purpose, and had just arrived at the station in Hightower with an interpreter, to preach to the people there on the following day, when he was arrested. In relating the circumstances of his arrest, we cannot do better than to publish an extract of a letter from Miss Fuller, the teacher of the school at that station, to Mr. Worcester.

Hightower, June 23, 1831.

Rev. S. A. Worcester, New Echota.

Dear Sir,—It falls to my lot to communicate to you a notice of Mr. Thompson's second arrest, together with the circumstances which led to it, so far as they have come under my observation. Last evening about 6 o'clock, Col. Nelson called on me, inquired for Mr. Thompson, and also respecting my situation, and made a single remark respecting the loneliness of it. Mr. Thompson was absent, of course, I told him so. He then remarked that, as he found me here, situated as I am, he should not occupy this house last night, but with much assurance added, We shall occupy it to-morrow night. He further said, "You can go or stay as you please, if you stay you shall be protected." My reply was, "I must stay." "Very well," said he, and again repeated his promise of protection. He then remarked that they considered it their privilege to occupy these places, spoke of being somewhat troubled for forage for their horses, and intimated that what was now growing on these places belonged to them—that nothing of last year's growth would be required, but only the present; for, said he, we consider them as intrusions upon our state. However much I might have felt disposed to remonstrate, I had not sufficient command of my feelings at the moment to permit me to do it. Supposing it must be so if Mr. Thompson did not return before the appointed time, and not being certain that he would, I asked Col. Nelson what part of the House he should occupy! "One room will be sufficient, there are only ten of us, was the answer."—Providentially, however, Mr. Thompson arrived in about an hour after Col. Nelson's call. He felt it to be his plain duty, not positively to yield the possession of this house into Col. Nelson's hand, and accordingly despatched a messenger to him, early this morning; with a letter of which the following is a copy.

Hightower Mission, June 23.

Col. Charles H. Nelson,

Sir.—I have been informed that you design to occupy the Mission house this evening with a detachment of the Georgia Guard. In regard to this subject, I can only say, that we have no the accommodation desirable for the entertainment of yourself and company, and for this and other reasons, you will excuse me in saying that if your design is effected, it will be without my consent.

Permit me to add, that if an interview with me on this or any other subject is desired, it may be obtained at this place, at any time during the course of this day.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient Servant, JOHN THOMPSON.

Both Mr. Thompson and myself were expecting that it would result in his arrest therefore we were prepared to see armed men, (which we did) and to hear one of them say, "you may consider yourself a prisoner, Sir." Mr. Thompson was all ready, and did not detain them five minutes. They told him he would have no use for his horse, so, of course, he walked. They have spent the day at Major Dawson's about two miles distant. Mr. Sanders, who returned with him from Carmel last evening, has been to see him this afternoon. The company are to leave for Head Quarters tomorrow. This is all I can tell you respecting this affair.

They spent the day as the letter states, at Dawson's and were there that night. On the morning Mr. Thompson was marched off in company with five of the guard, and two other prisoners, one a white man, and the other a Cherokee who had been arrested on the charge of digging gold. Mr. Thompson had begged of the Col. the favor of riding his horse, and gave as a reason of asking that favor, his indisposition. The Col. refused, and said he would not depart from his rule; and that if Mr. Thompson was not able to walk, he could have the privilege of riding in the baggage waggon. After walking a few miles, therefore, he was permitted to get into the waggon, in which he rode most of the way except when approaching or leaving their stopping places, when he was required to walk. Having but partly recovered from a recent indisposition; the severe exercise of walking and riding in a rough and uncomfortable waggon brought on an acute head ache, and otherwise rendered him very weak. In this condition he was brought to Mr. Lay's for the night. His indisposition increased. After a while one of the Guard came with three chains for the purpose of fastening the prisoners for the night.—Mr. Thompson requested that as he was unwell he might be permitted to lie down before the chain was put on him. This request was granted, after which a chain was put around one of his ancles. A short time after this the Col. who had taken a different route, arrived, through what orders, we presume, the chains were taken off. The following morning they pursued their journey, and on that day arrived at Camp Gilmer. The prisoners were conducted to the jail in which they were snugly lodged. Mr. Thompson had remained in jail but a few minutes, when the commander of the place, Col. Sanford, went for him and after a short interview told him he was discharged, and that he could go where he pleased.

Thus was Mr. Thompson taken forty or fifty miles from the place where he intended to preach the Gospel to the Cherokees, locked up in a jail, and then discharged with the privilege of walking home, and without an apology from those who had him in captivity. We have been this particular because we think the public and the honor of the state of Georgia are concerned.—We have endeavored to relate the material facts as we obtained them in conversation from Mr. Thompson himself.

Extract of a letter, dated Niles, Michigan Territory, June 20.

"It is reported here, that the Indians to the west of this are holding councils, among themselves, for the purpose of concentrating their forces to attack the Whites. It is also said that they have threatened Chicago, 80 miles west of this. I can hardly think that this report has good foundation. The British have a good many emissaries among them; and there is little doubt in my mind but that they have advised them to this step, if the report be true. A few days ago about 100 Sues from the Mississippi, passed here on their way to Malden, in Upper Canada, to receive their annual presents. The names of the tribes who are concerned I have not heard. The Indians in this vicinity are very peaceable."

Religious Instruction of the Negroes.—In several counties of Georgia, very successful efforts are now made to lead the negroes in the way of life. Masters are engaged in the instruction of their slaves. A letter from Macon, mentions such labors in that vicinity, to the utility of which masters give a willing testimony.

OBSERVER.
THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1831.

RELIGIOUS CELEBRATIONS OF THE FOURTH JULY.

The first celebration of our National Anniversary, that we ever attended where the exercises were entirely of a religious character was at Canandaigua, in 1826. Indeed we do not know but this celebration was the first in which processions, military parades, the burning of powder and toasting, were entirely excluded, and where devout acknowledgements to God for his great goodness in giving us a free government, and in granting us such unparallelled prosperity, were the only exercises of the day. We have since that observed that the number of these celebrations has been rapidly increasing from year to year, until at the last anniversary, they have become so numerous throughout the United States, that we have not attempted to give a list of them. Indeed it would be almost impracticable. We mention this as it might appear strange that we have omitted such notices.

We of course include in religious celebrations, those where Sabbath Schools meet in honor of the day. Temperance Meetings if they cannot be classed with those of a religious character, being free from the objections which lie against those conducted in the usual way, & eminently promoting the highest interests of society—being a national blessing as they tend directly to correct a great national evil—are such as every christian must approve.

We cannot but remark then, that christians have great encouragement to persevere in their efforts to change the manner of keeping the fourth of July—to convert it from a day of noisy merriment, intemperance and revelry, to one in which the good providence of God shall be recognized and the principles of piety and morality shall be inculcated. The religion of Jesus Christ will always harmonize with, and give the most efficient and permanent support to sentiments of the most exalted patriotism. Religious celebrations can therefore never diminish our love of country—they certainly will never prove injurious to the morals of the people.

SCOTT'S BIBLE.

We would call the attention of our readers, and the public generally, to the advertisement of Mr. Fuller, of Scott's Family Bible. The very reduced price at which he offers it, renders it an object to purchase of him. He has been some time past engaged in selling this work in the eastern states, where he has met with great success. His object in going through the country is to bring Mr. Scott's Commentary into more general circulation than it would be, were people left to call for it at the Book Stores. He has already disposed of hundreds of copies in families who probably would have still been destitute had he not carried it to their doors.—The good he has already done in this way has led Dr. Beecher, and other Clergymen of Boston and vicinity, Sprague and Kirk of Albany, and Beman of Troy, to give him ample and honorable testimonials of christian character, and to recommend him to the patronage of the christian public.

RELIGION IN BOSTON.

We have just seen a letter from Boston which says that the spirit of revival still continues in Dr. Beecher's church and in some of the other orthodox churches in Boston. Morning prayer meetings are continued in Dr. B's church with undiminished numbers and unabated interest. The Doctor usually attends them himself.

THE VERSE SYSTEM.

The above system (the plan of which we published some weeks since) has been introduced recently in this village, and into other places in this part of the country, and has been very favorably received. The plan is to learn one verse of Scripture a day, and this, although it may appear but little if entered into with spirit, and persevered in will, in the course of the year, store the mind with a considerable portion of the word of God, and will furnish subjects for profitable meditation.

The plan has been adopted in some instances of making these seven verses the portion of Scripture for the Sabbath School lesson on the following Sabbath, and we think it a good one.

Where whole families, parents and children, are engaged in committing the same portion of Scripture it will not only give an additional importance to the Scriptures in the eyes of the children, but will be likely to insure their committing their Sab. School lesson thoroughly to memory.

When we consider that one of the crying sins of our land is the neglect of the sacred volume, we cannot but think that this system will commend itself to, and receive the cheerful co-operation of every one who believes the Bible is the word of God and "is able to make men wise unto salvation."

On Monday last we had returned to us from York Liv. co. a paper with a good strong wrapper, on which was distinctly written by the editor of this paper "W. Nay, Farwells Mills, N. Y."

On it were the following endorsements by the P. Master at York—"Sent back from York."—☞"Look at this again." "Let this go to Rochester N. Y. for information and oblige many."

"Is this blunder to be charged to the account of the rascally P. Master, Eh?"

"Editor Rochester Observer, Rochester, please superscribe this so that it can go to the place of destination."

On receiving the above we showed it to a number of gentlemen in the Post Office in this village, and to others, and no one found any difficulty in reading the name of the place to which it was directed.—Those who have seen it are as much at a loss as ourselves to conjecture how the Post Master there could take so much pains to show his incompetence for the discharge of the duties of his office—as it is obvious from his own acknowledgement that he cannot read legible writing; a very important qualification for a Post Master. The wrapper is preserved and may be seen at our office.

We do not know who the P. Master at York is, —whether the wit of the above is to be placed to his credit or that of some deputy.

THE CONTRAST.

There has been, this year, throughout our country, a division in sentiment as to the manner in which our Nation's Birth Day ought to be celebrated.

One party has celebrated it in the usual manner, by military parades, drinking, firing of cannon, &c. while the other has noticed it by collecting together the Sabbath School teachers and scholars, and instructing them in the things of religion—instilling into their minds the principles of temperance and anti-intemperance, and by addresses on the subject of temperance—which has its foundation in moral principle.—Temperance societies have also met on that day and inculcated the principle of entire abstinence from ardent spirits—rightly judging that it was preposterous to talk about our political liberties while so many among us, were slaves to this most degrading vice—which disqualifies those who are addicted to it, for the exercise or enjoyment of their civil rights. What we would notice particularly is, that among those who have celebrated the day in a military manner a number of lives have been lost by accidents, while not one has been lost among those who have taken either of the other modes to manifest their joy and patriotism. Our readers will draw their own inferences.

HUDSON RIVER STEAM-BOATS.

A letter from a gentleman in New York to the Editor of this paper, dated 20th July inst. 1831, says:

It has long been the grief of Christians here, and throughout the country, that the great thoroughfare of the Hudson river has been so much occupied by the different Steam-boats on the Sabbath, making it in fact the busiest day of the whole seven, while the following day is made a holiday or day of rest, very much to the annoyance of those, whose consciences lead them to lie by on the Sabbath, and they then have to lose the whole of Monday.

I am gratified in being able to inform you of new arrangements, that the "Old Hudson River Steamboat Line," have made, although I wish I could mention them as being more complete; and I am not without hopes I shall be able to do this ere long.

This Line now advertize to send out no Boats on the Sabbath morning, but their boat that formerly left at that time, leaves at six Monday morning, thereby giving those who remained over the Sabbath in obedience to the command of God, an opportunity to go on without further delay.

They however send out a Boat at ev'ng, (and this was made very convenient a few weeks since to one of your Rochester professors.)

INSTALLATION.

Installation of Rev. Luke Lyons as Pastor of the third Presbyterian Church in this village took place yesterday.

Opening service by Rev. A. D. Eddy of Canandaigua. Introductory prayer by Rev. J. Pierson of Bergen—Sermon by Rev. Wm. Wisner, charge to the candidate by Rev. Mr. Penney, charge to the people by Rev. G. G. Sill, of West Mendon concluding prayer by Rev. Mr. Cook of Rush.

The Installation of Rev. Mr. Wisner takes place to-day.

THE MORE highly FAVORED OX AND ASS.

There has been a bill published in Philadelphia within a month or two, which contains some new notions. It is more than intimated that Sunday-school teachers, violate the law of the state, passed April 23, 1794. "If any person shall do or perform any worldly business or employment, on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity, or charity alone excepted, he shall forfeit and pay four dollars for every such offence." Then follows this remarkable paragraph.

"There are in this city, and adjoining districts, 125 Sunday-schools, at which, 14,581 scholars are taught, many of whom are forced by their masters and mistresses to labor six days, (but not to do all their work,) and on the seventh to go to Sunday School, whilst the more favorable ox and the ass are at rest, because there is no necessity for taking them from their work, to send them to school on the week days.—S. S. Journal.

The more favorable (favored we presume) ox and ass!! Such reasoning as this, we should think, would better become an ox or an ass, than any thing in the shape of a man; a hardship indeed, for children to attend an hour or two to the cultivation of their minds and the improvement of their morals, and get some entertaining and instructive book, to read during the week.

We will venture that this animal who can thus talk about the "more favorable ox and ass," would advocate Sabbath-sports for children in which they would expose their healths, their lives, and squander their money.—Ed. R. Obs.

In England, about one person to 11 on an average is a pauper; in Massachusetts one to every 168; in New-York 1 to every 220; and in Pennsylvania, where the poor house system prevails, 1 to every 330.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A THOROUGH EDUCATION FOR THE MINISTRY?

It is a remark of one of the greatest men of Europe, that, "after all, it is Education that makes man." There is a certain expansion of mind essential to effort and success, and each department in life requires additional attainments peculiar to itself; so that no acquaintance with one, will necessarily qualify a man for the duties of another. The talent or taste for mechanism, may secure eminence in the mechanic arts, yet the fullest experience and skill in one branch, do not secure experience and skill in others. This is equally true in the learned professions. Some degree of general knowledge is required for success in either, and yet for usefulness and eminence in either, there is required laborious study and extensive acquisitions in those departments of knowledge which are specially connected with the profession in view. The Jurist may be profoundly learned in the principles and practices of law, and yet remain in entire ignorance of medical science. So the most exalted statesman may succeed but poorly in the labors of the country schoolmaster or in the chair of the University. So, I maintain, that the man of giant mind and rich in resources of literature and science who may enchain thousands by his eloquence in the Senate house, may fall far below the humble missionary of the cross, when placed in the sanctuary of God.

Taste, study, and practice, are, I may say, universally required for success in every department of life, except in the Christian Ministry. Ignorance and superstition have wrought in the minds of men a strange perversion here.—Ignorance of the subject, has shut out of view the broad field of ministerial labor; and vague impressions and superstitious regard for what is falsly called the "teachings of the Spirit," have almost denied all qualification for the ministry but what is furnished by a heart honestly and piously devoted to the good of souls. Some men read of the "teachings of the Spirit," & say that the Bible is a plain book, so plain, that the way faring man though a fool, shall not err therein; and hence, often, tho' way faring men, and more, some, trusting to the "teachings of the Spirit," start in that exalted profession, that made the learned Apostle cry, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

The profession of the Christian Ministry stands by itself, and like every other profession, requires laborious study in its own peculiar department.—The question before us is, what constitutes preparation for this profession.

In the Christian Church, in every age, opposition to the truth has arisen from the same source. President Edwards, and the various religious denominations in our land, sustained by public sentiment on this subject. If this opinion is to be regarded, it would be easy to settle the question before us. But to come to a more satisfactory result, we should consider the station which the minister holds and the duties which devolve upon him as a teacher of the word of God, the sacred and sublime principles of natural and revealed religion to rational and immortal beings. He is to "try the spirits, to prove all things and hold fast that which is good." From the works of creation and providence, as well as from the word of God, he is to set forth and establish the existence and character of Jehovah; unfolding the principles of a moral government; and then he is to lead his people over the whole ground of redemption by Jesus Christ.

To do this, with the hope of success, he must obviously possess more expansion of mind and be more richly furnished than is the case with most men. The manners and customs of mankind in ancient days; the progress of truth and the history of the church must be known; and tracing prophecy to its accomplishment, he is to anticipate events from past providences and predictions of God.—It is almost unnecessary to add in this place, that he should be acquainted with the languages in which the Scriptures were originally written.—These Scriptures he is to teach to others, in an age too, when they are interpreted in a thousand ways, and on all sides of him, wrested to the destruction of souls. To discharge the earliest duties of this office, he is to understand and explain the Scriptures philosophically, and from them draw out a system of doctrines and precepts for the faith and obedience of men. This is to be done with strict reference to the symmetry of the truth, and the analogy of the faith of the gospel; and this is to be presented to the ever-changing intellectual and moral character of his flock. He is to interpret the word of God,—hence he must to some extent understand the principles of interpretation, and these are not understood and applied without study. To interpret the Scriptures, says Keil, a man must first of all acquire some historic knowledge of the author of each book; of the state of things existing when it was written; of the body and collection of the New Testament books; of the particular history of its ancient versions, editions and parts in which it was written and other things of this nature. To this must be added a knowledge of the principles of criticism, in respect to the text of the New Testament. He must understand the language in which the books were written and possess a knowledge of the things respecting which the books treat, both historic and doctrinal, such as geography, chronology, civil and political history, manners and customs, contents of the books, such as the sentiments of the Jews in regard to religion at the time the books were written; the precepts of the Christian religion; and the doctrines of heretical sects; to which he adds, a knowledge of grammar, rhetoric and philosophy.

Here I would add, that to meet the beautiful and forcible illustrations of the Bible, he ought above all other men, to be richly read in the various branches of general science and of ancient and modern literature. Truth suffers in his hand without it.

As the minister is to write and exhort, to reason and persuade, he surely should be acquainted with the science of Logic, of Rhetoric, and of intellectual philosophy. Here I would anticipate two remarks, which are, first, that many men fail in the powers of persuasion, because they have not yet sufficiently instructed the minds of their hearers; and second, errors in religion which have been most destructive to the purity and peace of the church have arisen from false principles in intellectual philosophy.

To return, as a minister is to write and speak for the public and popular ear, to instruct and elevate the ignorant as well as to interest and benefit the educated, I insist upon it, he should scrupulously regard the rules of good taste. Who, that has read, has not assented to the remarks of Foster on this subject? And when the Spirit of God makes illiterate fishermen speak & write agreeable to the finest rules of correct & delicate taste, it surely becomes the minister of the gospel in this enlightened age, to stand aloof from that vulgarity which is without benefit either to the learned or the ignorant, and alike offensive to both. The uneducated are not flattered by such a compliment, and the educated will not endure it. Paul before the Cesars, would gladly seize the purity and sublimity of the Roman dialect, and not scorn the illustrations of her poesy: while to the humble Hebrew he would adorn and enforce the language of Israel.

I would ask, if these qualifications are too high for one, who rises before his fellow men to instruct them in the principles of that religion, which God has been developing for six thousand years; and by which they are to regulate their lives and build their hopes for eternity?

The question may arise, must the man, to be an educated minister, spend so many years at the Academy, College and Seminary? I ask, can he obtain the requisite qualifications in any other way? If so, very well, no one will object. But will men do it? Scott would do it; but will our young men at the present day do it? I imagine few will be found to gather in a private path what may be now secured at out public Institutions—indeed that important branch of knowledge which is secured by mingling with men and constantly coming in contact with minds of equal and superior mould; and above all, that which arises from the concentrated resources of numbers associated in the same pursuits is of necessity lost, as well as the fruits of laborious industry of able men long set apart for the express purpose of instruction. As a general remark, we may say, the requisite qualifications for a minister of the gospel at the present day can hardly be secured without a public education in our Colleges and Theological Seminaries. Advantages to be enjoyed in former years in a more private course of study, have, to a great extent, flowed into these public Institutions,—and an amount of knowledge may here be gained, which cannot be secured under any private instructer or at any one Institution.

Did Edwards say too much, when he declared, that the minister should not be raw, ignorant or unlearned, but "well studied in divinity," well acquainted with the written word of God, mighty in the Scriptures and able to instruct and convince gainsayers. Were the early ministers of New England too studious and learned? Do our Ecclesiastical bodies require too much in the candidates for the ministry? Let the most experienced judge, and I have no fear as to the result.

Is it said, that ministers, at the present day, cannot study as their fathers did?—that they have so much to do that this is impossible. This is true, hence let them study so much the more before they enter the ministry.

Yours, &c.
A. D. EDDY.

TRACT OPERATIONS.

The following is a view of Tract operations in that part of the field of my labor, which lies within the bounds of the Presbytery of Geneva. Information concerning other portions of Western New York may be given hereafter.

I perceived a few weeks since, 15,000 copies of the "Mountain Miller," which containing 24 pages, passes for a two month tract, and the following places have taken for the monthly distribution the number affixed to them at cost—which is 15 pages for a cent; and intend to take the same number of other Tracts.

Penn-Yan,	940	Fayette,	200
Rushville,	800	Junius,	200
Canandaigua,	700	Trumansburg,	200
Newark,	500	Castleton,	150
Sodus,	400	Hopewell,	100
Vienna,	400	Port-Gibson,	100
Ovid,	350	Marion,	100
Seneca-Falls,	500	Williamson,	100
Geneva,	450	Gorham,	250

and expects to distribute as many more.—Lyons and Romulus obtained their Tracts in the spring from New York.

Two or three other places it is expected will enter upon the work, and the needy places will be supplied as soon as the means can be procured.

The support of this agency is now so provided for by the liberality of a gentleman in this village that the money which a generous public shall entrust to my care may all be expended in furnishing tracts of 12 pages to 100 families at the rate of 80 cents a month, or $10 per year.

Donors may if they choose, select from the publications of the Society, the Tract which they wish to circulate, and the money which they may remit or engage to pay, shall be appropriated according to their wishes.

Fifteen thousand of the "Children of the Forest" are daily expected, and 9,000 on temperance by Sewall, Hitchcock and Marsh, are this day ordered. Any of the above tracts and a few others can be furnished at the residence of my family in this place or may be obtained from me at those Presbyteries and Synods which I may attend, and at the annual examination at Auburn.

WARREN DAY.

Geneva, July 22, 1831.

For the Rochester Observer.

Mr. Chipman—I have just returned from Bristol, Ontario co., where there has of late been a wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit, especially at a nine days' meeting held at the Presbyterian meeting house in the early part of June last. I believe nothing like a regular notice of this meeting, has appeared in any of the religious periodicals of the day:—this fact is the only apology I have for giving the readers of the Observer an account of it. The church in Bristol, for more than 30 years past, has been too much "like the mountains of Gilboa, on which no rain or dew descended." There have been indeed occasional ingatherings, especially under the preaching of the Rev. Ezekiel J. Chapman, but nothing like a general revival of religion, since the time that Messrs. Wiliston & Bushnell passed through this country on a Missionary tour, more than 30 years ago. Such was the state of this people when the Rev. Wm. P. Jackson (their present pastor) commenced his labors with them. God was pleased to bless the labors of this servant, the church were in a measure aroused from their slumbers, and during the winter past from 30 to 40 expressed a hope of having passed from death unto life. The above mentioned meeting commenced agreeably to appointment, on Thursday the 2d day of June. On the first & second days, there was nothing peculiarly interesting except a disposition on the part of the people to attend.—On Saturday, P. M. there was pleasing evidence that God was there. On the Sabbath the crowd of people was immense—few cases of hope, however, occurred—although an awful solemnity appeared to rest on every soul. On Monday the work deepened, and the number of anxious souls was considerably increased;—now was an awful crisis—Christians felt their responsibility and sunk down beneath its weight at the feet of Jehovah, when they offered the prayer of the Syrophonecian woman, "Lord help:"—God heard—the cloud of mercy broke—and several expressed a hope in Christ. On Tuesday conversions were numerous, and on Wednesday and Thursday still more so—meeting closed on Friday.—The number of hopeful conversions as near as could be ascertained during this meeting was from 225 to 250—principally among the young people & those in the prime of life—nearly all the children of the church are hopefully born again.. Two young men are now preparing for the ministry. The Baptist congregation located in the vicinity, also shared in this glorious work. There was a great want of ministerial labor during the whole meeting—the Rev. Mr. Brown of West Bloomfield, and the Rev. Mr. Hill of East Bloomfield, were the principal instruments. Some other clergymen were also present, who took a part in the exercises of the meeting. The state of things in Bristol is still interesting.

C.

A letter dated Jamestown, Chautauque Co. 23d July, 1831 says:

There has of late been an extensive revival in Warren, Pa. and I understand the work still continues.

There is a great excitement on the subject of Religion in this village. Several we trust have submitted to God, within a few days. The morning prayer meetings are well attended.—Between twelve and twenty, appear to be anxiously enquiring what they must do to be saved. A four days' meeting will commence on the 28th inst. and we believe God will meet with us.

Accident at Brockport.—On Friday last, two boat-caulkers were at work repairing a canal boat at Brockport, when a shower came up, and they took shelter under the boat, when some of the blocks gave away, and the boat fell on them, killing one outright and terribly mangling the other. We have not learned their names, but understand they were brothers.—Roch. D. A.

DEATHS BY DROWNING.

A man was drowned at the mouth of Genesee river on Saturday last, from a boat. He was lately from Ireland.

Elijah Utley, a boatman, engaged in boating wood for the Steamboat, on Snnday last, at Hanford's Landing, lost his hat, and plunged in after it. He swam till he came within about a rod of the shore, and sunk in about four feet water. He was intoxicated.—Roch. Daily Adv.

4TH JULY ACCIDENTS.

Several young lads, members of one of the schools in Williamstown, had procured a small swivel and a quantity of powder, for the purpose of amusing themselves in firing, and by some accident it exploded unexpectedly, and the charge, with the wad, entered the knee of Master Henry Steel, and shattered his leg in such a shocking manner, that amputation was considered necessary—his suffering was so extremely painful, previous to, and during the operation, that he expired about the close of it.—Pittsfield Sun.

An accident occurred at Harper's Ferry, on Monday morning last. Just as a salute was fired, a small boy, a son of Mr. James Copeland, ran across in front of the cannon, and had the left side of his face and head dreadfully mangled. He is not expected to survive.

A child was run over in N. Salem, and considerably injured. A child of about 4 y'rs was killed in Ann street in this city, by a carriage which was backed in the street. One of the Roxbury hourly coaches was upset by the breaking of the axle tree; several persons were much injured, and Mr. Abiel Cooledge is not expected to recover.

The New York Common Council appropriated a thousand dollars for the celebration of the Fourth of July. Better give this sum to the poor for the necessaries of life, or to find them employment. The rich should be independent enough to defray their own expenses at the celebration.

The Kingston Ulster Plebian says—"At the late celebration at Coxsacki, two men were killed by the bursting of a cannon—and another, who still survives, was deprived of both hands. We have not learnt what caused the bursting of the piece, but in all probability the cannon was overloaded.

Although we have stated that the 4th went off in pretty good style; yet we have to record some accidents of the most melancholy nature. Mr. Wheeler Hunt, following the recommendations of John Adams—firing squibs, crackers, pistols &c, was severely injured by the discharge of a pistol which he had mounted on a block.—He unconsciously loaded too heavy, for when he touched the priming the gun kicked, flew from its fastenings, penetrated his leg, and altogether renders amputation necessary.—Another. During the discharge of a cannon, Mr. Hoffman was driving a carriage through Union street, when unfortunately his horse took fright and run over 2 children, one of which, from the severe injury received, immediately expired. The other is in a hopeless situation.—Yet Another. One of the Guards, Mr. Berrien we believe, of New-York, imprudently passed in front of the firing on parade and received a full discharge of wadding in his head.—Dutchess papers.

CIRCULAR.

The Rochester Institute of Practical Education was organized in May last. It is intended for extensive usefulness, and is in successful operation. Its students exceed forty, collected from four denominations of Christians, all equally privileged. It owes its origin to the late revivals of religion in the western part of the state. Many young men of piety and talents were anxious to prepare for the gospel ministry, and to support themselves by manual labor rather than burthen the church.

The Providence which called for an institution of learning determined its character. Its aims should be to secure to its members vigor of health, and strength of bodily constitution, to cherish the proper moral and religious habits, and to develope their minds in a direction adapted to their high destination, and to gird up the sterner and nobler energies of the soul to the power of great accomplishment. A few friends of religion and learning contributed sufficient to hire convenient buildings for one year, in a pleasant and healthful part of Rochester, and to furnish the different departments of labor, board, and instruction. The original founders and patrons have committed the entire management of the Institute to six Directors, chosen two yearly by the Presbytery of Rochester.

It is no part of the aim of this Institute to withdraw the public confidence from the colleges and institutions of our country, by substituting superficial, hurried, and partial instruction, but by using the most improved methods of instruction to secure an equivalent for a thorough Academic and Collegiare education. As an Institute of Practical Education it will receive students who are not pious, and aim to qualify them for the highest possible degree of usefulness in the practical duties of life: and whatever contributes to this end, either in moral, intellectual, or physical discipline, is to be made the matter of direct instruction. The founders of this Institution cherish the hope of aiding the cause of popular education and of national liberty, by uniting the advantages of a cultivated mind and religious principle, with the feelings and habits of a working population.

The internal regulations and discipline are adapted to young men of high aim, and such as are willing to be trained up as benefactors of mankind.

The department of labor is subordinate to higher objects. Experience shows that most of our students can maintain ten hours of intense study, with three hours of labor, better than if no labor were required; and that the punctuality and order connected with this department gives system to every thing connected with it. Students of ordinary mechanical skill, during the weeks they are learning their trade can nearly earn their board; and it is calculated that when the intended facilities are furnished, they will pay their expenses.

Applications for admission are to be made to the Rev. Gilbert Morgan, Principal of the Institute. In making selection from several applicants, preference will be given to those who are advanced in their studies; who can make their labor productive: who aim at a finished, uninterrupted education; who have health and energy to rise superior to discouragement.

The Institute must soon as possible be furnished with permanent convenient Buildings, a Farm, and Shops, with Apparatus for various Departments of Science, with a Library to which Donations in Books will be thankfully received; with permanent Professors and Teachers. All these are essential to a successful prosecution of the plan. For these objects funds are necesary It is believed in no way can funds be applied more advantageously for building up the Redeemer's Kingdom. We commend the Institute to the blessing of God, and to the favorable consideration of the Christian community.

WM. WISNER,
President of the Board of Directors.

Rochester, July 14, 1831.

P. S. The next term of this Institution will commence on the third Monday of August next.

Editors in this section of country who are friendly to this Institution, will confer a particular favor by giving the above an insertion in their papers.

YOUNG MEN'S TEMPERANCE SOCIETY of Rochester.

The first quarterly meeting of this Society was held at the 2d Presbyterian church in this village, pursuant to adjournment, on the evening of the 21st inst. The President and Secretary being absent, Lewis Brooks, Esq. Vice President, took the chair and called the meeting to order, and Ariel Wentworth was appointed Secretary.

The meeting was opened by remarks and a prayer by Rev. Mr. Wisner.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

The Society proceeded to the election of an orator for the next meeting, when upon counting the ballots, Mr. Z. Freeman, was declared duly elected.

William S. Bishop, Esq. agreeably to his appointment then delivered an address on the subject of intemperance.

Benjamin F. Butler, Esq. of Albany and a member of the State Temperance Society being in attendance, likewise delivered an address on the subject of intemperance, in accordance with a request from the board of directors

On motion of E. D. Smith, Esq. Resolved, That the curators of this Society be severally furnished with copies of the Constitution and be requested to circulate the same for the purpose of procuring signatures, and report at the next meeting.

Resolved, That a committee of Five, one from each ward in the village, to be appointed by the President, be added to the present number of curators for the purpose of circulating the constitution, and that they be furnished with copies thereof.

The President then made the following appointment of members of said committee: viz.—1st Ward, E. D. Smith; 2d Ward, Z. Freeman; 3d Ward, Levi W. Sibley; 4th Ward, Joseph B. Clapp; 5th Ward, Levi A. Ward.

Resolved, That meetings of this Society be held monthly for the purpose of collecting statistics and intelligence and furthering the general objects of the Society. The time and place of meeting to be settled by the curators, and that they give notice thereof.

Resolved, That the next quarterly meeting be held on the 3d Monday of October next.

At Henrietta, on the 8th inst. Conrad Ten Eyck Thalhimer, son of Rev. John Thalhimer, aged five years and six months.

NOTICE.

There will be a Four Days' Meeting in the town of Perrinton, two and a half miles from Pittsford, in a grove, on the plantation of widow Bristol, to commence the third Thursday in August next. It will be under the direction of the Congregational church. The ministerial and lay brethren of other denominations are respectfully invited to attend.

GEN. H. L. V. DUCOUDRAY HOLSTEIN, Professor of Modern Languages at Geneva College, intends to spend eight weeks at Rochester, from the 13th of August,—during which time he would be willing to open different classes of Ladies and Gentlemen, wishing to study the French, Spanish or German languages.

In order to encourage the study of these languages he has fixed the following moderate terms.

Each class of Ladies or Gentlemen may be formed of not less than five nor more than eight pupils, and shall receive one hour's instruction every day. Saturdays and Sundays excepted—so that forty lessons will form a complete course, at $6 for each pupil. Each class may recite, by turn, at the residence of one of the pupils, member of said class.

The Principals of schools, academies, &c. desiring instruction in one of said languages at their institutions, may be pleased to apply to one of the gentlemen named in this card, or to the Professor himself, who will be at Rochester, the 13th of August next.

The persons wishing to follow one of these courses, are respectfully requested to leave their names and directions at the Book-Store of Hoyt, Porter & Co.

The following gentlemen have kindly offered to receive the names of their friends: Rev. Mr. Penney, Rev. Mr. Whitehouse. Hon. F. Whitlesey, Dr. Anson Colman, and Henry E. Rochester, Esq. 31 3w.

☞A public meeting will be held at the Session Room of 3d Pr. Church of this village on the 2d Monday of August, at 2 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of taking into consideration the expediency of forming a Colony, to locate in some eligible part of the Valley of the Mississippi. The object of the contemplated colony is, the diffusion of religious and moral knowledge. All persons having in their possession any information of the moral or geographical situation of that section of our country, are earnestly solicited to attend and communicate the same. July 26

SCOTT'S FAMILY BIBLE.

THE subscriber, Agent for selling this valuable work, would inform the inhabitants of this Village that he will be pleased to furnish those who may wish to obtain it, at a reduced price. The edition is the Boston Stereotype, in six volumes Royal Octavo warranted perfect. The work is too well known to need any recommendation.—Christians are respectfully and affectionately invited to call and examine the same immediately, as his stay here must necessarily be short. Samples of this, and also of Henry's Expositoin may be seen at the Rochester house for a few days, or at this office. JOHN E. FULLER

THE BIBLE CLASS,

BY THE CONNECTICUT STATE PRISON.

I saw them bending o'er that holy page,
Whose breath is immortality. There seem'd
No sadness on their features; to their limbs
No fetters clung; and they whose early years
Had told dark tales of wretchedness and shame
Lifted a calm, clear eye.
Amaz'd, I ask'd,
Is this a prison? and are these the men,
Whom justice from the world's sweet fellowship
Hath sternly sever'd?——
But a voice replied—
God's Spirit has been here. Serene it came Into the cells where guilt and punishment
Rivet her chains, making the victim's life
A hated burden, and his hope despair!

It came!—Rebellion laid his weapons down;
The flinty breast grew soft; the rugged brow
Gave channels for the tear of penitence;
And souls which sin had blotted from their race
As a foul gangrene to the Healer turn'd—
Bathed and were whole.

So now with humble step,
Their penal course they measure,—giving still
The day to toil, and meeting every night,
In solitude, reflection's chast'ning glance,
Which wounds to purify. There too doth glide
Fair charity, prompting to deeds divine
The unaccustomed pupil, which he cons,
'Mid the silence of a lonely bed,
His Bible lesson; seeks a deeper root
For Christian purpose; or anticipates
Glad Freedom's sacred gift.

Ye whom our God
Hath held from deep transgression, be not proud;
Nor in the heat of passion, haste to weigh
A brother's fault. The Eternal Judge himself
(When by the sin of ingrate Adam moved,)
Came not to Eden till the cool of day.
And since that hour when first the vengeful sword
Hung o'er the forfeit gate of Paradise,
Man hath been wayward,—weak, and prone to fall
Beneath temptation's wile, and so must be Unto the doomsday burning.

Then let his bitterest discipline be mixed
In Mercy's cup,—that so the prison cell
May work his soul's salvation; and the 'law,
Like a school-master' severe, the truant bring
To Christ his advocate and righteousness.

"Fear not—I have the keys of the Grave and of Death."—REVELATION.

O cling not trembler, to life's fragile bark;
It fills—it soon must sink!
Look not below, where all is chill and dark;
'Tis agony to think
Of that wild waste. But look! O look above!
And see the outstretched arm of Love!

Cling not to this poor life. Unlock thy clasp
Of fleeting, vapory air—
The world, receding, soon will mock thy grasp:
But let the wings of prayer
Take heaven's own blessed breeze, & upward flee,
And life from God shall enter thee.

O dread not Him who walks the stormy wave;
'Tis not a spectre, but the Lord!
Trust thou in Him who overcame the grave,
Who holds in captive-ward
The powers of death. Heed not the monster grim,
Nor fear to go through death to Him.

Look not so fondly back on this false earth;
Let hope not linger here;
Say, would the worm forego its second birth,
Or the transition fear,
That gives it wings to try a world unknown,
Although it wakes and mounts alone?

But thou art not alone; on either side
The portal, friends stand guard;
And the kind spirits wait, thy course to guide.
Why, why should it be hard
To trust our Maker with the soul he gave,
Or Him who died that soul to save?

Into his hands commit thy trembling spirit.
Who gave his life for thine;
Guilty, fix all thy trust upon his merit,
To Him thy heart resign.
Oh! give him love for love, and sweetly fall
Into his hands who is thine All. JOSIAH CONDER.

CONSCIENCE.

The next faculty we discover is conscience. This is a power of receiving impressions & ideas, from objects presented and facts related. If we hear that one person killed another, from design, we cannot resist the impression that it was a crime. Murder is wrong, the evidence is derived from the nature of things, and the conscience will so testify, whether we desire such a verdict or not. Conscience, therefore, is a distinct faculty of the soul. 'By a faculty we mean a mental power to receive impressions and ideas.' From this we conclude, there are several distinct faculties of the soul. The conscience has this property. This is the faculty, which distinguishes right from wrong, and moral good from moral evil. It is this, which teaches us our moral obligation, and admonishes to do what is right and avoid what is wrong. It is conscience that approves of our virtuous exercises and conduct, & condemns those which are vicious! It is that moral sense, which enables us to ascertain the nature of all our moral exercises and conduct, and to know, and decide, whether they are selfish or benevolent, sinful or holy. Conscience always decides, in view of evidence, as it is presented to the mind. If the evidence is imperfect, partially or erroneously presented, or if it is previously prejudiced, the verdict will be incorrect. How important then, that conscience should be unprejudiced, have the testimony by which it is to be governed fairly and fully set before it, that its decisions may be correct. Many think, and say, that they conduct according to their own consciences—or that their consciences do not condemn them. This may be the case, and yet they may have done very wrong.—People too generally, get, as they think, the approbation of conscience, when in fact, conscience has never investigated the case. They have made up their mind—they have predetermined what they will do, in a certain case, and then, with obscure and partial testimony, lay the matter before conscience and force a verdict according to their predetermination. This is unfair—it is no decision of conscience unprejudiced—it is governed by the feelings of the heart.—This sears the conscience, by which its ability is impaired, and the object of its creation destroyed. Hence the importance of giving correct testimony, and an opportunity of examining it impartially, and of deciding in view of it, before we act. Here is a great error, among mankind generally, they are deceived, as Paul was. He verily thought he was doing right, when in fact, he was doing wrong. And he might have known this. He had the means. But he was blinded by prejudice—he was predetermined, and made himself believe he was doing right. But, on further light, and impartial examination, he was convinced of his crime. The grand reason why conscience decides erroneously, in any case is, the prepossession, the imperfection of testimony, and the unfair and partial manner, in which that testimony is presented to its view and examination.

WHAT IS CONSCIENCE?

"The mildest balsam, or the sharpest steel
That wounds can wish, or the unwounded feel;
The softest pillow, or the sharpest rod,
The balm of blessing, or the scourge of God."

From the Vermont Chronicle.

THE CHOCTAWS.

From our Correspondent at Andover.

I have just now been listening to some statements of Rev. Mr. Wright, of the Choctaw Mission, respecting the state of the people of that tribe before the arrival of the missionaries among them; the change produced by the gospel, and their present state and prospects. The tribe now consists of 20,000 souls. The mission of the American Board was commenced about 13 years ago. The Indians seemed then to be sunk in the deepest degradation. They had no idea of any superior being to whom they were accountable, and no name more appropriate for a deity than "great witch." They had a tradition that their ancestors were created by a man who, when the earth was in a chaotic state, came down from above and formed a hill which is situated in the central part of their territory, and which bears evident marks of artificial formation, and there created or formed from the earth, their forefathers. He then went away, and they never saw, or heard of him afterwards. They supposed that they should in a future state, enjoy a sensual paradise, those excepted, who had been guilty of some flagrant wickedness. Their dwellings were rudely constructed of poles, by fixing the lower ends in the ground, and uniting them at the top; the crevices between them, being filled up with clay or mud.—They had no chimneys, and no opening of any kind, except a small door. They were filthy in their persons, being often covered especially in winter, with soot, and wore no clothing except a single piece of cloth about the waist; that of the females being large enough to extend from the arms to the knees. They sometimes however, had an additional cloth, or skin, thrown over the shoulders.

When the gospel was first made known to them, they said it was good for the white men; but as for them, it was enough if they could go where their fathers had gone. So obstinately fixed in this opinion did they appear, that it was supposed by the missionaries and others, that there was no hope of the conversion of the adult Choctaws. The efforts of the missionaries were therefore directed to the establishment of schools, and the instruction of the young.

About three years ago a great change was effected, not by man, but evidently by the Spirit of God, in the state of feeling among the Choctaws. Deep anxiety for the salvation of the soul, and lively interest in the glad tidings of the gospel, took the place of their former indifference. Those who could not before be persuaded to hear the preaching of the missionaries, now appointed meetings of their own accord, and then sent to the missionaries to come and attend them. These meetings were deeply interesting, and solemn as the subject which occupied the minds of those who attended. The willingness and ability of Christ to save all who would come to him, and the duty of immediately accepting the offers of the gospel, were the topics most dwelt upon. One of the first converts was a chief, who is distinguished for eloquence, and since his conversion eminently useful. The number of Choctaws belonging to the mission churches is about 340.—They generally honor the gospel by walking worthy of their profession. A majority of the nation are now Christians nominaly, i. e. they believe in the truth of Christianity. Six or eight hundred are now able to read, and most of them to write their own language. It was noticeable that those who became anxious for the salvation of their souls, generally began to learn to read immediately. After the revival of religion commenced, the nation advanced rapidly in all the improvements of civilized life. The decent and comfortable house took the place of their miserable wigwams. The strip of cloth about the waist was exchanged for the full and decent dress of the whites. Neatness succeeded to filthiness, and industry to indolence.—Labor was no longer regarded as degrading, and fit only for females, who had been compelled to perform all of the drudgery. In a word, they were rapidly advancing from their former state of degradation, misery and wickedness, towards all the blessings of civilized and Christian society.

But suddenly a cloud, dark and portentous, shrouded the nation in gloom. A council was called to meet the agents of the U. S. and hear proposals for the purchase of their country, and their removal beyond the Mississippi. Five or six thousand warriors assembled, and listened to the proposals of the agents. By an overwhelming majority, they refused to cede the land of their fathers sepulchres. Supposing the business settled, most of them returned to their homes, happy in the prospect of still dwelling in the land that gave them birth, and soon enjoying the blessings of civilization and Christianity.—After their departure, the agents of the United States, of this great and noble minded nation, by telling them if they did not cede their lands and remove, the U. S. would withdraw their protection and leave them to the disposal of the state of Mississippi,—by promises and threats—induced the 1000 who remained on the council ground to accede to their proposals. By such means, whether just or unjust, let him that reads them judge, did the agents of our government succeed in persuading 1000 Choctaws to deprive the remaining 19,000 of the land of their ancestors, their comfortable dwellings, and cultivated fields. All is now confusion and anarchy.—Many faces gather blackness. Many give themselves up to intoxication and vice. But still, there is hope of better days. The missionaries, who had seen the seed, which had been sown with much toil and suffering, beginning to spring up and bring forth fruit abundantly, will not forsake the unhappy Indian. Some of them will go with their churches, schools and friends, beyond the Mississippi, and endeavor to perfect there the work which has been unfortunately, not to say wickedly interrupted. The Indian churches plead with them, not to forsake their spiritual children. "Will a mother forsake her spiritual child?" say they. They ask too, that there white brethren may remember them in their prayers. Mr. W. has with him letters written in a plain and legible hand, by chiefs and others, expressing their most lively gratitude to them, and those by whom they were supported, for their past labors, and requesting their continuance, and asking for the prayers of the churches in their behalf. Could the readers of the Chronicle hear them, they could not refuse to comply with their request.

POWERS OF THE MIND IN RESISTING DISEASES OF THE BODY.

"The production of physical changes in a sudden and sensible way, by the action of moral causes, is comparatively rare, and difficult to comprehend. Yet medical men do sometimes have an opportunity of observing changes effected by this power, which might appear incredible, and almost miraculous, to those not aware of the force of mental operation on the human organs. I could adduce many such cases. Perhaps it will be proper to state one or two in detail.

"When, some years ago the metalic tractors were in the height of their reputation for the cure of diseases by external application to the part affected, the following experiment was performed by Dr. Haygarth, of Bath. Two tractors were prepared not of metal, but of a substance different from the genuine tractors, and made to resemble them. These were applied in a number of instances, with all the good effects of the real tractors. Among other remarkable cures was that of a person with the contraction of the knee joint, from a disease of six months duration. After a few minutes application this man was directed to use his limb, and, to the surprise of all present, he was able to walk about the room. Such instances are not very usual.—Many empirics succeed in calling into action the same principle.

"I will relate another case of this kind.—Some time since, a female presented herself to me, with a tumor, or swelling of the submaxillary gland of the neck, which had become what is commonly called a wen. It was about the size of an egg, had lasted two years, and was so very hard, that I considered any attempt to dissipate it by medicine to be vain, and advised its removal by an operation. To this, the patient could not bring her mind; therefore, to satisfy her wish, I directed some applications of considerable activity to be made to the part, and these she pursued for a number of weeks, without any change. After this, she called on me, and, with some hesitation, begged to know, whether an application recommended to her would be safe. This consisted in applying the hand of a dead man three times to the deceased part. One of her neighbors now lay dead, and she had the opportunity of now trying the experiment, if I thought it not dangerous. At first, I was disposed to divert her from it; but recollecting the power of the imagination, I gravely assured her she might make the trial without apprehension of serious consequences. A while after, she presented herself once more, and, with a smiling countenance, informed me she had used this remedy and no other since I saw her; and, on examining for the tumor, I found it had disappeared."—Dr. Warren of Boston.

A citizen of Aix, Mr. Sailler, has in his possession a great number of papyrus manuscripts; M. Champollion, the younger, who embarked in 1829 from Marseilles or Egypt, has visited this precious collection, and discovered that two of the rolls of papyrus contain, The history of the wars and reign of Sesostris the Great. This M. S. is dated the ninth year of the reign of this monarch. Sesostris Rhamses, or the great, according to the calculation of the German chronologists, lived in the time of Moses; he was the son, as they presume of Pharaoh who perished in the Red Sea, while in pursuit of the Hebrews.—The M. S. which after thirty three ages of oblivion, M. Champollion has just recovered, as it were by miracle, may contain some details in relation to the great events chronicled in Holy Writ, of an interest which can easily be imagined. On the second of August the Academic Society of Aix listened to a report of Mr. Sailler concerning the discovery. We will add to the above, that the researches, which M. Champollion has already made in Egypt, have modified his ideas upon certain points of the history of that country and the order of succession of the ancient kings. He still believes that Sesostris is not the same with Rhamses, the Great, but Rhamses Mei.-Amun, (the loved to Jove) the founder of the nineteenth dynasty. Whoever he may be, our enterprising traveller had obtained from the new & numerous data he has received during his travels, many precious confirmations of the facts mentioned in the Bible. He has likewise recovered the portrait of Sesonchis, founder of the twenty-second dynasty, (the Sesak of our holy books) and a bas-relief which refers to this Monarch's invasion of Judea.

INTERESTING OBITUARY OF RACHEL CARROLL STEELE.

A few weeks ago, at the close of a brief obituary notice of this interesting little girl, we promised, for the sake of our juvenile readers, a more particular account of her last illness.—Circumstances have prevented until now, a compliance with our promise. The facts, however, have lost none of their value by the delay.

Rachel, it will be remembered, was the only daughter of her parents. She had three brothers, two older and one younger than herself, towards whom she manifested that tender affection to the last, which constitutes the chief felicity of a family circle, and which should ever subsist between those who are so nearly related to each other. As she was only in her seventh year, when she was summoned to her account, it must of course, be expected that she "spake as a child," that she "understood as a child," and that she "thought as a child"—Yet there appeared to be more evidence of maturity of judgment, and reflection, than could have been anticipated in one of so tender an age. To the care which was bestowed upon her early education, and particularly to the instructions of an aunt, who spent a portion of every day, and especially the closing day of the week, in her school, in imparting to her little charge the truths of the Bible, must be attributed the instrumental cause of those deep and clear religious impressions which she manifested in the closing scene of life. Her disease, at its commencement, was very violent, and continued so with but little abatement until it terminated in death, on the 18th day. On the third or fourth day, her mother overheard her saying to herself "I am going—going, yes, forever!" "Going, where my daughter!" "Going from you, dear mama, forever." As no cause of very serious alarm was then apprehended, her mother replied, "No, my daughter, you are not going from me, you're not so sick." "Yes," she said, "I am going to meet my Maker." In order to persuade her to take her medicine, her mother called her a good child. "Ah, no, no," she answered, "I am not good—my heart is full of sin." A few days afterwards, she asked her mother, when she thought the hour would come for her to die. "I dont know, my daughter—God, alone, can tell." "Ah," she replied, "I long for the time—I shall then be free from all my pains—Ah, you don't know what are my sufferings. My sinful heart, it beats so; only feel it—Ma, it longs to fly above, and dwell with its Saviour." The next day, her father offered her medicine, which she declined taking, under the full impression that it would do her no good.—"Take it," it was said, "for your father, your dear father." "I have," she says, "another Father above, who can never die—He alone can do me good—'tis too late—I shall soon leave you all—and I hope to meet you all in Heaven above. I pray for you to go there, but I can't take you there. Be good, and pray to God through our Saviour, and he will take you there. Pray for me, Pa." Soon after, in reply to a remark, she said, "You can do me no good; pray for me; and if you will not pray for me, I will pray for you." With this, she raised her hands and offered up a pathetic prayer, and then repeated a hymn which she had committed to memory.—When she had finished, she faintly said, "I long to be in Heaven—There I shall see my Maker's face, and rest my head upon my Saviour's breast—I'll clasp my hands, and sing my hymns, and praise my God, and the Bible shall be my pil-

As she uttered these words, tears rolled down her cheeks, and then with her eyes lifted to Heaven, she said, "Oh! how my heart beats, I long to go." "But would you go and leave your Pa and your Ma!" her mother asked. "Don't speak so, Ma," she replied. She then gave her right hand to her father, and put her left around her mother's neck, and said, "God bless you father, God bless you mother—I shall soon go. Oh! how kind and good is my Redeemer; good to me in my pain, to help me." In this manner she continued conversing nearly an hour. Soon after, she pointed, first above, and said, "when I look up there," and then, below, "when I look down there, down, down, down there, O how I feel—I long to go above." This, accompanied with the action and the look, expressed far more than pen can describe.

Thus, until the close of life, she asked the prayers of others, she prayed for herself—She seemed to have a clear view of the sinfulness of the heart—She looked to God, through the great atoning sacrifice, for forgiveness—She expressed a hope of acceptance with Christ—She longed to be with Him—She rejoiced in prospect of a glorious immortality—And at last she sweetly resigned her spirit into the hands of her Maker.

This sketch, to those who witnessed the scene will, we are sensible, afford but a faint emblem of the reality. Yet it is given with the hope that it may be blessed in urging some instructors of children to greater faithfulness, and in turning the thoughts of some who are young to the concerns of eternity. And let those parents who read it, inquire what duty is demanded of them; and let them learn the importance of training up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

ANECDOTE.

The Hon. E. Boudinot relates, that he was at the seat of Government, when Indians of seven different tribes were present. On the Sabbath he was much pleased to see their orderly conduct, because it was the Sabbath of the white people. An old sachem addressed his red brethren very devoutly. Mr. B. asked an interpreter what he said. The substance was, the love which the Great Spirit had always manifested for the Indians; that they were under his immediate direction; and hence they ought gratefully to acknowledge him, obey his laws, do his will, and avoid every thing displeasing to him.

Just before public service, Mr. B. observed an Indian standing at a window, looking into a field where some children were at play. The Indian spake with earnestness, and seemed displeased. Mr. B. asked the interpreter what was the conversation! He replied, the Indian was lamenting the sad estate of these orphan children. The interpreter asked him why he thought them orphans? He believed they were not thus. The Indian with great earnestness replied, 'Is not this the day on which you told me the white people worship the Great Spirit! If so, surely these children, if they had parents, or any other person to take care of them, would not be suffered to be out there, playing and making such a noise! No, no; they have lost their fathers, and their mothers, and have no one to take care of them!" Alas, how many such orphan children are to be found in christian lands! If their parents are not dead in the sense meant by this Indian, they probably, are in a worse sense dead—"dead in trespasses and sins."—Miss. Register.

PRAY FOR KENTUCKY.

The accounts of revivals of religion are multiplying in number and increasing in interest.—Immanuel is riding forth in his power and glory, conquering and to conquer. Rebel sinners are submitting to him, enlisting in his cause, and acknowledging him as the captain of their salvation. Christian friends, when you read these accounts, does the earnest ejaculation rise from your hearts,—"Lord, revive us!" It is a truth not to be disguised, that with few exceptions, our western churches are slumbering, and sinners within the sphere of their influence, are rushing headlong down to the gates of eternal death, unconcerned about their future state.—And shall this continue to be the case in the churches, or will they awake and call upon God for the reviving and life-giving influences of his Spirit, to be shed down over the whole length and breadth of our land.—Lexington Lum.

A LIBERAL DONATION.

The following letter was sent to one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and by him handed to us for publication.—Bost. Rec.

DEAR SIR,—Your statement at the late meeting of the Pastoral Association respecting the wants of the Board, together with the letters of those who are waiting for the churches to send them to the heathen, had such an effect upon me, that I went home, and laid the subject before a ladies' missionary society in this parish. I had limited my expectation to 15 or 20 dolls. as the Society consists only of 30 members, and the circumstances attending the erection of the new meeting house had made large demands upon them. But notwithstanding I repeated a remark of Dr. Cornelius, made at the Pastoral Association, that they must not consider this as an extra effort, and after they have made it, think that no further exigencies would come; but that they would be called upon repeatedly with all the churches, to make exertions proportioned to the wonderful manner in which God is carrying on his work; you may judge of my surprise, when I heard that they had raised $50, and was presented with a certificate of life membership of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

An expression of personal gratitude would be almost out of place, in connection with this glorious cause.

I will only add that the churches of Middlesex county, a part of Zion to whom God seems to say, "I have chose thee in the furnace," have since their trials, done wonders in the great cause of benevolence. N. ADAMS.

CAST-IRON THRASHING MACHINES of a new and improved construction.

Thrashing in these Machines is performed between cast iron plates, having teeth arranged in circles upon them, which are attached to a wheel, and pass through a corresponding cast-iron bed piece, as the wheel revolves.

They require less velocity, are less expensive and more durable, than those made with a cylinder, or any other kind heretofore in use. A specimen of them may be seen at Allcott Watts & Langworthy's rolling and slitting mill, next door north of the cotton factory, near the falls.

Persons wishing to procure the article for their own use, will do well to supply themselves with this kind. Rights for territory, may be had on advantageous terms to the purchaser, by applying to the patentee, No. 25 Exchange-street.

HOPE AND DESPAIR.

The moon was veiled—thick, drear, and dark—
Each starry gem withdrew its beam,
And guideless left the tot'ring bark
To stem the raging, ruthless stream.

A monster rose—one death-like stroke,
And sail and oar in twain were riven;
The lightnings flashed; the thunders broke,
And to his gulf my bark was driven.

Loud beat the surge—the whirlpool yawned
A fiend-like smile the monster crowned;
I prayed—and lo, the day-star dawned
And with his beam my guide I found.

Once more the tyrant widely gasped—
Once deeper laid his hell-born snare—
The anchor Hope I firmly grasped,
And bade defiance to Despair.

In vain thy threat, thy rat'ling chain
Can paralyze my heart no more;
The sea is clear, the starry plain
Will light my pathway to the shore.

"OLD FASHIONED HOPKINSIANISM."

Dr. Ely says with exultation, that "old fashioned Hopkinsianism has been banished from Andover, from the general Association of Massachusetts, from the good little State of Connecticut, and nearly from the whole Presbyterian Church." This declaration, we very much fear, is too true; and we frankly acknowledge, that we are among those, who, as he says, 'greatly lament this defection.'

But, what is old fashioned Hopkinsianism?" It is no more nor less than strict, and consistent, and "scriptural Calvinism;" between which and Arminianism, there is no consistent medium, or place of standing. It is such Calvinism as Solomon taught, when he said, "the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will." It is such Calvinism as Paul taught, when he said, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling: for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do, of his good pleasure."—"For we are insufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God."—"For he said unto Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy; and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thou wilt saythen unto me, Why doth he then find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath, and make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction; and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy; which he had afore prepared unto glory!" It is such Calvinism as our blessed Saviour believed, professed and inculcated, when he prayed, "If it be possible, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will, but thine be done;—if this cup may not pass from me, except I drink it, thy will be done;" when he taught his disciples to pray, "Thy will be done!"—and when he "rejoiced in spirit and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth; because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." It is such Calvinism as God himself taught, when he said, "I will harden Pharaoh's heart;" and "I have hardened his heart." "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace and create evil: I, the Lord, do all these things." If, then, "old fashioned Hopkinsianism has been banished from Andover, from the general Association of Massachusetts, from the good little State of Connecticut, and nearly from the whole Presbyterian Church;" it is evident, that they have banished the doctrines of the Bible, and the only "scriptural Calvinism" in existence; and it is no marvel that "this defection from old fashioned Hopkinsianism is greatly lamented by the few who remain faithful to it in Massachusetts."

But, if they 'have banished old fashioned Hopkinsianism from Andover,' as Dr. Ely affirms, we would inquire, what has become of their old fashioned 'Hopkinsian Creed,' which was wittingly framed for the purpose of securing the influence of Dr. Samuel Spring, and large benefactions through his agency? We fear they never had much Hopkinsianism at Andover, save the Creed referred to; and if they have 'Banished' that, Hopkinsianism is indeed gone from the institution; for the Creed was surely all they had left. With here and there an honorable and honest exception, we have never known a preacher, who received his theological education at Andover, but what appeared disposed to throw the great and fundamental doctrines of the gospel into the shade; and we think that the truly orthodox have as much reason to complain of perversion of funds at Andover, as of perversion of funds at Cambridge.

Dr. Ely, however, speaks of "modern Hopkinsianism," in distinction from the "old fashioned;" and says it "has become assimilated to moderate reasonable, scriptural Calvinism," which he calls "the prevalent Calvinism of the Presbyterian Church in the United States."—We know of no such divinity, as "modern Hopkinsianism," in distinction from the "old fashioned." Those who have departed from the great and fundamental doctrines of the gospel, as they have been taught, explained, and enforced by Calvin, and Hopkins, and Spring, and Emmons, are neither Hopkinsians nor Calvinists in any sense whatever. There is no stooping place between strict Calvinism and gross Arminianism; and those whom Dr. Ely would call 'moderate, reasonable and scriptural Calvinists,' are rapidly taking ground with those, who set aside the sovereignty of God, his immediate agency in the production of moral exercises, the supreme efficiency of the Holy Spirit in regeneration; and who hold to a self-determining power, and the efficacy of moral suasion, which lie at the very foundation of Arminianism, as taught by Dr. Taylor, of Norwich.

In respect to Dr. Ely's exultation, in view of the 'banishment of Hopkinsianism,' we would say, "Let not him that putteth on his armor, boast himself as he that putteth it off."—There is yet more of genuine Hopkinsianism in the land, than he apprehends. If it is not generally found among the clergy; it is found among our most intelligent, pious and devoted laymen, who are beginning to open their eyes to discern, and their mouths to inquire after "the Lord God of Elijah." Even in this city, there are numerous laymen of talents, piety and respectability, who feel themselves starving for the sincere milk of the word; who are beginning, with great earnestness, to inquire after the old paths, that they may find "the honey and the honey-comb;" and the more they 'taste of the little honey,' the more their 'eyes are enlightened,' to discern the vast difference between the modern, and the apostolic mode of preaching. A vast many in our churches, who remember, with lively interest, the days of old, and the marrow and fatness, with which the people were fed by the ministrations of Hopkins, and Edwards junior, and Spring, and Niles, and the Strongs, and West of Stockbridge, and other faithful shepherds of the last generation; are now much more orthodox than their pastors, and are heartily sick and disgusted with the present declamatory puerile and uninstructive mode of preaching. The truth is not dead yet; and if ministers refuse to come up to the good old standard of orthodoxy, and begin to instruct and feed their people; their people will soon devise some means to instruct and feed themselves, and ministers will be put to silence and to shame.

TO THE REV. MOSES THACHER.

Dear Sir,—I have copied your article on "old fashioned Hopkinsian," that the readers of the Philadelphian may have some knowledge of one honest and candid man who avows HOPKINSIANISM. You are perfectly correct in your intimation that Hopkinsianism, in its peculiar features, whether "old fashioned," or "modern must be essentially the same." The peculiarities of the doctrinal system taught by Drs. Hopkins, Samuel Spring, Nathaniel Niles, Emmons, the younger President Edwards, Strong, and West of Stockbridge, must be Hopkinsianism if any thing is to bear this name; and the tenets held by these divines, in opposition to others called Calvinists, or Calvinistic Arminians, if you please, were the true, genuine "old fashioned Hopkinsianism" of the very fathers of that theological scheme. You will, I hope, continue to confirm this true representation, that some ministers of the Presbyterian Church who have publicly proclaimed themselves "Old fashioned Hopkinsians" may know what they mean, and whereof they affirm.

In the piece above quoted you have distinctly stated one point of old fashioned Hopkinsianism to be the immediate agency of God in the production of moral exercises: and of course you mean, whether they be good or evil; for thus the Hopkinsian worthies to whom you refer, all taught. That God has a direct, positive, and immediate agency in the production of all the sinful exercises of men and devils is your doctrine, if I understand you; and none should oppose this doctrine, which I deem horrible, and call himself a Hopkinsian of any grade. I beg you to proceed to state other beauties, or peculiarties of your scheme, in the clearest manner; for then those ministers who assume the sirname of Dr. Hopkins will learn with what propriety they boast of Hopkinsianism.

Freely I confess, that for more than twenty years I have felt a strong hostility to that view of Calvinistic theology which is truly called Hopkinsianism; and therefore it is that I rejoice to find there is very little of it left in the Presbyterian Church, even among those who absurdly proclaim themselves the supporters of this scheme. They hold in common with Dr. Hopkins nothing which distinguishes them from such Arminian Calvinists as you represent me to be, in company with Drs. Beecher, Wisner, and others, except the doctrine of an infinitely meritorious, applicable, and intended atonement. It delights me, that most of my acquaintance who were called Hopkinsians in 1810 are now no more Hopkinsians than I am, except on the intended sufficiency, universality, and applicability of the vicarious sacrifice of himself, which the Son of God made for the salvation of sinners. Old fashioned Hopkinsianism I dislike and oppose as much as ever I did; but many Calvinistic divines of the present day, who think they are moderate or modern Hopkinsians, I love and admire; because they are not chargeable with any other error than that of giving themselves a nickname which they do not deserve.

I hope you will select for me a long string of the short propositions of Dr. Emmons and others, expressive of their peculiar views of the gospel; that I may copy them for the benefit of a few thousand Southern and Western readers; in the mean time I will make a few extracts from your venerated founders of Hopkinsianism, whose names you have given, that the people of this region may not stamp upon their foreheads the label of Hopkinsian, without knowing what it means.

The younger President Edwards in his Dissertation on the Essays of Dr. Samuel West, says, p. 185, that "the volitions of rational beings, are in their own nature moral acts, and for that reason the subjects of them are accountable;" and yet he employs his whole book to prove that God is the efficient cause of every one of man's volitions, and to answer all objections which have been raised against this doctrine. He says, p. 181, "My thoughts and all my perceptions and feelings are mine; yet it will not be pretended that I am the efficient of them all!' Yet we do pretend, that man is a real, finite, dependent, efficient agent, every one of whose mental operations he performs himself, and of which he is the producer, the effecter, the author, the efficient. If another being is the efficient of any act of my mind he is the doer of the mental deed; he is the efficient cause and author of it; and he alone is accountable for its essence, tendency, character, and moral quality, whether good or bad. Dr. Hopkins says, System, Vol. 1. p. 180, of the first edition, that "in the sacred scriptures, God is expressly said to form, make, or produce moral evil;" which is SIN. In his Sermons, p. 195, he says, that "to work in men to will and to do, is to do that which is effectual to produce the will and the deed." In this manner he teaches that God produces every sinful as well as every holy act of the human will.

Dr. Emmons, the second great Hopkinsian, and the father of that kind of Hopkinsianism which now exists in a little cluster of men in Massachusetts, and scarcely any where else, employs this language in his famous sermon on the hardening of Pharaoh's heart. "As all these and other methods to account for the fall of Adam, by the instrumentality of second causes, are insufficient to remove the difficulty, it seems necessary to have recourse to the divine agency, and to suppose that God wrought in Adam both to will and to do in his first transgression."—"His first sin was a free, voluntary exercise produced by a divine operation, in the view of motives. Satan placed certain motives before his mind, which, by a divine energy, took hold of his heart and led him into sin." "God knew that no external means and motives would be sufficient of themselves, to form Pharaoh's moral character. He determined, therefore, to operate on his heart itself, and cause him to put forth certain evil exercises, in the view of certain external motives. When Moses called upon him to let the people go, God stood by him, and moved him to refuse. When Moses interceded for him and procured him respite, God stood by him, and moved him to exult in his obstinacy. When the people departed from his kingdom, God stood by him and moved him to pursue after them, with increased malice and revenge. And what God did on such particular occasions he did at all times." See his Sermons on some of the Principal Doctrines, &c. p. 387. Thus, according to old fashioned Hopkinsianism, God helped the devil to make Adam and Pharaoh sin; and it would have been strange indeed if these men should have overcome them both! Such a doctrine of God's sovereignty as this I confess I hate with perfect hatred; and had Mr. Barnes, as one of his opponents did, proclaimed himself an old fashioned Hopkinsian' he should never with my consent have been received by the Presbytery of Philadelphia.—Thanks be to God, we have few men in the Presbyterian Church who do not shudder at the thought of making God the one, only, living, and true sinner in existence.

Other articles of this scheme of doctrine: which the Boston Telegraph boldly advocates, while it represents Hopkinsians as the only true Calvinists, I shall expose, if God, permit, hereafter, but at present, I congratulate the Theological Seminary at Andover, the General Associations of New England, and nearly the whole Presbyterian Church on being so scripturally orthodox as to merit the reprobation, of every such philosophically mad divine, as is now addressed by THE EDITOR of the Phil.

MORAL COURAGE IN THE MINISTRY.

A degree of moral courage, quite peculiar in its extent, is an essential requisite of ministerial character. We fear this subject is not always appreciated. To show the danger of deception in the case, we need only advert to the fact, that the clerical profession is generally regarded as one, which the Christian student may choose, without possessing any greater degree of fortitude, than is necessary at the bar, or in the practice of medicine. Is it, then, really true, that in a world where the great majority, even in its best portions, are either open or covert enemies, of God; in a world where the powers of darkness still hold almost universal sway—can it be true, that in such a world, the servants of God need no higher degree of moral courage than the servants of men? All admit that the Apostle Paul had abundant employment for this noble quality in its highest perfection. But why? He had a world of heathen idolaters to oppose.—Are we, then, to suppose, that men hate the cross of Christ less, while they are in the false garb of Christians, than if arrayed in the panoply of her open enemies! They may hate their own idea of the Christian religion less than a Pagan does; but every fact in the case proves beyond doubt, that nominal Christians are as truly enemies to God as are the veriest heathen on earth. Are we told, they respect its forms, and consequently oppose with less violence!—Are then its forms all we advocate? Farewell, in that case, a long farewell, to all our hopes of millennial glory. A religion that does not carry heavenly love, and purity, and peace, to its possessor—a religion that does not draw at every moment upon the life blood of sin, is no religion for this revolted earth. A religion, then, that does not find a real opposer, in every unconverted man, and consequently, that will not secretly or openly array him against its Ministers, is not the religion of Jesus.

The enemies of religion are very frequently proposing a truce; (with what designs we need not say,) but all who accept the proposal will fail to understand at all their need of moral courage. Flattered and favored as they may be in this case, they may readily imagine, that the offence of the cross has ceased. But let them declare war against all sin, whether in ecclesiastical or lay dignitaries, whether in bosom friends or open foes, supporters, or non-supporters of the Christian ministry—let them always distinguish in all their conduct, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not, and the case becomes a very different one. The Christian minister will find meaning in the words of the poet, as descriptive of the devotion which he ought to feel when he says:

"Nor have I ever held my life, but as a pawn
"To wage for thee."

It is a palpable mistake to suppose that any small degree of moral courage will sustain a faithful preacher of the Gospel, even in this Christian land. To illustrate this: suppose an extensive conspiracy against the United States' government should be discovered as now in full operation. Let it be known that more than half the officers of the nation, more than half the citizens were leagued against her executive and laws. Suppose, too, that true patriots could generally discover, but in such a way as to furnish no open proof, yet almost to a certainty, who were traitors and who were faithful men. Would not the lover of his country need more fortitude, than if called to march against an open foe? Could he as easily face a professed friend, whom he yet suspected as an enemy, as summon resolution to confront a declared aggressor! This is, however, but a partial illustration of the case. Parties in any of this world's concerns, are so much more visibly united, than are the real friends of Christ, that more support for individuals is apparent in almost any circumstances, than in the work of openly serving God.

THE BLIND OPENING THE EYES OF THE BLIND.—A Clergyman in the State of Maine says, I have heard of two hopeful conversions by means of Tracts which I gave to a pious blind man a few months since. One was 'The Swearer's Prayer,' the other, Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. Thus, to use the words of the man just referred to, who has been blind from his youth, "Two souls were caught in the Gospel net. Who has ever heard, since the world began, of the blind opening the eyes of the blind, till the discovery has been made in the operations of the Tract Society.—Charleston Obs.

THE SAILOR BOY.

Pity the poor little sailor boy,
Whose home is on the deep;
Put up a prayer for him each night
Ere lying down to sleep.

Pray for his safety—pray for his soul—
Pour out your feelings warm;
Remember the dangers in his path,
The whirlwind and the storm.

When you lie safely down each night,
From every danger free,
Perhaps he's dashing fearfully
Upon an angry sea:

Or lashed unto a shattered wreck,
He's tossed upon the wave,
With scarce a hope of being snatched
From a cold, watery grave:

Or stretched within his humble berth,
Perhaps he's racked with pain—
His thoughts on home—that home, alas!
By him ne'er seen again.

Remember, too, he often lives
Where there is much misrule:—
That he has not the privilege
To attend the Sabbath school.

The church of God is shut to him,
He cannot visit there
To hear the blessed gospel preached,
To join in praise and prayer.

So, Sabbath scholars, when you pray,
Let him your thoughts employ;
Pray for his safety and his peace—
Pray for the sailor boy! P.

MY TEACHER.

——"But don't forget to pray!" These were the concluding words of a personal address, as I left forever the Sabbath school, in which I had passed many pleasant, and, I trust, profitable hours. I remember just how my teacher looked on that morning, when he addressed me for the last time. I believed he loved me affectionately, and daily prayed that I might become the subject of pardoning grace. And when he knew I was about to leave him, he was deeply affected. The tears stood in his eyes: he could hardly speak. "Remember what I have told you—forget none of my instructions," and he continued sometime to address me. I shall never forget his last words—"don't forget to pray!" In whatever situation I have been placed thus far in life, I have always remembered them. I know not how many sins I might have been left to commit, had I forgotten my teacher and refused to pray.—Temptations have been strong: trials have been heavy:—afflictions sore, and disappointments many—but I have remembered the words of my teacher, and have been enabled to come off conqueror. How often I have wished to be young again, that I might be a scholar in the Sabbath school. Once, I did not know how to prize the blessing I enjoyed. But since I have been denied the pleasure of associating with the young, to receive instruction from a faithful teacher, I deeply feel my loss. Of late years, my loss has in some measure been made up. I am now a teacher myself—in the very school-room too, where I used to meet my teacher for instruction. I always feel a pleasure in telling my little scholars, how I used to be taught—what a good teacher I had, and how little I valued the privilege I enjoyed. I tell them that perhaps they may grow up good men, and be teachers also; and I invite them now to be diligent in their studies, and attentive at school, that hereafter they may not look back with regret on their conduct at the Sabbath school. When I tell them about my teacher and school, they are attentive and their looks appear to say—We will be good children, and mind your instructions, and try to become Christians. D.

From the S. S. Instructer.

WHAT MEANEST THOU, OH SLEEPER!

In one of the Sabbath schools in P——, there is a teacher, a professor of religion, who feels so little interest in his class, that he often gets asleep in school! Yes, he has actually been seen, several times, asleep, with his class sitting idle around him, or laughing and making themselves merry, at his expense! To such a teacher, I do not hesitate to say—Up—leave your class instantly—never go within the school room, until your heart is sufficiently engaged in your work, to ensure your keeping awake. Better never attempt to take charge of a class of children, than to compel them to feel that the Sabbath school is a farce, and the lessons they are taught there, of no importance at all. I will not ask you, if you feel that your children have immortal souls—I know you do not. I will not ask you if you pray for them—the question would be absurd. I will not ask you if you ever converse with them familiarly, freely, affectionately. The thing is impossible. What! with the Bible before you, and some six or eight immortals gathered around you to be instructed in its sacred contents, to receive from you explanations and illustrations of its meaning, and perhaps, yes, probably, depending on you, as the instrument, for those impressions of its truth and power, which, by the promised aid of the Spirit, should become a savor of life to their souls—can you sleep! What would you say to the minister of the gospel, who should sleep in the pulpit, during the exercises of public worship? But I cannot reason with you on such a subject as this. The fault is not in your head, but in your heart; and until that is touched by a new impulse from above, you will sleep on. Go, then, my fellow teacher, to your closet, reflect on the awful responsibility of your station, repent of your past indifference, and awake to new life and diligence. Let your first love be rekindled, and all the energies of your soul waked up, to redeem the time that remains; and then in humble reliance on divine assistance, return to your class, resolved not only to be awake and active yourself, but give them no rest till they have given their hearts to Christ. If you cannot do this, I repeat it, leave the school. Yield up your class to some one more faithful, or let them be scattered without a teacher; but do not, I beseech you, encourage them by your example, to make light of the Sabbath school, of the Bible, and of Christ, and to look upon all the means of grace, as idle, unmeaning ceremonies, in which the heart has no share.

YOUR BROTHER.

INTERESTING VIEWS OF S. SCHOOLS.

Extraordinary exertions have lately been made in our school, to awaken an interest in the minds of the children on the subject of religion. In various ways the necessity of a change of heart has been impressed upon them, and they have been encouraged to pray for themselves. Many have been faithful to their instructions, and have prayed morning and evening, that the Lord would 'create a right spirit within them.' Some have already given evidence that they have passed from darkness to light, and several more, we think, are not far from the kingdom of heaven. One of the little girls, whose name is Eleanor, a few Sabbaths ago, told her teacher, in the simplicity of her heart, that the Lord had given her a new heart. The teacher did not take much notice of it at the time, but she laid up the saying in her memory.

The next Sabbath the child was not present at school, and the teacher made inquiries about her sister, who is a member of another class. Eliza said her sister was absent on account of ill health, and confirmed what she had told her teacher.—She said they had prayed night and morning by the bed side, that "the Lord would give them a new heart." They prayed for one another, and sometimes their mother came and kneeled down with them.—N. E. Christian Herald.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

The following extracts of a letter from a minister in one of our smallest towns, show what a friend to Sabbath schools can do, when the heart is warmly engaged in the work.

"I am settled in A——, over one of the most feeble churches in the State of Maine—a place which, for twenty-five years, has been a complete moral desolation. For two years, since I have been here, we have tried to keep up a Sabbath school, but it has gone on very heavily. Our difficulty has been the want of a library. A library in many places would be easily obtained; but you can hardly form an idea of our pecuniary inability. My children had some books, about 15 or 20 bound volumes, suitable for a library, which they gave to the school to commence with; and I have now raised six dollars and fifty cents, to purchase more.

"You will be glad to hear, that about thirty of my little flock have become hopefully pious, within a short time past, a great part of whom are teachers and scholars in our Sabbath school.

WHAT CAN I DO!

"Yes—I know that Sabbath schools are all-important: that God has set his seal on them by the evident blessing from on high, which has attended Sabbath school instruction. I feel that they are the hope of the rising generation of our beloved country, of the church, and of the world. I wish that I could aid the S. S. cause. But what can a Single Individual do!"

I will tell you, my friend, what an individual has done, and you know that "what man has done, man may do."

'In 1815-16 he began his course by establishing a little Sabbath school, in connexion with the 2d Presbyterian church in the city of——. It was the first school connected with that church, and was kept in the garret of an old Dutch dwelling house. Two boys were his assistant teachers. This soon became, and is still a very flourishing school.

In 1818, our friend removed to C——and commenced a Sabbath school alone. He called a public meeting on his own responsibility, had the subject discussed, a society formed, a constitution adopted, and $150 raised for the support of the school; and this notwithstanding his youth, and the vehement opposition of a clergyman of the presbyterian church. He labored in that place six years; and left the field with twelve hundred names of pupils on his receiving book, nine Sabbath schools and a most interesting Teachers' Association.

'In 1824, he went to H——. There he found no prayer meetings, or Teachers' meetings, connected with the school. He was instrumental in establishing them, and also in forming a county Society.

'He has now taken up his residence in P—— (Mass.) where he is laboring for his Master with great success.

Do you admire his devotedness and perseverance, and wish that your success and usefulness might be like his? The way is clear. "Go thou and do likewise." L. P. S.

A Sabbath School Teacher in North Carolina, writes to the Southern Religious Telegraph, that during one of his nine years superintendence of a Sunday School, viz: the year 1828, 74 persons, connected with the school, became pious.

WILL YE ALSO BE HIS DISCIPLES.

Occasionally in meetings for religious purposes, an important train of thought may be impressed on some one present, whose facility of communication may render it his privilege and duty immediately to present to the audience his vivid convictions. Many are the instances in which truth by such means has been fastened on the conscience, "as a nail in a sure place." The brief statement which follows, is an illustration in point, and is from Rev. Dr. BENNETT'S Memoir of Rev. Dr. BOGUE.—[Watch]

September 29th, 1789, he reports, "Two young persons were committed to my tuition for the ministry;" and on Nov. 19th, he made another entry in these words—"Mr. Weston came." Of this person, who formed one of the first class, educated by David Bogue, it may be permitted to speak with freedom, as he has recently entered into his rest. By his amiable spirit and deep piety, though a man of solid rather than splendid talent, he was a great comfort to his tutor while yet young in his office. Mr. Weston having finished the course of study with universal esteem, settled at Corsham in Wilts. There I first knew him—there I first enjoyed his friendship, which I shall ever remember among the first blessings of my life.—One circumstance connected with our acquaintance I can never forget. I had been preaching for him, one evening, on the words, "Will ye also be his disciples!" and when I sat down, he rose from his seat near the pulpit, and thus addressed the audience:—"The last time I stood in that pulpit, my dear friends, I discoursed to you on the same solemn question; and now my brother, without knowing what I had been doing, has come to ask you again, 'Will ye also be his disciples!' Surely there is some important meaning in this. The gracious Redeemer seems determined ye shall be his disciples, for he is sending you message after message to the same intent. And can you resist? Where can you find a better master? Who are so happy as his disciples? How will you answer to him when he shall come to judge you, if, after all his entreaties, you refuse to be his disciples? And for wht do you refuse?—have you no need of his instructions? What! not to learn the way of salvation? the road to heaven? And who teacheth like him? Oh, surely if at first you refused, you will comply on this second message, and you will also be his disciples.'

It is unnecessary to say that this bold and benevolent step, out of the common road, produced a mighty and happy effect. And why should we confine ourselves so much to a beaten path! Let our deviations from the ordinary course be prompted by pure principle, and conducted by the meekness of wisdom, and then, however bold, and startling, or even dangerous, they may appear we need not dread their results.

REVIVALS.

Nine Days Meeting at Bennington.—Mr. James Ballard, Principal of Bennington Seminary, in a letter to the editor of the Vermont Telegraph, under date of July 5th, giving intelligence of the results of a nine days meeting held with the Congregational church in that place, commencing on the 22d June, says:—(N. Y. Obs.)

On Sunday, June 12th, the church, during the interval of divine worship, consulted together on the propriety of calling a four days meeting. The expediency of such a meeting being questioned, on the ground that there were difficulties in the chh. which ought first to be settled, it was proposed that the ensuing Thursday should be spent in humbling ourselves before God for our past sins, for our unchristian conduct towards each other, and the unholy example we had set before the world. After coming together and praying over our unhappy condition as a church, it was voted to call the proposed meeting. The church, however, was in so cold, and stupid, and divided state, that very few had faith to believe there would be any good result. It had been nearly five years since this church had been refreshed with a shower of divine grace, and for about eight months we had been destitute of the preaching of the gospel. Still there were some wrestling Jacobs, who felt strongly convinced that God would interfere in this hour of extremity and darkness, to vindicate his long insulted honor and to display the riches of his grace.—Morning prayer meetings were established more than a week before the meeting commenced, and although few at first went up to the temple, yet those few seemed to be blessed with the spirit of earnest, agonizing prayer.

The audience on the first day of the meeting was thin. Although several ministers had been invited to conduct the meeting, only three were present. On the second day the congregation considerably increased, and it was evident by the solemnity of the assembly, that the Spirit of God was there, striving with many hearts.—Those who were aroused to a sense of their lost condition while out of Christ, and felt desirous to have an interest in the prayers of Christians, were requested to rise.—As many, I should think, as fifty immediately rose. The church, at the request of one of the ministers, renewed their covenant, & we humbly hope resolved that they would never wander away so far from God, and happiness and hope. From this deeply interesting moment the Holy Spirit seemed to be granted without measure.

During the intervals of service, the church, brethren and sisters apart, held prayer meetings, making anxious sinners the subjects of special prayer. This measure seemed to have an irresistible tendency to unite the hearts of the sisters, and to make them feel that a deep responsibility rested on them, as well as on the brethren.

At the close of the seventh day, at the request of the church and many anxious sinners to continue the meeting, the ministers expressed their willingness to labor a little longer with us, provided it should be the wish of all the congregation. On calling for an expression of feeling, the whole assembly simultaneously arose.

On the 9th day, those who conducted the meeting feeling that it would not be advisable on the whole to have it continue longer, made preparation to bring it to a close. The last hour of the meeting was deeply solemn and interesting. If ever there was a scene upon earth which the inhabitants of the heavenly world could contemplate with interest, it seems as if this were that scene. More than a 100 who hoped that they had just begun to lisp forth the praises of Jesus, and now more than 200 that felt desirous to know what they must do to be saved, came forward. Before the last prayer, all among the inquirers who felt determined that moment to submit to Jesus, were requested to rise. A large number, I should think 100, expressed this determination. The meeting was concluded after singing the 83d of the Village Hymns. While the hymn was sung, it seemed as if we had bid adieu to earth, and stood in the very audience chamber of the Deity.

Among the converts are several persons of advanced years, & many of the principal inhabitants in the place. The work, we trust, did not terminate with the meeting. Several individuals who were in distress when the meeting closed, are now rejoicing in hope. Last Sabbath was a day of deep and solemn interest. It was our communion. While the members of the church were commemorating the dying love of Jesus, the young converts were requested to sit in a body, that they might also join with us in spirit, in celebrating the sufferings of our common Saviour. A large number presented themselves, I dare not say how many, but so many that an aged servant of God, (Dr. Griffin,) who was present with us, remarked that if half that number had become real christians within two weeks, it was a more wonderful work of grace than he had ever before witnessed or known of, though he had anxiously watched the progress of revivals for more than 40 years.

Our exchange papers contain every week, long lists of places visited by copious effusions of the Spirit of God. The accounts are generally brief, &, in their main characteristics, resemble each other. And why should they not? Every where, the great instrumental cause is the same—The same spirit accompanies the truth of God, and renders it effectual—The same resistance is offered in the natural opposition of the human heart—The same obstacles are to be overcome—And the results are the same. We seldom or never hear of a revival, where the preaching is not faithful, pointed, evangelical—where prayer is not fervent, frequent, and humble— where religious conversation does not turn upon Christian responsibility, or the importance of personal and experimental interest in the great salvation—where there is no deep anxiety on the part of Christians for those who have no hope, and who are without God in the world—where there is no secret nor public renewal of covenant obligations—where both Minister and people are together at ease in Zion— and where there is no vigorous and peculiar effort for the advancement of the kingdon of Christ. But reverse the picture, and you will soon hear that sinners are inquiring what they must do to be saved. You will soon learn that converts are made, and that many have been brought to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. The means and the end seem as intimately connected in the dispensations of grace, as in the ordinary operations of life. If these things be so, let Christians inquire why it is that the dews of mercy do not fall upon the parched portions of God's inheritance where they dwell.—Charleston Obs.

GREAT REVIVAL AT WASHINGTON CITY.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Observer, gives a very long and interesting account of a revival of religion at Washington city. We have only room for the following extracts. (A Four Days Meeting was held in Mr. Davenport's church about the middle of April.) After detailing the progress of the meeting, in which intelligent laymen were very active and efficient, the writer says—

Upon sinners was pressed the duty of immediate repentance—the danger of delay—and benefits of speedy compliance with the terms of mercy. Invitation after invitation was urged by minister after minister, and sealed by prayer after prayer. Anxious seats were provided to give opportunity to any who decidedly wished for an interest in the prayers of the saints.—On the fourth night about sixty persons thus presented themselves—the gay and the grave—the young and the old—the proud and the poor—the scoffer and the infidel, and the drunkard. This was a solemn night. It sounded like the last offer of mercy before the revelation of God's righteous judgment, when christians sang:

Now is the accepted time,
Now is the day of grace,
Now sinners come without delay
And seek the Saviour's grace.

* * * * * * *

The presence of the Holy Ghost was so manifest at our meetings, of which I gave you an account above, that we resolved to continue them in two or three of the churches daily for a number of successive days. This was done with auspicious promise and most happy effects.—In many respects it was a prevailing influence. The great stone thrown into the political waters here, ruffling them to the extremities of the land, was unheeded by us. We are so near the crater of politics, it is no curiosity to us. We esteem ourselves happy if we can escape the burning lava that boils over, and are glad to find refuge in the devotional exercises of animated religious meetings. I remember to have met at one anxious meeting about two hundred persons. There was a striking instance of the conversion of a young profligate, who made a mock of religion and set at defiance the authority of God. His friends had despaired of him, but man's extremity is God's opportunity.

There was a great deal of visitation from house, with many tears and prayers. When the most earnest and pungent admonitions seemed lost on the obdurate hearer, there was one thing which almost always melted the heart—a prostration on the knees before God in fervent prayer. About 140 have thus far joined the churches—principally the First and Fourth. In the others a pleasing work has been in progress, which, it may be expected, will result in the salvation of many souls. Meantime the two churches in Alexandria have shared in the descending mercies of heaven; and, last of all, at a 4 days meeting in Georgetown, to which the members of the Presbytery of the District were invited, and at which they officiated alternately, the Spirit came down with power, and filled all the place. As many as one hundred were at one time on the anxious seats. We permit ourselves to hope that the work is but begun. Much has been done. Unspeakably more remains to be done.

The Episcopalians in Alexandria have recently had similar meetings, and I believe those in Baltimore. At the former place, Rev. Bishop Moore, and Messrs. Bedell, Henshaw, of Baltimore, Jackson, of Virginia, and others, officiated, and a blessed revival has followed their exertions. Many a gay plume that was tossing in the air is said to have drooped mournfully towards the dust. Mr. Tyng, of Philadelphia, preached a number of sermons in Baltimore, with great evangelical energy, and large numbers have been added to the communion of St. Peter's. Trinity Church in this city has had a respectable accession of communicants.

You will be gratified to learn that among the twenty individuals who united with the First Presbyterian Church, in Baltimore, on Sabbath week, was the Hon. WILLIAM WIRT, who has now made a public profession of religion. The very lovely daughter of Mr. W., who died last winter amid the bloom of 16, happened to leave a recorded resolution to join the communion of the same church at its next celebration, which occurred after her death. It never came to her! A sister united with the father on the late occasion.

IN WARREN, PENN.—A four days religious meeting was lately held at Warren, in this state. From the following article copied from the "Union," of the 21st inst. it would seem to have been marked by the most happy results.—Crawford Messenger.

Our village for the last ten days or more, has exhibited a scene never before witnessed by myself, nor indeed by any one with whom I have conversed. Nor could I have been made to believe it possible, to arouse the feelings of our citizens to that state of constant inquiry and apparent anxiety on the subject of religion, as was manifested during those days. In every part of the village, business was either partially suspended, or wholly at a stand—stores were frequently all closed—public houses, shops, &c. were either closed or passed unobserved—people were seen in groups in every direction, all absorbed in the general inquiry. In short it appeared like a week of Sabbaths, or the day of an eclipse. To the writer of this it was like a mighty torrent sweeping all before it. Meetings still continue. Let it result as it may, the appearance of our village is changed, for the better so far, no one denies. It has healed former animosities between neighbors—joined in mildness the hands of enemies, and given an example of charity and kind feeling between families, who for the first time learned they were neighbors.

MAINE.—In North Yarmouth God is working wonders among his people, and we rejoice to say his work continues. Fourteen were recently received into the fellowship of the church.—Forty-six have been baptized since the revival commenced, and more than seventy have manifested a hope, as the fruits of this good work.

On the Isle of Holt, there has lately been a gracious work of the Spirit of God. In the last winter and spring, 55 have been baptized, on the profession of their faith; and it is charitably hoped, that one half the adults have experienced a gracious change.

A letter from Rev. Joseph Ballard, pastor of the Baptist church in South Berwick, to a friend in this town, dated July, 1831, states, that he baptized 16 persons on the 1st Lord's day in this month, making 122 added to this church the past year, prior to which period it consisted of but 52 members. Others are expecting to come forward soon, and [illegible] Hamp. Obs.

Three Days Meeting at Unionville.

MR. ISHAM,—

The state of Religion in Madison and Unionville has been more interesting than usual for three months past. More than twenty expressed some hope in Christ, and others were anxious to know what they should do to be saved, previous to the Three days Meeting at Unionville, which was protracted to six days, and closed the 26th of June. The meeting continued with great & increasing interest, but was suspended on Saturday, and ministers returned home to keep the Sabbath with their respective congregations. Both churches and societies in Madison and Unionville assembled together on the Sabbath. Rev. Mr. Austin was present and took a part in the services. It was so evident the Spirit of God was moving upon the hearts of saints and sinners, that it was thought expedient to continue the meeting on Monday. From one hundred and fifty to more than two hundred attended each inquiry meeting; and more than thirty in the course of the meetings, express'd some hope that they believ'd in Christ, and received remission of sins. A considerable number in the inquiry meeting were from Geneva, and a few from other places; the majority were from Madison and Unionville. Several, since the meeting have entertained a hope that they have been "born of the Spirit," many others are still solicitous respecting their salvation. The members of the Bible class, without exception, have become more or less seriously impressed, and a greater proportion of them have become hopefully pious, than of any other class in society of an equal number.

The exercises of the meetings each day were similar to those in most other places. The third day of the meeting the congregation was so large, (more than a thousand probably,) and our accommodations not very good, that those who were solicitous for their salvation, were invited in the afternoon to repair to the hall; more than two hundred immediately crowded it full; and the Rev. H. Cowles preached to them an appropriate sermon, from Acts vii. 51. "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost."—It was one of the most solemn meetings which I ever expect to see, before I stand at the judgment seat of Christ.

Rev. W. Childs preached a sermon at the same time to the other congregation.

Several brethren, ministers and others, possessed a spirit of prayer in an eminent degree. There was, apparently, a number of signal answers to prayer. One day of the meeting a pious mother came trembling and said to me, she wished that her eldest son might be prayed for particularly, for I am afraid, she added, if he rejects the Holy Spirit through this meeting, he will be lost. No name was mentioned, but her request was complied with—the young man was present and came to the meeting as he afterwards remarked, determined not to hear what the ministers said; but he did hear, and that day became convicted of his guilt and danger, and in the afternoon went into the inquiry meeting so overwhelmed with a view of his situation, that he could not speak, and went home rejoicing in hope of eternal glory. Another young man in the assembly, somewhat awakened, felt confident that the request came from his mother, and so increased his distress, that he was unable to sustain it, and was for considerable time, prostrated on his seat, and his strength taken away; the same day he hopes that he submitted to Christ, and is now propounded for admission to the church. Other cases of uncommon interest, in which individuals were particularly prayed for might be mentioned, but it is unnecessary. We know that God is willing to give his Holy Spirit to them, who ask him.

Yours very respectfully,
C. BURBANK.

THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD.

In this state, there have been more than twenty three days' meetings, and in the United States probably, more than three hundred. In all instances, which have come to our knowledge, they have been attended or followed, with the special influences of the Holy Spirit, and a revival of religion. God has so distinctly, put his mark of approbation upon these meetings, by displays of his rich grace and power, that, wherever there is a church of Christ and they are prepared by union, humility, faith, and a spirit of prayer, they may reasonably expect a revival, where such meetings are holden. The divine presence has been uniformly manifest, and in some instances so apparent, that the people of God have hesitated to close them, at the end of three, or four days, the time appointed. The approbation of God, the presence of the Saviour, and the special influences of the Holy Ghost, have been so clear, that the friends of the Redeemer's cause, have been constrained to continue them, not only four, seven and nine, but, in some instances, even to thirteen days. And in no case, has this gracious influence been withdrawn, during the time of the meetings, if ever so long, but, on the other hand, it has been constantly increased with marked power.

Now, if these remarks are true, what prevents a revival of religion, in every society, and church of Christ in this state? If they may be enjoyed in this state they may in every part of the world, where Christ has a true church.—And if God continues his smiles, and displays his sovereign power, so long as these meetings are continued, what prevents the renovation of a whole society, and every society? God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. He is an omnicient omnipresent Being. He sees all his creatures, knows all their wants, and hears all the prayers of his children, and will answer them, so far as shall be to his glory, and the good of his church. What he has done, he may do again; what he promises, he is not slack to perform. All hearts are in his hands; he has all power in heaven, and on earth; he will accomplish his purposes of mercy, bring in his elect, and make his people willing in the day of his power. And it seems from what God has done, and is now doing, this is the day of his power; this is the way, and these are the means, by which the church is to be enlarged throughout the world. We ask then, what prevents the conversion of the whole world? Does it not depend, upon the preparation, and course adopted by the church? What church can say, they cannot have a revival, if they possess a suitable spirit, and pursue the course for that purpose, which God has sanctioned and blessed? Let ministers of the Gospel look at this. Is there not an immense responsibility, resting upon professors of religion? If there is not a revival of religion, in every church, and society, the only reason is, they are not prepared for it, they do not sincerely desire it, and consequently, do not adopt those means, which God, in infinite wisdom and goodness, has determined to use, to effect the object.

They were too angry to submit.

There are many causes operating to prevent the submission of inquiring sinners. It is not unfrequently the fact that those, who have long felt deep anxiety, become exceedingly angry, and therefore refuse to submit. They have long felt unmingled distress, have been disappointed in all their plans, have found no permanent consolation in their self-righteous efforts and have made the painful discovery that their Christian friends cannot save them. They find no new way of salvation, are disgusted with the plain and faithful exhibitions of the truth, and being unwilling to yield to the terms of the Gospel, they fear that their souls will never be cheered with the joys of pardon. In this state they feel that they have no friends on earth or in heaven, and that they shall be friendless forever. They know they are pursuing a guilty, miserable course, full of present pain, and leading to future woes, but still they are too wilful to turn and live. At length they become angry with themselves, and with every being in the universe. Oh awful state, full of guilt and wretchedness! A state of peculiar danger, which often proves the solemn crisis, when the soul takes it unchanging course for a happy or for a miserable eternity. Often have I watched the anxious sinner, who was in this solemn state—watched him with the most trembling anxiety. Some are in this way lead to new and painful discoveries of the desperate wickedness of their own hearts. They are alarmed at themselves, and tremble lest a holy God should punish their dreadful wickedness, by plunging them into the hottest flames of eternal hell! Thus alarmed, thus trembling in view of their amazing vileness, they are led to feel that God will not long keep them out of hell-burnings! The conclusion presses upon them, with awful power, that they must submit now or never—must submit now, or soon the door of hope will be shut, the call of pardoning mercy no more be heard; but they soon enter upon those torments, which shall never cease! Under this distress, and these forebodings of the wrath of God, they are driven to self-despair; and feeling that they must submit or perish, they cast themselves on the mercy of God; and light, and peace, and consolation fill their souls. Thus their depravity is baffled and subdued by its own rage.

But with many this is a sealing time for hell. Unbumbled in view of their astonishing wickedness, repining against that God who has bestowed on their fellows greater blessings than on themselves, they add stubbornness to their rebellion, and awaken within themselves a hardihood of soul, which refuses to yield in view of the alluring treasures of the upper world, or the terrible forebodings of impending damnation! In this state of awful guilt and unyielding obduracy, we have reason to fear that many sinners reject the last proffers of mercy, and seal the ruin of their deathless souls! Because they feel angry with God, or man, or both, they are determined that they will not now submit—now embrace Christ, they presume on a convenient season to come; and all as though they thought that God was under obligation to continue the proffers of his grace, until they are ready and willing to submit. But they indulge their stubborn angry feelings, until the unchanging frown of God settles upon their future prospects, till they are ruined forever!

Let the anxious sinner then beware, let him attend to the solemn caution: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God." Let him tremble at the thought of grieving the Spirit of grace to depart, of ruining his soul at that very crisis, that brief season of the most thrilling interest, and awful importance, when the Saviour stands with the proffers of mercy, when Christian friends and the Word and Spirit of God all urge him to accept that solemn, awful crisis, when he is called on to make the great, the last choice, the choice between heaven and hell! MISSIONARY.

CEYLON.

From the July number of the Missionary Herald we make the following extracts.

JOINT LETTER FROM THE MISSIONARIES, DATED DECEMBER 1, 1830.

Unusual attention to religion at the stations.—The mission of the Board in Ceylon, which was begun in the year 1816, has been making a very constant, and with the exception of one or two periods of special divine favor, very uniform progress. By means of public preaching, the distribution of the Scriptures and tracts, and the influence of the Seminary, and the preparatory and other schools, together with the familiar intercourse with the Missionaries around them, much knowledge respecting the character and claims of christianity, and respecting the absurdity of their own religious systems and prejudices, has been disseminated.—Previous to the year 1824, thirty four natives were hopefully renewed by the Holy Spirit, and received into the mission church. During the first three months of that year, the mission was visited by very special divine influences, and sixty or seventy, it is believed, were savingly converted to Christianity; forty-one of whom, were shortly after added to the mission church.—Near the close of the same year, another time of refreshing was experienced, and eight or ten more were added to the professed followers of Christ. The number of church members has been increased from time to time by the addition of others, till by the last statement received the church contained 114 members. A number had died in the faith. The beginning of the first of these revivals, was traced to a day of fasting kept by the missionaries; that of the second, to a communion season of the church; that, of which some interesting statements are given here, seems to have begun in a prayer meeting.

It is a most pleasing duty, which we have to perform at this time, to communicate to you, from this distant land, the joyful tidings that God is reviving his work, in a greater or less degree, at all our stations, and granting us a season of refreshing from his presence. It is now about six weeks since we first witnessed manifest tokens of a special divine influence upon the minds of a few in our assemblies. Perhaps we may even go back as far as the monthly missionary prayer meeting, in October, at Batticotta, for the first appearances of an approaching revival. An unusual degree of feeling was manifest on the occasion, and more than ordinary fervency in prayer, for a revival of the work of the Lord among us. "O Lord revive thy work," was a prayer frequently, and I trust sincerely and earnestly, offered on that day. Our own children were very particularly addressed, and remembered at the throne of grace. The effect upon the minds of some of them appeared to be very salutary. From that time an increased seriousness was manifested in some of our families.—But nothing very marked until the quarterly season of communion at Panditeripo, on Thursday, the 21st of October. It was very evident that God was near us; that he was stirring up his children to repentance, to humiliation, to prayer, and to increased diligence and zeal, to labor in his service. It was a heart searching season, as well as a time of love, and mercy.—[illegible] members of the church, appeared [illegible] such an impulse, as by the blessing of God, to rouse from their slumbers, and prepare them for the coming of their Lord.

From Panditeripo, two of the brethren went to Batticotta to labor in the Seminary. Such was their encouragement, that they continued their special exertions, through Friday and Saturday, and one of them through the Sabbath. It now became manifest, that God was reviving his work in the Seminary. On Saturday, a special season of prayer and thanksgiving was held by the brethren present, with reference to this object. On the forenoon of the Sabbath, instead of the usual exercises in the Chapel, the time was spent in earnest exhortation and prayer. The afternoon was spent by the brethren present, in special prayer for the divine blessing. In the evening another general meeting was held in the chapel. The work of God was evidently advancing. A considerable number in the seminary, who, a few days before, were careless and secure in sin, were more or less anxious to inquire their way to heaven. The members of the church were much excited to labor, and pray for the conversion of those around them. Some, in particular, who for a few months past, had appeared to be in a lukewarm state, were greatly roused from their lukewarmness and stupidity, by repentance, and confession, and earnest prayer, returned unto God. The studies in the Seminary, for a time, were nearly suspended, to give opportunity for all who desired, to seek the Lord. It was indeed a cheering, and affecting sight, to behold all the ten little rooms lighted up for prayer, till after midnight, and nearly filled with little companies earnestly engaged in reading the Scriptures, in exhortation and in prayer.

On Monday evening some of the brethren and sisters were at Batticotta at the prayer meeting, which came in turn at that station. It was a most interesting and solemn season. Our children were again particularly remembered at the throne of grace. We mention this, because the occasion appeared to be greatly blessed to them. We hope it was a night that one or two of them, at least, will remember throughout eternity.—But on this subject we rejoice with trembling, lest our hopes should be disappointed.

The quarterly meeting with our schoolmasters was to be held on Thursday, the 28th of October, at Manepy. But on account of the state of things in the Seminary, it was held at Batticotta. A large number of schoolmasters, and many others connected with our station, and also, from Nellore, were present, so that the Chappel was filled, with a very attentive and interesting congregation. It was a day which will long be remembered by all present. All the brethren, together with some of our native assistants, addressed the meeting with much apparent effect. Some were in tears. Many who came there in the morning, careless, and stupid, were greatly alarmed for their safety.—We have heard from different schoolmasters since, that the manner in which they were addressed on that day, made a deep impression on their minds, in favor of Christianity.

These favorable appearances, were, by no means confined to Batticotta. Very evident tokens of the divine presence were seen at all our stations, especially at the Charity Boarding School, at Tillipally and Odoville. Many very precious meetings have been held at all our stations, when it was manifest that the Lord was present. On the fourth of November, we observed a day of fasting and prayer, at our several stations, in which our native members united. We found it good and profitable, to draw near unto God, and to humble ourselves before him.

On the first Tuesday evening in November, the brethren and sisters, together with our friends from Nellore, met Oodooville, according to a previous appointment, for the purpose of uniting with our friends in America in praying for the young men under the American Education Society; also for our Colleges and Seminaries of learning, that God would pour out his spirit upon them, and raise up a multitude of faithful laborers to go forth into the great harvest of the world. We had a very interesting and profitable evening, and propose to continue to observe the evening every month, as a season of prayer for this great and glorious object, which is so intimately connected with the spread of the Redeemers kingdom.

On the 18th of November, we held another meeting of a novel kind at Oodooville, consisting of most of the largest boys and girls in our native free schools. At least 800 were present on the occasion, which was one of great interest to us all. When the question was asked, how many of you are in the habit of daily prayer and reading the Scriptures? a considerable number rose up. These were then taken into another room by themselves, where they were conversed with, and exhorted to persevere in the practice of praying and reading the Scriptures. When the question was asked the others, how many of you believe in the truth of Christianity, and are resolved to seek for salvation through Christ! a much larger number immediately arose. When we consider that these children have already considerable knowledge of Christianity, and that they will soon take the lead in society, in this district, the question whether they shall be Christians or idolaters, is one of amazing interest and importance.

The stations of Oodooville and Manepy, being near to each other, have united in holding a weekly prayer meeting, at which the brethren and all the native members connected with the two stations, and as many others as can be collected, attend. Many short prayers are offered, and addresses made on the occasions, which have been productive of great apparent benefit to those present. The brethren at all the stations, are in the habit of going into each others parishes, to assist in holding evening meetings in the school bungalows, at which many people attend and hear the glad tidings of salvation.

We see much to encourage us to persevere in the great and glorious work of preaching the gospel; and we pray that we may be kept in a prayerful, humble, waiting posture, till the Lord shall show us greater things than these.

We dare not at present give the number, even of those who are awakened at our several stations, much less of those whom we hope are converted. We shall be much better able to speak with accuracy on this subject a few months hence. We wish, also, to caution our friends against misunderstanding what we have stated. While in the fullness of our hearts, we tell them of the favorable appearances we are permitted to witness, we wish to guard ourselves and our friends against the disappointments that may arise from seeing many of the three first kinds of hearers mentioned by our Saviour in the parable of the sower, and but comparatively few of the fourth. We consider the work as only just begun. The battle is only set in array. It is yet to be fought—and may the Lord grant us a glorious victory.

AMERICAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Proposed enlargement of several Missions.

In view of the exigencies of the missions and of the treasury of the Board, the Prudential Committee, early in the present year, adopted resolutions to the following purport.

1. That it was exceedingly desirable to send, within eighteen months, about twenty missionaries into the different fields already occupied, to some extent, by the Board, viz. three or four to the East Indies—at least six to countries supplied from the Mediterranean mission—as many as six or seven to the Pacific Ocean—and three to the Indian tribes of this country.

2. That no measures could with propriety be adopted, which would increase the present debt of the Board.

3. That the Committee confidently believed the Christian community to be so much interested in missions to the heathen, that sufficient pecuniary means could be obtained for sending out 20 new missionaries, and even a greater number within a year and a half.

From September 1, 1830 to March 31, 1831, or the first seven months of the current financial year, the receipts into the treasury of the Board had been only $45,000. Supposing the receipts of the five following months to be in the same proportion, the income for the year would be only $79,000. Last year it was $83,000; and then it fell nearly $30,000 short of the necessary expenditures. So that there was likely to be an impossibility in the way of sending out new missionaries, unless there was an immediate and considerable increase of liberality in the friends of the cause. It would require nearly $100,000 to meet the unavoidable expenses of the current year, and to pay the balance owed by the Board when the financial year commenced; and an additional sum of considerable amount, before the close of the year 1831, to meet the cost of sending fifteen or twenty missionaries and their wives to remote fields.

The case was rendered more urgent by another fact. The prayers of God's people for a greater number of laborers to be employed in the heathen world, which so many of them had been long sending up to heaven, had been so far answered, that three-fourths of the number of missionaries above stated were not only accepted by the Prudential Committee, but would complete their studies in the ensuing autumn, and many of them were then anxious to know at what times and to what places they could be sent.

A series of statements was, therefore, addressed to the patrons of the Board, through perhaps a dozen of the religious newspapers, respecting the necessities and claims of the missions and missionaries of the Board; and written circulars on the subject were sent to clergymen in different parts of the country, and oral addresses were made to congregations in some of the important cities, and to several ecclesiastical bodies.

The result has been, through the blessing of God, that the necessities of the Board have to some extent, arrested the attention of the benevolent; and a feeling of interest has been developed in many places, which, though it has not yet furnished the means of reinforcing the missions, encourages the hope that the means will be afforded. There is an actual increase in the receipts from some parts of the country, and the Committee are assured that reliance may be placed on an increase in some other parts. Nowhere, however, has there been such an advance, as to render it unnecessary that there should be a similar advance in all places, from whence the Board is accustomed to receive patronage.

Meanwhile the time is passing away, and the season is drawing near, when reinforcements should be sent to several of the missions.

It was stated that three new missionaries were required for the Indian tribes of this country. Two of these have not only received their designation, but are now on their way to the south-western shores of Lake Superior, the country of the Chippeways—circumstances, which need not here be detailed, having made it necessary for them to cut short their preparatory studies a little, and hasten their departure.—The third has received his designation, and is expected to enter upon his missionary duties in the autumn, among the Indians in the state of New York.

With regard to the other fields, also, the Committee have resolved to act upon the belief, which they have, that the churches will sustain them in following the course so manifestly pointed out to them by divine providence. Since missionaries are so much needed, and since so many are at command, they have resolved to send them out, with as as little delay as possible, and as nearly as may be in the following proportions; viz. two, including a physician to Palestine, for a new station—one with a view to the Armenians of Asia Minor—two for the Greeks of the Levant—five for the East Indies—and six or seven, including a physician, for the Sandwich Islands, and the Northern Marquesas or Washington Islands. A printer will, also, be needed for the Sandwich Islands.

It is obvious that circumstances, now unforeseen, may considerably modify the plan of these contemplated reinforcements, as to number and proportions; but the plan described is the basis of present arrangements.

The only reasons for solicitude appear to be these two.

1. Lest the pecuniary means necessary for sending out these reinforcements should not be seasonably afforded.—The missionaries already in the field, and their families, and their schools, and the operations of the printing establishments, must of course be sustained. Even this, as has been seen, will require an advance upon the contributions of last year. Increase the number of missionaries, and there are the expenses of their outfit, passage, residence in foreign climes, and of additional schools, and of more efficient and extended operations of the press. Possibly so much particularity is unnecessary in the statement of these facts, but the due consideration of them at this time, is of the greatest practical importance.

2. The other ground of solicitude is, lest many patrons of the cause—should the treasury of the Board have the means, next year, of meeting the demands which are made upon it—will feel that their donations, for that year, may be dispensed with, either wholly or in part, and will consequently divert the contributions they had been accustomed to make for foreign missions, to other objects. Here is the explanation of most of the past fluctuations and embarrassments not only in the treasury of the Board, but in those of several other great benevolent institutions. Let every donor feel, whatever be the amount of his donation, that his aid to the several great standing objects of Christian charity, ought by all means to be steady. In most instances, it does not cost as much to support missionaries after they are fairly settled in their respective fields, as it does to send them out; but then every addition to the number of the missionaries occasions a proportional increase in the cost of the general system; and there will probably be as loud a call for more missionaries next year, as there is now, and it may be hoped a louder and louder call from year to year, till the earth is filled with the knowledge of the Lord. Every new success increases the demand for new missionaries. When the harvest waves over hill, and valley, and mountain, it must not be suffered to perish for want of reapers. Let every man and every woman, who feels it a privilege to contribute to the cause, feel also a personal responsibility in reference to the uniform advancement of the whole work: then there will be no danger of retrograde movements.

It is unnecessary to say anything to guard against the impressions, that fifteen or twenty missionaries are a great number to send out in one year. It is a small number, whether compared with the ability of the churches, or the immediate claims of the nations we have actually undertaken to evangelize. When will the work be done, at this rate of sending out preachers! The Committee have never yet rejected the services of any suitable man, for want of pecuniary means of sending him who offered to go and preach the gospel to the heathen; and it is most earnestly to be hoped, that a necessity for doing so may never arise. Let all, whom the Lord qualifies for this work, and inclines to engage in it, be sent forth. The churches at home will have none the fewer preachers, for sending many abroad; and if many are sent abroad, from year to year, the reaction, and the direct blessing of God, will be such upon the zeal, activity, and devotedness of our own pastors and churches, that we shall be gainers by our sacrifices; and that will be fulfilled in us, which was spoken in the scriptures of truth. "He that watereth, shall be watered also himself."

The Coroner of Albany states that during the last nine years, he has held double the number of inquests upon persons downed on the Sabbath, than on all the other days of the week.

OBSERVER.
THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1831.

LETTER OF LEWIS TAPPAN ESQ. TO ELEAZER LORD ESQ.

We have just received from a friend in New-York a pamphlet of 24 pages, being a letter addressed by Lewis Tappan Esq. of New York, to Eleazer Lord Esq., on the much agitated and immensely important subject of the Sabbath.

The reason which induced the writing of this letter is substantially this. The Rev. Daniel Wilson had published "Seven Sermons on the Perpetual obligation of the Lord's Day, delivered at the Parish Church of St. Mary's Islington, England. In these sermons the author speaks in terms of high commendation of the efforts that have been made in this country to redeem the Sabbath from profanation. These sermons have been republished in N. York, and have been recommended to the perusal and patronage of Americans, by Rev. Dr. Milnor, by Rev. Leonard Woods, D. D., and in addition to these, is appended to the work, a "Recommendatory Letter" from Eleazer Lord Esq.—Mr. Lord was one of the earliest members, and most zealous promoters of the Society "for the better observance of the Christian Sabbath," and his signature is attached to a Memorial to Congress on the subject of Sabbath Mails. It is important to the correct understanding of the following extracts from the pamphlet of Mr. Tappan, now before us, that the points above stated should be kept distinctly in view. Another important fact should be borne in mind, which is, that the author of the Sermons, (Mr. Wilson) takes a very different ground from that taken by the Petitioners to Congress in this country, asking the repeal of the law requiring the opening of P. Offices on the Sabbath. He not only vindicates the Lord's Day and urges upon his countrymen its value and sacredness, but asks them to petition Parliament "TO ENFORCE THE LAWS FOR ITS OBSERVANCE." Let the reader keep this distinctly before him. Let him bear in mind too, that Mr. Lord's letter which calls forth Mr. Tappan in reply recommends these sermons to the patronage of American christians. Having done this he will be able to understand the consistency of Mr. Lord in the following paragraph. It is indeed this paragraph which particularly produced the animadversions contained in the pamphlet before us. Mr. Lord in his Recommendatory Letter says:

"The public measures adopted within two or three years for promoting a better observance of the Lord's day, having been directed too exclusively to the attainment of civil and secular aids instead of relying on the appropriate aids and sanctions of scriptural instruction and example, have failed to occasion the benefits anticipated by their zealous patrons; and the attention which was awakened to the subject, has, it is feared, in a great measure disappeared."

The first thing to be noticed in the above is, that Mr. Lord charges American Christians with having directed their measures "too exclusively to the attainment of civil and secular aid"—with how good a grace will be better understood when this charge is connected with the fact that Mr. Lord was a promoter of those very measures—a signer of the Sabbath-mail petitions. It was those petitions that so much alarmed the enemies of the Sabbath, and led them to cry out so loudly about a Union of Church and State—and these were the only measures that we have ever heard of, that were charged with being of a secular character. Yet in these Mr. Lord concurred. We confess that it is somewhat mortifying to witness, and to be obliged to record such inconsistency in a man of Mr. Lord's standing. Especially that he should thus countenance and support the opposition in their unjust charges against the motives and designs of the friends of these sabbath measures.

The great object of our opponents has been to impress upon the community the belief that we asked congress to pass a law imposing pains and penalties in favor of the Sabbath—to coerce its observance. That men should not be at liberty to spend the day as they chose—to labor or rest—to travel or suspend their journeying on that day—This foul calumny has been reiterated so often that doubtless some honest men have been led to believe it—thus their hostility to the petitioners and the petitions has been excited, and they have honestly supposed that there was some foul conspiracy on foot endangering their liberties. It is true they have been told a thousand times that no law was asked for—that it was only the repeal of a law or requisition of the General Post Office requiring Post Masters to open the mails on the Sabbath. And not a particle of evidence has ever been produced, or even pretended to be produced, showing that they had any other object. And yet the cry of coercion, the infringement of our religious liberties, and union of church and state, have been sounded with as much confidence as if the people could be gulled by bold assertions in the very face of truth and common sense—as if their appetite for falsehood was insatiable, and they were determined to believe that the repeal of a law requiring the violation of the Lord's Day, was a law inflicting a penalty for its non-observance.

But Mr. Lord further asserts that proper reliance has not been placed on the appropriate aids and sanctions of scriptural instruction and example.

This assertion amounts to about this: our legislature passes a law for holding our elections on the

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

Sabbath, and we must not petition for the repeal of the law. We may pray and talk about it and show that it is wrong, but christians must not publicly and unitedly raise a note of remonstrance—must not ask our legislators to undo their unrighteous doings. Really we did, suppose as our constitution guarantied to the people the right of petitioning, that it could not be deemed an improper reliance upon "secular aid" to avail themselves of that right. In fact we have been taught that praying, and doing, were intimately connected—therefore that when our rulers have trampled on the laws of God and the rights of conscience, we may not only pray that they may see their errors, but that we may in the very mode expressly pointed out by the constitution endeavor to show them that they have erred, and ask them to retract. Indeed we do not believe that it is any evidence of christian humility or meekness to refuse to use our tongues or pens to convince evil doers of the wrong that they have done. Yet Mr. Lord appears to think that in using constitutional means to procure the REPEAL of this oppressive and unholy act, there has not been sufficient reliance upon the appropriate aid and sanctions of scriptural instruction and example.

But the opinions of Mr. Lord as to asking for the interference of congress may be pretty clearly seen—that is, his opinions two or three years ago—from the following clause contained in a petition to that body which he signed.

"We feel that we have a right to look to the government of our country for example; and that those, whom the people have clothed with power will not permit a practice which is continually undermining the morals, and consequently, endangering the liberties of the nation."

Here Mr. Tappan puts the following questions to Mr. Lord.

If, as I presume, neither you, nor your associates, had any intention, not honestly disclosed in your public declaration and acts, how can you stand justified in attributing to them such desires, or, without evidence adduced, of acting in opposition to their avowed purposes? And who are the men supposed to aim at accomplishing a lawful & unexceptionable measure, in a manner so opposed to their plain and reiterated public declarations! Among them were Varick, Jay, Van Rensselaer, Frelinghuysen, Grimke, Grundy, Ralston, Evarts, Bissell, and thousands besides, merchants, manufacturers, counsellors at law, magistrates, legislators, and clergymen. It might have been left to the enemies of religion, and of the Sabbath, to impute motives so at variance with professions, to honorable and pious men.

Again in relation to the consistency of Mr. L., Mr. Tappan remarks:

The friends of the Christian Sabbath in the United States form a society to PRAY, PREACH, and PRINT; and some hundreds of thousands of citizens memorialize or petition the representatives of the people to permit eight thousand postmasters to enjoy the rest and privileges of the Lord's day, in common with their fellow citizens; and a foreign writer publishes a work, in which he boldly declares the legislatures of his country ought to consolidate and enforce the laws of the land, against Sabbath-breakers, with new enactments of severer penalties. And a citizen of this country deprecates the measures of his fellow-countrymen, as aiming to enlist the civil power, and praises the translantic work, as "carrying home to the bosom of the reader the practical lessons and sanctions of the subject!!"

Further remarks of ours, and extracts from this pamphlet we shall defer until next week.

While we regret that a gentleman of Mr. Lord's standing and weight of character, should place himself in the awkward predicament in which he appears before the public, in this business, we are not sorry to see the subject itself again agitated; and if in this case it must be discussed at the expense of Mr. Lord, he can have no just cause of complaint. He has produced the discussion by condemning the measures, if not by impugning the motives, of a large number of intelligent, philanthropic, pious and influential individuals with whom he acted and whose course he approved.

We find that we did great injustice to the Post Master at York, in supposing the package which he mentioned last week as sent back from there, was returned because he could not read the direction. From the similarity of the hand writing in the different endorsements on it, we supposed they were all made at the same office. It appears however that some office this side of York, had sent it three times in that direction, after it was first arrested in its course, by the P. Master at York. He is therefore exonerated from all blame in the case The fact is, this stray package seems to have been a "speckled bird," at which post masters appear to have been very much disposed to peck.

POPERY.

We are gratified in being permitted again to present to our readers a communication from Republicus on the subject of Popery.

The cause of the present letter is a communication which appeared some days since in the Daily Advertizer of this village, signed by a Mr. Buchan cautioning the good people not to believe the facts, which have from time to time, been published in this paper in relation to Catholics.

The article we did not think it worth while to notice, but are pleased to find that our old correspondent Republicus, is again prepared to meet the bold assertions of Papists with facts.

We hope that Mr. Buchan, after such a bold debut will not shrink from an examination of the merits of the question at issue, as did the "Rev. Michael McNamara, Roman Catholic Pastor of this village, on a former occasion.

Republicus will we have no doubt give fair play; and if Catholics are not afraid of the truth—afraid to come to the light—afraid that their people shall read and examine for themselves, we think after the bold challenge, Mr. Buchan has given, he will not decline the investigation which he has so vauntingly challenged.

"An Observer," and "M. N." are received and will be inserted as soon as we can find room in our columns.

THE POLES.

On our last page will be found an account of the splendid achievements of the Poles—but later intelligence gives accounts of a sad reverse. We give some of the details. We cannot pretend to conjecture what is to be the result of this sanguinary war, but one thing is evident, the Poles will not be conquered but by an immense expense of blood and treasure. They have thus far maintained their long established reputation for bravery.

If we understand the posture of affairs since the great battle of Ostrolenka, in which the Poles were compelled to fall back upon Praga, they are far from desperate. The Polish General is blamed for hazarding a battle against so great superiority of numbers, but his reason was, the immense importance of opening a communication with the insurgents of Lithuania, a province of ancient Poland, which is now attached to Russia. In this object Skryzenski has not been wholly defeated.

HON. D. D. BARNARD'S LETTER.

The Letter which we publish this week from the Roch. D. Advertizer, dated at Florence, over the signature of B. is well understood to be from the pen of Danl B. Barnard Esq. of this village, who has just returned from a voyage to Europe, and who has travelled through France and Italy, and has seen the Roman Catholic Religion where it was not necessary for it to assume any disguise. We hope this letter will be read attentively.

INSTALLATION.

The Installation of Rev Wm. Wisner, took place on Thursday of last week, in the 2d Pr. Church in this village. Introductory prayer by Rev. J. Pierson; Sermon by Rev. A. D. Eddy; Installing prayer by Rev. Mr. Myers; Charge to the Pastor by Rev. Mr. Andrews; Charge to the people by Rev. Mr. Mead; Concluding prayer by Rev. Dr. Penney.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Rochester, 1st August, 1831.

To the Editor of the Rochester Observer.

Dear Sir:—I have noticed some days ago another appeal to the public through the columns of the Daily Advertiser, over the signature of James Buchan, similar to those which the Rev. Michael M'Namara issued last year, and designed to make us believe that the Roman Catholic religion is greatly slandered in your columns, and misunderstood by this public. I had the honor of making some overtures to Mr. M'Namara on behalf of this community, inviting him to make good his charge of slander and misrepresentation, which he thought fit to decline, I then, in a few letters, furnished some information on the points in question from authentic sources, viz: the Canons of the Church of Rome, of a recent date, under the signature and sanction of the Pope himself. Of these the Rev. gentleman took no notice. Though he did not think it beneath his dignity to accuse in very bitter terms, yet he excused himself from meeting the accused on the merits of his charges. Now, Sir, we hear the same vague charges echoed by one of his people. He tells you he has books which place the Catholic religion in a favorable light, and would lend them. I dare say, Sir, he has some of those disguised exhibitions, by which Jesuitism is endeavoring to cast dust in the eyes of American citizens, until times and circumstances shall warrant more plainness. But let Mr. Buchan if he modestly declines controversy, at least give us the names of these books on which he relies, and the quotations fairly made on which he grounds his charges of slander, and we will confront them with the authentic documents of the Church of Rome, as published in Italy, where this disguise is not necessary. Nay, but we will undertake, if Mr. Buchan does not choose to remain blinded, to draw aside the veil, and show him how he himself has been cheated into the good opinion he entertains. If I cannot demonstrate to candid men that the Roman Catholic religion is hostile to our liberties, and calculated to keep its people in a condition of intellectual and moral degradation, I will give up the question.

Yours, REPUBLICUS.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Having recently visited West-Mendon, (formerly Norton's Mills), I was particularly interested in the history of the Presbyterian congregation in that village. It is briefly this: In the summer of 1828 public worship in the Presbyterian form was commenced, and the services of Rev. G. G. Sill soon after obtained, who still continues his labors there.

A revival of religion was enjoyed in the winter of 1830—31. On the first of March 1831, a Presbyterian church was formed, consisting of six members. Since that period 92 have been received into the church, twenty-five of whom were upon examination, and most of them subjects of the revival. A Sabbath School Society composed of members of the congregation has been formed, and two schools have been established, one in the village, the other two miles distant, which are prosperous—the two embracing between 90 and 100 scholars. A Tract Society has been formed, and since March distribution made monthly to about 220 families. A neat Session House, very pleasantly located, 40 feet long, 24 feet wide and 14 feet high, has just been completed, calculated to accommodate about 250 persons, and designed to be used as a place of public worship on the Sabbath till the congregation shall be able to erect a church.—An adult Bible Class was formed in the autumn of 1828 which I understand is attended with much and increasing interest. A S. School Library of about the value of $30 has been purchased, and measures are now being taken to obtain a Library of Religious Books, to be called the Church Library.

There are 22 families belonging to the congregation, and there are 18 weekly and 8 monthly religious periodicals taken by them. The Monthly Concert is observed, and the people give as well as pray. They have also a Missionary Society auxiliary to the Assembly's Board of Missions.

What claims admiration is, that a church has so soon, (within five months), grown up, exhibiting all those necessary and useful appendages which we find in an old congregation. H.

A letter from a correspondent dated Palmyra, 27th July, to the editor, says,

Mr. Shepherd has just shown me a letter from Rev. Mr. Nash, a very old preacher, of whom you probably have heard Mr. Finney speak, as an eminently devoted minister of Christ. He says there are revivals now in progress at Augusta, Marshall, and Western, Oneida Co. At Redfield, Oswego Co. there has recently been a revival—between 20 and 30 conversions.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Much has been said of late about christians being unequally yoked together with unbelievers. I mean professed christians marrying unbelievers, and connecting themselves for life with those whose hearts and principles are directly opposite to their own. Now if this be right why is so much said about it, and if it be wrong why do christians indulge themselves in it so much as they do at this enlightened day. Females, perhaps will contend that their offers are 'like angels' visits," few and far between, and rather than spend their days in single blessedness they will accept the offer of an ungodly man, and thus they palliate their guilt. But when the Apostle gave this charge to the Corinthians, "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," did he not address himself to both male and female, and did he not mean as much as when he said "do not err my beloved brethren, avoid the very appearance of evil." Was it not to guard against connections as are now taking on christians at the present day! And if it be wrong and criminal that such connections should take place does not the person who unites them in marriage partake in a measure of the crime of one of the parties! Yours,

Pittsford, July 22, 1831. INFORMATION.

From the Western Recorder

A good story will sometimes go farther towards convincing a superficial thinker of his errors and misapprehensions, than the most formidable array of sound logic.

Some months ago, a gentleman from a distance of several hundred miles, was passing through one of the streets of this village, when he heard from the door of a certain shop, loud censures against the measures adopted in this quarter for the promotion of religion. As the gentleman felt some interest in tracing the origin of such clamnies as have been liberally dealt out against godly men in this region, he went into the shop, and that his real object might not be suspected, busied himself in purchasing a little fruit. The main speaker continued to describe the ABOMINABLE DEEDS of the revivalists. "A short time since," said he—we quote the substance of his language—"they collected all the children they could find in one room, and talked with them about hell. They described it as a dark place, full of fire and brimstone; and when they had frightened the little creatures all they could by words, they led them into an adjoining room, to give them a visible representation of the world of woe. The room was large and dark. The darkness was only here and there broken by a dim smoking lamp, casting its irregular rays on the gloom that surrounded it. Thus the imagination of the children was wrought up into high terror; and the revivalists availed themselves of this fright, to fix the children in their interests."

The stranger turned from the counter, and said to the speaker, "Sir, do you know the house in which this transaction occurred?" "Yes," was his prompt reply. "Will you have the goodness to go with me to the place!" continued the stranger. "I am in too great a hurry, just now." "Did you SEE the occurrence which you describe!" "No: but I was told of it by as good a man as lives." "Will you go with me to the good man, who told you!", "No, I cannot go now." "Will you tell me who he is, that I may call on him, and learn more about this affair?" "You will not—find—him, if you go."—"Why shall I not find him!" "He is—dead." "When did he die!" "About—about—FORTY YEARS AGO!"

Such is the story, the truth of which we presume will not be questioned. But what if the retailers of such calumnies as the above, were always to be subjected to the process of cross-examination? No doubt the witnesses would often prove to have been dead full four years before the reported transactions took place. There is by far too much credulity, even amongst good people, in reference to such calumnies. Many of them, which even find their way abroad into the higher circles, would be found, on inquiry, to have originated in the mere fabrication of some orator of a grocery.

MOURNING APPAREL.

Mr. Editor—In your paper of 2d July is an article extracted from the Berkshire Journal, on the subject of abandoning the custom of wearing mourning apparel. One observation, (not to say dogmatical assertion) which the writer makes is, that "The spirit which dictates innovation is the spirit of a cold and unfeeling philosophy, often mingled with the paltry vanity of affected independence of opinion." Were that observation to be answered in the spirit in which it is made, it might be said, that the spirit which dictates the observance is a servile cowardly disposition to do what others do, without either feeling or common sense. And this would furnish an answer to the difficulty under which the writer labors to find reasons for the custom; the best he seems able to find is antiquity. Its origin it seems to me, may safely be referred to a design in the wearer to tell people how much he feels; than which, no more decisive evidence can be given of a want of feeling. For, one I can say, from experience, that in refusing to follow the custom more than ten years ago, I was strongly actuated by the feeling, that it was so poor an expression of my heart, that it appeared to me to be an intolerable mockery.

The writer labors hard to remove an objection which, I believe, commands the assent of every person of common sense—that, to a large portion of the community, the expense of the custom is a serious evil: and talks much of its benign influence upon the feelings. To my view, its influence on the mind is, in a variety of respects, decidedly pernicious, so much so, that this forms the principle objection to it.

There is another remark to be made on the subject. The abandonment of the custom is congenial with the simplicity with which good sense stamps the manners of the age: and it ought to go with the clerical gown and bands, white wig, and doctorate, which have been so extensively discarded, as unworthy of the dignified simplicity of a minister of the gospel, whose adorning ought to be none else than of the meekness and simplicity of his Divine Master. Z.

The advantages of Temperance.—The brig Globe, Capt. Moore, has just returned to this port (Philadelphia,) from a voyage to the Pacific Ocean. She had on board a crew of ten persons, and was absent near eighteen months: she has been during the voyage in almost all the climates in the world, and had not one person sick on board, and brought the crew all back orderly and obedient. All these advantages Capt. M. attributes in a great measure to the absence of spiritous liquors. There was not one drop used in all that time; indeed there was none on board the vessel.—Phila. Advertiser.

☞ The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon the Rev. JOSEPH PENNEY of this village, at the commencement of Union College, on the 27th ult. If an extensive and accurate acquaintance with the sciences—a chaste and manly eloquence—a polished and vigorous pen—and an active and eminently useful discharge of the duties of his profession, furnish a title to this distinction, we think it is seldom more judiciously bestowed. —Roch. Dai. Adv.

ANOTHER GREAT FIRE.

About 12 o'clock last night a fire broke out in the Oil Cloth Manufactory of Mr. Tice, situated in Eldridge-street, between Rivington and Stanton-streets. The flames spread with great rapidity to the adjoining buildings, and when we left, at 2 o'clock, five two story frame buildings on Rivington-street were destroyed, and eight on the east side of Eldridge-street; with ten or twelve back buildings were also totally destroyed. Three houses on the west side of Eldridge street were materially injured. A large quantity of timber which had been prepared for some buildings going up in Allen street, were entirely consumed. In all between 28 and 30 buildings were destroyed.—N. Y. Spec.

EIGHTEENTH.

Florence, February 23, 1831.

My Dear H.—It has fallen to my lot to pass through a most unhappy scene at Florence. On our arrival here, one of my travelling companions, from a slight cold contracted on the journey, fell sick of a fever and expired on the eighth day.—He was an agreeable gentleman, from Massachusetts, of a highly respectable family, for whom, after a short acquaintance, I had contracted a sincere affection, and I feel his loss the more as we had mutually agreed to complete our travels in Europe in company, and to return together to the United States. I grieve to add, that though quite a young man, he has left at home, besides a numerous, and I doubt not, an attached circle of near relatives, a wife and three children. He died thus suddenly from the most perfect health.—There is a singular fact with which his unfortunate case has made me acquainted, which ought to be generally known; it is that persons who are constitutionally susceptible of nervous or mental excitement, cannot visit an Italian climate without imminent danger. Persons who have ever been mentally deranged, are almost certain to have a return of the disease on coming to Italy. The fact has been observed and seems to be abundantly established, although it does not appear easy to account for it.

On the death of our friend, it became necessary to make a special application to the Grand Duke, in person, for leave to bury him. This was granted on condition that the funeral should take place at seven o'clock in the morning, and not later. To understand the reason of this, it is only necessary to recollect that this is a Catholic country, and the deceased was a Protestant. Any funeral display, as by a procession or otherwise, in open day in the streets of a city, made for the burial of a heretic, if it would not endanger the persons and lives of those present and taking part in the ceremonies, would, at least, call forth the murmurs of the priests and their instruments, and render the Duke unpopular and perhaps hated. The protestant clergyman who attended and read the burial service, dared not even appear in his gown. This would be more tolerable, if the superstition which is encountered was real and sincere. But on the part of a large majority of the priests, at least, it is perfectly well known, that while for their own profit they continue to abuse the minds of the simple and the ignorant, with their damnable doctrines, they themselves are, notoriously, infidels. Their conduct is just such as is to be expected from an order of men, too numerous for the honest pursuit of the proper business of their calling, and whose nakedness must be covered and hunger fed. They will number 10,000 in a city whose entire population does not exceed 60,000, or at most 80,000—and how are they sustained? Why, the great body of them live on the daily contributions which they personally extort from the superstitious fears of the ignorant and the vulgar. The single custom of saying masses for the repose of the souls of the dead, gives support probably to two-thirds of the whole order. So perfect have they made this system of extortion, that a will has come to be held illegal in the courts of the country, which does not provide a fund to pay the priests for these masses. A very common provision by testators in moderate circumstances is that three hundred masses shall be said for the soul, at 10 pauls each mass, beside provision for a funeral. The funeral you must know is a very different matter from the burial. This last is attended with no ceremony whatever. Friends, relatives and priests have nothing to do with it. A few bodies are deposited from time to time under the churches, but generally they are interred without coffins, at a distance from the city, by undertakers, in ground which after a certain time is used over and over again for the like purpose. The funeral, however, which is quite another matter, is celebrated by the priests, in the churches, with great pomp and magnificence—provided the deceased has bequeathed to them a round sum of money for the service. But they will do nothing without the cash. A short time since, a pious catholic lady died at Florence, making provision in her will for charties to the poor of the parish, for a funeral, and for masses, to the value in the whole of $1200, not one paul of which did she possess on earth at the time of her death. It depended of course, on the generosity of her only son, residing at some distance from Florence, whether these sums should be paid or not. The priests were anxious to begin the ceremonies, but the executor of the will, from whom I had this account, refused to become responsible for the payment of any money, until he should have the son's order to that effect. He advised these harpies that the amount would propably be paid, and they might make the funeral and begin the masses, if they pleased, taking the risk upon themselves. This they utterly refused, until the order came from the proper source after several days for the payment of the money, while in the mean time, they constantly beset the poor executor, with endeavoring to wring a promise of compensation from his fears or his humanity, by insisting that he alone was responsible for all the torments which the poor ghost of the lady was suffering in purgatory, and which it must of course continue to suffer until they should pray it out! It is a rule among these fellows that those of them alone, who reside in the parish where the deceased lived and died, shall have the benefit of the will. This rule was plain enough when the individual died at home. But it happened the other day that a citizen of Florence, fell suddenly sick and died out of his own parish. The priests of the parish where he died claimed the funeral and mass money, and the affair was only settled by an appeal to the tribunal of justice, in which a wise decision was had, that the amount should be divided; the larger share however falling to the priests of the parish where the defunct belonged. In the meantime, while the controversy was going on, no funeral ceremony was had, and all the evident torments of the half-damned soul were not enough to draw from the mercy of the priests on either side, one mass for its relief.

Until within four years, the body of a protestant dying at Florence, could not have burial here. As the town was full of English, the death of a protestant here, was an event of not unfreqnent occurrence. The body was always carried for interment to Leghorn, which was a free port, and where leave had been obtained to establish an Episcopal burying ground. Recently the Swiss purchased a small piece of ground just without the walls of this city, and now be the special grace of the Grand Duke, interments there are permitted.

The unusual hour at which the burial of our lamented friend took place—the delightful position of the ground, commanding views of the most picturesque scenery; the stillness and beauty of the morning, and the small number of us who assisted at the ceremony—altogether, made the scene one of peculiar as well as of painful interest. Yours, B.

THE NEW-YORK MARKET.

Flour has been unusually dull during the week, although the receipts are trifling from every quarter. The present warm weather, and the rapid spoiling of flour have induced the holders of some parcels that have been long in store, to press them upon the market; and where a considerable portion of these lots have been branded bad, that which passes as sound has sold from 12½ to 25 cents under the value of the same description lately manufactured. Fresh Western sells at from 5¼ to 5¾ for common and fair brands, and the same brands, that have been in store for more than three months, at about $5. Flour branded bad, continues in some request at $4 to 4¼, according to quality and condition. The stock of all kinds has sensibly decreased of late; but there is still in store much of the early receipts.

FOREIGN.

From the Polish Frontier, May 29.—Accounts from the theatre of war state that the Polish commander-in-Chief was attacked by Marshal Diebitsch on the 26th inst. at Ostrolenka, when a sanguinary battle ensued, in which the Russian army was victorious. Ostralinska was taken by storm by the Russians with astounding bravery. The division of the Polish General Gielgud, which stood at Lonza, has been cut off by the movements and successes of the Russian army. The Poles acknowledge their own loss in killed and wounded to amount to four thousand men. Among the killed are Generals Kick and Kaminski, and a number of Staff Officers. The headquarters of the Polish Commander in chief were on the 27th again at Pultusk.

Warsaw, May 28th (in the evening.)—In the battle of Ostrolinska, on the 26th, both armies fought with an inveterncy unexampled. The oldest Generals have no recollection of so sanguinary a combat. The result is, that general Skrzynecki has again to-day fixed his head quarters in Praga. Among the killed on the side of the Poles are Generals Kicki and Kaminski, and Lieut. Col. Gazenski. Twenty thousand men, on one side or the other, are said to have remained on the field of battle.—Quarter was out of the question, the chief work was performed with the bayonet. The Russian Guards were in action, and displayed great bravery.

Berlin, June 1.—It was lately my pleasing task to give you a slight sketch of the rapid and glorious triumphs of the Polish troops; but alas! the inconsistency of fortune is proverbial and even the stupendous efforts of this army of heroes proved insufficient to win her exclusive favor. The last accounts from Poland are of the most distressing nature. General Dwernicki having effected his union with the guards, crossed the Narew on the 26th of May, and fell with his whole forces on the Polish army, under Skrzynecki, in the neighborhood of Ostrolenka. The Poles, although attacked by an enemy so far superior in number, were true to their ancient renown, and performed prodigies of valor. The oldest generals on both sides, it is said, actually astonished at the animosity, almost bordering on frenzy, which prevailed in both armies, and many have declared that in the whole course of their military career they never witnessed such a furious engagement. From the imperfect information we have received, it would appear that in consequence of the great multitude of the enemy, which continued like an overbearing torrent to pour down on the devoted Poles, the Generalissimo gave the signal for retreating not without having made the Russians pay dear for the advantage they had obtained. Indeed, it has been reported, but I know not with what truth, that the number of killed on the side of the Russians was greater than on the side of the Poles.—No prisoners were taken during the battle, and the number of dead on both sides amounted to 20,000. It is stated in some accounts that the Poles had only 4,000 men killed, among whom were Generals Kicki, and Kaminski, Colonel Goyenski and several other officers. Among the wounded were generals Boxuslowski, Pac, Skrzynski, Malachowski, and a great many staff officers. It is, no doubt, difficult, until the arrival of more ample information, to form a confident opinion on this subject; but the sudden retreat of the Generalissimo, who on the 27th had transferred his head quarters to Pultusk, and on the following day to Praga, does not augur well for the Polish cause. The Russian troops have re entered Ostrolenka, and the Polish General Gieulgud is, in consequence of these movements, cut off from the main army. Thus, by one of those great vicissitudes common in human affairs, are the Poles, who only a few days ago were driving before them the troops of the Autocrat, and had forced them to abandon their frontiers, preparing again to defend the walls of their capital. It is a subject of regret to many that Skrzynecki should have accepted battle against the whole forces of Diebitsch, when he might have inflicted a great injury on the enemy; well aware of his perilous position, without the risk of a general engagement. But in the absence of more accurate information, this opinion must not be relied upon, and may, perhaps, be the offspring of disappointment.

Ten days later—Success of the Poles!

☞ The last N. Y. Spectator, 2d edition, contains news from Europe, by the packet ship President, ten days later than the foregoing. Among the passengers were Lewis M'Lane late minister to England, and family. Fresh disturbances had occurred in France, from which trouble was apprehended. We have room to day for only the following account from the seat of war, more favorable to the cause of Poland.

THE POLISH REVOLUTION.

Some further intelligence has been received from Warsaw dated June 6th, from which it appears that a battle took place on the same day as that of Ostrolenka, in which General Chlapowski, the Polish General, beat the Russians, and gained a complete victory. The General was joined by several thousand of the Bvalystock insurgents near Narewka. He fell in with the Russians in the night, and surprised and completely surrounded them. The Russians lost all their cannon, five in number, and had about 300 men killed; the remainder of the Russians were completely defeated and made prisoners. At Byalostockiey, 120 Russian wagons were taken by the insurgents.—In Vollynia the fortress of Haman fell into their hands, after a well contested sanguinary battle, in which the Russians left 1200 dead on the field of battle. General Rudiger, however, with Krasowski's corps, is at Wolkowice; he had 9,000 men under him, and 30 pieces of cannon. The Russian army had begun to move to the right bank of the Narew. On the 24 instant 10,000 men were encamped at Prasnyz. It seems that General Lubienski, in his retreat from Ciechanowice with 6000 Poles, cut his way through 40,000 Russians!

The Polish State Gazette of June 6, contains two reports of General Skrzynecki, dated from Head Quarters at Praga, on the 1st and 2d of June. The first gives an account of the reasons (which are already known) why the army fought the battle of Ostrolenka, and afterwards retreated to Praga. The second reports that which gives an account of the defeat of a Russian corps in Lithuania as stated above.

TO THE PUBLCIK

The following minute was adopted by the standing committee of this Church, on the 19 inst.

Whereas, a woman, calling herself widow MARGARET NORTON, with a family of 4 children, came into this village in the month of May last, and by pretensions to property, and professions of an intention to purchase a dwelling for a permanent residence in the place, imposed upon the credulity of many of our inhabitants, and run into debt at several of the stores and shops—And whereas, by zealous pretensions of piety, and by a letter of regular church membership,—(purporting to be from a Presbyterian Church in Greene county, Ohio, and probably a forgery,) she offered herself, and was received into the Presbyterian Church in this village—And whereas, she has since proved herself to the conviction of this church and the publick, to be devoid of truth and honesty, and as it is credibly reported that she has a husband now living in Oneida county, and as by her secret departure with her family, from this place on the night of the 11th inst. every doubt in regard to her criminal hypocrisy, and daring imposture—And whereas her daughter Mary Ellen and her son John, professing to have become subjects of Grace, recently, in Vernon, Oneida county, were, upon examination and a profession of their faith, received into this church, but have manifestly been privy to, and aiders and abbetors in much of the wicked conduct of their mother—Therefore

Resolved, That the above named Margaret Norton, and her children, Mary Ellen and John, for the above mentioned criminal conduct, be, and they hereby are, in the name and by the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, excluded from the communion of the church.

Resolved, That we consider it due to other churches and the publick, to have the above minute published in the papers of this village, the Rochester Observer, and such other papers east and west on the line of the canal as may please to give it an insertion.

By order of the standing Committee of the Presbyterian Church of Brockport.

NEW DISCOVERY IN MUSIC.

The effect on persons of good taste of introducing dancing tunes and bacchanalian melodies on solemn occasions, is so well illustrated in the following ironical article, which we published six or seven years since, that we cannot forbear to repeat it, especially as all occasion for the reproof which it contains is not yet removed.—N. Y. Obs.

Mr. Editor—I love to go to church now and then to pass away an idle hour, to see the new fashions, and particularly to hear the music; and I cannot but remark how wonderfully improved we are of late in church music, especially in the choice of our tunes. You can't tell how delighted I was last Sunday, (as I passed by one of the churches, deliberating whether I should go in or not,) when I heard the organ and choir singing in full glee, one of my favorite old Scotch airs, called "Auld lang sine." Sure, thought I, there is some real fun going on in church. I'll go in and see what is the matter. I arrived just in time to join in the latter part of the tune; and being much animated, I sung out with a pretty loud voice,

"We'll tak' a cup o' kindness yet,
For Auld Lang Syne!"

I found the people near me began to stare, and one of my friends whispered to me that I had not got the words of the tune; I begged his pardon, and assured him that I knew "Auld lang sine;" "shall auld acquaintance be forgot!" says I. But you are mistaken my friend, if it was "auld lang sine;" it has been converted into a psalm tune lately, and is now called Rochedale. Converted, says I, I have heard of converting sinners, and converting the heathen, but really I never heard of converting tunes before.

Full of "auld lang sine," I went home and began to think of the matter.—A real good plan thought I, may it be carried on, and our churches will be really jolly places. I thought there might be other tunes as well as "Auld lang sine," that might be converted, and take christian names with a little pains; but what was my astonishment when I found that "Green grow the rushes O!" would go in L. M. without any alteration, (especially if it were christianized by calling it Dragon;) and what is of more importance, our old national song of "Yankee Doodle," is fitted exactly to C. M. Many other tunes, such as "John Anderson my Jo John," "Sandy and Jenny," and "The Old Maid's lament," might all become right regular, and decently behaved tunes, with very little discipline. But the advantages of having "Yankee Doodle" thus converted are very great. First, every body knows it, and could therefore join in singing it. Second, every one might put such words as he pleased to the tune, either the hymn or the original words, and this would be more in accordance with the rights of conscience, than making a man sing just such words as the minister chooses. Perhaps some may object to "Yankee Doodle," that if it were sung in chh. strangers loitering near the churches, not hearing the words of the Psalm, might mistake the church for the ball-room, to this it would be sufficient to answer, not more than if they sung "Auld lang sine." But I have a better answer; is it not obvious, that if these loiterers hear such tunes, they will be induced to go into church, where we wish to get them; and that these tunes are like cheese in a mouse trap to bait these vermin? Again, it may be said, that all our associations with Yankee Doodte are of the light and frivolous kind, and that hearing it in church, would only excite the same feelings, by a natural association of ideas, and that the tune being so merry, and the words of the Psalm so solemn, there would be a disagreeable inconsistency. To the former objection, I answer, that "it is a poor rule that won't work both ways," and if the association of ideas has any thing to do with it, it is just as likely we shall have solemn ideas when we hear Yankee Doodle in a ball-room, from having heard it in church, as the contrary. As to the latter objection, I say analogy is against it; we all know that that most delicious beverage called Punch owes its chief excellence to the union of contraries, of weak and strong, and sweet and sour; now I contend that a solemn Psalm sung to Yankee Doodle, is calculated on this very principle of contrariety, to produce a delightful effect, and the more solemn the words, and the quicker the time of the tune, the more perfect will be this effect.

While on this subject, I would observe, that there is a practice among the singers in our churches which I wish was universally adopted. It is that of entertaining the congregation, after the blessing has been given, with some of those merry jigs called anthems. How delightful it is, after one has been listening to a serious, solemn sermon for half an hour, till one feels dull and melancholy, and begins to think of repentance and salvation, and a great many other gloomy things; how delightful, I say, it is to see all the choir suddenly squat down in their places, and to hear the busy note of preparation for a jig—I mean anthem—at the first wheeze of the pitch-pipe, "dull care," begins to be gone, and by the time they have sung over the 10th or 12th repeat of "for ever and ever," every gloomy thought has fled, and one feels as blythe and cheerful as when he first came to church. My favorite song on these occasions is one Amesbury (this is the christian name, what its heathen name was, I dont know,) this tune has a peculiar effect on me; it is said, "the memory of past pain is pleasure;" it is on this principle, that I account for my pleasurable feelings, when I hear Amesbury. I am, at times, much afflicted with the cholic, and I never hear Amesbury, but every groan and contortion is brought fresh to my mind; and on the contrary, I never had the cholic, but I think of Amesbury. I would suggest that Paddy Whack, Corporal Casey, and Judy O'Flanagan, with many other excellent Irish favorites, if they could be converted, would add richly to the list of entertaining anthems.

I am glad to find, that the true end of church music, viz. to neutralize, by a little seasonable gaiety, and sprightliness, the great excess of seriousness in the other performances of public worship, is at length discovered, and so successfully put in practice. I also rejoice that Handel, Hayden, and Pleyel, and such old fashioned composers, are likely soon to go completely out of fashion, and that they are to be succeeded by those charming, plaintive little love ditties, and popular songs from the theatres, so easily converted, and adopted with good christian names. I hope that those melancholy old tunes, Old Hundred, and St. Martin's, and Mear, will never be heard again, unless it is perhaps to give grace to a cotillion or hornpipe. CROTCHET.

CHRISTIANS IN GERMANY.

Among their brighter traits we may reckon that frankness and sincerity, that open-heartedness and candor, which characterize the christians of Germany. One might almost say, that they carry their hearts in their hands; they rush to meet a christian brother with a full and overflowing tide of christian affection, and pour out all their feelings and their whole hearts before him, unchecked by the embarrassments of English or American reserve, or the calculations of a cold and wary prudence. We have seen and admired in our own land, the exhibitions of religious character among the Moravian christians. These are here most[illegible] and it is in fact the national character. This we have admired, and not the peculiarities engrafted upon them by their religious faith and discipline—The same purity and unaffected piety, the same zeal and self-devotedness, the same 'simplicity and godly sincerity,' constitute the distinguishing traits of the great body of German believers. It is the national frankness and affectionate open-hearted kindness, purified and elevated and ennobled by the influence of the religion of Christ, and pouring itself out in the habitual and ardent practice of 'whatsoever things are pure and lovely and of good report.'

We may also notice, as a happy trait in the character of German Christians, the absence of a censorious spirit. There are indeed in that country, as well as in others, those who esteem it their right and their duty to watch over the spiritual as well as temporal concerns of their neighbors; and to make their own views and opinions the standard to which all others should conform. But as a general fact, this is not the character of the Christians of Germany. If a brother agrees with them in essentials, they are willing to bear and forbear with him in regard to other matters; and by the exhibition of meekness and gentleness seek rather to win him over upon minor points, than by disapprobation and censure drive him to a greater distance from them. They abstain from "judging one another, remembering that the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Indeed this would seem to be the true spirit of religious tolerance.

We might here go on to speak at large of the humility, the patience, the zeal, and other virtues of the Christians in Germany. The whole however may be summed up in a few words by saying,—and it is a testimony which is deserved, and which the writer rejoices with his whole heart at being permitted thus publicly to say, that in no nation under heaven is the gospel, when received into good and honest hearts, more fully and faithfully carried out in practice; no where is the spirit of the gospel more fully exemplified, or "every thought and deed brought more into captivity to the obedience of Christ." —Biblical Repertory.

GREECE.

Perhaps our readers may be aware that Dr. Korck, who has for several years had charge of the flourishing "American School" established by Dr. Brewer in Syra, has been obliged to relinquish that station. At the time of the last advices, he was about to establish himself in Corfu, where the prospect of usefulness is very great. Dr. K. was obliged to retire from his schools at Syra, by certain proceedings of Government, which are sufficiently indicated in the following extract of a letter from one of the English missionaries.

The way for carrying on Christian Missionary work among the Greeks is closing up more and more. Since I wrote to you last, new obstacles have been thrown in the way of Christian Missions. Government has just published a collection of Prayers, for the use of the Schools for "Mutual instruction;" which I hear, is already introduced into the Boys' School, lately under Dr. Korck's care. This little book is full of antiscriptural, yea, idolatrous matter. One or two passages will convince you of this. For inst', they address in the 1 prayer, the Virgin Mary in the following manner:—"O Virgin, Mother of God! hail most gracious Mary! The Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women;—and blessed is the fruit of thy womb; because thou didst bear the Saviour of our souls. ALL MY HOPE is placed in the mother of God: keep me under thy protection. All-powerful Matron, receive the prayers of thy servants, and deliver us from all necessities and tribulations. Most glorious, eternal Virgin, blessed Mother of God, present our prayers to thy Son, and our God, and pray to him to save our souls. Open the door of thy tender mercies to us, blessed Mother of God: we hope that thou wilt not disappoint us. Deliver us from our present stste; for thou art the salvation of the Christians." With this kind of invocations, both to the Virgin Mary and to the Saints, this little book abounds. It is most obvious, that a Christian Missionary cannot allow such things; and, as they have been appointed by the highest power, to counteract them will not be an easy matter.

This unhappy change in the policy of the Greek Government is understood to have been effected through the influence of a party which may not continue in power. The rumor indeed is, that a change has already taken place.

PURGATORY.

A Catholic, who had been sick, apparently died; and the deluded attendants, who always tremble at the approach of death, began to say their fifteen Ave Marias and Pater Nosters, for the peace of the departed soul; when the supposed dead man rose up, and told them he had been in purgatory. He said he was first brought to the gates of heaven; but he was not clean enough to be admitted. He was next led to purgatory, which he describes as a sore place; although he was not plunged into the lake, yet the walks round about it are enough to make people tremble. He says, in the paths about the lake of purgatory, there are thousands of sharp pointed steel needles, for the persecution of pilgrims; that all the Roman Catholics who die in great sins, are inside the lake in great torments. He complains of a spirit who stood at a corner of the lake, who would fain have pulled him in, but was reprimanded by a higher power, who exclaimed, "Don't you see he has the Seal of the Church?" He says these guards cannot come nigh those who have received the extreme unction. It is surprising, continued he, to see the souls in purgatory flying about, and crying when they see some released. He saw a number of souls redeemed by the Purgatorian Society of Dublin, and he recommends all people to give money to it, for saying Masses for the dead. He gave many of the people of the place an account of their departed relations and friends. He says he was next brought to hell, where he saw all the Protestants. He is sent back for a year, in order to perform many stations and pilgrimages!

When the Reader called to see him, in order to converse with him, and read the Scriptures; he found him gone to Lough Derg, the most noted resort of Pilgrims in Ireland; where he promised, by proxy, to perform stations for those who had given him money for that purpose.

MELANCHOLY DEATH.—On last Saturday evening, as Mr. Robert Longcope, late a merchant in this city, was sailing up the river Delaware, with the hope of spending the Sabbath with his wife and family near Bordentown, he was suddenly struck on the back of his head by the boom of the vessel. The event took place about 9 o'clock at night, when the wind suddenly changed. The hands on board assisted him to reach the cabin and his berth. He asked them afterwards if they had got the vessel into a good harbor. They told him they had. "I am glad of it" said he, "for I must die." He then began to call upon the Lord to have mercy on his soul. Sometime after this the men heard him groan, but apprehended no serious danger; because he had been suffering through the day from a severe attack of the cholera morbus. They went to awake him, but behold he was dead! He died with no other being present, but his God. He was in the bloom of manhood; and in the 33d year of his age, has left the beloved mother of his four fatherless little ones to bewail her widowhood. How loud is the call; "Be ye, also, ready; for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh."—Philadelphian.

THE EXCUSE OF INABILITY.

If any of you perish, it will not be because Christ did not offer to save you; nor because you did not hear the offer, but solely because you would not accept it. You are, therefore, left without excuse. I am aware however, that you will fancy you have an excuse. You will pretend, that you wish to come, but are unable. My friends, I know nothing of that. I am not directed to answer such objections. I have nothing to do with them. My business is simply to preach to you the gospel; to proclaim to you the glad tidings, to invite you to Christ, and to assure you, in his name, that, if you come, you shall most assuredly be received. If you say that you cannot come; if you can make God believe it; if you dare go to the judgment seat with this excuse, and venture your eternal interests on its being accepted, it is well. But before you determine on this course, permit me to remind you, that God's sentiments, as revealed in his word, differ very widely from yours, with respect to this excuse. He evidently considers your unwillingness, or inability, or whatever you choose to call it, to come to Christ, your great sin. He once and again denounces upon you the most dreadful punishments for this very thing.—Payson's sermons, second vol.

CHEERING NEWS FROM POLAND.

The Eastern mail yesterday brought us most gratifying intelligence from the seat of war, if it can be relied on. We see no reason to question its authenticity, though some abatement ought to be made for probable exaggeration.

From the Boston Transcript of Saturday Evening.

LATEST FROM LONDON.

The brig Nereus arrived this afternoon from London, bringing dates to the evening of the 3d June. Messrs. Topliff has loaned us the latest papers received by them.

The London Star of the evening of the 3d of June says, "The brave Polish Commander has completely out-manœuvred the Russians. While a Polish corps was amusing them at Minsk, Skryznecki united all the corps on his left, crossed the Bug, and taking Ostrolenka by assault, has proceeded to Lomza, defeated the Russian Guards at Tychosin, and in fact occupied the whole country between the Bug and Narew."

Accounts from Warsaw of the 25th, left Diebitsch at Zocolow, apparently in route for Ostrolenka or for Bielsk or Bialystock, with no resource but to throw himself on the protection of Prussia, as Dwernicki threw himself on the protection of the Austrians. He has, however, to cross the Bug and Narew, with Polish corps on every side of him.

By this masterly movement, the Polish General has placed himself in contact with the Samogiotians, Lithuanians, and other revolted districts, by whose population his army will be indefinitely augmented, so as to leave to Diebitsch no prospect of escape, but within the Prussian frontiers. The foreign journals assert he will endeavor to reach Thorne, in Prussia; but we expect he will seek to cross the Rossoka, and avail himself of the shelter of its vast forests.

The march of Schryznecki is without parallel in modern warfare. From Warsaw to Ostrolenka, was a flank march of full eighty miles; thence to Lomza another 30; and to Tychosin 20 more—the last 50 being in the rear of the Russian grand army. The Poles seem also to have gained advantages in a repulse of the Russians at Minsk; and this, with the new position of Skryznecki, no doubt forced Diebitsch to retreat to Zocolow, near the lower Bug.

The ranks of the Warsovians have also been recruited by volunteers from Prussian and Austrian Poland; and the whole campaign resembles a war of chivalry, in which the enlightned enterprize of Europe is directed individually, against the further encroachments of the barbarous Muscovites, Tartars and Siberians.

We have just learnt (says the London Globe, under date June 2d, three o' clock, P. M.) that a report is general in the city of a Russian defeat by the Poles, and that the Imperial Guards had been cut to pieces. It is said to rest on letters from Berlin. It is certainly very prevalent.

The Morning Star of the 3d says, that the above reports probably alluded to the overthrow of the Guards at Tychosin, who were taken by surpise.

A private letter from Warsaw, dated 18th, says, Since last Thursday the two armies are in full movement. Gen. Diebitsch has made a manœuvre with the principal part of his army, in the direction of the Bug and Narew, with a manifest intention to get into the wawodie of Polck, to gain the Prussian frontiers. The motive of this change of position is not difficult to be understood, as the Russian General finds it difficult to receive his convoys from Russian Poland, and he now wants to gain the Prussian frontiers, to be in communication with Thorne, where he has a considerable magazine of provisions and ammunition waiting for his approach.

Gen. Skryznecki has also made a flank movement; on Friday morning his head quarters were at Milosna, in the afternoon at Jabiona, and on Saturday at Sierock; his main army was in the direction of Pultusk: three hundred Polish officers have received orders to proceed to Lithuania, to organize the insurrection there. We have this moment a report, that in the environs of Ostrolenka the Imperial Russian Guard have experienced a new check. Gen. Uminski commands in that quarter.

The Messager de Pologne, a Warsaw paper, of the 21st of May, announces that Gen. Skryznecki had taken Ostrolenka on the 18th, where he obtained a large sum of money, the baggage of the enemy, and 1700 prisoners. The object of Skryznecki in advancing to Ostrolenka, is supposed to have been to get between the Russians and their supplies.

From the New-York Spectator.

FROM RUSSIA DIRECT.—The brig Czarina, Capt. Dwyer, arrived at Boston on Monday from Cronstadt, whence she sailed on the 19th of May, and from Elsineur the 1st of June.

Capt. Dwyer reports that very little was published at St. Petersburg relative to the Polish war, but that it was generally acknowledged that the Russians had lost 80,000 men since the commencement of the campaign, and that the Emperor calculated to sustain a loss of 200,000 men in the final subjugation of Poland.

At Elsineur it was currently reported that the Poles, aided by Lithuanian insurgents, had cut off the supplies for the Russian army, and that Gen. Diebitsch would be obliged to enter the Prussian dominions, and that Wilna was in possession of the insurgents.

The last paragraph corroborates the account received on Monday, that the Russian commander was moving towards the Prussian border.

Paul P. Torrey, of Naples, was committed to [illegible] county on yesterday, charged with the monstrous crime of killing his own child—a boy 6 or 7 years of age! We are not in the possession of all the facts—and if we were, their publication might be improper at this time. It appears that Torrey had been in the habit of inflicting cruel punishment upon this and an older son; that a few days ago, the assaults upon the deceased were such as to cause his death. An inquest was held yesterday by the Coroner, and a verdict rendered of "wilful murder." Torrey has been known as a merchant in Naples, where he acquired considerable property—he became intemperate, and abused his family to an extent that caused his wife to leave him about a year or two ago.—Ontario Rep.

A man named Abraham Wood, was drowned on Sunday, 22d ult. in Cortland, Westchester county. A few Sabbaths before, another man was drowned in the same county.

The Baltimore papers of Thursday, announce the death of Daniel Martin, Esq., Governor of the State of Maryland, at his farm, near Easton. He was taken ill on Friday the 8th instant, and expired on the succeeding Monday of gout in the stomach.

CAST-IRON THRASHING MACHINES of a new and improved construction.

Thrashing in these Machines is performed between cast iron plates, having teeth arranged in circles upon them, which are attached to a wheel, and pass through a corresponding cast iron bed piece, as the wheel revolves.

They require less velocity, are less expensive and more durable, than those made with a cylinder, or any other kind heretofore in use. A specimen of them may be seen at Allcott Watts & Langworthy's rolling and slitting mill, next door north of the cotton factory, near the falls.

Persons wishing to procure the article for their own use, will do well to supply themselves with this kind. Rights for territory, may be had on advantageous terms to the purchaser, by applying to the patentee, No. 26 Exchange street.

NORTHERN MARQUESAS, OR WASHINGTON ISLANDS.

The two highly interesting and instructive volumes lately published by Rev. C. S. Stewart, describing his recent visit to the South Seas as chaplain of the United States ship Vincennes, contain the most satisfactory account of the Washington Islands any where to be found.—These islands are a part of the group frequently included under the general appellation of the Marquesas. They are, however, a distinct group, bearing a relation to the Marquesas similar to that, which the Georgian and Society Islands sustain to each other.

The Washington Islands were unknown to the world till 1791, when they were discovered by captain Ingraham, of Boston. In the succeeding year they were visited by captain Roberts, of the same place, who gave them the name of Washington.

"They are three in number—Huahuka, Nukuhiva, or Nuuhiva, and Uapou, forming a triangle by their relative position to each other, the points of which are included within the parallels of 8 degrees 38 minutes and 9 degrees 32 minutes S. latitude, and 139 degrees 20 minutes and 140 degrees 10 minutes W. longitude from Greenwich. Huahuka is the most eastern of the three: Nukuhiva lies about twenty miles directly west of it, and Uapou thirty miles south of the central parts of Nukuhiva. Nukuhiva—twenty miles in length, and of nearly the same breadth, and having three or four good harbors on its coast—is much the largest and most important of the three; and that alone which ships have frequented. It is the island, you will recollect, at which commodore Porter refitted his squadron in the Pacific during the late war between the United States and Great Britain: and is the principal scene of the journal which he subsequently placed before the world."

The population of the group is estimated at 50,000; and the inhabitants are described—particularly the female sex—as decidedly a finer race and handsomer looking people, than the Society and Sandwich Islanders. Their religion, and their moral character, are no better than are found in the other Polynesian islands, which are yet enveloped in heathen darkness.

"It appears, that after the subduction of the Taipis by commodore Porter in 1814, Keataniu, at the time chief of the Teiis at Taiahae, became virtually and avowedly the king of the whole of Nukuhiva, and was succeeded at his death in this honor by Moana, his son, the father of the present prince Moana. All the tribes, including the Taipis, partially at least, acknowledge the boy—whose maternal grandmother is a chief woman of that tribe, still living at their principal valley—as the rightful prince of the whole; and captain Finch strongly recommended to them, after a reconciliation should take place, to convene a general council, at which he should formally be proclaimed the king of the island, and they all pledge themselves equally to honor and defend him."

The Washington group is that on which the Board is expected soon to commence a new mission. Conditional instruction, with a view to the commencement of such a mission during the present year, were sent out by the last reinforcement of the mission at the Sandwich Islands. Its institution, with the leave of providence, may be regarded as now fully resolved upon. In view of this fact, the following extracts from Mr. Stewart's work have a peculiar interest.

"On Saturday, captain Finch informed the chiefs that the next day would be our Sabbath, or day of public worship, and he wished a proclamation to be made apprising the people of it, and interdicting their coming round the ship, either for amusement or barter; and at the same time invited the chiefs themselves to attend the service. This they did, deporting themselves with great propriety during both prayers and sermon, expressing their approbation of the form of our worship by the usual pleasant exclamation, "Motaki," "good," when they are particularly interested.

"I had designed devoting a part of the afternoon to a conversation with them on the subject of our religion, and the introduction of missionaries among them; but the captain of the French ship had invited them on board to receive some presents, and I deferred it till Monday. I had intimated my intention to them; and on going on shore, I found Haape, Piaroro of the Hapas, the Prince Moana, and Tauahania of Taioa, assembled to meet me. The interview was long and interesting.

"I explained to them some of the leading principles of the Christian religion, the nature of missions, and the character and object of missionaries: that they were men and women of enlightened and powerful nations, who at a sacrifice of many advantages and enjoyments in their native countries—left their fathers, and mothers, and sisters, and brothers, behind them, and went voluntarily to live with people such as themselves; to introduce among them the arts of civilized life; to give them books and writing; and, above all, to communicate to them the knowledge of the true God, and the salvation of the soul in the world of spirits; through the death of Jesus Christ, the only Redeemer of sinners. I told them that many persons in America had a sincere desire for their welfare and happiness, and intended to send such teachers among them, and then inquired whether they wished them to come; and if any did, whether they would receive them kindly, and be their friends! —to which, 'Ae! Ae!' burst from them all in much animation, followed by 'Motaki,' motaki' —'good, good.'

"Haape then said, 'It is with the king Moana'—to which the little fellow at once replied, 'So let it be; it is good, very good.' Tana adding, 'When they come, some of them must live with me at Taioo—I will give them land, and build a large house for them.' I told him they would gladly live in his valley, if he and his people would cast away their idols, and believe in and worship Jehovah the only true God. To which he answered, 'I know Jehovah is a mighty God. I have heard of him from Tahiti, where the people have burned their images, and taken him for their God; and it might be well for us to do the same;' adding, 'Jehovah is a greater God than any of ours, for he is the God of thunder and lightning.' Taking this impression, as I discovered, from the flash and report of cannon, which they consider to be essentially lightning and thunder. He said, whenever it thundered at the Island, they knew that a ship was approaching and that Jehovah caused the thunder to apprise them of it.

"He remarked, also, that they had already a great many gods—he could not tell how many—and that they were constantly increasing; for whenever a Taua or chief, or priest died, he became a god: and so it would be always—that he himself, when he died, would be a god. I told him that all their gods, and all their religion and sacrifices were 'mea wahahe wale no,' 'were altogether false,' and of no value, which he took apparently in very good part; and on again speaking of Jehovah, and Jesus Christ as the only God and Redeemer, he exclaimed again, 'Motaki! motaki! Jehova te Atua no matou,' 'Good! good! Jehovah (is or shall be) our God!'

"They were much more interested and attentive to the subject than I had expected to find them; and on closing the conversation, asked how long before the teachers would arrive, and whether I would not be with them—captain Finch, as well as myself, having informed them of my former residence as a missionary at the Sandwich Islands. I cannot but hope that the presentation of the subject will not be utterly forgotten; and that it may have some influence, in connection with the advice of captain Finch on the same point, in preparing the way for the welcome reception and kind treatment of any who may happily be sent by those who look for the salvation of the world to lead them in the paths of truth and righteousness."

Mr. Stewart's account of his visit to the Sandwich Islands, in his second volume, is intensely interesting; and including, as it does, the results of Captain Finch's independent inquiries, is perfectly incontrovertible in respect to the actual influence of the mission on the character and conditiou of the islanders. No good man can read it, without thanking God and taking courage. Some of the more important facts may hereafter be transferred to the pages of the Missionary Herald; but, to feel them and enjoy them fully, they must be observed in their connections in the graphic narratives of Mr. Stewart.

GEORGIA AND THE MISSIONARIES.

The persecution now progressing against the missionaries seems to be unrelenting, which proves to our mind that the law of Georgia against white men was particularly intended for them. The object of the Legislature was to get them out of the country; but as it would have been too outrageous to effect this without some pretext, the act requiring an oath of allegiance was passed, with which it must have been known, the missionaries, as conscientious men, could not comply. This being the case, it was supposed the only alternative left them to avoid the penalty of the law, was to remove and leave their Churches and Schools. But as some of them have thought proper not to do even that, they are dragged out as felons, and are to be shut up in the Penitentiary for a term of not less than four years. "Law enforced to strictness, sometimes becomes the severest injustice." Such is this act of Georgia. It is the height of injustice, when enforced in the mildest manner. But what will it be said when the present proceedings are ahead of that law! when acts are committed, which no man will say are in accordance with the law! The following is to the point:

Rev. Mr. McLeod, superintendent of the Methodist Missions in this nation, and not residing within the Georgia charter, lately returning from a visit to Tennessee. He merely passed this part of the nation, a few weeks since, on his way to Creek path, to fill an appointment previously made. On his way back to the Tennessee side of the Nation, where we believe he has generally made his stay, when but a few miles from Mount Wesley, he met the Guard conducting Messrs. Worcester and Trott, to their head quarters. He was arrested by them, ordered to dismount from his horse and take the line of march with the other prisoners. Mr. Wells stationed at Chattooga, was with Mr. McLeod, and was about to be taken also, but on making proper representation, as to his location, he was permitted to go on his way if he thought proper. He followed on, however, leading Mr. Leod's horse, supposing he would be released as soon as he got to Camp Gilmer, as others have been, who have been arrested under similar circumstances.

Now under what law, under what provision of ANY law was Mr. McLeod arrested, and compelled to walk fifty or sixty miles! It becomes the good people of Georgia to see to these things. There are many in that state, we have not the least doubt, who advocated the extension of the laws over the Indians, who would deprecate such measures, if they were but properly informed of what is going on.

We wish to say a few words on another point. The State of Georgia is a Christian State—Its laws are founded on Christian principles, and the Governor we suppose is at least a nominal Christian. The Superiority of Christian laws over the rest of the world, consists in their mildness. The guilty are punished not in any way which may partake of cruelty, but in mercy. It is therefore, in the constitution of Georgia, most properly made the duty of the Governor to execute the laws in mercy. It has appeared to us, however, in some of the circumstances we have related in the execution of the Georgia laws over this nation, that there has been exhibited too much of a vindictive spirit. The case of Mr. Worcester, was one, which demanded at least, forbearance, and that mercy which the Governor has in his oath promised to observe. He could not have removed without leaving his wife on a bed of sickness. His circumstances were known to the Guard, who we have reason to believe were disposed to be forbearing. His arrest, at this time, was, we are told, founded on an express order from the Governor for that purpose. The case also of the Cherokee, we noticed last week as being under arrest, shows in what spirit Georgia laws are executed. It is said, they found him digging gold, and when they were about to take him he took a gun to defend himself. After he was induced, or made to lay that by, he took his knife. For this, he was severely beaten on the head with a stick. On this part of the story, we have nothing to say. But after he was in the power of the Guard, completely in their hands; when it was impossible that he could do them injury, he was chained to a waggon, and in that situation compelled to travel when they left Oougillogee. This is the information we have received.

Messrs. Worcester and Butler, are probably now in the jail of Gwinnett County, to await their trial at the next Superior Court. They will not think it worth while, we suppose, to give bail, as that would give them no security against another arrest. Look at the case of Mr. Trott—It is even reported here, that Governor Gilmer has ordered his agent, that if Mr. Worcester gives Bail and crosses the Chattahoochy river on his return to his family, to have him again, immediately arrested. That, however, makes no difference, as the case of Mr. Trott renders it certain that he would again be taken.

Since the foregoing was written, information has reached this place that Mr. McLeod, as we supposed, was discharged at the station.

It is said too, that Mr. Wells, who is said above, to have been in company with Mr. McLeod, received a severe blow with a stick; from the hands of the Commanding officer. What the crime was, we have not particularly understood.

LETTER FROM REV. JONAS KING.

We are indebted to a gentleman in this city for the following extract of a letter received by him from the Rev. Jonas King, dated Tenos, Dec. 31st 1831.—N. Y. Obs.

Before your letter reached me, I had learned by the "Constitutionel" the grand events, which had been passing in France, and which I consider as one of those means which the Most High is employing to open the way for the extension of light and liberty; and the spread of the everlasting Gospel. You speak of my returning to France, but that I cannot consistently do at present. Had I been sent there two years ago, I should have been rejoiced. But now it appears to me that I must remain, for a while at least, in this country. You will have learned, probably, before this reaches you, that I have been to Athens and purchased a spot for a house, and that I hope to go there early in the spring. Mars Hill* was almost the only place which I did not visit. It was occupied by Turkish soldiers, and I thought it best not to go up upon it. I saw it of course at a very little distance. The Turks, I suppose, still occupy it, but I have great hope that they will soon leave for Turkey. The affairs of Greece are still in some doubt, and we know not whether we are to have a Prince here to reign over us or a President. The freedom of Greece, the taking of Algiers, the revolution in France, the various commotions in different parts of Europe, seem to indicate that the chains of darkness, which have for so many ages bound our world, are soon to be broken. Even the Turks seem to be becoming more liberal.

I rejoice that I am in this interesting part of the world, though I am for the present doing but little. I am going on as usual, with my school, and every Lord's day, expound freely the sacred Scriptures to about 60 (sometimes more) persons, and occasionally I give a few tracts and sell a copy of the New Testament. But even with the little I am doing, I think it better to be here than in America. There you have a flood of light, and a thousand heralds proclaiming glad tidings of good things. Here is only, as it were, a feeble dawn, and scarcely a solitary individual to lift up his voice for the truth!

*Mr. W, in his letter to Mr. K. had suggested the plan of a college to be established in Athens on Mars Hill.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

TEACHER DO YOU STUDY!

DO SABBATH SCHOOL TEACHERS HAVE TO STUDY?—Inquired a child of his teacher, who had not come to school very well prepared to explain the lesson to his class. But the teacher hesitated in the reply—and well he might, for he felt condemned. I do not believe his Bible had been opened at the lesson during the week.—And he was as unfit to enter upon the duties of a Sabbath school teacher as is that minister of the gospel, who knows not from what text he is to preach, on entering the sacred desk. He is just as unprepared to guide immortal souls to the Fountain of good.

Teachers must study: but how sadly negligent are they of this duty. When will Sabbath school teachers perform all the duties devolving upon them? when will they be faithful? Can it be, that a teacher really feels how precious is an immortal soul, when he lives unconscious that his scholars are out of the fold of Christ! Do fellow teachers be faithful in future. Give your scholars no occasion to speak of neglect of duty in their teacher, or to suspect that he has not thought of them during the week. For, depend upon it, if you do not prepare yourselves for the Sabbath school, they will find it out, and will contrive in some way, to tell you of it. And a reproof from a child, especially a little scholar, comes home to the heart—it cuts deep. A teacher, who will avoid this, will be faithful—will study; and never think of entering his school, without a heart, full of instruction, to pour into the minds of his youthful flock. His love for souls, will be kindled at a throne of grace, and as he performs his labor of love, his children will readily take notice that he has been with Jesus.

EARLY CONVERSIONS.

If there is no safety in early conversion, you strike at the root of family religion, infant schools, Sabbath schools, and Bible classes, for if in all these children and youth are taught that they are not old enough to have a certain, genuine conversion, then surely such schools and institutions are worse than useless, as their object of late is to bring children to immediate repentance.

Suppose one of our school children is sick unto death, shall we tell him an "early conversion is doubtful," and thus chill his soul with horrid apprehensions of uncertainty? No, we will not do it. We will tell him that Jesus has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." We will tell him, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." We will kindle in his soul the high hopes of eternal glory, and encourage him to "know in whom he has believed."

Away with cold prayers that children "may be converted in due time, and that the seed sown may spring up many days hence. Rather let us remember that "now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation," for us and our children.

O, my heart bleeds, while I dwell upon this subject, and think how many children have been told they were "not old enough to repent." He that is old enough to sin, is old enough to repent, or else there is no truth in philosophy, reason, the Bible, or common sense.

I rejoice and thank God that the doctrine will not pass. It is counterfeit, and we have found it out. Revivals of religion prove it false, and we promise the world that we urge against this put off system, till the day of our death, and shall prevail. "A nation shall be born in a day," children and all; and "children shall die a hundred years old in the maturity of Christian principle."—S. S. Journal.

PARENTAL INFLUENCE.

If children are encouraged or permitted to indulge in anger, perverseness, conceit, falsehood, profanity, Sabbath breaking, &c, they will most certainly become habituated to these things, and regard them either with entire approbation, or as possessing a very faint tinge of impropriety.—But if kindness, humility, modesty, truth, reverence towards God and divine things, are enforced upon them, until they become fixed principles in conduct, a strong barrier is erected against the evil influences, to which they may be exposed, and a tenderness and correctness of conscience is produced, which will afford an easy access to the regulating and sanctifying truths of holy Scripture.

Which is the fairest candidate for salvation? the man whose childhood has been exposed to the corruption of wicked parents, whose first articulations have been the expression of revenge, obstinacy, and deceit; whose smartest sayings have been curses, and whose most commended actions have been successful deceptions and victorious fights? or the man, born in a pious family, whose first errors of temper and conduct were corrected; who was taught from infancy that there is a God in heaven, who is displeased with every thing wrong, and was led daily to implore his blessing and pardon!

If this question be answered, as I am sure it will be, the proposition is admitted, much may be done for the salvation of men, when they are young children. Let the parents, then, see to it, that they do all which they can, and that they lose not the proper time for doing it.—Rel. Telegraph.

GEORGIA AND THE CHEROKEES.—We would invite the attention of our readers to an article on our first page from the Cherokee Phoenix. Had we predicted, three years ago, that such would have been the conduct of the "Sovereign State of Georgia" towards a band of defenceless missionaries, who have left their homes and friends for no imaginable object but to "do good and communicate," we should have incurred the charge of unprincipled libellers. The secret of the matter we believe to be this; The authorities of Georgia well know that the Cherokees are eager for instruction, desire the continuance of the Missonaries among them; and that consequently, by the expulsion of the missionaries, another tie will be sundered which binds the Cherokees to their soil. There are no doubt many individuals in Georgia who look upon the conduct of the government with disapprobation and sorrow: but where "might makes right," what does it avail that the sense of justice and humanity still predominates in the minds of a few, while the many triumph in a career of oppression, such as never before has been witnessed in this country. We now believe that Georgia will accomplish her object. Long since, the Cherokees have been abandoned by the national government, and exercising as Georgia does, not the right, but the power and fact of jurisdiction over them, she will be able, as it is evident she intends to make their condition so intolerable, that any change, of whatever kind, will be for the better. The sympathies of the whole nation were enlisted in behalf of the oppressed Greeks, as they now are for the Poles;—but who pities the unoffending Aborigines, subjected to miseries which neither Greeks or Poles ever suffered while remaining in a state of subordination, and that by a people calling themselves Christians, and pretending to be actuated by the principles of justice! Who almost lifts up the voice of remonstrance against the iniquitous system of persecution which is in progress against them, for the express, nay the avowed purpose of expelling them from the soil which they inherited from their fathers! We tremble for our country when we think of these things, and remember that God is just.—N. Y. Pap.

FEMALE DRESS.

A correspondent of the New York Baptist Register, has attempted to relieve this perplexing subject of its difficulties, by suggesting the adoption of uniformity, of colour and fashion, in the dress of females. He throws it out merely for consideration. The colors he names are black and white. The plan is worthy of consideration, perhaps of adoption.

Let us briefly examine some of the beneficial results of uniformity. The perplexing choice between colors and fashions often disturbs the mind of the professed follower of Jesus, and sometimes calls forth the sigh for deliverance from such bondage. One or two colors fixed upon would settle the question of colors; the exclusion of all ornament upon dress, that of fashion. Long and tedious frequently is the search for a hat, which shall not be looked down upon as out of date. Should we limit ourselves to two kinds, both entirely plain, one adapted to winter, the other to summer, their expense to be regulated by the motive which is to govern us in all our purchases, much valuable time would be saved, and the temptation set aside. Freedom from the tyranny of fashion, it would seem, would in itself be so quiet, as readily to ensure its adoption by a mind having for its object the removal of every hindrance to the spiritual vision of our heavenly home—every allurement to a deviation from "the strait and narrow way."

A fixed rule would enable us to calculate our expenses with considerable accuracy, and consequently would leave us in no doubt, what we might and ought, as our privilege, to cast into the treasury of the Lord.

Cristian females by adopting such a mode of dress would countenance each other in economy. This is no slight matter, considering the great force of example. We may discuss the subject in vain, as long as the dispute is, where to draw the line.

Starvation in Ireland.—The N. Y. American contains an extract of a letter from Greenock, which represents the condition of the poor in Ireland as truly deplorable. The letter says: "One writer mentions that at the moment he wrote, there were three thousand individuals on the sea shore, in sight, gathering seaweed to boil for sustenance. The cattle are bled, and the blood boiled and used. The seed potatoes are dug up and devoured; and ere this reaches you, some thousands will have ceased from their misery, from actual starvation. Now is the time for the friends of Ireland with you to stretch forth a helping hand. A few loads of flour would save thousands and exalt the American name."

A CASE IN POINT.

Columbus, (Mi.) June 25.

Many members of the christian churches contend that it is right to make all the profit they can, by buying and selling ardent spirits.—What says the conscience of an unlettered Choctaw!

F——, a member of the Mayhew Church, came voluntarily before the Session, at our last communion, and stated his case as follows:—"I was far from home, among my relatives, in a part of the nation where they have not the Gospel, and where they drink whiskey. My horse was poor and likely to fail, and I wished to get another. My relatives advised me to sell my horse in the white settlements for whiskey, and bring it into the nation, with which I might be able to purchase two horses. I told them I did not drink whiskey, and I did not wish to trade in whiskey. They told me I need only get the whiskey and give it to them, they would sell it, and get me horses. I was blinded. I thought perhaps there would be no harm in this, and I would do it. I started for the whiskey, but soon my heart began to grow heavy. I felt bad; I thought I was not doing right. But I had made the engagement, so I went to the white man's and told him what I wanted; he took my horse, gave me whiskey and I started back. My heart grew very sad. When I returned I gave the whiskey to my friends, and soon the people began to drink it. This made me feel so bad that I could stay with them no longer. My brother let me have a horse, and I came home. I have now told you what I have done. I know it is bad. I left a part of the whiskey with my relatives unsold. I never wish to see it again, or to hear from it. If my brethren will forgive me I shall be glad. I have no wish to leave the people of God. I am ashamed that I was so deceived by my relatives, and influenced to do what was unbecoming in a Christian."

I have given the substance of his story, without pretending to literal exactness in every word.

In the above case was every circumstance that could go to justify or extenuate the traffic in whiskey. The man was poor; the people wanted whiskey; if he did not furnish it somebody else would; he had no other means of getting himself a good horse, &c. But all this did not satisfy his conscience. He needed no one to prove to him that he had done wrong, and he had no rest till he confessed his fault and obtained forgiveness.—Jour. of Humanity.

REVIVALS.

From the Episcopal Recorder.

FOUR DAYS MEETINGS.

Mr. Editor:—In a late Recorder, your correspondent B. on the subject of four day meetings, expressed a wish to know how those which have been held in the Eastern diocese, were conducted. I regret that we cannot give much information on this subject, as but few of these meetings have yet been held among us. Other denominations, with their usual zeal, have frequently held them, and in every instance which I have witnessed, they have produced the most desirable results. Many who merely hear of these meetings, get the impression, that they are scenes of excited animal feeling, and disorder, but nothing of that kind has appeared in those which I have attended. On the contrary, they were conducted with strict propriety, and were uniformly solemn. One which was lately held in my own and a neighboring parish, has evidently been blessed of God. Many professors of religion, who before exhibited but faint symptoms of spiritual life, are now awake to duty, and to obligation.—Many of the formerly careless are now inquiring "the way to Zion," and others are "rejoicing in hope." A deep spiritual seriousness is now pervading the minds of our people, and we look for still greater results from this interesting meeting. The method of conducting its exercises, was similar to that pursued in the associations of Pennsylvania. On the first day, an hour and a half before the service, we held a prayer-meeting. It was then our object in our exhortations to awaken an interest in the minds of professors. As soon as this meeting closed, the regular service of the church was performed and a sermon preached. During the intermission of the services, another prayer-meeting was held, as in the morning. The regular service was again performed, and a sermon preached, followed by an exhortation from one of the brethren. A prayer-meeting, after a short intermission, ensued, followed by the evening service and sermon and exhortation, as in the afternoon. The same order of exercises was pursued in the three succeeding days. When suitable opportunities offered, the brethren took occasion to converse with the serious and inquiring, either in private houses, or in the church after the exercises had closed. These meetings, though held in the country, in a busy season, were nevertheless numerously attended. We hope at some future season to give you more cheering accounts of others which shall be held in this diocese. P.

EDWARDS ON REVIVALS.

It is very important, but very difficult, to impress the truth, that it depends upon every church whether it shall be in a state of revival. Let it be observed, that the church consists of the pastor and members; and that their performance of their duties, constitute its condition and power. If they are faithful in the performance of their duties, the church is in a revival; and influence emanates from it in every direction, awaking thought, quickening conscience, turning the unwilling attention of men upon themselves, as immortal beings going to judgment. It is necessary to ask particular attention to this observation, trite as it may seem. Because, you may examine church after church, and you will find that while pastor and members unhesitatingly admit the full responsibility of the church, not one of them appears conscious of any personal responsibility resting on himself. They will tell you, that they mourn over the condition of the church, when they will not patiently hear you urge upon them, individually, one obligation.

A revival is no matter of miracle; it is a just state of feeling produced by a clear view of truth. I know that there can be no revival, without the special grace and blessing of God; but this grace and blessing are bestowed upon effort, in answer to prayer. This prayer and effort must arise out of a fervent desire of a revival. This desire is not natural. It must be produced by a deliberate examination of our condition, bringing before us our sins and our danger, making us so to fear and tremble, as to fill us through fellow feeling, with compassion for all like us guilty, or by a heart affecting conviction of the justice of God in the condemnation of sinners, and of their perverseness in resisting mercy. In either case, the state of feeling is one of uneasiness, rising sometimes to painful anxiety.—Any one who has noticed the operations of his own mind, knows how gladly and how falsely it seizes upon consolation. Here is the great impediment to revivals; preventing them when approaching; hindering and terminating them when they have come. How readily do we yield to the suggestion that we are doing very well! How far will a few comforting words go! How few are there, who can be persuaded to regard the warning, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!" or to believe there is any practical instruction in the language of St. Paul, "For the love of Christ constraineth us." "He died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them." "Who gave himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works.

I once endeavored to dissuade a man from his attempt to involve a young and confiding friend in a suretyship of several thousand dollars. I stated to him that he owed several thousand dollars which he was unable to pay, and that the suretyship would injure his friend, without any ultimate benefit to himself. The purport of his reply was, "Mr. A. owes me forty dollars, I have Mr. B's. note for thirty dollars, I have an account against Mr. C. for ten dollars, and another against Mr. D. for five dollars; only allow me time and I can easily pay all my debts." Here was a man who owed thousands, and who so imposed upon himself by the hurried mention of a few trifles due to him, without giving himself time to calculate the sum, that he set himself down perfectly at ease, under a full but absurd persuasion of his solvency.

Most churches are even more unreasonable. They make some faint and feeble exertions; and seeing a few sinners anxious and fewer converted, in the contentment of their hearts which they would fain believe is nothing but a just return of gratitude to God for His blessing, they divest themselves of all anxiety or care for the multitudes, who before their eyes, are thronging the way of everlasting death.

It is therefore manifestly of the highest concern, that the subject of revivals should be well understood in the churches.

In this view I again earnestly recommend the work mentioned at the head of this article.

A LAYMAN.

From the New-York Evangelist.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON REVIVALS. NO. XXXIV.

I intend to enter fully into the work.

Ever since the apostacy in Eden, man has been disposed to justify his neglect of duty.—This is often the fact in relation to revivals. Both saints and sinners, while conscious that they are not making those efforts which they ought, for the commencement or progress of a revival, not unfrequently flatter themselves that they will at some future time, not far distant, enter fully into the work. This is as unhappy in its influence as it is frequent in its occurrence.

First. It implies a conviction of guilt.

Those who resolve on a future discharge of duty, know that they are blameworthy for neglecting it now. They feel disturbed in their consciences by the pressing obligations of present duty. They are distressed, because the claims of duty demand their prompt obedience. They feel guilty in view of their delay. This pressure of guilt, of obligation, and consequent unhappiness, leads them to form the resolution of future obedience.

Second. It implies a heartless resolution.

In this resolution they are insincere. They resolve to do at some future time, what God commands them to do now. This resolution is disobedience. They resolve to disobey. If they had the spirit of obedience, they would immediately do their duty under the command of God. They would be utterly unwilling to delay what God requires now. The very object the resolution is not to secure future obedience, but to obtain relief from the distress arising from the neglect of their present duty. It is their cheap hypocrisy, often concealed even from the bosom in which it dwells.

Its proper, legitimate tendency is to perpetuate disobedience. It counteracts the pressing claims of duty, and relieves the conscience from the burden of guilt. It always keeps the discharge of duty in future prospect, and therefore continually prevents that purpose and effort, which is absolutely essential to immediate obedience. It is utterly impossible that we should do without delay, the very duty which we resolve to do at a future time. Present voluntary action implies, present purpose of volition.

Fourth. This is a fruitful source of deception.

Even the children of God often take shelter under this refuge of lies. While they repose their waking conscience on this downy pillow, in criminal apathy and indolence, they dose away those precious seasons, which should be spent in energetic prayer and effort to spread the Redeemer's kingdom, to promote the growing piety of Christians, and the saving conversion of sinners. In this state, Christians are dreaming of being faithful. They hide from their own eyes the view of their guilt. They flatter themselves, that they are becoming obedient, when in reality, by a full purpose of heart, they are putting obedience away from themselves, and consequently they strengthen their disobedience. How sadly are they deceived! how disastrous is their deception! If they saw plainly, what is fact, that they are really unwilling to be revived, and become active immediately, they would be alarmed, would feel the claims of duty, and the conviction of guilt.

They know they are not faithful as they should be, that they are sinfully attached to the world. They feel at times such compunction of conscience, such pressure of their obligation, as produce great disquietude, and lead them to seek relief. Instead of doing their duty now, they flatter themselves that they shall do it at some approaching season, which is near at hand.—Thus stupid ministers and churches neglect those efforts, which if used would through the Spirit, be instrumental of producing a revival, or of promoting its progress. They would be alarmed and awakened to duty, did they not dream constantly that they were now awakening into faithfulness. Thus they cheat themselves of happiness, activity and usefulness.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of this paper dated Gainsville, Georgia, June 21, 1831.—Cincinnati Journal.

"There has been for a few weeks past, a very interesting revival in Athens, and the college has shared largely in the good works. I have learned from a gentleman recently from Athens, that on the 2nd Sabbath of June, there were added to the Baptist Church 10, Methodist 13, and the Presbyterian 45. And also, that 30 more were expected to unite with the Presbyterian church next Sabbath week."

The following is an extract of a letter from a Clergyman in Virginia, to a gentleman in this city. It is dated Lynchburg, June 9.—Ib.

"I have held several meetings within 3 months in Bedford Co., which is entirely destitute of Presbyterian preaching. I have held two four days meetings in Pisgah church, Bedford Co.

The result has been near one hundred hopeful conversions, and a large proportion men. I have just returned from a four days meeting in Bethel church, Bedford Co. where I preached 10 times, and had more than 200 on the anxious seats—50 hopeful conversions—a majority of the anxious and converts are men—amongst them the most influential men in the county; Infidels, Universalists and Moralists. A more interesting state of things I have never witnessed. The field is opening every day."

Three-Days' Meeting & Revival in Twinsburg, Portage Co.—There has been for some weeks a somewhat interesting state of things in Twinsburg. Quite a number from that town were present at the four-days' Meeting in Hudson, and as many as ten or twelve went home rejoicing. From that time, we believe, there has been more than ordinary attention to religion in the place. As a number of the recent converts were to be received into the Church on communion day, (which was Sabbath, 23d ult.,) it was proposed by the Pastor, that some extra means should be used to make it an interesting occasion. Accordingly one or two Ministers were invited, and meetings were held on Friday evening and Saturday. On the Sabbath, the state of things was so interesting, that it was thought best to continue the meetings another day. On the third day, (Monday, of last week,) they were brought to a close.

In proportion to the means used, there have probably been but few more interesting meetings on the Reserve. From thirty to forty expressed their determination to be the Lord's, & others are still anxious,—all inhabitants of the place, there being none present from abroad.

Revival in Lyme, Huron Co.—We learn from a correspondent, that quite a Revival is in progress in Lyme, Huron County. The particulars are not stated.—Ib.

Religious Instruction of the Negroes.—In several Counties of Georgia, very successful efforts are now made to lead the negroes in the way of life. Masters are engaged in the instruction of their slaves. A letter from Macon, mentions such labors in that vicinity, to the utility of which masters give a willing testimony.

A disturbance and quarrel took place in Philadelphia on Tuesday of last week, between the Protestant and Catholic Irish residents of that city. The former were celebrating the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, and some of their proceedings gave offence to the Catholics. Two persons were severely injured, one of them being dangerously wounded with a sword. Serious apprehensions were at one time entertained by the citizens. Ten persons were bound over for a riot; and three, Briton Evans, a magistrate of Moyamensing, and James Carrick and Robert Elliott, were held to bail—the former in $3,000, and the latter in $1,500—for having stabbed and beaten Hugh Flannagan, the person who was wounded by a sword.

POPERY.

Rochester, Aug. 5th, 1831.

To the Editor of the Rochester Observer.

SIR,—I observe in your paper of yesterday a communication under the signature of "Republicus," and also an article written by yourself, both commenting on a notice that I, some weeks ago, inserted in the Rochester Daily Advertiser, in reference to the attacks made thro' the columns of your paper and otherwise, on the Catholic religion and its followers.

It seems that this correspondent of yours, who is well known to be one of the Presbyterian clergymen of Rochester, under the specious name of "Republicus," and through the medium of your paper, addressed several letters last year, to the Rev. Mr. McNamara, Catholic pastor in this village, endeavoring to prove to him, as he pretended, the errors of the Roman Catholic Church and the evil tendency of its doctrines; but in the present communication which he has made to you, I beg leave to say, that your Rev. correspondent is neither candid nor just; for, in order to gloss over his own statement, and to make it appear that he was quite triumphant and encountered no opposition, he asserts in the present communication what is not true; for he states that of these letters "the Rev. gentleman (that is, Mr. McN'a,) took no notice," And you too, Mr. Editor, chime in with your Rev. correspondent in the same statement, for you say in your article on the subject, that Mr. McNamara "shrunk from an examination of the merits of the question at issue." Now, Mr. Editor, you know the contrary to be the fact, and so does your correspondent. You both know, that on the appearance of these letters, Mr. McNamara addressed a letter to you and which appeared in your paper, in which he stated that if the person who addressed these letters to him under the fictitious name of "Republicus" would declare his real name, he would then answer them and shew the falsity and absurdity of his statements; and this your Rev. correspondent refused to do;—and this you call "shrinking from an examination of the merits of the question at issue."—In my humble opinion, nothing could be more correct than the conduct of Mr. McNamara in this matter, and nothing more cowardly and unprincipled than the conduct of your correspondent. He, under a fictitious name, attacks Mr. McNamara personally, on the subject of his religion. His was not an address to the public on the subject of the Catholic religion, nor even a letter to you as Editor of the Observer, but letters addressed to a private individual, and being so, I maintain that he was bound by every principle of honor, when called upon, to come forward and declare to the public his real name, and his not doing so, can be attributed only to his consciousness of the weakness of the cause he had espoused, and his dreading the consequences of the disgraceful defeat, that he most undoubtedly would have sustained. This is the natural conclusion to be drawn from such conduct. But, Mr. Editor, for a moment reverse the case, and let us suppose that Mr. McNamara under some fictitious signature, should, in the United States Catholic press, the "Truth Teller," the "Catholic Sentinel," or any other of the numerous and talented Catholic papers published throughout the Union, address a series of letters to any of the distinguished presbyterian clergymen of this village, such for instance as the Rev. Joseph Penney, D. D. or any other, shewing to him the many errors into which the Protestants have fallen, proving that their doctrines were contrary to revealed religion and abounding with absurdities and that the Catholic, was the only pure and undefiled religion which our blessed Saviour taught us to follow; and suppose that when called upon to declare his real name in order that his letters might be answered, Mr. McNamara refused, what would you say then! You would then indeed be entitled to say that the Catholics "shunned the light," and "shrunk from an examination of the merits of the question;"—and I have no doubt that, in your usual style, you would heap upon them every sort of invective and abuse you were master of. But the Catholics don't shun the light, but are prepared to fight the battles of their faith under a masked battery. There is not one individual Catholic who would not cheerfully come forward in his true name and character to defend his holy religion when it was attacked, assured as he is of the firm and everlasting foundation on which his religious faith is built. The Catholics are too confident in the truth of their cause to resort to the same disgraceful means that are used by every unprincipled defamer of private character; by every literary blackguard or assassin, who pours his poison into the public ear, while the hand that administers it is hid in obscurity, who stabs in the dark at the reputation of his unoffending victims and makes his vile attacks more odious and disgusting by sheltering himself under the sacred liberty of the press, constituting it the vehicle of anonymous slander and calumny, and thus prostituting its high office, polluting its columns, and degrading its dignity.

Had Mr. McNamara imprudently answered these letters of "Republicus" he would have been placed on most unequal grounds in the contest; in fact he would have been fighting with a shadow who would vanish when he had discomfited him, and leave him in total darkness as to the religion, character, or reputation of him with whom he had maintained such a contest;—and, besides, this correspondent of yours who is so much afraid of the light, might, under his assumed name, make any assertion or throw out any imputation he chose with perfect security, whereas Mr. McNamara as a known individual, and as a minister of the church would not only be responsible in his own private person for every statement he made, but would be considered by the public as the authorised defender of the Catholic church. Now, I will here appeal to the common sense of every honest man, if the conduct of your Rev. correspondent was honest, candid, just or even christian-like conduct. He pretends to be the champion of Protestantism, and yet is ashamed to appear so to the world in his own true character. He is a christian minister, and yet before the world is ashamed to own his Lord, to defend his cause, and maintain the glory of his cross. He pretends to be a supporter and a vindicator of the liberties of his country, and yet in such a glorious cause—a cause whose supporters are enrolled in the records of imperishable fame and glory—he is afraid that his name should be known, while under the wily signature of "Republicus," he insidiously strikes at the root of every free and republican form of government, and would fain bring back to disgrace our happy country, the intolerance of past ages, when persecution and torture, the fire and the faggot were the weapons which such religious bigots were authorised to wield. And yet after all this, Mr. Editor, you say "Republicus will we have no doubt give fair play." If we are allowed to judge from his previous conduct and his present communication to you, we would be very sceptical on that point. But I shall soon put his "fair play," as you elegantly express it, to the test.

Your correspondent very politely undertakes, if I don't choose to remain blinded, as he says, to "draw aside the veil and show me how I have been cheated into the good opinion I entertain" of my religion. Now, I will not be behind in politeness with the Rev. gentleman, and I here undertake, unlearned and unlettered as I am, if he will first cast aside the thick mantle in which he thinks he has shrouded his personal identity, I shall then endeavor to throw aside the thicker mantle of prejudice and bigotry in which his reason seems enveloped; and if his mind is not altogether impervious to reason—if, as Shakespeare says—

"If it be made of penetrable stuff,
If damned custom have not braz'd it so,
That it be proof and bulwark against sense."

I shall undertake, to use the learned gentleman's own phrascology, to show him how he has been "cheated into so good an opinion of his religion," and still further will shew him how he has been "cheated" into so bad an opinion of mine. And as a preliminary to this, I beg to put a few queries to you and also to your correspondent, which latter, I presume, you will have in your power to forward to him, and enable him to answer in your next paper, as, from his addressing you "Dear Sir," I suppose you are on an intimate footing with one another. He has ample time to make up his mind on the subject previous to the publication of your next paper. For my part I have lost no time in replying to your correspondent's letter. I received your paper, which was published yesterday forenoon, only last night.

In the first place, then, you invite me in the article you have published to come forward and "investigate the merits of the question"—and hope that I will not decline the examination which you say I have "so vauntingly challenged." Now, am I to understand from this that your paper is to be open to discussion on the subject, and that I am to be allowed to publish a reply in your columns to any article that your correspondent may publish in his real name?—This I think almost an unnecessary question, as I cannot believe that you mean that I am to be at the expense of publishing any thing I may write in answer to your correspondent, as an advertisement, as I did my last notice, while your columns are open to your correspondent gratis.

In the next place, will your correspondent declare his real name to the public, and thus put himself upon the same footing with his antagonist, and thus at the same time give weight and responsibility to whatever he may advance.—But even his real name I will dispense with, if he will avow his being a clergyman of the Presbyterian church. If he does either of these I am ready—but not otherwise.

In the third place, supposing your correspondent agrees to either of these, the next question is, in what shape this controversy should commence. The letters which your correspondent addressed to Mr. McNamara, and which I suppose consisted chiefly of attacks on the Catholic religion, I have not in my possession, nor do I recollect much about them, having paid little attention to them at the time. But at any rate, as these letters are addressed to a private individual, I would feel a delicacy in taking upon me to answer them. I therefore request that your correspondent will, through the medium of your paper, throw into some other form those statements and arguments of his by which he says he will be able to "demonstrate that the Roman Catholic religion is hostile to our liberties and calculated to keep its people in a condition of intellectual and moral degradation."

If your correspondent will comply with my demands as to his real name, and you will forward this discussion by allowing both sides of the question to be stated in the columns of your paper, I have only to express a hope that the controversy will be conducted with fairness, impartiality, coolness and candor. I am not aware that in the present communication I have used any harshness towards you or your correspondent, but if I had, it would have been perfectly excusable and authorised by the conduct of you and your correspondent. I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

JAMES BUCHAN.

Stephen having refused his warrant to send Woodman, afterwards a Martyr, to jail, remarked—'Methinks he is not afraid of the prison.'

Woodman. No—I praise the living God.

S. This is a heretic indeed! He hath the right terms of heretics, the living God. Be there any dead gods!

W. Be ye angry, because I speak the words written in the Bible!

S. Bible, babble, bible, babble—what speakest thou of the Bible! There are no such words written in the Bible! I will tell you how you shall know a heretic by his words—they will say 'The Lord; we praise God: and the living God:'—by these words ye shall know a heretic.

W. We are taught to say, 'The Lord's name be praised.' Ps. 113.

A priest then asked Woodman—'is there nothing true but what is written in the Bible!

W. Paul saith, Galatians 1, "if an angel from heaven teach any other doctrine than God's word, hold him accursed"—and so I do, I tell you plainly.

Priest. Here is a testament, if I hurl it into the fire and burn it, have I burned God's word or not!

W. You would burn God's word; and he who would burn a testament wilfully, would burn God himself, if he were here, if he could.' At this all the persecutors laughed, 'Laugh on,' continued Woodman—'if you repent not with speed your laughter will be turned into weeping.—Protestant.

THE BIBLE AND ROMANISM.

"The Bible Society, in my humble estimation, is the deepest scheme ever laid by Satan in order to delude the human family, and bring them to his eternal possession."

This sentiment is extracted from a Roman Catholic newspaper, published in Boston, entitled "The Jesuit." We are often told, that the Roman Catholic religion, as it exists in the United States, is a very harmless thing; quite different from Romanism as it exists in Europe.—This is, doubtless, in some sense, true. Policy would dictate, to men of less cunning than those of whom we speak, that the U. States is, at present, a bad theatre for the complete and undisguised operation of all the agents which they use as subsidiaries, in their unhallowed cause—The "holy inquisition," with its kindred iniquitous associations, would meet with rather an unfriendly reception among us at present. Such measures would be rather revolting to our plain republican notions, and also to our remaining attachment to the Protestant faith. We are not yet fully "ripe" for such a movement.

But why is it, that Catholicism in this country differs at all from Catholicism in Europe! Is it because it has really changed its character! Is it because its devotees and propagators here, disapprove of those more abhorrent features of idolatrous superstition, which are exhibited, unblushingly, in other parts of the world! No intelligent Protestant can be credulous enough to believe this. It is policy, and policy alone, that creates the difference. Strange would it be, indeed, if Jesuitical cunning, which has been proverbial for centuries, should fail to be employed in the accomplishment of so grand a scheme as the establishment of the "Mother Church," in this wide-spread territory.

Some of our readers may be led to inquire the necessity of our adverting so frequently to this subject. Let not such be deceived. A deep laid plan has for years been in operation, to bring this continent under the influence of the Roman Catholic faith. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have annually been poured into this country, from Europe, to aid in effecting this grand scheme. Catholic Colleges, and Monasteries, and Nunneries, and Female Seminaries have been multiplied, with an astonishing rapidity. Their missionaries have arrived on our coasts in numbers, and are now traversing our western territories, inculcating the heathenish superstitions of Romanism. The Confessional has been erected; the holy water has been sprinkled upon the ignorant multitude, and the consecrated host presented for their adoration.

The Apostle informs us, that this "mystery of iniquity" was already working in his day. Its operation is no longer secret. Even in our own republican land, surrounded by all the safeguards of Protestantism, its developements have recently become so glaringly manifest, as to excite the alarm of all who love our free institutions and our Protestant faith. This is no chimerical notion. The tocsin has already been sounded, by our wisest and best men, from the press, from the sacred desk, and from the floor of the public meeting.

To no section of our country is this subject so practically important as to the inhabitants of this western valley. This seems to be the chosen point of attack. Our relative situation is well understood by these enemies of our religious institutions. They well know the influence the west is soon destined to exert over this great nation. Our great benevolent associations (the glory of the age,) present a barrier to the desired result of their schemes, which must be removed. And especially while our national Bible Society exists, spreading the light of the glorious gospel throughout the whole length and breadth of the land, they will find it somewhat difficult successfully to prosecute their plans.—This feeling, no doubt, dictated the paragraph we have quoted above, from "The Jesuit;"—a sentiment well worthy the pen of "His Holiness," in the fifteenth century.

As the conductor of a public journal, we feel it our duty to lend our aid, feeble as it may be, in enlightening the community on this subject. The time has come when silence is criminal. While we design to speak fearlessly, we hope never to forget, that 'the weapons of our warfare are not carnal."—Western Luminary.

A gentleman of Newport received through the Postoffice a letter enclosing $13, with the following note:—$10 borrowed six years ago without leave.

From the Connecticut Observer.

'NEW SCHEMES.'—Under this head the Editor of the religious Inquirer, gives the public, in his last number, his views respecting various religious movements: The first he notices is the American Bible Society. He represents that there is a 'declension of zeal for the institution.' He did not give in proof of his assertion, the increase of its funds—or the successful exertions to supply the destitute throughout the U. S. with the Bible—or the designed effort to send the Bible abroad, which, it is understood, is the object of the visit of the Secretary to France. We have only the naked fact that 'there is evidently a declension of zeal for the institution', without any proof. But assuming the fact, a reason is offered by the Editor of the Enquirer for its existence.—

'The principal difficulty, we apprehend is, that it is found that the Bible, without note or comment, gives but little countenance to a spirit of bigotry, intolerance, and sectarian zeal, and that its inspired contents, do, on the whole, speak as favorably of the "way which they call heresy," as of the exclusive claims of what goes under the name of orthodoxy.

The bible "without note or comment," it was did not answer the desired purpose; people were reading it, and making their own comments upon it, according to their own unbiassed understandings and judgment, found but little in it to favor the dogmas of Calvinistic or Arminian orthodoxy. Infidelity, as it is called, that is, a belief in God's universal love, his unchanging benevolence towards all his offspring, and the stability of his gracious purposes:—this most alarming kind of infidelity was found to be prevailing, and raging beyond all former precedent."

Here, it seems to be discovered that the Bible, 'without note or comment,' has 'little in it to favor the dogmas of orthodoxy,' but rather a tendency to promote Universalism. Of course, we shall expect that the Editor of the Inquirer and his readers, will say no more against the American Bible Society, since it promotes their own sentiments so effectually. Even if the silly tale promulgated some time ago were true, that the American Bible Society, distributes its Bibles at an expense, if we mistake not, of something like $8 00 a copy, they ought not to object very strongly—for, according to the Inquirer, these Bibles so distributed are helping to free our fellow citizens from the galling chain of Orthodox superstition, and introducing them to all the blessings of religious freedom and peace. Surely this would be cheaply, in the estimation of the Inquirer, purchased even at $8,00. But if such is really the tendency of the Bible, and the American Bible Society ask too much for the copies they distribute, then surely the Editor of the Inquirer and his readers, provided they cannot unite with existing institutions, will at once form a Bible Society of their own—or, in some other way, take effectual measures to secure access to this precious Book, for all in this land, and for all in the world. They will at least do as much from principle, from benevolence, from humanity, as the Orthodox are doing, as some affirm, from mercenary motives, from ostentation, from 'party purposes,' or from a desire to hold men in bondage to crafty and hireling priests!

The Editor also expresses his views concerning the 'Tract system of operation.' He sooths his dislike of this system too by the belief that it has also, of late, been found to be declining.' 'Revivals of religion also, falsely so called, he says, were found to be losing their hold upon the confidence of the community.' It has been, with some, a fixed principle, that revivals are hurtful to the cause of Orthodoxy, by making men infidels—or by driving them to seek shelter in Universalism. If so, the decline of revivals does not augur well for the cause which the Editor of the Inquirer espouses. Orthodoxy may, after all his predictions, survive, if she shakes off what the Editor calls 'the work of man.' On his own principles, the cessation of revivals would dry up the copious source of the supplies of Universalism. Too much consolation, then must not be derived from the alleged fact that 'revivals of religion are losing their hold upon the confidence of community.'

Four days meetings next come in for a share of the Editor's notice. To these he seems to have strong objections, and a sore dislike.—They detain people too long from their work.'—The Editor quotes on this subject, the command, 'Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work.' We know not how literally he would construe the commandment—or how long a meeting must be, to violate the commandment, in his estimation. If men must labor six days without any exception or limitation, it will be extremely difficult to justify the celebration of Independence, or any other holiday. It will not be very easy to justify some things which we see even in the Religious Inquirer;—for unless we very much mistake, it is no uncommon thing, to see a notice in its columns, that the 'Editor of this paper appoints to preach,'—or 'brother——will preach—,'at such and such a place, during the 'six days' wherein men are commanded to 'labor.' Before Four days meetings are condemned in the gross for violating this commandment, we hope the limitation, the exceptions, will be specified.—We hope it will be distinctly shown, just how long a meeting may be held, during the 'six days,' of the week, without a violation of the precept. We hope the persons will be pointed out, who may 'appoint to preach' during these 'six days,' without violating the command—and what is the precise doctrine they must preach, to save them from the charge of its violation.

But the Editor of the Inquirer has another objection to these Four days meetings—or rather, to the accounts of them which are published.—These accounts seem to imply that 'a Spirit every where present,' is more especially present at one place, than at another. We have witnessed with surprise, this thought brought forward again and again in the Inquirer—sometimes as a sort of argument against revivals, but more usually, if our memory serves us, as a sarcasm against revivals. Because it is said in accounts of revivals, 'that the Holy Spirit was present, or that the Holy Spirit seemed to pass from house to house, or from village to village, the Editor of the Inquirer has more than once; we might perhaps say, he has often; intimated that this represents God as a 'travelling God' &c. We say we have witnessed this with surprise—for any one acquainted with the Bible, knows that these sarcasms might with just as much propriety be directed against the language of that inspired Book. Does not the Bible represent God as coming to his people and as going from them—as hiding himself from them; as returning to his place! The reader may turn to Judges 5, 4-16: 20—1. Samuel 16: 14—28: 15, 16— 2d Samel 22. 7-15—Psalms 6: 4—38: 21—47: 5-68: 7-80: 14—Isaiah 63: 1-64: 1—Hosea 5: 15-6: 8-9: 12—Habakuk 3: 11, 12—Acts 7: 34—and if he does not find language as open to the sarcasms which are so copiously heaped on accounts of revivals, as the phraseology referred to above, we will consent to sit down quietly under the sarcasms, as deserved. But if he finds there, language which is equally exposed to such attempts at wit, he may well wonder, that men who profess to reverence the Bible, and impliedly ridicule it, by ridiculing the use of phraseology drawn from it, and founded on it.

The Editor of the Inquirer consoles himself with the thought, that these Four days meetings will at length fall into disrepute. It may be so; but we should think men might have learned ere this, that the God of truth will never be in want of measures to confound opposers of the truth, and to build up his own kingdom.

MR. TAPPAN'S LETTER TO MR. LORD.

With respect to the coercive nature of the measures adopted by the Union for the better observance of the Sabbath, Mr. Tappan makes the following very pertinent and just remarks.

It will be useful to exhibit here documentary evidence of the truth of this declaration, as it becomes necessary to refute, a thousandth time, stale slanders, when they are revived and endorsed by professed friends of the Sabbath cause.—In a letter of Wm. M. Atkinson, Esq., of Va., to the Corresponding Secretary of the General Union for Promoting the Observance of the Christian Sabbath, he says, "But I would suggest the very great importance of prudence, particularly in avoiding the very appearance of coercion."—S. M. Hopkins, Esq., of Albany, says, "My opinion is that all we do should be done with great forbearance, and in a spirit of perfect kindness. I wish not 'to strive,' but rather to give those who are 'out of the way,' time to think." Rev. Robert Johnston, of Pa., remarks, "The measures we employ are attempts to enlighten the public mind, and press upon the conscience the moral obligation of the Sabbath.... these, together with our earnest prayers to the Lord of the Sabbath, are the measures we have hitherto pursued." Extracts could be given from letters from many citizens who have been among the most active in devising and carrying forward the measures for arresting the profanation of the Sabbath, not one of which intimates the expediency or necessity of using any other weapons than those of persuasion and argument.

Wicked men, indeed, when their consciences are pressed with the requisitions of God's law, mistake the conflict within their own bosoms for external pressure, and are apt to complain of those who have been instruments in occasioning this moral coercion, as if physical restraint was meditated. This is the source of complaint against the friends of the Sabbath, and the occasion of all the noise about their attempts to unite "church and state." The word of God is "a lamp to the feet and a light the path," enabling Christians to understand this natural movement of unsanctified hearts. And they cannot but see with pain and mortification a Christian brother, who ought to have been better advised, echoing the out-cry, and swelling a clamor, raised by the enemies of the Sabbath, that Christians have combined to seek the aid of human laws for the purpose of protecting and extending over the land, the law of God.

It is easy to perceive this natural excitement when the servants of Jesus Christ exhibit the boldness becoming those that profess godliness, on any subject of moral delinquency. If Christians are silent; if they content themselves with mild expostulation; if they let the workers of iniquity triumph in pouring contempt upon the laws of God and man, Satan is well pleased, and finds no fault with such opponents. But when the soldiers of the cross speak out; when they investigate and expose the wickedness of men; when they wage war with the powers of darkness, the prince of darkness and his myrmidons, with all who love darkness because their deeds are evil, are in a paroxysm of rage. Then they exclaim "coercion," an unhallowed union of "church & state;" our liberties are in danger; these "Sabbath" men, and "pious" men, will be the ruin of the country; and resort is had to private slander and public denunciation. It is not every Christian that has nerve enough to withstand such assaults of earth and hell. The timid quail before such opposition, forgetting the precepts and example of their Divine Master, who forewarned them that they must meet with such treatment, but who also consoled them with assurances that truth and righteousness should ultimately prevail; that the wrath of man should be made to praise him; and that they need not fear those who can only kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.*

WASHINGTON, APRIL 29TH, 1830.

DEAR SIR—The cries of "sectarian encroachments upon the rights of conscience," and of "unhallowed union of church and state," ought not to deter from a firm, temperate, and unshrinking pursuit of an object that is sustained by the authority of God, and the best interests of our country. If proofs were wanting that the cause is a good one, we might, I think, find some, not entirely equivocal, in the clamorous and absurd charges raised against us, in many of the memorials on this subject. A stranger to the country would suppose that a dangerous and dreadful conspiracy has been matured, and that civil liberty and the freedom of conscience were about to fall before it. It would greatly surprise a calm and dispassionate looker-on, to be told that this "Christian party" desired nothing further than that the government, in its business, would not interfere with religion so far as to break one of its fundamental laws; that it would be pleased to leave the Sabbath unimpaired in its energies, and not by positive legislation require its desecration.

With my best wishes for your prosperity,
I remain,
Very truly, yours,
THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN.

NAVY CHAPLAINS.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Washington, July 31, 1831.

The departure of the frigate Potomac from our port for yours, suggests to me the propriety of a remark or two concerning the moral condition of our national ships. That American sailors are brave and generous I need not repeat for the information of any one. Oh that they had as elevated a character for piety! Can this be expected till the means are more diligently and systematically used! When not long since a reverend friend and myself called on the President at the request of an applicant for a navy chaplaincy, to urge his suit, we took occasion to enlarge a little on the importance of ardent piety, as well as respectable talents, as qualifications for the station. The President was fully aware that the office had been debased in the eyes of the Navy by unworthy appointments.—Worthless vagabonds, that would not be admitted among the belligerent officers of the Navy, had been permitted to occupy that place. The reform commenced under the last administration, and the present President declared his determination rigidly to inquire into the moral character and ecclesiastical standing of candidates. Our friend was soon appointed, and is now actively engaged abroad. But why should the President have said at this interview, as the only objection to an immediate appointment, that the list was full! There are, I believe, but nine chaplains in the Navy, while the law requires or allows as many as there are ships of war, meaning frigates and seventy-fours. The paucity of numbers in this department of the Navy, exposes the chaplains to animadversions in and out of the Navy, which a better knowledge of the case would spare. For example, the number is so small, that a chaplain, who has been on a three years' cruise, is liable again to be ordered out to sea, in a time unreasonably short compared with the indulgence extended to other officers. These are so numerous, that they are enough to man the whole Navy, if placed in commission, and of course can relieve each other, whereas there are not chaplains enough by two-thirds or three-fourths. And yet there were 200 applications for the chaplaincy of the Potomac! Some of these applications probably were the result of ill health, and a desire to see the world; some to take the very beautiful voyage which the Potomac is expected to make; others might have been in consequence of the want of acceptableness by land; and some, we may hope, from a real desire to benefit the souls of the poor dying sailors, sought the situation. But none were successful. The Secretary of the Navy ordered every chaplain successively at each land station to repair to the Potomac, and succeeded with none except Mr. GRIER, late of the Philadelphia station. They rendered reasons which were deemed satisfactory by the Secretary, who is very courteous to the naval officers, and said to be much more popular than his predecessor. But the reasons given in some of these cases will forever debar those who assign them from going to sea; and ought these gentlemen in consequence to retire their offices, which (though they may preach to a few men on shore) are in fact, with two or three exceptions, little more than sinecures?—The Navy is in perishing want of 20 or 30 able-bodied, fervent-souled chaplains, who, like other officers, will engage in sea-service when ordered so to do, and thus make themselves respected and esteemed by the Government and the Navy, instead of begging and grumbling, or resigning, for fear of the water, the moment they are ordered on active duty. A navy chaplain must be a self-denying man, for he is a missionary; must be very pious, that he may have a powerful stimulant to do good; must have a good mind and a dignified bearing, and make himself unaffectedly familiar with the officers and crew, without descending to any thing gross or improper. He must consider the sea as his element, as much as any of the ship's people, and not continually pine for the land. Of him as of his shipmates, it must be said:

His march is on the mountain wave,
His home is on the deep.

Rev. Mr. HAVES, late of the Norfolk station, succeeds Mr. GRIER at the Navy Yard, Philadelphia. Both these gentlemen have had full trials of the sea.

SABBATH BREAKING.

We extract the subjoined account of the outrageous and disgraceful conduct of the Sabbath breaking pleasure party, from the Cincinnati Daily Gazette. The Philadelphia is a new boat, the Captain's name we understand is MITLER. The trip to Lawrenceburg was publicly announced in some of the city papers. We only add here, that such conduct is the invariable result of Sabbath breaking and Sunday drinking. Such licentiousness is fostered by our licensed grog shops which keep open doors on the Sabbath in the face and eyes of the corporation. What better conduct could be expected from the high and low rabble of a city of only 30,000 inhabitants, which support 196 grog shops, and where Sunday drinking and Sunday excursions for pleasure, are more frequent than on any other day of the week.

INDECENCY AND OUTRAGE.

"We find in a Lawrenceburg, Indiana paper, the Western Statesman, of July 23d, the proceedings of a public meeting held in that place, very seriously implicating the conduct of a large number of Cincinnatians.

It seems that the steam boat Philadelphia, on Sunday, July 17, was chartered by some of our citizens, for a PLEASURE TRIP, upon the river. The Committee of citizens of Lawrenceburg, give the subjoined account of the proceedings of some of the company at that place.

'The boat passed this place about noon, under full head way, colors flying, and a band of music on board. In about one hour and a half she returned up the river and landed, when 4 or 500 persons came ashore, preceded by the music, and paraded the streets. Many were in a high state of intoxication, and disregarding the common restraints of decency, behaved in the most blackguard and ruffian-like manner. In one instance a number of them entered uninvited and unasked into the private dwelling of one of our citizens, and in the most rude and insulting manner appropriated the sitting room to themselves. The owner, alarmed at the intrusion, took the precaution to fasten the kitchen door, or he believes they would have entered and ransacked it in quest of something to sate their thirsty and craving appetites. They also visited the public houses, where the most disgraceful and riotous acts were committed. In one they called for provisions and drink, and after being furnished with both left the house without paying the fare. They attacked and threatened to break open a grocery store, but were prevented from effecting their object by the resolute conduct of the keeper. They committed many other acts both in violation of our laws and profanation of the Sabbath, which we shall pass over in silence.

When tired of parading the streets, a movement was made, and the music striking up a merry air, the cavalcade marched to the boat, whither nearly all who had come ashore were making their way to embark. About this time a fracas commenced with stones, originating, as is believed, with those on the hurricane deck of the boat, and some boys on shore, and spread with great fury for a few minutes, when the assailants made a rush from the boat, and those on shore gave way and dispersed. The stones thrown from the shore, were invariably directed against those who commenced the attack on the hurricane deck.

The conduct of the persons, who left the boat in this assault, was outrageous in the extreme. They assailed the Peace Officers present, who had exerted their utmost to repress the affray, with abusive language and personal violence, threatening to cut them to pieces in a moment, if they dared to molest or interfere with them. After swaggering about a short time, swearing and cursing what they would do, and not seeing any but peaceable and orderly people to quarrel with, they retired or rather staggered to the boat, which soon after put out unmolested, though it was strongly urged, that the indignity offered should not thus easily be suffered to pass unpunished.'

RUM-SELLING CHRISTIAN PROFESSORS.

We are tired and sick of the frequent accounts that are given of these religious monsters.—When will the united voice of the Christian church compel such depraved and determined opposers of good to seek shelter under some other covering! They have scattered 'fire-brands, arrows and death,' under the cloak of religion, long enough. It is time they were out—and we see no way now to get them out, but by making their enormities 'manifest to all.'

There are three stores at North-Granville, in this county—all kept by professors of religion. One of these merchants being absent, and he a deacon of a church, the others agreed to sell no spirituous liquor provided he would come into the measure. This was communicated to him on his return, but he flatly refused—being, like the 'Northumberland deacon,' determined to 'sell rum as long as he can find any body to buy.' He continued the trade. The other two having the example of the deacon to keep them in countenance, also sell the poison. Mark!—the deacon sells to any body, and (☞habitually breaks the law and the conditions of his license, by allowing ardent spirits to be drank in his store! He may have a particular desire to know that it is swallowed, so as to be certain of poisoning his customers, and hereafter be able to reflect sweetly on the victories he accomplished, and point his finger at his former friend—saying, (☞'there is one of my victims! I sold him rum, when I was the deacon of a church, and ruined him, SOUL and BODY!' ☜) Shame—shame on such professors!

PARKER'S LECTURES ON UNIVERSALISM.

A few copies of these Lectures may be had at this office.

REVIVALS.

Our readers may possibly suppose that the spirit of revivals which has for near a year been abroad in our land is subsiding, from the fact that we have not, for two or three weeks inserted the usual number of notices of them; but it is far otherwise. Our exchange papers contain so many accounts of revivals and four days meetings, that we might fill our columns with them, and sometimes in despair of being able to reduce them to such a compass as to enable us to insert them all, we have omitted them almost entirely.

That our readers may know something of the state of revivals in different parts of the country, we will just name the places where revivals are or have been recently enjoyed. MUNSON, (50 conversions,) BRIMFIELD, WESTON, revival is powerful and extensive.—WEST BROOKFIELD, WARE, (both parishes) AMHERST. All these are in Massachusetts.

In CONNECTICUT—LYME, NORTH LYME, (30 have united with Mr. Hawe's church,) in HEBRON there are more than 100 conversions, in NEWBURYPORT, (Mass.) the work is powerful and there have been some striking instances of the triumphs of grace in subduing stout hearted opposers.

In UNION, Broome county, (N. Y.) about 60 are rejoicing in hope.

In WINDHAM, Portage co. Ohio, the Sabbath School has shared largely in the fruits of the revival. Three young men went to an adjoining town last spring to unite with a temperance society, there being none in Windham, they are subjects of the revival.

TALLMADGE, Ohio.—About 60 conversions—near 30 were members of a Sabbath School. The work is increasing in power.

CINCINNATI, Ohio.—Forty-nine united with Mr. Gallaher's church, on the 10th ult.

In SAVANNAH, Ga.—The state of things is encouraging—some for conversion.

OTSEGO COUNTY.—The towns of HUNTSVILLE, FRANKLIN, MERIDEN and HAMDEN in this county, and DELHI and SIDNEY in Delaware county, enjoy revivals.

In RICHMOND, Virginia, and its vicinity, very powerful revivals exist among the Baptists—224 having been gathered into one church since the commencement of the work.

ORANGEVILLE GEN. CO.

Sixty three united with the church in this place on the last Sabbath. We mentioned some weeks ago, the protracted meeting which had been held there. Numbers were converted belonging to other towns, and who of course, will unite with other churches.

This revival has given a very different aspect to the religious societies in that region.

Death by Hydrophobia.—We learn from the Buffalo Journal that Mr. Levi Street formerly a resident, and an early settler of the town of Sheldon Genesee county, recently died near Cincinnati, from the bite of a mad dog. He found the dog biting his hogs, and was bitten himself while attempting to drive him away.

Mr. Street was the first contractor for carrying the mail from Canandaigua, through Richmond, Geneseo, and Moscow to Sheldon. This was about twenty years ago. The roads were at that time, west of the Genesee River, excessively bad—the country in the earliest stages of its settlement, the mail of course must be carried on horseback—in this Mr. Street was indefatigable and the inhabitants on that route will long remember with how much pleasure they heard the sound of Mr. Street's horn announcing the arrival of the mail.—He continued however contractor for the transportation of the mail, until the roads had become so much improved as to admit of its being conveyed on wheels. It was at first conveyed in a small coach with two horses. Indeed he continued in the business until a line of post coaches was established from Canandaigua to Moscow, running three times a week. This has been for some years an important route, the mail being transported daily as far west as Moscow, and from thence three times a week to Buffalo.

Mr. Street resided most of the time while engaged in the business of carrying the mail, at Sheldon, where some of his children, and other relatives now reside. He was a member of the Baptist church.

"An Enquirer" cannot be inserted in the Observer, because his enquiries are just of that cast to excite unprofitable controversy.

We have received an obituary notice of Mr. Joseph Smith, a Botanic Physician of this village, who died suddenly on Friday last. But as we were acquainted with Mr. Smith, and have always supposed him to be a peaceable citizen and an honest man, we cannot consent to inflict upon his memory this fulsome piece of bombast.

We have received a communication from B. in relation to laboring on the Sabbath in cases where grain, hay, &c. would be liable to receive damage if not secured on that day. As the article is very long and does not, in our opinion, throw much light upon the subject, we shall publish only the following fact which is embodied in the article.

The writer says that he recently attended meeting on the Sabbath in an adjoining town—that there were few present, and the reason of it was, that a large proportion of the farmers in the neighborhood, and among them about a dozen professors of religion, one of whom was a deacon of the church, were laboring in their fields, securing their crops. They were at work so near the place of worship that their conversation, and their noise in driving their teams, were distinctly heard and contrasted rather unpleasantly with the solemnities of the house of God and the stillness of the holy Sabbath.

The scene we suppose took place not far from this village, and these professors we conclude, belong to a church in connection with the Rochester Presbytery.

This subject together with the BURNING OF BRICK on the Lord's Day, which has once or twice been mentioned in the Observer, [illegible] thorough investigation. With respect to the latter it might be brought into a tangible shape, by first deciding the question, whether it is right in the sight of God for a professed follower of Christ to engage in any business which he cannot carry on without violating the fourth commandment? As to the former it might be settled by ascertaining whether the command has ever been repealed by God, "In earing time and in harvest thou shalt rest."

THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL.

An agent for this paper writes us, that he finds the greatest difficulty in persuading wealthy professors of religion to subscribe. In some instances, professors who are worth thousands, who take no religious publication, and have large families of children, excuse themselves from taking the Observer on account of their inability to pay, while their neighbor, who is in indigent circumstances—whose piety has not been choked by the cares of this world, "the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things," cannot be deprived of the privilege of learning through the columns of a religious journal, what the Lord is doing in building up the waste places of Zion, and converting sinners to himself.—This we are aware is no new thing, but it impresses upon our minds still more forcibly, the declaration that "the love of money is the root of all evil." When will professing christians learn that they "cannot serve God and Mammon!" That feeding the body and starving the soul, is not the way to prepare for the Bar of God!

ECONOMY.—The Agent of the United States among the Cherokees, says the Phœnix, is engaged in the distribution of the annuity allowed them by government. It has always, until the present time, been paid to the Treasurer of the Cherokee Government. The amount is 40 or 50 cents for each individual, and the President has directed that the annuity, instead of being paid, as heretofore, together to the Treasurer, should be paid to each individual of the nation, a great proportion of whom have to travel more miles than they receive cents. Some of them must make a journey of 180 miles. The Cherokees have signed a remonstrance against this oppressive act, but it has, of course, been disregarded. The editor of the Phœnix says, "We have heard that the agent has succeeded in inducing many individuals, the majority of whom are women, to receive their proportion of the annuity. It is further said that most of them took corn, (they preferred it we suppose), and the agent has received the money. It is a money-making business for him and his particular friends."

We venture to say that there can be but one opinion about this business among honorable men. If the Indians are to be driven off by acts of oppression, why not come out boldly and do it at once, instead of resorting to these little contemptible acts which must disgrace us, as a nation, in the eyes of the civilized world.

The same paper says that Dr. Butler, who was taken prisoner by the Georgia Guard, while travelling in a very dark night, with his escort, came very near losing his life by the stumbling of his horse, to which it is said, he was chained.

The captive Missionaries are still in close confinement.

The letter of Mrs. Butrick, wife of one of the Missionaries, will be read with interest, and with feelings of indignation and contempt, at the conduct of their more than savage oppressors.

MOURNING APPAREL.

Notwithstanding the long established custom of wearing black at the decease of relatives and friends—notwithstanding the tyranny of fashion, especially when connected with the tenderest sensibilities of our nature—indicating the depth of our affliction at the sundering of the dearest earthly ties, yet we are rather surprized that good sense is so rapidly gaining ground in this case—that mourning apparel is so extensively going into disuse, when so little has been said on the subject. The fact is, this is a thinking, reflecting and acting age. The antiquity of a custom cannot shield it from scrutiny. People are not afraid to examine for themselves, and to act according to the convictions of their understandings.

We have within a few weeks had very favorable opportunities for judging of the extent in the change in relation to this subject. We have seen a very considerable number of families, occupying different stations in society—some of them professors of religion, others that were not—who have been deprived of some near relative, refusing compliance with the mandate of fashion in relation to mourning apparel, daring to act according to the dictates of their judgment, even under those trying circumstances. Indeed we are confident that in much more than half the instances, in this vicinity, where families have been invaded by the hand of death, no mourning apparel, or mourning badge has been worn, to tell to the world the depth of their affliction or to excite the pity and sympathy of friends.

The more closely this subject is examined, the more apparent will be the reasons for the change which has thus been begun, & the more men are governed by the decision of their judgment, the more rapid and complete will be their emancipation from the trammels of a custom which has nothing else to plead for its continuance but its high antiquity.

The communication of Mr. Buchan, which will be found in another column of this paper, is just such an article as we should not publish were it written by any one calling himself a Protestant—but coming as it does from a Catholic, we give it without hesitation or reluctance. The charges of Mr. B. against Republicus, we shall leave him to answer. We are pleased to see a catholic come out in vindication of his tenets, as it gives our readers an opportunity of seeing both sides.

Mr. Buchan's communications will be cheerfully given in this paper, with the following restrictions. They must not be indecently personal, nor extend to more than a column in length. In a private note Mr. B. requests us to send him a proof of his communication, if we insert them, the day previous to publication.—This we cannot do—it is an inconvenience to which we cannot subject ourselves. His articles shall be carefully read by copy, and while written in as fair a hand as the present there will be no difficulty in avoiding mistakes.

East Cambridge, [illegible] communication of Rev. A. D. Eddy, in the fourth paragraph, the word philosophically is put in the place of philologically. The sentence should read thus, "To discharge the earliest duties of his office, he is to understand and explain the scriptures philologically, and from them draw out a system of doctrines and precepts for the faith and obedience of man."

A letter dated Aurora August 2d, to the Editor of this paper says. "The work of the Lord prospers in this place." The house of worship at Griffin's Mills I mentioned (last fall or winter) as so much needed, is under way; the frame 40 by 50 feet is up, and the out side will soon be completed; but the $500, to complete the inside is not yet found, neither do we know where it can be found: but we feel that the work must not stop."

POLAND.

From the latest accounts from the theatre of war, it is obvious that the late partial defeat of the Poles, has not materially diminished their resources or their ardor in the cause of liberty. Indeed their army has been very considerably augmented, and the provinces which were more remote from the capital and had been more completely under Russian control, are rising with a patriotic ardor worthy of the Polish character—are rising in their might and ranging themselves under the banners of their country. It is evident that the Autocrat did not anticipate such a protracted struggle. He had become dissatisfied with Diebitsch, as is often the case with despots when their bravest and most successful Generals meet with a reverse of fortune. The death of this distinguished Russian commander which took place on the 10th June of an attack of the Cholera, will save him from experiencing the displeasure of his master, and place him beyond the reach of his arbitrary power. In the death of this popular and experienced commander, the Poles have doubtless gained much. Their prospects of ultimate success are at the last dates far more flattering than at any former period.

The Steam Boat Yellowstone, owned by the American Fur company, has ascended the Missouri to Fort Tecumseh, 1300 miles above St. Louis,—brought down a full cargo of Buffalo Robes, Furs and Peltries, besides 10,000 pounds of Buffalo Tongues!

SUNDAY,

Is, by many millions of persons in France, Italy, Germany, &c. professors of Christianity, set aside for dancing parties in the afternoon and evening attendance at the theatres, &c. In other countries it is the favorite season for cock-fighting, horse-racing and other like "sports." In England and the United States, the day is preferred by many hundreds of thousands for excessive eating and drinking, with much sleeping, and not a little wrangling and fighting—and we see that in Chili it is appointed for holding the elections—to hurrah for the ins, or hurrah for the outs.—Niles' Register.

And we might add, that it is considered by men of liberal principles in the United States, as a coercive measure to petition Congress not to compel Post-masters, Stage proprietors, stage drivers, &c to labor on that day. Had these men the power—were their principles to prevail, how long before our elections would be held on Sunday! It might with some pertinency be asked what is the moral character of the people of the countries above named, where the Sabbath is most disregarded—and how does it compare with that of the inhabitants of N. England, and other parts of our country, where the Sabbath is more strictly observed!—ED. ROCH. OBS.

After the Editorial notice we give of the death of Mr. Street was in type, we received the following interesting notice of the last distressing hours, and the triumph of religion, over even the horrid death that terminated his life.

Death by Hydrophobia!—The following particulars of a most distressing case of this dreadful disease, are from the Cincinnati Journal of the 15th ult.

Sometime about the first of June, a Mr. Levi Street (formerly of Sheldon, Genesee County, N. Y.) observed one day, a dog in his hog pen biting his hogs. Attempting to drive him out, the dog flew at Mr. Street and bit him severely. About nine days after this occurrence, one of his hogs died in a rabid state. Mr. Street, although apprehensive of danger from the first, continued to enjoy good health up to Tuesday the 5th inst. On retiring to bed Tuesday evening, he complained of being unwell. His indisposition, however, excited no alarm till Wednesday morning about 10 o'clock, when on putting his hand into a bowl of water for the purpose of washing, he was seized with violent spasms, and forced to recoil several paces. After repeated trials he succeeded in washing himself, but under such circumstances as left no doubt, that he was suffering under one of the most appalling of all disorders, the hydrophobia. His mind, however, was composed. Perfectly conscious that his end was near, he sent for many of his friends and neighbors, with whom he conversed with his usual freedom, and without the least perceptible aberration of mind. From the very first, he prayed that if he should be attacked with hydrophobia, he might not be left to do violence to any one, or to disgrace the religion of Christ, which he had long professed. His petitions were in both respects, remarkably answered. On Wednesday evening he sent for some persons in his vicinity, notoriously indifferent to the subject of religion, and wicked as to their moral conduct, and prayed with them, and exhorted them to repentance. These exhortations under such circumstances, produced a most overwhelming effect upon all who heard them. Many were brought to weep, whose eyes had been unwet, and whose hearts had been unaffected for years by any considerations of a religious nature. All this time he was in great bodily distress, his whole frame was convulsed, and he was continually, when on his feet, springing from one side of the room to the other, with the greatest apparent ease. It was with difficulty that he could compose himself to rest, even for a few moments at a time on the bed, during any period of his sickness. As persons from the vicinity were constantly flocking to see him, he never ceased his conversation, his counsels and his exhortations, until a short period before his death. Many were afraid to approach him, to whom he made repeated assurances that he would not injure them. Others approached him, took [illegible] with him in prayer.

The whole scene was one of deep, absorbing, and painful interest, surpassing all description. The strange spectacle was here presented to the living, of a man in his full strength, walking about the room, conversing with his friends, praying with, and exhorting impenitent sinners to prepare for death; and yet perfectly conscious that he must die in a few hours; foaming at the mouth, and exhibiting by the convulsions of his whole frame, and the horrible distortion of countenance, and the unnatural expression of his eyes, which seemed ready to burst from their sockets, that a terrible poison was drinking up his spirits, the progress of whose destructive energy no power on earth was able to arrest. Still, during his most violent paroxysms, his mind was perfectly calm and collected. Not the slightest aberration of intellect was discoverable, in any expression which escaped him during his sickness. The promise "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," and "as thy day is, so shall thy strength be," was in this instance most wonderfully verified. All who witnessed his composure ascribed it to the power of christian religion: and that strength which Christ ever imparts to his true followers, to enable them to bear up with composure under whatever appalling circumstances they may be called to pass through the dark valley of the shadow of death. Resting on his Almighty arm they may safely trust him for "dying grace when dying comes." Such was the case of him, the painful circumstances of whose dying hours are narrated above. He had long been a follower of Christ,—had long trusted in him for salvation, and now he found that his confidence had not been misplaced.—While his convulsions lasted he offered no violence to any one; and about 2 o'clock on Thursday, he became perfectly composed, and laid himself down quietly on his bed of death, and without a struggle, gently breathed out his soul on the bosom of that Savior, who can even make such a dying bed

"Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Previous to his death he requested his friends to commence holding prayer meetings that evening in the room where he died. The request was complied with, and the services on that occasion will long be remembered by those who had the privilege of being present. Similar meetings are to be held there from week to week.

Copy of a letter from Mrs. Butrick to Col. Sanford.

CARMEL June 13, 1831.

COL. SANFORD.

Sir.—The orders that Mr. Butrick has of late received have caused him to go to labour in another part of the Nation, where we hope he will enjoy while there, the greatest privilege on earth, to him, that is, instructing the dear Cherokees. He came here to teach them the way to Eternal life, to preach the everlasting gospel of Christ, and in this employment his soul has been comforted. But now in this place he is denied this inestimable privilege. By whom! Not by any of the Cherokees, that is certain. Some of our neighbors, a few days since, were here, and said if it were their people that were taking such measures, they would go the greatest length possible to prevent such proceedings.

We wish to be considered as Cherokees, continue here as long as they do, have this people as our people, our God their God. To be separated from them would be like dislocating our very limbs. We have left near and beloved friends, dear they are to us, to come here to instruct, and we hope for the salvation of this people. We would not be so grovelling, so much like the busy world as to spend one hour in conversation with them about earthly prospects. But O their souls, their precious their never dying souls, their eternal interest, for this may we ever feel the greatest solicitude, and in this blessed work may we more vigorously be engaged. We do hope, we ask, we entreat, to have the privilege of laboring here at this place, for the good of this people.

Respectfully, E. BUTRICK.

INDIAN WRONGS AT THE WEST.

Maumee Mission, July 19th, 1831.

MR. ISHAM:—Believing you a friend of the Indians, I submit to your disposal the following communication from sister Newel, at Waupaughkanetta.

After repeated and earnest solicitations from the Shawnese, to assist in procuring the means of instruction for their children, early last spring we made arrangements to furnish them, for the present season, with a female teacher, whom they agreed to furnish with boarding in families near the school. Accordingly we took Miss. Newel out there, and she opened a small school about the last of May, with flattering prospects of soon having it enlarged, and established on a more permanent basis. She had received encouragement from the present agent, who said he had several hundred dollars at his disposal, to be appropriated for the support of schools among the Shawnese. Several ministers had also pledged themselves to support a large boarding school, if one could be put in operation. This was just what the Shawnese wanted, (for, in their present scattered state, they could not all be benefitted by a district school,) and to the accomplishment of this desirable object, they had already begun to look forward with pleasing anticipations.—Just at this important and critical moment the destroyer comes!

Mr. Gardner, without the consent or approbation of Congress, but commissioned and authorised by the President, makes propositions for their removal west of the Mississippi.

I will now transcribe Miss. Newels letter—she was an eye-witness of the scene. In the proceedings that follow, I think the good citizens of Ohio are basely slandered, and I feel as if they ought to know it.

Wauppaughkanetta, June 29th 1831.

DEAR SISTER:—It is at all times our privilege to rejoice, that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. In this I do, and will rejoice, though his ways be not as my ways; nor his thoughts as my thoughts. To instruct the Shawnese children is not what He at present requires of me. You are informed I suppose before this, that the Indians here, have concluded to accept of the proposals of Mr. Gardner. Perhaps the Ottawas have ere this. I heard his address both parts of the day. In the A. M. it was very interesting. He gave a history of the Indians from the time of the whites first coming among them; rehearsed all the probable evidences that ever came to my knowledge of their descending from the Israelites. This was to reconcile them to a removal. As they were once God's favored people, so according to prophecy they must be again; and the President wished for this reason, that they might be in a large place, free from the contaminating influence of vicious whites. If he has not already visited you, I hope as many of you as can, will hear his speech. I believe he was sorry to have me hear what he had to say in the afternoon. I could but just stand it; I was almost ready to wish myself made of different materials. The fate of the Cherokees was rehearsed to them, and they were told this was the last time the President would ever send an agent to them to make proposals. They appeared deeply affected, but thought perhaps they should come off better, to express no aggrievance, but stand it out, appear as brave as they could, and tell the President he had offered them a good bargain, and they would accept of his proposals.

One of the Chiefs said it was a tough, hard case, to give his people up to come under State laws without being permitted to vote, or having their civil oaths regarded before a magistrate; it would be as bad as to give themselves up to have their throats cut: for he could easily conceive of their being driven to desperation, and immediately committing outrage that would bring them to the gallows; and it was a tough hard case to decide to go; but as there was no alternative, they had better be reconciled to go." I believe they have tried to keep up each other's spirits, and exhort each other to unanimity of feeling upon the subject. Their minds appear constantly to be in a state of excitement.—Oh! that they might like their brethren at the south, be directed by the Holy Spirit to seek that rest which remaineth for the people of God. All business seems to be suspended, and they act as we might expect them too, if the final day of doom had come.

The old men sat in council, looking each other in the face, and mourning over their fate from Monday morning until Tuesday night.—They sat and talked all night long, and parted with no better state of feeling than when they came together. They think their prospect of earthly good is blasted forever! They say they have nothing to hope for here, or beyond the Mississippi either. They had thought for years past, that there would be no hope for them; only by their conduct pleasing the white people so well, that they would not wish them to move away. This they had endeavored to do, had made up their minds to encourage schools, attend to agriculture, and examined the religion of the Bible; but they now saw it would all be in vain. Those Indians that had learning, and had received the religion of white people were all hated and despised alike, and were now invited to take up their lot together. They said the President had offered to build them school houses and a meeting house beyond the Mississippi; but if they went, they should abandon the whole, build their own council house and worship the Great Spirit in their own way."

The same agent has been here, but having no information, I was absent at the time. I think however, the Ottowas will not sell at present; If at any future period they are obliged to move, they will not place themselves again, within the power of our government, but will flee to Canada, where they will be treated kindly.

Yours, &c. ISAAC VAN TASSEL.

POLAND.

A correspondent of the London Morning Herald, speaking of the present condition of Poland says,

Many of the Nobility have already spontaneously abolished all remnants of former servitude; and the Senator Francis Nawaski, has declared each soldier belonging to his large estates, and returning, after the campaign, with a certificate of good behaviour, to be entitled to a freehold property of 50 acres of good arable land, besides a cottage and a 100 florins for the purchase of agricultural implements. Donations for the support of the army in the field, and the sick and wounded, flow in from all parts of the old Polish provinces; and the noble inhabitants of Prussian Poland assist zealously their brethren, in spite of the attrocious ukase issued against them by their gracious Sovereign the King of Prussia. Indeed, nothing exceeds the treachery exercised by that Government against that much injured nation, disgracing the Prussian name merely for the sake of a family connexion between the Emperor of Russia and the Royal family of Prussia. The time, however, is not far distant when the Court of Prussia will pay dear for its shameful violations of all feelings of decency and humanity. The Poles are at this present moment as strong as ever; they have now 10,000 men, regular troops, under arms, besides the new levy of 3,000 recruits. Their fortresses, Zamosc, Modlin, and particularly Praga, are impregnable, and 100,000 Russians would now be insufficient to conquer Warsaw. The dissatisfaction with Diebitsch is already beginning to operate on the mind of his master. His whole army consists of 80,000 men, besides 24,000 men under General Toll, in the neighborhood of Lublin. It is only for the supplies brought him from Prussia, under the escort of Prussian soldiers that he could maintain himself so long in the position he now occupies in the North East part of the kingdom of Poland. It is little known that, on his entering Poland he had been appointed by his master Governor General of the kingdom, with unlimited power, and the Provisional Members of his Council, consisting of some slaves of the Autocrat's Court, and three degenerated natives of Poland, had actually arrived in Balystock, from St. Petersburg, to begin their iniquitous work of destruction, a few days previous to the last movement of the Polish Commander-in-Chief towards Lithuania.

TEA MARKET.—Letters from Canton, represent the Tea crop for the present season as unusually small. It is estimated that the quantity which will be shipped to the United States during the entire season of 1831, will not exceed 50,000 or 60,000 chests including all kinds both of Green and Black Teas. The average importations for the last eight years say, from 1823 to 1830, have been 113,574 chests.

A meeting of between 30 and 40 of the citizens of Rochester and vicinity was held, according to the notice given in the Rochester Observer, on the 8th day of August, 1831.

On motion of Doct. Smith, Mr. Chichester was chosen Chairman, and on motion of Mr. Matthews, J. A. Sprague was chosen Secretary. Mr. Davis of Greece addressed the Throne of Grace. Dr. Smith made some remarks, and read the notice which had called the meeting.—Mr. Davis then addressed the meeting at some length, stating the object of the meeting, and stating that he thought it advisable that something should be done by this community in the way of sending a colony into the valley of the Mississippi. Bradford King then made some remarks in favor of the same. Mr. Lee then gave some account of a Colony that had already gone on. Mr. Scofield also made some remarks stating the lamentable condition of the inhabitants in that part of our country, and how much influence might be exerted by Christians if they would be induced to go. Doct. Smith then made some further remarks, stating that the object of the colony would be to purchase a place and settle in a body, and try to exert an influence on the surrounding country and cause the Gospel to be preached—perhaps locate at the falls of the Illinois, which is about one hundred miles from the south end of Lake Michigan—country settling rapidly. On motion of Doct. Smith.

Resolved, That we proceed to form a Colony.

Mr. Mount made some very appropriate remarks, urging us forward; as the followers of Christ, to do something immediately. Some further remarks were made by Mr. Davis, and on his motion,

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to report on the object of this meeting at some future day—committee to consist of seven, viz: Dr. Smith; Bradford King; J. A. Sprague; S. W. Lee; Micah Porter; Rev. Mr. Davis; and Deacon Arnold.

Resolved, That the Committee be instructed to report a Constitution at the next meeting.

On motion of Mr. Lee, adjourned, to meet in this place on the 2nd Monday in Sept. next at 2 o'clock, P. M.

IT is designed to organize a class in the Rochester Institute for commencing the study of the Hebrew. Persons not connected with the Institute may have the privilege of joining this class. For further information, apply to the Principal.

The Hebrew can be learned independently of other ancient languages. It requires less time than Latin or Greek; and is important for every man and woman who reads the Bible for himself. A single hour's study in a day, persevered in for a few months will enable the learner to read Hebrew with accuracy and infinitely more profit than any modern language. The time is probably not far distant when a knowledge of the original languages of the scriptures will be considered an essential part of a Christian education. 33tf

HORRORS OF THE SLAVE TRADE.

Dreadful, beyond description, must be the sufferngs of the victims, and opulent in depravity they who carry on the infernal traffic. This traffic, however, will be pursued so long as there remains a market for slaves; therefore, they who call for a gradual abolition of slavery at home, do, in fact, demand a gradual abolition of the foreign slave trade!

After describing a protracted but successful pursuit of a slaver, for more than three hundred miles, Mr. Walsh says:

'The first object that struck us, was an enormous gun, turning on a swivel, on deck, the constant appendage of a pirate; and the next were large kettles for cooking, on the bows, the usual apparatus of a slaver. Our boat was now hoisted out, and I went on board with the officers.—When we mounted her decks, we found her full of slaves. She was called the Veloz, commanded by captain Jose Barbosa, bound to Bathia.—She was a very broad decked ship, with a mainmast, schooner-rigged, and behind her foremast was that large formidable gun, which turned on a broad circle of iron, on deck, and which enabled her to act as a pirate, if her slaving speculation had failed. She had taken in, on the coast of Africa, 336 males, and 226 females, making in all 562, and had been out seventeen days, during which she had thrown overboard fifty-five.—The slaves were all enclosed under grated hatchways, between decks, The space was so low, that they sat between each other's legs, and stowed so close together, that there was no possibility of their lying down, or at all changing their position, by night or day. As they belonged to, and were shipped on account of different individuals, they were all branded, like sheep, with the owners' marks of different forms.—These were impressed under their breasts, or on their arms, and, as the mate informed me, with perfect indifference, "queimados pelo ferro quento—burnt with the red-hot iron." Over the hatchway stood a ferocious looking fellow, with a scourge of many twisted thongs in his hand, who was the slave-driver of the ship, and whenever he heard the slightest noise below, he shook it over them, and seemed eager to exercise it. I was quite pleased to take this hateful badge out of his hand, and I have kept it ever since, as a horrid memorial of reality, should I ever be disdosed to forget the scene I witnessed.

'As soon as the poor creatures saw us looking town at them, their dark and melancholy visages brightened up. They perceived something of sympathy and kindness in our looks, which they had not been accustomed to, and feeling instinctively that we were friends, they immediately began to shout and clap their hands. One or two had picked up a few Portuguese words, and cried out, "Viva! viva!" The women were particularly excited. They all held up their arms, and when we bent down and shook hands with them, they could not contain their delight; they endeavored to scramble upon their knees, stretching up to kiss our hands, and we understood that they knew we had come to liberate them. Some, however, hung down their heads in apparently hopeless dejection; some were greatly emaciated, and some, particularly children, seemed dying.

'But the circumstances which struck us most forcibly, was, how it was possible for such a number of human beings to exist packed up and wedged together as tight as they could cram, in low cells, three feet high, the greater part of which, except that immediately under the grated hatchways, was shut out from light & air, and this when the thermometer exposed to the open sky, was standing in the shade, on our deck, at 89 degres. The space between decks was divided into compartments, 3 feet 3 inches high; the size of one was 16 feet by 18, and of the other 40 by 21; into the first, were crammed the women and girls; into the second the men and boys; 226 fellow creatures were thus thrust into one space 228 feet square; and 336 into another space 800 feet square, giving to the whole an average of 23 inches, and to each of the women, not more than 13 inches, though many of them were pregnant. We also found manacles and fetters of different kinds, but it appears that they had all been taken off before we boarded.

'The heat of these horrid places was so great, and the odor so offensive, that it was quite impossible to enter them, even had there been room. They were measured as above, when the slaves had left them. The officers insisted that the poor suffering creatures should be admitted on deck to get air and water. This was opposed by the mate of the slaver, who, from a feeling that they deserved it, declared they would murder them all. The officers however, persisted, and the poor beings were all turned up together. It is impossible to conceive the effect of this eruption—517 fellow creatures of all ages and sexes, some children, some adults, some old men and women, all in a state of nudity, scrambling out together to taste the luxury of a little fresh air and water. They came swarming up like bees from the aperture of a hive, till the whole deck was crowded to suffocation, from stem to stern: so that it was impossible to imagine where they could have all come from, or how they could have been stowed away. On looking into the places where they had been cramed, there were found some children next the sides of the ship, in the places most remote from light and air; they were laying nearly in a torpid state after the rest were all turned out. The little creatures seemed indifferent as to life or death, and when they were carried on deck, many of them could not stand.

'After enjoying for a short time the unusual luxury of air, some water was brought: it was then that the extent of their suffering was exposed in a fearful manner. They all rushed like maniacs towards it. No entreates, nor threats, nor blows, could restrain them; they shrieked and struggled, and fought with one another, for a drop of this precious liquid, as if they grew rabid at the sight of it. There is nothing which slaves in the mid-passage, suffer from so much, as the want of water. It is sometimes usual to take out casks filled with sea water, as ballast, and when the slaves are received on board, to start the casks, and refill them with fresh. On one occasion, a ship from Bahia neglected to change the contents of the casks, and on the mid passage, found to their horror, that they were filled with nothing but salt water. All the slaves on board perished! We could judge of the extent of their sufferings from the afflicting sight we now saw. When the poor creatures were ordered down again, several of them came and pressed their head against our knees, with looks of the greatest anguish, at the prospect of returning to the horid place of suffering below.

'It was not surprising that they should have endured much sickness and loss of life, in their short passage. They had sailed from the coast of Africa on the 7th of May, and had been out but 17 days, and they had thrown overboard no less than fifty-five, who had died from dysontery and other complaints, in that space of time, though they had left the coast in good health. Indeed, many of the survivors were seen laying about the decks in the last stage of emaciation, and in a state of filth and misery not to be looked at. Evenhanded justice had visited the effects of this unholy traffic, on the crew who were engaged in it. Of the [illegible] and [illegible] at that moment [illegible] on board, [illegible] in different stages of fever. This mortality did not arise from want of medicine. There was a large stock ostentatiously displayed, in the cabin, with a manuscript book, containing directions as to the quantities; but the only medical man on board to prescribe it, was a black, who was as ignorant as his patients.

'While expressing my horror at what I saw, and exclaiming against the state of this vessel for conveying human beings, I was informed by my friends, who had passed so long a time on the coast of Africa, and visited so many ships, that this was one of the best they had seen. The height, sometimes, between deck, was only 18 inches, so that the unfortunate beings could not turn round, or even on their sides, the elevation being less than the breadth of their shoulders; and here they are usually chained to the deck by the neck and legs. In such a place, the sense of misery and suffocation is so great, that the negroes, like the English in the black hole in Calcutta, are driven to frenzy. They had, on one occasion taken a slave vessel in the river Bann; the slaves were stowed in the narrow space between decks, and chanined together. They heard a horoid din and tumult among them, and could not imagine from what cause it proceeded. They opened the hatches, and turned them up on deck. They were manacled together in twos and threes. Their horror may be well conceived, when they found a number of them in different stages of suffocation; many of them were foaming at the mouth, and in the last agonies—many were dead. A living man was sometimes dragged up, and his companion was a dead body; sometimes, of the three attached to the same chain, one was dying and another dead. The tumult they had heard was the frenzy of those suffocating wretches in the last stage of fury and desperation, strugling to extricate themselves. When they were all dragged up, nineteen were irrecoverably dead. Many destroyed one another in the hopes of procuring room to breathe; men strangled those next them, and women drove nails into each others brains. Many unfortunate creatures, on other occasions, took the first opportunity of leaping overboard, and getting rid in this way, of an intolerable life.'—

From the Liberator.

ANOTHER STEP!

☞The march of Equality is onward. Here is another triumph of good sense over prejudice. We copy the article from the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

'We are informed by a Jamaica gentleman, that last month, the Hon. Thomas L. Yates, the Mayor of the city of Kingston, in that island, nominated as a member of the corporate body Mr. Brown, a gentleman of color. This nomination was seconded by several of the magistracy; Mr. Brown was duly elected, and is now a magistrate of the capital of Jamaica. We understand he has long borne a very high character in that country, and was generally esteemed and respected. The law by which free people of color are raised to an equality of rights with the white inhabitants, passed the legislature of Jamaca in 1830.'

A SCENE IN EUROPE.

At the foot of a lofty hill, crowned to the summit with the richest verdure, peeped out from among encircling bush-wood and straggling elms, a miserable mud cabin. A streak of smoke rolling up through the green trees, was the only sign that met my eye, of its being inhabited. The sun was up, and over the blue heavens the thin clouds lay sleeping. It was the hour between sunrise and full blaze of day. A stillness seemed to lie around the spot, and I felt an indiscribable sensation creep over me, as I drew near the house of mourning. I paused at the entrance. A low murmuring kind of sound stole upon my ear, and again all was hushed.—I gently opened the door and bent myself forward, as if to ascertain, unnoticed, what was passing within. The apartment, on the threshold of which I now stood, was of the meanest construction. It was without a single piece of furniture that deserved the name. In one corner of it, a dead body lay stretched out, very slightly covered with a tattered coat, and a cold kind of horrible feeling run through my very soul, and it would probably have shrunk away from any further investigation, if I had not been suddenly arrested by a soft, sweet voice, mingled with a low groan, somewhat like a death rattle, that seemed to issue from the same appartment. I turned my head around and beheld a sight that chained me, as if by magic, to the ground. O, it was heart thrilling to behold! On a bundle of straw, a woman, somewhat in years, lay apparently in the agonies of death. Near her head hung, reclining in deep sorrow, a beautiful little, half naked child. On one side, a lovely girl about thirteen years of age, knelt. A Bible clasped in her thin, slender hands, with which she was endeavoring to comfort her dying mother. I instantly recognized two of my Sabbath school children. The meeting was affecting.—They had been without food for some days.—The mother died next day in triumph of that faith which her little daughter taught her out of the Bible. The girls grew up to be respectable members of society, and one of them has been a teacher in a Sabbath school for several years.

GERMANY.

Family and Social Prayer.

The extent to which family worship had been laid aside in Germany, until a recent period, will hardly be believed in this country. The writer himself could not at first yield credit to the statements that were made to him; but supposed that they must refer to peculiar cases, from which no general inference could be drawn; until he found them repeated and confirmed by unquestionable testimony in every part of the country. As a general fact, then, throughout the whole of Germany, at least the whole northern division of it, family worship is entirely obsolete and unknown, except among the evangelical Christians or mystics, as they are there called; and even among them it is only within the last fifteen years, that the custom of morning and evening prayers has been again introduced. An instructer in one of the leading universities, himself a piousman and the son of a pastor near one of the principal cities, had never either witnessed nor heard of family prayers, (except as a historical fact,) until he visited England after he had completed his university education. In that country he was casually present at a family scene of this kind, and the impression made upon him was such as he could never forget, he said until his dying day. To another professor, among the most eminent of the land for piety and learning, the practice was not so entirely unknown; he remembered that when a child his father held morning and evening prayers, but afterwards left them off; and since that time, until he had grown up and mingled in Christian intercourse, he had heard nothing further of the custom. Judging from the facts collected by observation and frequent and long continued inquiries, it would not perhaps be too much to say, that of the families of northern Germany, in not more than one in a hundred does the voice of morning and evening [illegible] family altar.

Of course, meetings for social prayer are almost unknown. A few families in Berlin, and some of them of rank, have a private circle in their houses every week, for the purposes of religious conversation & social worship. To these circles, however, none are admitted but invited guests. In Halle there was regularly a religious meeting every Saturday evening, at the house of a mechanic, where students sometimes attended. This meeting was ever a subject of ridicule among the greater part of the citizens, and of jealousy to the magistracy; and several attempts were made to bring home upon it charges of disorder and irregularity, in order to have a pretext for putting it nown. These attempts however, failed; and every investigation only resulted in showing, not only that the meeting was the occasion of no disorders, but that it was quietly and regularly conducted, and had for its sole object to make those who attended better men and better citizens. Under circumstances like the above, it hardly needs to be added here, that the monthly concert of prayer for missionary objects is attended only in a few cities; where it is sometimes treated with great reproach and contempt.—Biblical Repertory.

From the Western Recorder.

CHRISTIAN PRACTICE.

"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Christians seem to have lost sight, in a great measure, of the plainest principles of common sense, in application to the things of religion. Hence they will manifest, in words, great anxiety to possess that character, and those affections, for which they seem to make no effort. How often do we hear men, in their families, and in the social circle, pray that God would wean them from an inordinate attachment to the things of this world; and the next hour turn with coldness from the man who asks their co-operation in extending the Redeemer's kingdom? Such persons, perhaps, are not aware that God is calling upon them to part with their earthly substance, for the very purpose of answering their prayer, and crucifying them to the world. But let me enquire of such, whether they mean any thing by their prayers; and if so, what it is?—If they wish to be weaned from the world, why not try to effect it; and as they have opportunity, deny themselves, and cross their worldliness? Then there will appear a correspondence between their prayers and efforts; a correspondence which will declare, at least, their honesty, and give good encouragement to others, that the object they seek will be attained. But how is this fact to which I have referred, viz. the want of correspondence between prayer and effort, to be accounted for? In my opinion, the secret lies here: The Christian, in such cases, prays for what he thinks he OUGHT to desire to possess, and not for what he really DOES desire.

There are some thoughts in connection with this subject, Mr. Editor, which I wish to present to my christian brethern, through the medium of your paper. If permitted to do so, I will endeavor to regard your oft repeated admonition, "Be short;" and in my next number attempt to answer the question, What is the influence of such prayers?

M.

A COMMON MISTAKE.

It may perhaps be conceived, that the instrumentality to be employed in the progress of religion is to be chiefly that of ministers and missionaries. Without having any wish to depreciate the office of the ministry, or to diminish its reponsibility, I must be allowed to say, that I think the sentiment is carried too far. In the means to be used for the universal prevalence of religion, there is much that ministers, with whatever zeal, cannot do—it must be done by private Christians, if done at all; and there is much more which they can do far better than ministers. Besides, would Christ have fitted so many thousands and hundreds of thousands of persons for usefulness in saving sinners, without intending to bring them into action, and into a measure of action proportionate to their value? Does he mean that his wide triumphs should be won by the comparatively small number technically known as ministers? The idea is absurd; and it is falsified by fact. Inquire where it is that the spread of religion partakes most largely of the character of apostolic or millennial days; and you will have for answer, It is in the West Indies, and in the islands of the Pacific Ocean; where indeed they have zealous minsters, but where, too, they have zealous converts. It is in the West Indies, where a single negro, in defiance of his master's wrath, (no trifle in a land of slavery,) induces four hundred of his companions to hear the gospel, and has the pleasure of soon seeing forty of them join the church. It is in the isles of the Southern sea, where men are scarcely converted, before they take a boat to a distant isle, and live for nothing, but to save their brethren. This is the spirit we want at home; when shall it once be?

I confess myself to have a strong conviction, that this is the kind of exertion by which the universal prevalence of Christianity will be achieved; that the present stagnation is to be ascribed to the want of it: and that the final triumphs wait only for its developement.—Hinton.

From the Vt. Chronicle.

INCONSISTENCY OF MINISTERS!

We not unfrequently hear ministers pray in the sanctuary, that God would send his Spirit in large measures; that he would visit every house and every heart with his converting grace, and gather all into his fold. Do they believe he will! Most evidently not. They do not expect he will convert but here and there one. They seem to think their labors very successful when some ten or twelve turn from the error of their ways in the course of a year, while hundreds still throng the broad way down to ruin. Their highest anticipations seem to include only a few favored objects of prayer, over whom pious parents, or some beloved companions, have wept as they bore them to the throne of grace.

They hope, however, at some indefinite, future period, to receive a refreshing from the presence of the Lord, when multitudes shall be gathered into the fold of Christ, and their little flock be increased to two or three hundreds.—While the ambassador of Christ looks at such an object as extremely desirable, and almost dares to hope it may come before he goes the way of all the earth, he staggers through unbelief.—Forgetting however, that "whatever is not of faith is sin," he professedly prays, 'Come, Lord God Almighty, and slay the pride of every heart to-day; let no one leave the doors of the sanctuary until he has been created anew in Christ Jesus, and given his heart to God.'

Suppose now that God in his sovereignty should depart from his usual course, and answer the unbelieving prayers of such a minister, by sending his Omnipotent Spirit to convince a whole congregation of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, in a moment; so that the tear of penitence should start from every eye, and the stifled groan rise from every bosom; suppose all as one, should exclaim, "How can we escape the damnation of hell!" Would not that minister be overwhelmed and confounded! Would not the feelings of his heart be, "Lord, stay thine hand—I am not prepared for such a display of thy power—I did not expect it—Let thy work proceed with decency, calmness, and deliberation!" Nay, rather may we not suppose that he would deny that it was the work of God, and pronounce it all the effect of delusion and enthusiasm? How many do thus judge when they hear of only a few individuals who have suddenly changed their manner of life! How good men, yes, the fathers in the ministry, are ready to express their suspicions of the genuineness of those conversions, when they are told that ten, twelve, or fifteen in a single bible class hopefully gave their hearts to God in one short meeting! We hear of such things, and why may we not rejoice in it? Cannot God as easily convert fifteen, at the same moment, and in the same place, as one! Why then doubt his willingness to do it? True, it may be said, "We have never seen it on this fashion." As the millennial day draws near, we have reason to believe that the gospel will be preached with greater power and efficacy; and that the process of conviction and conversion will be greatly accelerated.

It seems like limiting the Holy One of Israel in his operations, to suppose that he must pursue, from age to age, any particular course in the displays of his power and grace. Why may we not suppose that it will be the glory of the coming age, that God will reveal his love in new and surprising ways? In ways too that shall stain the pride of all human glory? Let us then believe God able and willing to save even to the uttermost. Let the salvation of the world progress in the same ratio which it has for fifty years past, and how many ages must roll away before Christ shall reign over the whole earth?

The age in which we live calls loudly on Zion's watchmen to banish all their guilty doubts and fears, and be strong in the Lord, believing that the year of Jubilee is come, when the prison doors are to be opened, and every man's bands lossed. Is there not manifestly an inconsistency in praying for things which we do not believe God ever designs to grant, and consequently we never expect!

AMICUS.

Tracts.—The number of seamen who visit the port of New York in the course of the year, it is conjectured, is at least 30,000. Tracts have been distributed among them during the past year to the amount of 866,000 pages, and there is abundant evidence that they have done much good, especially in the suppression of intemperance. It is not at all uncommon to find vessels in which there has not been a gill of spirits used for a year, and even for a longer period; and the effect in this and other respects has been so happy, that many of the captains who at first opposed the plan of distributing tracts among their crews, are now willing that the work should go on.—*Sail. Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Liverpool, to his friend, and old shipmaster, in this city, dated April 30th, 1831.—"I hope this country will follow the example of America, as we have in some measure done in the Temperance Society. We have formed one in Liverpool. I have the honor to be one of the first in this good work. Capt Parnell, who was master of Prince's Dock when you were here, is now converted to God. He meets with us in class. See! God can convert dock masters.—At our last public meeting of the Temperance Society, some thousands were assembled. The small cloud is spreading. O that God may speedily pour his good Spirit on all flesh! Praise God, my brother, he does give grace and glory, and will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them who walk uprightly."—ib.

Valuable Discovery.—The Ravenna, Ohio, Courier, in an article under this head, states, on the authority of a respectable physician, that a remedy has been found for restoring animation suspended by the effects of carbonic acid gas, or damps, as it is usually termed, in wells. On the 17th of June, two men, (father & son) were engaged in digging a deep well, in Copley, Medina co. Ohio, and after an hour's absence the young man went into the well, and after descending a short distance, fell apparently lifeless to the bottom. The father went to his assistance, and also fell. A pail of water was thrown into the well, fell on the father's face, who caught breath, arose, took the body of his son, got into the tub and was drawn up. The use of water recovered the son. At 6 feet from the surface, a candle went out. At that point the animation of a live chicken became suspended; but by pouring on water, it revived.—Buff. Pat.

DOGS.—Much alarm has been caused in this section of the country, in consequence of several children, and many cattle, hogs, &c. having been recently bitten by dogs believed to be in a state of madness. Two or three of the children have since been taken ill, and we understand exhibit decided symptoms of hydrophobin. The corporations of Utica and Little Falls, we are gratified to learn, have passed laws, directing the destruction of all dogs running at large within their respective villages; and we hope they will be carried into effect, till not a single dog shall be found in either of the places.—Western Recorder.

Lottery Dealers; themselves being judges.—Schuyler says, "There are many venders of Lottery tickets in this city, who are in the habit of publishing a fictitious list of prizes said to be sold by them, when not one of the hundred advertised were sold in this city. The object of this is, to prevail on strangers to apply to them as Lucky Offices."

He gives the public a "caution" against an "imposition" which Clark & Co. have had the "meanness" to commit, and intimates that that firm are accustomed to such conduct. Clark & Co. give Schuyler the lie, accuse him of a "grasping disposition," and say they should gain nothing by "assuming Mr. Scuyler's garb."

Clark & Co. copy from an Albany paper, a statement that D. W. Shepard, a lottery dealer in Albany, had been arrested and bound over for trial, for taking the numbers out of tickets which had drawn blanks, and inserting the numbers of such as had drawn prizes, and presenting them for payment.

ITEM;—Clark & Co. defend lotteries, on the ground that buying tickets is not so bad as buying rum. They say, however, that "the extent of adventuring for a single individual ought not to be great." So we say. The less the better.

Schuyler and Sylvester are both out in great wrath upon Arthur Tappan and the Magdalene Society, for their efforts to expose and diminish the extent of prostitution in New York.

The above particulars are gathered from three New York lottery papers of last week.—Vt. Chronicle.

Thrashing in these Machines is performed between cast iron plates, having teeth arranged in circles upon them, which are attached to a wheel, and pass through a corresponding cast-iron bed piece, as the wheel revolves.

They require less velocity, are less expensive and more durable, than those made with a cylinder, or any other kind heretofore in use. A specimen of them may be seen at Allcott Watts & Langworthy's rolling and slitting mill, next door north of the cotton factory, near the falls.

Persons wishing to procure the article for their own use, will do well to supply themselves with this kind. Rights for territory, may be had on advantageous terms to the purchaser, by applying to the patentee, No. 25 Exchange-street.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

TO CHRISTIANS—A CALL FROM THE WEST.

Little more than one hundred miles from Rochester, is situated the village of ——. The soil around is fertile; the business of the place is quite extensive; the inhabitants all find lucrative employment, and as they are sequestered from this busy, bustling world, they might be happy but for one thing. And that one thing wanting, all is wanting. There are at least, thirty families,—say 150 souls here, and not one of them a praying person. If one of their number dies, no one is near to pray with the survivors, or direct them to the mourner's friend. Two Taverns and two stores deal out ardent spirit, that curse of curses, and the effect is but too apparent. The Sabbath's holy light does not dawn there; oaths and curses, of which devils would be ashamed, burst from unholy lips, and only one thing is wanting to complete the scene, and make a Pandemonium—that one thing is a distillery!

Christians! You are commanded to preach the gospel to every creature! Will you go and preach it to the inhabitants of the village of ——!

Near by this village is the little village of ——. Two years since, there was no Sabbath, no church, no Sabbath-school—all was a scene of moral desolation in the retired wilderness. Eighteen months since a pious Deacon and his family moved into the place—established meetings, and a Sabbath School—the Spirit of the Lord came down—a work of grace commenced—a protracted meeting was held—a church was formed—preaching was obtained—and the wilderness literally blossomed as the rose.—Lately a Temperance Society has been formed there by the agent of the N. Y. State Temperance Society—the only Tavern and the only Store in the place have ceased to vend, and no drunkard must set his foot there. Christians! this little church wants aid. They are a feeble flock, and when the writer was there a few days since, "Do," said they, make our wants known to our Christian brethren. Do tell them we are flesh of their flesh, and bone of their bone. We have come into the wilderness, but we have souls and so have our children." A pious, able, educated minister would be received here, even as an angel of God. Christians! Will you send help to your brethren in the village of ——!

At a little distance from this, is the little Church of ——. Their cry is loud and long—send us help. They are from N. E., and descendants of the pilgrims. They are settled upon the hills, in the vales, and along the streams of ——, but they are sheep without a shepherd. Christians! will you send them help? To you they cry. "If any man see his brother have need and shut up his bowels of compassion, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—The two last mentioned places feel competent to support the stated means of grace one third of the time in each; and for the first named, dependance must be had upon the aid of the christian public. The heart of the writer has been pained within him frequently, as he has been riding over the desolations of the West, but he could do nothing to help. Nor will efforts made for these destitute brethren be without avail.—Some two or three years since, a church in Connecticut resolved to support a Missionary in a new settlement, the first settlers of which many of them, were from the town where such church is located. They did so. But little fruit of their labor of love was seen for the two first years, but of late, the seed is springing up. A few weeks since, it was the privilege of the writer to spend a Sabbath with this church. Forty came forward that day and requested christians to pray for them. Their meetings on the Sabbath are held in the chamber of the Minister's house, that being the most convenient place in the town for the purpose. This Missionary labors for souls. "I have preached nine times and attended two various meetings this week," said he, "and I shall do the same next week." This man performs all his travelling on foot—frequently going 6 & 7 miles to meeting of an afternoon, and home again in the evening; and that too, over roads, that some christians, and I fear Ministers too, would think impossible. But how great the joy of that church at seeing the fruit of his deeds of love! How great his reward! This town, which but for them, might still have been, like too many others, a moral waste, is now cultivated and bears fruit. Not a drop of ardent spirit is to be procured in it, except for medicinal purposes. God has raised up men in their very midst, who expect to build a meeting house and give to the congregation, and the young already enjoy the privileges of the Sabbath-school, and bible class. O in the midst of all that is morally dreary, and desolate and cheerless, the eye still rests upon M., favored town, as upon a verdant spot, blessed of God, and rejoicing in the benefactions of his people. Christians, have you wealth? O lend it to the Lord. He will repay—if not on earth, he will in heaven.

P. S. The writer has purposely left the names of places blank. If any christian wishes to know them in order to keep, he can obtain the information by addressing the Editor of the Rochester Observer.

ESSAY NO. 1.

The name of Christian, should always imply a follower of Jesus Christ; one who loves to do his will, obey his commands in all things; and who loves to engage in every work of benevolence within his reach. The Lord Jesus sought us, and alleviated the misery of the most vile among the lost sheep of the House of Israel. In his conduct, we read the injunction, "deny thyself, take up thy cross and follow me." With alacrity then and delight, ought every one who bears the Christian name, to run the Christian course as marked by our Saviour, and thoroughly beaten by his faithful disciples; for this path is peace, and the end thereof eternal blessedness.

But O, sad proof of the depravity of the human heart! There are some professors of Christianity, who hold back from one of the most glorious causes of benevolence and reform, of the present age; a cause of deep interest to the church of Christ; to our country, and to the world. This cause, is the cause of TEMPERANCE. Of recent birth, but of rapid growth. Fed and nourished by the best of men. Dear to the hearts of the virtuous poor; of the rich, humane and benevolent, and especially to the hearts of zealous, devoted and benevolent Christian. Carried on by the use of means, the principal and most effectual of which, are Temperance Societies; and with these Societies, some professors of the religion of Jesus, refuse to unite. To this class I write. To you who drink, or drink not ardent spirits, and refuse to associate with your brethren and the moral part of community, in putting away from our land, and the world, the mighty evil of Intemperance. By what strong reasons are you bound to stay where you are! What good can you do more than you would be able to do were you to join the Temperance Society! How much has your party ever accomplished in learning others to become temperate? Alas my brethren that you should stand on ground so untenable.

It is often urged by this class of professors as a reason for not uniting with the Temperance Society, that "we do not conceive it our duty."—We are aware that this is a reason which not only puts an end to argument, but quiets the conscience of the objector; for men of candor dislike to urge others to act contrary to duty; and if men can persuade themselves that it is not duty to perform a certain act, then conscience will not upbraid them for not doing it so long as they remain unshaken in that belief. In proof of this, we have the testimony of St. Paul, who persecuted the church with great zeal and cruelty, and verily thought he was doing God service.

Some doubtless, do conceive it to be their duty because they are not sufficiently aware of the magnitude of the evil of drunkenness, neither do they understand what Temperance Societies have done to arrest this evil. But to convince them of their duty we will endeavor to show some of the evils of drunkenness, and what has been done to arrest them. And now candid reader we must take you along to the abodes of wretchedness, to visit the drunkard at his home, and ask what is the value of worldly prosperity, domestic happiness, of the comforts of life, and of the soul. Nothing you are ready to exclaim, would tempt me to exchange places with the poor drunkard in any of the particulars—and Oh! how do you shudder at the thought that all these to the drunkard are lost. You are often filled with deep anguish at the sight of one of these degraded beings as he staggers along the street, on his way from his labor or his revelry to his home. Lost to every sense of honor, of shame, of humanity, he is led by his tyrant master, to commit acts too barbarous, wanton, and brutish to be conceive. Were there but one such being in the United States, there might be less made of this strenuous effort. But alas! it is not so. The most accurate estimates that can be made of the number of drunkards in the U. S. bring in the number of more than three hundred thousand. And from the estimation of the death of drunkards, they appear to be thirty thousand or more yearly. Bring up the vast army of three hundred thousand drunkards before the mind. See them formed in columns of ten divisions, each containing thirty thousand, and marching at one years distance to the place of destination, a place too, of eternal war. But no war has ever spread before us such scenes of carnage and death. Oh, could they hear the din of war as they march! Could they hear the death wail of the multitude already dying on the field of battle never to be dead; or could they see the smoke of their torment beginning to ascend up for ever and ever. But no! Those that have just begun the march, are far from this field, and never mean to come to it, and the front divisions of the army are so blinded that they cannot see, and so deaf that they do not hear, until they leap the walls, and find the Prince of darkness ready to welcome them to his fangs, and give to each his post along the battlements of hell. There he uncovers their eyes and bids them look along the artillery of their prince, and lo! it points directly at the throne of God.—Already have they been taught in the school of the Prince of woe. They know what ammunition to use. Volly after volley they discharge of deep-toned blasphemy, resounding loud through both their unstopped ears, and shocking every fibre of the soul; until their fruitless wrath inspired by the arch enemy of God, gives place to all that bitter woe, which utter despair, the gnawing of the worm that never dies, the lake of eternal fire, and the agonies of the second death bring forth.—But hark! What means this shouting among the infernal legions! What this that excites such horrid laughter among the mighty in hell! But not long are they left to doubt. The next division of the grand army of the U. S. has come. Here says the fiend of drunkenness, I bring to my legions another year's productions of earth's choisest fruits. These are prepared to take a hot place in hell. They have fought not only against the Lord, but against his Anointed while on earth. They opened their lips to blasphemy, inured their hands to crime, and imbrued them in blood. Some of them too, have commemorated the dying love of the son of God around the table with some of those shining Saints in yon bright world we see; and but for me, these too, would be there; but now they have been foremost in trampling under foot his blood. There they are: with you I leave them. What words of bellish gratulation are then heard through all the dark caverns of the deep abyss, uttered by those who fell from heaven's celestial plains; —But ah! the deep anguish of those who came first is augmented now. They know whom to expect. A partner, a brother, a child, a friend, a customer has come, I too, have helped them on their march to this world of woe. Already their eyes are fixed on me. Their curses fall upon my ears. They writhe in anguish; and as they wail, they gnash their teeth on me. O that some one would rise from the dead, and warn my remaining brethren and friends, lest they also come to this place of torment. For no drunkard shall ever enter the kingdom of Heaven."

Looking at this, who can refrain from crying out, "Let me do all that in me lies," to stop this vast army in its way to hell. It would seem that "only let me know what to do, and I will do it; cheerfully, gladly do it;" would be the firm resolution of every virtuous, feeling citizen of America; of every male and female of respectability in the land; and of every Christian in the world. And blessed be God, this is the voice of some, yea many. And by the efforts of these, Temperance Societies have been formed in various parts of the U. S. and there are doubtless, as many as three hundred thousands, equal to the army of drunkards, pledged to total abstinence in these societies. They are now in active and effective operation. Their influence is powerfully felt by all classes of community. They are constantly receiving new accessions to their number. The amount of ardent spirits used in the country, is vastly less than before the institution of these societies; several distilleries have been stopped through their influence, and more than seven hundred drunkards reclaimed. God has uniformly blessed the cause of temperance in this land, has in a multitude of instances, poured out his spirit in the conversion of souls, where this cause has prospered. In few places, we believe in no one, has there been a powerful revival where this cause has not moved with it. Thus we see what are the evils of drunkenness, and what Temperance Societies with the blessing of God have done to the arrest of those evils. We see too, this is the work of that God without whose notice "not a sparrow falls to the ground," or a drunkard sinks to hell. Drunkenness aims directly against the cause of Christ; consequently he will bless the efforts of his children to put the evil away. And in no way has it been so effectually tried as by the institution of Temperance Societies. And these societies are the means which God has been pleased to own and bless in carrying on this good work. It is therefore to the help of the Lord that we come when we join the Temperance Society. And is it not the duty of every Christian to come to his help!—Drunkenness is in direct opposition to the cause of God; and Temperance Societies are in direct opposition to drunkenness; and do more effectually oppose and check it, than any other means that has been used. Is it difficult then to decide where the Christian ought to be! And now this vast amount of misery yearly and daily accruing, must be stopped. These rivers of woe must be dried up. And can this be done without first drying the fountains whence they run? And can this be done without more extended influence! Will distilleries be stopped; will importers cease the traffic till they see multitudes more arrayed against them! And who will set their forces boldly against this abomination, if the disciples of the Lamb will not? To whom shall the widow and the orphan cry for help? And if their cries come up into the ears of the 'Lord of Sabaoth', whom will he send to be their deliverer? Will you say send a child of the devil, or will you say send me! M. N.

SLAVERY IN A FREE COUNTRY.

Mr. Editor:—Last fall I had occasion to descend the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, to the distance of near 2000 miles. I stopped at most of the large towns situated on the banks of those Rivers, and it so turned out that I was at the City of Louisville, Ky., during the last days of December and first days of January.

On the last six days of December, I discovered much rejoicing, and hilarity, among the negroes; and on enquiring, I was told that the last six days of the year were holy-days to the slaves, that they were during those days permitted to spend their time in amusements, and recreations of their own choosing, or in labor for which they received their own wages, which I looked upon as very liberal in the good people of Kentucky, but with what countenances the poor slaves were destined to commence the new year, I could hardly imagine until the morning of the first day of January, when I was asked if I was going to the sale; I enquired what sale, and was told that all the negroes to be disposed of, were to be sold on that day either for a year's service, or for life; my curiosity being thus excited, after dinner I repaired to the place of sale, which was one of the most public situations in the city.—There I beheld a large crowd of black people huddled together without regard to age or sex, but their countenances which the last preceding days had been cheerful, were now mostly changed to that of a gloomy aspect, and when there was an exception, it looked more like a burst of laughter to disguise the worst feelings of the heart, and the more gloomy anticipation on the mind, than that of cheerfulness or mirth. There the negroes either male or female, were occasionally ordered to stand out and show themselves, they would then be examined by the buyer, in the form of their body and limbs, and the dexterity with which they could exercise by walking, and other manners, with as much precision as though they were horses or oxen.

From this scene I returned to the Steam-boat Landing, my feelings much depressed, with what I had beheld, but I was now to witness a scene far more appalling than the one I had just left. I had no sooner reached the wharf than I beheld a Steam-boat approach the shore with a large number of black people on board, who I learnt, were slaves bought in Virginia, and intended for the market in Louisiana. Their countenances were generally melancholy, and they were clad in miserable old garments or parts of garments, which were so besmeared with dirt and grease, that they were nearly all of a color. I soon left this horrible spectacle, and engaged a hack to convey myself and baggage to Shipping Port, two miles from Louisville, the Landing below the falls of Ohio, intending to take passage that morning for Mississippi, and being desirous of beholding (for the present at least) no more scenes of such inhumanity and Barbarism, but I had not proceeded far, before I beheld another view of slavery. I saw a man riding on horseback carrying a large stick or club, and driving before him a number of black persons, men women and children, and each of these, except two, had an iron collar or ring around the neck, and these were connected by a chain considerably heavier than a common trace chain, at a sufficient distance to enable them to walk without interfering with each other. I proceeded to the Landing, secured my passage on a boat that was to start the next morning, and repaired to an Inn to spend the night, with my mind well stored with gloomy reflections, and my feelings much wrought upon in behalf of my poor suffering fellow beings, who were doomed to drag out a life of slavery in this boasted land of liberty. After a comfortable repose for the night, I arose and once more beheld the bright luminary of the day shed his cheering rays upon the face of a delightful country, through which extended the majestic Ohio, when on my right hand she appeared sporting with the rocks composing her bed on the falls, and on the left she presented a broad extended sheet of water, moving in peaceful majesty to its final termination. And while for a few moments indulging in these reflections, I felt my obligation to return a thank offering to Him who rains on the just and on the unjust, and causes the sun to shine upon the evil and upon the good, and who will ere long deliver his poor and suffering children from all the miseries of this life whether they be black or white, bond or free.

The sound of the bell soon announced the time for the departure of the boat in which I was to sail, and when I anxiously anticipated at least a temporary relief from scenes of misery and wickedness, that I had witnessed the day before: but on approaching the boat I am unable to describe my feelings, when I beheld the deck literally covered with negroes. I went to the captain and enquired if they were passengers. He replied they were. I asked how many there were on board. He said about one hundred and thirty. I expressed my disapprobation of slavery, and my unwillingness to travel on a boat that transported slaves. He replied that his intention was to treat all his passengers well, but as his object was to make money, and as the owners had accepted his proposal, he of course must take them, and as it was quite uncertain when another boat would start for New Orleans, I felt compelled to submit; and under these depressing circumstances, I retired; but "as my object is to make money" still rang in my ears, and I thought I could more than ever realize that the love of money was the root of this great evil—that to promote the "object of making money," man could go into the otherwise peaceful dwelling of his fellow man, and there rend asunder the ties of affection which bind the husband to the wife, the child to the parent, and then, for a paltry sum of "Money" sell the father the mother or child, as will best promote his interest, to a worse than brutal trader in human flesh and blood, and to assist the inhuman negro trader in carrying into effect the operations of brutality, oppression, barbarism and cruelty; and the captain of a Steam-boat (otherwise respectable) for the purpose of obtaining a little "money" would transport the persons thus torn from their friends, to an unhealthy climate, where it was not generally expected they could survive over two or three years, and that in the most degraded state of servitude and misery imaginable.

During my continuance on the boat I several times visited that part occupied by the slaves.—There I could behold more than one hundred human beings without regard to age or sex, from the sucking infant of a few weeks, to the man of forty, indiscriminately crowded together, and most of them miserably clad, and each a blanket which on the deck of the boat, served them for their beds and covering.

In another part of the boat I found eight or ten negroes in irons, each had a strong clasp riveted on the right wrist, and between each of these extended a chain of about three feet.

On examination, I found only one professor of religion among the negroes. He was a man between thirty and forty. He said he had been a Christian four years, and a member of the Baptist Church, and for the last two years, had tried to preach the Gospel, and although he could not read, yet he appeared to have a very good general knowledge of the Scriptures, and much confidence in his "faith in Christ." He said he was taken from his wife and two children, which he had no idea of seeing again in this world, but appeared much reconciled to his fate, saying that "his afflictions in this life, would make his crown the brighter in Heaven." I had conversation with another man of about the same age: he said he was raised in Virginia—that his wife and two children were taken from him two years before, and sold in Missouri. At the same time I observed another man whose countenance was more expressive than I had before seen, and was very attentive to the conversation: he appeared about forty. I enquired where he was raised, he said "Virginia, Massa." Have you a family! "A wife and four children, massa."! Do you expect to see them again!—"No never massa." Was it hard parting with them! "Yes, massa. I had rather go to my grave by a long string." The particular emphasis which accompanied the last answer, was so touching, and my feelings were so much excited, that I immediately retired to my place again to reflect upon the magnitude of the awful sin of binding a fellow being in chains of slavery. One evening hearing some disturbance in that part of the boat occupied by the negroes, I immediately went to the spot, where I saw one of the negro owners beating a young man on the head in a most inhuman manner, with half the head of a barrel at least, the weapon split and the greater part flew out of his hand, he then ordered the negro down upon his hands and knees, and again commenced the same punishment with another piece of a barrel, and when that failed he again commenced with increased rage, and continued till the spectators became much excited by such a scene of brutality. How the negro had offended him I could not learn, and was satisfied it was more to gratify his own will than to punish the negro for crime.

It appeared that the negroes were encouraged to spend their time in dancing—gambling and unbounded profanity, in which they appeared quite expert, until the gambling led to a tremendous fight when the owners were obliged to stop it.

On the eighth day I landed at a small city in Mississippi, and willingly did I leave not only the various scenes I had seen acted many days among the negroes, but the gambling which had as many days been carried on by the passengers, and that too (I regret say it,) by those who had held some of the first offices and are considered the first men in the nation.

During my stay at this city, I saw slavery acted over in a variety of ways still new. At various places in the city might every day be seen companies of negroes fitted up in a manner to make the best possible show, and were often exhibited and examined by the buyers with the greatest scrutiny and care, as to the soundness of their limbs, and the scars on their backs. At other times the crier would be heard proclaiming in the street the sale at auction of men, women and children.

If the owners failed in selling, they would strip the negroes of their gay clothes, and clothed in their former rags, they would start for a new market, which I once witnessed, in the following manner. I heard a child cry bitterly, and on going to the door I beheld a black woman with an infant child in her arms, and an old dirty bag upon her back, containing probably some articles of provision. Herself, and infant miserably clad, and by her side were two little children, one apparently about three, and the other about five years old, and as miserably clad as their mother—their feet bare, and they were hurried through the mud about six inches deep, the weather extremely cold for that country. Here thought I, goes the wife and children of a disconsolate father and husband, doomed to drag out a life of melancholy, and they destined to swelter out a short existence, clanking the chains of slavery.

At the house where I boarded, was an old servant who had become very infirm and gray with age, and as he appeared more intelligent than the common class of negroes, my curiosity was excited to enquire into his case, his account of himself was that he was born near Boston, a free man, he was employed on board a vessel that carried him into the neighborhood of Georgia and South Carolina, having some business to transact in the country alone, and not being apprised of the necessity of carrying vouchers of his freedom, he was kidnapped and taken to the interior of Virginia and confined in jail. He plead for mercy, urged that he was a free man, made every overture and pledge in his power, to prove the fact if he could have the privilege, but all to no purpose, they were deaf to all his entreaties, except they agreed to write to his friends. He gave their names, but thinks they never wrote because they told him they never received an answer. At the expiration of the time required by law, he was sold to pay the cost—about thirty dollars. He then plead with his master that he would work faithfully, and pay that, if he would then release him, to which the master agreed, but about a week before his time was completed, he was persuaded to go to the lower country, in company with his master and some other slaves, under the pretence of business, and to return soon, but this proved only a stratagem to get him where there was no possibility of escape, for when they arrived in Mississippi the master sold the negroes and returned. He said he was about thirty when arrested, and had been about thirty years a slave.

These facts I witnessed, and these scenes I beheld within the last seven months; and that too, within the boundaries of the United States of America, the land of liberty—that land that boasts of her Christianity, her humanity, her benevolence, and her charity. Oh! tell it not in Gath.

Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord, and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this. AN OBSERVER.

THOUGHTS ON THE MORAL GOVERNMENT OF GOD.

Under this title a correspondent of the New York Evangelist is offering a series of essays to the public. In his seventh number he advances the following sentiments:—

My next object will be to examine some of those passages of Scripture, which are supposed by many to be opposed to the sentiments advanced in the preceding numbers. And the first class of texts we will examine, are those which represent God as determining the character and destinies of his creatures beforehand. For example, "According as he hath chosen us before the foundation of the world," &c. Eph. 1: 4. 6. The following articles of faith are professed to be drawn from this and similar passages:

1. "God did from eternity, particularly and definitely, for the manifestation of his glory, predestinate and choose some angels and men to everlasting life."

2. "The ground and foundation of God's choice or election, was not the foresight of the faith and good works of the elect, or any moral distinction between them and others, but his own sovereign pleasure; and their compliance with the Gospel, is the effect not the cause of his choice."

It will be readily admitted that when God determines upon any thing, he has reason for it. The whole difficulty in the case before us rests upon this single point. The reason given in the above quoted articles, is "his sovereign pleasure," or, in other words, merely to gratify his own feelings. If this is correct, God cannot be infinitely benevolent, even though the gratification of his feelings would bring about the greatest possible good to his creatures; for the moral character is determined not by the effect, but by the design of an act. If, then, God's design is merely to gratify his own feelings, being infinite in his attributes, instead of being infinitely benevolent, he is infinitely selfish—a charge no christian will be willing to bring against the blessed God. If God is infinitely benevolent, his object is to promote the greatest possible good of his his creatures. And this is done by sustaining his moral government, else we impeach his wisdom in establishing this government; for it certainly is, or is not calculated to promote the greatest possible good of his creatures. If it is, the object is effected by sustaining it: if it is not, then he either lacked wisdom, or benevolence, or both, or he would have established some other government. The conclusion then is unavoidable, that those whom God elected were elected in view of what their characters would be. So the following passages, to say the least of them, seem to intimate: "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God." I. Pet. I: 2. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate." Rom. 8: 29. That is, as I understand them, God foreseeing that they would be obedient, or comply with the terms of reconciliation, declared beforehand, or determined, that it should be well with them, and that it should be ill with those whom he knew would not do this. I know of no other way to avoid the last difficulty mentioned in the last number, and there is certainly nothing in this or any of the parallel texts, that forbid such a construction. This view of the subject makes the decrees of God to perfectly harmonize with the agency of the creature, and with the precepts, promises, and threatnings of the Bible. It puts every thing in its place, and shows us clearly the sincerity of God in all his dealings with his creatures.

THEOPHILUS.

We will not stop to inquire particularly whether 'Theophilus' justly represents the views of those who hold that 'The ground and foundation of God's choice or election, was—his own sovereign pleasure.' We doubt whether they would be disposed to state their sentiments in just such a way, or to grant that they mean by 'his own sovereign pleasure,' precisely the same as 'merely to gratify his own feelings.' Probably they would claim that they mean by it, what Christ meant when he said, 'Even so Father, for so it seemed GOOD in thy sight'—and what Paul meant when he said. 'Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the GOOD PLEASURE of his will." If this is what they mean, they would dissent from the explanation given by 'Theophilus'—they would plead 'not guilty' to the charge of making God 'infinitely selfish,' unless Jesus Christ and Paul represent him thus. But waiving this—'Theophilus' has boldly avowed the theory of Arminianism on this subject. The Methodist Book of Discipline, as quoted in the Christian Spectator for September 1830, says, 'God from the foundation of the world, foreknew all men's believing or not believing. And according to this his foreknowledge, he chose or elected all OBEDIENT believers AS SUCH to salvation.' On precisely the same theory, and in very similar language, 'Theophilus' says, 'those whom God elected were elected in VIEW of what their characters would be.' 'God foreseeing that they would be OBEDIENT, or comply with the terms of reconciliation, declared beforehand, or determined 'that it should be well with them.' He is as express as the Methodist Book of Discipline in referring their election to foreseen faith, or to foreseen 'obedience.' This, says an able writer in the Christian Spectator for Sept. 1830, 'is the cardinal doctrine of Arminianism.

'Be it so, it may be said—names are nothing—we seek truth and give authority to the words.' What then is truth on this point? Are men elected because of foreseen faith—foreseen obedience—foreseen holiness—because it was foreseen 'what their characters would be?' Is this the Bible doctrine of election? If it is we must embrace it, though at the expense of throwing down all those barriers against Arminianism, which Edwards and a thousand other giants have erected. On what passages does 'Theophilus' rely! On these two—'Elect according to the foreknowledge of God.' 1. Peter. 1: 2. 'For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate.' Rom. 8: 29. But why did he not quote the whole of the former verse!—'Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, [not as obedient, or, because of froseeon obenience, but] unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ.' The doctrine of the Apostle, if we can understand language, is directly the reverse of that of 'Theophilus.' Their 'obedience' was the consequence, not the cause of their election. They were holy, obedient, because they were elected,—not elected because they were holy, and obedient—or because it was 'foreseen' that they would be holy and obedient. The evident meaning of this passage is—and so it is rendered by the best critics—'Elect unto obedience—or to be christians, according to the purpose of God.' The other passage, to say the least, would leave the matter doubtful, if the subject was no where else touched on in the Bible. It seems rather a harsh interpretation to say 'whom he did foreknow as already obedient, he did predestinate to obedience:—but thus it must be interpreted if we regard the phrase 'to be conformed to the image of his Son', as expressing moral likeness or resemblance of moral character between christians and Christ.—Those already in the image of his Son, he did predestinate to conformed to the image of his Son'! If we should with Schleusner and Rosenmuiller, regard the expression, 'image of his son', as referring to a resemblance between the state or condition of christians and that of Christ, then the theory of 'Theophilus' would receive more support from this passage. It might then admit of this sentiment, that 'whom he did foreknow as obedient, he predestinated to enjoy like felicity with his son.'

But the object of election, as represented by 'Theophilus', seems to us to differ from the object of election as represented in the Bible. According to him, it is the salvation of men. He says, 'God, foreseeing that they would be obedient, determined that it should be well with them.' But according to the Bible, the object of election is the holiness of men. Thus Paul, 'According as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love.'—'Chosen'—that we should be holy'—not chosen that we should be saved, because of foreseen holiness. Thus Peter—'Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God—unto obedience and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus';—not elected to salvation because of foreseen obedience.—Should it be said that Paul in 2d Thess. 2: 13, speaks of christians as chosen 'to salvation,' we reply that the election which secures their holiness undoubtedly also secures their salvation.—Our view of the subject will admit of this two-fold object in election—holiness and consequent salvation—which that of 'Theophilus,' making the election to be founded on foreseen holiness, will not. Our theory accounts for all the representations of election given in the Bible—his accounts only for a part at most.

'Theophilus' impliedly intimates that we think his 'view of the subject makes the decrees of God to perfectly harmonize with the free agency of the creature', the opposite view does not. In what respect, then, has his view an advantage over that entertained by those whom he opposes, so far as regards free agency! He does not deny that these decrees were from eternity—or claim that there is any contingency in them. He differs from his opponents only as to the motive of God in election, and as to the object of election. Now whether God elects some out of 'his sovereign pleasure,' or from a regard to their foreseen obedience,—whether the object of election is the holiness or the salvation of men, affect not in the least the 'free agency of the creature.' If any thing in God's moral government interferes with the 'free agency of the creature' it is not the decree of election, whatever its object, or the motive in which it originated. This decree is not an agent—it has in itself no efficiency, and cannot interfere with the free agency of men. It is only the rule according to which the infinite agent proceeds. If the 'free agency of the creature' is in any respect infringed, it must be in the execution of this decree—in the operations of the Holy Spirit carrying this decree into effect. If these operations do not interfere with the 'free agency of the creature,' then the decree surely cannot. If the thing done does not interfere with the 'free agency of the creature,' the design to do it cannot.—But 'Theophilus' undoubtedly holds that regeneration is a work of the Holy Spirit, in as distinctive a sense as is claimed by those from whose views of the doctrine of election he dissents. If, then, the work of the Holy Spirit on the heart is the same, whether the motive of election is God's 'sovereign pleasure,' or foreseen obedience in man, his opponents' view of election no more interferes with free agency than his own view does.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

BOMBAY.—The first article in the Missionary Herald for the present month is from the Journal of Mr. Stone at Bombay. Under date of April 10, 1830, he says:

The Brahmin inquirer said to me to-day, that there were many Hindoos that believed the Christian religion to be true, but owing to fear of their caste, dared not to profess it publicly, and that were it not for their castes, multitudes would come into the Christian religion. I have no doubt of this. If there were no greater obstacles in the way of the heathen here changing their religion, than there are in those pagan countries where no caste exists, multitudes would ask for baptism, and perhaps by attending more constantly on the means of grace, would be really converted. No person residing in a Christian country can form any idea of the sacrifice a Hindoo must make, if he would become a disciple of Christ, and make a public profession of his faith in him. Yet through the grace of God many even in pagan India, have made such a profession; and we doubt not that the number of those, who through the same grace, shall make a similar confession before their countrymen, will be increased every year till the chain of caste is broken, and the millions of India brought into the liberty of the gospel. The day has already come, when, instead of tens, hundreds are converted annually; and the day is rapidly advancing, when, instead of hundreds, thousands, and instead of thousands, millions will be from year to year brought into the church in India.

Ceylon.—Native Preachers.—Mr. Poor under date of Jan. 20, 1831, writes:

I have just now returned from Tillipally, where I attended our quarterly meeting. It has been a great day in our Zion. In addition to our usual exercises, we have publicly set apart two youths, Niles and Joshua, as native preachers. Niles preached in the afternoon an appropriate and impressive sermon, from Jeremiah i. 6, 7. A very favorable impression, appears to have been made by the transactions of this day.

Chinese Idolatry.—Mr. Bridgeman, in an account of the dedication of a new temple at Macao, gives the following notices respecting the expensiveness of Chinese Idolatry, and its similarity to that of the Romanists.

The temple which they are now dedicating is one of the smaller kind, a mere village temple; and stands just without the European settlement. It has been built at an expense of ten thousand dollars, which was raised by voluntary subscriptions, varying from one dollar to one thousand dollars each. The buildings are of brick, of a neat appearance, covering an area of about half an acre, consisting of pavilions for the new gods and dormitories for their keepers. Besides this, there are three larger temples in Macao, one having nine, and another fifteen, and the third sixteen priests. Taking with these all the lesser apparatus, which is here consecrated to the gods, and it makes no small account of substance and of being, set in broad array against the most high God. The yoke on the necks of this people is not easy, nor the burden light. Yet they love their idols, and take delight in their idolatry. In all this, they are countenanced and sustained by those who bear the Christian name, the Romanist. Whether so intended by them or not, the Catholics have given strong support to the idolatry of this empire.

So small is the apparent difference between the religion of the Catholic and the Chinese, that it is not strange that such a man as father Premare should have said, "in no other part of the world, has the prince of darkness so well counterfeited the holy manners of the true church —" Only yesterday we had them in fair comparison, both were going in procession, and the principal difference was this, that while one had no implements of war, the other were escorted by armed soldiery, and moved under the constant fire of heavy artillery. Such is the idolatry of Macao.

Canton Christian Union.—An association with this name has been formed, consisting of the three missionary brethren residing at Canton and a few other pious Englishmen and Americans. The object of this union is the mutual benefit and encouragement of its members in their labors, and the securing of more union and vigor in their measures to diffuse Christian knowledge and piety. Respecting its design and operations Mr. Bridgeman, under date of Jan. 27, remarks-

It will not interfere with individual and private conduct, while it will give counsel and support to all, and have a general supervision of the several objects of Christian benevolence which may come within its reach. It has commenced a depository and library, and measures have been taken to supply them with the necessary books. It has opened, or soon will open a correspondence with the several missionary stations between the capes. It has also undertaken to publish in the Chinese the "Scripture Lessons" for schools. This book contains a compendious view of the whole Bible, and about the same amount of reading as the New Testament. A few of our English and American friends here have given us five hundred and forty dollars to help on with the publication.

Persia and the Armenians.—The following paragraphs are from a letter of Mr. Dwight, dated Tebreez, Dec. 27, 1831.

We have been happy to find some among the English residents here, with whom we can associate in the fellowship of the gospel. Capt N. who is at the head of the prince's arsenal, and his lady, appear both of them to be truly devoted to the service of the Lord, and deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of the people around them.

It is a singular fact that both here and at Constantinople most of the English residents are Presbyterians. While we are severely tried in not being permitted to prosecute our tour on account of Mr. Smith's illness, it is a source of much satisfaction to us, that we have been enabled to gather so much information with regard to the first object of our inquiries—the state of the Armenian church. In this respect we have been more successful than we anticipated.

We have learned two important facts by visiting the Armenians in the Russian territories. One is, that, under the present policy of the Russian government, missionary effort among any sect of Christians within their dominions will not be tolerated; nor is this a changing policy, for it is based upon the fundamental principles of the government. The other fact is, that the spirit of the monastery at Etchmiazin differs but little, if at all, from the Papal See at Rome. We have a list of facts to substantiate these statements, which we hope to transmit to you in due time. In Turkey we imagine that the Armenians, at present feel but little the authority of the patriarch at Etchmiazin, and before long they may be entirely separate from his control.

We confidently hope that the Lord may open a way by which successful missionary efforts will be carried on among the Armenians in that country. In coming into this part of Persia, we had particularly in view a journey among the Nestorian Christians. We find, however, that it will be impracticable to penetrate into their country very far from this place, on account of the Koords. The patriarch of the Nestorians in this quarter resides, we are told, at or near Julemerk. There is another patriarch near Mosul, whom we wish to visit, but our only practicable way to the city is by way of Bagdad.

If we should thus be obliged to return by way of Constantinople, and be prevented from executing that most interesting part of our commission relating to the Nestorians, we shall be exceedingly disappointed.

We have of course but little opportunity to make personal observations in Persia, as we have been here but a short time. The people are certainly very different from the Turks. They are very much inclined to conversation, and no subject is so commonly introduced by them in company with foreigners, as that of religion. They are also willing to receive the New Testament, and religious tracts, and as far as we can learn, there is no opposition made to the circulation of these books, either by the government, or by the moollahs, or priests. The people at least of his province, are said to be very anxious for religious instruction. In Tebreez, it is said, they would very eagerly send their children, to a school taught by an Englishman, and even the prince has pledged himself to countenance such a school, and of[illegible] a house for a missionary.

Mr. Brewer, at Smyrna, had received intelligence from Messrs. Smith and Dwight as late as Feb. 24. Mr. S. had then nearly recovered, and they were on the point of setting out on their return by way of Constantinople.

Letters from Europe.

LETTER TWENTY-TWO.

Rome, 16th March, 1831.

My Dear H.—It does not seem to me that Rome has a better religion of the state now, than she had when Jupiter was "the king of gods and men." I am afraid even, that personal religion is scarcely more enlightened or pure. The ancient city had but one pantheon, though many sacred temples—now, every edifice dedicated to religion is a pantheon. Indeed, the names of things are changed, much more than the substance. Every hour some striking rite of heathen mythology is exhibited under the denomination of christian worship. It would be curious, if I had the time, to run through the parallel—but I have not. What mortal would ever have dared make the attempt to represent the invisible, incomprehensible and glorious God of the Bible, on canvass or in marble, if Jupiter had not existed in these forms?—Accordingly, we find the Deity represented uniformly with the exact head and figure of the heathen god—and this mere servile copy of a mythological figure, is set up as an object of veneration to good christians, and is commented on by the connoisseurs as particularly worthy of admiration because it has so much of the majesty of the antique Jupiter! By means of one of these same antique statues, they have contrived to bring up St. Peter, and of course all his successors the Popes, to a kind of standard of equality with Jehovah.—In the great Cathedral, near the high altar, stands a bronze statue of the Apostle, which was once a statue of Jupiter Capitolinus. They pretend, indeed, that merely the materials of the old statue were used to make the new, but the better opinion is that it is the same, with little alteration, any where, and none at all about the head. There is no mistaking the head and beard of the Thunderer, and there he is, under the christian name of Peter, enjoying an immortality and a worship which never of right belonged to him—his great toe is literally as bright as a piece of polished steel, from the kisses of the saints which have been bestowed upon it. I have myself witnessed the performance of this ceremony, by multitudes.

They were certainly very right to convert the heathen temples found here, into churches. This has been done in every instance, where the original is standing, or any considerable part of it; as in the case of the temple of Vesta, and the Pantheon. In other cases churches have been built over the ruins of old temples, and as much of the ancient materials employed as remained fit for the purpose. On the Aventine Hill, stood the temple of Diana, and here Remus took the auspices; for Romulus performed this ceremony on the Palatine—now a church not only occupies the site, but is built in the form and after the model of the temple and adorned with pillars taken from it.—The sites of temples dedicated to Juno, to Hercules, to Esculapius, and multitudes of others, are occupied now by christian churches. This is all very right, and would have been very well, if in borrowing the beautiful and precious materials which were used in the temples consecrated to the splendid mythology of the ancients, they had not adopted also the rites and ceremonies of that worship, with scarcely so much change as those same materials have undergone in their new positions. I doubt whether Catholic mythology does not number more gods than heathen mythology, although those of the latter were exceedingly numerous. There is no end to the Catholic calendar of saints. It is true, the more enlightened and learned are not deceived—a great population, even, of those who serve at the altar are infidels. But they say it is not only a fit, but a necessary form of religion for the vulgar, because it addresses itself to the only mode of comprehension they have—their senses. Precisely the same thing occurred among the old Romans. The philosophers really, though privately, regretted the religion of the state, but yet sustained it, partly because they thought it good enough for the people, and principally as the means of controlling them.

If one were to take the number of churches and priests as evidence of the sum of piety in the town, he would conclude that the Millennium was begun. Of the former there are about three hundred and eighty, besides innumerable petty chapels and oratoires. About ninety of these churches are very remarkable, and are counted among the rare things of Rome. There are said to be about fifteen thousand priests of all grades.—There are also seventy convents for monks and sixty for nuns. These churches are perpetually open, and there seems to be no hour of the day or night that some bell is not rung for a set service. I have never yet entered a church here, that more or less persons were not there at their devotions. It would appear that a good Catholic cannot perform any act of worship, but before some consecrated altar. The great have their private chapels and oratoires at home, but the private devotions of the vast multitude are made either in the churches, or before crucifixes, virgins or saints, placed in the niches of the walls along the streets. The Virgin is evidently the favorite object of worship, and peforms more miracles in behalf of her worshippers than the whole calendar of saints besides.—There is scarcely an individual, especially of the lower orders, who cannot tell you of some special and gracious interference of the Madonna in his or her behalf. Nor is this belief confined to the lower orders. Some of the upper ranks of society, and of the clergy, have the most implicit faith in the effectual operations of the Virgin. You are aware that a new Pope was elected a few weeks since. The conclave was much divided and for a long time it seemed impossible to come to a choice. At last a learned Prelate proposed an agreement with the blessed Virgin; that if she would permit a Pope to be elected without any further delay, he would consent, on his part, that she might visit him with six weeks' severe sickness. The bargain was struck. The Pope was elected the next day, and the pious prelate immediately fell sick, and so continued for just the space of six weeks—for it would seem the Virgin was not disposed to abate one iota in the sum of his suffering which was stipulated to be paid as a compensation for her favor!

The churches are uniformly dedicated to some saint—never, or very rarely, to God. The dedication of St. Peter's is "to the Chief of the Apostles"—[illegible] to all the saints, but special use of Saint Paul and St. Peter. The headless trunk of the latter, is buried under the high altar of the great Cathedral which bears his name, and about his tomb one hundred lamps are burning night and day. The basilick next in size to this, is Saint Paul's, where the body of that saint, also without the head, is preserved. This edifice was nearly destroyed by fire about five years ago, is now rebuilding. Another church next in size and magnificence to these contains the heads of both these Apostles in a glass case over the high altar.—Next is a church built over the spot where St. Peter was crucified headlong, and a subterranean chapel is shown as marking the precise spot of the martyrdom. Another church is erected over what is called the Mamertine Prison (from the name of one of the keepers.) The Prison, which is really curious as being the only one in Rome for several centuries, is perfectly preserved under the church, and here is shewn a fountain of water in the narrow cell, springing up out of the solid rock, which they tell you miraculously gushed forth to enable the Apostle to baptize his two gaolers and forty-seven other persons, all of whom afterwards suffered martyrdom. What a pity that it should have been doubted or disputed that the intrepid Peter was ever at Rome in his life! But we have not yet done with churches dedicated to the two great Apostles. One has been erected of course, on the spot where St. Paul suffered martyrdom, and in this church are three living fountains, which flowed forth instantaneously and miraculously from the three distinct places upon which the head of the martyr bounded as it was struck off by the axe of the executioner! Another church still preserves the very chains with which St. Peter was bound in prison.

Some such veritable portion of history is connected with almost every church, of any note, in Rome. The oldest Catholic church here, and probably in the world, is built over the place where a fountain of oil gushed forth on the very day on which the Saviour was born. The fountain exists in the centre of the church. In another church, the true cross is preserved. It was brought from Jerusalem, and deposited here by St. Helena. It was identified by the miraculous cures which it performed! In another church is preserved the table on which the "last supper" of the Saviour and his disciples was made. A couple of cedar boards about five feet long and two and a half wide each, is exhibited under this denomination. The Santa Scala contains twenty-seven steps of white marble, brought from the palase of Pilate, and are of course the same which were trod by the feet of the Saviour, in the days of his humiliation. Crosses of a redish color are shown on the stairs as having been made by drops of blood which fell from the head of the divine sufferer. I examined one of these, and found it to be a small piece of red porphyry, neatly inserted in the white marble. These stairs are never mounted but on the knees, and this service of genuflexion is so much performed here, and the marble is already so much worn, that to prevent ts disappearing entirely, they have now covered the whole with thick planks, which of course can be removed when worn out. I stood one day for some time to witness the performances of the devout at this place, and was astonished at the facility which practice had given them in mounting the sacred stair case on their knees.

I have been amused at the singular condition of the Jews who have chosen Rome as a residence. They are confined to a particular district of the town, called "the Jews' Quarter," the gates of which, enclosing them in and cutting them off entirely from unholy contact with their Catholic neighbors, are closed, locked, and guarded with soldiers in the strictest manner, every night. What is more remarkable, perhaps is, that as a condition of their residence here, three hundred of their number are obliged to attend a church near their Quarter every Sunday, and hear a sermon preached to them against Judaism. With this condition strictly performed, and some other exactions of a very degrading character, which are laid on them, they are allowed to breathe the Catholic air of Rome. Yours ever. B

"NO MAN CARED FOR MY SOUL"

In the U. States there are about two millions of colored persons. The greater part of them are in bondage. We have Bible Societies—but Bibles are not given to them. We have Missionary Societies—but missionaries are not sent to them. We have Tract Societies—but Tracts are not given to them. We have Sunday School Societies—but Sunday schools are not opened for them.

A writer in the American Spectator and Washington City Chronicle, says, "a number of Christians in different parts of the Union, have agreed to pray to God for the salvation of the colored inhabitants of the United States, in secret, or in the family or social circle, on every Sabbath morning," and he earnestly entreats all who call upon the name of the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to join them. Why should they not? Do not the peculiar circumstances of these two millions of Africans in this Christian nation claim more of the attention and a special remembrance in the prayers of the professed followers of Christ! Let every Christian think of it, and act as his conscience and Christian feelings shall dictate.

Pray for them. As the writer above alluded to, says "No law of the state forbids this."—West. Luminary.

IMPORTANT LAW DECISION

In the case of Ohio, vs. Warens, at the late term of the Court of Common Pleas for Belmont county, Ohio, it was the opinion of the Court: "That every Tavern Keeper, or Landlord, who in a single instance, sells, or gives liquor to a drunk man, knowing him to be drunk, is liable to be indicted and fined." And in fixing the amount of fine, the Court observed :—"As this is the first case that has occurred in this county, and as we are informed the defendant is poor, the Court are disposed to be favorable, and will only lay the fine at five dollars." This fine and costs will amount to from 25 to 30 dollars—to this may be added Attorney's fees—and Landlords will perceive that great caution is necessary, and that a dram may be sold very high. A Landlord permits or allows drunkenness, when he suffers it about his house, having power to prevent it.—National Historian.

In Milton, a few days since, a child of Mr. Jabez Sumner, two years old, was discovered by its mother playing with the tail of a live Rattlesnake; Mrs. S. succeeded in killing the snake before the child had sustained any injury from it. It had six rattles. A snake with twelve rattles was killed in the same town last week.

A black clergyman, from the South, is lecturing in this city on Phrenology. We are told that he is very successful.—U. S. Gaz.

OBSERVER.

MONDAY, AUG. 18, 1831.

☞ We are compelled to leave out a number of articles this week in relation to Sab. Schools, as well as a column of other matter which is in type, designed for this paper.

POPERY AT ROME.

The Letter (of the Hon. D. D. Barnard) which we publish in this paper, taken from the Roch. Daily Advertiser, we doubt not will be read with interest, both by Protestants and Catholics. Mr. Barnard, we presume, will not be suspected, by any one acquainted with him, of being influenced by bigotry or sectarian feelings in the relation of facts which he there gives. He has seen Rome as it is—where if any where, the Roman Catholic faith exists in its purity—where, if it is the pure and unadulterated gospel of the Saviour, we might expect to see the most happy state of society and the purest morals. How is it that the nearer we get to the seat of this Infallible Head of the only true Church, the more there is of ignorance, degradation and crime? Will Catholics deny that the farther they get from Rome, and the more they are surrounded by Protestants, the better is the state of morals among those of their own faith? If this is the true church, and their doctrines those which can alone save the soul and prepare it for Heaven, how happens it that Catholics are not the most corrupt who are most exposed to the soul-destroying doctrine and precepts inculcated by Protestants? Surely this is a subject worthy of examination.

The letter of Republicus, in reply to that of Mr. Buchan, which we published last week, will be found on our third page, and we hope will be read with as much attention, by Catholics, if not with the same pleasure, as that was which has called it forth.

MEETING ON THE SUBJECT OF MOURNING APPAREL.

We are requested to give notice that a meeting of the inhabitants of this village, who are in favor of dispensing with the wearing of mourning apparel, will be held at the Court House, at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The object of the meeting, as we are informed, is not so much for the purpose of discussing the propriety of the custom, as to ascertain who among our citizens have already made up their minds to disregard its requirements.

As many are still disposed to wear mourning as expressive of their respect for the memory, and their grief at the loss of relatives and friends, it is desirable that those who think proper to lay it aside, should have an opportunity of making their resolution public, that they may not be charged with a want of feeling or of respect for the memory of the deceased, for refusing to go into mourning on funeral occasions.

Another object of this meeting is that those who have made up their minds on the subject, may thus give their united influence in favor of the abolition of an inconvenient, useless and expensive custom.

Those friendly to the object are earnestly requested to attend punctually at the hour.

The attendance of the Ladies is particularly solicited.

Rochester, August 18, 1831.

BURGLARIES,

Have been very numerous in N. York of late. Indeed there seems to us, judging from the record of crime that appears in the public print, to be a rapid deterioration of morals going on in that city. It may be considered as a fair exhibition of the effects of the Fanny Wright system of morality.—Where the restraints of Scripture are removed, and the minds of the lower class, in our large cities, are thoroughly imbued with the awfully demoralizing and licentious doctrines of infidelity—whether as promulgated by Tom Paine or Fanny Wright, what are we to expect but that the flood gates of iniquity should be unbarred, and that our country should be deluged with crime, and the repose of the peaceable citizen be disturbed by the assassin, the burglar and the midnight incendiary.

FRENCH CLAIMS SETTLED.

Our readers will recollect the long protracted negociation between our Government and that of France, for property destroyed and confiscated during the reign of Napoleon, under the Berlin and Milan decrees. France has finally agreed to pay 1,000,000 pounds sterling, being one fourth of the amount claimed by our government.

Prince Leopold has finally agreed to accept the crown of Belgium. The rejection of this crown by the French king on behalf of his son, and the reluctance manifested by Leopold in accepting it, shows pretty clearly how much the value of these baubles has depreciated in the shambles of Royalty since the revolutionary spirit has become so prevalent through the world. Americans will remember that this spirit which has already emancipated so large a portion of the human race from servile submission to regal authority, was first kindled in our own country—in the land of the Puritans!!

RUM-SELLING AND SABBATH-BREAKING.

There is great complaint made by the friends of Temperance, that some of the members of our churches—some of whom are deacons—continue to deal in ardent spirits. The inconsistencies of such a course have been so often and clearly pointed out, that it is hardly necessary to add any thing more—but we would inquire whether these rum-selling tavern-keepers, do not, most of them, in consequence of being engaged in this business violate the 4th commandment, in dealing out spirits to their customers on the Sabbath. Indeed can there be found a professor of religion, who sells spirits, who is not inclined to lower down the requirements of the Law of God, and who, instead of growing in grace, is not becoming more and more conformed to the world. We have known instances in which an individual, after a great many struggles with conscience, as to the propriety of continuing in the traffic of ardent spirits, has at last succeeded apparently, in silencing its remonstrances, and boldly justifies himself in continuing in this unholy business, and is not ashamed to use the same stale arguments which the open opposers of temperance measures are in the daily habit of using. But as might be expected, he has not stopped here. His love of filthy lucre has led him to purchase property which is employed in the public profanation of the Sabbath, and what he does not do himself, he employs his agent to do for him—labor in the most public and undisguised and offensive manner on the Sabbath. And yet this man is retained in the bosom of a Church, which professes to be a church of Christ!! Is entitled to all its privileges!! Can such a church expect any thing else than the frown of God?

A CONTRAST TO THE ABOVE.

In the town of B. a man who has for a great number of years kept a Tavern, and had dealt out to his customers the deadly poison, was recently converted, and one of the first things which he did, was to take down his sign, and relinquish his tavern, and this he did at a sacrifice of some hundreds of dollars. But he rightly judged that he could not pray for the reformation and conversion of his fellow-men, and yet for the sake of obtaining their money, do that which would tend to destroy their usefulness and respectability in this world, and most effectually close the kingdom of heaven against them forever.

Another man, not a professor, who kept a public house in the same town, became so fully convinced of the immoral and ruinous effects of dealing in ardent spirits, that he banished it from his bar, although at a great pecuniary sacrifice—but what is worthy of especial notice in this case is, that in about a fortnight after, he became a hopeful subject of renewing grace.

THE CHOLERA.

The Indian or Spasmodic Cholera, which appeared at Jessore near Calcutta, in 1817, and has since travelled through a great part of Asia and Europe, is at this time committing dreadful ravages in Russia, and report, which however is not confirmed, says, that it has made its appearance in Holland. Precautionary measures have been taken in England to prevent its introduction there, and the city authorities of N. York, have imposed rigid quarantine upon vessels arriving from the Mediterranean.

Such have been the awfully desolating ravages of the cholera wherever it has made its appearance, that a very remote possibility of its introduction into any country may well excite alarm.

To show its destructive effects, we have taken pains to examine an authentic account, taken from the "Englishman's Magazine," some of the facts contained in which we give in an abridged form.

In 1818 it appeared at Benares on the Ganges, where in two months it carried off 15,000 persons, and in other places in the vicinity, the mortality was equally great. In November it attacked the Grand Army under the Marquis of Hastings, consisting of 10,000 troops and 80,000 followers, and in twelve days swept off 9,000 men. It continued to spread desolation through the camp for a length of time, sparing neither age nor sex, until amidst this vast assemblage, where was usually exhibited a continued scene of bustle and activity, nothing was to be seen but here and there a solitary individual traversing the camp to make inquiries after the fate of his companion, and the stillness of despair seemed to brood over this immense mass of human beings. The natives perceiving that their only hope was in flight, deserted in crowds, but they carried the seeds of the disease with them, and the fields for many miles around were covered with their dead bodies. It regularly travelled from place to place, at the rate of about 18 miles per day.

In Bankok in the Peninsula of Siam, 40,000 died. It appeared in Pekin in 1821, where the mortality was so enormous that coffins and other funeral requisites were furnished at the public expense. Numbers of people engaged in business, riding or walking, were suddenly attacked, and were carried off in a few hours.

In Muscat in Arabia, 50,000 persons fell victims to its ravages. Many of them expired in ten minutes after they were seized.

In 1822 it appeared in Java and carried off 100,000 people. It not only traversed the warm regions of Asia and Europe, but appeared in Siberia in 1827. The cold of winter tended to check it, but could not eradicate the miasm. "On the 8th of August" says the account, "it entered Tifflis, and soon reduced the population by death and emigration, from 30,000 to 8,000." The civil governor and nearly all the officers of the Police, became its victims. From here it followed the course of the Volga, ravaging the various districts in its course, until it reached Moscow, on the 28 Sept.—having travelled 900 miles in three months.

Extraordinary precautions were taken to check its progress. The city was divided into forty seven departments, entirely separated from each other by bars and gates. In the first 12 days 216 cases occurred, of which 76 proved fatal. As it continued to increase, its mortality increased also, and by the 10th Nov. 5,500 cases had occurred of which 2,900 terminated fatally. The astonishingly rapid progress which it makes, in those places where it now exists, will be seen from an article in another column. Those that were attacked yesterday, are either dead to-day or are considered as recovered.

Of its nature and cure we give the following extracts.

The Nature and Cure of the Indian Cholera

The generic appellative, Cholera, is radically derived from the Greek word, signifying bile.—The title was appropriated in consequence of one of the most prominent symptoms being either a redundant flow of bile into the intestines, accompanied with evacuations of a bilious fluid characterizing Bilious Cholera; or a total absence of bile in the intestines, with evacutions of a watery fluid characterizing Spasmodic Cholera. These symptoms are so complety opposed to each other in the quality of the fluid discharged, that, attending to them alone will, in general, preclude the possibility of confounding the two species.

In this country, the more severe forms of Bilious Cholera usually occur in the latter end of summer, or the beginning of autumn. At these periods, the extreme heat of the sun stimulates the liver to an increased secretion of bile, which, flowing in excess through the biliary canals, accumulates within the intestines. In the condition of health, a certain quantity of bile is a necessary adjuvant to the perfecting of the digestive process; but, like other natural secretions, when above or below the salutary measure, it becomes the cause, or the indication of diseased action.

The opening symptoms of Bilious Cholera, are simply the efforts of nature to expel the superfluous bile from the system. The patient complains of nausea and universal langour, to which retchings and evacuations of a bilious fluid quickly succeed. There is also thirst, restlessness, and pain. In many cases occasional cramps are experienced in the limbs, resulting doubtless from the irritating effects of the bile upon the internal surface of the intestines. Of spasmodic action, induced in distant parts of the body in an analagous manner, there is conclusive evidence. In children, convulsions are often excited by the irritation of worms or indigestible matter lodged in some part of the alimentary canal.

A knowledge of the nature and seat of a disease, will lead to a judicious plan of medical treatment. The course to be adopted here is very obvious. There are two objects to be obtained—One, to dilute and remove the irritating fluid from the bowels; the other, to allay thirst, pain, and spasms. The first indication is followed in the free exhibition of mucilaginous liquids, and the use of an occasional purgative; to compass the second, anodyne medicines and refreshing drinks should be administered. * * * * *

Spasmodic Cholera is strongly distinguished from the preceding species by the intractable nature of the malady itself and by the greater intensity of some of the symptoms common to both, as well as by the features, which confer upon it a distinct specific existence. Spasmodic Cholera is practically unknown in England, but in India it is indigenous. The attack is usually most insidious and sudden.—Persons who may have felt perfectly well during the day, in the course of the night, or early in the morning, are seized with a feeling of uneasiness, which is at first rather a general sensation than referable to any particular part. To this succeed, at irregular intervals of time, a sensation of heat in the region of the stomach, nausea, constant evacuations from the stomach and bowels of a fluid bearing a striking similitude to water in which rice had been boiled, cramps of the muscles of the fingers and toes, which regularly ascend along the limbs to the trunk. Finally, the muscles of the chest and belly are included in the circle of spasmodic movement, the more violent symptoms continue to persecute the patient, until his strength is unable to sustain them. In the last stage of the disease he is emancipated from the vomiting and spasms, through the complete exhaustion of physical power. With this change, however, he expresses himself greatly relieved, and he may yet survive for a considerable period, his mind remaining unimpaired amid the wreck of the corporeal functions. * * * * *

The first case of Spasmodic Cholera that challenged our professional skill, occurred in Calcutta. The symptoms were sufficiently marked to make a lasting impression upon the mind of a practitioner hitherto practically unacquainted with an enemy so obstinate and so accustomed to triumph.

The patient, Mr. A——, an European, only a few months transplanted from England, was a middle aged man, of spare but muscular proportions. The evening previous to the attack, he had been abroad enjoying the society of some friends, and contrary to his general habits, he had indulged in the rather free use of spiritous liquors. The party separated about one o'clock. Mr. A——, the distance being short, travelled home in a palankeen. Upon reaching his residence, he did not retire directly to bed, but took a seat in the verandah "to cool himself." In this state of exposure to night air he fell asleep. He slept soundly until awakened, an hour afterwards, by his servant, who reminded him of the propriety of going to bed. Either from the disease not being perceptibly manifest, or from impaired sensibility, Mr. A—— was not then conscious of any morbid affection. After slumbering in bed, however, for a couple of hours, he awoke suddenly with a start, complaining of mental anxiety, and a feeling of uneasiness in the region of the stomach, which he attributed to a disagreeable dreams, and to the effects of the wine. But the anxiety increased, and the uneasiness changed into a feeling of burning heat. In the lapse of four hours, evacuations of the portentous fluid, like rice water, followed, from the stomach and bowels, to which were soon superadded distressing cramps, affecting the muscles of the toes. The character of the affection was now evident to the patient himself, though almost a stranger to the climate and its diseases. To afford medical assistance, we were immediately summoned. The summons was quickly obeyed, but, in the interim, the advance of the disease had surpassed our rapidity.

On our arrival, we found that the patient had been unable longer to endure confinement to bed. The cramps had extended upwards to the calfs of the legs; they were also simultaneously experienced in both arms. So violent were the spasms, that he had rolled in torture upon the floor. At the time we entered he was gathered into a corner of the apartment, and he presented an appalling spectacle of internal agony. His person, sparingly concealed in a night-garment, bore in its spasmodic contractions, a resemblance to the letter S. Assisted by a couple of servants, and by pressing his bent extremities against the angular walls, he labored in the extreme exertion of voluntary force to subdue the involuntary action of the rebellious muscles. The expression of his face at that moment, lives distinct in our recollection; and even there, though seen through the mist of receding years, it is painful to dwell upon.

To convey to the reader a faint idea of the death-struggle then maintained, we would liken Mr A—— to a traveller, who, falling unwarily upon the tiger's lair, rallies every nerve to secure a temporary respite. His inevitable fate is briefly procrastinated by the convulsive grasp which holds the throat of the savage in momentary subjection. Such was the danger—such the desperation stamped upon the countenance of our patient. His features were sharp and hollow. His teeth clenched in breathless agony. The blood had retreated from his cheeks and lips. His limbs were doubled remorselessly by the remorseless spasms.

In a few minutes a remission brought partial relief. In occasional snatches of expression, he gave us to understand that he was now able to answer the interrogatories we might think proper to propose, with respect to the inward symptoms. These symptoms were the usual concomitants of Spasmodic Cholera in the intermediate stage of its violence. His stomach felt as if it contained a furnace. The thirst was unslakable. And so complete was the feeling of exhaustion during the interval of mitigated suffering, that he felt unconscious of possessing the slightest control over the motions of any part of his physical structure.

The immediate suffering, particularly from the spasms, absorbed both sense and soul. He prayed imploringly to be relieved, either by energetic treatment or by death, from the intolerable agony that threatened to tear him into pieces.

Brief was the interval between supplication and repose. The resources of nature were exhausted in detail. The spasms which had eventually ascended to the body, finally yielded to debility, that proved alike prostrating to the actions natural and diseased. The vomiting ceased to harass, the pulse was no longer perceptible in the hands, even the motion of the heart—that citadel of life—was feeble and indistinct. The surface of the body felt cold and clammy like a corpse, presenting in the hands and feet a corrugated and macerated appearance, as if it had been steeped in water for some days. The breath grew chill. The eye was glazed. In this state, notwithstanding, he lived several hours, and then expired without a struggle.

The case of Mr. A—— is a common one of the progress of the disease to a fatal termination. It included thirteen hours from the first feeling of uneasiness, until he breathed his last. Cases, however, are continually occurring in which the duration of the malady extends to twenty four hours.—Some beyond that. On the other hand, many patients are carried off with singular rapidity. In the history of the Epidemic, instances are numerous of soldiers falling in the line of march and dying instantly, as if scared by lightning, without having uttered a previous complaint. Mechanics have perished with their working implements in their hands; the Brahmin, also, at his beads, and the Ryot at his plough.

The malignant nature of this disease will be better understood on reading the following—and when the fact is considered which we have before mentioned that the danger of its visiting this country is viewed so far within the compass of possibility as to induce the Board of Health of the city of N. York to take precautionary measures to prevent its introduction there we are sure that we need make no apology for occupying so much room with articles in relation to this desolating and irresistible destroyer.

THE CHOLERA MORBUS.—The following letters from Riga have been received this morning:—

RIGA, May 29 (O. S.) June 10, 1831.

The state of health seems better, at least there are less deaths in proportion; the better classes have lately suffered much. Anxiety of mind and a fear of the disorder have been the death of many; then comes grief for the loss of friends; in fine, the mind is affected in various ways calculated to render the body liable to the disease. The mortality amongst the seamen is less than it was; but so many ships have left us, and the people by the barks have mostly returned into the country. The emigration amongst the inhabitants also is very great. We think it will not last much longer.

RIGA, May 27, (June 8.)

We now get lists of the home patients as wes as of the hospital patients, but it only includee the town and suburbs. The Bolderaa and evirons of this town, citidel, and military hospital, are not included. Since May 14 (26) up to this morning there have been

1042 Hospital cases, of which only	190 cured,	761 dead
In all 1882 cases	280 cures	1004 de'ths

The day before yesterday the number attacked were 117, 45 cured, and 85 dead; yesterday there we 115 cases, of which there were 53 cured, and 40 died.

The proportion of cures at home, compared to the hospitals, is very striking, although the latter are now well regulated and attended, the merit of which, as well as of every other satisfactory arrangement, is principally to be attributed to Major-Gen. Strogonoff, attached to the suite of the Emperor. This, at least, is the general voice.

We shall add the Thursday's report when we close our letter.

29th May (10th June,) 1831.—Yesterday there were only 105 new Cholera cases. 76 cures, 46 deaths of which

37 new cases	30 cures. 26 deaths—	In hospital
68	46 20	At home,

The total in Hospital cases.

1119, of which 150 recoveries, 690 deaths.

Home 909,	325	360
In all 2028	475	1050	503

remaining sick, of which 82 getting better.

We are glad to report all well with us, and remain, &c.

To the Editor of the Rochester Observer.

Dear Sir:—I perceive that the Mr. Buchan, who came out a few days ago in the Advertiser, repeating the Rev. M. M'Namara's addresses to the public on the subject of slanders against the Roman Catholic Church, has become a correspondent of yours, and tho' in the Advertiser he modestly disclaimed ability for controversy, yet now in the Observer he forgets his diffidence, grounds the gauntlet, proclaims the terms, brandishes his blade and really appears a veritable champion. Were I bent on war sir, I should surely choose to fight in your lists, for they seem to have a magical effect on a man's courage. But your correspondent's spirit has led him into a mistake not unlike Don Quixotte's who went to fighting with the harmless wind-mill when it was only grinding corn for the benefit of the country, mistaking it for a giant Knight brandishing his sword for chivalrous and mortal combat. The habits and duties of our republicanism are equally foreign to the spirit and the language of the ancient tournament and its modern substitutes in chivalrous countries prize-fighting, public boxing and cock-fighting. The very terms are becoming obsolete among us, and we can hear the adept ring changes on "coward," "blackguard," and "assassin" without any other emotion than a pity that common sense and civilization should make such slow advances. Men of the latter stamp cannot or will not understand why we prefer quietly examining facts relating to the welfare of our country to the eclat of stripping ourselves stark naked and boxing a good bout with them in a ring, or taking a match at billingsgate with the weapons which they use.

Your new correspondent is one of those who is not suited with a cool comparison of principles unless he can mingle personalities with the discussion; one with whom truth is truth or falsehood according to the name and authority under which it comes to him. And yet his clamor for my name at present, or rather Mr. M'Namara's demand, (for this is but the same which he made and I noticed a year ago), plainly proceeds from another motive, viz: that of diverting attention from the subject to circumstances. Bear with me a moment in demonstrating this, as this is the last time I shall be diverted from the subject itself to notice either Mr. B. or any of his cavils unless he thinks fit to take the ground of facts and honest arguments.

Mr. M'Namara addressed a communication to the public and volunteered to furnish you, the Editor of the Observer, with expositions of the principles of the Roman Catholic Church if you should desire it. You did desire it. He refused to fulfil his promise—Why?—Because subsequently one Republicus wrote an article for your paper on that subject & did not give his real name The reason offered by him and Mr. B. for not pleading on the indictment of slander which they themselves bring, is, because I am anonymous. But is this the true reason? You, sir, to whom the expositions were offered before they heard of Republicus, are not anonymous. Why could he not meet your demand. Oh, that Republicus will not give his proper name, therefore I am not bound to fulfil my promise to the public and to Mr. Chipman.

But again. Mr. M'Namara addrssed his communication to the public. If it called for a reply who ought to reply. Did Mr. M. mean to select a correspondent that could not speak, and so have the opportunity of speaking for both himself I replied to him in the character and name of the correspondent he selected, and my easy task was to exhibit the well known principles of our republican institutions, in contrast with the principles of the Roman Catholic Church quoted chapter and verse from the authorized writings of the Rom. C. Church. Mr. M. did not dare to call in question either the one or the other in the one rejoiader which he made. He could not. He was manifestly disappointed when he found that his correspondent the Public had a tongue—and that the broad features of public character might be drawn by any body so as to be recognized by all, and it matters not a straw who the painter was. He was also mute about the quotations, because the only alternative was to admit them, and so give up the charge of slander or deny their correctness, and risk being confounded with the originals. By the way (while complaining of the want of responsibility in Republicus, why dont they try the experiment of denying the truth of his quotations—this will be an easy way either of destroying his credit or discovering his name.)

Why, Sir, every child knows that when a cause rests on facts and not on personal testimony it is perfectly immaterial what his name is who directs the public eye to the things themselves. Where this is done the public can look at them for themselves and judge for themselves. It is only where men bring forward in argument matters of which they are the sole witnesses themselves, such as the Irish Massacre story which Mr. McNamara employed with me and the Limerick burial story with which he met the broad notoriety of Italian Romanism reported by our fellow-citizen B. It is in such cases only that the name of an informant is of any moment. Yet this is the point on which your Mr. R hopes to raise dust enough to cover a retreat back at this in the shape of an argument. Republicus is an anonymous writer, therefore the quotations he makes from the Canons and decrees of Councils, (even if in the very words) are no longer the canons and decrees—or, if they be, they prove nothing.

Let us look at this stale subterfuge in the light of an example. The proper officer is informed, by some one, call him Republicus, that in such a field and such a part of a field a dead body will be found, bearing marks of violence, and there is strong suspicion of foul deeds committed, that demand an inquest. Now, suppose at this point a grave advocate should step up and accost the officer with great seriousness and passion. Sir, beware what you do—that informant has not given you his name—your dignity forbids you to take the least notice of his information;—he is Anonymous, Sir, he is anonymous. Aye, but says the officer, he reports matters which will prove or disprove themselves, if we only take the trouble of looking into the field he mentions. No, no, says the advocate. I insist upon it, that you stir not a step in this matter till that informant gives his proper name, or at least tells us something by which we can find it out—I am interested, and you have my name, let him give his. It is a cowardly thing for a man to furnish such information with such circumstances without giving his name. Oh Liberty! Dear Liberty! How art thou abused to cloke over such conduct. Spirit of Church-and State! what shall become of us, when a man may actually call the public attention to facts, that if looked into may expose some one, and yet not give his name! Mr. officer, if that coward would but give his name, I could descant upon it, and tell you so many anecdotes about names of that kind, (for I suspect the kind at least) and I could report to you so many shocking scenes that have come under my own observation away in other countres, that you would not think of that body till the crows had carried off, or some body had decently buried it:—and thus we should save the community from noise and all our dignity from this—O this Anonymous. Yours, &c.

REPUBLICUS.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THOROUGH EDUCATION IN THE GOSPEL MINISTRY

In my last communication, I considered to some extent, what constituted thorough education for the ministry: It only remains for us, now to consider the importance of such an education. And here I would remark, if such an education is required, many years must be expended in attaining it, and no young man can look towards the ministry with any hope of success, who is not prepared to devote from six to ten years in laborious study. He will be unprepared and unfurnished for its duties and demands if he does not. If the education which I have considered is important, the time thus employed is well expended. Its importance I shall attempt to prove in this and my future communications.

1st. The age in which we live demands an intelligent and thoroughly Educated Ministry.

The time has come when men will not consent to be taught by those who are inadequate to subjects which they attempt to investigate and unfold. Sound sense and extensive research are demanded in each of the learned professions. No man will entrust an important case, or the management of his estate in the hands of him who is not thoroughly read in the principles of common and of statute law; nor will any sensible man commit the keeping of his life and health to the hands of a half educated physician. By common consent, a collegiate and systematic education are demanded in each of these departments; and no man can calculate on success and extensive usefulness in either without thorough education. Hence we have our schools of law and medicine, and the men who come from them, come prepared to elevate and sustain the public intellect as well as to secure success in their respective spheres of labor. If public sentiment demands education in these professions, much more does it in the ministry. This holds a higher and a holier character, and is placed expressly to teach mankind in the all important principles of intellectual and moral science; and I repeat it, men in this age will not consent to be taught by those who are not educated themselves.

The present is an active, enterprising and an intelligent age, and he who is to stand forth most prominent of all men, should surely, to secure confidence and respect, be far before others, especially in the department to which he has devoted his life. There is so much written and read at the present day on religious and theological subjects, that an uneducated minister will find many in almost every congregation who are more intelligent than himself on the very subjects which he attempts to teach, and we may be assured that they will not long rest satisfied with his ministrations.

No man can calculate on any thing like a permanent settlement in any part of our land who is not well educated. The intelligent cannot and ought not to sustain his ministrations, and the more unenlightened part of the community have too much pride to do it.

This is also an age of active and untiring opposition to the religion of the gospel. Multitudes of wicked men are watching the defects of the clergy and are assailing them to weaken the public confidence in the religion of Christ and to destroy the faith for which they are commissioned to contend. The press is groaning under the burden of infidel productions, while many a pulpit is pouring forth cruel and destructive heresy. Many opposers of religion at the present time, are intelligent men and can wield the arguments of infidelity with uncommon skill; while heresy is springing up on all sides, in new and ever changing forms, while it is presented in the most imposing attitude, fortified by the most extensive research of philosophy and recommended by the charms of literature and the brilliancy of eloquence. Multitudes are seeking to convince the people that the system of evangelical religion is opposed to sound and correct philosophy and that it requires only increased knowledge to discover its absurdities, and more refinement to be offended with its spirit. More than ordinary talent and learning are required to meet and rectify these mistakes and to turn back the weapons of infidelity to the destruction of its own cause. Truth itself suffers in the hands of the unskilful, while, intelligently directed, it is sure to prevail.

This is also an age of speculation. Good men are now in many cases, too much disposed to dwell on the philosophy of religion, rather than enforce the pure principles of piety. And no men are so much exposed to be taken and bewildered by the speculations of religious philosophy, if I may so speak, as those who are partially educated. There is an appearance of learning and research about it, which they often vainly imagine will conceal their real defects, and be received by the mass of the people as the substantial elements of truth and righteousness. At such a time as this, every minister should be settled and grounded in the faith of the gospel and be able to distinguish between the philosophy of religion and religion itself, and also be prepared to bring before his people, in the most plain and affecting light the results of his own investigation, rather than dwell in scholastic language upon the philosophical proofs by which he obtained them.

This is also an age of enterprise, when plans for extensive influence are to be formed and carried into almost immediate execution; and these plans are deeply to affect the future generations of men, to become a blessing or a curse long after their projectors are dead. That intelligence and foresight which are gained only by mental discipline and knowledge of history and the probable result of moral causes is now most imperiously demanded.

This is also an age of [illegible] and the most untiring energies of the ministry. Little time is allowed for study. After a man once enters the ministry he finds but few opportunities to increase his scientific and literary attainments, and in fact his theological knowledge in most cases must be improved, rather by reflection upon what he has already attained, than by continued and extensive reading and investigating the labors of other men.

This is also an age in which the moral and intellectual character of our country may be said to be forming. This is emphatically true of that portion who are soon to hold the balance of power and decide the destinies of this mighty people. Those institutions are yet to be planted in the west which are to form the intellectual and moral character of our republic. If that wide field, now sustaining in its ample bosom four millions of souls, should be left without intelligence and sound morality, fearful indeed will be the result, when they shall rise in the maturity of their strength and the multitude of their population and say to the whole land who shall be our rulers and what shall be our laws. And who that has any knowledge of the past, does not know that ministers have had the chief labor and responsibility of creating and sustaining our literary and religious institutions.—Go into the congregations of those ministers who are not interested in literary and religious institutions and as a general rule, you will find few if any of the people who are interested and engaged in these objects. Our sympathies are justly excited for the west, & to be wisely directed, we should send there our ablest & best men. It requires comparatively but little talent, education and experience to sustain literary and religious institutions in our older settlements; but to harmonize, arrange and compact the elements of society, in our new settlements, brought together from every part of the world, with every variety of feeling, shade of sentiment and aspect of character, requires consummate skill and no ordinary share of public confidence, that confidence which a common man is not likely to obtain. And here we must not forget that in our new settlements are to be found men of the first enterprize, talent and experience: many of whom have swarmed from the drones of older countries, because they were most enterprising and intelligent. It is a mistaken idea, that men of partial education will answer the demands of the west. To form the character of society there we must send our first men. The rapid march of mind must be wisely directed and that immense moral power secured on the side of truth and virtue or all is lost.

I will add, that there is a growing spirit in the present age to undervalue and depreciate the gospel ministry. This must be checked or our altars will soon be swept away and our sanctuaries demolished. But how shall this be done? We cannot compel men to respect the ministry. We have not the power of superstition and ignorance, nor is there any thing in the circumstance of office to sustain us. We can gain respect only by showing that our influence is powerful and at the same time salutary. We must hold dominion over the empire of mind, not by depressing the public intellect, but by elevating it and leading the way to higher and nobler attainments in mental and moral science. Let the world see and know that our principles in morals and religion are the results of sound philosophy, of thorough, systematic investigation: that they cannot be overthrown: so convincing that they cannot be refuted, so firm that they cannot be shaken and so clear that they cannot be obscured. Here is the right dominion over mind—and it is a necessary, unavoidable, and willing dominion, not slavish acquiescence in what it cannot understand. This is the dominion which every intelligent and good man should strive to obtain; and most of all, the man who, to the ordinary attainments of human life adds, that knowledge which is borrowed from the inspiration of God. The church has nothing grand or imposing in her march, when conducted by unskilful leaders. They disgrace themselves, retard the progress of Zion and cause both "priest and people" to sink in the eyes of the world. There was a time when the clergy of New-England were loved, not feared as dangerous men, their attainments respected, their councils sought and confided in, when they threw around the intellectual, civil and religious interests of that endeared land a lofty and unbroken bulwark of defence. And with all she has lost from the degeneracy and heresy of her clergy, she stands preeminent now, and stands so, because she still values and demands an intelligent ministry. The dissenting clergy of England have long stood low in the estimation of the people. While legal disabilities contributed to their depression, want of education has done a thousand times more. Talent and education will rise under all the discouragements of civil injunctions, while the strongest arm of legal immunities and the widest extent of governmental patronage cannot elevate and sustain the ministry where moral and intellectual superiority are wanting. But what has moral and intellectual superiority already done for the dissenting clergy of England and Scotland? I need only mention the names of James Hall, Fuller and Foster—Stars that have gone up so beautiful and brilliant in that hemisphere of mind, to encourage, to cheer and elevate. Let such men be multiplied in Europe and America as they should be and as they might be, and soon there will not be found an infidel on either continent who will dare to oppose the truth they preach, while the clamorous ignorance of foolish men will be put to silence. Then, and not till then, will the ministry stand where God designed it should, at the head of his sacramental hosts; as the burning and shining lights to guide an erring world back to righteousness and peace.

Does not the present age demand an educated ministry? Yours, &c.

It will undoubtedly rejoice the hearts of such of our readers as take an interest in the religious movements of the present day, that a four days meeting was commenced here on the 28th ult. which we trust has been attended with the happiest consequences. Religious services have been continued every day since the commencement of the meeting, and they have been nature of solemnity which has never before been witnessed in this place, has seemed to pervade this community. The number of anxious enquirers, at one time it is believed, exceed 100; a large proportion of whom profess to have found peace in believing. A deep feeling on religious subjects is still apparent; and the friends of Zion anticipate a continuance of the heavenly blessing.—Jamestown Jour.

THE BIBLE A WARRANT FOR ENLISTMENT INTO THE BRITISH SERVICE.

From the Southern Religious Intelligencer.

Extract from the 13th Annual Report of the Granville County N. C. Bible Society.

Such a state of society was found, in some parts of these counties, as could hardly have been imagined—such ignorance and total misapprehension with regard to the objects of the society. Some people actually supposed that the reception of a Bible from our society, would be a draft warrant to enlist them in the service of the British army; and under this false impression they went so far, in one case, as to pursue the agent and destroy the papers, in which he kept a list of persons' names who received Bibles. Facts of this kind, however, should only stimulate the society to increased exertions; and they show the necessity of seasonable and judicious efforts, not only in the Bible cause, but also in the Sunday School and Missionary cause. For the Bible will be of very little service unless it can be read.

We wonder who could have imposed this story upon the credulity of these ignorant people! Was it a trick of hireling orthodox priests? Surely the high minded, honorable opposers of the Bible Society could not have descended to such baseness.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

It is reported that Field-Marshall Count Paskewitch is ill of the Asiatic fever at St. Petersburgh. (The statement of the Posen Gazette that he had arrived at Wilna, is not confirmed.) It is said that he has declined to take the command of the army. Gen. Toll is for the present at its head.

The detailed Report sent by the Field-Marshall of the battle of Ostrolenka, states the Russians lost 37 officers killed, and a hundred and twelve wounded, subalterns and privates killed 957, wounded 2,919. The Polish loss is stated at above 8,000, of whom 2000 were taken prisoners (So much for the Polish account of the Russian loss at this battle of something like 20,000 men.)

The Warsaw papers state that, on the 14th General Scrzynecki put the main army in motion in the direction of Nur. The news from Lithuania and the Ukraine's is good. The insurgents seem to be gathering strength daily, and several successes on their part are mentioned in the French and German Journals. General Giolgud is now stationed in Somogitia, a Lithuanian district to the North of the Niemen. He crossed the river on the 5th of June, near Kowno, from which place he drove the Russians. His forces amounted to 2000 men, which were very soon increased to three times that number by the junction of the insurgents and the rise of the inhabitants. Rossienie and Teicha were occupied by the detachments. The Russians retired with precipitation at all points.

A letter from Berlin, June 13 says—'The news of Count Diebitsch's death was received at Warsaw on the night of the 13th; it was added that he died two hours after Count Orloff had arrived at head quarters from St. Petersburgh, had examined the state of the army, and expressed dissatisfaction at it. Thus we have another version of this event. It is said that the Field Marshal, in his last moments expressed his wish not to be buried in Russia or Poland, but in his native country, Silesia.'

PARTICULARS OF THE LAST ILLNESS OF GENERAL DIEBITSCH.

The following official details of the last illness of field Marshal Diebitsch, contained in a despatch of Gen. Count Toll, are published in the St. Petersburg Journal:

"On the morning of the 28th (June 9) the Field Marshal had felt himself unwell, but during the whole day he appeared in good health, had eaten, and seemed in good spirits, as usual, and there was nothing that excited any apprehension for his health. In the evening he went to bed at 10 o'clock, as he had been used to do for some days past. He was soon called up to attend to some business, and still appeared quite well. About 2 o'clock in the morning he suddenly felt indisposed, and called to his attendants, but forbade them to awake any body, or even to fetch any Physician. It was not til past 2 o'clock, that finding himself grow worse, he ordered M. Schegel, Physician in Ordinary to the Emperor, to be called, but desired that nobody else should be disturbed. When the Doctor came, he saw symptoms of the cholera, which usually accompany this disorder, & lasted several hours. The patient was immediately bled, leeches were applied, and very strong friction employed; in short, no means that might afford relief were neglected.

The Field Marshal, retaining all his presence of mind, ordered every person, except the medical attendants, to quit the room, for fear of their taking the contagion. About 7 o'clok the physicians succeeded in producing perspiration, and the patient became rather more easy. Up to this moment the cramp had been but slight, and the patient suffered only from the alternate fits of shivering and burning heat. Between 7 and 8 o'clock cramp commenced in the legs and in the internal part of the body, and the intermitting pains, which seemed insupportable, continued till near 10 o'clock, when the groans of the patient became less frequent, but his vital powers evidently diminished; the breathing more and more difficult, the patient soon fell into a kind of lethargy, scarcely interrupted by the unfrequent motions of the head; the eye-sight failed. At a quarter past 11 the irreparable loss which we have sustained took place. Divine Providence, in its inscrutable decrees, has deprived the army of its illustrious commander.

ENGLISH ATHEISTS.

The worst Atheists of this country, it is well known, are emigrants from England. Almost all of the Fanny Wright and Robert Owen school, have been imported within a few years past. If our readers wish to know to what deplorable extremities these wretched creatures are disposed to go, they may read the following from one of our London papers:

At the Rotunda, scenes of unparalleled performances are almost nightly going on. Mr. Taylor, the infidel, appears on a stage over which is a mimic representation of the Holy Trinity before which he bows and continues in the attitude of prayer for several minutes; then rises and bursts into a loud laugh. The Scriptures are read, and comments the most profane and licentious made upon them; and to crown all, bread and wine are brought on the stage, and this poor and wretched man comes forward and says, "I drink this in commemoration of Jesus, Christ," and the deluded and miserable multitude exclaim, "Well done! bravo! bravo!" This is a very brief and imperfect sketch of one night's exhibition.—N. Y. Evan.

BENEFICIAL RESULTS OF SAVINGS BANKS.—According to a parliamentary return just printed, the gross amount of sums received on account of savings banks is, since their establishment in 1817, £20,760,228; amount of sums paid £5,648,338;—the balance therefore, is £15,111,890. It also states the gross amount of interest paid and credited to savings banks by the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt as £5,141;410 8s. 7d. This is astonishing; and we should vainly demand credence for it on less authority than the Parliamentary document. Here is a sum of twenty millions gathered in shillings and pence, from the humblest ranks in about a dozen years, or upwards of a million and a half a year, saved out of the superfluity of the laboring people and lower order of shopkeepers! The loftiest theory of political economy—all the free trade flourishes, figurasti exhibitions of unrestrained imports and exports, could not have accumulated a tenth of the money in the time—if, indeed, they had not rather plunged the nation into bankruptcy. The secret, in this instance was practical economy; individual abstinence from those gross excesses which make the fortunes of the dram distiller and the ale brewer; virtue and decency, which are at once the cheapest and the surest way to wealth. The nonsense, that private vices may be public benefits, has been long exploded. But the success of the savings banks offers an irresistible proof that the source of national wealth is the national practice of integrity, manly self-denial, and quiet virtue.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.—Those who are familiar with the recent accounts of the prosperous condition of the descendants of the mutineers of the English ship Bounty, residing at this place, will learn, perhaps with some surprise, that the whole number of them have emigrated from the Island, on account of a deficiency of the necessary means of subsistence. Capt. Wilcox, of the whaling ship Maria Theresa, arrived at this port yesterday, informs, that while at Otaheite the English transport ship Lucian arrived there with all the inhabitants of Pitcairn's Island, with the purpose of fixing them in a settlement at Otaheite, on account of a scarcity of water at the former Island.

It appears however that the idea has formerly occurred, of the population of the island increasing beyond the means of subsistence to be afforded by so small a spot. In Capt. Beecheys' Voyage to the Pacific, recently published, mention is made of a letter addressed to Capt. B. by Mr. John Buffett, the clergyman of the colony, in which he describes the natives as "being all satisfied at present with their little island, which they wished not to leave;" which remark he thinks it right to make in consequence of his having received a letter from Mr. Nott, missionary, saying that a ship was coming to remove the inhabitants of Pitcairn's Island to Otaheite, or some other of the Friendly Islands.—It is to be hoped that the pure and virtuous habits of the colony may not be affected by the removal.—N. Bedford Mercury.

CAPTAIN TROST, of the schooner Randolph, arrived at Philadelphia from Port au Platt, states that he was requested by Captain Thorpe of the brig New York, to report that his crew had mutinied and were put in the fort, and that he wished Government to send after them. The following are the names of the mutineers:—John Nelson David Davidson, Roger Bibbey and Thomas Edwards.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

SOME DOCTRINES ORIGINATE IN THE EXCUSES OF CHRISTIANS.

This is peculiarly true in reference to certain views of divine sovereignty. These views have been so extensively received, that it is deemed heresy to question their propriety, or their claims to scripture origin. But they are views of wrong practical tendency, views, which permit Christians to neglect their duty, to turn away from the plain requirements of God and still remain quiet, in their conscience, through the belief that such is the nature of divine sovereignty, that they are under necessity of being disobedient to God, because a sovereign God does not constrain them to be obedient. These are actually the views and feelings of all those who say, "I know we are in an awful state of stupidity and sin, but we must wait for God to revive us." We may well inquire, whence originate these opinions, so absurd, so directly opposite both to Scripture and common sense; whence originate these perverted views of the sovereignty of God? I answer, these perverted doctrines often have their origin in the excuses of Christians, who have been regarded as eminent for their piety! Such Christians sometimes leave their first love.—Their duty is neglected, their graces decline, their comforts decay, and they feel very unhappy. In this state of mind they try to find relief. And knowing that they are dependent on God's sovereign grace, they endeavor to persuade themselves, that they are so under the control of divine sovereignty, that they cannot awake. Under the idea that they are giving God the glory, that they are exalting Him and humbling themselves, they do great injury, they excuse their delinquency, they virtually cast off the blame from themselves, and cast it upon God. They say, "We must wait God's time to be revived, we are dependent on his sovereign grace." These views being expressed by persons of acknowledged and distinguished piety, are regarded as correct and important; and thus sanctioned, they are considered by many as established doctrinal views. Those who think for themselves, and who deny, or call in question the correctness of these views, are, by some, immediately denounced, for their heresy, and their unprincipled attack on the essential doctrines of the Christian religion! Thus by the traditions of men, the law of God is made of none effect, and the sinful excuses of good men, become essential doctrines of our holy religion. The practical influence of such views is unhappy beyond description. Many professed Christians take this opiate, (sometimes administered by preachers!) and sleep away years, and perhaps their whole lives. They manifest a spiritual indifference and indolence, over which heaven might weep and hell rejoice—and on account of which multitudes of sinners go down to perdition! Oh when shall such obstacles to revivals be removed! When will Christians think for themselves, and try every doctrine by the Word of God! When shall the imperfections of good men cease to be palmed upon the Christian public, as important items in religious experience, as desirable traits in Christian character! Let those who love sound doctrine, exert themselves to put down this pernicious error, especially let all awake to a reform, who have hitherto given it their sanction.

A. R. A.

On the evening of the 3d July, 1827, the Rev. Mr. Hewitt preached a sermon on intemperance, at a village somewhere in the "land of steady habits." One of his hearers was a deacon of the church; who like the rest of the world, had occasionally 'taken a little,' and deemed strong drink an important item in the suitable observance of ourination's anniversary. He had had his jug filled for the occasion that day, tho' he was a worthy and temperate man for the times. After hearing the discourse, he hastened home—seized the jug—and, (his house being situated on its margin) threw it with all its contents into a deep cove—significantly adding, "he would never more poison the morals of society, by countenancing the use of strong drink!"

Here is an example worthy to be observed. He did not stop to say, 'I paid so 'many 'shillings and pence for this jug, and so many more for the poison it contains—and therefore I can't afford to bear the loss!' No: he knew the dignified station in which he was placed: He knew his example would be attended with more or less influence: and though some might ridicule him as an enthusiast, he knew it was wrong to drink it—and consequently wrong to sell it, or give it away. We should be glad if a few deacons hereabout—(we mean within twenty or thirty miles—those whom we have honored with a notice ere now) would follow the example of the one above named. We knew him and the influence his example has had—and tell it, that it may extend yet farther.—Temperance Adv.

IMMEDIATE SUBMISSION.

Having read an account entitled "a case of conversion," in the Pastor's Journal for May last, it occurred to me that a statement of a case somewhat similar, which fell under my own observation, might not be unacceptable to the readers of the 'Home Missionary.'

O. was the child of parents eminently pious, and though moving in the humbler walks of life, eliciting the respect and confidence of the children of God who knew them. Often did they wet their couch with tears, when crying to heaven for mercy on their apparently incorrigible son. No visible tendencies to conversion cheered their efforts. All seemed discouraging.—He loved to go in the way of sinners, and to sit in the seat of the scorner. Whenever subjected for a few reluctant moments, to the conversation of religious persons, he generally showed his dissatisfaction by sitting in sullen silence, and would afterwards give vent to his feelings, by some profane expression.

But though the sinner may profess and feel a sort of impious bravery in resisting the gentle influences of the gospel, his feeble powers quail before the terrors of the Almighty. O. found himself a poor and impotent worm, in conflict with the power of the Eternal, and his soul died within him. His sins came around him like unquiet spectres, and haunted him day and night. He knew he was a guilty rebel against God, but yet he could not make up his mind to bow his will in submission. O, with what a desperate grasp does the sinner cling to his weapons of rebellion! Even when he sees himself in peril most extreme, how loth to yield! it was thus with O. For weeks he remained in deep distress; he came to the meetings of the anxious, he visited his pastor, he sought counsel of any who would pity and pray with him; in short, he did every thing but what he should have done first, viz: give his heart to his Creator.

I saw that he was making no progress in the path of life, but rather was heaping up condemnation, hardening his heart, and becoming less and less likely to turn from his evil ways. One evening I met him at a prayer-meeting, at the close of which he was found in a corner of the room; and on being solemnly addressed, he became affected to tears. I told him it was high time he had ended the course he was pursuing. His tears and groaning were accomplishing nothing; they did not propitiate God in the least, but only showed the intensity of his struggles against the Spirit of God. The only thing that could avail him, was submission to the authority of God; to be saved in his way, and to be governed by his laws. I requested him to withdraw with me to another room. There, amid the silence that reigned around, I pressed his mind with such topics as these,—the supreme right of God to him—his heart—his services; the long protracted rejection of God's mercy, of which he had been guilty—the unparalleled kindnes of God in sparing him, and striving with him by the influences of his Spirit, down to that same hour—the suitableness of the Christian atonement, and the readiness of Christ to wash away his sins. The crisis that was then forming in his soul's history, as heaven or hell probably depended on that evening's decision. I told him he MUST surrender to Christ;—if he refused, he must do it at the hazard of his soul's loss. I then told him the parting moment had come—I must leave him, and go to my home; but before I could leave, he must bow with me, and surrender himself to the Lord Jesus. He did so: we kneeled down together, and there, under the pressure of truth, I trust, he yielded himself a living sacrifice to God—and cast his poor sinking soul into the arms of Christ.

The act was so completely done—he had bowed himself so entirely to the sovereign control of God, that he could not mistake the new situation, in which he found himself. At once, he became conscious of a relation to his Maker and Redeemer, which he had never felt before.

"His tongue broke out in unknown strains,
"And sung surprising grace."

More than ever was I convinced, that whatever be the mode of the Holy Spirit's operations, he often signally blesses the concentration of truth—by which I mean, the bringing together of powerful bible motives, and accumulating their united weight upon the understanding and conscience of the sinner. I verily believe, that one reason why much excellent preaching is ineffectual, is, that the sinner is pressed by it only on one side at a time, while on the other side he contrives to escape its influence. Thus, by taking the several motives of the gospel, in detail, his power of resistance overcomes them all.—But when all are crowded upon him at once, & he is made to feel their present obligation, it often occurs, that his arm waxes feeble—the weapon falls—his heart yields, and he accepts of mercy on God's own terms. J. C.

THE USE OF SCRIPTURE IN PRAYING AND PREACHING.

We have often observed a lamentable looseness and inappropriateness in the use of Scripture terms, even among ministers of the Gospel. Very lately we heard a prayer from a preacher deemed both intelligent and pious, who quoted that passage from Isaiah i. 6, "From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it, but wounds, bruises, and putrifying sores," as being expressive of the moral delinquency of those with whom he was uniting in prayer, as also of himself. Such a use of the verse is clearly contrary to its sense, and therefore injurious to its general character.—The prophet is describing the calamitous visitations by which the people had been crushed down and afflicted on account of their sins; and their "wounds, bruises, and sores" was the effect of their rebellions against God, and not the rebelliors themselves. In another case we heard the following quotation, made too in prayer, and intended to show that the Lord would have been justified in proceeding to the entire destruction of such transgressors. Isa. xxviii. 17, was thus incorporated in the prayer,—"Hadst thou laid judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, we should have been long since swept away." It appeard to us somewhat singular that the line and the plummet, which are instruments used in building up a house, should be also used in pulling down and demolishing it. What need can there be of a line and plummet in carrying on the work of destruction? In looking at the verse which precedes the one already named, it may be observed that the prophet is speaking of the Foundation in Zion; and consequently the line and the plummet must be connected with the completion of the building to be erected upon that Foundation. The inspection of the text and of the context convinced us that this must be the true meaning of the passage, and accordingly the first Commentator that came to hand confirmed the view wich we had taken.—Christian Index.

We understand that the Great Britain, which carried out the Rev. Messrs. Hewit, Hawes, Nettleton, and Green, Dr. Ives, Professor Hovey and Mrs. Shipman, from this port, arrived safely at Liverpool, after a boisterous passage.—The Rev. Messrs. Nettleton and Hawes had preached in the Tabernacle, Rev. Rowland Hill's. Mr. Hewit proceeded to London, to be present at a Temperance meeting, about to be held in that metropolis.—N. Y. Obs.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The pious man, the true Christian, is described by the inspired writers as one who mourns for sin, who is engaged in a spiritual warfare; who is fighting the good fight of faith; who crucifies the flesh with its affections and lusts; who is engaged in subduing and mortifying his sinful propensities; who denies himself, takes up his cross daily, and follows Christ; who, as a pilgrim, a stranger, a traveller, is seeking another and better country; who works out his salvation with fear and trembling. Now is it possible, that a man who is doing all this can be at ease! A soldier in the field of battle at ease! a man running a race at ease! a traveller, toiling up a steep ascent, bearing the cross, at ease! a man crucifying sinful propensities, dear as a right hand or right eye, at ease! a man working out his salvation with fear and trembling, at ease!—a man who hates and mourns for sin, loves God, and feels concerned for his perishing fellow creatures, at ease in a world lying in wickedness, where God is dishonored, where Christ is neglected, where immortal souls are perishing by millions; where there is so much to be done, so much to be suffered, so much to be guarded against, and resisted; where death stands at the door ready every moment to summon him to his great account! My friends, it is impossible.—Payson.

ANDOVER, July 24, 1831.

To the Editor of the New-York Observer:

My Dear Brother—The men who now appear to me to stand most in the way of the promotion of Temperance, are those who profess to be good men, and yet continue to traffic in ardent spirit. I have therefore commenced a series of numbers in order to induce them, by light and love, to withdraw from this anti-christian, immoral, and destructive business. Should it appear consistent for you to publish them in your very able and useful paper, I think you would by so doing, greatly aid us in this great and good work. I wish exceedingly to have the impression, in all suitable ways, made in all places, and upon all persons, that distilled liquors are for men in health, always hurtful; and of course that it is, if they understand their nature and effects, a sin for any persons to use them as articles of luxury or diet, or to traffic in them; and that so long as good men continue for the sake of money, to do this, they are knowingly accessory to the pauperism and crimes, sickness, insanity and death, temporal and eternal, which they occasion; that they exert, by their business, an influence which tends to perpetuate these evils down to the end of the world; and that as accessories they will be held responsible at the divine tribunal.

Wishing you at all times much of the divine guidance and blessing, I am, truly yours, &c.

J. EDWARDS, Cor. Sec. Am. Tem. Soc.

THE USE AND TRAFFIC IN ARDENT SPIRIT. NO. I.

The present is a time of great interest to the American churches. The preaching and ordinances of the gospel are attended by the illuminating and purifying influences of the Holy Spirit, and are the wisdom and power of God to the salvation of many souls. The number is increasing, who believe that they have passed from death unto life, by experiencing that change which the Bible calls being "born of the spirit," and declares to be essential to the kingdom of heaven. Among these are many young men, who are destined, I trust, to exert an extensive and salutary influence on the world. They will engage in various kinds of business; and would, no doubt, some of them, were it a lawful business, engage, as many professed christians in times past have done, in the traffic in spirituous liquors. But a question has arisen and is now agitating many minds, whether the traffic in ardent spirit as an article of luxury or diet is inconsistent with the Christian religion; whether it is a business which tends to honor God, and do good to men; and whether any man who understands the subject, can, consistently with the duty he owes to his Maker, to himself, and to his fellow-men, engage or continue in it.

This question has often of late been asked and with great interest, especially by those young men who feel their obligations to do nothing which tends to the destruction of their fellow-men. And it is a question, no doubt, concerning which, all, who are in any way connected with this traffic, or have any thoughts of becoming so, are bound to obtain all the light which they can, and to judge according to truth and duty. I therefore propose on this subject to make a few remarks.

Is the traffic in distilled liquors as an article of luxury or diet consistent with the revealed will of God! And can the man who, with all the light that Providence has thrown upon this subject, continues in this traffic, give credible evidence, while he does this, of supreme devotion to the Saviour, and to the eternal interests of men?

1. One thing is certain. The scriptures do not require a man to engage in this traffic.—There is no command express, or implied, which makes it his duty. And no one will disobey the divine will by not doing it. Of course it is safe for a man to refrain from it. And it is his duty to refrain from it unless the traffic tends to promote his own highest good, and that of his fellow men.

2. It is not certain that this traffic is right, from the fact that good men have, in times past, been engaged in it. Good men have in times that are past, had a multiplicity of wives. And they could in the days of their ignorance and darkness, and they did give evidence, that they were good men. But can any man who takes this course give credible evidence that he is a good man now? Suppose, for the sake of argument, if you please, that there was a time when men could be instrumental in the stealing of the black man, and, for the sake of gain merely, in the selling of him and his posterity into perpetual bondage, and yet could be good men, and give evidence of being good men; can any man with all the light that Providence has furnished on this subject, engage in this business, or continue in it, and yet, while he does this, give credible evidence that he is a good man now!—No good man who rightly understands the subject will pretend it. Of course, it is not certain, that the traffic in ardent spirits is right from the fact that good men have in times past been engaged in it; or that those who continue in it with the knowledge of its nature and consequences, can while they do this, give credible evidence of being good men.

J. EDWARDS, Gen. Agent of A. T. S.

From the Connecticut Observer.

'ABOUT ALL HAS BEEN SAID.'

Mr. Hooker,—Meeting the other day a once active promoter of the Temperance cause, I asked him of its state in the place where he resided. He replied, 'nothing new.' Do you hold, said I, frequent meetings? 'Why, no,' he replied, 'we have not had a meeting now for some time. We have thought that about all has been said on the subject that could be said.' And here he seemed to [illegible] It is to be feared that many Temperance Societies are halting on the same fatal and deadly spot. But is this right! Is nothing to be said on the Temperance cause unless it be new! Are the old and appalling truths concerning the ravages of intemperance no more to be repeated in the ears of our yet blinded and suffering community! Is not this thirst in the friends of Temperance for something new & their weariness of old truths alarming! Do Temperance societies come together like the Athenians to hear or tell some new thing! What if a minister of the gospel should hold no more religious meetings because he had no new thing to tell; or the people should no longer go to hear him, because about all had been said on the subject that could be said! The object of a Temperance meeting and a Temperance address is not to tell any new truths, is not even to entertain and instruct the standard friends of the cause, but to tell the original tale over and over, in the ears of all who may come to hear, That the moderate use of distilled liquors is the cause of that immoderate use which is destroying thousands on thousands: and that the use and sale of them, therefore, should at once be abandoned by every humane man, by every patriot and every christian;—and every member of the society should feel it his duty to attend and hear it, that he himself may be strengthened and invigorated, and may shew to others his sense of the importance of the cause. Truths old to some, may be new to others. And if ten meetings are held without any visible results, the eleventh may find some with an hearing ear and an understanding heart. Besides, a new generation are continually coming up who must at once be enlightened on the subject; and with them the principal efforts should now be made. And I apprehend that if the defenders of Temperance would adhere closely to the original, simple and appalling tale which, under Kitteredge and others, roused the community from their slumbers, they would still see great results. Leviathan is not to be tamed by a well rounded period, a biblical criticism, or a nice point of casuistry. And if a Temperance orator avoids the plain statistics of Intemperance because they are familiar to the community, he leaves at home his sword and his spear. Let those who feel that all has been said which can be said on the subject, ask if it has been said in the ears of every man woman and child; and said till all are convinced & converted. Until this is done no temperance man is at liberty to rest. Who ever heard of a vender ceasing to recommend his liquors because all had been said on the subject that could be said! O shall the preservers of men's lives be outdone in zeal by the destroyers!

If you think those suggestions are needed at the present time, I will thank you to give them a place in your paper. Yours, &c. J. M.

A few weeks since, I was riding through the village of W———, Mass., and being very faint and weary, I concluded to stop at the tavern and take some refreshment, which I did. After I had finished my repast, I took a walk in order to view the village:—I had not proceeded far, before my attention was arrested by the appearance of an "ANIMAL," by some, called a Human Being,"—lying drunk by the side of the road. I stopped for a moment to gaze on this distressed victim of intemperance, when I heard him repeat,—In a tone which I could distinctly understand,—these words: "I wish Dr. Beecher was dead.—Jour of Human.

REVIVALS.

From the Religious Intelligencer.

IMPROPER DIRECTIONS IN REVIVALS.

MR. EDITOR—As one cause of the return of awakened persons to indifference, permit me to suggest, that Christians have given improper directions. These may be wrong, though given by zealous and successful friends of revivals.

The sinner is often urged to repent, to give his heart to God, &c. before some future time; e. g. before a Sabbath is over, before sleeping, before the close of a meeting. God in the Bible commands, to repent now, the very zealous servant of God says, repent before the revival is over, before retiring to rest, before—no matter when,—some future moment, and congratulates himself, that he has exhibited faithfully the commands of his King.

I think the two requirements differ widely.—How, I ask, does the Scripture direction affect the mind, when properly presented and enforced! It fastens on it a sonse of present duty, and the sinner and his Maker are at issue. Thus he repents, or is conscious of direct and inexcusable disobedience. He hears the voice of the Spirit whispering now, his conscience echoing the call, and thus every passing moment, urging its performance as something now required.—His life is, as it were, an eternal now of obligation, the claims and command of God, moving with his every step, and like the pillar of cloud and of fire, indicating the only safe way.

Look at the other directions. The pious friend ushers in a Sabbath morning, entreating the sinner to repent before the holy day is past. He resolves to do as he is urged, who could expect more? Like the commander of a fort, who engages, conditionally, to surrender within three hours, or three days, he is relieved from fear at the present. He has done all that was demanded, and, for the interval, is safe. He has resolved to submit before the day is over, and feels no trouble, until the favorable opportunity was well nigh spent. The Christian too waits, his mouth stopped by reflection, "my friend has has determined to do what I urged;" or else he expresses the fear that he may not be as good as his word? Previously he resolved to repent before dying; now before sleeping. Neither purpose engages him to repent now, which is what God requires.

Towards the close of the specified period, the sinner still impenitent, looks at the narrow space left; he has done nothing all day; he is distressed; but in stead of repenting, he begins to reproach himself with breaking the most solemn promises; and in despair repeats, "the harvest is past &c." and because the opportunity has passed, * he breaks away with a struggle from all religious influence.

If the direction is, "submit to God before you close your eyes in sleep," the influence is still worse. Then the work is left undone, till the proper time of retiring arrives. The sinner anxious, so as to be unfit to make a deliberate choice, in order to effect his repentance before he sleeps, lengthens out the time by sitting up one hour, then another, and so on, till he sinks into sleep by exhaustion, or another dawn rises upon him nervous, distressed and impenitent.—He purposed to do what his pious friend urged,—not what the Bible requires.

The directions here reprobated, are a sort of indulgences, and ever convey the impression, that there is a given period of future time, up to the close of which, it is safe to delay repentance. Thus they dispense with the command of God, "Repent now." Substituting for it "Repent before the termination of a revival, the close of a meeting, retiring to rest, &c. and so making it of none effect. D.

The labor of the righteous tendeth to life.

From the Religious Intelligencer.

In looking over our exchange papers for the last week, we can enumerate more than two hundred places where they are blessed with a revival of religion. Some of them we have already noticed, but most of them are of recent origin, and they are becomg so general, that we only notice those that appear to be most interesting, or rather, those whose progress and effects are described with the most interest.—There appears to be nothing wanting, but faith enough to try the experiment, as Naaman did, to have a revival. Go call your christian friends and a few faithful ministers together and hold a four days' meeting, and you may have a revival. This is downright Armenian hetrodoxy, says the formalist of the old school; what magic or efficacy is there in a four days' meeting? It is nothing but preaching and praying, and that we have every week. "Are not Abana and Pharpar rivers of Damascus, better than all the rivers of Israel? may I not wash in them and be clean? Try it—try It. "If the prophet had bid the do some great thing wouldst thou not have done it?"

There has been much speculation in trying to account, physically, for the wonderful effects that have almost invariably followed these revival meetings. Why every eight or ten sermons preached on these occasions, are made instrumental in the conversion of twice as many sinners, when the same sermon delivered in the ordinary way have no apparent affect, we cannot tell. We can tell who did it. We are not so heterodox as to believe that there is any more efficacy in a four days' meeting, to cleanse from sin, than there was in the waters of Jordan to cure the leprosy. But the same power that blessed the simple bathing in the river, to the cleansing of the Assyrian, can sanctify by his truth the souls of those who have faith enough to comply with his requirements.

'According to your faith be it unto you.'—This, we apprehend, is one of the mysteries in those protracted meetings, if there is any mystery in them. There is a combination of causes that awakens, in those that attend them, more faith than they have ever exercised before. By faith, we mean confidence, expectation, a belief that God is able and willing to save them, and that now is the accepted time.

We have seen the same effects produced by other similar means. When the brethren in this city were in the habit of visiting the churches several years ago, revivals were often commenced by only giving notice from the pulpit that some four or six weeks hence, the lay brethren from New-Haven will visit this church—revivals have followed their visits in other places, let us be prepared for them. This was sufficient to lead to inquiry, to prayer and expectation, and often to the commencement of a revival, before the time appointed had arrived. We have seen the same results attending the conference of the churches. And we have no doubt were the pastor of almost any church, however cold and stupid they may be, to announce to his people that Mr. Nettleton or Mr. Finney or any other man whose labors have been so eminently blessed, would come and preach to them next month, it would awaken in them at once, a spirit of prayer and faith, that would result in a revival. Whether this is according to the creed of the new or old school, or taught in the confession of Faith, we know not; we believe the fact, for our eyes have seen it.

A Correspondent at Durham, Green co. N. Y. says: there is a general work of grace in this region. Windham, East and West Durham, Groonville, and Rensselaerville, are all visited with a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Extract of a letter dated North Stamford, July 26th, 1831.

We believe the Spirit of God is still in this place. Between 40 and 50 are hoping, and instances of conviction are yet taking place.—Christians are praying that every poor sinner here may be brought in. Meetings are frequent, solemn and crowded.

I consider a religious paper at the present day, eminently calculated to keep alive the Christian graces. And I have for months been urging my dear Christian brethren to take the Intelligencer. It is a lamentable fact I believe, that multitudes of Christians are ignorant, to a great degree, to what God is doing in this wrethed world. Hence it is, that when such persons pray, their prayers run in the same channel, as in the days of general stupidity.—Their minds being unoccupied with those daily rich displays of divine power in bowing stubborn sinners, it is not to be expected that from a full heart and an agonizing spirit, they will bow at the footstool.—New-Haven Intelligencer.

INSTALLATION AND FOUR DAYS MEETING IN WATERFORD N. Y.

On Tuesday the 14th inst. Rev. Reuben Smith was installed by the Presbytery of Troy, over the Presbyterian church in Waterford Mr. Weed gave the charge to the pastor, and Mr. McCullough gave the charge to the people.

The Session of the church had determined to have a meeting of two or three days continuance, to follow the installation. Consequently, the meeting commenced that evening, by a sermon from Mr. Tucker. Devotional exercises were attended at 6o'clock in the morning, and before each sermon. On Wednesday Mr. Johnson preached in the morning, Mr. Weed in the afternoon, and Mr. McCullough in the evening. At the close of the afternoon sermon, the anxious were requested to remain for conversation and prayer. Several stopped.

Thursday, Mr. Tucker preached in the morning, Mr. Kinney in the afternoon, and Mr. Smith in the evening. As before, an inquiry meeting was held after the second sermon, at which the number of anxious were considerably increased.

On Friday, Mr. Kirk from Albany preached three sermons. His subject in the morning was "What think ye of Christ! In the afternoon "Prepare to meet thy God;" and in the evening, "Prodigal Son." The number of inquirers this last day of the meeting, was still more increased, and a few individuals manifested a hope in Christ.

Visiting from house to house after the meeting closed, the Pastor found a general solemnity resting on the minds of the people, and many anxious to know the way of salvation.

Mr. Finney is expected to preach there tomorrow evening. He is now in this region, and will perhaps remain here a few days.

The following letter was recently taken from the Post Office by a merchant in our village.—It is a striking proof of the power of conscience and an irrefutable argument in favor of revivals of pure and undefiled religion.—Ston. Phœnix.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

IT is designed to organize a class in the Rochester Institute for commencing the study of the Hebrew. Persons not connected with the Institute may have the privilege of joining this class. For further information, apply to the Principal.

The Hebrew can be learned independently of other ancient languages. It requires less time than Latin or Creek; and is important for every man and woman who reads the Bible for himself. A single hour's study in a day, persevered in for a few months will enable the learner to read Hebrew with accuracy and infinitely more profit than any modern language. The time is probably not far distant when a knowledge of the original languages of the scriptures will be considered an essential part of a Christian education. 33tf

"NEW MEASURES."

Mr. Editor—Your Western Correspondent "F" in attempting to show the errors which are committed in that region, in fighting the battles of the Lord, has introduced "New Measures" as the "weapons" of their own making, upon which even Ministers of the cross seem to rely for success, in the contest in which they are engaged with the powers of darkness. "And so frequently (says he) of late are mere human schemes and contrivances substituted for Divine institutions, it is difficult to say whether carnal or spiritual weapons are most relied on for success in the cause of our dear Redeemer. This undue reliance of some on plans of mere human devising is not because they really suppose themselves able to steady the ark of the Lord with their own hands, but because they have gradually lost sight of the measures by which were produced those unparalleled revivals which followed the preaching of the Apostles."—By way of specification "Camp Meetings" as connected with the Presbyterian Church, are introduced as among the emphatically new and objectionable measures,—the general effects of which in their operation are disastrous to the vital piety of the church. Now if your correspondent has really conceived the idea, that camp meetings and other new measures, in their operation, are calculated to supercede a reliance upon the word and the Spirit of God, the one exhibited by the living preacher, and the influence of the other obtained through the efficacy of the prayer of faith, I marvel not that he should be jealous of "New Measures;" and if in his forthcoming number he should satisfactorily prove that the measures by which were produced those unparalleled revivals that followed the preaching of the Apostles, have been dispensed with, and human contrivances substituted; if truth be the instrument which the Spirit of God employs through the agency of earthen vessels in the conversion of sinners, has been lost sight of through an undue attachment to the trappings and externals of a camp ground, I shall be as ready as any one to denounce them, as in their effects disastrous to the vital piety of the church. And so in respect to any other new measures to which he may call our attention.

But is there any supercedure of "divine institutions," or any want of sacred regard for them, if even "new measures" are devised and instituted to promote their operation, calculated to bring the minds of men in contact with the truth under circumstances highly favorable to its impression on the heart, by reason of the continuity of effort, and the abstraction of the mind, from the ordinary subjects of its engrossment! I think not. The Scriptures have not within my knowledge prescribed the outward circumstances which shall invariably accompany the divine institutions, but have as I conceive wisely adapted the institutions themselves to circumstances. It is enough; therefore, if in any given circumstances on a lawful occasion, divine institutions are faithfully adhered to. There is I admit a proneness in our species to attach undue consequence to mere circumstances connected with religious services. The history of the church abundantly proves that men have been more ready to engage in formal services than religious duties,—have been delighted with the pomp and glitter of ostentatious ceremony, while their hearts have loathed the simplicity of Gospel truth, and have proudly spurned the humiliating terms of submission to the precepts of the meek and lowly Jesus, as their Lord and Judge. But has this objection an exclusive application to the friends of 'New Mesrs.' I think not. Where would you instinctively turn your eyes to look for the pageantry of empty show, and heartless ceremony! Where! but in those churches, which sleep so securely upon the pillow of the ancient usages of their forefathers, the frame work of orthodoxy, that nothing can disturb their dreamy slumbers, but the goblin shapes in which their own fervid imaginations have drawn this modern spectre! Churches which are so much opposed to "New Measures" that they even oppose modern revivals, "the most glorious things of the age," because they (i. e. new measures) have been successfully employed in promoting them. To preserve consistency, they would reject all the benevolent institutions of the eventful and enterprising age in which we live, for they too are "emphatically new measures," and if you please of "human devising." But does any one object to them, because they are not consecrated by venerable antiquity! Are they less efficient in the propagation of truth because they are new! Must they be called "carnal weapons," because the Bible does not expressly prescribe the forms and circumstances, not to say the places of their existence and operation! Is it not enough for the most fastidious objector, that the spirit of the gospel is embodied in their constitution, and that they thus afford an efficient subserviency in offering the terms of pardon and peace through the cross of Christ to every creature! Do those who place their own construction on their commission, refuse "to call the people together" to facilitate the execution of the divine command, to preach the gospel to every creature! No!—If a multitude were gathered, by the sea, by the way, in the market place, or even on a mount; would they refuse to teach them! Oh no.—Would they, if the people should assemble together and erect booths for their accommodation during seven days, as in the reign of Nehemiah, refuse to follow the example of Ezra and others in expounding to them the law! Certainly not. Suppose for booths they should substitute tents, and the "dense unbroken shade of the grove" for the exposed and uncomfortable street of the city, would they then refuse to proclaim the messages of salvation to the waiting thousands who might crowd the area of a camp ground! Would they "go forth without the camp" under these or similar circumstances! If they did, the spirit of their commission would at least be violated. Would an improvement of these circumstances imply the least disregard to, or want of reliance upon, Divine institutions!

Then why confound measures with weapons as your correspondent appears to do! As well might a field of battle be called a "weapon," because it happens to be the theatre upon which they are wielded, as that measures devised, to bring the truth to bear upon the minds of men so as once to enlighten, and awaken their consciences in respect to their religious obligations, should be so called and said to be relied on as the weapons of christian warfare. It is merely as a measure adapted to facilitate the propagation and ensure the triumph of the truth, that I regard a camp meeting, while my hopes of success are predicated on the efficacy of the "weapons" of our warfare which "are not carnal, but mighty through GOD, &c."

I have been led to make these remarks Mr. Editor, in defence of camp meetings, because I conceived the unseasonable remarks of your correspondent might deter many from visiting the particular camp meeting to which there is some allusion in your notice of his communication; where facts would have a more favorable influence upon their judgment than all the speculative arguments that could be adduced in six months. Where they will be able to see the difference between those meetings in themselves considered as a measure to promote religion, and the objectionable manner in which, in times gone by, they may have been conducted. The management of these meetings is always, I suppose according to the taste of the superintenders of them, and the errors into which men may fall in one case are not fairly applicable in advance to another. If your correspondent is not too far west of the Appomattox to receive this in time to comply with my request, it is that he will favor us with his company at Union Grove, 3 1-2 miles from Lynchburgh on the 10th day of August, next when he may be able from his own observation to conclude whether it will be worth the while for him to attempt to arrest the tide of popularity which sets so strongly in favor of

CAMP MEETINGS.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

IS MAN A FREE MORAL AGENT.

By a free moral agent, I mean a being, who possesses those powers, by which he is qualified for any given right choice, or its opposite.—That is to say, when he has real evidence, and has power to understand, and does understand, that a given course of action is best; is fitted to secure his highest happiness, and the highest happiness of the universe; and that the opposite course is wrong; is fitted to defeat his highest happiness and the highest happiness of the universe, he is capable of choosing either. That man possesses such powers, at all times and in all circumstances, so long as he retains the faculty of reason, and is what he is, can hardly be doubted by any one, who reflects upon his acts. Indeed, so evident is this truth, that it would seldom need stating, were it not for the fact that in philosophical and theological writings, things have often been said, which contradict it. As proof that man possesses powers, I appeal,

1*st. To the consciousness of every man.*

Each and every individual is conscious, that when he chooses any given object, he was at that time capable of choosing its opposite in its stead. When, for example, an opportunity of riding or walking presents, who is not conscious that he is capable of choosing either!

2*d. I appeal to facts.*

I said that a free moral agent was one, who when he has evidence, and having power to understand, and does understand that a given course of action is best, and that the opposite is not best, is capable of choosing either. Now it will readily be admitted by all, that we have sometimes made a choice of that course, which we have perceived or understood to be best.—But how true is it also, that we, the same individuals, have repeatedly made choice of the opposite course! That is, when we have clearly understood from legitimate evidence, that a given course was not best, we have at this very time chosen it. I do not mean by this that we have ever chosen contrary to our highest excitement of feeling or estimate. Nor do I mean to affirm or deny that we have power to choose contrary to this highest estimate! The possession of this power is not at all necessary to constitute wrong action. I mean simply that we have chosen contrary to what our reason and judgment have at the time decided to be best.—The power of doing this is all that is necessary to constitute wrong action. The fact of such a wrong choice is witnessed by us almost daily. How often have we seen the man who has become inordinately attached to strong drink, fully convinced, so far as evidence is concerned, that his course of conduct in this particular, was ruinous to himself and family, and still refuse to abandon it? Yea so thoroughly is he persuaded in his own mind of its fatal result, that he sits down and weeps in view of his ruined prospects, and declares that he knows it to be wrong and still continues the same course. Here then facts tell us, that men do make choice of a course of conduct which their own minds decide, in view of real evidence, not to be best. If then the same individuals have at different times chosen these two opposite courses, viz. that which they have at the time of choice, perceived to be right, and that which they have perceived to be wrong, nothing is more evident than that they possess the power of so doing. For there can be no greater absurdity than to suppose that the faculties of a moral being change, whenever he changes his choice in regard to these two courses.

Besides, every sinful or holy act, is a practical exhibition of this power. For nothing can be estimated to be sin, but a voluntary transgression of a known rule of right. For every instance of disobedience to the law of God, it is known that this law is holy, just and good—that is, that obedience is the best thing. The will of such a being as God, brings with it the highest evidence that obedience to it is fitted to secure the highest happiness. The transgressor is in every instance of transgression, regarded by himself and others, as knowing the law, and as capable of obeying it. This knowledge of what is right and wrong, and the power of choosing either course, together with the actual choice of the wrong course, is absolutely necessary to constitute an act morally wrong. The proof therefore that all rational men are endowed with such powers as I have described, is abundantly exhibited in facts, and in the consciences of men.

From this view of man as a free moral agent, I remark,

First. That however much the evidence that any course is right, is increased, so long as man remains a moral agent, he has the power to take an opposite course. Indeed, if what I have said be true, let the moral power of this evidence or truth, that is, its tendency to move the mind, be ever so great, the man has the power of acting contrary to it.

Second. We see from this view that sin may be an incidental evil. That is a necessary consequence, so far as God's power is concerned, upon the very existence of man as a moral agent. For sin is a moral act. And nothing but moral power is adapted to prevent it. But this, man as an agent has power to counteract. It may be, therefore, that every instance of sin, has been the result of the exercise of this power in man, counteracting all that moral power, which God saw could possibly, or consistently in the nature of things, he brought to bear upon his mind to secure right action. SABBATH SCHOOLS.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

A NEW HEART

BETTER THAN A THOUSAND DOLLARS.

I was riding in a stage-coach, a few days since, with a gentleman from Ohio, who had formerly been a teacher in the Sabbath school of A——. As we were passing a two story house, on the edge of A——, he pointed to it, and turning to me, said, "A little girl who used to live there, was in my class at the Sabbath school, and became pious while I was her teacher." He then told me the following circumstances connected with her conversion.—"I was talking to my class one day," said he, pretty earnestly, and urging upon them the duty of giving up their hearts to God, when I suddenly turned to this girl, and said to her; Mary, if I had a thousand dollars in one hand, and a new heart in the other, and should offer you your choice, which would you take? I then explained to her what was meant by a new heart—that if her heart was changed she would love God and hate sin: she would be prepared to go to heaven. Now, Mary, which would you choose! the thousand dollars or the new heart! She looked down thoughtfully for a moment, and then, looking up in my face with a smile, said, I should choose the new heart. And why, said I, would you choose the new heart! Because, said Mary, the thousand dollars would only do me good in this life, but the new heart would make me happier in this life, and in the life to come also. Well, said I, go home and think of it. You may have a new heart, for God has promised to give it to all who ask it of him, in sincerity and truth. Now, if any person had promised you a thousand dollars if you would ask for it, you would be very willing to make the request; why then, if you would rather have a new heart than this sum of money, do you not go to God and ask him to give it to you! She looked thoughtful and promised me that she would think of it. She accordingly went home and did think of the subject deeply and seriously. One hundred dollars, thought she, is a great deal of money; two hundred is more still, and a thousand is a very great sum. I should like to have much money—I could buy a great many things. But I told my teacher I would rather have a new heart, than this great sum of money, and so I should, for I shall die soon, and then the thousand will do me no good, but the new heart will make me happy forever. Her mind was occupied with such thoughts as these for several days, till at length, she did choose the new heart. She then sent for me to come and see her, and I found her rejoicing in her happy choice."

You, my dear little readers, all need a new heart as much as this little girl. You need to love God, that he may love and bless you. Why then will you not make the same choice that this little girl did! Why will you not seek a new heart, with as strong a desire to obtain it, as she did? I do not know, whether Mary is now alive or not, but I do know that, if she did really obtain a new heart, she has never repented of her choice. If she is still alive, she has not been sorry that she did not choose the thousand dollars, for the love of God has been better to her than all the world. If she is dead, she is not sorry that she chose the new heart, for it has carried her to heaven and made her happy there in the presence of God and all the angels. Let me then say to every little girl and boy who reads this short story, if you wish to be truly rich, choose a new heart; for it is better than a thousand dollars. It will make you rich and happy here, and hereafter.

ANECDOTE.

A Sabbath school teacher, observed a little girl in her class, in a new dress, of which she appeared very vain, looking at herself, and assuming many little airs, quite unbecoming the time and place. Her appearance drew the attention of most of the class from their lessons. The teacher raised her desires to Him, who has all hearts in his hand, in behalf of these little girls. She affectionately inquired, if any of them could remember any passage in the Bible, that encouraged pride in any way. Several of them answered they did not. She then asked if they remembered any that condemned pride. Several texts were repeated. The teacher repeated several, commending humility. The little girl in the new dress listened attentivly, and was evidently applying them to herself, for she colored deeply, and when she was asked if she could repeat any thing against pride—she said she could repeat a hymn against pride in dress, and repeated one of Dr. Watts's divine and moral songs beginning—

"Why should our garments, made to hide."

—Before she got through, her feelings nearly chocked her utterance. That little girl went from the school with very different feelings and demeanor from those with which she entered it. She is now a worthy member of the church of Christ, and values, it is hoped, above all ornaments, that of a meek and quiet spirit.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL GIRL

A few days since, a gentleman visiter, related the the following story as within his own knowledge. A little girl went home from the school one day, and thus addressed her mother: "Ma, I don't believe that my Sabbath school teacher prays for me! "Why, my dear," said her mother, "what makes you think so! "Because, Ma, she only asks me the questions just as they are in the book, and never says any thing to me about Christ!" Here the gentleman urged on the teachers the importance of prayer, and the necessity of a deep conviction of mind of the worth of the souls of the children they instruct, and the duty of applying truth to the heart and conscience of the young. These little ones, said he, are shrewd observers of their teachers; and if they are affectionately spoken to, and taught in a way which will make them feel that their teacher loves them, and is seeking the salvation of their souls, they will not fail to be favorably impressed. How important, then, that the Sabbath school teacher should lift up his heart to God, to prepare him for the duty of spiritual instruction, and that the Holy Spirit would communicate grace to the young heart, while truth is pressed most affectionately on the tender conscience!

WHAT CAN I DO!

About four years since, a friend of Sabbath schools (in deed, not in word merely) called at a house in one of our large cities, where the father attended a Universalist meeting, and the mother had no decided religious sentiments whatever. What children did he find there! None. Yes—there was a little boy five years old, but he had never been at meeting, had never heard a prayer. But mark the result. He persuaded his parents to send this little boy to the Sabbath school.—And this little boy was Nathan W. Dickerman. Who can estimate the worth of his soul! Who can set a value upon the influence which this example of early piety has exerted, and will exert upon parents, teachers, and children, throughout our country!—Now, is there not some little boy, whom you could visit, and bring out to the Sabbath school! Go—and he may become a Dickerman, a Mills, a Martyn, or a Payson. Some little girl. Do not fail to go—for she may be a Newell, a Graham, or a Judson.—N. H. Observer.

JUVENILE PIETY.

A memoir of John Allen, who died in the city of N. Y. April 23, 1831, aged three years and eleven months.

The following account of an interesting child has been sent us for insertion in the N. Y. Observer. The clergyman on whose ministrations the little boy usually attended, we understand, is well satisfied with the evidences of his piety.

John Allen, the subject of the following memoir, died at the age of 3 years and 11 months. He entered Sunday school No. 7 during the last fall, and was placed in the infant class of that school.

His general behaviour and disposition were such as early ingratiated him in the good will and affections of his teacher. He was seldom absent from school, and so strong was his attachment to it, that he would count the days through the week, to ascertain how soon the Sabbath would come, and when obliged to be absent would express much regret.

He possessed a very retentive memory, and after returning from school would repeat to his mother what he had heard during the day. His remembrance of lessons on sin was very peculiar. His teacher on one occasion laid before the class the subject of the placing our first parents in the garden, and their consequent expulsion therefrom for disobedience to the commands of God, and explained the nature and effects of sin, and the desolation and distress it had occasioned. On going home in the afternoon John repeated to his mother nearly the whole lesson, word for word. He was particular in noticing as the consequences of sin, the flood that destroyed the wicked inhabitants of the old world; the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the children of Israel while sojourning in the wilderness; and after being told that the sins of a fallen world caused the agony of Gethsemane and the blood and dying groans of calvary, he evinced at all times a decided hatred towards every thing sinful.

One day after he had been doing something wrong his mother said to him, 'John you have got a wicked heart;' he said, 'no I have not;' she replied, 'why yes you have,' but could not convince him of it. His kindness and affection for his parents were so strong, and their love to him so great, that he could not believe he possessed a wicked heart. Shortly afterwards he went in to see a neighbor who was much attached to him, and she convinced him that he and all mankind possessed hearts deceitfully wicked until they applied to Christ and had them changed by him. A few Sabbaths after this, the minister (Rev. Mr. Ludlow,) preached a sermon from the text, "Make unto yourselves a new heart." The teacher hearing the subject explained so simply, thought it his duty to lay it before his class. He did so in as simple a manner as possible. After church John, on arriving at home went through two rooms, in one of which his mother was sitting, and passed into a third which was dark. His mother observing him go in and shut the door after him, thought it probable he was gone in for mischief, and went to see what he was about. On looking in she saw him kneeling by a chair engaged in prayer. She listened to ascertain what he was praying about, and found that his prayer was, "Lord please give John a new heart. Lord please give John a new heart." His mother retired closing the door, and he remained in the room for some time afterwards.

Some time after this his mother was busy ironing in the kitchen, and he was lying on the floor with his hands folded on his breast, and his eyes raised towards heaven, apparently engaged in meditation. Presently he said, 'Ma, will ladies go to heaven!' She said, 'Yes if they have new hearts and love God.' 'And little boys too, ma!' said he. She replied, 'Yes, if they have new hearts and love God.' He said, 'Well, ma, John has got a new heart. His mother said, 'I am afraid not, John, what makes you think you have!' 'Why, ma,' replied the little fellow, 'I said, please Lord give John a new heart, and you know when you say please, he will give it you.'

On the evening of Saturday, the 21st of April last, John rtired to rest, as well as usual, with the exception of a sore throat. The next morning he was quite unwell, but was anxious to go to his Sabbath school, and on being told that he could not go, expressed much disappointment. He employed his time during the day in conversing with his father about his Sunday school, the lessons and his teacher, and in repeating the hymns he had learned there.

His parents on sending for the physician, found that he had the scarlet fever, and in the afternoon he grew so much worse that it was very apparent he could no recover. About 3 o'clock on Monday morning his mother heard him repeat several times the following short, but pathetic prayer: 'Lord receive my soul.' He then fell asleep, and a little while afterwards awoke and commenced the prayer, 'Our Father who art in Heaven,' but his throat had become so much swollen during his sleep that he could proceed no farther. He lingered till about 5 o'clock, when he expired. His mother could by holding her ear to his mouth, hear him lisp, 'Heaven, heaven.'

Thus did this young saint, while yet on earth, have the foretaste of the joys of that abode, where he is now doubtless reaping the full fruition of his youthful expectations.

MARY'S THOUGHTS OF DEATH.

The children well remember that I told them, a few weeks ago, about Mary's thoughts of God. I am now going to tell you a few things about her thoughts of dying.

Little Mary always loved to sit down by the side of her grandmother and hear her talk

One day, as she was sitting in her usual place, her grandma was talking, if I remember right, about a little child, who had just died. Mary asked her what they were going to do with the child now she was dead.

She told her they were going to lay it into the grave, and cover it up with the ground.

And then she began to tell her that every body, in all the world, must die like that little girl, and be buried in the ground; and that she too must die before a great while, and perhaps she would die while she was yet a little girl.

Mary looked very solemn when her grandmother told her this. After sitting a long time, and thinking about it, she began to weep. Her grandmother, who loved her very much, fearing she was sick, immediately said, "Mary, my dear, what is the matter?"

"I don't want to die and be buried up in the ground," said the little girl, and she sobbed as if her heart would break.

Her grandma told her, that it was only her body which would die; but that her soul, or that thing in her, which thinks, and loves, and hates, &c. would live forever; and if she would only become good and love God, she would go to heaven, where Christ and angels live. She then told her a great many things, which are written in the Bible, about heaven. She told her that those who live in heaven are clothed in white garments, with crowns of gold on their heads and golden harps in their hands; that they have nothing to do but to sing forever the sweet songs of a Saviour's love; that God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and that there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain—that there is no night there, for the Savior's face shines so brightly that there is no need of a sun or moon, or a candle, to make it light, and a great many other beautiful things she told her, which the Bible says about heaven. Now Mary, my dear, said her grandma, if you will only become good, and love God, you can go to that happy place when you die, and become a little angel.

By the time her grandmother had done saying these things about heaven, Mary had ceased to weep, and all her tears were dried up.—She seemed pleased with what she had heard, and forgot all about being buried up in the ground. She sat a great while, looking very thoughtful, and said nothing. Her grandmother saw that she was thinking, so she was careful not to say any thing to disturb her.

At length, Mary looked up and said, "Grandma, I want to die now."

"Why Mary, my dear, do you want to die now!"

"So that I may go to heaven that happy place, where Christ and angels live."

'But, said her grandmother, you must be willing to live, and do all the good you can, till God thinks it is best for you to die. If God should let you live to grow up, and you should become a Christian, you will have time to get a great many other people to become good and go to heaven with you. And that would make heaven a happier place still. She told her too, that she must begin while she was young, to do good, and try to get her little brother, and her little playmates, to become good and go to heaven with her—"for you can do a great deal of good," said she, "while you are young if you try."

Little Mary then seemed to be willing to live as long as God wanted her to: and looked as though she hoped she should always love God, become a Christian, do a great deal of good in the world.

I hope all the little children who read this story, will think much about dying; about what a pleasant, happy place heaven is; and about loving God, and trying to do good while they live.

From the N. Y. Observer.

Messrs. Editors—Should any of your readers be alarmed by the farcical attack, in the Courier and Enquirer of Wednesday morning, upon the benevolent efforts of the American S. S. Union, I have thought it might help them to detect the dishonesty of the pretended fears of those editors, to know in what shape others of the same school, in the west, profess to entertain the same fears. I have just received a letter from a highly respected friend in Illinois, who in alluding to the opposition to the glorious Sabbath school cause experienced in that state, sets this matter in a truly ridiculous light. The following is an extract;

"A leading man in a considerable settlement in this state, who holds a public office, and "has right to know," is perfectly satisfied that this Sunday school business is designed to destroy the liberties of our country. The evidence is two-fold. 1st. Its practical tendency. The intended insurrection lately detected in New-Orleans, with the 13,000 stands of arms discovered under the ground, is attributed to Sunday school instruction, and is no doubt the work of missionaries; and the punishment announced by the Mayor of the city, viz. $500 fine for the first offence against the law prohibiting instruction to the blacks, and for the second offence, death, proves how dangerous and bad Sabbath schools are. The second source of evidence is the very Sunday school books themselves. They tell us much about a king, and though they refer to Jesus Christ, the "King of saints," yet they familiarize the minds of children with the idea of a king, and no doubt, when these Sunday school men shall have sufficiently matured their measures, they will force the yoke of bondage upon us."

Surely, Messrs. Editors' any inteligent man, of common sense; who can amuse himself by spreading such alarms and fears as these among the ignorant and vicious, is prepared to "swallow a camel," and "draw iniquity, as it were, with a cart rope."

Yours, respectfully, P. C. S.

INTERESTING FROM RUSSIA.

Mr. Editor,—I send you for publication in the Recorder, some extracts from letters lately received in this city from St. Petersburgh. The first, bearing date, May 15th, is from William Ropes, Esq., merchant, to his brother in this city. The account is from Rev. Richard Knill, an English clergyman in St. Petersburgh, to Rev. Samuel Green, of Boston. It is dated May 23. Mr. Swan, referred to in the letters, is a missionary of the London Missionary Society at Selinginsk in Siberia, and author of the Memoirs of Mrs. Patterson, and of Letters on Missions, both of which have been republished in this city by Perkins and Marvin. Mr. Ropes thus writes:

"The civil war, as it must be called, is a most distressing one on every account. Called to march in the dead of winter, the Russian army suffered incredible hardships, and being provided with only a few days' provision when they passed the frontier, and having but a very indifferent commissariat, they were undoubtedly reduced to great straits for want of food, when the battles, which were fought, induced suffering almost beyond the power of description. Indeed the whole campaign has been one of extreme distress to both parties. I have no doubt but that the heart of the benevolent Nicholas has been wrung with anguish. It is well understood that his opinion was decidedly against undertaking any thing before spring, and perhaps by that time God would have pointed out to him a more judicious course than the one which his counsellors thought fit to advise. I am quite sure that the Emperor wishes with all his heart to do what will be for the best good of his people, and he has great respect, at least, for religion, and I think a strong desire to favor it. The more I know of his character, the more valuable does it appear to be."

Mr. Ropes then goes on to say that the news of the revivals in this country, which reached them in May, was like cold water to a thirsty soul. The most important articles of intelligence were communicated at a prayer meeting at Mr. Knill's house. On the following Sabbath Mr. Knill incorporated them into a sermon, and presented them to a numerous congregation, with great effect. The little band of Christians were much revived and animated.

In allusion to these circumstances, Mr. Ropes very appropriately remarks:

"No error can be greater than the common one, that our influence is at best but small, and may never reach beyond the little circle of our acquaintance. God will send it, in his good pleasure, on the wings of the wind, to the remotest corners of the world, and it shall be borne back, by and by, in ten thousand ways to bless the source whence it emanated. Thus in less than two months and a half from the time your letter was written, the glad tidings were read in a church, four or five thousand miles distant; and there was present a missionary [Mr. Swan] who is soon to return to his station, upwards of four thousand miles further east, in Siberia, on the borders of China, where he will tell what God is doing in America; and he will correspond, and so will Mr. Knill with the missionaries in Bagdad, in Astrachan, in Tiflis, in the Crimea, and all will hear what wonderful things God was working in the American churches. It is entirely within the bounds of possibilty that the engagedness of Christians in New York may be the means of producing a revival at some of these stations. Mr. Swan's heart is full of it. He is going to England this week, and will soon return to Selinginsk, in England, and among the poor Buriats, he will tell what things God has done."

Mr. Knill thus writes to Mr. Green.

"Your name, and character, and family, and congregation, are just as familiar to us as if we had long known each other. Mr. Ropes has often spoke of you, and that with deep interest.—This excellent friend arrived on a Saturday afternoon; he called on us and in a few minutes wafted us across the Atlantic and showed us out Salem, and Boston, and Marblehead, and the school of the prophets, &c.

"In one sense our efforts are limited, but in another they are boundless. It is not legal to attempt to make converts to any party, and we do not attempt it, but by the circulation of Scriptures and pious books, you may labor night and day. The Bible Society have wonderfully assisted us with the Scriptures, and my friends on the spot feel a lively interest in the work, and assist both by pecuniary aid and personal labor. On the 17th of March, I made up my account of Scripture distribution, when it appeared that in the last 14 months we had put into circulation,

Russian New Testaments		4000
Finnish	"	1660
German	"	725
In eight other languages		315

Making a total of 6700 New Testaments.

In addition to this we have circulated about 1000 Russian Psalters, and a friend of ours has circulated 400 Bibles in various languages.—School books in Russian and Finnish amount to 2400. Finnish catechisms, 200; Finnish prayer books, of 500 pages each, 500. In the course of a year we shall print one million three hundred and fifty thousand pages of tracts. In this last particular we received great encouragement by 710 roubles, or 150 dollars, brought by dear brother Ropes from America. I intend to write to the friends who sent us this money and convey to them copies of the various Russian and Finnish Tracts, which we have printed, and are printing. God is very gracious to us, and we wish to render to Him the glory. O yes! it is He who gave us the inclination, and provided us with the means, and then gave us the opportunity. The Quakers in England have furnished us the means to print the Dairyman's Daughter in Russian, and the celebrated Hannah More has sent us £20 to reprint the Shepherd of Salisbury Plain. Now I am trying to rouse our English friends to help us to print an edition of Dr. Watts' divine and moral songs. One of my hearers, a Mr. Oguisky, has translated them into Russian, and is printing an edition for himself to sell. I have proposed to him to give us 5000 on coarse paper for gratuitous distribution. He has already printed and sold one edition of Taylor's Hymns for Infant Minds.

"I shall write to Miss M. H. of the great kindness which I lately received of her Imperial Majesty the Empress. Indeed all the Imperial family seem made up of kindness, and it is evinced in a thousand various ways. My wife and her female friends experienced this, particularly during the last winter, when they were providing 650 poor families with warm clothing. We intend to write Mrs. C. a brief account of these proceedings."

CRUEL TREATMENT OF THE CHEROKEE MISSIONARIES.

A letter to the editors of the N. Y. Observer, from the Rev. H. G. Clauder, a Moravian missionary, dated Ooyugillogy, near New Echota, Cherokee Nation, July 15th, 1831, says:—"In consequence of the unprecedented oppression to which some of the missionaries of this Nation have of late been exposed, and of which I myself had a bitter taste, it has been determined by the United Brethren to withdraw their missionaries from this devoted land. Last week the Rev. Messrs. Worcester, Trott, and M'Leod, were driven into Georgia. The latter is superintendent of the Methodist missions in this Nation, and resides in Tennessee, from whence he had just arrived, in order to take his quarterly circuit. He was met by the "Guards," and seeing his fellow-laborer, Rev. Mr. Trott, together with the Rev. Mr. Worcester, in their custody, he saluted the former one with a few words of consolation: immediately he was seized, compelled to dismount from his horse, and walk with the prisoners, in the rear of the baggage-wagon. A poor Cherokee, arrested for digging gold on the land of the Cherokees, was chained to the wagon and hand-cuffed. Such things are now getting common here. Unprotected by the Government of the United States, it is impossible that the Cherokees can stand against the overwhelming force of oppression which is now carried on against them."

GEORGE WASHINGTON BASSETT, Esquire, of Fredericksburg, furnished Mr. SILAS E. BURROWS of this city with the following interesting account of the last moments of "the father of his country." Mr. Burrows has politely handed it to us for publication.—Courier & Enquirer.

THE LAST MOMENTS OF WASHINGTON.

The following circumstantial account of the last illness and death of General GEORGE WASHINGTON, was noted by Tobias Lear, on Sunday following his death, which happened on Saturday evening, December 14th. 1799, between the hours of ten and eleven: he was born on the 22d February 1732.

"On Thursday, Dec. 12th, the General rode out to his farms at about 10 o'clock, and did not return home till past 3. Soon after he went out the weather became very bad; rain, hail and snow falling alternately, with cold wind. When he came in, I carried some letters to him to frank, intending to send them to the Post Office. He franked the letters, but said the weather was too bad to send a servant to the office that evening. I observed to him that I was afraid he had got wet; he said no—his great-coat had kept him dry; but his neck appeared to be wet—the snow was hanging on his hair.

He came to dinner without changing his dress. In the evening he appeared as well as usual. A heavy fall of snow took place on Friday, which prevented the Genral from riding out as usual. He had taken cold (undoubtedly from being so much exposed the day before,) and complained of having a sore throat; he had a hoarseness, which increased in the evening, but he made light of it, as he would never take any thing to carry off a cold,—always observing, "let it go as it came." In the evening, the papers having come from the Post Office, he sat in the room, with Mrs. Washington and myself, reading them, till about 6 o'clock; and when he met with any thing which he thought diverting or interesting, he would read it aloud. He desired me to read to him the debates of the Virginia Assembly, on the election of a Senator and Governor, which I did. On his retiring to bed, he appeared to be in perfect health except the cold which he consdered as trifling—he had been remarkably cheerful all the evening.

About two or three o'clock on Saturday morning, he awoke Mrs. Washington, and informed her he was very unwell, and had an ague. She observed that he could scarcely speak, and breathed with difficulty, and she wished to get up and call a servant; but the General would not permit her, lest she should take cold. As soon as the day appeared, the woman Caroline went into the room to make a fire, and the girl desired that Mr. Rawlins, one of the overseers, who was used to bleeding the people, might be sent for to bleed him before the Doctor could arrive. I was sent for—went to the General's chamber, where Mrs. Washington was up, and related to me his being taken ill between 2 and 3 o'clock, as before stated. I found him breathing with difficulty, and hardly able to utter a word intelligibly. I went out instantly and wrote a line to Doctor Plask, and sent it with all speed. Immediately I returned to the General's chamber, where I found him in the same situation I had left him. A mixture of molasses, vinegar and butter, was prepared, but he could not swallow a drop; whenever he attempted, he was distressed, convulsed, and almost suffocated.

Mr. Rawlins came in soon after sun rise and prepared to bleed him; when the arm was ready the General observing Rawlins appeared agitated, said with difficulty, "don't be afraid," and after the incision was made he observed the orifice was not large enough—however the blood ran pretty freely. Mr. Washington not knowing whether the bleeding was proper in the General's situation, begged that much might not be taken from him, and desired me to stop it.—When I was about to untie the string, the General put up his hand to prevent it, and soon as he could speak said "more."

Mrs. Washington still uneasy lest too much blood should be taken, it was stopped after about half a pint had been taken. Finding that no relief was obtained from bleeding, and that noting could be swallowed, I proposed bathing the throat externally with salvolatile, which was done; a piece of flannel was then put round his neck. His feet were also soaked in warm water, but gave no relief. By Mrs. Washington's request I dispatched a messenger for Doctor Brown at Port Tobasco. About 9 o'clock Doct. Craik arrived, and put a blister of cantharides on the throat of the General, and took more blood, and had some vinegar and hot water set in a tea pot for him to draw in the steam from the nosel.

He also had sage tea and vinegar mixed and used as a gargle, but when he held back his head to let it run down, it all most produced suffocation. When the mixture came out of his mouth some phelgm followed it, and he would attempt to cough which the Doctor encouraged, but without effect. About 11 o'clock, Doct. Dick was sent for, Doct. Craik bled the General again, no effect was produced, and he continued in the same state, unable to swallow any thing. Doct. Dick came in about 3 o'clock, and Doct. Brown arrived soon after; when, after consultation the General was bled again, the blood ran slowly, appeared very thick and did not produce any symptoms of fainting. At 4 o'clock the General could swallow a little. Calomel and tartar emetic were administered without effect. About half past 4 o'clock he desired me to ask Mrs. Washington to come to his bed side, when he desired her to go down to his room, and take from his desk two Wills which she would find there, and bring them to him, which she did; upon looking at one, which he observed was useless, he desired her to burn it, which she did, and then took the other and put it away; after this was done I returned again to his bed side and took his hand: He said to me, "I find I am going—my breath cannot continue long: I believed from the first attack it would be fatal. Do you arrange and record all my military letters and papers; arrange my accounts and settle my books, as you know more about them than any one else; and let Mr. Rawlins finish recording my other letters, which he has begun." He asked when Mr. Lewis and Washington would return! I told him, I believed about the 20th of the month —He made no reply to it. The physicians again came in (between 5 and 6 o'clock,) and when they came to his bed-side, Dr. Craik asked him if he would sit up in the bed: he held out his hand to me and was raised up, when he said to the physicians—"I feel myself going; you had better not take any more trouble about me, but let me go off quietly; I cannot last long." They found what had been done was without effect; he laid down again, and they retired, excepting Dr. Craik. He then said to him—"Doctor, I die hard, but I am not afraid to go; I believed from my first attack I should not survive it; my breath cannot last long." The Doctor pressed his hand, but could not utter a word; he retired from the bed-side and sat by the fire, absorbed in grief. About 8 o'clock, the physicians again came into the room, and applied blisters to his legs; but went out without a ray of hope. From the time he appeared to breathe with less difficulty than he had done, but was very restless, continually changing his position, to endeavor to get ease. I aided him all in my power, and was gratified in believing he felt it, for he would look upon me with eyes speaking gratitude, but unable to utter a word without great distress. About 10 o'clock he made several attempts to speak to me before he could effect it; at length he said—"I am just going. Have me decently buried; and do not let my body be put into the vault in less than two days after I am dead." I bowed assent. He looked at me again and said —"Do you understand me?" I replied—"Yes sir." "'Tis well," said he. About ten minutes before he expired, his breathing became much easier—he lay quietly—he withdrew his hand from mine and felt his own pulse. I spoke to Doctor Craik, who sat by the fire; he came to the bed-side. The General's hand fell from his wrist; I took it in mine and placed it on my breast. Doctor Craik placed his hands over his eyes; and he expired without a struggle or a sigh.

While we were fixed in silent grief, Mrs. Washington asked in a firm and collected voice —"Is he gone?"

GEORGIA OPPRESSION!!

We publish the following detailed statement of the oppressive conduct of the State of Georgia towards the Missionaries, that our readers may be fully informed on a subject so deeply interesting to all who believe that national sins are visited with national judgements—that the conduct and sufferings of the Ministers of Christ and his followers may be seen as they are—and that an enlightened public may award to all parties concerned the approbation or censure that they deserve. Who that has one drop of American blood in his veins, or feels any interest in the spread of the light of the Gospel but must feel deeply on this subject? When has the American character subjected itself to such reproach before? Whereunto will these things grow?

From the Cherokee Phœnix of July 30.

To the Editor,

JAIL AT CAMP GILMER, July 11, 1831.

Dear Sir,—Transactions of a public nature may be publicly stated. If you esteem the facts contained in this communication as worthy of publication, it is at your disposal.

You already know that I was arrested last Thursday evening by a small detachment of the Georgia Guard, under the command of Sergeant Brooks. He inquired the state of my family, and when informed that Mrs. Worcester was still confined to her bed, expressed regret that Col. Nelson was not present, to whom he said he was under orders to bring me, at Mr. Hick's, ten miles distant. When I solicited the privilege of remaining with my family till morning, he complied, leaving two men to guard me. Through their kindness I was exempted from a close watch during the night as I slept in my own room below, and the guard, in another room above stairs.

In the morning we joined Mr. Brooks at Mr. Tarvin's and rode to Mr. Hick's, where Colonel Nelson, with others of the guard, was waiting our arrival. I requested Sergeant Brooks to mention to Col. Nelson the state of my family, which he promised to do. Whether he fulfilled his promise I do not know, but I am certain he had not spoken to Col. Nelson, when Mr. Thompson inquired of him whether I was going on to Head Quarters, and he answered, Yes. Perceiving that the matter was decided I said no more.—After eating I was ordered behind the baggage wagon. Thus far I had received none but kind treatment, nor heard any improper word from either of the guard, except that Mr. Brooks indulged his propensity to profaneness. We had proceeded from Mr. Hick's about three miles, when we met the Rev. Mr. McLeod, superintendant of the Methodist mission, and the Rev. Mr. Wells, teacher of the School at Chattoogy. At the request of Mr. Trott, and by the permission of Col. Nelson, they rode on some distance in our company. In the course of conversation, Mr. McLeod inquired of Mr. Trott, whether he had been chained the preceding night. He answered, Yes. Mr. McLeod then asked if it was according to law to chain a prisoner who manifested no disposition to escape. Mr. Trott replied that he thought not; but said that he supposed we ought not to blame those in whose care we were for such treatment, that they had orders, and were obliged to follow them. To this Mr. McLeod replied, "It seems they proceed more by orders than by law." At this expression some of the guard took offence, and one of them reproached Mr. McLeod for it, who in reply asserted the right of freedom of speech, provided he said nothing amiss, and added, "If I have said any thing wrong, I am in your power, you can arrest me." Several of the guard replied, and a few words more had passed on each side, when Col. Nelson rode up to inquire what was going on. Being told of the expression which had given offence, he asked Mr. McLeod where he resided. He replied "in Tennessee." The Col. then, with a curse ordered him to flank off. Mr. McLeod, turning his horse, said, "I will if it is your command;" but added hastily, as he afterwards said, "You will hear from me again." He was then riding away when the Col. ordered him to dismount, and lead his horse along after the guard, which he did. The Col. then inquired of Mr. Trott if he was "one of the circuit riders," and, on being answered in the affirmative, had his horse taken away from him, and was ordered forward with us. A tremendous volley of curses was now pouring upon us, chiefly from the mouth of Sergeant Brooks.—Others of the guard indeed, joined him, in too great a degree, but the profaneness and obscenity of Brooks' language could not be exceeded by any thing which the most depraved and polluted imagination could conceive. Not only the person who had given the offence, not only the prisoners, but all missionaries, all ministers of the Gospel, and religion itself, were the subjects of his railing. We were happy in taking to ourselves the consolation afforded by the words which he tauntingly repeated. "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." For a short distance Mr. McLeod was compelled to keep the centre of the road, through mire and through water, but afterwards, with the rest of us allowed more liberty.

Another circumstance occurred during the day, not within my observation, but which I learned from Rev. Mr. Thompson. I have mentioned that Rev. Mr. Wells was in company with Mr. McLeod. When Mr. McLeod was arrested, Mr. Wells took his horse and was going away in an opposite direction from us when he met Mr. Thompson. He then turned intending to follow Mr. McLeod, and offer his service in any thing which occasion might require, particularly in case of his being released. After riding a few miles they came up with the guard. When Col. Nelson saw Mr. Wells following, he ordered him, with a threat, to ride out of his sight, either before or behind. Mr. Wells made no reply, but fell back a little, and followed on. Col. Nelson dismounted, cut a stick, made up towards Mr. Wells and gave him a single blow on the head. Mr. Wells then said that he had a right to travel the public road, and should do it, accordingly he persevered, & went on, till he came to a house where he had been requested by Mr. McLeod, through Mr. Thompson, to stop.

When we were within a few miles of our stopping place, Mr. McLeod solicited from Col. Nelson, the privilege of riding, on account of severe pains in his hips and knees; but the Col. returned answer, that Proctor thought he could not walk at first, but afterwards, he got along very well.

Near night we arrived at Major Dawson's, about 22 miles from Mr. Hick's. When about to lie down for the night, the prisoners were chained together by the ankle, two and two.

It may be proper here to state, that Mr. Trott had been arrested on Wednesday, at Two-runs, and taken to Dawson's on horseback, thence marched to Hick's on Thursday, and back again on Friday. Proctor was taken on Tuesday.—The first night he was chained by the ankle only. The second and third he was chained by the neck to the wall, as well as by the ankles to Mr. Trott. On the way to Hick's, and back to Dawson's, he was chained to the wagon. This severity, I suppose, was occasioned by his having made resistance when he was taken, and afterwards attempted to escape. But to return to the subject.

Sometime after we had lain down, another detachment arrived with Dr. Butler, as prisoner.—He had been arrested the evening before, and had fared worse than any of us. After crossing the river three or four miles from home, a chain was fastened by a padlock around his neck, and the other end to the neck of a horse, on which one of the guard rode, while he walked. In this way they proceeded for some time after it had become so dark that he could see no obstacle which might be in the way, the horse walking with a quick step and be liable every moment to fall, and thus be dragged by the neck till the horse should stop. When he had walked as he supposes between four and five miles after he was chained, he was permitted on representing his danger, to ride behind the saddle, his chain being still fastened to the neck of the horse. In this situation the horse fell, with both his riders under, and in such a position that none of them could rise, till others of the guard could come, ascertain their position by the sense of feeling, and roll the horse over. Dr. Butler was considerably injured, but the guard more, having as he supposes, two ribs broken. After this Dr. Butler was no more chained to the horse. The rest of the way that night he was suffered to ride, while one of the guard walked. They arrived at lodgings about midnight, 14 miles from Butler's. After they had lain down, Dr. Butler was chained by the ankle to the bedstead. On the next day, they had 35 miles or more to travel. The prisoner was permitted to ride much of the way, while different individuals of the guard walked. He had a chain around his neck, not however, fastened to the horse but at his own disposal.—In chaining him the guard professed to act according to their own inclination, but under strict orders.

On Saturday morning, as we were crossing the river, Mr. Thompson stood on the bank, waiting to speak to us when we reached it. Col. Nelson and Sergeant Brooks were in consultation on the side which we had left. Brooks then called across, giving orders that no one should be allowed to speak to either of the prisoners privately, and that no letter should be delivered to them or by them, without they should be first examined.

Proctor was now permitted to ride his own horse, which had been made prisoner with himself. His chain was fastened around his neck and left at his command. Dr. Butler was left unchained. The journey of the day was about 35 miles. When he had travelled a considerable distance, we were permitted through the kindness of some of the guard, who themselves walked in our stead, to ride four or five miles. For this kindness, we were afterwards told, they were bitterly cursed by Brooks. Afterwards, Mr. Trott being about to fail, the Cherokee was dismounted, and Mr. Trott placed on the poney. Towards evening Mr. McLeod's feet had become so sore, that he could scarcely walk, and solicited the privilege of riding, which some of the guard would readily have granted, but Brooks interfered, and with much cursing compelled him to walk on. Afterwards however, perhaps seeing the difficulty with which he walked, he directed Mr. Trott to dismount, and placed Mr. McLeod on the poney. Col. Nelson was not with us, at this time.

We passed the night at Mr. Lay's. All except the poor Cherokee were excused from wearing chains—Corporal Glenn who had the charge of us, remarking that he had received no orders to chain us, and had not, himself any disposition to do it.

The Sabbath did not give us rest, until we had travelled 22 miles, which brought us to this place. Mr. M'Leod being utterly unable to walk, was mounted on the poney, having a blanket and a bag of clothing for a saddle, and a rope halter instead of a bridle. On the way Mr. Trott was allowed to ride several miles in the wagon. Dr. Butler and myself were favored by the kindness of two of the guard with a ride of two or three miles. Arrived at camp Gilmer, we were introduced to this house, Brooks remarking as we entered, "There is where all the enemies of the state of Georgia will have to land;—there and in hell." Another prisoner, Mr. Samuel Mayes, was introduced at night.

Tuesday July 12. Our prison, when we entered it, presented no very pleasant appearance. The floor was sufficiently dirty, and there was little air or light, and a very unpleasant smell. All these evils we have in a good measure remedied, so that our dwelling is comparatively comfortable. The want of air and light we have supplied in some degree, by enlarging some holes already made through the daubing of the wall, and making others new, no man forbidding us. True the floor is rough, but we contrive to sleep on it soundly enough. We have no chairs bench or table, but these are not indispensable. We have plenty of wholesome food and good water, and a sufficient supply of blankets for the night. We have no chains to wear—Proctor's were taken off on his being put in jail. Under the care of a merciful Providence we all enjoy good health. Though not at liberty, we dwell in peace, and with peace of conscience we are contented.

Yesterday Mr. Thompson and Mr. Wells arrived, and requested an interview with us. Mr. Thompson was admitted, but Mr. Wells was refused. The restriction is still maintained, that no person shall converse with us privately, nor any letter be sent away unexamined.

Before yesterday noon Mr. M'Leod had sent a line to Col. Nelson, (Col. Sanford is absent,) requesting an interview. This morning Col. Nelson sent for him, and after a while he was dismissed, but not allowed to return and bid us farewell.

Wednesday July 13. We remain in the same place, not knowing how long we are to remain, or what is to befal us hereafter. With confidence we commit our cause to Him who judgeth righteously, and cheerfully await the event. I speak of those particularly who are missionaries. If we are, as we think we are, in the path of duty, and that he loves us, though we suffer here, we shall rejoice hereafter.

I will now close this communication. Of what awaits us I may give you an account at some future time. Your affectionate friend,

S. A. WORCESTER.

Jail at Camp Gilmer, July 18, 1831.

Dear Sir,—I closed a communication to you last Wednesday of considerable length, which is still in my possession, but which you may receive hereafter.

Last Thursday night a white man by the name of Nellum was added to our number. He was arrested for residing in the prohibited territory without a license. He said he was on the way hither for the purpose of obtaining license, and was tarrying for a day or two with his mother on the way, when he was arrested. You know that the law makes no provision for license to be given since the first of March, and of course would subject Nellum no less than the rest of us to the penalty enacted. However, after being detained till yesterday, which was the Sabbath, he was set at liberty, I presume on the ground of his intention to take the oath of allegiance.

Saturday evening we sent a request to Col. Nelson, of which the following is a copy.

Col. Ch. H. Nelson,

Sir—If it be consistent with necessary regulations, it would be a high gratification to some of your prisoners, if Mr. Trott and Mr Worcester might be permitted to hold a meeting tomorrow evening at some place where such of the guard and of the neighbors as are disposed, might attend. If the favor can be granted, be so kind as to give us an answer as soon as convenient. We wish to be understood that we should all greatly desire the privilege of attending.

(Signed) S. A. WORCESTER,
J. J. TROTT,
ELIZUR BUTLER,
SAMUEL MAYES.

The note was returned to us with the following answer written on the outside:

"We view the within request as an impertinent one. If your conduct be evidence of your character and the doctrines you wish to promulgate, we are sufficiently enlightened as to both. Our object is to restrain, not facilitate their promulgation. If your object be true piety you can enjoy it where you are. Were we hearers we would not be benefited, devoid as we are of confidence in your honesty. (Signed)

C. H. NELSON."

After dark we were at supper. The door of our prison was thrown open to give us light.—Several of the guard came & stood by the door, and one of them commenced insulting us, and me in particular, with such language as made it appear that even Serg. Brooks could be equalled in filthiness of conversation; one or two others joined him. Such men do not consider that they are paying us a compliment by taking it for granted that profaneness and obscenity are torture to our ears. Afterwards some of them came and lay down by our door for the apparent purpose of disturbing our rest by their talk. One re-echoed several times from the mouth of Brooks, "Fear not little flock."

Chattahoochy, Cherokee Nation, July 25.

I am now on my way home; and having to tarry a little time here, I resume my narrative of recent events.

On Monday, the day of my last date, Mr. Thompson and Mr. William Rogers arrived with a writ of habeas corpus, requiring Col. Nelson to present us before the inferior court of Gwinnett county, at Lawrenceville. Supposing that we should probably be taken away the next morning, and should have to walk, Dr. Butler delivered his saddle-bags to Mr. Thompson, to be carried for him to Lawrenceville. We were afterwards informed that after Mr. Thompson had already got beyond the line of Camp Gilmer, while tarrying a little at Scudder's Inn, Col. Nelson being there, ordered one of the guard to search the saddle-bags, saying that he would see how much matter it contained for the Phœnix. Accordingly they were thoroughly but vainly searched. Col. Nelson said afterwards that he had another object in searching them, which however, he did not explain. This was done in presence of Mr. Thompson, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Scudder.

In justice to the individuals composing the guard, it may be proper to say that, while we were in jail, only two or three individuals offered any insult, most of them treated us with civility, and some with kindness.

It was not till Thursday morning that we were relieved from our confinement. The reason afterwards assigned was that Col. Stanford, who did not arrive till Wednesday evening, had important evidence in his possession. This I suppose, must have been a letter from the Secretary of War, stating that missionaries were not agents of the General Government, and one from the Post Master General, informing the Governor of my dismissal from office. On Thursday morning we were all furnished with horses, and set out towards Lawrencevil,e. Instead, however, of being presented directly before the court, to which the writ was made returnable, we were brought before a justice of the peace on the way, and all of us, by him, delivered over into the hands of a constable for jail, with the understanding that the constable should wait on the colonel till he could appear with us before the inferior court. At 9 o'clock in the night we arrived at Lawrenceville. Friday, we spent in endeavoring to collect the justices of the court; and not till near noon on Saturday were we at length brought before them, for a hearing. In the mean time, on Saturday morning, Dr. Butler was seized with a violent and dangerous attack of the billious cholic, and although by prompt and vigorous medical aid, he obtained relief, he was far from being able to attend court. Proctor, also, was too sick to attend.

I shall not attempt to describe the proceedings of the court, which appeared to me no less singular than the attitude in which we were presented before them—in the hands of a constable to be committed to jail, and yet in the hands of Col. Nelson to be presented before a habeas corpus court. It is sufficient that the decision was against us all. We all gave security for our appearance at the next term of the Superior Court, except the poor Cherokee who was anew committed to jail.

Doctor Butler and myself, as well as Mr. Thompson, remained at Lawrenceville till this morning and experienced from some of the citizens various acts of distinguished kindness, which we shall bear in grateful remembrance.

With much esteem I remain your sincere friend, S. A. WORCESTER.

PIONEER STAGES.

Mr. Tappan's Letter to Mr. Lord.

"But, if it be true that these public measures have failed to secure all the benefits anticipated, it may be asked, with solemn emphasis, who are to blame in this matter? Are they those who sounded the alarm, who addressed the consciences and hearts of the people, and remonstrated with the national legislature? Or are they rather the enemies of the Sabbath, who are also in fact the enemies of their country, and who would in destroying the sanctity of that holy day, bring ruin upon our civil institutions? Or, (which is the more probable supposition,) are they the professed friends of religion, and of the Sabbath, who join with the enemies of the Lord's day, in falsely imputing to the promoters of these public measures attempts to secure "civil and secular aid," who travel during the holy time, who own stock in stages, steam-boats, and canal-boats, that violate the Sabbath, who allow their property to be transported by land and on canals during the Sabbath, and who secularize the day by employments wholly inconsistent with its sacredness, and the purpose of its divine appointment!

"In the late report of the Sabbath Union, it is stated that "there are professing Christians, not a few, who own stages, and stock in steamboats and canal-boats, and manufactories, which they allow to violate that holy day; and who contract to carry the United States' mail on the Sabbath." Many of these persons have been so galled by the measures adopted to enlighen public sentiment on the Sabbath question, and have met with such stinging rebukes in the examples of those who resolved to keep inviolate holy time, at any sacrifice of pecuniary interest, that they have openly declaimed against the severity and strictness enjoined upon the community, and have not hesitated to speak disparagingly of men and measures thus opposed to them. An individual, of considerable celebrity, a professing christian, after riding through the whole route of the Pioneer line of stages, declared that the voice of the Christian community was decidedly in opposition to the enterprize, that the bad effects were notorious, and he saw nothing to commend in its principle or conduct. It was afterwards ascertained that this very individual rode on the Sabbath in the old line of stages, and that he obtained his information from the bitterest enemies of the principal proprietor of the Pioneer line! And it has been found, in numerous cases, that these professing Christians, who speak of their brethren in opprobrious terms, and stigmatize their efforts on behalf of the holy Sabbath, are incited to it by consciousness of guilt, and as apologies for conduct that is wholly indefensible on Christian principles; and in this, as in parallel cases of moral delinquency, the greater the deficiency, the louder the reproach of others.

As the Pioneer line of stages was an individual enterprise, and not a "public measure," there may not appear to be any necessity for particular allusion to it in this letter. But as it has been part of the policy of certain men to connect that effort with the public measures adopted for rescuing the Sabbath from profanation, it will not be irrelevant to take some notice of it. This enterprise was begun for the purpose of raising a standard against the awful profanations of the Sabbath on the line of the canal. The proprietors knew from the beginning that they should lose money by the undertaking. But they considered that time and money would be well employed in thus arresting the attention of the community, and affording a facility for travelling to those who keep holy time. They commenced and carried on the plan on their own responsibility, receiving no aid from the world, and little from the Christian community. The generous-hearted, self-denying, Christian hero who conducted that scheme of usefulness, at heavy pecuniary sacrifices, if not with the sacrifice of life itself, has gone to his reward. Living, he acted for the glory of God, and the good of mankind, with a zeal, disinterestedness, and courage, worthy of all praise; and dying, he could say, "the Lord knows I have loved his cause more than all things else." Some of the closing scenes of his life were embittered with the scornful and unfeeling writings of men who did not understand the nature of his undertaking, and the man who projected it; or who misrepresented both. It was a subject of thankfulness with this devoted servant of the Lord, amidst calumny, and misrepresentation, and impeachment of motives, that there is a day of judgment, when the secrets of all hearts will be disclosed, and the traduced and the traducers will alike come up before the bar of God.

"But justice will yet be done to the character of the lamented Bissell on earth. Already many, who reviled and persecuted him, when he crossed their iniquitous path, eulogize his disinterested philanthropy, and self-devotion to the cause of truth and righteousness, now they are no longer interrupted by his energetic enterprise, nor rebuked by his godly example. Very many of his former violent opponents, during the revivals with which that district of our country has been blessed, have been brought into the church, and they are nearly, or quite, unanimous in bearing testimony to the individual and measure which they formerly, when in sin, loudly condemned. And it cannot have escaped the observation of the reflecting that the Spirit of God has been signally poured out in a section of country where the greatest efforts were made in the cause of the Sabbath. God has remarkably blessed the churches in that region, and brought many of his enemies, and the enemies of the Sabbath, into the church, who now lament their former opposition to a measure which aroused Christians from their lethargy, made them feel the value of the day that was so generally trampled upon, and rendered them the instruments in preparing the way for revivals of religion with which the western part of this state has been so greatly distinguished.

LIBERAL SENTIMENTS.

We are indebted to a friend in Middletown, Ct. for a number of the Antigua Free Press of July 7th. It contains an interesting report of a trial for Slander—William Thibou (a free man of color) versus The Honorable Paul Horsford Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas! After the testimony had been given, Mr. Justice Nanton, in summing up, said, that in that Court difference of color never had influenced, and, he trusted, never would influence the decisions of a Jury; he hoped the Jury would view the Plaintiff in the same light as himself. His Honor observed, that Mr. Thibou did not appear, by the evidence, to have suffered from the language of the Defendant; and although it was not necessary for the Plaintiff to prove, that he had sustained special damage therefrom, yet it had been open for him to do so. The Jury retired for about an hour, and returned a verdict for the Plaintiff, £120 with costs.

The editor of the Free Press makes the following liberal remarks, relative to the free colored population of Antigua:

'Barbadoes, formerly among the greatest oppressors of the free colored population and slaves, and until lately most reluctant to grant concession; has within a short time, as if by a sudden influx of light and generous sentiment upon the inhabitants, made such advances in Christian liberality, as should cover this unfeeling and degraded island with shame. Free Barbadians, now, of whatever color or rank, all enjoy the full rights and privileges of British subjects. And we are happy to find by the late papers, that a law has recently been passed by the Legislature of that island, relieving slave witnesses from the necessity of producing certificates of baptism and adequate information from clergymen. The former law, besides, we believe, drawing an unjust and odious distinction between the Ministers of the National Church and others, placed in the hands of the clergy a very powerful engine for the obstruction of justice, such as no man should be entrusted with; and we know, that clergymen are men of like passions with ourselves. Every restriction is now taken off the slave, and his competence and credibility will be determined upon in open court by the Jury, who are the best judges. A perjured slave must be convicted at the Court of Grand Sessions, before he can be punished; that is, we presume, must be regularly indicted and tried instanter and summarily. We humbly submit this to our Legislators. By the 4th clause of the Act under consideration, every person hereafter to be tried for murder or other felony is allowed to be defended by Counsel.'

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

WRONG VIEWS ON DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY.

Mr. Editor—My mind has been not a little tried with the use which is often made of the word of God. The following passage, very frequently receives an interpretation, which appears to me manifestly unwarranted. Luke, x. 21; "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." In almost every instance, in which I have heard this passage referred to, it has been done as I conceive, very improperly. The following are some of the instances to which I refer:

In answer to the inquiry, why the Spirit of the Lord is not poured out on a particular congregation; why there is no revival? The answer is often given by the minister or some of the church, "Even so Father," God has hid these things from us. He sends rain upon one place and not another. And why does he do this?—Because it so pleaseth him.

In answer to the inquiry, why revivals do not continue longer, "Even so Father," is the answer. God did not see fit to let us have only a shower, and we are truly thankful for this. Do not despise the day of small things. We would not contravene the right of God in his sovereign disposal of these things. Then sit down, fold their hands and sleep on. This is a reason given too why some sinners are converted and not others, instead of the reason which Christ gives.

Lukewarm ministers and professors, often assign this as a reason why they have not as much of the Spirit of God as some of their brethren, and after referring this matter to the sovereign will, as they term it, of God, sink down in quiet slumber and take their rest.

All the impenitence of the Spirit resisting sinner, the lukewarmness of ministers and professors, the want of revivals of religion, and the grieving of the Holy Ghost from those places which he had visited, is thus charged upon the blessed God. Yes, all the sins and crime consequent upon these things, is very submissively thrown upon God. And what is still worse, Jesus Christ the blessed Saviour, is represented as rejoicing in this state of things.

Now let me ask, is this true! Does God stand in the way of such ministers and churches having a revival! Does he hide these things from them, so that they could not see and enjoy such precious seasons if they were willing! Does the blessed Spirit leave any place, where God's people are anxious to retain it! Does God prevent ministers and Christians from being filled with the Spirit, and awaking out of slumber! And does he keep a sinner from repenting of his sins, and being born again! And does the Saviour of sinners rejoice, that God has so ordered in his providence, that some places shall not enjoy revivals! That the Spirit shall be grieved from others, ministers and Christians destitute of a spirit of holy prayer, and multitudes of obstinate and rebellious sinners unconverted, making their way to hell.

I have not so learned Christ—I could give many reasons, but let the following suffice:

It is irreconcilable with the character of God. God is love—doing all the good he can. He is holy, and does nothing but what is for the greatest good. He is just, and does nothing but what is right. Possessing this character, how can God labor to prevent holiness in his creatures! Stop the progress of righteousness, and prevent sinners from being converted, and that as it is said for his glory! The law of God requires perfect love, and is it consistent with his requirements, to set himself against obedience to his law! I had supposed that God's design in the atonement, was to glorify himself in the salvation of sinners, and that atonement was made for the whole world, and not for the elect only.—And I cannot reconcile the idea of God's hiding the light from sinners, with the avowed design of the atonement.

God says, he delights not in the death of him that dieth, but that he turn to him and live. He speaks as one distressed on account of the lukewarmness of ministers and Christians, and the impenitence of sinners. "O that they were wise. O that thou hadst known, in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace. O that there was such an heart in them." Now if these things are true, I cannot see how it is consistent for God to prevent them from being known by his people.

The answer above referred to, is very different from the one given by Jesus Christ. He says, "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." John v. 40. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem thou that killest the prophets, and stonest the which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Mat. xxiii. 37. "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." John iii. 19. "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself." And why should not we give the same answer! Why flee to this subterfuge! Will any one excuse who thus covers his sins! Is it not enough that wicked men and devils do this! Let not believers and Christians flee to this refuge, and thus cast contempt upon the blessed Jesus.

CHURCH AND STATE.

In 1732 four able and faithful ministers of the established church of Scotland seceded in support of the right of churches to choose their own pastors. They constituted the first Presbytery of the Secession church, which has now, according to a writer in the London "World," not fewer than 450 ministers. The established church of Scotland, instead of increasing its number of ministers with equal rapidity, has just about as many now as when the Secession began—800. Nearly 200 ministers of the Secession also have found their way to Ireland, where they have long formed a distinct body; and the Presbyterian church in Nova Scotia originated in the same source.

To the prosperity of the Secession, its independence of the state has doubtless chiefly contributed; while the support of the secular arm has kept the establishment at a dead stand as to numbers. The long and thorough course of study which the Secession prescribes to her students, is another cause of her success. After a Grammar-school education, the candidate must spend four or five years at a regular university; and five more under the superintendence of the Presbytery, before he can be admitted to the pulpit.

In the London World of June 13, we observe more than a column of extracts from our papers, stating Revivals of Religion in sixteen different places in our United States. The editor inquires, "When shall we have to record such facts in England! Not, we believe, until a greater approximation is made to primitive Christianity—not until we cease to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by allowing religion to be under the control and influence of a temporal and political establishment, and by thus uniting what the head of the Christian church has forever put asunder, the service of God and mammon. In England, where the church of God is identified with the state, and supported by it, we have no out-pourings of the Holy Spirit, no religious revivals. In America, where religion is uncontaminated by being brought into contact with a worldly establishment, and where Christianity is left to its own legitimate and scriptural means of support and extension, we see, on the contrary, the churches of the Redeemer flourishing, the Holy Spirit dispensing his influences in a most extraordinary manner, and the special tokens of the Divine favor increasingly afforded. Where is the country to be found, which is at the same time supporting the anomalous union of Church and State, and receiving such manifestations of the divine favor as those witnessed in the western hemisphere!"

MORTALITY AMONG OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND GOVERNMENT AGENTS.

A gentleman residing near Fort Gibson, on the Arkansas river, under date of June 11th, mentions the following repeated instances of mortality among the officers of the garrison and the government agents in that vicinity, during a few months preceding.

In February last, Lieut. Murray, who had just joined the army, a youth under twenty years, was killed instantly by the horse on which he was riding. Two weeks ago, Lieut. Thomas for several years connected with the army, was drowned within sight of the Fort. Last week, Mr. McNair, eldest son of the late governor McNair, of Missouri, one of the sub-agents of the Osages, was killed in an instant by lightning, on the prairie, about fifteen miles from the Fort. Five days before, young Choteau brother of the Osage Agent, an assistant of the Creek Agent, died at the Fort, of dropsy in the chest. Yesterday Capt. Pryor, another sub-agent of the Osages, was buried. He died of a fever setting in upon a broken constitution. He was one of the party which accompanied Lewis and Clark, in their expedition across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, and has resided among the Osages fifteen years or more.

Last summer a Mr. Carr, died at the Osage agency. He was the sub-agent who preceded McNair, mentioned above.

OBSERVER.

POPERY.

We have received a communication from Mr. Buchan in answer to Republicus, but have returned it to the writer as unfit for the columns of the Observer. We have invited Mr. Buchan or any other person disposed to vindicate the tenets and practices of the Romish Church, to communicate their sentiments through this paper. It will be recollected that one condition was that the writer should not be "indecently personal."

As Mr. B. totally disregarded this condition in the article which he has sent us, we feel ourselves entirely exonerated from the promise which we gave. We hope that Mr. B. will, in some way, give this article to the public, as it will not only vindicate us from any blame for its rejection, but will most clearly show the spirit and the weapons which Catholics use to sustain that corrupt church.

We still invite them to come out with facts and arguments, and promise that no correspondent shall be permitted through the columns of this paper, to use any other weapons against them.

This we do not expect them to do. They dare not trust their cause on such conditions before an enlightened community. Their people would read, and their servile acquiescence in the ipse dixit of their priests might be shaken. Perhaps this is slander. If it is let them prove it by an appeal to arguments drawn from Scripture. Let them not excuse their silence by saying that Republicus or any other writer is anonymous. The Religion of the Bible (the religion of Catholics if theirs is the true religion) does not depend for its truth upon the names of men. Republicus we have no doubt would long since have given his real name had he not known the disposition of those against whom he was writing, to resort to low scurrility and personal abuse, instead of taking the manly and christian course of relying upon the soundness of their faith and the defensibility of their cause.

We repeat it again, the columns of the Observer are open to a vindication of the faith and practices of the Catholic Church.

MR. TAPPAN'S LETTER TO MR. LORD. THE PIONEER.

The extracts which we give this week from Mr. Tappan's Letter, have reference to the bearing that the establishment of the Pioneer Line of Stages had upon the great object of promoting the better observance of the Christian Sabbath. We would not anticipate the remarks of Mr. T. on this much agitated subject, but cannot omit an opportunity of adding our testimony to the immense mass already before this community, as to the great influence which this measure has had in calling up the attention of professors of religion to the claims of the Sabbath. While christians acknowledged the blessing of that holy day and their obligation to rest from their usual occupations, there was a strange laxity in their sentiments as to the strictness with which it should be observed. They had in fact almost been led to believe that if the 4th commandment had not been abrogated, it had a less binding force than the other nine, and that the plea of necessity, which self-interest or self-gratification could always bring to combat the reproofs of conscience, would afford them a dispensation from the penalty for its violation.

Something was wanting to excite public attention to this subject. This the Pioneer Line did most effectually. The enemies of religion cried church and state, and coercion, while worldly professors growled, and with more caution but not less effectually, threw obstacles in the way of its accomplishing the good for which it was designed. They were accounted its friends of course, but their patronage was given to it while it comported with their pecuniary interests. We know that many who made high professions of attachment to the principles of the Pioneer, could be bought off by the Old Line by an underbid of twenty-five cents. And here is the reason of its failure. It was owing to want of principle in the professed friends of the Sabbath. Had they stood by it, it might still have kept the road in despite of all the open enemies of the Sabbath. Were it still in existence, we should not have so often to complain that members of our churches are seen with the enemies of God and the Sabbath, travelling in stages and canal Boats, on the Lord's Day. We should not see prominent professors, after clearing liquor from their bars, returning "to their vomit again," and even becoming proprietors in public Sabbath breaking lines of Stages. But we will refer the reader to the extracts from the letter which will be found in another column. Let Mr. Tappan speak for himself.

EVERY DAY MOURNING.

It has been urged that there is something soothing to the finer sensibilities of the heart, to put on mourning at the decease of friends—that black the color of the dress, is in unison with the depression of spirits which is then experienced. It is urged that it is not worn from ostentation—that the funeral of a relative is not siezed upon as a favorable occasion to show off in a new dress and thus to make a real calamity the occasion for the gratification of vanity. This may be so, but if it is, we wonder how it happens that the poor bereaved mourner so often is seen at home about ordinary business without any thing in the dress to tell of the great loss that has been experienced, while it is carefully worn when abroad, or when receiving visiters at home. It would seem that mourning at home or abroad—when about the common concerns of domestic life, or when prepared for company, are very different things. There appears to us to be something rather contrary to experience in this. When at home, the bereaved husband, or wife, or child, is quite as likely to experience the poignancy of grief, where every thing about them is calculated to remind them of the absence of one whose loss they mourn, as when mingling in the bustle of society where the spirits of the sufferer are likely to be cheered and to recover at least for a time, their usual buoyancy. If therefore the color of the dress can in any measure tend to relieve the feelings of the sufferer, we think that it is at most the weeds of mourning should be worn, and, if at any time, laid aside when mingling most with society.

SEEKING FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

We are informed by a gentleman residing at Whitehall, that during the protracted meeting which was held at that place last spring, and which continued eleven days the stores and shops of every description in the village were closed, with hardly an exception.

It is not uncommon that on the fourth of July, and on other public occasions, business is suspended, but we believe that religion is seldom deemed of sufficient importance to induce worldly men to give it their undivided attention—when this does occur it appears to be very much like obeying the command to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

M. N. shall appear next week.—A communication of Rev. A. D. Eddy, was received entirely too late for this paper.

NOVEL INCIDENT.

We understand that a good deal of excitement has been produced by an incident which occurred in Scott county, at the late celebration of our great anniversary. The incident has already been referred to in the prints of the day, nevertheless we have hesitated about noticing it. But, as recorders of passing events and defenders of the purity of society, we have felt ourselves bound to make our readers acquainted with it. The facts as we have heard and believe are these. Col. R. M. Johnson has a number of children by an African woman living in his family, either a slave or manumitted servant. The taste of the Colonel may be well questioned, but as we are told, there is no disputing about that, perhaps he might be indulged, and allowed in private to sing, 'I love you black Rose, Rose, I love you black Rose.' But it seems, on the 4th of July, he conducted in his carriage, one of his daughters to a Barbacue in Scott, where many of the ladies and daughters of respectable families of that county were assembled. When she entered the booth, or awning, in which they were dancing, they immediately displayed considerable agitation, and retired from the part of the temporary covering in which she was seated. The circumstance attracted the attention of the managers, and several of them were deputed to wait on Colonel Johnson, to inform him that his daughter must be withdrawn. He remonstrated, and urged that she was as well educated as any lady there. They told him it was not a debateable matter, and that she must be withdrawn any how; whereupon he reconducted her to his carriage, in which she remained until the Colonel delivered an address on the glories and virtues of the hallowed day.

If there be any inacuracy in this narrative, we will with pleasure correct it, upon being satisfied of the error. Comments are unnecessary; but we cannot forbear remarking, that after the scenes at Washington, this attempt upon society in Kentucky was most unfortunate and highly censurable.—Kentucky Reporter of July 20.

That Col. Johnson has had six or seven children by one of his slaves, we have known for two years, and when we have heard his piety extolled by the enemies of religion, we acknowledge that we have often been tempted to speak out—but we thought it better that the fact should come from some paper in his own neighborhood. The Colonel has been often represented as a member of the Baptist Church, and we have been surprized that some of the papers of that denomination have not repelled the assertion as an indignity which they would not brook.

Let it be remembered that Col. Johnson is not married, and when his friends have remonstrated with him for the immorality of his conduct in this respect, he has silenced them by declaring that he would marry this woman if they did not cease to trouble him about her.

Comments in such a case we deem entirely superfluous. Our readers will recollect that this is the pure patriot and christian, who made the two Sabbath Mail Reports, and who has expressed himself so apprehensive of a union of Church and State. How fortunate would it have been if he had been as resolutely determined against a UNION of another kind!!! No wonder the Col. has been nominated for President of the United States, by the followers of Fanny Wright and the disciples of Tom Paine!

Intemperance and Suicide.—We learn from the Cincinnati Journal that a Mr. Thomas A. Jones, aged 24, of that city, committed suicide by shooting himself. The Journal says that he was a victim to intemperance and fashionable dissipation.

NEW MEASURES.

The article under this head which we publish, from the South. Rel. Telegraph, we would recommend to the especial attention of those who are disposed to condemn, or at least to look with suspicion upon, measures for the promotion of religion, which may not happen to have the sanction of the fathers in the church of former days. As to Camp-Meetings, we do not believe they are called for, or that their introduction would be expedient in this part of the county where we have churches large enough to accommodate all who may assemble for public worship, on almost any occasion. But at the South and West, where churches are much less common, and where the scattered members of our denomination are in the habit of collecting from a great distance on communion seasons, the case is very different. It is sufficient justification of this or any other measure for the promotion of religion that there is nothing in it contrary to Scripture—nothing immoral in it—especially when it is found by experience that God does bless it to the salvation of souls.

THE ROCHESTER INSTITUTE OF PRACTICAL EDUCATION.

While the citizens of this village are neglecting the higher departments of learning, and are sustaining no institution for general education, a seminary has sprung up of a novel character, but of elevated aims. The splendid building at Buffalo bridge, a most convenient college edifice, is occupied by near 50 young men, and the number is fast increasing, who are pursuing an extensive course of literature and science, and defraying their expenses by employing their hours of relaxation in mechanical labor. As many of our readers wish to learn in what respect the Institute differs from other schools, several short numbers on its internal regulations will appear. We solicit our readers to give them special attention.

NO. 1.

The members of the Institute govern themselves. The Directors have not prepared a code of regulations, nor has the principal dictated any. As rules were found necessary, the students consulting for their own good, either together or by committees adopt rules concerning labor, board, devotion, study, and all subjects of common interest. Officers of their own appointment carry these rules into operation. Thus republican principles are practically applied. Manual labor with moral truth does in fact elevate the character and call forth the energies of the soul. Idle, vicious and ignorant young men, surrounded by temptations, are incapable of self government, and of course of the benefits of the institution.

At a meeting held at the Court House on the 19th inst. agreeable to previous notice, inviting the attendance of those who were inclined, to abstain from putting on mourning apparel, for the loss of the dead, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, being convinced that the practice of wearing mourning apparel for the decease of relatives is often inconvenient and burdensome, and answers no valuable purpose, do therefore express our determination to wholly dispense with it hereafter, and invite our neighbors who coincide with us, in our opinion, to make a like expression of their views, and to add the force of our example.

Resolved, That the foregoing expression of our views, be signed by all present, and their signatures, together with the proceedings of this meeting be published.

NOTICE.

The Agent of the N. Y. State Temperance Society wishes to say to the good people of Covington, Warsaw, Gainesville and Middlebury, in Genesee county, that he has been prevented by extreme ill health from visiting them as he had engaged this week, and trusts they will excuse the failure.—Aug. 19, 1831.

NOTICE.

The Agent of the N. Y. State Temperance Societe proposes to visit the following places in September, to deliver addresses on the subject of intemperance, and to organize Societies where none exist. In each place named, if expedient, he would request the youth to take measures for being organized into a society; and in those places where societies exist, he requests that on the day he is to visit them they would be together as a society, as he has some items of business to present. The meetings can be in the afternoon or evening, as will best promote the object; except in those cases where two places are to be visited in a day: then the first named place must have the meeting in the afternoon, and the other in the evening.

All persons, male and female, young and old, friends and opposers of the temperance cause are invited to attend.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Monroe County Sabbath School Union at Rochester, on the 23d of August, 1831, it was

Resolved, That it be recommended to the Superintendents, teachers & friends of Sabbath Schools in this county to hold Sabbath School celebrations in their respective towns between the 14th of September and the 15th of October next.

Resolved, That the next annuall meeting of this Union be held at the Court House in Rochester on the fourteenth day of September next, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

Resolved, That C. J. Hill, J. H. Thompson, S. Mathews, H. L. Achilles, and E. S. Lee, be a committee of arrangements for such annual meeting.

The Board of Managers request the town associations, where such exist, and the Superintendents and visiters of the Sabbath Schools connected with this Union, to forward their annual Reports to Z. Freeman or E. Pomeroy of Rochester, before the the 12th of September, that the annual Report of the Union may be presented to the meeting. The visiters are requested to communicate early the preceding Resolutions &c. to the town associations, superintendents and teachers, and to procure the annual reports of the Schools.

ONEIDA INSTITUTE

July 18, 1831.

At a meeting of the members of the Onida Institute, convened for the purpose of consulting upon the interests of general education—G. Whipple was appointed Chairman, and J. L. Tracy, Secretary.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. G. S. Wilson, upon the subject of common school education in the west; showing the many great deficiencies which exist there in the education of the young; the small proportion of children who receive any instruction, and the still smaller proportion of teachers, whose qualifications fit them for sustaining the responsibilities of a republican schoolmaster.

After the address, a committee of three was appointed, to draught resolutions expressing the sense of this meeting.

This committee reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the existence of our institutions depends upon the intellectual and moral culture of the rising generation; and that as common schools exert a controlling influence in moulding the characters of youth, all patriots and Christians are called upon to redouble their efforts, in raising the standard of elementary instruction in our country.

Resolved, That the mental and moral qualifications of teachers must be greatly increased, before there can be any salutary reform in our present system of common school education.

Resolved, That the cause of education in the west, calls loudly upon young men in the eastern and middle states, who are qualified for teaching, to throw their influence into that section of the country.

Resolved, That G. Whipple, J. L. Tracy, and H. B. Stanton, be committee of correspondence, to communicate with other individuals and bodies upon the subject of general education, with particular reference to the promotion of its interests in the wertern states.

On motion, Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the Chairman and Secretary, and published in the Western Recorder. GEORGE WHIPPLE, Chairman.

ROME, ONEIDA CO.—A revival has for some time been in progress within the limits of the second presbyterian society of this place. The church is yet small; but numbers, we trust, will soon be added, of such as shall be saved. The converts, we believe, are chiefly from a scattered population, who have lately had the gospel carried to their doors; some of them several miles from the village. While many are so gospel-hardened as to remain unaffected by the most powerful and moving appeals from the pulpit; it is an encouraging fact, and one not to be forgotten, that the messages of mercy, carried to the dwellings of the neglectors of the ordinary means of grace, may be followed with the special blessing of God. "Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled."—W. Rec.

Rev. Wm. Page, late of Jordan, Onondaga county, has entered upon the pastoral charge of the first presbyterian church and congregation, Ithica, vacated by the removal of Rev. Wm. Wisner, to Rochester.

From the Connecticut Observer.

PAST UNITY.—Rev. John P. Durbin, formerly professor in the college at Augusta Kentucky, and now, we believe, professor in the Wesleyan University at Middletown, published a few months ago, a series of numbers in the Methodist Christian Advocate on the subject of Education in the Methodist Episcopal Church. They were ably written, and though we should not assent to all the sentiments, we do not refer to the series for the sake of criticism, but to make a few remarks on a single principle which they contain. In one of his communications describing the various means which the Presbyterian Church, and we presume he would also extend these remarks so as to include the orthodox Congregational Churches of New-England; pursue to extend the influence of knowledge and religion, he makes the following candid admission.—

1. They take every means to produce unity of action under the same impulse, in every great undertaking. I do not condemn, but approve this: they, as we, are one church: "and let there be no schisms among you," says Paul. Where the centre of this unity of action is, we pretend not to know. It may be in the General Assembly. That there is such a common spring is evident to every observer. The same schemes are advocated, and precisely with the same arguments, in the north, south, west by the ministry and people. By this policy they bring their whole policy they bring their whole influence and resources on any undertaking. They are certainly, notwithstanding their doctrinal differences, the most united in enterprise of any churches in the land.

2. They lend decided and uniform countenance in all measures by which they may, in any degre, mould and direct the public mind. Upon the supposition (and this is the supposition on which I go) that their object is to use their influence to the glory of God, I approve. Hence they patronize the various projects and societies of a benevolent (though not strictly religious) nature, as the Colonization and Temperance Societies.

This frank statement from an intelligent member of another denomination, is too gratifying to our feelings to be rejected. We are willing to believe that it is true. There certainly has long been great unity of action in almost every plan of benevolence, throughout the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations.—We doubt whether the world has ever seen so large a mass of men moving forward so harmoniously, for so many years, to the accomplishment of benevolent schemes. There has been such a unity of feeling, of purpose, of prayer and even of argument, that the bad have said it must be the result of secret machinery which would in the end work the destruction of our civil liberties; and the good have thought it was the effect of some common centre of impulse in ecclesiastical organization. But it is neither. We ascribe it first of all, to the 'same Spirit' which has pervaded the hearts of Christians in these denominations, and inclined them not only to the things which make for peace, but to favor the same objects of benevolent effort, and the same plans of attaining these objects. And we further ascribe this harmony of action and argument to the fact that the most powerful minds in these denominations, the minds from which we might expect arguments that would supplant or prevent the use of feebler ones have been foremost in these benevolent designs. Furthermore, there has been, as we believe, thus far, a very unusual degree of disinteredness in those who have taken the lead in the benevolent operations of these churches. None have said that aught they possess is their own—they have had all things common. If they have thought that a given measure might, in some respects, be mended, they have not lightly and rashly defeated it, by urging on the public their own plans, at whatever risk. If they have thought that a given argument might possibly be set in a little brighter light, they have not from a desire to become distinguished, rashly offered their own views without regard to the cause of Christ. Each has been ready to yield up his own interests; his own prejudices, his own opinions, his favorite mode of doing good even, rather than check or run the risk of checking the execution of a benevolent plan. So long as this spirit prevails, and wherever it prevails, there will be such a unity as will astonish the beholder, and very naturally impress on his mind the belief of some secret agency which guides and regulates the whole.

If this is so, who that wishes, not the harmony of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches merely, but the glorious effects of their united action would venture, for any light cause, to make his own opinions, or his own popularity, or his own plans, a cause of dissention! The harmony which other denominations view, we had almost said with envy, is the result, not of ecclesiastical organization, not of creeds and forms, but of a spirit of disinterestedness, of self-sacrificing regard to the kingdom of Christ. And alas, for our churches when this spirit forsakes them! While it continues, we have the testimony of a disinterested witness that the harmony of these churces, without bishops, and without any infallible, or a supreme head, is beyond that of any other churches in the land. They need no fixed, official centre, so long as they 'keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace.'

INSTALLATION. On Thursday, July 14, Rev. Talcott Bates was installed over the Presbyterian congregation in Manlius, N. Y.

ORDINATION. Rev. Amos Blanchard, editor of the Cincinnati Journal, was ordained by the Cincinnati Presbytery, to the work of the Gospel Ministry, on the 26th ult. The case was appealed, however, from the decision of the Presbytery, to the Synod, on the ground of Mr. B's unsoundness in the faith. It appears that a text for a trial sermon had been assigned Mr. B., at the suggestion of Dr. Wilson, with a view to elicit an expression of his sentiments in regard to the Doctrine of Original Sin. He did not shrink from the responsibility. The consequence was, that there were 11 Ministers and 7 Elders in favor of his ordination, and 4 Ministers and 9 Elders opposed to it. The latter appealed.—Obs. & Tel.

MICHIGAN.

We mentioned last week, that a revival was in progress at Tecumseh, as the result of a protracted meeting. Our agent, Mr. Smith, now in Michigan, writes, that 44 have recently been added to the church in that place—20 on examination, and 15 by certificate. He further mentions, that the Presbytery of Detroit is to meet at Ypsilanti, on the fourth Wednesday of the present month—and that a Four-days Meeting is immediately to follow. The interesting scenes which, for months, have been witnessed on the Reserve, begin to be witnessed in Michigan.—There are pleasing indications, that the cloud of mercy, which is pouring its showers all around us, is extending to the feeble churches, just struggling into existence, in that Territory.—ib.

IMPORTANT FACTS,

Selected from the last Report of the American Temperance Society.

By this document, it appears that there have been formed on the plan of abstinence from the use of ardent spirit, more than 3,000 Temperance Societies; 18 of them are State Societies; that more than 1,000 distilleries have been stopped; that more than 3,000 merchants have given up the traffic, and more than 300,000 belong to Temperance Societies. If as many more abstain that do not belong to Temperance Societies, it would make 600,000; and if as many more of children and persons in their employment now abstain, it would make 1,200,000 brought under the influence of the temperance reformation.

Among more than 100,000 people, no one has license to sell ardent spirit but the tavern-keeper; and ardent spirit has been excluded from more than one hundred taverns. Their keepers will not consent, for money, to poison even the traveller.—More than three hundred who were drunkards, have ceased to use the drunkard's drink. More than 6000 others abstained for a time, till some retailer or some moderate drinker enticed them to go back, and now there is reason to fear they will perish.

In one town, in which the quantity of ardent spirit used has been diminished nine-tenths, the bill of mortality has been lessened more than one fourth. Should every town in the United States do the same, and should it be followed by a similar result, it would lessen the annual bills of mortality more than 70,000.

The Hon. W. Cranch, chief judge of the court of Columbia, has estimated the loss to the country from the use of ardent spirit, at more than $94,000,000 annually. The value of all the houses and lands in the United States in 1815, was $1,771,311,908. If the value has since increased in proportion to the increase of population, it would be now $2,519,009,222; and the loss to the consumers of ardent spirit, and others in consequence of its consumption, would, according to Judge Cranch's estimate, be in thirty years, $2,832,750,000; being $313,740,778, more than the present value of all houses and lands in the United States; all of which, and much more, might be saved by abstinence.

Intemperance in Philadelphia.—The Managers of the Pennsylvania Society for discouraging the use of Ardent Spirits, are collecting facts illustrative of the influence of spirit drinking in Philadelphia. The venerable coroner of the city and county says: "In a very great portion of the cases which have officially come under my notice, and in which I have had sufficient evidence to trace a cause, the use of spirituous liquors has immediately or more remotely, led to the termination of life in such a way as to call for my investigation; and it is highly probable that many, of whose habits I have had no means of information, were hastened to their end by this scourge of our country."

The following is from the superintendent of the Almshouse.—In reply to your inquiries as to the number of cases of pauperism admitted into this House for a year, I have to state, that in 1830, there were admitted:—

Men,	2349
Women,	1761
Children,	508—4310

You will not understand that these were in this House only once, for not less than two-thirds of the men and women had been here before, and some of them twice, some thrice, some five times during the year. Not a few of them have been "Customers" of the house for 5, 10, 15; and a few for 20 years. The majority of those who are now in the House will in all probability die paupers. As fast as they die, their places are more than filled up with others.

Most of the children are now thrown upon the public for support by the intemperance of their parents and others, who have had the nominal care of them.

Your next inquiry will be answered by the following letter from two physicians of the House.

"From the observations we have made during our residence in the Philadelphia Almshouse, we have no hesitation in believing that at least three-fourths of the individuals admitted into the institution, have become its inmates from their habits of intemperance.

2. We have known during the last six months several instances of confirmed mania, occurring in individuals predisposed to the disease, which appear to have been induced by intemperate habits, as well as a great many instances of temporary insanity.

We believe that four-fifths of the deaths occurring in the Almshouse Infirmary, are induced by diseases, which have either been originally produced or very seriously aggravated by the precious intemperate habits of the patients.

4. We may state in general terms, that we have often witnessed sudden death occurring in drunkards, who to all appearances, possessed excellent physical powers; and who appeared to be unconscious of the fatal effects their habits were calculated to induce."

[Signed] A. M. ALLEN,
ISAAC PARISH.

The deaths for a few years past, have averaged about 450 per annum.

The patients are from different classes of society and from almost every profession.

Letters from Europe.

NUMBER TWENTY-THREE.

Rome, 18th March, 1831.

My dear H.—The doctrine of indulgences is in full vogue at Rome. Indulgence, however, does not mean license for future sins—at least it is denied that such license is ever granted. It signifies rather pardon for the past—but this is granted by the quantity. It is not an uncommon inscription over the door of a church—"Plenary indulgence to the living and the dead." This of course means something more than the mere forgiveness of sins in this world—the power of the priest invades the future, so far at least as to enable him to relieve souls from the pains of purgatory. In the centre of that stupendous pile of ruins—the Colisium—a plain wooden cross has been erected, and occupies of course the arena where rivers of christian blood has flowed at the order of the persecutors of the church. This cross bears an inscription that the kissing of this wood shall procure to any individual who performs the pious act, "indulgence for two hundred days." Accordingly the place is constantly crowded with hundreds and hundreds of persons who come to kiss away their sins. In one of my rambles a few days since I met with an Oratoire, enclosing a Madonna in a glass case in a niche of a garden wall; and here the good Catholic was informed that 200 days indulgence could be obtained by repeating before this altar the Litany entire, by the gracious clemency of a Pope who lived in the early part of the fourteenth century! This 200 days seems to be a favorite period of indulgence, and it is used, very commonly, as a kind of small change for the payment of little debts, as a convenient reward of merit. The present Pope has just announced this indulgence to all persons, now in the schools of the priests and training for holy week, who shall be able, at that time, to repeat the catechism without missing.

It is difficult for a protestant to understand this doctrine of indulgence perfectly. It is certain that they are favors sought after by the people with great eagerness, and that the power of the priests to grant or withhold them at pleasure, gives them a control over the credulous which is altogether irresistible. As nearly as I can learn, this indulgence, whether granted to the living or the dead, has a direct relation to the pains of purgatory.—To the dead, at the prayer of their surviving friends—provided they can pay for it—the indulgence conveys relief, either complete, or for some stipulated portion of the suffering to which the souls have been condemned. In the case of the living, an indulgence, for instance, of 200 days, strikes out from the list of sins for which the soul must otherwise suffer in purgatory, all those committed within the said 200 days—in short the indulgence is a kind of certificate which he carries with him to show to his keepers in the "middle state," on the production of which they are obliged to their great disappointment, no doubt, to abate just so much of his punishment as is specified in the ticket.

According to this doctrine, they must be lucky fellows who happen to live and be present at the ime the sacred door of St. Peter's is thrown open. This is the great portal of the northernmost o the three great naves of the church, and is thrown open every quarter of a century, and kept open for a year. It is now walled up. A grand jubilee takes place on its being opened, and during the year, all Catholics who enter by this door to their devotions at the shrine of the Apostle, thereby purchase indulgence for life.

This purgatory seems to have been a necessary invention, after the Pope had appropriated Hell for the exclusive accommodation of heretics. His own subjects would have become rebellious and beyond control, if future punishment of some kind had not been contrived for them. In preparing, however, his place of torments, he took care to make it as much like Hell as he could well devise it. Even in duration it must vie with its prototype; for I understand the Pope sometimes grants indulgence—or in other words relief from purgatory—for the moderate period of ten thousand years. It was certainly very benevolent in him, when devising this curious place, to retain the entire control of it in his own hands. The Devil is but a sort of locom tenens of this patrimony, which descends regularly to each succeeding Pope as absolute proprietor—and the latter may of course drive the other out, if he does not mind his cue, and take possession himself in person.

I went the other day to look at the strange things to be enacted in the Pope's private chapel, on the Quinrial Hill. On approaching the Palace, the first objects that attracted my attention were a multitude of plain red coaches with servants in shabby livery, flying about in every direction, going out and coming in, and principally engaged in gathering up and bringing in poor priests and prelates, in preparation for the approaching ceremonies. The Pope has forty of these red coaches in his service. His own equipage, however, is magnificent beyond description, and it always requires six horses to draw his Holiness. At the Portal of the Palace I found a small body of Swiss guard, some with spears, and dressed in tri-colored ancient costume, with slashed doublets and hose, and a quadruple ruff around the neck. Another body of these men were formed in open column from the outer door of the chapel, through a large anti-apartment to the chancel. Through the ranks of these guards, the Cardinals, about forty in number, marched in to their respective places in the chapel. They came in, one by one, with great pomp and ceremony—each being preceded by a priest who bore his red cap, and followed by another who bore the train of his robes. On arriving at the front of the altar, it was necessary, of course, that he should kneel for an instant—which, however, did not cost him much trouble, as he was assisted by his attendants, both in getting down and getting up. When seated, a priest sat at his feet to hold his hat and little toy-crown, and to adjust his robes for the various movements and positions required in the exercise of the morning. Several personages of the Pope's personal and political household made their appearance in black court dresses, and wearing steel swords.—When every thing was ready, the Pope entered from the Palace by a private door. Before him marched one of the household bearing the golden tiara, for he wore the mitre. He was followed closely, by two cardinals, who bore the train of his robes, and he was attended on entering by many priests, prelates and others, all having their appropriate office—among them were the mace-bearers, and an officer, bearing the dignified appellation of the Roman Senator. At the moment of his entering, twelve officers in uniform, all young noblemen, with drawn swords, formed a semi-circle around the door-way of the chancel. On passing the altar, the Pope stopped to kneel; one attendant taking off and putting on his mitre, others adjusting his robes, and others assisting to ease him down and raise him up. When the Pope was seated on his throne, which is erected on the side of the chapel near the Altar, the cardinals began a procession, and presenting themselves before him in succession had the honor of kissing his hand, which his Holiness graciously extends to each in turn, covered, however, with the golden hem of his garment. After this ceremony, the religious exercises are commenced. The officiating priests always knelt before the Pope, at the commencement and close of every separate service. When the Pope would condescend to look into a book, it was held before him by a canon kneeling. Whenever any of the numerous retinue on service had occasion to pass before the Pope, as happened almost every instant, it was never done without kneeling. Three separate times incense was offered before the throne and to him that sat upon it. A Canon who was entitled to this inestimable privilege on account of the peculiar part which he bore in the ceremonies, prostrated himself, tandem, before the Vicegerent, and devoutly kissed his red slipper—which was as near the holy toe as he could come. The same thing was done by the Monk who had the honor to preach before him, immediately before mounting the pulpit. After the sermon a priest kneeled before the Pope and prayed, at the close of which the latter rose and graciously bestowed his blessing on the kneeling multitude around him, simply by stretching out his right hand and shaking the benedictions off from the ends of his fingers.—High mass was celebrated, and at the end the Pope embraced three cardinals with a Pax tecum, and through them, by the same form, it was transmitted to the rest of the cardinals. The Pope then left the throne and the chapel with the same circumstance with which he had entered, and immediately made his appearance at a balcony of the Palace which looks out on the great square of Monte Cavallo. Ten thousand persons were assembled in this square, including soldiers, and the whole mass dropt instantaneously on their knees, as his Holiness presented himself at the window. In this position they received his benediction, shaken off in the same manner as before, from the ends of his holy fingers—about which, blinded I suppose by heresy, I could discover nothing remarkable, except the flashes of light which shot out from a brilliant diamond which he sported on his hand.

Of the scene in the chapel I hardly dare suffer myself to speak beyond the faithful, though brief, account I have already given you. I cannot avoid saying, however, that the worship was most evidently offered vastly more to the Pope than to the Deity; and that the attempt at display and pomp, falling infinitely short of what is witnessed in well regulated theatres every day, was not enough to save the whole scene from being to me, both contemptible and disgusting.

I ought also, while on this subject, to add; that Catholicism in this country, is a vastly different thing from what it is in America. So far as I have observed it there, it seems to have been purified in crossing the Atlantic—at least it has been by coming in contact with our institutions. Certain it is, that it exists among us, relieved of many of the absurdities, and superstitions which belong to it at Rome. From my own personal acquaintance with individuals of that communion in our country, I could bear most willing testimony to their rational piety and the purity of their lives—but were I am, they can know nothing of the corruptions of that faith, as it exists in this unhappy country. Yours, B.

From the Cincinnati Journal.

DESIGNS OF THE PAPISTS.

In our paper of July 24th, we inserted an article selected from the Christian Soldier, accompanied with a few Editorial remarks, in which we took occasion to warn Protestant parents against entrusting the education of their children to the commissioned agents of the Pope of Rome in this country. We also cautioned them against placing their children at the Jesuit college recently established in this city. This caution was founded on the recent disclosures which have been made in relation to the manner all Popish Seminaries, Colleges and Public schools are managed. As Catholics have repeatedly asserted that their church never varies, either in doctrine or practice, we presume that what she directs to be done in one case, will be done again in similar circumstances. This is certainly a fair presumption, and until the Roman Hierarchy shall by public confession, and profession of deep, humble repentance, disavow any more connexion with the monstrous birth of the inquisition, the millions of murders which she has perpetrated, and the ten thousand idolatrous rites and ceremonies which she has had the audacity and impiety to substitute for the doctrine of the Bible, we shall continue to consider her votaries capable of perpetrating any enormity which lies within the compass of human depravity to invent, and human skill and sagacity to execute.

We have become so much accustomed to have our editorial course censured by Atheists, Infidels, Unitarians, Universalists and others, that it gives us no surprise to find a feed servant of a foreign prince assailing us through the columns of a political newspaper. It would be surprising indeed, if Roman Catholics were not foremost in the ranks of opposition. As that church has ever taken the lead in vexing the true church of God, and wasting it, so all who expose her daring usurpations, her secret intrigues and dark designs, may expect to be treated with a measure of the same spirit which lighted the fires of Smithfield, and reared the dungeons of the inquisition.

We shall therefore enter into no controversy with J. J. M. who appears in a late number of the Cincinnati Gazette. He has once publicly avowed that his church never varies, either in spirit or practice. This is a candid avowal.—The same spirit then, actuates her councils now, it is presumed, which devised the Bartholomew Massacre: which instigated the bloody Mary to drench England with Protestant blood; and which, for many years, annually burnt at her Auto de fes ten thousand human beings.—With the sworn servants of such a power, controversy is useless. Because with a Jesuit, according to Pascal, 'the end sanctifies the means,' and who could expect either fairness or candor in an antagonist who believes that sins committed in behalf of the "Holy mother church," will meet with a ready absolution from the misnamed vicegerent of Christ on earth. The writer talks of the Popish papers that have denied the statements of Dr. Snyder and Riley. These papers have not denied the essential statements of these gentlemen, but have attempted to defend the course pursued in the Georgetown Seminary. J. J. M. has roundly denied the assertion of Dr. Riley, with respect to his being deprived of his Bible the moment he entered the Seminary.—The following are the Doctors words.

"Previous to my leaving home, my mother gave me a small Bible, with the hope that I should make good use of it. But her hopes were all in vain—for on reaching the college, our trunks were subjected to ridgid inspection, and every thing removed beyond our control, except such books and things as they in their wisdom saw fit to entrust with us. Several of my books I never afterwards saw—what became of them is better known to others than to me. Fathers Grassi, Kohlman, M'Elroy, Gobert, Wallace, Fenwick, Debuisson, and others, then conspicuous at Georgetown College can, no doubt give some account of them. Restitution of unlawfully borrowed property is enjoined by these spiritual fathers on those who, in their confessions acknowledge the commission of such a crime. Paul once said to the confident Jew, "Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal dost thou steal?" But it may be said the books were of a demoralizing character. They were such as a solicitous parent had given me, and one was what God had given to a ruined world for its salvation. I occasionally saw one of these books in the hands of a novice, a candidate for Holy Orders, or rather for full admission into the society, and though I recognized it as mine, I dare not whisper that it was. Should this fall into the hands of any now at the college, and should they find stowed away in some dark dusty corner, a small, gilt-edged, morocco bound, diamond type Bible, with the subscribers name in it, their predecessors shall receive my forgiveness for having shut out the light from my own mind for the time being, if they will place it for perusal in the hands of any deluded Protestant child now in the college."

A similar statement, Mr. Charles Constantine Piese, who replied to Dr. Snyder does not deny. Every protestant child who has come out from these schools untainted, confirms the truth of this statement.

We stated in our paper, that the college recently erected here, was a proselyting scheme on the part of the Roman Hierarchy. That such is the designs of all the Catholic efforts in this country, we have the testimony of Catholics themselves. Following is an extract from a letter of the Bish. of Cincinnati, to the Society for the propagation of the faith in France. The savages here spoken of, are the Protestant population of Cincinnati, to effect whose conversion these wily Jesuits have been sent out from Europe.

The Bishop writes thus:—

"Since Mgr's. arrival, a great number of persons have presented themselves for instruction in the true religion. I hope that, if the Lord blesses our efforts, we shall be able to finish the cathedral and to found a college. We shall see the truth triumph: the temples of idols will be overthrown, and the seat of falsehood will be brought to silence.. This is the reason that we conjure all the Christians of Europe to unite, in order to ask of God the conversion of these unhappy infidels or heretics. What a happiness, if, by our feeble labors and our vows, we shall so merit as to see the savages of this diocese civilized, AND ALL THE U. S. EMBRACED IN THE SAME UNITY OF THAT CATHOLIC CHURCH, IN WHICH DWELLS TRUTH AND TEMPORAL HAPPINESS—while we are expecting to be gathered into that celestial sheepfold, where will exist but one flock and one shepherd!"

If any of our readers have before this entertained a doubt respecting the wishes and ultimate designs of Romanists in regard to our country, it is hoped that the fervent desire expressed at the close of this honest, though rather dessultory letter will remove it entirely. In fact, the strong cords, and green withes have almost bound our sleeping Samson. Happy will it be if this series of disclosures shall awake him to an effectual exertion of his great strength. For we trust that, when sufficiently roused, he will be able to carry away the doors of this prison gate, posts, bar and all.

It may be useful to put on our record the following letter of acknowledgment, from the "Bishop of Cincinnati," to "His Highness, Monseigneur, the Grand-Almoner."

Bishop Fenwick writes to the Grand-Almoner of France, the Prince de Coy, Bishop of Strasburg, thus:

"My Lord,

"Permit me to recall myself to your recollection, and renew to your highness the sentiments of sincere obligation, and profound respect, with which the goodness and kindness of your highness, in dispensing the aid furnished by the Association for the Propagation of the Faith, have filled my heart, and which are the sure pledge of my eternal gratitude.

"I have acknowledged the receipt of twelve thousand five hundred and forty francs, * sent me by M. D—, in the month of September 1825, after the benevolent distribution, made by the Superior Council, in the month of June that year, in favor of my poor diocese, which truly stood in need of it, having no other resources but the charity of the faithful in Europe. I flatter myself still, my lord, that I shall soon be permitted to acknowledge another sum for the year 1826, from similar munificence in the Superior Council, under the direction of your noble and benificent highness. I venture to flatter myself also that the charity and magnanimity of your highness, and the generous zeal of the Superior Council, will not be restricted in regard to my poor diocese, to 1826 nor to 1827, since there remains so much good to be done—as the bearer of this letter, my worthy secretary and confidant, the Abbe Reze, can convince your Highness. He will give you particulars in reference to my own actual situation, the progress of religion in this country, and the wonders which the good God has condescended to produce with very feeble instruments.

"Thanks to the Divine Providence and the charity of our benefactors, our cathedral is finished; it is decent, and even beautiful for this country, but it has exhausted my funds. I have no seminary, but am in the greatest need of it. I fear lest my faithful and indefatigable missionaries sink under their excessive toils, and lest this new vine of the Lord be destitute of evangelical husbandmen. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

"I beg therefore the benificent charity of your Highness, and the continuance of aid in the distribution of the alms of the Association, for the propagation of the faith. Condescend my lord, to grant me your protection, and your generous influence with the Superior Council, for the love of God, and the salvation of souls; these motives I know are dear to you.

"Accept my lord, the expression of my respectful homage, and of the high consideration, with which I have the honor to be,

"Your Highness's most grateful and
Most devoted servant.
EDWARD FENWICK.
Bishop of Cincinnati."

* It appears that there was assigned to the American Missions, in the year 1824, 5, 6, 7, and 8, by this Association alone, the sum of 331,536 francs, 90 centumes, making about $61,666. Of the distribution made last year we have not as yet a report. The particular assignments for 1828, were published in our last number.

NEGRO CHRISTIANS.

I shall subjoin here a remarkable circumstance, communicated by Capt. Smith, who was long resident at Tripoli. He says, that among the negro slaves mostly of a vigorous handsome race, brought from the interior of Africa to Tripoli, there are many who call themselves Christians, though they are extremely ignorant, and strangers alike to circumcison and to the most ancient symbol of Christianity—the Cross. One evening, just as a ship belonging to the Pachas of Tripoli, bringing some of these slaves from Algiers came to anchor, the evening bell was rung in a vessel which lay at a distance; the negroes joyfully sprung up, called to their companions, embracing one another with transport, and exclaiming "Campan! Campan!" This Latin or Italian word led the interpreter to inquire the cause of the general joy.—He was informed by the slaves, that in each of the negro towns of their native country there was an open place where stood a building provided with a bell. This bell was rung morning and evening for prayers, after which the priest delivers an exhortation to the assembly. The people knew nothing of idols, or images of saints, in their temples, but they seemed to have a sort of holy communion. Where is the country of these black Christians situated!—Present state of Christianity and of Missionary Establishments, by F. Shobert, 1828.

ANECDOTE.

Rev. Samuel Wesley, senior, while residing in London, went one day into a coffee-house to obtain some refreshment. There were some gentlemen in a box at the other end of the room where he was, one of whom, an officer of the guards, swore dreadfully. Mr. Wesley saw that he could not speak to him without much difficulty. He therefore desired the waiter to bring him a glass of water. When it was brought, he said aloud, "Carry it to that gentleman in the red coat, and desire him to wash his mouth after his oaths." The officer rose up in a fury, but the gentleman in the box laid hold of him, and cried out "Nay, Colonel, you gave the first offence.—You see the gentleman is a clergyman. You know that it is an effront to swear in his presence" The officer was thus restrained, and Mr. Wesley departed.

Some years afterwards, being again in London, and walking in St. James' park, a gentleman joined him, who, after some conversation, inquired if he recollected having seen him before! Mr. Wesley replied in the negative.—The gentleman then recalled to his remembrance the scene at the coffe-house, and added, "Since that time, sir, I thank God I have feared an oath and every thing that is offensive to the Divine Majesty; and as I have a perfect recollection of you, I rejoiced at seeing you, and could not refrain from expressing my gratitude to God and you." "A word spoken in season, how good is it."—Moore's Life of Wesley.

Established Church of England.—The London World publishes most faithfully the corrupt conduct of the English clergy. It says, that "in the city of Canterbury, an individual who assists the clergyman as parish clerk, is box-keeper and distributer of bills for the theatre, and door-keeper at a catch and glee club!"—This last is probably a social party, enlivened by intemperate drinking, met to sing lewd songs.

Materialism.—A pretended free-thinker in England, who had brought forward a number of absurdities to prove that we have no souls, asked a lady present, with an air of triumph, what she thought of his philosophy?—She replied, "It appears to me, sir, that you have been employing a good deal of talent, to prove yourself a beast!"

A Mrs. Howe, of Chambersburg co. Pa. had a cancer removed from her breast recently, which weighed thirteen pounds. What was most singular, the mass contained in the centre a large portion of bone, extending in different directions. The patient, though much emaciated and far advanced in life, suffered very little during the operation, which was performed, including dressing, &c. in less than twenty minutes.

Extraordinary Case.—The Tolland, Conn. Advocate contains a notice of a case in which a son, 2 years old, of Mr. Asa Smith, of Ashford, in this state, drank half a pint of corrosive sublimate, which acted powerfully as an emetic.—Dr. S. Patridge, distant two miles, of Willington, was immediately sent for, who, on his arrival, found the stomach of the child was violently spasmodically contracted—vomiting had ceased, and death seemed to be depicted on the countenance of the child. The doctor immediately gave an emetic of vinum antimonii and enamas of male elm; and after these had done operating, he gave liquid laudanum, succeeded by a liberal decoction of the elm—and in 24 hours the health of the child was perfectly restored.—Middletown Sent.

THEATRICAL!!

Extract of a letter from Paris, June 22.

"A circumstance, thoroughly French, occurred here last week. There is in Paris a small theatre in which all the actors are children under seventeen. One of the principal actresses in this establisment, a pretty interesting girl, named Bruce, aged not quite fourteen, had it appears, formed an attachment to a young man of seventeen, named Lewis Cretz, an orphan entitled to some property. Parents and guardians were, as usual, unfavorable to the lovers, and a few stolen interviews were the only solace of this precious pair of turtle doves; it has, however, been clearly ascertained, that nothing criminal had passed. On Tuesday last, Miss Bruce having had a quarrel with her parents in the morning, went to rehearsal at the theatre, as usual, but instead of returning home; met master Cretz by appointment, and walked with him to the Bois de Boulogne, carrying a small basket containing a pair of pistols. On reaching a secluded spot, the young gentleman made a bed of leaves and flowers, on which the young lady sat down, and undoing her upper garments, opened her left breast, when her lover, by her desire, shot her through the heart with one pistol and himself through the head with the other. The bodies were found in this state by a gamekeeper two days afterwards. By their side was a letter in high-flown language, stating that they were about to voluntarily snatch themselves from the tyranny to which they were subjected, &c. &c. In short, the whole affair was arranged with strict attention to scenic effect, and I almost doubt whether the children were quite aware that they should find it more difficult to come to life again, than after the catastrophe of a tragedy on the stage."

A Papist Female Teacher of a junior School, lately burnt a New Testament. The Protestant children sent to her for instruction, must cherish a very high and sacred regard for the divine oracles by such an impressive example!

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

For the Observer.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THOROUGH EDUCATION IN THE GOSPEL MINISTRY

Mr. Chipman—In my last letter, I endeavored to prove the importance of thorough education in the ministry, from the character of the present age. On this branch of the subject, I would add, that such is the diversity of sentiment and so various are the views and feelings, even of those who profess to preach the gospel, and such the intelligence, if not the pride of intellect, of the present day, that men will think and judge for themselves. Hence it is vastly important that every minister be able to reason accurately and clearly, to enlighten and correct the errors of men, and to show them in all things a plain and obvious reason for the sentiments he teaches.

I will add only in this place, that the present is peculiarly an age of Revivals of Religion, in which the moral and christian character of our church, for years to come, is to be formed. Let this subject be considered in the most limited view, and I doubt not, that every experienced minister will unite with me, in the opinion, that if he ever needs superior wisdom, sound discretion, extensive acquaintance with the system of revealed truth and a thorough insight into the windings of the human mind, it is during the season of religious revival. All his energies are now demanded and there is ample opportunity for displaying all his prudence, wisdom and piety.

At such a time there is great danger of substituting feeling for correct principle; zeal without knowledge for correct sentiment; of inventing measures to advance the work which are not only unnecessary but unwarranted by scripture and injurious to the cause. As this is specially a time of uncommon activity and christian effort, there is danger of forgetting our entire dependence on the Sovereign Agency of the Holy Spirit and giving a prominence and power to human effort, which is peculiarly dangerous to souls and dishonorable to God. This is a time in which the errors of Arminianism are most successfully propagated by false teachers. To these errors all men are more or less exposed. There is a powerful tendency in human nature towards them. And it requires no common stock of mortand mental furniture, to secure those who are anxious on the subject of religion, from relying on some false foundation. The danger to which I have alluded is not the only danger. The opposite is perhaps to many who are at ease in Zion and who seem to quiet their consciences, equally alluring and equally fatal—which is denying the necessity of human agency and personal effort in the work of salvation; leaving all in the hands of God. Hence a minister must wisely distinguish and guard against the errors of Arminianism on the one hand and Antinomianism on the other. To do this successfully, he must have a mind well furnished and well grounded in the faith of the gospel—more than this he must understand and preserve the symmetry of the gospel system. I shall give a striking example of what I mean, which will at the same time that it shows the existence of the danger, exhibit also the value of education in the preacher of the gospel. It is this. During the great revival in New England, the clergy were divided into three great divisions. In the first were Edwards, Bellamy, and many other distinguished men, who, like them, were rich in theological learning and with all their hearts devoted to the work. They preached the doctrines of the Bible clearly and systematically. In the second division were the Antinomians and Arminians, who opposed the revival. Though these did not harmonise in their religious sentiments, yet their extremes of error met as to their practical influence. While our evangelical churches rose from the first, the various heresies of the present day had their origin in, or were handed down by, the second. In addition to these, says an able writer, there was a third class, "who rushed into the Revival as the horse rusheth into the battle, confident, zealous and reckless." "Instead of trying the spirits, whether they were of God they believed every spirit. Every thing that was found to attract attention and affect the minds of men, they regarded as good. Their object was to excite all the feeling possible. This led to the love of every thing which could produce excitement and a determination to have it. And this led to a preference of such measures and such preachers as were found to produce excitement the most immediate and most violent: and these are the spiritual fathers of our moral deserts." Take Edwards, Bellamy and the class to which they belonged and we shall find them distinguished for literary and theological attainments, while the second were somewhat elevated for their literature, but extremely deficient in correct theological learning, and the last was crowded by those who were generally without the ordinary attainments, which, even the public sentiment at that time, demanded for the christian ministry. Hence we have Edwards on the Revival, and the Religious Affections, two of the most splendid productions and the richest legacies to the church, that any of her ministers have left.

A volume instead of a solitary paragraph, might be written on this subject, and before leaving it, I would suggest one enquiry, viz. do not uneducated ministers more often advance the opinion, that the doctrines of the gospel are not to be preached during revivals of religion, while those who more fully understand these doctrines and the character of the human mind, find this the very time to preach them and the grand security of substantial and scriptural hope to the trembling sinner!

If the churches are not well instructed in the doctrines of the gospel and wisely directed in the course of christian duty, this age of revivals will be followed by a cold and cheerless formality and a lamentable dearth in resources of benevolent effort. But such is the intelligence of the present age, and so few, comparatively, are the numbers of uneducated ministers, that I would not admit the prospect of such a result—yet I would suggest the danger as possible, and who avoided, by such precautionary measures, as the nature of the case and the experience of the church will warrant.

From the imperfection of our nature, it is by no means surprising, that errors and imperfections should arise during revivals of religion.—Much is yet to be learned respecting the best manner of promoting them, yet there are general principles respecting them which are well established, and which cannot be changed or disregarded, without destroying the work or impairing its character. Whatever is new or untried which is in accordance with these general principles, may be introduced with probable safety; but whatever is in opposition to these principles can never be admitted with safety or with the divine approbation.

It is infinitely desirable, that the age of religious revivals be a perpetual age, and speedily usher in the predicted day of the Redeemer's glory. And there is no room for doubt, that, as truth is the grand instrument by which the Holy Spirit carries forward revivals of religion, very much depends upon the manner in which the gospel is preached. And it becomes a question of serious enquiry, whether the success which attended the preaching of the apostles, was not in some degree, at least, owing to the manner of their preaching. Though, in this age of superior light and with the same divine truth to preach, our success is comparatively small. The apostles were men taught, for at least three years, by Christ himself, and afterwards under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and no doubt they preached the truth in a manner, more agreeable to the divine will, than is done by preachers of the present day. They understood the doctrines of the gospel and rightly divided to every man a portion in due season.

To secure the richest benefit from revivals of religion, there is required, no ordinary degree of intellectual discernment, and facility in adapting the peculiar truths of the gospel to the condition of the people, both to the public assembly, and to the constantly changing state of individual feeling. If correctly understood and properly presented this is the time to secure an experimental knowledge with the doctrines of the gospel. Those subjects of religious revivals, who are taught to compare their experience with the truths of the gospel and to discover the influence of particular truths upon their minds, are seldom found unstable in religious sentiments or easily led astray by erroneous opinions. I need not say how much depends upon the preacher, in properly arranging and presenting the truth, so that the peculiar states of the mind may be met by truth corresponding to its immediate necessity.

In conclusion, I would inquire, what would have been the result, if the uneducated clergy of the days of Edwards and Bellamy, had been thoroughly trained in the theological schools of those men? And what was the actual result of the want, among them of those correct and systematic views of truth which Edwards and Bellamy embraced and preached? If the first had been the case, revivals of religion might have been continued with purity and power in unbroken succesion from that day to this, and we have been far advanced in the day of millenium. Let the revivals of the present age be produced by the truth correctly understood and properly presented and the noon-tide glory of that promised day may soon arrive. Yours, &c.

THE DUTY OF CHRISTIANS TO BELONG TO TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

NO. 2.

Oh! Christians! Look well to yourselves!—You are standing on a fearful eminence, exposed to the eager gaze of all. That part of the wicked world who love strong drink, are looking stedfastly on, beholding with intense interest every movement of the moral world, especially the church of Christ, in the cause of temperance. They hate the temperance society. They load it with all the opprobrious epithets that can be drawn from a polluted heart, rotten to the core. If you join not the temperance society, though you drink not, you will have the good will of these men. They delight in every thing that looks like division, or wrangle in the church.—They hear some professors of religion speak unfavorably of temperance societies; and this they know to be speaking so far unfavorably of their brethren who are members of these societies. In this division of feeling, they are taught by their master, the devil, to rejoice. They respect you for your temperance, for that is respectable, even in the eyes of the drunkard, and do you honor because you can withstand the entreaties of your brethren to join that "detestable cold water society." "We did not suppose," say they, "that the more candid part of the church would join it." And to us, they say exultingly, you cannot get such men as your brother A. or B. to join your temperance society, even though they will not drink ardent spirits. Alas! how true! You can readily see, christian brethren, that the line of distinction is drawn between members of temperance societies and those who are not; and if you are not members, you are on the same side of this line with the most bitter opposers of temperance, and with those who love strong drink. Whatever your example may be in other respects, you strengthen them in this, their opposition to the temperance society. They know what strength they receive from you, and they honor you for it. The friendship of the world is enmity with God." And now as you are respected by this class, you detract so much from the respectability of temperance societies, and therefore, so far destroy their influence upon this class of people. And if they die drunkards will not the blood of their souls be found in your skirts!

The dark prince of hell is looking on. He dreads to see the church of Christ come unitedly into the cause of temperance. Nor does he let them so come. He fears the consequences of such a measure. He knows that multitudes who have come out on the side of temperance, having no hope and living without God in the world, have since found joy and peace in believing, and are lost to him forever. No wonder then if he trembles and points his artillery at temperance societies. No wonder if he is alarmed at consequences so fatal to himself, as attend the success of this cause. And be not surprised if he use every argument and device to keep you from entering fully and spiritedly into it. He knows your influence upon many of his subjects; and trembles lest you should join the temperance society and influence them to go and do likewise; and the Redeemer should make them the trophies of his victorious grace as he has already done in numerous instances, and thus wrest them from his malignant wrath. Yes, this enemy of all righteousness, this instigator of all crime, this friend of drunkenness, is the enemy of temperance societies. And would not you in all things desire to act contrary to his wishes? You profess to be members of Christ's body; "What concord hath Christ with Belial?" Are not you on the same side of the dividing line with Belial? Look well to yourselves, christian brethren, for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people, Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. We intreat you brethren not to please this grand adversary, this enemy of your souls, so much as you unavoidably please him by withholding your names from the temperance society.

You, christian brethren, are looking on with deep anxiety, to see what stand you take. You have long wrung their hearts with anguish.—You have caused them "to hang their harps on the willow and sit down and weep by the rivers of death because" for you the cause of temperance languishes. Thousands of our citizens are yet carried away captives, and many habitations made desolate by the demon of drunkenness. Have they no claim upon your affections! Will you refuse to hearken to their voice when they urge you to do what the Lord is pleased to bless! Ought there to be a division of the members of Christ's family in this thing!—"Who is thy brother but a part of thyself?" You brethren know this to be the cause of God; and consequently know it to be the duty of every christian to engage heart and hand in it. There is much to be done, "and whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Not in part but wholly.

Ministers of the gospel are looking on, and are grieved because some of their flocks hold back, and come not up in this work as is becoming all who partake of his Spirit, who came from heaven and bled and died for guilty man; who felt so much for our guilty wretchedness, that all the glories of the upper world could not induce him to forsake his mission until the work was done, until he had said "it is finished," and gave up the ghost. They often, and with bleeding hearts beseech you in Christ's stead, to come out decidedly for him. They know the influence you exert against temperance societies, and they fear lest the blood of souls be required at your hands. They know too that in the great last day men shall be judged according to the deeds done here in the body. They know that talents have been given into your hands to improve, that when your Lord cometh he may receive his own with usury. What improvement do you make of your talents in the cause of temperance! You have no right to hide them in the earth.

But there is yet one who looks upon the heart. His eye is not dim towards his creatures on account of any inclination of the creature's heart. He observes with equal accuracy them that do evil and them that do good. He knows and feels for all the miseries of all the human race. He is the widow's God and judge, the Father of the fatherless. He looks with infinite delight upon every thing that is good in itself, and tends to do away vice. He looks with pleasure upon the efforts of his faithful children to put out the fire of intemperance. We know he is pleased because he has blessed their efforts, and blessed them too beyond the expectation of the most sanguine friends. Temperance Societies, with their efforts as such, have been the means of doing much in this cause; and to show how God regards these societies, we have only to point you to cases where revivals of religion have followed large accessions to them, and where individuals generally who joined them, have been made the recipients of his grace. Yes, the Holy Spirit has followed the steps of this good work—has gone into families and taken those persons who had before nnited with these societies, and left them who had not. This is true in numerous cases. There is a close connection between the success of this cause and the operations of the Holy Spirit: and does the Holy Spirit move by chance? Does he not rather move according to his own good pleasure? And now you belong to none of these societies. What part or lot have you in the matter! Perhaps some of you drink not the destructive liquid, but does God see that you do more than this! Does he hear your prayer ascending daily in behalf of this important cause! And if he does, what is the substance or amount of these petitions? Examine, christian brethren, as in the presence of that God who governs the universe and will at last be your judge; whose eye is fixed, and will ever remain fixed upon your hearts. You can pray for the conversion of the world, but you do not expect your prayers to be acceptable with God unless you use his appointed means; and you expect still less where there is an aversion to these means. The person who would attempt to pray with these feelings, would virtually tell Jehovah that he did not think he was taking the right course to convert the world.—Can you then expect to be heard when you pray for the success of the cause of temperance, if you will not use the means which God dilights to bless? In order to offer an acceptable petition, there must be cordial submissisn to his will.—Consequently you, if you attempt to pray for this cause, must be under the necessity of destroying the efficacy of your prayer, by saying "my will not thine be done." Although this may not be uttered yet God reads the heart.—No blushing confusion can cover it from his sight. No formal leaning to another subject can draw off his mind. No! God reads and remembers, and will remember to the last day. "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." God knows if you sincerely desire the triumph of this cause, and he knows too if you desire it in your own way. And now what can you do in aid of temperance, if you cannot pray! What blessing do you expect upon your efforts if you cannot ask it of God! God sees that some of you have done much to implant and encourage intemperate habits in others by your example or by furnishing them with the deadly draught. Such of you as have done this, are placed in peculiarly unhappy circumstances—circumstances which forbid your doing any thing to eradicate that evil, you once propagated. Upon you rests a vast weight of responsibility. Upon you there is a double claim to activity. You ought to be the first on the list of abstinent men, and the first to beat up for volunteers.—You have but a short time in which to do away the evil you have done. If you have helped to make but one drunkard, unless he is reclaimed, you have helped to make an infinite amount of woe. "Whatsoever," then, "thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Place yourselves where you can pray, and where you can act.—O, my brethren! no longer be the stay and staff of wicked men and devils; no longer grieve your brethren, or refuse to hear the watchman's voice; and we entreat you insult God no longer by your vain oblations, but do that which is pleasing in his sight. Give your names to the Temperance Society, and thus extend your influence to other parts of the world, and do much in this blessed work of reform. M. N.

From the New York Evangelist.

MORAL CONDITION OF INFANTS.

NO. 1.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE SUBJECT.

As the holy scriptures were given by immediate inspiration from the Spirit of truth, all which they directly express or plainly imply in their communications to us, is included in the faith once delivered to the saints. This is required to be also our belief. To the sacred volume alone are we indebted for all that we can know concerning the moral state, character, or condition of infants, as they commence a rational, immortal existence. From the scriptures it is evident that they are sinfully depraved, in consequence of their connexion with fallen Adam, as the federal head of the race; that, therefore, they need to be regenerated by the Spirit of God, "born again," in order to be saved. This general truth, in relation to them, is denied by no orthodox, Calvinistic divines. But, as it respects the question, in what their depravity consists, or how they become thus depraved, in consequence of a connexion with the sinful progenitor, divines are not all agreed. Some suppose that infants first become sinfully depraved by their own voluntary exercises or acts as moral agents; that is, by their actually sinning. Others believe, that, previously to any exercises or acts of theirs, they have a sinful moral nature, propensity, or disposition inbred in them, as coming from a corrupt origin; that this determines their moral character and state in the sight of God—that it predisposes them to act sinfully, as soon as they become capable of moral agency: in a word, that their moral nature, or, in scripture language, heart, is itself sinful, independently of any exercises or acts put forth by them. These different schemes, with reference to original depravity, are known by the names of the exercise and the taste systems.—As general modes, they include all the ways in which the subject of the depravity of our race has been attempted to be explained. Perhaps no other method, entirely different from either of these, can be conceived. One or the other, therefore, is doubtless the true mode of accounting for what is commonly called original sin.

The scriptures as all must admit, rarely speak of infants, except in connexion with other subjects of revelation; or it appears to be rather in an incidental manner, that they are brought into view by the Spirit of inspiration. The reason doubtless is, the scriptures are addressed to us as understanding moral agents, capable of knowing and being influenced by truths and motives presented to our minds. But it cannot be so essentially important to us, to be informed what the holy Sovereign of the universe does in the case of infants, who are incapable of knowing the things about which revelation treats.—Yet infants are so brought into view, under such circumstances as may teach us, that our reasoning from the nature of moral agency with us, as adults, must be wholly inapplicable to the infant, as it comes into existence in an embryo state. The adult has his reason and faculties of perception matured: he can know what truth and duty are; but the infant has them not matured at all, or so as, in any sense, to constitute it an understanding moral agent, with the knowledge of right and wrong. It comes into the world with a human voice, human shape and features, indicating that it will act as a moral agent, if it lives to have the intellectual and moral faculties, with which it is originally formed, matured enough for their proper exercise. But, as to any thing that the newly born infant now knows, or manifests as an understanding moral agent, it appears to us to know no more than the young of a brute. The parent, for instance, who should treat it, at that early period, as such an agent, would be thought destitute of common judgment or discernment, in relation to the infant of an hour or a day. Yet those in the exercise scheme suppose that God may view and treat it as an agent acting for itself, with reference to eternal concerns; or, that, if it be not such an agent, thus acting, they consider it as having, as yet, no moral character in the sight of God, either holy or sinful. They maintain, that all that is sinful, or of the nature of moral depravity in any human being, young or old, consists exclusively in moral exercise or action, in violation of known duty or obligation; that there is no other depravity in any of fallen Adam's race. But they still admit, it appears, that the infant has a human soul, at least, as soon as born; that it is then an immortal being. If it be thus an immortal existence, it must be considered as a subject of the divine kingdom, though not as, at present, an agent, yet as having a moral nature, disposition, or heart, that will incline it to act as it becomes capable, and fitting it for the one or the other of the states to which all moral beings will be assigned in a future world.—These are heaven or hell; there is no third state revealed, as the condition of moral beings. "The spirit of a beast," as we read, "goeth downward to the earth," conveying the idea that the beast ceased to be, at the dissolution of its body; but "the spirit of a man goeth upward," meaning that he will exist absolutely for ever. The spirit of the infant goeth thus upward, as it is immortal. There can be no medium between an immortal and a perishable existence. As those in the exercise scheme admit that the infant has an immortal soul at the birth, it would seem that they must, to be consistent with their system, fix the commencement of moral agency with the infant as soon, certainly, as it is born. For if it should die then, or soon after, and infants die at all periods from the birth, they must consider it to have done something, to have had some moral exercise or exercises, fitting it for the happiness of heaven or the misery of hell. They must admit that the infant, dying ever so young, goes to the one or the other place; and they cannot suppose it to go to either, with a character answerably, and that decides to which it shall go. If they consider it as saved without any previous preparation made in it, they cannot consider it saved as a human being, one of the fallen race, through the Mediator having died for it. Perhaps it may appear, however, that the infant has an immortal soul before the birth. That it has, we entertain not a doubt from the scriptures.—Would they, in this case, attribute moral agency to it thus early? that it really understands moral right and wrong, and acts as a moral agent in the womb of its mother? The truth is, after all philosophizing or speculating with regard to the subject of moral agency, we know really nothing concerning the original properties of the human mind or soul, as man comes into existence in an embryo state. He has no innate ideas or knowledge; nor are any of his faculties matured enough to render him, in his early infancy, a moral agent. He has every thing to learn. To consider, therefore, the infant as, from the first, a moral agent, as really as the adult whose faculties are matured, and whose thoughts have been exercised to discern good and evil, is contrary to all that we can discover in relation to the newly born infant. All that can be discovered is, whether it be born, as we say, with reason, meaning, with a foundation for the exercise of it, if it lives long enough for this; or whether it will be an idiot.

Some, in the exercise system, admit that we have a nature, and that "our entire moral depravity is by nature;" and still they maintain that our nature, itself, is not depraved or sinful. If by nature, they mean our moral nature, there can, as we conceive, be no foundation for this distinction. To say that our depravity is by a moral nature in us, is the same as to say that our nature is morally depraved. A moral nature must have moral qualities predicable of it, inherent in it; otherwise it is not distinguishable from a physical nature. But if our depravity is by a physical nature, either intellectual or corporeal, this necessarily runs it into a physical depravity. By whatever nature our depravity is, this nature must be considered as itself depraved, or the cause of depravity in us. But how a nature, that is supposed innocent or pure, should yet be the cause of sinful depravity, is, to us, inconceivable; and, we presume also, to those in the exercise scheme. If it is not, they can explain how depravity is by nature, and still the nature not wrong, that is, not morally corrupt. What we mean by our depravity being by nature, is, a nature that is sinfully depraved, in se; and therefore we call it our moral nature or disposition, the nature of the soul, as originally polluted; not that this depravity of, or by nature, is imputed to the infant; but it is inbred in it, by descending from fallen Adam, through intermediate parents. It is the child's own corrupt nature, as really as fallen Adam's was his from whom he was descended. This sinful nature, thus inbred in the child, must be changed by the Spirit of God in regeneration, or neither infants nor adults can see the kingdomof God. The moral pollution descends unbroken from Adam, through his race, by laws of propagation which God has established, and by which every creature that generates produces its likeness in all respects. Thus fallen Adam begets a son in his own moral likeness, and this son begets another in his, and so depravity is communicated from father to son through every succeeding generation.

TIRONYMUS.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

CONSTITUTIONAL DEPRAVITY.

Mr. Editor—We hear much of a kind of depravity, or iniquity, which, if we may believe what we hear, is transmitted from parents to children, by natural generation; and is inherited by descent, having come regularly down from Adam to us.

Of this iniquity, we are told that children possess it prior to their birth—previously to, and independently of, any moral exercises of their own. Of an infant before its birth, and while, according to Paul, it had done neither good nor evil, it is said "His soul was sinfully depraved." Again we read of "a depraved moral nature, or heart, in the infant, previously to moral exercise."

That wickedness, iniquity, or sin, does not consist in the possession of bodily appetites, unused, or not indulged, will probably be admitted: and that those appetites are not in themselves sinful, is evident, from the fact that they were found in Adam before, and after, his fall—in Jesus Christ, who never sinned—and are found in brutes, who are neither holy nor sinful. That which is common to beings who are perfectly holy—to beings who are entirely sinful—and to beings neither holy nor sinful, is not, and cannot be, of a moral nature: for, if it were, it would not be the same thing in three classes of being, so distinct from, and opposite to each other.—The same is true of mere natural affection. If these things were of a moral nature, they could not belong to beings that have not, and never will have, any moral character.

Neither is sin, which is meant by moral depravity, predicable of any of the original, or constituent powers, or properties of the soul.—There is nothing of a moral kind in the mere power of perception—in the capacity or ability to perceive ideas, or objects, or subjects: for this power, property, capacity, or ability, is common to saints above and sinners below—to angels and to devils. If it were of a moral quality, it could not be the same in all. If it were of a moral quality, it would either retain that specific moral quality, wherever it is found—or if it would be changed, whenever and wherever moral character is changed: and would be a different thing in Satan and in Adam, before and after their falls—a different thing in the man that is born again, from what it was prior to the new birth.

The same is true of the power of understanding—or of the ability to understand. To be capable of understanding, or able to understand, is not of itself, or in itself, morally evil: for if it were, it would be evil, and morally so, in Gabriel, who never sinned: and in his Maker, who cannot sin. Neither is the possession of the faculty of understanding, morally good: if it were, it would be good in Satan, and in all the legions of the damned; but it is not morally good in either: there is no holiness in hell. The mere power of understanding, is the same thing in its kind, in a saint and in a sinner; every new-born soul knows this, by his own experience: and, when he repented, he did not repent of having possessed a wicked power or faculty of understanding, but he repented because he had perverted, and abused, that power, or ability to understand, which God had given him. Whatever our theories may be, we never blame any person for being able to understand the truth, or falsehood of ten, or ten thousand, propositions; but we blame men for the perversion of that power. Just so with God: we never hear him blaming any person for being capacitated to know; but he blames people for the abuse of this power.—We do not learn that any person ever was, or will be damned, because he possessed the power of knowing; but many have been damned for abusing this property of the soul.

It is so with the power of memory. This is one of the constituent properties of the soul, given by its Maker. In its kind, it is the same thing, in the willing subject, and in the desperate rebel against God—in him who loves his God with all his heart, and in him who labors to his utmost to overturn the throne of God. Hence it is evident, that the mere faculty of retaining ideas, when once received into the mind, is not of a moral nature, quality, or kind; but the use of it is good or evil, according to the choice of the possessor.

It is just so with the capacity of feeling. I speak not now of bodily sensation; but the feeling of the soul. God has made souls capable of feeling, and feeling intensely: and they are capable of pleasure and of pain—of right feeling and of wrong; but moral evil is not, in the bible, attributed to the mere ability to feel, nor is holiness predicated of this property of the soul. The fact is, the power of feeling, or ability to feel, is not, in itself, holy or sinful; for it is common to the righteous and the wicked—to Paul and to Dives—to Gabriel and the Devil.

There is another property of the soul, which is also constitutional; and which we ought to consider: I mean the faculty of loving and hating, or a capacity to love and hate. This may as well be called a power of the soul as any other of its properties. The same power, ability, or capacity, is requisite to love and hate. The exercise of this property consists in affection, which is love or hatred. This power is strong in men—stronger still in angels and devils—and infinitely strong in God.

Saints and angels love and hate; yet they are perfectly good or holy. God loves truth and holiness, with all his heart; and he hates falsehood and sin, with the same strength of affection: and he is infinitely good and holy. Wicked men and devils also, love and hate; yet they are totally, or entirely wicked.

The power to love and hate, is common to the righteous and the wicked—to him who is infinitely holy, and to the most wicked being that ever has existed. This power to love and hate is not, in itself, good or holy; for, if it were, it would be holy in Satan and his legions: neither is it wicked or morally evil; for, if it were, it would be evil in God, and all the inhabitants of heaven. This shows, at once, that the capacity or power to love and hate, is not of a moral nature, quality, or kind: and if not, then, constitutional depravity, or physical iniquity, lies not in this capacity,—lies not in the constitutional ability to love and hate.

Neither is any iniquity found in, or attached to, the mere use of this ability; for a moral agent can both love and hate, and not be wicked: he can love and hate, and yet be holy—he can love and hate, and yet be wicked. The use of this power is common to God and creatures—to heaven, earth, and hell: and what is common to them all, can neither be sinful nor holy.

This is in perfect accordance with scripture; and agrees with the dictates of plain common sense. We never read that God blames any body merely for loving and hating: and, whatever may be our speculations, we neither blame others, nor are willing to be blamed by them, merely for loving and hating. We always think it right to love some things, and hate others; and God does the same. Where, then, lies the iniquity of wicked men and devils? I answer—

In the manner of using this, and the other powers, or properties, of the soul. If we rightly use them, that use will be holy—if we use them improperly, that use will be wicked. The relation in which we stand to other beings, binds us to love them, to certain extent—God with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourselves. An entire compliance with these requirements, or a complete fulfilment of every obligation, is the perfection of holiness—any deviation from these rules—any neglect to fulfil these obligations, is sin. It is a violation of obligation—a transgression of the law: and all sin recognized in the bible—all the sin that is there charged to men or devils, is reduced, or reducible to this.

I may add, to make the matter still more clear, men, in common with all other moral agents, are capable of choosing and refusing, or have power to accept and reject—to choose and to refuse.—This power, and the use of it, are common to all moral agents, holy and unholy—to God—the inhabitants of heaven—and the dark world of hell. Therefore, neither the power, nor the mere use of it, is holy or sinful. Any moral agent may choose and refuse, and be entirely holy—he may also choose and refuse, and be as entirely wicked. The evil, then, lies not in the constitutional capacity to choose and refuse—not in the mere act of choosing and refusing; but in the manner of choosing and refusing. So much depends on circumstances—they decide the character, and the destinies, of men.

I think it has been clearly shown, that moral depravity or sin, is not to be found in any of the physical properties of the soul, which I have considered. In which, then, of its constituent properties does it lie? I answer, in neither: for those things which prove that moral depravity lies not in any one of those properties of the soul which I have considered, will equally prove that it lies not in any other physical department of the soul;—that it lies neither in any one, nor in all the constituent properties of the soul, when taken together. If this be true, then it is utterly impossible, in the nature of things, that an infant should have a depraved, sinful soul, before it has any moral exercises.

If the view which I have taken of the subject be correct, sin is not, and cannot be a constitutional thing: neither can sin be transmitted, by propagation, from one generation to another.—Moral character is not transferable from one to another; nor is the guilt of one imputable to another—"the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

But we are informed that this constitutional iniquity, which belongs to the infant before he has any moral exercises, and independently of them, belongs to its heart. To this I do not assent: for I know of no proof, of any name or nature, that the heart is one of the physical or constitutional properties of the soul: and to say it lies in the heart of an unborn infant, without proving that it has a heart, is to beg the question in debate. This will not do. We must have proof, or we are all afloat, on a tempestuous ocean, without pilot, helm, or compass.—Perhaps an objector will be ready to say, what then is the heart! I reply—

For any thing that yet appears, God uses the word heart in the same sense, and to mean, or to express, the same thing we do: and when our systems and speculations are not concerned, we do not use the word heart to designate any constituent property of the soul. We use the term to designate the affections; which are exercises of the soul.

Thus we speak of giving the heart to a friend—to God. By this we mean no more than that we love them—that we place our affections on them. Thus, by the heart, we mean the affections, the exercises of the soul; and not any physical property, or constitutional power, either of body or of mind.

We say of a man that loves earthly things, "His heart is full of the world." By this we mean his affections, the exercises of his soul, and not any physical property, or cabinet of his soul, where he hides or hoards up his property. Or we say, "His heart is wholly on the world;" and by it mean his affections are wholly on the world; not that any constitutional faculty of the soul is fixed on the world.

So, and just so, God requires us to give him our hearts. He requires us to love him with all the heart; that is, with the strength of affection of which we are capable. He allows us to love ourselves, to a certain extent—requires us to love our neighbors to the same extent—and him with all the heart. Thus he requires us to place our hearts on ourselves to a certain degree, on other men to the same degree, and on himself to the utmost degree. In the affairs of life, and of eterual life too, we use the term heart to designate the affections; and we never use it otherwise, systems being out of the question. God uses it in the same manner.

This shows that the manner in which the term heart has been used, when systematizing, and meaning by it a substratum, or a physical property of the soul, is inapplicable to the business of life—the business of salvation: and this proves that such a manner of using the term is incorrect.

If the heart be not a physical property of the soul, and if the affections be the heart, then neither an infant, nor any other person, has a heart till he has moral exercises.

On this ground, it is easy to see how Adam could fall—how a sinner can make himself "a new heart"—and why God should command him to do it: for, in relation to one another, and to ten thousand other things, men change their hearts, and make them new hearts, almost every day of their lives. V. D. M.

MISSIONARY.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Capt. Finch, of the U. S. Navy, the accomplished officer who commanded the Vincennes in her visit to the Sandwich Islands, speaks of the Missionaries and their calumniators in the following terms:

It is a most lamentable fact, that the dislike of the Missionaries by the foreign residents, has a tendency, as yet, to paralyze the efforts which the natives are so laudably making to render themselves worthy of the support and confidence of enlightened Christian and distant nations;—and this one circumstance will render, for some time to come, the visits by our ships disagreeable to the officers who have to make them. The constant complaining against the Missionaries, is irksome in the extreme, and in such contrast with the conduct of the Missionaries, themselves, that I could not but remark their circumspection and reserve with admiration; the latter never obtruded upon my attention the grounds or causes they might have to complain; nor did they advert to the opposition they experienced, unless expressly invited thereto by me.

If the understandings of the natives are imposed upon by the religious injunctions of the Missionaries, the evil will ultimately correct itself, by the very tuition which they afford the inhabitants, more certainly and effectually than by the denunciation and declamation of foreigners, who are interested and temporary sojourners, without other than moneyed transactions to engage the confidence of the natives, whereas, the Missionaries have adventured their families among them, and stand pledged as to the issue of their undertaking before, not only the American public, but the world at large.

By the diffusion of knowledge among the islanders at large, I can readily suppose that the influence of the resident whites, and the abject and slavish adulation and distinction heretofore paid to them, have been diminished in some degree: will not this circumstance, to a limited extent, serve to explain the sourness and bitterness which the whites cherish, and, on many occasions display towards the chiefs as well as the Missionaries.

Capt. Finch, who bears this honorable testimony to the character and usefulness of the Missionaries, may be considered as a disinterested witness, as he belongs to a different denomination from them, being himself an Episcopalian.—Ed. Obs.

SOUTH AFRICA.

MISSIONS OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The following authentic and remarkable account of the progress and influence of the gospel among the Bechuanas, an African people residing 800 miles north of Cape Town, was published originally in the "South African Commercial Advertiser" of Dec. 15th, 1830. It is the substance of an address delivered by the Rev. Mr. Moffat, of Lattakoo, the principal town of the Bechuanas, at a public meeting in Cape Town, after he had been fourteen years a Missionary in South Africa.

Lattakoo was first visited by Mr. Campbell in 1813, when permission was obtained from the king of the country to send Missionaries among his people. The first seccessful attempt to commence Missionary operations among them, was in 1816. The former condition and character of the inhabitants—the manner in which the Missionaries sought to bring them under the purifying civilizing, ennobling influence of the gospel—and the success of the self-denying and benevolent enterprise; are strikingly exhibited by Mr. Moffat.—Missionary Herald.

It must be recollected that the Bechuanas are altogether ignorant of a future state. They have no idea of any existence beyond the present.—They suppose that all the pleasures, enjoyments, and honors of this world terminate in annihilation. When the spirit leaves the body, they suppose that it has ceased to exist; and if a plebian, the body is dragged away, and left a prey to beasts; and if that of one more honorable, the body is committed to the grave, with many unmeaning ceremonies, while the females chaunt a dirge, deploring the eternal loss, and then return from the grave without one pleasing hope of immortality.

The consequence of such deplorable ignorance is, that they participate in every species of sin, & think as little of plunging their spear into their neighbor's bosom, as of killing a dog. A traveller among them, like a bird of passage, may be led to form a favorable opinion of their humanity, their fidelity, and good sense: but far different will be the judgement of those who have half the acquaintance with the native tribes which the Missionaries possess. There you will see man tyrannizing over the females—the weaker vessels doomed to bear infirmities and afflictions of which their husbands are comparatively ignorant. There you will see the men reclining under the shade of a spreading tree, while the females are most of the year employed preparing the ground, sowing the grain, and gathering in the harvest. There you may see a mother of twins without compunction allow one to be strangled by the hands of her attendant, when it has but just entered the world. If there be one of each sex, the female is the victim: if both of one sex, the weaker is cut off. Their minds are debased—they are earthly, sensual, and devlish.—There might be seen a nation, looking to a man, called "a rain-maker," to open the windows of heaven, and cause it to rain upon the earth; and while such deceivers maintained their influence over the people, the Missionaries were made the butts of their indignation, and were treated as the supposed cause of every evil which befel them.

In endeavoring to convey a knowledge of true religion to the natives, we taught them that they were men, fallen and sinful men, and we exhibited to them the character of that God against whom they had sinned. We disclosed to them the doctrines of the eternal state. They were startled as if they had seen the Judge descend, the graves open, the dead arise, and the adjudication of the awful day. We unfolded to them the meaning of the gospel. In fulfilling the ministry committed to us, our faith was tried; and often have we hung our harps on the willows, from which we could not sing. Thousands, who were saying to us "Away, away," and threatening to drive us back with the spear and with fire. While we were even yet praying, the blessing descended; it ran from house to house, from heart to heart, and in a short time, the whole station seemed to be filled with prayers and praises.

That season was one I cannot easily forget.—It was indeed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Many received the truth, and a church was formed. The natives have acquired a taste for reading and writing, and are taught in their native language. We trust we have also taught them to hold converse with Heaven, and to meet the king of terrors with unshaken faith.

How great the change in those that believe! I have seen the contrast in death bed scenes. I have attended the couch of some of the most respectable and informed of the natives; but ah! how gloomy, and how distracting! The untaught Bechuana, on the article of death, maintains profound silence. The subject of death is revolting to him, and if he happens for a moment to look to the gloomy prospect, his thoughts start back with horror. Far otherwise is the experience of those who have tasted of the power of the world to come. I have recently seen the same people on the brink of the grave, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, telling their weeping relations that they die not as the brutes, but die to live forever.

They have been taught industrious habits, and to appreciate and be grateful for the boon which has been handed to them by British Christians. A temporary place of worship has been built free of expense to the Society, but this being found insufficient, the foundation of a large building has been laid, to which many have subscribed of the little they possess. A water course, extending for miles in length, six feet wide, and from two to ten feet deep, has been dug, and is kept in order by a public subscription made on the station. The station is increasing in size. Its capabilities are great; its prospects are encouraging.

We have an extensive field of Missionary labor. We have hundreds on the Mission premises, and thousands in the neighborhood.

A tribe nearly 400 miles to the east, heard of the Lattakoo Mission, and as if a star had been seen, the king of that nation sent two of his powerful men, with their attendants, to see what kind of beings we were. They came, saw our manners, regularly attended divine service, and experienced our kindness. A report having been circulated that some of the tribes, through which they had to pass on their return, intended to murder them, they earnestly solicited me to accompany them back to their own country.* I consented; and that journey was to me one of the most interesting I ever took.

*A remarkable fact, that the name of Missionaries not only protects the European traveller, but they are looked up to for protection by the natives themselves in passing from one nation to another.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

From the S. S. Instructer.

THE SABBATH SCHOLAR.

A little boy attended a Sabbath school at Colchester, England, whose heart the Lord opened to attend with delight, to the pious instructions of his affectionate teacher, and it was soon evident that God was by the Holy Spirit's influence, making those instructions the means of leading him to the knowledge of himself.

He was taken very ill, and was confined to his room and to his bed, and though at first it was painful to him to be absent from his teacher and his school, he could rejoice in the prospect of an eternal world, and longed to be with the dear Redeemer who had loved him & given himself for him: and it was evident that he was daily ripening for glory.

A day or two before his death, he was informed that a little girl in the same yard had been doing something very bad. He requested she might be sent for, when he talked to her a great deal about the sin of which she had been guilty; & then drawing up the sleeves of his night gown, and shewing his wasted arms, he said, "Mary, this is death, I am dying, but if you continue to be such a wicked child, where I am going you will never come, but will be sent to that wicked place:—let me entreat you to fear God and keep his commandments."

A few hours before his death, he broke out in singing, and sung so loud as to cause his mother to inquire what he was doing—"I am singing my sister's favorite hymn, mother."—"But why, my dear, so loud!" "Why!" said he, with peculiar emphasis, "because I am so happy."

Just before his death, with uplifted hands, he exclaimed, "Father! Father! take me, Father!" His earthly parent went to lift him up, when, with a smile, he said, "I did not call you, father; but I was calling to my heavenly Father to take me; I shall soon be with him;" and then he fell asleep in Jesus.

WHAT I LIKE.

I like to see Sabbath school teachers carry the same look with them through the week, and manifest the same anxiety in their countenances, which characterise them on the Sabbath.

I like to know that teachers wrestle with God in secret, for the souls of their children, as well as talk with them in public.

I like to see teachers kind and affectionate one towards the other—striving to help one another by their counsel and prayers, and be fellow-laborers together for the grace of God to descend upon their children.

I like to hear teachers talk a great deal about their school, during the week, and inquire often about the state of their respective classes, whether there are not some among them who are likely soon to embrace the Saviour, or who need particular counsel, or special prayer.

I like to see teachers stop their scholars in the street, and pleasantly ask them some simple questions about religion, or about their present welfare, that will lead them to think that their teachers are interested in all that relates to them, and especially, very solicitous for their everlasting good.

I like to see teachers always ready to answer the enquiry, What must I do to be saved? It speaks volumes.

I like to see teachers willing to contribute for, and help support, those works designed expressly to aid the cause of Sabbath schools. It looks well.

I like to see teachers meet for the special object of seeking the divine blessing upon their labors, as often as once a week. It appears as though they were wrestling with God, and would soon be blest.

I like to see the Sabbath school concert filled. I expect a revival when I see this.

From the Sabbath School Herald.

LONG PRAYERS.

Some evil practices seem almost irremediable. Among these is making long and tedious prayers at the opening of Sabbath schools.

I was lately present on such an occasion. The prayers occupied at least fifteen minutes. Were I to attempt to convey my own views of the effect upon the patience of others—particularly the children—I should say that it occupied more than double that time. It embraced thanks for ordinary personal favors, petitions for a blessing upon the ministers of the gospel, for the efficacy of truth, for the heathen, &c. &c.—all drawn out with the minuteness and particularity which usually characterize similar exercises, at prayer meetings, in times of general stupidity.

That the exercises of every Sabbath school should commence with prayer, I am not disposed to deny. As far as my information extends, this is done; and were I acquainted with any such school on which the blessing of Heaven was not first and invariably asked, I should not expect it to flourish. Indeed, it seems absolutely necessary that this should be done, in order to give an air of seriousness to the hour, and secure the smile of Him, without whose smile and favor all efforts to instruct and reform the minds of children will be absolutely fruitless.

But in no circumstances ought we to forget where we are, and the objects for which we are there. In the Sabbath school we are with children, whose attention it may be difficult, if not impossible, to keep fixed upon one object for any considerable length of time. Their minds are usually active and disposed to pass rapidly from one thing to another. With minds thus wavering, interest cannot be preserved without carefully varying the objects of thought and attention. If this fact be entirely disregarded, no good effect is likely to result from any exercise, however serious and important.

I am aware that in restricting prayers to any given length, we combat a strong and extensively prevailing prejudice. But circumstances as well as feelings should be consulted. Christians may pray as much and as long as they please, in the retirement of their closets. And in the conference room they may embrace within this exercise a variety of subjects. But the purpose for which they meet at the Sabbath school, necessarily confines teachers to one specific thing; and the limited time they are together, renders it impracticable to protract the prayer beyond three or five minutes, without infringing upon other duties.

This is a mere hint; but enough. Let it give rise to appropriate reflections, and I doubt not the evil will be speedily remedied.

LOTTERIES.—We intended to give Mr. Schuyler a rap which he would feel; but we did not think of making him quite so crazy as he shows himself to be in the following article, from his Lottery Herald of the 10th inst. It will be seen at once, that he has no hope of patronage from those who have any respect for religion. If he had, he would not insult them so wantonly. We give the article entire, that Mr. S. may have the whole benefit of it; and we add a few notes, to perfect its operation.—Vt. Chron.

"There is a Paper printed in Vermont, called the "Vermont Chronicle," which said paper is devoted to sectarianism and the advocate of Connecticut blue laws, or any other law that will draw power into the hands of the Church and State party. The editor belongs to the sleek-faced, and sloping eye-lid fraternity, and as in duty bound, denounces every thing that is not a little spiced with devotion to his profession. If he expects to promote the cause of Christianity, and reclaim the vicious from their wicked ways, he must adopt some other method besides attempting to control the private affairs of the public. This Doctor Cantwell has been good enough to give us his most particular attention, and literally says to the freemen of Vermont, "you shall not buy Lottery Tickets from Schuyler, or any other vender, with a chance of something comfortable,(1) but you must give it all to the missionaries and your poor minister."—Verily these straight walkers, with demure and sanctified phizzes, are possessed with most consummate impudence. It reminds us of a Missionary to the Indians, who helped himself to a horse on his route which he forgot to pay for, but who excused himself by saying that "his limbs became so fatigued in seeking for poor deluded sinners, and it was all for the good of the cause."

"Now this ignoramus had better inform himself a little upon the subject of Lotteries before he attempts to write again, or admit communications into his book of sermons. We would, however, inform him that the Treasury of the small State of New York are responsible for all prizes drawn in the New York Lotteries, and if the State was not bound, the Managers themselves could loan Vermont a trifle should they wish to build a few bridges, dig canals, or establish rail roads. (2) Some of the Venders got a kind notice in his last, whom he says are no better than they should be.—Granted. But we advise the reverend gentleman to keep dark upon this subject, as we think we can point out a few stray sheep in his flock; but admitting that a profession has unworthy members, it is poor argument to denounce the whole trade; besides a licensed vender is not apt to be a very great scamp, else he would be troubled to find his boadsman for 10,000 dollars, &c. (3)

"The organ of the Chronicle is a big affair in this city, with scarce a dozen readers, called the "Genius of Temperance," seldom seen, and less thought of. The arguments of both are as futile as harmless: and deemed wholly unworthy of contradiction. They are too nonsensical and preposterous to deserve a serious reply. These fellows that meddle with business that don't concern them are generally incapable of advancing sound and reasonable doctrines."

(1) How great a chance, Mr. Schuyler! Let us look at your estimate, in this very paper.—Packages of tickets costing a $100, are warranted to draw $42,50; costing $220, warranted to draw 102; costing $88, warranted to draw 34; costing $100, warranted to draw $38,25; costing 192, warranted to draw $81,60.

(2) No doubt of it. Lottery managers, who do an extensive business for a few years, amass princely fortunes. Why should they not, if they sell tickets as much above their value as your prices and warranties show? The mischief is, that they get their wealth without conferring any benefit upon the public in return, and chiefly out of the pockets of the poor.

(3) Voila! A lottery dealer's test of moral excellence! Mr. Such-a-one cannot be a very bad man, for he can get bondsmen for 10,000!!! He who can get bondsmen for $50,000, by mortgaging real estate to that amount, or giving other good security, is of course five times as virtuous; while he who cannot get bondsmen for one thousand, because he has no estate to mortgage, and is just gone with the consumption, is a vile fellow, and ought to be hooted from society, or locked up in the state prison!—Here is an exemplification of one of our objections against lotteries. They tend to make all who have much to do with them like what Mr. Schuyler shows himself to be in this sentence.—They fix the mind of their votaries so intently on money, that every thing else ceases to appear valuable to them. Industry, and honesty, and generosity, all become nothing in their eyes. The apprentice or clerk must pilfer the change-box of his employer,—the debtor must part with his only means of payment,—the husband and father must squander his only means of purchasment for his suffering family, because they are intoxicated with the vain hope of sudden wealth in the lottery. The result of disappointment is, still further, fraud, theft or forgery, to procure the means of purchasing more tickets; drowning sorrow by intoxication; or ending it suddenly, so far as this world is concerned, by suicide! Such Mr. Schuyler must know to be the natural tendency of his business; such its infallible results in numerous instances. Yet he flatters himself that he is "not a very great scamp," because he can get bondsmen for $10,000!!!

Notwithstanding, or rather by means of, his affected contempt for the Chronicle and its "organ," it is plain that he feels very deeply. Our remarks have doubtless produced unpleasant effects upon the seat of what he regards as his moral character—upon his pocket. It is possible, therefore, that our labors may be as "a drop in the bucket," which is to wash the foul stain of lottery gambling from the state of New York. Even a possibility of this will induce us to think of the subject now and then.

From the Vermont Chronicle.

BLASPHEMER, BEWARE!

Not long since, at a general muster in one of the western states, a wicked man, being addressed on the subject of religion, was filled with rage, and uttered the horrid declaration, that if Jesus of Nazareth were there he would wring his neck! Suddenly a violent spasm seized the neck of the blasphemer, twisted it round, rolled his eyes nearly out of their sockets, and left him in this frightful position, as a living monument of outraged Omnipotence!! This fact was stated in a public meeting in this vicinity lately, by a respectable gentleman of the bar from Ohio.

The "gentleman of the bar" alluded to is known to us, and we believe that his statement may be relied on. The statement is perfectly credible. It is only a strong instance of the effect of a guilty conscience on the bodily functions, producing, in this instance, a spasmodic affection, which might be, we know not how permanent. The operation of this righteous law of Providence, established it would seem, for the special purpose of punishing atrocious wickedness, is doubtless one reason why so many are drowned on the Sabbath, and why blasphemers have sometimes suddenly fallen down dead, and why the murderer is sometimes haunted by a spectre, as real to him, as any object of sight whatever. Distinguished physicians have pronounced religion favorable to health; and there are degrees of guilt, which the human constitution cannot sustain without injury. The precise form of injury may depend on the bodily constitution, and also, as in the instance related by our correspondent, on the guilty thought which oppresses the mind.

THE BIBLE VS. PRIESTCRAFT.

Extract from the Annual Rep. of the Am. Bible Soc. for 1831.

KANAWHA.

Every patriot and friend to his country should aid this good cause,—"The Bible has God for its author, truth without error for its matter, and Salvation for its end." All who are opposed to Priestcraft, and wish to see it put down, should lend their aid to the operations of Bible Societies. Put the Bible into free circulation, and let the community be well instructed in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and Priestcraft receives its death blow. The craft of wicked designing priests never would have prevailed in a Christian land but for the people's ignorance of the Bible. Children grew up in ignorance of the Bible, and upon that ignorance the priests began to ride. And this is the true origin of "Priest riding." None have ever been Priest ridden but such as have been brought up in ignorance of the Scriptures. Among the Catholics, it has been the policy of designing priests to keep the people in ignorance of the Bible, and it is upon this principle that they are so hostile to Bible Societies. They jeopard their craft.—Now, since opposition to the Bible Societies seems to be a part of the priests' craft, all who are opposed to Priestcraft should advocate the Bible cause.

BOSTON, Eighth Ward.—Few families were found destitute of the scriptures, and those are Roman Catholics, who are so entirely under the influence of their priests that they are unwilling to receive a copy. The reason invariably assigned for refusing is, "Our priest does not allow us to read your Bible."

BRISTOL.—"The great region west of the Alleghanies must be supplied with the word of God, and that speedily, or the agents of the mother of abominations, backed by their tens and hundreds of thousands a year, from foreign states, will soon persuade them that it is an unsafe book; and soon it will be found that the Bible cannot gain access to the majority of these United States, till God shall send another Luther to make an overturn, and another Rogers, and Latimer, and Cranmer, and hundreds more, to open the eyes of the people by the flames of the fatal stake, and unstop their ears by the cries of their dying blood."

Belfast, April 20, 1831.

From Cork, whence my last letter was dated, the stages and steam-boats have brought us, through Fermoy, Clonmell, Kilkenny, Naas, and Dublin, with the usual vicissitudes of a journey, to the "intellectual town of Belfast."—This is the fourth in Ireland, as to population, and perhaps the second as to trade and commercial prosperity. As my last related to the temperance cause, and as I am now at the fountain head of information on that subject, I will continue it.

The use of wine and malt liquors is not prohibited by the constitution of temperance associations, but it is probable that the savings and self-denying spirit of the associations will, gradually, change the customs of society in regard to all useless stimulants. The tone of some of the publications I have met with confirms this impression. They are calculating the consumption and the cost of all intoxicating liquors; and then medical men are beginning to say, not only that ardent spirits are worse than useless, but that wines and malt liquors might well be given up. And these statements may be seen to have had some effect, as to spirits at least, from the fact that the English Government have withdrawn from the soldiers on foreign stations, their former allowance of spirits, substituting an increase of pay; and this, said Sir Henry Hardinge, in consequence of the superior information obtained through the Dublin Temperance Society.

From the Connecticut Observer.

Mr. Editor—Through the medium of your paper, an individual wishes to say a few words respecting Oliver Watkins, the unfortunate man who was executed a few days since in Brooklyn, Ct. It was stated some months since in papers of a certain stamp, that he was a member of an orthodox congregational church. This was a false statement. It is not known that he was ever connected with any church. He was indeed once under some conviction of sin, and indulged for a little time a sort of hope of piety, among the Methodists in some town in Pennsylvania. But he soon showed that he did not possess the spirit of piety. He became a neglecter of religion, cherished a sceptical spirit, and was a reputed Universalist for years.—Thus by a departure from the truth as it is in Jesus, he threw off restraints from his unruly passions, and declined in character, until he died the ignominious death of the gallows. He seemed rather reluctant to disclose his religious opinions. But to a few who often visited him, he frankly owned, that he did not believe at all in the eternal punishment of the wicked; and that he was not convinced that any punishment awaited the ungodly beyond the grave. He had little if any confidence in the scriptures. A few days before the closing scene, however, he became somewhat solemnized in view of death; regretted that he had effaced serious impressions, and neglected religion; and professed to renounce Universalism. Whether this was feigned, or not, God knows. He seemed to brace himself to the shock of death with sinews of iron, and a brow of brass. Had he not departed from the truth, he would probably now have been in the enjoyment of life and respectability. His sad example seems to raise a warning voice against obliterating religious impressions, and especially against receiving the fatal doctrine of the arch deceiver, "thou shalt not surely die." B.

MARRY FOR FUN.

The papers contain the following article under date of Wellsborough, July 16.

"A marriage which lately took place in this county, and which was announced in this paper last week, turns out to be a ludicrous affair, and took place under the following circumstances:—The parties, together with a number of the young people of both sexes in the neighborhood, had been invited to the wedding of another couple, and had assembled at the house of the father of the bride where the nuptials were celebrated. After the ceremony had taken place, a young gentleman, one of the guests proposed to a young lady present, to be married for fun, and they stood up together upon the floor for that purpose. The magistrate, it seems, was willing to contribute his share of the fun to gratify the humour of the couple so as to agree to marry them a fips worth—a second contract followed, to be married to the value of a levy, and in this way the 'fun' proceeded for some time, The magistrate, it appears, at last became rather tired of the sport, and informed the young couple that if they persisted in their demands to be married for fun that he would marry them in earnest. They dared him to do it. After his repeated admonition to them, (though they contended it was 'all in fun,') he actually pronounced them husband and wife,' and as it would seem, not until they had separated and retired each to their home, did they begin to understand it any thing more than being married for fun. Learning now, however, that they were really caught in the noose, it became a matter of serious concern to fee the magistrate with a few more fips and levys to 'loose the tie' which by this time was getting rather burdensome, and which was rendered not the less so by the continued rallying of their comrades.—They were soon given to understand, however, the truth of the old trite saying, that 'a magistrate can tie a knot with his tongue that he cannot untie with his teeth,' and as we learn, had given up all hopes of a legal separation short of an application to the Legislature. The transaction reminds us of another wise saying, which we would urge to the consideration of the young couple, and which is, 'be careful how you meddle with edge tools,' a magistrate's tongue being a dangerous instrument for those to meddle with, who only desire to be married in fun.'"

Remarks by Dr. Ely.—The caution contained in the foregoing extract is good; but the doctrine that a magistrate,s words, or the words of a bishop, can make a marriage ceremony binding, when he knows that the parties do not seriously intend to enter into nuptial bonds, but merely to be married for fun, we cannot admit.

Marriage is a contract between a male and a female, who are competent to make such a contract, and can never be entered into without consent of parties. Now if the Justice who married the persons in question a fippenny bits worth, knew that it was all in fun, and the man and woman did not really intend to agree that they would be husband and wife to a relation voluntarily assumed, how could he swear that before him they had entered into the marriage relation! When there is no contract intentionally formed there is no wedlock. If the magistrate could swear that the parties appeared before him, and to the best of his knowledge did seriously and really enter into engagement to be wedded to each other, that would alter the case. When a formal covenant can be proved we are to presume that it is a real covenant unless the contrary is made to appear: but when the intention not to covenant is manifest, no shame of covenanting for fun will make a serious, intentional, and real covenant of marriage. Magistrates ought not to be considered as catching persons in marriage by "noose and trap," as they would secure a wild heifer or panther. Magistrates and ministers of the gospel are merely the recording witnesses appointed by law; but all lawful marriages are formed by the true consent and voluntary agreement of the persons united in wedlock.

An Improvement.—A writer, or perhaps more than one writer, in the N. E. Christian Herald, is giving accounts of the preaching of Drs. Beecher and Wisner, at four days meetings, which are tho't to prove that these preachers are beginning to adopt the theological system of the Methodists. The truth appears to be, as nearly as we can judge from reading these articles, that Drs. B. & W. have found some way of expressing their old doctrines so that this writer or these writers cannot misunderstand them. We should attribute the change to an increase of candor in the writers, did not their language imperatively forbid it.—Vt. Chron.

"It would be easy to prove," says Humbolt, "that the whole archipelago of the West Indies, which now comprise scarcely 2,400,000 negroes and mulattos, (free and slaves) received, from 1670 to 1825, nearly five millions of Africans! In these revolting calculations on the consumption of the human species, we have not included the number of unfortunate slaves who have perished in the passage, or been thrown into the sea as damaged merchandise."

THE PARDONING POWER.—Such is the facility with which pardons are obtained in this state, that we are assured there at this time fifteen hundred convicts loose upon the community, who have been pardoned, and whose terms of imprisonment, as adjudged by the courts, have not yet expired.—N. Y. Spec.

SINGULAR CASE.—In a neighboring town a few days since, a man who had been engaged in the operation of skinning a cow, which had died probably by the bite of a rattle snake, gave sudden indications of having been mortally poisoned. His arm has since swollen to a considerable size, and but slight hopes are entertained of his recovery.—Boston Dai. Adv.

FOREIGN.

[The Prussian State Gazette of the 4th July, in an article dated from the Polish frontiers gives some additional information on the subject of the conspiracy detected at Warsaw on the 1st ult.; but the facts agree substantially with the preceding abstract from the Morning Chronicle.]

Warsaw, June 29.—I write in great haste to give you a brief account of events which have occurred here this day, and which cannot fail to awaken the most lively interest in all who have any regard for the patriotic cause in which Poland is now engaged; but I am sorry to add that they will be looked upon by all with regret.—Treachery, foul and unhallowed treachery has stolen under the banner of Liberty, and which, if not discovered, might have blighted her cause forever.

In my last letter I informed you of the suspicions which had been attached to the conduct of General Janchowski in the battle near Klock,—that suspicion has been found to be too true; there has been subsequently no doubt of his guilt, and of his treachery to the cause of Poland. In order, however, to avert that death which eventually awaited him, he has disclosed the names of those individuals concerned with him in a plot as diabolical as extensive, and as dangerous as any the annals of history can afford, and the particulars of which I am now going to give you, contains a short, & necessarily, at the present moment, a very superficial account.

It appears that some of the officers in the Polish service have long been faithless to its cause, and it is not yet known to what an extent it has been carried. This party, however, has succeeded in establishing a strong and dangerous conspiracy, the intention of which was to produce a counter-revolution in Warsaw, in favor of the Russians, and which was to have taken place in the following manner, had it not been prevented by a providential and timely discovery.

To-day is here a great Saint day (St. Peter's) and fetes are held by the inhabitants in all parts of the town, and, consequently, this was the day fixed upon by the traitors for the accomplishment of their plot.

The Russian prisoners here are upwards of 13,000, and are allowed to go at large, and it was through their agency that the scheme was to have been attempted; they were to have been provided with arms, and, when the signal was given (the blowing up of the powder mill,) they were to have risen in all parts of the town, and attacked the inhabitants and the National Guard, and Heaven alone knows what the consequence might have been. The information, however, given by Janchowski, came just in time to save Warsaw from the dreadful massacre. The National Guard was called to arms, and each street was placed under a strong guard; but in the mean time eight of the conspirators were arrested, and also three ladies, who are said to be deeply implicated.

Some have made their escape; but none is allowed to pass the barriers of Warsaw, and consequently, there is no doubt but that all will be discovered. Upwards of 300 are supposed to be connected in the conspiracy. The streets have, to-day, been in complete uproar, and it was with difficulty that the conspirators could be saved from the effects of popular fury. Their names are General Austeig, Slanacki, Roustestarde, Raedel, and Bontemps of the Artillery; the two latter are French; Colonel Slupak; and also Madame Lessel (in whose house was discovered three millions of dollars, and five millions of Polish florins,) with two other females.

Their trials will take place to-morrow and the next day; but the evidence appears too strong against them to admit of any chance of their being saved from that death they so justly merit. The guilt of General Bontemps, who had the entire management of the artillery, is said to be enormous. Many of the new cannons, under his management, are known to have burst in the field. The names of the traitors have been posted in hand-bills, in the streets, in an address from Skryzneeki to the National Guard. Such is a brief account of this extraordinary affair.

It appears that Poland, in addition to the immense force of the largest empire in Europe, has to contend against the basest treachery in her own ranks. I have written hastily, and what I have related I have done briefly; but I will write again by the next post on Monday, when I hope to give you a longer account.

The Russians were said yesterday to be within 12 miles (English) of Warsaw. The command has devolved upon Gen. Paskewitsch, who is by birth a Pole.

DEFEAT OF THE POLES NEAR WILNA.

Berlin, July 6th.—The Prussian State Gazette of this date contains a long article dated from the Russian head-quarters, Pultusk, June 28, giving an official and detailed account of the total defeat of the united forces of Generals Gielgud and Clapowski, in an attack on the Russian troops posted at and round Wilna, consisting of the division of General Baron Von Sacken, reinforced by some regiments of the Guards under the command of Gen. Baron Kuruta. The rebels being enterely foiled by the dreadful fire of the artillery in their attempt to carry the heights, were compelled to retreat, and were pursued by the Russian cavalry. Gen. Kuruta, who had reserved part of the Imperial Guard to cover the heights, which are so important for the defence of Wilna, now ordered the cavalry of the Guard and the Lithuanian regiments to attack, which they did with such impetuosity that the enemy could not destroy the bridge over the Wilna. The enemy being driven across the river, and flying in consternation on the road to Kauen. Gen. Kuruta ordered the light cavalry to pursue, which he was induced to do by the news that Count Tolstoi Commander-in-Chief of the army of reserve, was at hand with two divisions. This junction completely secures Wilna, and will afford means of acting with energy against Gielgud's division. The Russians took 600 prisoners, including eight officers.

The German and Dutch papers contain the Russian account of the defeat of Gen. Geigud by Rudiger, which is of course, greatly exaggerated. The Poles do not deny that their troops have met with reverses near Lubin, but it is certain that the enemy has not yet been able to turn his advantages to much account. The Government and the Commander-in-Chief were necessarily much distracted by the discovery of the atrocious conspiracy at Warsaw, which threatened, if not detected, such fatal mischief to the patriot cause. It seems, however, to have been arrested in very seasonable time. We learn from our Private Correspondent that the Russian prisoners in Warsaw were to be made the chief instruments in bringing about the counter-revolution. Their number is stated at 13,000.—From Berlin it is said that the Russians were withdrawing from the Government of Plock, with the probable intention of approaching nearer to Warsaw. Their main army had reached, by the last accounts, to within 12 miles of the capital, so that a general battle seems to be inevitable.

DEATH OF THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE.

It appears that the Grand Duke Constantine, (late Vice King of Poland,) is dead. The following is the only paragraph which we have yet

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

seen upon the subject. We infer that he died of Cholera. The suggestion of self-murder is hardly probable:

Letters from Hamburg attribute the death of the Grand Duke Constantine to the cord rather than the Cholera. It is remarkable that two of the prime persecutors of the Poles, should be thus prematurely cut off. In these times of philosophy and infidelity, it would be considered superstitious even to hint at the agency of a retributive Providence.

Some of the Hamburg letters represent the Russian army as in a state of disorganization.—They compare it to that of Napoleon, after the burning of Moscow. It is said, in short, to be totally devoid of any thing like organization. If this news be true, the Berlin papers are doing more for the Russians than the Russians are doing for themselves.

Konigsberg, June 30.—Accounts from Memel say that Garsden is again occupied by the insurgents.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 1, 1831.

"As I have moved to this place, you will for the future direct my paper here."—We are in the daily receipt of letters with the above directions from our subscribers. We have repeatedly informed them that we cannot alter the directions of their papers until we know where they now take them. We want to know the name of the place from which they have removed. It would often require half a day's labor to examine all the names on our books to find that of the subscriber who writes us.

We have just received a letter from a person saying that a new post-office is established in the town where he resides, and that he is appointed postmaster, but does not tell us the name of the town or county. Indeed, in this case, we are not sure that it is in this state.

A great deal of trouble might be saved to all concerned if in giving directions to change from one place to another, our subscribers would just say, "As I have removed from A. to B., I wish my paper for the future sent to the latter place.

THE CAUSE OF SEAMEN.

On Sunday last we had the pleasure of hearing an address on this subject, delivered at the first Presbyterian Church in this village, by Rev. Mr. Brown from Charleston S. Carolina, agent of the Am. Seamen's Friends Society. We regret that we are not able to give all of the interesting facts which he stated relative to the improvement in the moral condition of this important but long neglected class of our fellow beings.

That a great improvement has taken place within a few years, has been shown by facts that have been published in the news papers and other periodicals of the day. Formerly a pious naval officer, or captain in the merchant service, was extremely rare, and a pious seaman could only now and then be found among the 2,000,000 who, it is estimated, are employed in the various departments of sea service by our own and foreign countries—but at this day some of our naval officers and many of the brave men who compose their crews are devotedly engaged in the service of their Saviour. Revivals of religion have taken place on board of our national ships, and many a poor sailor who had never hardly extended his thoughts of happiness beyond the pleasure of spending his hard earned wages in riot and licentiousness on his arrival in port, is now diligently directing his course towards the port of Heaven, and anticipating the enjoyment of those pleasures which are to be found, when the voyage of life is ended, at the right hand of God. Our Marchantmen too are many of them commanded by pious officers and manned by pious crews.

Considering the intemperate habits of our seamen, there is perhaps no class of men so unfavorably situated as they are, among whom the temperance reformation has made more rapid advances. One hundred and fifty vessels, it was stated by Mr. Brown, had within the last two years, sailed out of the Port of Boston alone, without having any ardent spirits on board. The number from other ports we do not recollect. This reformation however has but just commenced. It is reasonable to expect that it will continue to increase, as the means of information on this important subject are extended to them, and as the beneficial effects of total abstinence from ardent spirits shall be more fully seen among those who have become the pioneers in this glorious reform.

The chivalrous character, the noble daring, the unbounded enterprize and the profuse liberality of the mariner, were ably and feelingly portrayed by Mr. Brown.

When he spoke of the vast amount of the business in which seamen were engaged—of their being entrusted to an almost unlimited extent, with the commerce between all the nations of the earth, and the great facilities which their intercourse with foreign countries afforded them, of exerting an influence either favorable or unfavorable, to the cause of morality and religion, he gave them an importance in the eyes of his audience, which we presume, few of them had ever thought of. It had perhaps before never been brought distinctly to the minds of many of our citizens, that all our foreign Missionaries, their families and the supplies which they carry from this country, must all be dependant under God, upon the good conduct, the skill and the fidelity of Seamen, for their safety in traversing the ocean, to their places of destination. This was a consideration which, it appeared to us, ought to have great weight upon the community, especially upon christians, in deciding what ought to be done, what they should do, in aiding the cause which Mr. Brown is pleading before them. It ought to be known far more extensively than it is, that the melioration in the condition of our seafaring brethren, the moral and religious improvements, which has already been effected, has been accomplished through the instrumentality of "The Seamen's Friends Society." The wise adaptation of its measures for the accomplishment of this object has been proved. Success has crowned its efforts. But the means of the Society are extremely limited. To increase these means and awaken an interest in favor of this benevolent enterprize, to make known its objects, and its claims to public patronage, is the design of this society in sending their agent among us. The way in which this aid may be most easily and efficiently rendered Mr. Brown did not distinctly lay before his audience. This probably will be communicated in some other way. One of the means however of aiding this society is by patronizing the Sailor's Magazine, a monthly publication of 32 octavo pages, published in New York, at $1,50 per annum, the profits of which are devoted to the cause of seamen.

We hope that the members of the churches who sail upon the ocean, upon our inland seas, and those who navigate the canals, will awaken the attention and benevolent effort of our citizens.

We had almost forgotten to mention a fact stated by Mr. B., going to show one of the causes which so powerfully contributes to produce the moral degradation of seamen—that is, the character of the boarding houses to which sailors usually resort when in port, and the base means which the harpies who keep them, resort to, to get their money. He mentioned one instance in which a merchant vessel that had returned from a foreign voyage, having only sixteen hands on board, before they could get on shore, had thirty two tavern keepers, of the lowest grade, come on board the vessel soliciting the sailors to put up at their houses. He mentioned indeed a number of facts of this kind which we do not recollect with sufficient accuracy to state. The remedy for this evil is the establishment of boarding houses for sailors, to be kept by pious men, or at least by those of good moral character, where instead of the sailors being exposed to the depredations of knaves and prostitutes, they will be aided in preserving their money and their morals. Such houses have already been established by the Seamen's Friends Society, and they have contributed largely towards the improvement in their moral condition, which has been noticed.

"MORAL CONDITION OF INFANTS" and "CONSTITUTIONAL DEPRAVITY."

On our first page will be found an article under each of the above heads. The first appeared in the Evangelist some months since and the latter in that paper of the 20th ult. Knowing that the first did not accord with the sentiments of the editor of that paper we have expected that it would receive a direct answer in a subsequent number of that paper, but none has appeared. However, as the subject of "constitutional depravity" involves the same points of doctrine as that of the "moral condition of infants"—as they are in fact essentially the same, we lay the different views of these writers before the public on the same page of our paper that they may have a fair opportunity of examining the weight and soundness of their arguments.

We have another number on the moral condition of infants, which we shall give in a future paper, and if V. D. M. follows his present with another number, shall give that also. This subject is one of vast importance—lies in fact at the very root of the christian religion, and is one on which a wide difference of opinion exists. And when we find the subject ably, coolly and dispassionately discussed, we think we can hardly do our readers a more acceptable service than to lay such discussions before them, but to bring up the sentiments of one writer alone, is sure to call forth opposition from some quarter, and is very likely to induce some opponent to take up the gauntlet of controversy who is least able to defend his own opinions; and in such cases hard names and bold assertion are very apt to be substituted for argument. It is the danger of getting into a controversy which will elicit more heat than light, which prevents our oftener introducing doctrinal subjects on which our readers differ in opinion. When, therefore, we can find articles on both sides of a controverted subject, written with talent and proper temper, we readily exhibit them without running the risk of exciting angry discussion.

MR. BARNARD'S LETTER.

We again give one of this gentleman's letters written from Rome. It is not merely on account of the interesting details which he gives of what he heard and saw, in that city, that we would recommend them to the attention of our readers.—We have another and more important object in view—it is to show the readers of this paper the influence of Popery on society. We have called attention to this point before, but we are anxious it should be examined—that the community should know what is the effect of the faith of Catholics upon the morals of society where it prevails.—Every system of religion has a tendency either to elevate or depress the moral character. It is generally conceded, we believe, that that system which is nearest the standard of scripture has the most benign and purifying influence upon the community. If this be so, let the religion of Rome and the puritanism of New-England be contrasted. Suppose that the same debased state of morals existed in New-England that actually exists at Rome—what use would Catholics make of it. It may be supposed that Catholicism in Europe and America are widely different—that it has undergone some change, some modification by coming in contact with our free institutions, which has brushed away some of its glaring absurdities and impious abominations, and that were the Church of Rome to obtain as unlimited power here, as it now exercises in the Papal territories, it would exercise that authority in a very different way—that liberty of conscience, of speech and action, would not be abridged to the same extent. But this is a mistake.—That "the Catholic Church changes not—is the same yesterday to-day and forever," is a favorite maxim of its votaries—is one which has been avowed by the Catholic Minister of this village, in this paper. Indeed this must necessarily be so, if the Pope is infallible. It would be the height of absurdity to talk of improving the tenets of an infallible church.

It is supposed too, that the doings of the papacy and the decrees of her councils, which would be read with abhorrence by every genuine American, are not now acknowledged as authority by Papists. But this is not true—it cannot be true. What! INFALLIBILITY, which implies unchangeableness—the impossibility of melioration or improvement—change or improve?

Let Americans look dispassionately at this subject. Let them inform themselves as to the tenets and character of that church. Let neither their prejudices nor their sympathies lead them into error, where it is so easy for them to come to the truth.

Mr. Barnard's letters give facts, the truth of which will not be doubted by any one acquainted with his character and standing.

SPIRIT OF GEORGIA.

By the threatening and abominably profane and indecent language of the letters which we publish from the Cherokee Phoenix, it will be seen what kind of spirit the Georgians manifest towards our Missionaries, and what kind of liberty the enemies of Missions—the enemies of religion would grant to the press could they obtain sufficient power to control it.

REVIVALS.

The N. Hampshire Observer gives accounts of [illegible] in N. Hampshire. The same paper says, "It appears that the good work of reformation is continuing to extend its boundaries and that converts to pure and undefiled religion are daily multiplying in almost every part of our highly favored country.

Were we to publish entire one half of the accounts of revivals which we receive, it would be to the exclusion of every thing else."

An assault upon an Editor.—In last week's Cincinnati Journal, the Editor of that paper gave an account of the case of a young man by the name of Jones who committed suicide in that city. The young man was a student at law, and it was stated that the rash and criminal act was the consequence of dissipation and fashionable vice. It seems that the brother of the deceased felt himself aggrieved by the publication of the fact, and attacked the editor, Rev. Amos Blanchard, in his own private dwelling, with a cow-skin. This was done too after an assurance had been given that it was not done with an intent to injure the feelings of the family of the deceased, but as a warning to those who are in danger from indulgence in the same vicious habits. Mr. Blanchard, however, was not only able to defend himself from personal injury, but to put his assailant in a state of quiescence on the floor, and hold him there to suit his own convenience.

The editor has brought the case before a grand jury, preparatory to a legal investigation in a court of justice.

Mr. Blanchard closes his account of this brutal outrage with the following very just and pertinent remarks.

I consider his conduct, however, the deliberate and outrageous crime of a young man, urged on by persons older then himself and whose pernicious counsels have betrayed him into the commission of an act of desperate and brutal folly which must prove a source of lasting regret and bitter shame, if he is not completely lost to all sense of moral rectitude, every feeling of honor, and every noble and manly sentiment.

Let not young Jones or his friends buoy up their spirits with the false hope that public opinion will sustain them in this course of desperate sin. The public has already pronounced its verdict of stern uncompromising detestation of such unmanly and wanton assaults upon private dwellings, and men whose profession preclude them from making use of the ordinary means of self-defence. In all places, even in New-Orleans, an insult offered to a clergyman, or an assault upon his person, is looked upon as base and cowardly in the extreme.

I look upon this act also as a direct attack upon the freedom of the press. It is as much as to say that no man shall rebuke "wickedness, either in high or low places," and hold up examples of disastrous crime as a solemn warning to the living without subjecting himself to insult and personal violence.

As the requisite steps are taken to have this subject investigated by a criminal indictment of the G. Jury, I forbear any further comments at this time. I consider it due to the safety of the community, that such desperate outrages and flagrant crimes should be restrained by the strong arm of law.—Every good citizen owes it to himself and to the community of which he is a member, to see its wholesome regulations sternly enforced against the "lawless and disobedient."

This should be done to prevent the occurrence of similar outrages in future.

POPERY.

We received the following note yesterday morning, and give it publicity with the greatest pleasure. We rejoice that the true spirit of Popery is to be exhibited to the public.

To the Editor of the Observer, Sir,

I beg to inform you that my letter in answer to "Republicus" which you so unjustifiably refused to publish, is presently in course of being printed, along with the previous letters, in the shape of a pamphlet, which will be circulated this week, gratis. I shall there, among other things, shew the domineering and tyrannical spirit of a party of Presbyterians in this place, and the undue influence attempted to be exercised by them over the public press.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
JAMES BUCHAN.

AMHERST COLLEGE.

The Trustees of this Institution have recently petitioned the Legislature of Mass. for pecuniary aid.

Hitherto, Massachusetts has been liberal in supporting her literary institutions, and it is to be hoped that she will not be wanting in this respect in future. Amherst College, located in the centre of the state, and promising eminent usefulness, has yet received no legislative aid, having been founded and sustained wholly by private enterprise and charity. It was commenced without a charter, and with a few pupils in the autumn of 1821, under the Presidency of the late Doct. Moore. A fund had been established by individual subscription to the amount of fifty thousand dollars, the income of which was to be appropriated to the assistance of indigent pious youth fitting for the gospel ministry.

In 1825 the institution was chartered and received substantially its present organization.

The system of instruction is arranged in six general Departments, and at the head of each is a Professor who is specially responsible for his own department, while there is at the same time a general responsibility and oversight as to the whole, belonging to the Faculty as a body. The present number of teachers is ten, including seven permanent officers, two tutors and an instructer in modern Languages. The number of students is 186.

Mr. Hovey, Prof. of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, has recently gone to Europe for the purpose of procuring a new and complete philosophical apparatus and additions to the Library.

The religious character of the College has always been decidedly orthodox and evangelical, A church is organised in it, of which President Humphrey is the Pastor.

Four seasons of special revival have been enjoyed: one during the present year, in which about thirty have expressed hopes of regeneration. More than one half of those who have ever entered not professing religion, have become pious while connected with the College; and nearly one half of its graduates are engaged in the ministry or preparing for it.

In the three lower Classes there is a weekly exercise in the Bible, which is thought to be highly useful. The tuition of all indigent youth fitting for the ministry is gratuitous.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—The relation of the subjoined anecdote, by a friend, struck me as containing a useful hint, and I doubt not, but it will apply with dagger like force, to many professors of religion who read your paper.

Being personally acquainted with all the parties, I cheerfully vouch to its authenticity. If [illegible] please give it a corner.

[illegible] by the name of M—— S——, while in the employ of H—— W—— as industrious opulent farmer, and a professor of religion, was in the constant habit of indulging in oaths, some of which, wore the impress of a corrupted and contaminated mind—evincing an entire destitution of youthful innocence—of virtuous disposition, and exhibiting in its true character, a most corrupt propensity united with a self-sufficiency, peculiar to headstrong self-manned lads. His very kind employer after having heard the lad profanely curse for weeks and months, modestly ventured to remonstrate with him, setting forth the consequences of such a course. The lad (who by the by is not lacking in mother wit,) replied with manly firmness, "That he would cease swearing, just as soon as his employer would commence praying in his family!" Yours, C.

For the Observer.

Is this bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord!

In the town of ——, a lad whose father is a rum-selling Presbyterian, said to a lad belonging to another society (sarcastically) we sell more from our bar on the Sabbath when your communions are, than any other day in the week. Quere. How will such parents feel when they meet their children and the people at the bar of God!

A FRIEND TO THE SABBATH.

For the Observer.

Rev. John Elliott of the Tuscarora Mission, acknowledges the receipt of ten dollars, received from Miss Elizabeth Salisbury of Worcester Mass. given by her for the benefit of the youth in that village.

He also states the fact, that the Tuscaroras prepared and raised on the 24th inst. a neat little frame for a school house, 24 feet by 20 feet, without the aid of ardent spirits. When the broad sides of said frame were ready for raising; the word given by the commander was not come and take a little liquid poison; no, but attend all, while a short prayer is offered to the Great Spirit above; for he only can afford strength and protection.

ROCHESTER INSTITUTE—No. 2.

PRACTICAL EDUCATION.—This title does not mean that Professors are to turn off their pupils to the care of Monitors, nor to dismiss as remote from practical use, the higher departments of science. It has respect to the great result and design of education, in the words of the constitution of the Institute, "to qualify the students for the highest possible degree of usefulness in the practical duties of life, and every thing which contributes to this end, either in the moral, intellectual or physical discipline, shall receive a share of attention, and be made a matter of direct instruction." The word has respect also to a method of communicating instruction in which the learner acquires the power to direct his own researches, and forms the best habits of conducting the studies of others.—Natural science is no longer expected to be taught in the abstract dead letter form. Why should others? The student of chemistry must be in the labratory. The American citizen should, as a branch of popular education, examine the political institutions of our country. His liberties require him to be an able public speaker, and to hold the pen of a ready writer. Several regulations of the Institute, show how constantly this subject is kept in view. Tuesday evening is assigned for public debate—each member in a speech not exceeding fifteen minutes, gives his views on some important subject, or cancels the reasonings of others. A person accustomed to debating societies can scarcely form an estimate of the order, politeness and exemption from levity and strife of words, which mark the discussions of the Institute. Many of the daily recitations are conducted with special reference to public speaking. The student gives, in his best manner, a full narration, description, explanation, or analysis of the subject before the class. Mathematics furnish a constant exercise for deliberate speaking. Evidence well arranged and clearly announced, is the foundation of eloquence. Translations from other languages whether oral or written furnish a constant exercise in composition and criticism. On Thursday evening every student reads before his class, an original essay, and on Saturday pronounces a committed address, either extracted, or original.—It is expected that anniversary and quarterly examinations will furnish suitable occasions for cultivating this important branch of practical education.

THE HISTORY OF A SINGLE DAY.—The students rise at 4 o'clock—they spend 15 minutes in preparing their persons and rooms for study. Near 30 minutes are spent in the Chapel in reading the word of God, singing and prayer. Before 5 they retire to their rooms for study. Their meals are at 6, 12 and 6. Three minutes are allowed from the stroke of the bell, for assembling for any public exercise. Each student studies 10 hours and labors 3. For want of room in the mechanics shop they are arranged into three divisions. The first division labors from breakfast till 10 o'clock, and recites at 11 and 5. The second from 10 to 3, and recite at 8 and 5. The third from 3 to 6, and recite at 9 and 1. Lectures addressed to all the students are before 6 A. M. or after meals. Several evenings are occupied each week in public exercises; otherwise the time till 9, is spent in study. The only time at the discretion of the student is from meals till the next hour, and this is usually occupied with special duties.

We received the following horrid intelligence from the 2d edition of Courier & Enquirer, of Saturday the 27th inst:—

INSURRECTION OF THE BLACKS IN VIRGINIA.

Captain Degraw, of the steamboat Swan attached to the Philadelphia Union Line, called on us last evening and furnished us with the annexed chilling intelligence, as furnished to him by two passengers who came on with him, in advance of the mail.

On Monday last in Southampton county, Va. the negroes commenced an insurrection by an attack on the family of a Mrs. Whitehead, who, with her five children, were massacred, and their heads severed from their bodies. On Tuesday, the insurgents organized themselves into a body, amounting to two hundred, armed, well-mounted and headed by two white men. They were receiving constant accessions, and on the close of that day, the number of burials of the whites had reached fifty-nine. [One report said two hundred.] In every case, the head was severed from the body. Captain D's informants passed within ten miles of the scene. The negroes had been attacked by the militia, who repulsed them, killing seven or eight, and taking six prisoners. The others, being well mounted, found safety in flight.

On Wednesday, the marines left the Navy Yard at Norfolk, for the scene of action. In the afternoon a troop of cavalry had also started from the same place. Three expresses had reached the Governor of Virginia at Richmond, who had promptly ordered out the militia of the adjacent counties.

Among the persons massacred in Southampton county, was the Methodist Minister, who it is presumed was known in this city. It is said that Southampton county contains not a single populous town or village, and it is greatly feared, from its scattered population, that the devastation and slaughter wrought by the insurgents is awfully extensive.

We give this account as it reaches us, with the fervent hope that it may prove to be exaggerated.

From the Cherokee Phœnix.

CIVILIZED CORRESPONDENCE.

Some of our good neighbors have lately shed abundance of tears on our account, and have mourned over our wretched and degraded condition. We cannot blame them for their tender sympathies, when they are sincere, and when not prompted by selfish considerations. But is there not something nearer home which may command a portion of their commiseration? Is there not a degree of savageness among some of the citizens of Georgia greatly superior to that existing among the Cherokees! But we see no tears shed for them—we hear no editors mourning over them—no exertions are used to better their condition, and to teach them better manners by inducing them to remove beyond the limits of the state. We rather suspect, therefore, that our humane friends are not so sincere as they pretend to be, and that their tears are but "crocodile tears."

We have headed this article civilized correspondence, because the letters we propose to publish are written by those who call themselves civilized and hold the Indians in utter contempt for their ignorance and degraded condition. We should not have given them this importance if they were only the first of the kind received.—But many such letters have lately been sent by mail into the nation—we have, therefore, concluded to insert three of them as a specimen of the refinement of some of our neighbors, the kind of feeling existing to a great extent among a certain class in Georgia, and the character of some of those who are supposed to be the efficient tools to effect the purposes of the state and the General Government.

We do not wish unnecessarily to shock the feelings of the worthy and honest portion of the people of Georgia, nor to intimate in the least that the spirit exhibited in these letters will be approved generally by even those who are eager for the Indian lands. We believe it cannot be so approved by them. Our object is to show that such a spirit does exist and is exhibited by some of those with whom the Cherokees are in immediate conflict.

These letters are supposed to have been occasioned by an article in a late Cherokee Phœnix, headed, sufferings of the Creeks. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." The two first are addressed to Mr. Ridge. One of them is post marked, Columbus, Geo. July 7.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

We are threatened to be blessed with the inestimable privilege of the liberty of the press which is guaranteed by this republic to every man whether white or red. On Thursday morning the editor of this paper was summoned to appear before Col. Nelson, Commander of the Georgia Guard, who was then in this place with a detachment, for the purpose of receiving a lecture as to his future conduct as editor of the Phœnix. We have room but for the substance of the lecture.

The Col. observed to us that there had been a great many lies, and abusive and libelous articles published in the Phœnix.—These slanders have been directed against the State of Georgia and the Georgia Guard. Heretofore they [the Guard] had exercised forbearance towards us on account (as we understand him to say) of Mr. Worcester's connection with the Phœnix. Now they had got rid of Mr. Worcester, and we must now look out.—He also observed that as they could not prosecute us for libel, the only way that we could be punished would be to deal with us in their individual and private capacity; to tie us to a tree and give us a sound whipping. And this assuredly will be done if any more slanders are published. He made other remarks, as to their motives and intentions, but the threat to which we have alluded is contained in what we have related.

Now to cut the matter short at present, we say, as we have heretofore said, that we are not aware of having slandered Georgia and the Guard, and if we have, we think it a sad poor way indeed to convince the world of it by flagellating us.—They will not establish their innocence by such a method we can assure them. Truth has been our object, and truth shall be our object. Further:—If we cannot be prosecuted for a libel, (which by the way we were not aware before) and if Col. Nelson is so positive that slanders have been published, and if he is desirous to make that appear to the satisfaction of the world, he can certainly find where an action for libel will lie. He complains of some missionaries having published falsehoods about him.* What great obstacle is there in the way of proving these falsehoods! These missionaries whitemen—they hold themselves responsible for what they have said in the Phœnix, and we know they will not shrink from any investigation of their assertions before a disinterested tribunal. Finally, we cannot consider the present movement but as an attempt to frown us down.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fenwick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL,

Letters from Europe.

From the Rochester D. Adv.

NUMBER TWENTY-FIVE.

Fano, 26th March, 1831.

My Dear H—You may be sure that I did not leave Rome without interest or emotion. It was something to look, for the last time, on the wonderful remains of the olden time—it was more to take leave of some kind friends, in whom though I had met them there for the first time, I had become too much interested not to feel oppressed with the conviction that I should probably never meet them again.

It is too late now, to tell you of many things relating to Rome, which would have interested you, and which I should have mentioned but for want of time, and the sudden manner of my leaving that City. There are, however, some particulars which I must not forbear to add.

The unequal distribution of fortune in Europe, is no where more apparent than at Rome, and the contrast between splendid wealth and abject poverty is no where more flagrant. The private palaces at Rome, and the villas in the environs, are in a style of princely magnificence, scarcely exceeded any where. The nobility, who are mostly indebted to the Pope for their titles and honors, are in general extremely tenacious of every thing which relates to their personal and family dignity. They are by no means extravagant in their ordinary style of living, beyond what appears in their palaces and their equipages. The latter particularly are very superb, and the public show which they make is, of course, very imposing. Those, however, who compose this class are generally intelligent and well informed, and although they are intrenched behind a very formidable etiquette, yet it is quite possible to approach them, by the proper way. They are lovers of the fine arts, and if any of them are not, it is, at least fashionable to patronize them. This is well so far. Yet one cannot help seeing that here, as elsewhere, the poverty of the poor is in very exact proportion to the wealth of the rich. The number—not of poor merely—but of paupers in Rome, is very great—and these are the kind of persons who are devoted to the interests of the Pope, as long as his means of charity hold out.

Rome has no trade—no commerce—no business, indeed, of any kind, worth the name, except what is sustained by the presence of strangers. Much the greater proportion of a population of 160 thousand is supported wholly by the concourse of foreigners, principally English and American, who resort to Rome, either casually as travellers, or as amateurs of antiquities and the arts. The present troubled condition of the country has, of course, very considerably dried up the resources of the artizans, traders and common people, and distresses and complaints are abundant. On the day of my leaving Rome, the Pope had interfered by proclamation in behalf of tenants, and ordered, of his mere clemency, that those who were unable to pay their landlord, should nevertheless, not be disturbed in the peaceable possession of their landlord's estates, for the space of one year!

One Italian city, does not, I believe materially differ from another in the moral condition of the society. I told you something of the condition of the females at Florence, and of the kind of estimation in which matrimony is there held. Very much the same things occur at Rome. The real truth is, that while every man who chooses, has his wife, and while the members of each sex are, as elsewhere, nearly equal, yet a kind of polygamy, or rather bigamy, actually exists, by common consent. And it is a little singular that whatever faithfulness or affection exists in these connections is bestowed, for the most part, not upon the wife or husband—so called because the church has blessed the contract—but upon the lover. These subcontracts are generally matters of serious concern, and what is more they are oftentimes as lasting as life. They are moreover perfectly open and notorious, and just as well understood and sanctioned as if the ceremonies of marriage were added. It is surprising how the natural warmth and jealousy of the Italian husband can brook this kind of friendly communication between his wife and another man—and it is only to be accounted for by the fact that he has taken the same general method of doubling his own matrimonial joys.—The parties are therefore entirely agreed. These arrangements for domestic life are certainly very common. They may be said to be general, but they are not universal. It happened to me to know at least one exception, in a branch of a very distinguished family at Rome—and as I had great pleasure in witnessing, so I have equal pleasure in recording the fact. I was glad to know that there are persons among those who have princely title and rank, who have learned to find their highest earthly enjoyment in the exercise of the domestic affections and in the cultivation of the domestic virtues.

It being the time of Lent, while I was at Rome, almost all the ordinary amusements were suspended. The theatres were closed. I regretted not to be able to see the manner in which their theatrical exhibitions are conducted. At Florence as I believe I told you many of the most respectable families, never see company at their own houses, but are regularly in their bozes at the Opera, several evenings in the week for the reception of their friends and acquaintances. At Rome I understood, a singular habit prevailed at the Opera; from the commencement of the performance, the grand chandelier is withdrawn, and the audience is left without any other light than what comes from the stage. It is not uncharitable to suppose that other scenes are enacted besides what are contained in the bills of the evening. The parterre—answering to our pit—is visited by ladies, and the priests of the better order make up a considerable part of the audience.

I hope you will not think me disposed to deal in scandal, because I frequently allude to matters of scandalous import. My letters to you must of course be made up principally of those things, which by their strangeness, and especially by their contrast with what I have been accustomed to at home, have most forcibly arrested my attention. Nothing of the kind could be stronger than the contrast between the priesthood of this country, and those who minister in sacred things in our own. The lower orders of priests generally have not the means of indulgence—at least of making a show of immorality. Many of the higher ranks set the very decencies of life at defiance.—The liberties which many of them allow themselves, especially the Cardinals, as if in revenge of the restraints which the Canon law seeks to, but does not impose on them, are too common and too notorious to require remark, or would be worthy of remark. With many of them in Rome, the clerical character is lost in that of the politician or the statesman. Nothing indeed which ever belonged to the priest is retained except the dress & that is modified. Nearly the whole civil and political administration is, of course, in the hands of ecclesiastics. They fill nearly all the important offices of state, from that of prime minister, who is always a Cardinal, down to the judges of civil and crimnal law, who are always priests. Like their master, the Pope, however, they retain their spiritual authority, while adding to it temporal power. After having said thus much of this order, I ought also to say that there are examples among them of the most sincere and devoted piety—of men, who in the midst of all the absurdities of system and all the corruptions of practice with which they are surrounded, maintain a singleness and purity of heart towards God and men.

The political authority of the Pope is not as arbitrary and omnipotent as has generally been supposed. In the best of times, he lives in constant fear of dying by the hand of violence, or being taken off by poison. There is no longer any doubt, although the fact has been sought to be concealed from the public, that Pope Clement 14th died of poison, taken in receiving the eucharist.—Generally, too, he finds himself in the hands of his Cardinals, who are his legal advisers, and some faction of which always contrives for the time being, to direct all public measures according to their own good will and pleasure. At present his power is less than usual. He is little better than a prisoner in his capital. Even the thunders which once broke from the Vatican with such mighty force, have lost their terrors, and I have been surprised, especially since I left Rome, and while in the country of the Constitutionalists, to hear with what freedom the character and pretensions of the Pope are scanned, even by good Catholics. The language of their placards and proclamations posted on the walls of the cities, could hardly be exceeded in freedom and severity by the rankest protestants. They have gone so far as to borrow epithets and hard names to apply to his holiness, from the lips of the reformers.

The state of alarm in which the Pope now lives is evinced by the ridiculous precautions which he takes for his personal safety, and that of Rome. The facilities once afforded to strangers of access to all places of interest are greatly interfered with at present. The Dome of St. Peter's is closed, in the idle fear that some American or English patriot should give some fatal signal from that commanding height to the Constitutionalists of the surrounding country.

One of the curious things which I discovered at Rome was the entrance of a subterranean passage leading from St. Peters, and of course from the Vatican which is connected with it, to the Castle of St. Angelo, at the distance of more than half a mile; forming a pretty outlet for a hunted Pope, from one strong hold to another. The entrance to this passage is from the subterranean church of Constantine, over which the present Basilick is built; perhaps it was the prying, and they may call it impertinent curiosity manifested at the time of my visit there, and which arising from the unwilling and inexperienced priest who acted as guide, the secret of this passage, (if it was a secret,) which caused an order to be issued the very next day, closing the subterranean church against all strangers.

Rome you know, was the theatre of the most bloody and brutal persecutions of the early christians. Nothing which I saw at this place interested me more than the Catacombs—perhaps I may say that nothing interested me so much.—History does not account satisfactorily for their origin. But so much is certain, whether they were originally excavated by them or not; that they were extensively used by the christians of the early ages, as hiding places from the implacable fury of their pursuers—as Chapels for the worship of God while they lived, and as their sepulchres when they died. The extent of these Catacombs seems wholly unknown. They are found at Rome and they are found at Naples, and so exactly corresponding that some persons have supposed that these subterranean habitations of the dead extended from one city to the other. It appears to be certain that they occupy an immense space beneath the city and environs of Rome.—There is an entrance to them from Mamertine Prison, now closed because several strangers who entered there have been lost in the labrynth and perished.

This is by the side of the Capitol Hill, and the place at which I entered was under the church of St. Sebastian, two miles from the walls of the city, or at least four, as I should judge from the Mamertine Prison. We descended on one side of the church, and after wandering for halfan hour, each person with a torch in his hand, through the narrow subterranean passages, led by our guide, we found ourselves emerging on the opposite side of the church. The original passages have been generally filled up by the gradual falling in of the earth and broken stone upon them, or more probably, some of those sudden convulsions of nature which have certainly taken place at Rome. Excavations have been made from time to time and are still making, and the graves of the ancient dead are thus disclosed. Those whose remains were buried entire, occupied niches along the sides of the passages, where they were enclosed and carefully sealed up in solid rock of tufeau.—Cinerary urns containing the ashes of those who were burned also lined the passages on either side. A precious deposit of the blood af the martyred was frequently made and preserved in the same way.

The brief history of many a saint and martyr is read in the rude inscriptions which have been found there. I should be extravagant—perhaps romantic—if I were to tell you how long I should have been glad to have lingered there, and with what regret I parted from a scene of such strange interest. It made an impression on me which I can never, never lose.

But I shall never have done talking of Rome, unless I come to the resolution to break off abruptly—and this I can now the better afford to do, as I have witnessed scenes since leaving that city, and have more in prospect which have a present, and perhaps a higher interest.

Ever yours. B.

From the Connecticut Observer.

Mr. Hooker,—I have obtained from the Rev. Chauncey A. Goodrich, of New Haven, a copy of "Recollections of the Revolution," to place them in your hands for insertion in the "Connecticut Observer."—He is a man highly and justly respected for integrity and piety, and was not only an eye-witness but a partaker in those privations which he records. Would the remnant of that brave and patriotic race, which penury and the grave have spared, come forth and tell us of the dangers they have shared,—the toils they have sustained,—the blood they have shed without repining & without remuneration,—our children would better know how to prize the liberty of their country,—and to honor its defenders. RECOLLECTIONS OF THE REVOLUTION.

About the first of November 1779, the main body of Gen. Washington's army of the Revolution, took up a line of march from the vicinity of the Hudson River and the White plains, to New Jersey for winter quarters. After three or four days march through snow and water they arrived at Morristown and put up in Houses for the night. The next day they marched about two miles in a Northerly direction to a forest of woods where they went immediately to felling timber for building Huts to cover them from the cold and snow which was falling daily. As they had nothing to cover them but a single blanket, they were induced to make every exertion to complete their shelter from the storms, and in about a week they were so far accomplished as to admit their tenants to a comfortable abode. This caused much rejoicing; but after some time provisions began to fail in consequence of the Hudson and the Delaware being frozen to such a degree as to prevent boating, and the State of New Jersey was not able to furnish provisions for so large an Army for any great length of time. The troops were now brought to half allowance, which caused some murmuring, but when they understood the cause they bore it very patiently until a further reduction to one quarter of their common allowance, which was four ounces of meat and four ounces of bread per day. Many now determined to help themselves and sallied out to plunder the inhabitants, which caused such complaints that a guard was placed around the encampment, and every soldier taken out of the line of sentries was tied up and flogged twenty lashes without the trial of a court martial. Things went on thus, and proivsions failing from day to day until they were reduced to four ounces of bread or beef once in two days, which so whetted their appetite that many said they should rather have nothing to eat, then they should not be hungry. This was soon brought to a trial, as they had no allowance nor a mouthful of any food for four days. Strange as it may seem,—their craving appetite almost entirely subsided and murmuring ceased, and conversation took place in a very humorous and jocose manner. Some would say, "I believe, my soul, they mean to starve us to death; well we die in a good cause never mind;" Others would say, "I had rather be shot by the enemy than to be starved to death by our own people, however."

After four days fasting they had a gill of wheat dealt out to each man, and now a consultation was had to consider what they should do with it, for none cared much whether they eat any thing. However it was finally concluded to boil it and eat it, for they knew not that they should ever have any more food. About this time a gun was fired, and they all rushed out expecting some man was killed by one of the sentries. But they soon found that some of the Officers had shot a dog that strolled into the camp, and the next day one of their cooks reported that he skinned the dog and cooked him, and a company of Officers had made a thanksgiving dinner on him.

After four days more fasting, one bitter cold morning before sun rise, they discovered Gen. Washington leading his horse and calling at every hut; making enquiries of every soldier in a most feeling manner how he fared and about his sufferings, stating that he had not been informed of their extent until the night before, and that he, while the tears were pouring down his cheeks, would do all in his power to get them some food. The soldiers seeing their beloved General so affected replied to his enquiries, "General, we fare well enough, we want for nothing, and are ready to fight whenever you will give us a call."—These cheerful answers so affected the General, that he could scarcely thank them for their patience and patriotism. Before night that same day, the steward's call was beat throughout the camp, and in a few hours they came with four ounces of fresh beef to each man. At the sight of food, the soldiers were so fierce after it, that the steward was obliged to place a sentry over it till he could weigh it off to each man, and as fast as it was dealt out, each man swallowed it as quick as a dog would have done in a starving condition. The next day they had four ounces of bread, and continued much in this way until, March, when the Connecticut line left Morristown, and went to Scotch plains, where the inhabitants were more liberal and the soldiers fared much better. Soon after their arrival at this place, a severe skirmish occurred with the enemy, and enfeebled as they were by long scarcity, they evinced unshrinking courage, and an unbroken spirit. The passage of a bridge was disputed. The British having at length succeeded in planting their standard upon it, rushed onward with impetuosity. But no sooner had they reached the other side,—so terrible was the charge of the Americans with fixed bayonets,—that they were driven back instantaneously, and relinquished the attempt.

But I might have said that want of food was not the only sufferings of the American army. The severity of that winter is well remembered to this day. The snow was three and four feet on a level—no water but melted snow, and the cold so intense for six weeks that a drop of water was not seen from the rays of the sun; and the men were so poorly clothed that the guards who were sent out might be traced in the snow by the blood of their feet.—Yet all these hardships and sufferings were borne with the utmost fortitude and patience, looking with firm resolution to the Independence of our own Country. And yet lamentable as it is, these sufferings and many others have been compensated only by the frowns of an ungrateful country.

An Old Soldier.

THE CHOLERA MORBUS.

General account of an attack of Cholera on board His Majesty's ship Liffey, at Madras, in the year 1823.

We had been lying at anchor off Madras for, I think, between two and three weeks, when for several successive days there was no sea breeze, the wind coming off from the land, parched with excessive heat, and apparently bearing with it minute particles of sand, the effect of which was to relax the animal system. When this had continued for some days, perhaps three or four, the weather changed, but not the wind, which still came from the land, accompanied by drizzling rain, cold, damp, and deadly, such as may occasionally have been felt or experienced among vaults or tombs. With this change came the cholera.

Its first operation was one evening about sunset, when a man whose health had previously been good, was seized with a fall from the main rigging; was attacked and died during the night. It happened that day that there had been a promotion on board, one of the midshipmen having received an acting order as lieutenant, and a supper was given on the occasion. Among those invited was a young man who had been on the African station, and was sent thence to England in the last stage of an African fever. Having apparently recovered, and being sent out to India on promotion, it was generally supposed he would receive the next appointment, and was congratulated accordingly; but the supper being somewhat later than the usual hours of a man-of-war, and no boat passing, he slept on board the Liffey. At daylight he returned to his own ship;—at 8 a. m. he was dead.

The attack now proceeded in earnest, and several men were knocked down,—for it was literal knocking down,—and the Commodore, who, as Commander-in-Chief, had a house on shore, being informed of what was going on ordered the ship to sea. We got under weigh, ran out a few leagues from the land, and cruised under easy sail.

It is not possible, and perhaps not desirable, for me to attempt a description of each particular case, but the general impression of such an occurrence is not likely soon to be forgotten.—The attack generally came on about daylight and sunset, when there was probably the greatest change in the state of the atmosphere. Fortunately, we had three medical men, a surgeon and two assistants, who kept regular watch; and I have no doubt, from what I saw, that the promptness with which remedies were applied, added to the precautions taken to guard against attack, saved many lives.

The system adopted was, the instant a man was seized, the number of his mess was called; the hot bath, for which water was kept constantly boiling, got, and the man put in, when his veins were opened. If he bled, there was hope; but the blood frequently coagulated and would not flow, lumps or swellings, apparently produced by cramp, rising suddenly in different parts of the body, and again as suddenly disappearing from the part where they had first risen, and rising in some other part.

After the hot bath and bleeding, the man was put into his hammock, and his messmates kept rubbing him with bottles filled with hot water.—In about three or four hours the patient generally either died or the attack abated. There were, I believe, one or two cases in which patients died from a relapse, one of which was said to have been occasioned by neglect on the part of the man, and his messmates giving him spirits.

During the attack the pain appeared to be excessive: in a few moments the features became haggard and distorted, as of a person who had been long in a consumption. The men were all made to wear thick flannel, especially round the waist, and towards sunset the officers used to assemble on the forecastle to smoke, as a preventive. When daylight was some time gone, and the attacks appeared to have abated, we used to congratulate each other on the blow being apparently struck for the night, and turn in; yet, on turning out in the morning, and coming up on the gun-deck, half asleep and half awake, the union jack spread over some body ready for burial, not unfrequently told that some person was dead whom you had seen or spoken to just before going to sleep. Perhaps the worst part was the effect it produced on the minds of the men. Inaction, courage and excitement, added perhaps to the desire of distinction, tend to elevate the spirits, but in this case active courage was of no avail, and no one knew who was next to drop.—The men herded together in knots, and when work was to be done, it was frequently necessary to penetrate these knots, and shake sensation into the person wanted, when others would follow almost mechanically.

To give an idea of the attack. One evening one of my messmates and myself were smoking on the break of the forecastle, when a man who was sitting on the cable-bits immediately below us, dropped with a shriek, and was carried aft to the surgeon; we inquired who it was, and were told M'Can. We finished the segars we were smoking, and went down to see him; he was in his hammock, apparently in great pain, and he died in about three hours.

The morning after we were ordered to sea, shortly after daylight, two men were woke out of their sleep by an attack of cholera. The first, who was an active and healthy man, was immediately put into a hot bath, bled, and saved.—The second, who was not so healthy a person, and who was woke whilst the first man was in the bath, and therefore could not be put in so quickly, died.

I think it was the same morning, another man being attacked, his messmates were called to get the bath, and whilst doing so one of them who was assisting was attacked, put in, and his life saved; whilst the man for whom the bath was originally ordered, died.

When we came into the anchorage, and were furling sails, a man was seized on the fore-topsail yard; I happened to be near him on duty, and at first thought he was drunk. It proved to be cholera; he was immediately lowered out of the top by a rope's end and died.

On the whole we lost about 10 men in 3 or 4 days, which considering the vehemence of the attack were not many out of a 50 gun frigate ship's company, though quite enough. Had not great exertions been made by the medical men, and precautions taken to prevent attacks, we should in all probability have lost more.

When the weather cleared, and the sea breeze again blew regularly, the cholera disappeared.

This disease certainly did not appear to be infectious, though it appeared that those whose constitutions were previously bad, were the soonest attacked and had the least chance of recovery. Besides wearing flannel and smoking, in case of any apparent inclination to attack, brandy was recommended, with, sometimes, opium; but when an attack had passed, spirits were said to be bad. Without pretending to medical skill, I should say the desirable object was to prevent as much as possible the influence of the atmosphere, by keeping up a regular action in the general system. H. THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

A systematic plan for raising funds to promote the objects of the American Seamen's Friend Society, and the moral and social improvement of Seamen.

The Executive Committee of the American Seamen's Friend Society having, by the good providence of God, been permitted to receive many tokens of his favor, and of the confidence of the churches, in their benevolent enterprise, they now feel called upon to propose a systematic plan for obtaining their proportion of the moneys furnished by christian liberality. It has been an object to them to adopt a plan so simple as easily to be understood and put in practice, and yet so effective as would always be sufficient to bring the condition and claims of seamen distinctly to the attention of every community where they can find or make friends enough to put it in practice. They have therefore adopted and now recommend to their friends in all the churches, the following PLAN.

1. Resolved, By the Executive Committee of the American Seamen's Friend Society, that every church, congregation, or Sabbath-school, which is willing to contribute to the funds of this institution, be requested to appoint a Seamen's Friend Committee, consisting of three persons, a chairman and two collectors, (one male and one female, or otherwise,) the chairman to act as treasurer and secretary, and to designate some one month in the year in which their collections shall be made for the cause of seamen.

2. Resolved, That this committee be requested within the specified month in each year, to have the object properly presented to the congregation, or Sabbath-school, and then to make collections as the people shall be willing to furnish.

3. Resolved, That the several churches be requested to report annually to the respective ecclesiastical or other bodies with which they are connected, the amount they have raised for the seamen's cause.

4. Resolved, That the Sailor's Magazine be forwarded gratis to every society, church, Sabbath-school, or individual, that shall contribute annually any sum not less than ten dollars.

5. Resolved, That where this plan may be acceptable, but there is a conviction that the money is needed to aid local institutions in the neighborhood in which it is contributed, any part or the whole may be thus appropriated, with the cordial approbation of the society.

Remarks.

I. This plan may be introduced by simply adopting the first and second resolves above mentioned, making the requisite alterations in the phraseology, so that they shall become the resolutions of church, congregation, or school, and appointing the committee. Then its deficiency will depend chiefly upon the committee and the pastor.

II. It is believed that the plan of having a given month devoted to making collections for a specific object, is adapted to bring that object more distinctly to people's minds, and thus to excite more interest, than if all the objects of benevolence are jumbled together. What is done within a limited time is also more likely to be done effectually, than if it drags along thro' a whole year.

III. Much may be done by varying the manner of bringing the subject forward from year to year. Sometimes it may be done by the visit of an agent of the society; sometimes by a sermon from the pastor; sometimes by a particular address at the monthly concert; sometimes by being publicly notified from the pulpit with a few remarks commending it to the favorable regards of the people. In some of the churches the practice has been tried with advantage, of notifying the charitable object of the month at the close of every evening lecture, at the same time requesting those who can, to come forward and contribute there, so as to save labor to the collectors.

IV. It is respectfully suggested for the consideration of conferences, associations, presbyteries, and the other ecclesiastical bodies, whether they cannot promote the cause of religion, by calling on the respective churches in their connection to state how much they have raised in the year for the cause of seamen, and also by taking such measures as wisdom may direct, for awakening public interest in favor of this class of men.

V. The cause of amelioration among seamen is one, and the committee of the National Society have no other object but the advancement of this cause, of which the far greater part must be carried forward by the labors and expenditures of local institutions. Of course all which is judiciously contributed for them is rejoiced in as truly as if given directly to the general treasury.

VI. The money contributed under this system can be appropriated entirely at the option of the donors, to constitute ministers or others members or directors for life; and also for the advancement of any particular object, as for supporting a particular mission, or for building the "Sailors Home," or for stereotyping the Hymn-Book, Sermons, &c.

All donations are acknowledged in the Sailor's Magazine.

Ecclesiastical bodies are requested to recommend this object if they approve it.

The names of churches, &c. adopting this plan, and their committees should be seasonably reported.

All communications concerning the society should be sent to the general agent at the Seamen's Friend Office, 83 Nassau-st. New York.

JOSHUA LEAVITT,
Gen. Aent of the Society.

☞ Individuals are still invited to become Life Members and Life Directors,—and where the above plan is not adopted, ladies are requested to make their ministers such. Twenty dollars constitutes life membership, with the privilege of the Sailor's Magazine for one year.—Fifty dollars in one or two payments constitutes Life Directorship, with a title to the Magazine for life.

N. B. CHARLES J. HILL will act as Agent for the Sailor's Magazine in Rochester, and will also forward any monies that may be sent to him for the Society.

THE PIONEER WOULD NOT RUN ON THE SABBATH.

(MR. TAPPAN'S LETTER TO MR. LORD CONCLUDED.) With reference to the line of stages, about which so much clamor has been made, it is truly surprising that any citizen of this free country should deny to an individual, or an association, the right of establishing a lawful mode of conveyance, to run, according to their pleasure, or convenience, or sense of duty, one, or two, or six days, in the week. But the Pioneer would not run on the Sabbath. Ay, there's the rub. Ten lines of stages might have been established on the route, to run every day, and no exceptions would have been taken, except by those whose pecuniary interests were affected. The public would have called it lawful competition. But a portion of this public could not, in this case, endure the rebuke; their consciences were troubled; they felt something like coercion; the new line was hateful, and must be put down. The right of Christians, in using their property and influence in this way, was clearly set forth in the Address to the People of the United States, sent abroad by order of the convention, of which you were a member, after they had organized the Sabbath Union. I beg leave to recall to your remembrance a few passages. "The plea of coercion, as resulting from the distribution of patronage, with reference to moral results, is without foundation. We cannot fear that the common sense of this nation will decide, that we may not wield the influence of property in such a manner as will carry powerful motives on the side of well-doing, and against doing evil: for if this be wrong, the government of God would be the height of compulsion and injustice. We disclaim coercion in any proper sense of the term; but we avow our purpose, to employ all lawful motives to persuade our fellow-citizens to "cease to do evil, and learn to do well" on the Sabbath. We have come to the conclusion, to withdraw our capital and patronage from the prostration of the Sabbath, because no alternative remains but this, or the ruin of our republic." This avowal and determination, by the friends of the Sabbath, was what occasioned clamor and misrepresentation through the land: and the friends of temperance have not ceased to exclaim against the principle of "total abstinence" for similar reasons. The ungodly exhibited rancorous opposition to the stages, and felt "coercion" in the advertisements and handbills, and coaches, and horses, at seeing or hearing of the Pioneer. And many professors of religion hesitated, doubted, or openly condemned the undertaking. Some of them, doubtless, from pure motives, being ignorant of the true character of the projector, mistaken as to the objects in view, or alarmed at the opposition of the wicked; and others, because they found it pleasant to ride on the Sabbath occasionally themselves, or convenient and profitable to have their merchandise arrive at its destination a day or two sooner than was practicable by a six day line transportation. But the idea of coercion, in this case, is preposterous.

This enterprise has done great good, not only on the route where it was established, but thro'out the land. It awakened public attention to the enormous prevalance of Sabbath-breaking, bro't consideration to the minds of many negligent and criminal professors, induced Christians to be more circumspect in their example, exhibited to the community a contrast between civil and temperate stagemen and drivers, and the profane and intemperate men often found in such employments, and stimulated philanthropists in other efforts to do good. In the language of a traveller, this line of stages was like a sermon, three hundred miles long, preaching to the inhabitants, and to strangers, and exhorting them to obey the precept, Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. The testimony of Rev. Dr. Beecher, on this subject, is commended to the special regard of those who have had doubts as to the wisdom and effects of this enterprise. "When these measures (alluding to this line of stages) were proposed, I rejoiced in them as the providential indications of our intended preservation from ruin. Their influence hitherto has been great. No amount of instruction, argument, or exhortation from the pulpit, or press, could, it is believed, have given such an impulse to the public sentiment and public conscience, or produced such correct heed to the Sabbath on the part of its friends, or such vindications of its rights or expositions of its importance, or such carefulness in its observance, or concentrated so many hearts and hands and prayers for its defence, as the above practical measures have produced. And I cannot but regard the toil and sacrifices and obloquy of those who embarked in this undertaking, as enrolling them among the distinguished benefactors of our country, and as insuring to themselves imperishable honor in the grateful recollections of future generations."

I have thus, according to the ability given unto me, and the leisure I could seize amidst many duties, vindicated the society of which I am a member, & the memorialists, among whom I rejoice to be found, from the undeserved imputations cast upon them by those who have inadvertently or wilfully misrepresented them. I do not impute to you, dear sir, any intention of falsifying recorded facts, or purposely wronging your Christian brethren; and am willing to believe that it arose from inadvertence, or forgetfulness that you were a participator in the measures whose tendency you now condemn. I indulge a hope that after your mind has been refreshed with the documentary evidence now furnished, you will regret having censured measures of which you are one of the originators; and that you will do all in your power to prevent any bad influence going abroad, under the sanction of your name, with respect to the men who acted with you on behalf of the Christian Sabbath. It will be a pleasing reflection to me, if I have aided you in this endeavor by any suggestions now made, or if I have incidentally vindicated the excellent work, to which your "Recommendatory Letter" is prefixed, from the discredit of diffusing, among its readers in this country, imputations upon those whose efforts on this side the Atlantic, in behalf of the Christian Sabbath, prompted the reverend author to undertake a work that has been received with deserved popularity in England, and will, I trust be widely circulated, and read, by the people of the United States. I am, dear sir,

Your friend and serv't.
LEWIS TAPPAN.

Singular Death.—The Gardiner (Me.) Chronicle says, "We regret to learn that a son of the Rev. Thomas Dolloff, of Jay, aged about 20 years, died on Friday last in consequence of having inhaled through his nostrils into his lungs a portion of the contents of a "puff ball," to check bleeding at the nose. He was a young man of excellent character and much promise.

He that diligently seeketh good procureth favor: but he that seeketh mischief, it shall come unto him.

CAPTAIN KOTZEBUE.

The following passage from Montgomery's Preface to the Missionary Journal of Messrs. Tyerman and Bennet, exhibits one instance out of many, in which the public mind has been grossly imposed upon by falsehoods and slanders about missionary operations, circulated on the authority of men whose names and titles would seem to indicate respectability of character. In several parts of the Journal, men of Kotzebue's stamp are treated as they deserve. The mask is torn from their vileness; and their conduct exposed in such a way as must, we should think, make them a little cautious hereafter. We are glad to see that these parts of the book are noticed in a proper manner by some of the most respectable Literary Journals of London.—Bos. Recorder.

There has lately been published in England what is called, "A New Voyage round the World,' &c., by this gentleman [Kotzebue.] In a section of more than a hundred pages, entitled 'O Tahaiti,' the writer has thought proper to assert as historical facts things which never happened under the sun, and to express sentiments, concerning the missionaries and their converts, which no man could entertain who was not under strong prejudice, if not actual delusion.—This is not the place to expose his errors in detail. That will, probably, be done from another quarter, and by an abler hand; but two or three of his misrepresentations must not be passed over, as they stand in direct contradiction to much that will be found in the following pages respecting the introduction of Christianity and its benign effects in the Society Islands. The Captain says:

'After many fruitless efforts, some English missionaries succeeded at length, in the year 1797, in introducing what they called Christianity into Tahaiti, and even in gaining over to their doctrine King Tajo, who then governed the whole island in peace and tranquility. This conversion was a spark thrown into a powder magazine, and was followed by a fearful explosion. The marais were suddenly destroyed by order of the king; every memorial of the former worship defaced; the new religion forcibly established; and whoever would not adopt it put to death. With the zeal for making proselytes, the rage of tigers soon took possession of a people once so gentle. Streams of blood flowed; whole races were exterminated; many resolutely met the death they preferred to the renunciation of their ancient faith,' &c. * * * 'King Tajo, not content with seeing, in the remains of his people, none but professors of the new faith, resolved on making conquests, that he might force it on the other Society Islands. He had already succeeded with most of them, when a young warrior, Pomarek, king of the little island of Tahita, took the field against him. What he wanted in numbers was supplied by his unexampled valor, and his superiority in the art of war. He subdued one island after another, and at last Tahaiti itself, and, having captured its king, offered the zealous murderer of his subjects as a sacrifice to their manes.'

How much truth is there in this straight-forward statement! Let the reader judge. There never existed such a personage as King Tajo. Pomare the First was king of Tahiti during the early residence of the missionaries in that island. He died in 1803, having never so much as pretended to embrace Christianity. He was succeeded in the sovereignty by his son, Otu, who eventually assumed the name of Pomare II.—Christianity was not received 'after many fruitless efforts,' in 1797; nor till 1813 were a 'praying people' found among the inhabitants. After that time they rapidly multiplied. In the latter end of the following year, 1815, the only battle that ever took place between Christians and idolaters in Tahaiti was fought, in which the latter were the aggressors, and, after being defeated in the field, were wholly subdued by the clemency of Pomare in sparing his vanquished enemies; a thing unheard of before in the exterminating wars of these islanders. Since then neither war nor battle has been known throughout the whole windward group. In the Leeward Islands, at Huaiine, an idolatrous army of rebels yielded without a blow to Hautia, when that Christian chief offered them pardon and peace. In Tahaa, the idolaters, under King Fenuapeho, were routed by Tamatoa, king of Raiatea; and after the conflict, the lives of the prisoners, including Fenuapeho himself, being spared, this chief and all his people submitted to the conqueror, who restored to the former his sovereignty, and to the latter their insular independence. The universal rejection of heathenism, and acceptance of the gospel in each of these cases, followed the merciful use of victory by the champions of the truth. There are on record shocking instances of the murder of natives for embracing the 'new religion,' by the bigoted adherents of the old; but Captain Kotzebue may be safely challenged to produce one example of an individual being put to the alternative of preferring 'death to the denunciation of his ancient faith.' It rests with him also to show when, how, where and by whom, 'whole races were exterminated;' certainly not in any island, whose inhabitants have been converted to Christianity in the South Seas. What he means, at page 169, by 'the bloody persecution instigated by the missionaries, which performed the work of a desolating infection,' he would find hard to explain before the bar of God and man. At each he is answerable for it.

'The religion taught by the missionaries is not true Christianity.' If that which Captain Kotzebue practices be 'true Christianity,' assuredly that which the missionaries teach is not. Try him by his own test. 'In an interview with the queen,' he says, 'she asked me whether I was a Christian and how often I prayed daily!' 'I merely replied that we should be judged according to our actions, rather than the number of our prayers.' Every page of his fables and lucubrations, respecting the missionaries and their people, proves that he is not of that religion which says, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.' One example may suffice. Vol. i. p. 193, he observes, 'Though the vice of theft has certainly greatly diminished among the Tahaitans, they cannot always refrain from endeavoring to appropriate the articles they prize so highly. For instance, I THINK if any one of the Tahaitan ladies had found an opportunity of stealing a bit of the mock gold-lace, the temptation would be too great to withstand.' Thus, as an instance of irresistible thieving propensity in 'the Tahaitan ladies,' he thinks if something which did not happen, had happened, then a certain consequence would have followed! What can any honest man think of 'Otto von Kotzebue,' post-captain in the Russian imperial navy, and commander of the ship Predpriate!'

PREDESTINATION.—Zeno, the philosopher, believed in an inevitable destiny. His servant availed himself of this doctrine, one day, while being beaten for a theft, by exclaiming "Was I not destined to rob?" "Yes," replied Zeno, "& to be correct'd also."

From the Am. Pastor's Journal.

REPROBATION.

"My Spirit shall not always strive with man," was a declaration of the Almighty concerning the old world, a declaration confirmed by the writings of Evangelists and Apostles, and examples of the truth of which are found in all ages. There is a time in the experience of every finally impenitent sinner, in which even the tender mercies of the Redeemer are withheld. "I go my way," said he to the Jews who rejected him, "I go my way, and ye shall seek me and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come." [John viii. 21.] Again, of some it is said, "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind." [Rom. i. 28.] Of others it is declared, "For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." [2d Thess. ii. 11, 12.]

Let not the reader start back with anger, and lay aside this article, because we begin it with these hard sayings. No, fellow sinner! These tremendous truths are not conveyed in the words of a man, who might be suspected of falsehood. They are the declarations of HIM WHO CANNOT LIE, sent in mercy from the throne of love.

It appears, then, that God does sometimes inflict upon those who have been guilty of persevering impenitence, the sore judgment of reprobation, of abandonment to stupidity, to the influence of a seared conscience and a hardened heart. Miserable immortals! They are forsaken of their God! He has borne long with them; as long as it was possible for God to forbear.—But they are incorrigible. Therefore, the wrath of God abideth on them. Now, the language of His providence, like that of His word, is, "Let them alone; they are joined to idols; they like sin; let them alone; let them pursue iniquity without restraint; they contemn warnings, and make a mock at sin; therefore let them be reproved no more. Wherefore should they be smitten any longer!—they will rebel more and more! I GO MY WAY."

The first effect of this abandonment is, perhaps, in most cases, that

"While yet they dwell at ease,
And no sad changes feel,"

conscience sleeps. But it shall awake again! However long this event may be deferred, thro' the forbearance of God, and however much the soul may have despised the offers of mercy, the time will come when every sinner in the world will relent. "For many I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." [Luke xiii. 24.] Nay, all who do not seek him while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near will most assuredly seek him (for they will then feel their perishing need of him) when it is too late, and will call upon him when he will not answer. It is a fact, confirmed by universal observation and experience, that the impenitent & unbelieving, almost aniformly, at the approach of death, virtually, if not explicitly, renounce their sentiments and their hopes, and, unless visited in peculiar mercy with the consolations of the gospel, they leave the world in anxiety & alarm, if not in absolute despair. While in the midst of life and health, they deceive themselves. By nature they love the pleasures of sin; & thus the infidel disbelieves, and the sinner rejects, because his passions and appetites cannot brook the restraints of the gospel. He is able also to start, here and there, a difficulty, or to move an objection; and with these he fortifies his doubts, till they acquire the strength of infidelity. But the alarming aspect of death generally renders him honest. The messenger that comes to call him to another world, dashes away the shield which corrupt desires and habits has interposed between him and conviction, and now, when there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, truth flashes upon his mind, to alarm and torment him forever. Now he awakes to a sense of his guilt and folly. Bitterly does he deplore his disregard of God and salvation. With gladness, eager & joyful beyond expression, were it possible, would he recall the time which has passed away, and possess once more the golden opportunity of becoming wise, and holy, and happy. In strains of solemn and pathetic entreaty, does he urge those around him not to esteem religion as a secondary object. How often do they who are accustomed to minister at the couches of the sick and the dying, witness these regrets and entreaties! O, it is here that the abandoned sinner, just about to sink into perdition, generally begins to seek for mercy, but mercy is wearied out, and clean gone for ever. He beholds, and wonders, and perishes.

The force of these remarks is fearfully illustrated in the following narrative, furnished by a clergyman intimately acquainted with the incidents which it contains.

Mr. B. was a man of wealth, who a few years ago lived in a part of our country, once noted for its affluence, dissipation, and infidelity. He was young and comely, yet, like many a youth of noble powers, gay and thoughtless. The sunshine of worldly prosperity brightened the morning of his days. In early life he united his wealth with that of a lovely female, who became the wife of his youth. The generous feast the social dance, and "the drink of drunkards," were conspicuous in their nuptial scenes. Their prospects were bright and alluring; no ill-timed omen excited their fears; they were apparently sure of much happiness. But in all this there was no recognition of God's providence, and the Ruler of the Universe held them responsible for their abuse of his gifts. Long before the meridian of their expected day of prosperity, even in its very morning, the sky became darkened; clouds of sadness hung around them, and all they called theirs. * * * * * *

Mr. B. was prostrated by disease, which soon terminated in his removal to another world.—When he saw evidence that "the king of terrors" was approaching, he became alarmed. Alas! he could not say, "O death! where is thy sting! O grave! where is thy victory!" He desired to have a colored servant of hopeful piety come in, and pray for his poor soul! But no! the pride of his wife could not brook such degradation; she would not suffer him to be called in. Some thought, (speaking in the language of the neighborhood,) perhaps, he "got religion." But there is no reason to doubt that he died, as he lived, without God.

The youthful widow had worn the habiliments of mourning but a few months, when she was called to mourn for herself. She often had calls, and occasions for mourning and weeping, but heeded them not. The call she now had, was louder than seven thunders. Many who die "as the fool dieth," had braved out the like; but she could not.—"The tender mercies of cruelty,"—the flatteries of a false hearted physician, did not calm her fears! It was apparent to every one that death had already begun his work!

Had she been insensible of her condition, both temporal and spiritual, her dying scene might have been very different. But like poor "Altamont," and "Francis Newport," she was sensible of the pains of death and hell! Without God and without hope, upon the very brink of eternity! O that she had opened her eyes before! She might have seen the same grave opening,—the same wicked heart,—the same heaven for humble and penitent sinners,—the same hell for the ungodly,—the same devil,—and the same God, capable of being either angry or gracious. But alas! it was too late now; God had left her!!

She desired to have the same humble offices of a servant, that her husband craved: but her physician said, "There is no occasion, Madam; Madam! you are not dying!" Still she craved; and still was refused. She remembered her poor husband, and in the bitterness of her soul, reproached herself for denying him what she was now refused herself; said he might be in Heaven,—but she must go to hell! She declared she was dying! and exclaimed, "The Lord is walking about me! The Devil waits to receive me! he is about to take me! O God! why do you torment me?"

In this frame of mind, she expired! From that awful hour, eternity alone can disclose her history.

ESTIMATE OF AMERICAN WRITERS BY THE LONDON CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.

In a notice of Dr. Channing's pamphlet entitled "Objections to Unitarian Christianity Considered," a writer in the London Christian Observer, for June, says:

If any impartial and serious person would compare the statements and reasonings in this pamphlet, with the animadversions contained in different works which have been published in reply to the writings of Dr. Channing, and the other New-England Unitarians, by several divines of their own country—but especially Dr. Leonard Woods, Dr. Beecher, and Mr. Moses Stuart—I conceive it would be morally impossible for him to rise from the examination without being convinced of the multiplied fallaciousness of Dr. Channing's reasonings, and of the ridically erroneous and practically dangerous character of the Unitarian system. It is greatly to our detriment that the theological works of our orthodox brethren in the United States are so difficult to be obtained in Great Britain. Those, in particular, which have issued from the Andover school are signalized by soundness in Bible interpretation, extraordinary power of argument, and solemn fidelity in warning and exhortation; while yet benignity and courtesy are duly maintained.

MEANS OF DOING GOOD.

During a recent journey I became acquainted with a young man in poor circumstances, who told me he contributed 50 cents at every monthly concert. "This" said he, "I can very well afford to do, it is only one cigar a day for the month." He was formerly in the habit of smoking; but when he became a Christian, and began to reflect upon the duty of "mortifying the body with the affection and lusts" upon the condition of the 500,000,000 heathen in the world, he concluded that it was his duty to deny himself this gratification, for the sake of sending them the gospel. He did so, and found it a privilege—a source of more real pleasure than its former practice, and also a benefit to his health. He is now enabled to give 50 cents a month, (enough to school six children in Ceylon, or 4 in Bombay, during the same time) to the cause of missions; and save 12 dollars a year for himself, merely by leaving the use of tobacco. Reader, "Go and do thou likewise," if you use tobacco.—Vermont Chron.

THE METHODIST MISSIONARIES.

The following extracts of a letter from Rev. D. C. M'Leod, one of the prisoners mentioned by Mr. Worcester, throws some additional light on the treatment which good men are receiving under the "humane policy" of Georgia and the National Executive. The letter is dated at Athens, East Tennessee, July 16, and is published in the New York Advocate and Journal:—Bost. Recorder.

Early in the morning of the 8th, I and brother Wells started in quest of our captured brother, and about ten o'clock we met the guard, on a line of march for head quarters, having in company with brother Trott, Rev. Mr. Worcester, a Presbyterian missionary, arrested, also for residing within the charter of the state, and dragged off from a sick family. These two brethren and an Indian, chained by the neck to the baggage wagon, were driven on foot before the mounted horsemen, as a part of their punishment inflicted on them for what the guard call their obstinancy.

[After detailing his conversation with Mr. Trott and the guard, as mentioned by Mr. Worcester, Mr. M'L. proceeds.]

Col. Nelson and Brooks then followed me up with much abusive language, and ordered me to stop. Nelson asked me where I lived. I told him, "in West Tennessee."—I was then made to dismount—brother Wells ordered off—Nelson and Brooks swearing that I was "the very fellow they had been wanting to get hold of." After going a few steps, my horse was taken from me, and sent back to brother Wells, while I was made to run on foot to get up with the other prisoners. A furious storm of human vengeance was beating upon me in all the violence of infuriate oaths and horrid imprecations. I was told if I opened my mouth, I should be run through with a bayonet; and Brooks urged that I should receive a hundred lashes! I was driven through mud holes and branches for some distance; but when their anger cooled a little, I was suffered to have equal privileges with the other prisoners.

* * * * * * *

On Tuesday the 12th, I was called to appear before the haughty Colonel, when he laid many heavy things to my charge, none of which he could prove. He used strong and sharp words to alarm me. He said if he had known that he could not have made "a case of me," he would have made the soldiers strip me, tie me to a tree and give me fifty lashes! He even seemed to regret that he had not pursued this course with me. I was told by him that I should not preach within the charter of the state, and ordered me to leave it as quickly as possible.

I left my brother prisoners in jail, without having the privilege of bidding them farewell. I have omitted many particulars which will yet be made public. I am prepared to prove that in the present hostile measures of the state towards the missionaries in this nation and other white citizens, policy prevails over law. Colonel Nelson told me that their orders from the Governor were to let the missionaries feel the heaviest weight of the law, and that they did not intend to show them any mercy. What will be the result of these measures is hard to foretel.—Liberty of speech and of conscience, and religious toleration, are but empty names in the Cherokee country within "the sovereign limits" of Georgia. May the Lord sustain us until the storm blows over!

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

SABBATH SCHOOL MEETING.

On Sunday evening last a meeting of those who are friendly to the establishment of Sunday schools was held in the Presbyterian Church. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Baird, one of the agents of the S. School Union, who gave a detailed and interesting account of the efforts now making to establish Sunday Schools thro'out the Union, and particularly in the valley of the Mississippi. Addresses upon this interesting subject were delivered by the Rev. Dr. Lindsley, Gen. Gaines and the Rev. Mr. M'Dowe'l. We understand that about five hundred dollars were subscribed. The beneficial influence which Sunday School instruction exerts over the habits and morals of youth is sensibly felt where such schools have been established and properly conducted, and should they continue to be patronized to the extent they deserve, no reasonable doubt can be entertained, that their happy influence will soon be increased, and the intelligence and information of the great body of the people.—Nashville Her.

WHERE'S THE DEFECT!

"I do not see why it is that I should not be blest with the conversion of my children," said a mother to me one day. It was about the time, that God was graciously pouring out his Spirit, and bringing sinners to humble themselves at the foot of the cross. The poor woman seemed quite down hearted and ready to despond. Some of her neighbors' children were brought into the fold of Christ, while her own remained unmoved. This mother is a woman of prayer. She is well acquainted with a throne of grace, and has often been there, to supplicate the blessing of God upon her offspring. I endeavored to encourage her; told her that I was in hopes they would soon begin to inquire the way to life. But to this hour her children remain in the same careless state—without God and without hope in the world. Still their pious mother continues to wrestle for them in the secrecy of retirement—she feels as though she could not let the Saviour go except he bless her.

Now I should like to ask, wherefore it is that the children of this woman still remain in a state of impenitency, when they are so faithfully warned to flee from the wrath to come and lay hold on eternal life, and so many fervent prayers have ascended in their behalf! Is it that there is, or has been, some defect in her family discipline! Perhaps she permitted them to stray too long from the fold of Christ, before she raised her warning voice—or perhaps they have been suffered in a great measure to follow the bent of their own depraved inclinations, without being checked in the first stages of their departure from God. But the reason of their remaining unblest we cannot know. This we do know, that God hears and answers prayer, if there is no iniquity in the heart to hinder prayer. But it becomes all Christian parents, who have ungodly children, to examine themselves, to see why it is that they are not brought to repentance! Doubtless the fault has been within their own breasts—for God has declared that he will pour out his blessing upon our seed—and who, who can doubt his word!

CHANGE OF FEELING.

I returned back to Woodville, and preached on Saturday to a large audience. Since the formation of the school here, the views of the people seem to have been entirely revolutionised. The American Sunday-school Union, their agents and books, are mentioned only with respect—the happy influence of the school is extending, and the teachers are engaged in trying to bring into it on Sabbath morning I felt abundantly rewarded for all that I endured two months before, when pleading its cause, and when by many I seemed to be regarded as the agent of a great money speculating society; having in view, at least, as a secondary object, the union of "church and state."

Perhaps my difficulties at this place may be accounted for by the character of the sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. * * * *, their pastor, on the preceding Sabbath, when my appointment was made. I was told by members of the church, that he expresses a decided disapprobation of all religious almanacs, papers, and books of every kind, except the Bible, and a wish to have them all burnt!

On Monday, the 11th, I went from Zion Hill, down twelve miles south of Liberty, to visit Dr. * * * *, formerly a member of Congress from this State. This gentleman, for two years, superintended a Sunday-school, which closed last fall for want of pupils, and he thinks that some peculiar circumstances render it not advisable to attempt to revive it immediately. The Dr. is a very pious member of the Methodist church. He received me warmly, and was very much affected when I told him of the success with which the Lord of the Sabbath was crowning the efforts of the friends of Sunday-schools at the north.

WORTH A YEAR'S HARD LABOR IF NOT MORE.

On the 16th, I rode out through a very fertile section of country, which six months ago was an unbroken forest, and truly I have much to cheer me. In a space of less than six miles I found two Sabbath-schools. Arrangements were already made for a Bible class, which should be taught on the Sabbath, embracing persons of all ages. The gospel is also regularly preached in these places. In my ride an incident occurred which very much interested my feelings. The dear brother whom the good providence of God has placed amongst that people, was piloting me from one log-cabin to another. We came to a place where a single cabin and a few acres of land on which the timber was felled, and strewed in every direction, told us that we approached the residence of civilized man. As much to our surprise as to that of the child herself, we found an interesting little girl in her play-house, built of moss, diligently preparing her Sabbath-school lesson: and her brother hearing her repeat the words, "She brought forth her first-born, and called his name Jesus," before she discovered that we were near her. Truly the wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose.

SABBATH-SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

Several years since, while I was teacher in the Sabbath school in A———, I went out one evening to visit one of my scholars. While conversing with her father, he asked, "What compensation do you receive for your services as a teacher!" I replied, We have no pay except the hope of doing good to the souls of our pupils. "Why, I should think," added he, "that your services deserve some remuneration"

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

We are engaged in our Master's service, added I, and if we win any souls to his kingdom by our instructions, we have a richer reward than any pecuniary compensation could afford.—"True," he replied, "but I should be willing to give something for your care of my children." When Sabbath schools were first instituted, I answered, the teachers did receive pay, but it was found too expensive, and of late all the instructions have been given gratuitously. But if the parents feel under any obligation to the teachers, and wish to compensate them for their time & trouble, any contributions they feel able to make, for the purpose of increasing and improving the library would be gratefully received by the the teachers, and also be the means of enlarging and extending the usefulness of the school. "I always do give for this object," he rejoined, "when the contribution is taken up for this purpose. I feel it a privilege and a pleasure thus to contribute my mite to the Sabbath school."

Why should not every parent indulge similar feeling! Is it not indeed a "privilege and a pleasure" for parents to contribute for the Sabbath school library! Every one, who does give for this purpose, not only promotes the interest of his offspring, but also aids the teacher in his endeavors to do them good. Ought not the burden and the expense of procuring libraries to rest upon parents rather than teachers. Must the teacher devote his time to the business of instruction, without any compensation, and be required, in addition, to defray the expenses of procuring books for the children's reading! Will any parent consent to this!—Parents, I put the question to your consciences—Ought the burden and expence of obtaining Sabbath school libraries to devolve upon teachers! A. B.

PORTLAND MAINE.

SECOND PROTRACTED MEETING.

A second protracted meeting was commenced in the 2d and 3d Churches in Portland, on Thursday, July 28th, with the intention of continuing through four successive days, and closing on the Sabbath, with the celebration of the Lord's Supper.

Much solicitude was felt on the part of Christians, lest their efforts should prove to be premature, and that this second meeting so soon after the former one would not be sustained.—The following extracts from letters received from that place, since they commenced, give some account of their results:—Recorder.

"Monday morning, Aug. 1—Although the meetings have been attended with deep and awful solemnity, we have not yet witnessed such manifest effects as on the former occasion.—The increasing interest however, has induced us to continue them through the day.

"Noon.—Our meeting this forenoon has been solemn beyond description. I have not witnessed so much apparent feeling before. Ministers present to-day—Rev. Messrs. Johnson, Hooker, Chapin, and our pastors.

"Evening.—The meetings are closed, and no very special visible results, excepting deep solemnity. I trust however that good has been done, and that we shall hear from these meetings for a long time to come.

"Thursday Aug. 4th.—Appearances are more encouraging than when I wrote you last. At the close of the Monthly Concert that eve., which was the most interesting one we ever had, our Meetinghouse was full to overflowing, it was concluded to continue the meetings through Tuesday. Some fruits already appear. [The names are here mentioned of those who have obtained hopes, and others that are awakened; among the latter, in one family, a gentleman, his wife, one son and three daughters.] It was affecting to see the father and the son in the inquiry meeting weeping together. We had an inquiry meeting yesterday afternoon. I was not present, but Mr. Jenkins after the meeting said it was the most interesting we have had since the revival commenced. "Monday Aug. 8th.—Yesterday was an interesting day to our church, 19 were received by profession. There seems to be a great solemnity pervading the minds of the whole community, and I trust that conversions will be multiplied.

"A very interesting work is in progress among the Seamen. Meetings are held at the "Sailors Mansion;" and Capt. Wood who keeps the house, and Rev. Mr. Tappan, who is supplying at the Mariner's Church, are fully employed in conducting their meetings and conversing with those who are anxious. A vessel just gone to sea, has five sailors before the mast who have recently become hopefully pious.—Two of the crew of the Mary, lately arrived, became pious it is hoped, on her passage home; also one of the crew of the Nestor.

"A number of lads from ten to fifteen years of age, have held meetings by themselves for prayer. Some of them have a hope in Christ.—They pray for the Sabbath School, and particularly for their own Teachers.

"——is the twentieth teacher who has become hopefully pious in our South Sabbath School in less than five years. She thinks that taking a class in the Sabbath School has been the means of her conversion."

Danvers.—A four days' meeting was held in the Baptist meetinghouse in Danvers, commencing July 26. It was attended by several congregational ministers, who took part in the exercises. An account in the Watchman, closes it as fallows:

On Saturday morning the brethren assembled in a prayer meeting, about to depart. Many on this occasion could say "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

The brethren who took part in the services, besides those that preached, were Rev. Messrs. Matthews, Peace, Wilcox, Cowles, and Braman. If there was any thing peculiar in the addresses, or sermons delivered on this occasion, it was the distinctness with which the truth was stated,—the pungent appeals made to the conscience, and the duty of immediate surrender to God. These marked all the exercises. We were not disappointed in our hopes. Our brethren came to us in the fulness of the gospel: the truth was preached with power. Since the close of the meeting in the space of six days, thirty-five have expressed their hope, and rejoice in Christ. Many are now anxious.

The congregational Society of which Rev. Mr. Braman is Pastor, is sharing largely in the fruits of these meetings.

From the Southern Religious Telegraph.

The good work which has been for some months in progress in this city, still continues in some degree, though the excitement which characterised it in its first stages has subsided. This work has been principally among our Baptist brethren. Between five and six hundred have been added to their two churches in this city.—Other denominations have also been refreshed, and considerable accessions have been made to their Churches.

CAMP MEETING.—We have been waiting with trembling solicitude to hear the result of the Presbyterian camp-meeting recently held near Lynchburg. We have just read a letter addressed to a gentleman in this city, which brings a very favorable account of it. It appears by this letter, that the meeting was very numerously attended,—was characterised by very good order, and deep and prayerful solemnity. The letter states that in the judgment of charity, there were at least a hundred and thirty cases of conversion.

The religious state of Massachusetts, so far as we are able to learn, is becoming more full of promise every day.

In Essex the revival is very general. In Newbury and Salem, the seriousness continues to increase. A protracted meeting was held in Beverly last week, which promised much at its close. In West Newbury, the revival is powerful: as also both parishes in Bradford. A protracted meeting is held this week at Andover. Throughout the county, in a word, the interest manifested in religion is extraordinary.

In some Academies and schools in this part of the state there have been lately many apparent conversions.

In Northampton and many of the neighboring towns the spirit of revival continues to prevail and extend. In Hatfield, where there has not been a revival for nearly a century, a protracted meeting has been held, at the close of which there were a considerable number of anxious inquirers.

In Providence, R. I. the results of the four days meeting held there two weeks ago, are most gratifying.—Bos. Rec.

It is stated in the Greensborough (N. C.) Patriot, that the revival which commenced in that place some weeks ago, is progressing steaily and rapidly;—that religious meetings for the last month have been very frequent and crowded; that almost every day has added new converts to the band of real disciples,—that there has been a great transformation in the character and habits of the society there;—a deep solemnity still pervades the place. It is estimated that from 60 to 80 have been made the hopeful subjects of divine grace.

The Editor of the Patriot, (who does not consider himself a pious man) speaking of the evidences which prove this work to be the result of the Spirit's operations, very justly remarks, that "when men, who have scoffed at religion—when men with strong minds and cool reflection—men who were thought to be sermon-proof and gospel hardened; men who loved the world, and the things of the world; we say, when men of these different characters, are seen lying prostrate on the floor or the ground, and pleading for mercy in the agonies of despair; and afterwards to hear them shouting redeeming love, and to see them declaring by their conduct and conversation, that a complete regeneration has taken place in their hearts—a beauty is seen in religion from the light of which the scoffer recoils in confusion!" —Richmond Telegraph.

RENNINGTON, VT.—From Bennington, Rev. Thomas Teasdale writes thus:—"We have a meeting in this place, which has already been protracted nine days. About 400 souls distinguish themselves as anxious enquirers. During the meeting, and a short time before, nearly 100 had hopefully submitted themselves to God—The present meeting will probably be continued to next Monday, making thirteen days.

MASSACHUSETTS.—In addition to what we have before given, we learn that there are revivals in the following towns in Massachusetts: Amherst, Bloody-Brook, Hadley, Westhamton and Williamsburg. The writer observes, "I attended a five day's meeting last week, which has been followed by a most powerful work of grace. The citizens all gave up their worldly business, to attend these meetings, and to secure the salvation of their souls. I think I never knew so solemn a time in any place. Stouthearted men, who had vented their curses upon religion, and had boasted that they would not go to the meetings, were completely cut down, and came like children to attend them. Time would fail me to enumerate all the interesting cases of conversion. O! it is a glorious time; the Lord is doing his own work, in his own way, and to him be all the praise and glory."—Vt. Chronicle.

BERKSHIRE CO. MASS.—A letter from Pittsfield, published in the Watchman, after mentioning the revival there, and in Lanesboro', says—In Sandisfield, Becket and Middlefield, Tyringham and Lee, our sister churches have enjoyed a refreshing season, and numbers have been added to the churches. In Hancock, where a four days' meeting was lately held, the Spirit of the Lord was manifest in their midst, to bless his word to the conviction and conversion of many sinners, and the awakening of stupid professors. Adams and New-Lebanon have also shared in the blessed work; protracted meetings have lately been held in both places. Our congregational and methodist brethren in most of the above mentioned places, and in some other, have had delightful seasons. So far as my knowledge extends, these delightful seasons have accompanied and followed protracted meetings, and the fervent, persevering prayers of the churches."

SALISBURY.

Letter from Rev. D. Rockwell, to the Editors of the Vermont Chronicle.

At the moment of the close of the sermon in the forenoon of the second day, a man of about fifty, rushed into the aisle, prostrated himself before God, and said, "I am pricked in the heart; do pray for me, a poor sinner;" when almost simultaneously the aisle was filled to overflowing with those whose tears and groans said, "pray for us also." At the close of the afternoon sermon of the third day, as the speaker exclaimed, "Who of you are willing to submit now to God? now is your time;" a man and his wife entered the aisle, followed by a number far greater than the day before. The solemnity of the scene none can describe. After several prayers, it was proposed that the meeting should continue the next day, which was attended with increasing interest.

After communion, and when about to close the meeting, I proposed that the whole of the body pews should be vacated, and that all present who desired to submit now to God, and that prayers should be offered for them, might seat themselves in those pews; when all the body pews were immediately filled, and many stood around them evincing their desire to be of their number. Scarcely a single individual of the impenitent present, except a few children, but were found among the anxious.

Then it was proposed that all who, during the meeting, and some few days previous, thought they had submitted themselves to God might manifest it by rising; when, as it was afterwards judged, forty or fifty, or more arose. All present acknowledged that they had never before witnessed a more signal display of the power and grace of God, and we trust felt to ascribe all the glory to his great and glorious name.

HUBBARDTON.

The Rev. H Flagg, in a letter to the Editors of the Chronicle says,

A work of grace commenced here the latter part of May. We invited the ministers in this vicinity, to attend a three day's meeting with us on the 21st of June. Previous to that time, a number gave evidence of a change of heart, and many more were inquiring. The meeting gave a powerful impulse to the work. It was indeed a day of merciful visitation. The interest was so great on the third day, that the meeting was continued through the next day. The work has been remarkably still and solemn, and the subjects are principally from our Sabbath Schools and Bible Classes. Thirty five have already been received by this church, and more will probably offer themselves soon. Not far from 100 have expressed hope, including some "old hopes revived."

Extract of a letter from a lady at Lebanon, N. H. to a female friend in Rochester N. Y. dated August 19, 1831.

"We have great cause for gratitude in view of what God has already done for this people; but we hope for greater blessings. Our meeting was solemn and interesting—the first day was wet, yet a good many people attended meeting, many more out of the village than in. Wednesday morning the house was filled—in the afternoon much crowded. On Thursday our meeting house would not hold the people, and they went into the old house which is much larger. Friday the house was filled to excess, every spot and corner was occupied: we had a sermon in the morning from Mr. Wheeler of Windsor, in the afternoon from Mr. M'Kean of Bradford, Vt. at the close of the sermon all those who were anxious were requested to rise up where they were, (for there was no room for them to go into the aisle) I could not tell the number, but there were a great many. They were solemnly addressed by Mr. P. of Plymouth. I will just mention the case of one young man who had attended through the meeting unmoved and indifferent. He was standing at the time they were requested to rise, and for fear he should be considered as one of the anxious he seated himself—he was at that moment convicted, and is now rejoicing in hope. At the close of the meeting there was an invitation given to those who were indulging hope, and those who were anxious, and those who felt a determination to seek an interest in Christ immediately, to retire to the new meeting house for conversation. The house was filled—it would be impossible to tell the number, but there must have been many hundreds—there were a great many people from other towns present. It was a solemn season, and I trust a time when this church felt in some measure their dependance upon God.

"I presume you will think it strange that this meeting closed so soon, but it was necessary for the ministers to return to their people before the Sabbath, on that account it closed at the end of four days—Saturday evening. We have had an interesting meeting this afternoon—an inquiry meeting was held in the body of the house while the church retired to the vestry for prayer. There are probably 100 in town who have as we hope set out in earnest to seek the Lord. There were more than forty present to-day, and many of these have, as they hope, given their hearts to God since the close of the meeting."

The Revival in Lewis Co.—The Albany Telegraph says, a respected correspondent in Louisville, gives us the following as the number of converts in the late revival in Lewis co.:—Lowville 80; Martinsburgh 250; Turin 100; Leyden 200; Denmark 100;—total 730. The work was among the Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches.

We learn from Madison Indiana, says the Cincinnati Journal, that a very interesting state of things exist in that place. Several have already professed their faith in Christ. At a recent four days' meeting in Hanover, about 8 miles from Madison, about 40 inquirers came forward to the anxious seats.

From the Cincinnati Journal.

Pisgah Camp-Meeting.—We learn from a gentleman who was present at this meeting, that its services were evidently attended with the blessing of God. The exercises were appropriate, and the congregation attentive and solemn. The influences of the Holy Spirit were visible in the anxiety of the awakened sinner; and in the joy and rejoicing of the hopefully converted. During the solemnities, thirty-one professed to have embraced the Lord Jesus Christ as their only Saviour, and to have found peace through his atoning blood. Some of these were in the morning of life, and others in the decline of age. One of the hopeful converts is a Cherokee youth, by the name of Jeremiah Evarts, who has recently become connected with the Walnut Hill School in Lane Theological Seminary. This young man has just commenced his education, and we trust, will prove a great blessing to his own people in their distressed and persecuted condition, should he be permitted to return and tell them of that Saviour, who has become precious to his soul.

REVIVAL IN LEXINGTON, VA.

We have just received a letter from a gentleman in Lexington, bringing the cheering intelligence of a powerful work of the Spirit in that place. On the last Sabbath in July, thirty-five persons were added to the Church, (Rev. Dr. Baxter's) and more than sixty were deeply impressed by the truth and Spirit of God, and anxious to be saved, several of whom have since obtained hope in Christ. On the Sabbath previous, upwards of twenty were added to the Church of New Providence—and it is thought that there are two hundred anxious souls within the bounds of that congregation. There is a deep and solemn interest felt in that county on the all important question of salvation.

From the Cincinnati Journal.

A letter dated Tecumseh, Ohio, July 4, 1831; states that a church conference commenced in that place on the 24th of June, since which time a glorious revival of religion has been in progress.

Forty have already joined the church, 28 by profession and 12 by certificate. Many more are anxious. This work embraces young and old, rich and poor. The Bible Class, which at the commencement embraced only 7 professors now contains 30.

Another letter to the editor of this paper states that there are revivals in more than 30 towns on the Western Reserve in this State.

It gives us much pleasure also to state that a very pleasing state of things now exists in Oxford. and the Miami University.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE—In Gilmantown, we hear there is a very powerful work of grace: it extends into various parts of the town, and embraces a large number of their most influential men. Never, we believe, has there been a revival of religion, which has brought so many learned, wealthy and honorable men to bow at the Saviour's feet. And we find this circumstance creates great alarm in the camp of the enemy, in different parts of the country. He is in great trouble; being in danger of losing some of his most influential subjects; to prevent which, he is crying out against protracted meetings; and warning the people to be calm, to avoid such absurdities and beware of enthusiasm.

From the Connecticut Observer.

ATTACK ON REVIVALS, FOUR DAYS MEETINGS, &c.—Last week we asked for the facts which warranted the Editor of the Times in denouncing revivals, four day meetings, and the orthodox clergy. In reply he informs us that 'there is scarcely a town or a neighborhood in the state', where these facts may not be found in abundance, but he does nor deign to collect one of them in support of his accusations.—To make up the deficiency he has inserted several articles in his paper, which he is careful to inform his readers, are from the pens of 'liberal and enlightned Editors'; and to these he invites our 'special attention.' As they are his own chosen facts to support the severe charges made against the orthodox clergy, we take it for granted they are the best within his knowledge. One of these articles is entitled 'WEALTHY BEGGARS.' We insert the first sentence which was designed by the writer to illustrate the position that the priest-hood are collecting large sums of money under charitable pretences, for the purpose of employing it in overthrowing the rights of the people. 'The American Bible Society's income last year, was not far short of $1,000,000! The receipts since its institution, exceed $7,000,000!!!' We have given the sentence just as it stands in the Times, italics, exclamation points and all. Is this statement true! According to the Report of the American Bible Society, the receipts of the last year, 'omitting the sums borrowed at the banks, were $125,316,79. Of this sum $50,142 50 were received in payment for books sold.' Deduct what was borrowed at banks, and what was paid for books sold, and you have $75,174 29. And yet, says the Editor of the Times, or rather the 'liberal and enlightened' editor whose statement he indorses, 'The American Bible Society's income last year, was not far short of 1,000,000!' 'Not far short of a million;' only something more than nine hundred thousand dollars short. An accurate estimate for ,liberal and enlightened, Editors.

But we have not done yet with this subject. Our 'special attention' was invited by the Editor of the Times to another statement of his columns. "The receipts since its institution, exceed $7,000,000!!!" Now what is the truth on this point! The total amount of the receipts from all sources, since the commencement of its operation in May 1816, to the first of May 1830, is nine hundred and nine thousand, two hundred and ninety dollars, fifteen cents.' vid. Abstract of the American Bible Society, published in 1830, p. 13. Add to this sum the income of last year, except what was borrowed from banks, and received for books sold, and the whole does not amount to $1,0000,000. Here, again, the 'liberal and enlightened editors' make the trifling mistake of $6,000,000 in $7,000,000. They are about one seventh part correct—which is a good deal, considering the nature of the subject. We wait for more facts. Meanwhile, as the Editor of the Times excepts the Methodists, we suppose, that they are not 'orthodox,' since even in excepting these he still repeats his charges against the 'orthodox clergy,'—we beg leave to invite his 'special attention' to an extract from the Methodist Christian Herald, published in Boston, the particular organ of the Methodists in New England. It will show him how they regard the cry that our liberties are in danger 'from a union of Church and State.' As he acquits the Methodists of designing such a union, this testimony must, in his view, be entitled to peculiar weight.—

"They are men without principle and without candor,—the men who aim to carry favorite measures by any means, right or wrong,—whose motives are not taken from the public good, but from private ends, and personal honors and emoluments. These men, the better to cover their own iniquitous designs and motives, are crying out that our liberties are in danger from a union of church and state, and that our national institutions are in danger of being overthrown by a combination of Christians— that is, by the very men whom our Savior has denominated the salt of the earth."

We only add that those who endeavor to check the circulation of the Bible by false and exaggerated statements, and by imputing base motives to those engaged in the work hope to prevent their success, incur a fearful responsibility—whether it is done from wilful ignorance respecting the truth, or to gratify personal feeling, or to promote sectarian or political purposes.

From the Cincinnati Journal.

Mr. Editor:—A few weeks ago I performed a missionary tour through the greater part of Western Louisiana, in the service of the Missionary Society of that State, some details of which, if you think proper you may publish. I passed from New-Orleans to Natchitoches, a village of some hundred of inhabitants, on the Red River, where I spent several days and preached to a respectable and attentive congregation. There is no Protestant preacher residing here, but our Methodist brethren occasionally supply the people with preaching. I feel assured that a devoted and competent preacher of the gospel, would be encouraged & sustained at this place. There is an important military post in the vicinity, to which he might extend his labors, where he would be most kindly received by the officers.—On my way down the Red River to Alexandria, I visited the grave of a dear brother and fellow-laborer in Christ the Rev. Mr. Clarke, who fell a victim to the climate soon after his arrival in the country. It was a lonely place in the midst of the forest. An old negro man pointed out the spot where the good man sleeps. The only mark of a grave, was a small depression of the earth, and which was overgrown with shrubbery. As I was standing over the grave musing in silence and sadness, the gentleman at whose house he died, came up, and after relating the particulars of his sickness and death, pronounced this honorable eulogium on his character, "Mr. Clarke was a holy man." At Alexandria I passed a Sabbath, and preached to a large and solemn congregation. A preacher of suitable qualifications would be eminently useful at this place and in its vicinity. There is no Protestant preacher of any denomination in this village. Four clergymen at different periods, have located themselves here, but with one exception, they all soon sunk into the grave. It is a sickly, though a pleasant place. One of the preachers referred to, was the Rev. Mr. Hull, of Connecticut; a precious man, and a devoted servant of Christ. I attempted to find his grave, but there is no stone to tell where he lies; my friend and brother however, needs no monument to perpetuate his memory—for while his spirit is rejoicing before the throne of God—his name and the recollection of his worth, will be cherished by all future generations in that place. Thus fall our missionaries, "in the land of strangers!" The "Red River country" is reputed to be sickly, and from its exceeding fertility, it can hardly be otherwise. But there are situations a few miles from the river, to which many of the inhabitants resort during the summer, that are healthy; and to these places of refuge, it is unquestionably the duty of our missionaries to flee during the sickly season. From Alexandria I extended my tour to the South, through a rich and populous country to Opelousas—a village of about a thousand inhabitants. There is a Protestant church here, but no resident Protestant preacher. Our Methodist brethren have done chiefly all that has been done for the cause of religion here. The people informed me that I was the first Presbyterian clergyman that had ever visited their place. I preached here to a considerable congregation;—some miles distant from this village, there is a "Convent," called the "holy heart of Jesus,' where one of the most respectable female schools in the State, has been established. Most of the pupils in this institution, I was informed, are the children of Protestants, and who, with a few exceptions, are converted to Popery, before leaving it; a fact, which it would be well for those parents to consider, who are so fond of placing their children in the Seminaries of Jesuits. I regard Opelousas as one of the most delightful and interesting villages in Louisiana. It is situated in the midst of an immense prairie, on an elevated site, that is fanned by regular sea breezes in the summer, and is remarkably healthy. It is expected that a College will be established here. And it is an admirable location for a Female Academy. "I can hardly conceive, indeed, of an object that is more important, or that promises greater usefulness than the establishment of a first rate Female Institution in this place. It would be patronized, I have no doubt, by the protestant population in all parts of the State, and would prevent a multitude of the 'rising generation,' from falling into the hands of the papists. From Opelousas I extended my tour through 'Lafayette' and 'St. Martyns' to the very flourishing village of 'Franklin,' on the Teche in the parish of Attakapas. This is an important station for a preacher, and he would be kindly received. The people manifested an earnest desire to hear the gospel. There is an excellent Episcopal clergyman, resident here, and our Methodist and Baptist brethren occasionally preach in the village. From Franklin I proceeded to Placquemine, on the Mississippi.—The only Presbyterian clergyman in West Louisiana resides here, and he has labored with encouraging success. Throughout the whole extent of my tour, I received the kindest attentions. The people almost in every instance, manifested a desire to hear the gospel, and expressed a wish to have ministers of the gospel come and reside among them. I know not a more interesting field for christian enterprize in any part of the United States. A large portion of the country through which I passed, is the most beautiful of any that I ever saw. Its large 'prairies, studded with islands of verdant forests,' and covered with innumerable herds of cattle, present the aspect of an ancient and highly cultivated country. A great majority of the population are French, and of course are Roman Catholics, but the Americans are rapidly crowding into the country and will soon gain the ascendancy. Owing to the recent settlement of the country by the Americans, the means of literally and religious instruction are necessarily as yet very limited. Good schools are very rare, and I met with but one Sunday-school in the whole extent of my tour, and that was at Alexandria. It is to be feared, that in many instances, parents are not suitably impressed with the importance of educating their children; but I was happy to observe that the Americans generally appeared to realize the importance of this subject, and were turning their most serious attention to it. Competent teachers who go to that country well recommended, will be patronized and be highly useful. With regard to the state of morals among the people at large, as might be expected, the habits and customs of a Catholic country prevail—the Sabbath is profaned. With the French it is a day of amusement, and the Americans too, often fall into the current practices of the country. Intemperance has received a check, and every year is diminishing its ravages, and there is unquestionably a gradual, moral improvement taking place among all classes. But the country is most lamentably destitute of Protestant preachers of the gospel. They are exceedingly wanted, and intelligent and pious ministers would, I am persuaded, be cordially received by the American population generally, but it is indispensable that they should be intelligent and educated men, for there is not a more intelligent or a more respectable class of men, in the United States, than the planters of Louisiana, and a greater mistake cannot possibly be committed than to suppose that preachers of a different character can be extensively useful among them. Not only are preachers of high qualifications needed there, but it is important that they should take up their permanent residence. Transient preachers will not answer the purpose. We wish those to go there who are willing to identify their own destinies with the destinies of the country. Such ministers of the gospel will be encouraged, will be useful. They must expect indeed to be subjected to trials of a peculiar character, resulting from their situation as pioneers introducing the gospel into a new country, but by perseverance, and effort, and zeal, they cannot fail, under the divine blessing of winning a multitude of souls to Christ, and of building up his holy kingdom. There are only four Presbyterian ministers in the state of Louisiana. We are making efforts to add to our number the ensuing autumn. More labores in that destitute & important field of christian enterprize we must have—and by the help of God much good can be done. There is a growing conviction among the people, of the value and importance of christian institutions, and an increasing disposition to encourage and sustain them. We need more ministers of the gospel in that State, not only to preach the gospel, but to establish institutions of learning.—There is not at present a literary institution in the State, I fear, that is under proper christian influence. The Jesuits have been enabled to monopolize in a great degree, the business of instruction in the State, and their resources, both of men and treasure, appear to be inexhaustible. If Protestants intend to do any thing to any purpose for the cause of religion in that State, they must at once encourage the establishment of institutions of learning of a proper character. The rising generation must be taken out of the hands of those Jesuits, or the cause of the Redeemer may as well be abandoned. Opelousas, as I have already remarked, is an important location for an academy. Such an institution would exert an incalculable moral influence over a great extent of country. Another institution of learning of a christian character, is greatly needed in the vicinity of New-Orleans. And it is intended that an effort to establish one shall be forthwith made. Its location will be across Lake Pontchartrain, in the healthy region, but a few hours' sail from the city. But to accomplish these objects of christian benevolence, & others that are indispensible, we must have the co-operation and aid of our christian friends in other parts of the country. We are a feeble band and we have peculiar difficulties and obstacles to encounter.—The Romish religion it is known, is the dominant religion of the State. Every step that we advance, must, of course, be in the face of the strongest opposition. But the Head of the church is Almighty, and His cause must finally triumph. W.

CACHEMIRE SHAWLS.—This elegant article of female luxury promises soon to become common. A nobleman, an inhabitant of Moscow, has just invented a machine for the fabrication of cachemire shawls, by means of which a workman can manufacture this article with as much ease and readiness as the ordinary cottons. He intends to make his invention public, not desiring even to have a patent monopoly of it.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 8, 1831.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE OBSERVER.—You have so often answered our calls for assistance with a promptness that entitles you to our gratitude, that we only deem it necessary to say to those of you who are in arrears that we are in great want of money.

DROWNING ON THE SABBATH ACCOUNTED FOR.—It is a fact as well attested as any other, that there are more deaths by drowning on the Sabbath, of those who are engaged in the pursuit of pleasure, than on all the other six days of the week. Coroners who have kept a record for years have given their testimony to this fact. Now how does this happen? In answer, we say, we do not suppose that God, so to speak, takes his hand and oversets the boat and plunges the guilty trespassers on holy time to a watery grave any more on the first, than on any other day of the week. Precisely the same course of conduct, the same acts—the same indiscretion in the management of their craft on any other day would lead to the same fatal consequences. What then should render Sabbath excursions so much more fatal? The answer is, a consciousness of guilt, which destroys the judgment & leads to acts of indiscretion, which would not be committed by the same persons on another day. It is common to endeavor to stifle the reproofs of conscience by noise and affected gaiety. In doing this, judgment is laid aside and prudence disregarded. It is in this way we account for the numerous instances of drowning on the Sabbath. It is still, however, an expression of God's displeasure at these violations of holy time. The result is the same. It is the consequence of disobedience—the fruit of evil doing. Their own guilty consciences are the executioners of the judgment of God.

We know of no advice or directions that we can give by which the disastrous consequences of Sabbath excursions can be avoided, than by suggesting to those who are engaged in them that before they set sail, they should, by humble supplication and prayer ask the protection of God—ask him to keep them from sin. If they will do this, and follow the path pointed out in the scriptures, especially in the fourth commandment, they will never, we think, find a watery grave on the Sabbath, while "seeking their own pleasure," and be summoned in the very act of Sabbath-breaking to the bar of God.

OPPOSITION TO REVIVALS AND FOUR DAYS MEETINGS AT THE WEST.

A protracted meeting, it appears by the Cleaveland Advertizer has been held at that place. We obtain this information in consequence of a string of resolutions which were passed, as it would seem by a number of attornies and other gentlemen attending court at that time in that village. These resolutions the editor of the Advertizer very properly published as the most effectual method of exposing the folly and hollow hearted hypocrisy from which they emanated. The reasoning of these oppositionists is really very good. They are opposed to revivals, and as revivals are promoted by protracted meetings, they are decidely opposed to them, and call upon all the friends of good order and religion to set their faces against them. They use over for the thousandth time the worn out slang of infidels and scoffers about Dr. Ely, church and State, &c.

Now we would suggest to the editors of the Advertizer and of the Observer and Telegraph, whether they are pursuing the wisest course to take so much notice of these foolish and often repeated slanders—treating them as if they were some new thing—as if the camp of the enemy would not be disturbed as matter of course, when he sees the friends of the Redeemer acting as if they were really in earnest in their endeavors to serve their Lord & Master, and especially when they are adopting any particular measures which have been blest of God in the salvation of souls—measures which have produced thousands of desertions from his ranks, and will probably lead to the desertion of thousands more, if persevered in. Will not so much notice give the opposition a consequence in their own eyes and embolden them to persevere?

We have no sort of objection to permitting them to expose themselves—we would give their proceedings ourselves if we had three or four spare columns. Neither have we any objections to a little satire, by way of showing their inconsistencies in their true light, but we do object to serious argument in opposing such preposterous folly.

Let these opposers of religion throw their filth—there is no honor gained by throwing it back again. Let them alone that "they may be ashamed."

One of the charges of these opposers is worthy of especial notice, and is a fair sample of the childish weakness, and contemptible reasoning which characterizes their whole proceedings. They have seen that morning-prayer meetings were followed, or at least accompanied by, a revival of religion—and in order to account for this they say that in the morning, the mind is weak, the intellect is cloudy and the nervous system unstrung, so that an impression is more easy made upon the imagination, and the judgment more readily perverted than at other times in the day. We had supposed, and we believe it has generally been admitted, that the reverse of this is true. Perhaps however the world has been mistaken and that this anti-revival meeting at Cleaveland was providentially ordered to correct this mistake into which mankind had fallen. If so, it should hereafter be dated from, as the "era of light."

To be serious however, we think that our western friends will best promote the cause of religion by saying little about these proceedings. What the Devil cannot effect one way he may by another. If the minds of christians should be diverted from praying for, and conversing with, the impenitent and warning them to flee from the wrath to come, to talking about the doings of the adversary conversions will cease as certainly and inevitably as if their prayers or efforts were suspended by any other cause.

Let them treat these men with kindness and pray for them. Many such hardened opposers have had their hearts subdued and their eyes opened, so as even to "see men as trees walking" by the prayers and faithful warnings of christians within the past year. And why should not this class be as easily subdued by the same means in Cleaveland, as any where else? Many a hoary headed rebel against God, as well as the little striplings and sprigs of self-sufficiency, have had their sandy foundation of infidelity swept from under them, and when sinking, have been led to cry in the bitterness of despair, "Lord save or we perish."

In short we were not discouraged or alarmed at this bristling of the opposition in the west, until we saw the friends of religion, give it as we thought more importance than it merited, and saw them, as we feared, diverted from their appropriate duties to engage in unprofitable controversy.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

These meetings have been so extensively and remarkably blessed, that we hope the friends of religion will be extremely cautious in appointing and conducting them, so that they may not be brought into disrepute. We have heard much said among ministers, especially of the Rochester Presbytery, of the necessity of making arrangements so as always to secure ministerial labor at these meetings; and to prevent any disappointment in this respect, many cautions have been given to the brethren not to appoint two to be held at the same time in the same Presbytery—especially to avoid having two at the same time in adjacent towns. Measures indeed were proposed at the last meeting of Presbytery in this village, to come into some system, by the appointment of a committee, or in some other way to avoid any interference of this kind. It was however concluded advisable to leave the subject to the discretion of the churches.

It will be seen by our paper that yesterday a protracted meeting commenced at N. Penfield, and that one commences at Mendon to-day. Would it not have been much better to have had one of them a week later? We presume that in both cases there is an expectation of the attendance and assistance of the same ministers. One or the other must, of course, be disappointed.

Now the question is whether it is best in any case to hold two protracted meetings in this presbytery in the same week—and especially on the same side the River? Could not an arrangement be made of this kind that when two notices are sent for insertion in this paper, which will interfere with each other, that the publication of one of them—perhaps of the one last received—should be withheld and notice given to the person whose name is attached to it? If some arrangement of this kind is not made, it is readily seen that disappointments and unpleasant consequences may result from it.

ACCOUNTS OF REVIVALS.

The Utica Christian Journal complains that some of the Religious papers are in the habit of giving "five or six different accounts of a revival in the same place." We have not known any instance in which this error has been carried to the extent which the editor of the Journal represents, but we have seen that one or two papers, particularly, are in the habit of publishing, at least two accounts of the same revival. And we presume that it occurs in this way—after having published an account which has been given in the religious paper in that section of country where it took place, a letter is received from a correspondent, by the editor of one of the papers alluded to, or some of his friends, and is published without any reference to the previous account. Indeed we have noticed this very frequently and have sometimes indulged a suspicion that it arose from a desire to have it appear to the public that the editors of these papers were in possession of means of information which other editors did not enjoy. These duplicate accounts are copied into other papers and thus one object is attained—that of getting a great many credits.

It is in this way that we account for the errors of which the Journal complains, instead of attributing it to a desire to mislead the public as to the number of revivals that are taking place.

After all, probably more repetitions of the same account occur from want of recollection in editors—taking an article from an eastern paper this week and republishing it two or three weeks hence from a western paper and vice versa.

We learn from the Vt. Chronicle that 110 persons were to unite with the Congregational Chh. in Bennington on Sunday last. Also that a powerful revival is in progress in Manchester, and that 100 are supposed to have turned to the Lord.

POPERY IN THE U. STATES.

Peter Kenney, Superior of the Jesuits in the United States, republishes in the Catholic Miscellany of the 22d July last, an extract from the doings of the council of Trent which declares "all marriages not celebrated by a Romish Priest invalid, and that the parties are perfectly free." This is published for the benefit, especially of emigrant papists in this country, and is represented as important for them to observe. It may be asked what has a decree of the council of Trent to do with the regulation of the marriage ceremony in this country. Why, according to the Catholic creed it is just as binding, just as obligatory here, as in Europe—just as binding at this time as at the time when it passed. It will readily be perceived then, that the civil regulations, the laws of our country must be set aside in this respect, so far as regards Catholics. Suppose Catholics should in any part of our country—in any state of the union, obtain a political ascendancy—have the power of making laws in their own hands—it will at once be seen that they must, if consistent, consider marriages solemnized by protestant ministers, or by justices of the peace, as invalid, and treat the offspring of marriages not solemnized by their own ministers as illegitimate. This council, it will be recollected, was infallible—the prohibition unlimited as to time or place—Catholics cannot, whether as legislators or judges, therefore, recognize as valid any marriage, not entered into in the manner prescribed.

These things are well deserving the consideration of native Americans—of all who would preserve our political institutions free from the shackles of ecclesiastical power—who would in fact deprecate a union of Church and State.

We hope to be able soon to exhibit facts on this subject from which the people may be able to form opinions relative to the influence of Popery.

CATHOLIC IDEAS OF THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF CHRIST.

The correspondent of the South. Rel. Telegraph, whose letters we have occasionally given, says that he read the following inscription placed at one side of a Catholic Church at Finbars, Ireland.

"I H S Jesus Saviour of men.

Sacred to the memory of the benevolent Edward Malley, merchant, the friend of . . . . . and the friend of the poor. He employed the wealth of this world only to secure the riches of the next, and having a balance of merit on the book of life, he made heaven debtor to mercy.

The article signed W. from the Cincinnatti Journal relating to the state of religion in the valley of the Mississippi, we recommend to all who feel an interest in the progress of Protestantism in that region of country. It may essentially aid those who think of contributing by their money or personal exertions, to the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom there, by showing them to what point to direct their efforts, and how they may be made most useful. The editior of this paper has seen nothing, in the same compass, containing more valuable information with respect to that great region of country.

COL. JOHNSON.

The editor of the N. York Observer, in publishing the article relative to the conduct of Col. Johnson in taking one of his daughters which he had by a slave, with him to a Kentucky Barbecue, where she was compelled to withdraw, notices the remark which we made upon the account, and seems to suppose that we did not know that Col. J. was not a member of the Baptist Church. In this he is mistaken. We knew the fact and did not suppose that our remarks could be understood otherwise. He is a supporter and professed friend of the Baptist denomination, but they disapprove of his conduct, and, as we understand, are the persons who have been most bold in reproving him.

MURDER.

A man by the name of Guy C. Clark, of Ithaca, as we learn from the Chronicle, lately in open day, knocked his wife down with his fist and siezing an axe chopped her literally up. This deed was the consequence of a long course of Intemperance.—This man was once a Temperate drinker.

ANOTHER.

On the 2d inst. a man by the name of Dibdin Holt, killed his wife at Buffalo in a fit of drunkenness. These are surely strong—in fact, bloody arguments in favor of the temperance cause. How many are there who now drink temperately, and who shudder as they read these accounts, and who are horror struck at such deeds of infamy—who will yet have their own names handed down to posterity coupled with the same or similar acts of fiendish brutality.

The Circular from Baltimore, is omitted through the carelessness of the person who was directed to set it up, but who neglected it, and the neglect was not discovered until too late for this paper.

Rev. Asa Mahan has received and accepted a call from a newly organized church in Cincinnati to became its pastor. He passed through this village on his way to his future field of labor, on Monday last.

THE PROTESTANT.

We some time since expressed our opinion as to the utility of this paper and of the importance of giving it an extensive circulation. Its bold and fearless exposure of the abominable doctrines and practices of the Mother of Harlots, entitles it to the cordial and efficient support of every American Protestant. We confess that we do not accord with the sentiments of its editor as to the manner in which he chooses to express his opinions of Popery and Papists. Yet this ought not to prevent our giving our support to the only American publication which has for its object the exposure of Romanism and the vindication of Protestantism from the worse than infidel scoffs and denunciation of the Catholic presses which are established in all the principal cities and villages in the union. The Editor is about to make an effort to increase his list of subscribers, and an agent is on his way for that purpose, to this part of the country. And although laboring under difficulties and embarrassments from want of sufficient patronage ourselves, we cannot but wish success to THE PROTESTANT.

The following recommendations of that paper cannot fail of rendering essential service to the agent in soliciting subscribers in this region. The opportunities of the gentlemen whose signatures are affixed to them of judging of the usefulness of the Protestant, and of the kind of weapons that may be most successfully used in this warfare, are certainly far better than ours, and although not requested to do so we cheerfully lay them before the readers of the Observer.

The local Agents and other Friends of the Reformation, where either of the Agents may visit, are therefore respectfully desired to give them all the information and assistance requisite to insure them success, in their efforts, to extend pure gospel truth, to apply the heaven appointed antidotes to Satan's deadly poison, and to increase the glory of the gracious and ever blessed Redeemer.

To the Friends of the Protestant Faith

The bearer of this, Mr. Henry Belden, is favorably known to me as an agent of the Protestant. The paper which he recommends is in his opinion, of more importance to the cause of religion and our country, than any other one paper now published. If other papers fail, we may expect new editors to arise and publish the same thing under other names. Whereas, if the Protestant fails, the hope of another, amid such clamor of enemies, and coldness of friends, is at least very dubious.

The character of the paper I think is improving, and what is of more importance, the public mind is improving under its influence. I have taken it from the commencement—first with doubts of its utility, then with hopes that it would do good—Finally, there is no paper that I read with greater interest and with stronger hopes that it will exert a good influence.

The strong denunciations of the Protestant are like the denunciations of Scripture on the same subject. The cutting sarcasm of the Protestant is only a revival of the use of the same weapons which the Reformers wielded with such power against "the Mother of Harlots."—Its descriptions of the baseness and falsehood and blasphemy and cruelty of Romanism are as much below the truth, as the imagination and graphic powers of Mr. Bourne and his friends, are below the lying wonders and deceivableness of Satan.

My mind is entirely changed with regard to the value of the paper—and not only myself, but many clergymen of my acquaintance are recommending it to all their friends, as a thing, without which they cannot be fully prepared against the enemies of our faith, and the enemies of our free institutions. JOEL PARKER.

New-York August 25. 1831.

I have been a reader of the Protestant ever since its commencement, and I perfectly concur in the opinions expressed in the above paper. Facts are occurring every day which demonstrate the vast importance of such a publication in this country. It is to be ardently hoped that the Christian public will not suffer the Protestant to fail for want of patronage.

N. S. BEMAN.

New-York August 27 1831.

For the Observer.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A THOROUGH EDUCATED MINISTRY.

Mr. Chipman—I closed my last communication, by some remarks on the importance of securing the continuance and purity of revivals of religion, stating briefly, the connexion of education in the ministry, with this most desirable object. I consider revivals of religion the greatest blessings, that God has ever given in connexion with the offering of his Son: In fact, in these showers of grace are found all the promised benefits of redeeming love. Such is their infinite value, it is as important as are the issues of the judgment, that nothing endanger the purity or contribute to suspend the duration of these heavenly visitiations. Such is the fact in the history of Providence, that peculiar judgments have often followed these seasons of divine refreshing. The Babylonish captivity followed the revivals in the days of Hezekiah and Josiah, and "the pouring out of the Spirit in the days of the Apostles, was the precursor of the long desolation of Judea." So a protracted period of darkness and stupidity followed the revivals in the days of Edwards and Whitefield. I would by no means attribute this succession of divine judgments in all cases or even generally to the improper method of conducting these revivals; for there is, no doubt, to be recognized in the economy of God's government, a most important principle in relation to this subject, which is, to visit his enemies with judgment when he remembers his friends with mercy; or I might say from the contrariety of moral character in man, the course of providences, which is most favorable to the church of God, is most fatal to the enemies of righteousness. As saith the Lord by Isaiah, "The day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." "Angels restrain the winds till the elect are gathered in, and thus nations become fitted for judgment by the gospel being faithfully preached, those who receive it being gathered into the ark of mercy, and those who reject it being ripe for immediate judgment.' How far human weakness and indiscretion may contribute to this result it becomes every minister well to consider.

Of one thing we are assured, that divine truth is the instrument by which revivals of religion are produced and continued, and hence the infinite importance that the preacher be able to ascertain the mind of the Spirit who inspired it, and apply to the soul the peculiar instruction that its exigencies may require.

Here I would introduce a second reason why an educated ministry is demanded, or perhaps I should consider it but a branch of the argument already under consideration.

In relation to the point before us, vast injury is done in revivals of religion by uneducated and inexperienced men. Experience may in some degree, make up for the want of education, and education may, to some extent, make up for the want of experience. My argument is this.—Truth is the instrument; the human mind and affections, in their diversified and ever changing character, are the subjects upon which this truth is to be made to operate; God in his sovereignty is to make it efficacious and man in his freedom is to feel his obligation to yield his cheerful obedience. Now how is it possible for an uneducated man, so to understand this truth, the sublime system of moral science, revealed to us in the Bible, & so to discover & unravel the secrets of the human heart, as to bring this truth to bear upon it, so that it may secure the end which God designed? It seems preposterous to say, that piety is all that is demanded here. We might as well say that piety was all that is required to navigate the sea, to survey the stars, measure the mountains or preside in the chair of mental and moral philosophy. The only difference which I can discover is, that piety in one case is absolutely essential, and in the other not; yet in neither is piety sufficient to safe and successful effort. Here let me not be misunderstood. I know that much of divine truth is taught by the Spirit; understood experimentally and under such teaching, many men become very useful to others, yet I still maintain, as a general thing, they do not thus become prepared for the pulpit and the commanding station of a preacher to the uneducated and intelligent, the pious and profane, the believing and the sceptical.

Hence it is that the purity of revivals of religion is often injured and their duration shortened by a defective method of presenting the truth: by not understanding and preaching it as a system;—by not being able to see the consistency of its parts and the grand and powerful result of its whole scheme when brought to bear on the minds and consciences of men. In no case is the symmetry of the gospel so much endangered and the force of truth so much weakened, as by men, in revivals of religion, who are not able to see the consistency of its parts and to secure its influence as a perfect system. Hence we find the class of preachers, to which I allude, in danger of selecting a few truths of the gospel, and such as are calculated to produce the most immediate and powerful excitement and urging them, from day to day, with honest and most devoted vehemence; and always in danger of mistaking the excitement produced, for the enkindlings of the Holy Spirit & the sure indications of deep conviction. I do not say that this is not in reality the case; but where it is so, an intelligent apprehension of truth, would render the conviction vastly more hopeful and safe, and the subject, if converted, far more stable and useful. Nothing is more common, than to hear the class of preachers to which I allude, declaim against set sermons and doctrinal preaching, during revivals of religion. Unable to frame the one, and to understand and properly arrange the other, they have little acquaintance with the efficacy of either, and hence, honestly I doubt not in most cases, decry both. The result may be, as often seen, a powerful excitement, celebrated by the apparent feebleness of instrumentality, many hopeful conversions, a sudden suspension of feeling, speedy dismissal of the minister, & from want of being well grounded in the faith of the gospel, thoroughly indoctrinated during the season of religious experience, there is often a sickly and deformed growth of christian character, great loosness in religious sentiment, alarming indifference as to religious practice and generally a protracted reign of spiritual coldness and sterrility succeeds. To such, if the doctrines are afterwards preached, they are not understood; if pressed and believed, they are not loved and made the spring of holy action.

Here I confidently believe is found one of the greatest evils of an uneducated ministry. And I appeal to the most natural and obvious tendency of such preaching as that to which I have alluded, and I also appeal to facts, abundant in the history of the church and of revivals and to be seen at this day before our eyes, to sustain me in the declaration, that the loosness of Arminian sentiments and Antinomian practices have resulted, and do continue to result, from a defective administration of the truth and never more so, than from a defective administration of the truth, during the seasons of religious revivals.—It is now that Satan seizes on the defects of our ministrations and sows his tares amidst the wheat and loudly boasts that he reaps his richest harvests from the sunshine and showers of divine grace. Thus are our revivals of religion brought into disrepute with the enemies of righteousness, and regarded with distrust and caution by many of the sincere friends of God; and correct measures are deferred or discontinued, from the abuse they have received by the unskilful and inexperienced.

And here, lest my remarks might be associated with some whom God has signally blessed, I would add that such have learned from experience, from intercourse with intelligent men and from books, to some extent the knowledge desired and essential to safe and successful ministrations. And I would allow that they may surpass many who are thoroughly educated, in preaching plain, systematic and argumentative sermons, and hence one of the main secrets of success. Their appeals to feeling, are sustained by the enlightening influence of well arranged thought, forced as by demonstration on the mind, and hence, however highly raised, the danger of deception is avoided, and a guard is placed to melancholy and ruinous reaction.—But the evil against which we should guard remains to be considered: Others without the intellect, without the experience and without the prudence, if not the piety, of such men, will vainly attempt to tread in their steps:—fixing their eye on the high feeling which is produced and the rapturous results that succeed, they first and vigorously, aim to produce the same state of feeling, having their hearts piously and prayfully set upon securing the same happy results. We must fear, yea, we must conclude, that there is, in most cases, an entire failure, though we may have witnessed the most elevated state of feeling. The result is not secured—or if hopefully and nominally secured, it is, after all, of a very doubtful character—and if not doubtful, as said above, it is of a very defective character.—The reason is obvious. The feeling was not raised, as in the first case, by the plain preaching of the truth, logically arranged and forcibly illustrated. The way was not in this scriptural manner prepared; but the first and immediate effort was to produce feeling. Overlooking its character, its happy results must be lost.—Let the same logical and scriptural process be attempted, and the failure here is still greater than before; for an unsuccessful attempt here, is certain death to that feeling which might otherwise be produced; and I verily believe, that every attempt will be unsuccessful, where a clear head, a well furnished and disciplined mind are not found engaged in the undertaking. Hence, we find uneducated men, foregoing or failing in the attempt, to furnish the mind with instruction preparatory to exciting the feelings of the heart and generally directing all their efforts to produce feeling, which, unguided by an intelligent apprehension of truth, becomes subject to all the dangers to which I have alluded above.

That I may not be misunderstood, let me say, that feeling in view of the truth and realities of religion is not to be undervalued—by no means dispensed with. All the intelligence that the immortal mind could receive, would no more break up the deep and depraved foundations of the human heart, than wintry moon-beams dissolve the icy mountains of the north. There must be feeling attending it strong and permanent, or it is intelligence but to involve the soul in deeper guilt and heavier wo.

How does this affect the character of religious revivals & the prosperity of the church? I reply, it endangers the purity and continuance of the one and correct sentiment in the other.

Revivals of religion will be pure and protracted in proportion as the doctrines and precepts of the gospel are better understood and more correctly preached. Our greatest hope that these seasons will yet become pure as the Pentecost of the Apostles, and protracted as the Millennium, arises from increased attention to education in the gospel ministry, attended with correct understanding of the doctrines of the gospel and deep piety of heart. How important then, that every minister be able in this day of scepticism and opposition to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and to declare correctly the whole counsel of God.

As a third argument for an educated ministry, I would mention the importance of securing continued interest, untiring activity, and permanence of settlement in the ministry.

That man, whose resources are limited and whose attention is confined to a few of the more obvious, however important, truths of the gospel, and who does not see their connexion with the remaining truths of the Bible and the practical bearing of the whole, will always be in danger of losing his interest in the very truths upon which he dwells so constantly, and they will soon become so familiar both to himself and to his hearers, that their efficacy and influence will become entirely suspended, and the only resort of such a minister, to secure a return of interest to himself, is to change the people of his charge. But let him become acquainted with doctrinal and practical theology; with that system of truth, every part of which is so essential and the whole, in its natural arrangement, so beautiful, and in its legitimate influence so powerful, the more he contemplates it, the more he studies it, the more he prays over it and preaches it, the more will he be astonished at its philosophy, enraptured by its sublimity and enchained by its power; and from its ever new discoveries, its endlessly diversified relations, he will appear before his people from week to week with all the charms of novelty, with ever growing ability to interest and impress. And to him, a thousand lines would be too short to comprehend the wisdom and to exhaust the power of the doctrines of the Cross. Take the ever growing interest of Paul, of Luther, of Knox, of Edwards in the Gospel of Christ, as the divinely given system of sacred truth and we are at no loss to understand the spring of their untiring activity. From these exhaustless stores of heavenly science they imbibed and strengthened the principles of holy living: observing the necessary and immediate relation of doctrines with duties; the more they learned, the more they loved and labored; and from the broad range of their intelligence and influence here, we cannot but contemplate with astonishment the stand their unfettered minds must have taken, when heaven broke upon their view. Interest in the truth and engagedness in its precepts, both here and hereafter, must depend in no small degree, on the extent of our acquaintance with the revealed doctrines of Jesus Christ. Hence we find from Paul to the present day, that educated ministers are most interested and active in defending and disseminating the truth; in starting and carrying forward the great enterprises of christian charity.

The permanence of the ministry requires education. I will not stop to discuss the question whether the ministry should be permanent or itinerant. With those who advocate its itinerancy, any arguments on the main question would doubtless be lost. I take it for granted, that the question as to a permanent ministry is settled. How shall that permanence be most effectually secured? I reply by thorough education. Let the minister be able to take the lead of intellect, hold influence over the minds of his hearers, and with but common share of prudence and with piety, he may soon make himself, in view of the people, essential not only to their spiritual good, but to their present interest and reputation.—He gains their confidence and secures respect for his sentiments, and may soon make way to their hearts through the attention that his intelligence and resources have excited, and while they repel the truth he presses on the soul, they are compelled to respect the intelligence of his head & allow the consistency between his sentiments and his labors. Even the wicked will bear from such a man what they would not endure from one whose education and resources were inferior to their own.

But this is not the only secret of his permanence. An educated man is capable of continually instructing and of course of continually interesting. The people feel that they are not continual losers, by supporting, and attending on, his ministry. They discover in the growing intelligence of the people the reflection of his own wisdom and cannot but appreciate the value of such a man.

But how is it with those who are uneducated? Unlike those who are educated, they are in general far from securing permanence. To meet the inadequacy of their professional furniture, in some cases, the whole system of their ministry is made a system of itineracy; and for the same reason we find many who are uneducated, where this system is not generally introduced, pleading for its partial adoption at least. They no doubt feel its necessity and not capable of estimating the value of permanence, are honestly in favor of an itinerant ministry to some extent. They would fain make it to appear, that revivals of religion would spring up all over the country, if the established clergy would break loose from their people, and going from congregation to congregation, pour out their souls in fervor and acting under the conviction that they preach perhaps for the first and last time to immortal souls, they will exhaust all their powers and incalculable blessings succeed. In theory, this may be imposing to a certain class of minds; but when reduced to practice, the purity, the stability and promptitude of action, for which our denominatian has so long been distinguished, would be endangered, if not destroyed. In my view, the numerous subjects of our revivals need to be trained in gospel sentiments, christian enterprise and laborious action, under the same ministry to which their hearts are attached by that kind and prayerful interest which so long watched and guided their footsteps. No other man can step in and so successfully accomplish it. I believe that, as a general thing, it is education alone, which will secure that permanence which is essential to a proper training of the youthful subjects of grace, to meet the exigencies of the present time: indeed I might say, that without education, no man is able to do it, however permanent he may be.

It was a remark of Whitefield that he should not be able to sustain himself in any one congregation for the space of a single year.—Whitefield had discernment enough to discover the extent of his resources.

Permanent settlement in the ministry, is endangered, not only by a loss of interest which the preacher is liable to experience in his work if continued for a long time with the same people, and a loss of respect for him and confidence in his fitness to instruct on their part; "but, if he "attempts to continue and, as is often the case, "attempts to retrieve the past deficiencies of his "education, by great and special effort, in his "preparations to preach, while at the same time "he sustains the great, and various and arduous "duties of his office, he is a dead man! he "will sink in hopeless infirmity or a premature "grave." Or, in the language of the experienced and intelligent writer just quoted, if he attempts to bring up all his arrears, by incessant study, while he saved his life by neglect of pastoral duties, though he should become a tolerable preacher, he is a dead man in another respect, there will be a sad failure in the amount of his usefulness." Such a man cannot be the permanent minister of any intelligent and pious congregation at the present day.

The importance of securing pure and protracted Revivals of Religion, together with correct views of truth and duty, as the best security for such Revivals; and the value of a permanent ministry to secure to the church and the world the greatest amount from such Revivals, are in my view arguments of no small weight in favor of an educated ministry.

I am yours, &c. A. D. EDDY.

THE INSURRECTION IN VIRGINIA.

Com. Elliot, of the U. S. ship Natchez, who left his ship on the morning of Wednesday last, with a detachment of seamen and mariners, arrived here this afternoon in the southern stage, and informs us, that he left Southampton at 2o'clock yesterday afternoon, at which time every thing was perfectly tranquil. He is of opinion that about 75 white persons have been murdered. Some others are missing. Several of the leaders of the insurrectionary band were either killed or taken prisoners. Nelson, (one of them) was killed; Gen. Porter was taken and is in jail; the Preacher, and one who was designated the Prophet, have been made prisoners. A man by the name of Tom, who was wounded, and who expected to die immediately, made a full disclosure of their intention; he is, however on the recovery. There did not appear to be any previous concert with other slaves. Very few who were engaged in the insurrection have escaped—one or two only, are missing, who it was expected would soon be fallen in with.—Beacon.

LATER.

The Editors of the Journal of Commerce have been favored with the following very interesting letter, dated RICHMOND. Aug. 28th 1831.

Yours of the 25th is received. Until to day, the opinion has prevailed that the disturbance among the negroes was confined to a number of runaway slaves, in and about the Dismal Swamp; and that nothing like a concerted plan of insurrection was thought of by others.

Our artillery company, you will have heard, had returned home. The company of horse were also on their way home. But we learn that the Governor received an express last night from the section of country where the murders took place, which induced him to send forward an express to meet the company of horse, & order them to return to the country of the insurrectionists again. It is also said the Governor has received one or two expresses since morning, and that the last accounts are, that several more families have been murdered; that insurrections had broken out in Halifax, N. C. —in Surry and Nansemond Va.—that a mistake was made by some of the Negroes, and that this day, instead of last Sunday, were the day on which the murders was to have been committed. Our City has out a small patrol at night, but people to-day seem to be of opinion that stronger measures should be taken. A very intelligent citizen says that at least four hundred men should be under arms to-night, as reports are, that threats of insurrection have been made near the City. The reports, which no doubt have been founded on nothing, in many instances, nevertheless, cause some alarm. We can now conceive that the murders at Southampton could not have been so much an affair of runaway negroes, as was at first supposed; and the question arises, if the slaves in that county would murder the whites, whether they are not as ready to do it in any other county in the State; and whether the reports that may spread among the slaves in other parts of the State; may not excite those to insurrection that never thought of such a thing before. We are of opinion that these occurrences will cause considerable excitement among our citizens, for sometime, although no further damage may be done; and we are not without fears that more damage will be done before the slaves have learnt what their best interest is.

If they attempt any harm in towns, they would most likely resort first to fire to aid them; and goods destroyed by such a fire, would not be paid for by insurers. For this reason, we should not, just at this time, care to have goods sent us on which we might have to make advances.

The foregoing is about as correct a state of affairs here as we can give you. As further events transpire, we shall write.

TOBACCO.—The quantity of leaf manufactured tobacco cigars and snuff, entered for home consumption in the United Kingdom of Great-Britian for the year ending January 5, 1831, amounted to 19,406,402*l.*: and the duty received thereon to 2,938,050*l* 10s. 10.d

The great length of the article of Mr. Eddy, which we give on this page, excludes considerable matter which was prepared for this paper. An article respecting the progress of the Poles, we are compelled to omit with much regret, and we have only room to say that their prospects are brightening.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fenwick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine ever failed in this climate where it is so much needed, or we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it in the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instance out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,

THE TEAR AND THE SMILE.

The tear is sad o'er youthful hopes
Low sunk beneath the billow;
And sad the tear the widow drops
Upon her orphan's pillow.

But there's a tear that pity calls,
And sadder far than any;
A tear that daily, hourly falls,
Without one hope for heaven!

'Tis when the thoughtless sons of mirth
Are from their gambols riven;
And quit their fairest hopes on earth,
Without one hope for heaven!

The smile is sweet, when from above
All bliss and joy are flowing;
And sweet the smile which partial love
Is on our vows bestowing.

But sweeter far that smile serene,
To faith new beauties lending;
Which on the Christian's cheek is seen,
When life and death are blending.

That heav'nly smile, which seems to say,
"Farewell to all my sorrow;
This head, which bows in death to-day,
Shall reign with Christ to-morrow!"

TO THE SPIRIT OF A DYING CHRISTIAN.

Parting soul! the flood awaits thee,
And the billows round thee roar;
Yet look on—the crystal city
Stands on yon celestial shore:
There are crowns and thrones of glory,
There the living waters glide,
There the just in shining raiment,
Standing by Immanuel's side.

Linger not—the stream is narrow,
Though its cold dark waters rise:
He who passed the flood before thee
Guides thy path to yonder skies.
Hark! the sound of Angel's hymnings
Rolls harmonious o'er thine ear;
See! the walls and golden portals,
Through the mists of death appear.

Soul, adieu!—this gloomy sojourn
Holds thy captive feet no more;
Flesh is dropt, and sin forsaken,
Sorrow done, and weeping o'er.
Through the tears thy friends are shedding,
Smiles of hope serenely shine;
Not a friend remains behind thee,
But would change his lot for thine.

A TALE FROM THE BURMUDAS.

These romantic emeralds on the Western Ocean, so far as climate is concerned, have a most Eden-like appearance. All is miniature beauty; far, very far, from the wild and natural grandeur of America. The violet is not more unlike to the sturdy oak, nor the pink to the tall pine, nor a grain of sparkling sand to one of the huge Andes, than the Burmudas are to that gigantic continent, in its majestic and boundless forests. Yet from these insulated isles, we select the following tale.

Many of the houses in the Burmudas have a little garden, the avenues to which are fringed with jessamine and roses. The pride of China is often planted near the front, and with its green and umbrageous branches, forms both an ornament and a cooling shade. The buildings, which have no taste or symmetry, are perfectly white, and when seen at a distance, rising in the midst of green, have an agreeable and pleasant appearance. Within the enclosure round the mansion are fig-trees, bananas, pomegranates, and in some cases, orange, shaddock, and limes: but human art has done little; it is the beauty of the climate, that chiefly makes December as pleasant as May.

Beneath skies forever blue, the fig-tree puts forth its lively blossoms, and the orange and the pomegranates spread their swelling fruit. The balmy air is scented by groves of cedar, and in the fields and woods the aloe plant attains the full measure of its growth. The tamarind tree and mulberry expand their dark foliage over the sunny scene; and the tall slender palmeto shoots up in the valley, with its broad diverging leaf.—But what is far nobler than all the tiny beauties of nature on these lovely islets, the fair light of truth hath shined with a serene ray; many a negro's cottage has been made glad with the tale of the Cross, and the sweet little landscapes have been rendered still more lovely by the beauties of holiness.

At what time the gospel was first introduced into these green dots on the ocean, I cannot say. Mr. Whitefield visited them in 1744, to recover his health, and at that period preached with his flaming eloquence the doctrines of salvation by faith; and that some blessed fruit budded from the seed then sown, the following little incident will testify.

The writer of this narrative was one day riding through the cedar groves, on the road that leads from Hamilton to St. George, with Mr. W. a merchant belonging to the former place, when his friend invited him to visit a lowly and mean cottage in the bosom of the grove, to pray and converse with one of the oldest female inhabitants of the Islands, a widow, and a Christian of the New Testament school. They entered the habitation where all things bore the impress of extreme poverty; an old woman, near seventy, was waiting upon her mother, a remnant of mortality, who was laid upon the only poor bed the cottage contained. The mother was between ninety and one hundred years of age, and stone blind. I approached her bed, and taking hold of her withered hand, addressed her, and inquired what were her hopes of that solemn futurity, on the brink of which she seemed to totter.

Though dark and bed-ridden, the sound of such a theme seemed quite familiar. "Christ," said the old woman, "is my hope; I trust, thro' his dear merits, to depart in peace, and I am not afraid to die. He hath died for me, and I can trust my soul in his blessed hands."

"When," I asked, "did you find the knowledge of this Saviour, of whom you speak with such confidence!" "Sixty odd years ago," said the aged believer, "did that venerable servant of God, Mr. Whitefield, visit these Islands; and, as he often stood in the open air, I, among others, went to hear him. He preached on that text, 'Wilt thou go with this man? and she said, I will go.' Gen. xxiv: 58. All were silent, till a negro called out; 'Will none answer massa?' My desires were drawn with a cord of love; his earnest address, enforced by many tears, melted my stony heart, and from that time I became a follower of the Lamb. Sixty years have rolled over my head since that period, but he hath been my comfort by day, and my song in the night season. I have long been a widow, but his promises have been my support, and I know he will not forsake me in my old age, & now my strength faileth.' After kneeling by the bed-side of the old saint, and leaving a blessing with the daughter, we resumed our ride.

In musing upon the subject of this visit, here, thought I to myself, is one of God's hidden ones, the seal of a faithful ministry. In the great day of final audit, how many will be found who have received the word in the love of truth, but of whose conversion to God, the faithful laborer of the cross will never know in time. They shall, however, meet again, and shine as stars in the crown of those holy men, by whom they were gathered into the Christian fold.

COLLEGE RECOLLECTIONS.

A writer in the Richmond Family Visitor gives a striking testimony to the efficacy of prayer and perseverance in overcoming mental dullness, personal disadvantages, and coarse, unpolished manners, in the case of a college student. Of a large, ungainly person, uncultivated address, but of an exemplary life, a certain student was the butt of ridicule for his class. His studies were prosecuted incessantly, yet no successful result followed. The flint of application drew no sparks of fire from the benumbed rock of his intellect. Continually, jeers and nicknames were measured out to him without mercy. His room being next to that of the writer, it became a matter of notoriety that at certain hours of the night, and sometimes for long time continued, a low murmuring noise proceeded from his apartment, seeming more like groans of distress than any other sound. The scholars gathered with all stillness into the writer's room on one evening in order to climb up to a high small window and ascertain the cause of the sound. We continue the narrative in the words of the writer:—

At last, at about 2 o'clock, we heard the low moaning commence, and an indistinct noise as of some one speaking in a subdued tone of voice; it sounded still more strange than usual,—or a guilty consciousnes of acting wrong caused us to imagine so.

My companion assisted me to arrange the forms, and to climb to the lofty window, through which, when I had succeeded in reaching it, I beheld our poor persecuted neighbor: the pale glimmering of his lamp showed me his books and papers scattered on the table and the seat, which he had evidently just vacated; all bore witness to the industry of the owner. My eye glanced round the room, anxious to discover whence the noise proceeded, and I saw at the end of the table with his back towards me, and his Bible open before him upon his knees, the young man.—He was so entirely absorbed in his occupation that I fearlessly put my head through the shadowy window, and heard his earnest supplications for the divine assistance in his devotion, for pardon for his own sins,—and for us he implored the blessing of God, and for me in particular, as one the most in the habit of grieving him, he prayed that my heart might be renewed; and for himself he prayed to be enabled to forgive my provocations, and return them with kindness, and to withstand the temptations which surrounded him. He humbly lamented his dullness of apprehension, and the difficulty which he found in acquiring the knowledge necessary to fit him for the profession he longed for: he prayed the God of wisdom to assist him, and to strengthen his understanding.—All this he uttered with the earnestness and freedom with which an affectionate and dutiful child might be supposed to address a beloved parent, in whose love and affectionate willingness, as well as power, to grant his petition, he had perfect confidence. He seemed to receive comfort as he prayed, and thus poured out his sorrow before his Almighty Father in and through the name of Jesus his compassionate Redeemer.

I cannot express my feelings. Shame—sorrow—admiration—were mingled together. I felt how infinitely superior that poor despised young man was to my proud companions, and to myself, with all our boasted talents and accomplishments. I descended as softly as possible from my station, to my room-mate, who was impatiently waiting at the foot of my mimic scaffolding to learn the cause of the agitation which he had already observed in me. I told him what I had seen, and heard, and was grieved to find that the recital only excited his merriment. He turned all I could say into jest: "The things of God were foolishness to him." But for me (blessed be God!) the pious instructions of my mother had not been entirely forgotten;—they told me that this young man was the friend of God, and I dared not to speak against him any more. In the morning, when our companions came to ask of our success, my room-mate gave a most ludicrous account of my discoveries, and of our 'Methodist neighbor,' as he called him—I said as little as I could on the subject, for I was too much entangled in their evil ways, to dare to say much in his favor, and as I before said, I dared not now speak against him.

When I left college, I left the student there also; his manners and habits remained the same, but he was making better advances in his studies, than any of the professors or tutors had expected. I had never become intimate with him, as a bitter consciousness of my former treatment of him, would not permit me to seek his friendship; while his reserved and studious habits prevented him from observing the change of my feelings towards him. Some seven years after, when by the mercy of God my wild and careless heart had learned to love, and wished to serve God: I came into ———, a large and flourishing town on my way to the field of labor appointed to me as a missionary of the Episcopal Church in the West. I was detained a day, it being Sunday, and I heard many persons speaking of a very celebrated preacher, whom they were all going to hear, and who was spoken of as a very learned man, of a very polite address, but above all of a most holy and blameless life and conversation. He was the beloved pastor of the largest church in the town, & his eloquence had become so much spoken of, that many strangers came from a distance to hear him preach.

I was pleased with the opportunity to improve myself, by hearing this celebrated man. I went; and judge, sir, of my utter astonishment, at beholding ——, the dull, awkard, despised student of —— College! The God in whom he trusted, to whom he prayed, and whom he served faithfully, had heard him, had blessed him, and accepted of him. His pious soul was now enjoying the happiness it longed for in preaching Christ to poor lost sinners. I returned to my lodgings, deeply impressed with a consciousness that truly, "Whatsoever we shall ask in the name of Christ, believing, we shall receive."

Another Looking-Glass for Venders of Ardent Spirits.

AWFUL EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.

[The following has been furnished us by a clergyman, extracted from a letter, which he had recently received from a friend in the county where the occurrences described were witnessed. The facts may, doubtless, be relied on, & they furnish an awful lesson of reproof and warning to all venders, as well as drinkers of ardent spirits.]

The body of ——, a young man of wealth respectable connexions, and who lived near C. V., was found on Thursday the 19th ult., suspended to a tree, by means of a bridle.

He had long been a drunkard, and once attempted to bleed himself to death, after a course of excessive whiskey drinking.

When, therefore, his horse returned home recently, without a rider or a bridle, the friends of the young man went in pursuit of him, entertaining the most fearful apprehension as to his fate, and enlisting the sympathies and efforts of his neighbors to rescue him, if possible, from a premature and ignominious grave.

All efforts to find him, however, proved unavailing, until his body had become putrid, and was partly devoured by carnivorous birds.

He had wandered into a lonely body of woods, where none but God, and beasts & birds of prey, could behold him. He then took his bridle from his horse, and secured it to the limb of a tree, but a little above his head, and, after looping it around his neck, jumped up (as it is supposed) and let himself fall with sufficient violence to dislocate his neck, or to paralyze at once his whole body. His feet were resting upon the ground, in advance of his body; his hair was entirely gone from his head, and his eyes eaten out!

Four or five remarkable cases of death from intemperate drinking, have occurred in this county, within two years. A U. S. officer lost his life, by one of the drunkards here not long since, who gave his own for it afterwards at the gallows. Another of these drinkers was found dead in our town, not long since, on a Sabbath morning, with his bottle of whiskey in his bosom.—Among those who crowded to the scene, was another disciple of Bacchus, who deliberately took from the dead man his bottle of whiskey, in defiance of spectators,—of Heaven, and of God's day, and went away to drink its murderous, accursed contents! This man was then without the use of one eye, and within a few days past, he received an injury in the sound one, which in all probability will leave him totally blind. In vain have we expostulated with the merchants here, and dispersed among them the best essays on intemperance; in vain do sightless eye-balls, and the tears and rags of widows and orphans, entreat them to desist from the sale of intoxicating drinks. But the cases which I have named exhibit but part of the effects of this unholy traffic. We mourn over it, and nothing keeps us from giving names, but the characters of the living friends.

The following is the Fortieth Letter of a gentleman travelling in Europe, to the Editor of the Southern Rel. Telegraph.

NO XL.

Glasgow, April 27th, 1831.

In travelling from the southern provinces of Ireland to the northern, there is observable a much more than provincial difference of manners, character and condition. In the south there is much of the vivacity and ardor of the French: in the north there is all the staid and immoveable intellectuality of the Scotch. In the south, society is leavened by popery; in the north, by presbyterianism. In Munster, wherever I travelled, poverty and filth stood forth in bold relief. They are characteristic of that part of Ireland. In Ulster, so far as I could see and hear, it is altogether the reverse. In Cork, to visit the houses and lanes in which thousands of the poor are collected, requires, in a peculiar degree, the spirit of a missionary; but in Belfast, I found the poor-house the poor-streets and suburbs of the city both clean and comfortable.

The reason of this difference, I have, of course, frequently inquired, and have been referred to various causes, of which I may take some notice again. One gentleman, however, answered briefly that it was all owing to popery and potatoes. To popery, because of its numerous holy-days, interfering with the duties of the laboring man, and generating habits of idleness as they do, without the redeeming circumstance of cultivating either the intellect, the conscience, or the heart. It must frequently become the duty of persons, in all circumstances, to spend an occasional hour, during the days of labor, in the ordinances of public worship; and it must very frequently be the duty of those who have no labor to perform. But it can be no man's duty to allow bishops and councils permanently to set apart fasting and festival days, whether many or few, and to bind him to their observance, just as he is bound to the observance of the Sabbath. Even Christmas, which so many protestants observe as a holy-day, is not so constituted in the scripture, nor is there any such regard to be paid to it, as to "the Lord's day." Now the Catholics, in the true will-worship spirit of their system, have almost filled up the year with these holy-days. The people are not allowed the time to labor which God gave them; and when they come together there is nothing in the public service to compensate them for the loss. I have seen the chapels crowded throughout the day, but often as I stepped in, I heard no words by which I could be at all instructed, much less saved. It was a barbarous rehearsal, or an idle, and often a contemptible pantomime. It had often occurred to me, before I heard the gentleman's remark, that popery would make a community poor, because it would make them idle, and keep them ignorant. Instead of arousing, strengthening, expanding, and refining all the faculties and feelings within them, and thus rendering it impossible that they should be satisfied to live upon a dung-hill, it has just the contrary effect. The mind is darkened, fettered, degraded into leading strings. The mind of a christian is also subdued, but it is to the infinite God, and by his eternal truth; but the genuine papist is in subjection to his priest, and dependant upon him, and that in regard to those reasonings and decisions in which all interference, except of the truth and spirit of God, is most decidedly injurious to his intellect.—The fact is so, however, even if it could not be accounted for, that the Catholic districts of Ireland are remarkable for poverty, ignorance and filth. I have frequently heard it asserted that they may be known by the coach passenger, without his asking a question; and I consider it a natural effect of the Catholic system.

But what have potatoes to do with the solution of this question? The rationale is this. At first from necessity, and afterwards from indifference, growing out of despair of a better condition, or general custom in a particular class, great numbers have learned to live on potatoes and milk. They hope for no more. They only aim at a sufficiency of these. "The consequence is, said the gentleman, that as soon as a young man can obtain a few square feet of ground for his potatoes, nothing will do him but a wife. For the first year the bride can live in the cottage of her own or her husband's parents, as a few more potatoes in the pot for her food, and a little more straw in the corner for her bed, is the only additional expense. By the second or third year, the husband may have collected mud and straw enough to build a house and bed it for himself, but very probably he can rent no more ground. There are now more mouths to be filled, but the garden will yield no more potatoes, and the goat no more milk than before. They are straitened for daily food; they have no time, and no heart to think of cleanliness and comfort; grow up without knowledge; the children they live in the dirt; they eat and sleep with the pig; and at maturity are not likely to aim at any thing higher than the cabbage life of their parents.

In England and Scotland, in which Ulster may be included, there is this difference that the people cannot live upon potatoes, and sleep on straw, even for love, as they do in the south of Ireland. Consequently a young man is not ready for a wife, because he has a few bushels of potatoes. He must have something more. He therefore continues at his work: he learns how to make a living; he gets a little property, and the means of getting more, and then "nothing will do him but a wife."

You would suppose, perhaps, from what I have said, that in Cork I had quite an undesirable residence. I have spoken, however, only of the substratum of society. The well educated and truly pious gentry of the country are altogether a different race. You will frequently find very agreeable combination of Scottish intellect, of Yankee shrewdness, and French vivacity; and when to these is added the regulating and softening influence of genuine piety, you have an exceedingly interesting companion.

The following is the concluding part of an account given in the Observer & Telegraph, (Ohio,) by the Rev. Elizur Wright, of a recent protracted meeting held at Tallmadge.

It will doubtless, be expected, and it is due to the Christian public to give a faithful view of the success of the gospel in this place. The following, after having consulted several individuals, is as accurate a statement of the number who are hoping as can be obtained. By an account given in the Observer and Telegraph for July 21, by our Pastor, it appears that about sixty were then hoping. From that time to the commencement of the four days meeting there were ten hopeful subjects of the work. And during the meeting there were about forty, making the whole number of those who were hoping that they had passed from death to spiritual life, at the close of the meeting to be 110.

Since the meeting we have had ample evidence that the Lord's mercy is not exhausted; but that he will continue to be gracious, if his people will continue to call upon him; and that he is ready at all times to bestow the best of heaven's blessings upon our sinful race in answer to the persevering prayers of the saints. Ten have obtained a hope that their peace is made with God since the close of the four days meeting. We begin to count the number of those who remain destitute of a hope, instead of those who have obtained one. The sentiment is passing from one to another, that christians must not leave off praying for the impenitent, until the last one is brought into the kingdom. Last Tuesday and Wednesday I was present at two very interesting conferences in opposite sections of the town. Our Minister instead of inviting anxious sinners to take their seat, called upon all who were conscious that they had no interest in Christ to take a seat provided for them; on the former day four took the seat out of an assembly of about fifty, exclusive of children under ten years of age. But on the latter, out of an assembly of about seventy, one solitary individual only appeared for some time to occupy the seat. After a prayer or two a father who was present brought in his son who was standing without, that he might enjoy the benefit of the prayers that were about to be made. It is not pretended that this was quite an accurate division, but it was nearly so. In a neighborhood of sixty or seventy individuals only eight or ten over ten years of age can be found who are not hoping. The revival is of such a character, as to impress on the mind the idea that it is the work of God. Probably the thought has arisen in the mind of every individual Christian, "others have been more faithful than I have been." A demonstration was exhibited, that the Lord is ready to accept even the poor and imperfect services of his disciples, provided they are performed in sincerity. To God be all the glory given.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Tallmadge, Aug. 20th, 1831.

P. S. In addition to the foregoing account there are about twenty in the village of Middlebury, who have obtained hopes since the commencement of the meeting.

THE MILITARY MISSIONARY.

The Baptist Irish Society celebrated their 17th anniversary at the City of London Tavern, June 24. The Rev. Mr. Lewis, of Chatham, related the extraordinary circumstances which follow, ascribing the happy events to influence exerted in Ireland by this Society. Mr. Lewis said, that

Four years ago he became acquainted with a soldier of the 63d regiment, now stationed in Van Dieman's Land, where he had been twice promoted, as the result of his good behaviour.—Some time ago, a lady paid him (the soldier) a visit, and left him a New Testament. He was afraid to read it, and hid it for four days under his pillow, before he would venture to see it.—At length he opened it, and it pleased God to direct him to the 3d chapter of John's Gospel.—The word was applied with power to his heart, and he was excited by it to inquire for some missionaries, of whom he had previously heard.—Having heard where they preached, he walked a distance of 8 miles to hear them preach. This he did, though exposed to much opposition from his companions who waylaid and pelted him as he went to and from the place to which he repaired. His zeal and courage soon became so great, that he was seen talking with Catholics on the necessity of faith. The priests heard of this, and a Catholic bishop happening to be in the neighborhood, the individual was summoned before him, to give an account of himself.—Previous to his meeting the bishop, he retired to a field, and prayed to be directed whether or not he should obey the summons. He determined in the affirmative, and boldly repaired to the place of meeting. When he was asked by the bishop, if he was the person who dared to talk with the people on religious subjects, he did not attempt to state and support his creed, but like St. Paul, in the presence of his accusers, told the simple tale of his conversion to God. The consequence was, that the bishop took down a horsewhip, and threatened him expulsion from the church. The next Sabbath-day he was publicly cursed; and, thus exposed to the opposition of his friends, who were respectable Catholics, he had no alternative but to enlist in the army. He did so, and was placed in a regiment chiefly composed of Irishmen, to whom he read the Bible in Irish. Subsequently he went to Van Dieman's Land, and he (Mr. L.) had obtained for him two Irish Bibles from the Chatham Bible Society. The last time he heard from him, he stated he had received money enough to buy a black coat, and had obtained leave of his superior officer to preach to the natives on the Sabbath-day. Thus, this individual had been led forward by Providence, and was now engaged as a serjeant in the army, and a missionary to the heathen, and all this had been accomplished by the instrumentality of the Baptist Irish Society.

Drowned, in the Genesee river, near this village, last Wednesday evening, a man named —— Sutton, supposed to be from forty-five to fifty years of age. The deceased was a man of intemperate habits, has been about this village, during the last four or five years, leading a kind of vagrant life. He has no family connexions here, and from this notice, his friends, if he has any, may know his fate. The body was found about two miles below the place where he was drowned, and decently interred by the inhabitants of this village.—Genesee Register.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

DOCTRINAL.

From the Philadelphian.

HOPKINSIANISM AND BIBLICAL CALVINISM.

The Boston Telegraph of August 20th, copies from the Christian Watchman, with apparent approbation the following sentences. "Religion, if it be worth any thing, is a deep conviction, in the understanding, of the value and importance of truth. The person who has it, is able to give a reason of the hope that is in him; for through the understanding his heart is made to feel." Religion we should define to be a system of moral obligation. Evangelical religion is the gospel system of moral obligation. Practical, evangelical religion, is the gospel system of moral obligation reduced to practice in any one's heart and life. Now we should say, that religion to be worth any thing, must include a deep conviction, in the understanding, of the fundamental truths of the gospel, and of the value and importance of those truths. We presume that this was the meaning of the writer.—We agree with him, that every person who is the subject of true religion has a good reason for the hope of salvation which he indulges; whether he is able to give that reason to others or not. Of every rational accountable agent we hold it to be strictly true, that "through the understanding his heart is made to feel." This is a part of the true philosophy of the practical religion of the gospel. No human soul ever had any feelings but in consequence of some previous act of the understanding, on which that feeling was dependant. Of course no train of operations in the human soul was ever commenced by an exercise of the heart; that is, by a feeling of the soul. This doctrine is as true of the soul when under the renewing influences of the Holy Ghost as at any other time; and of course the feelings of the sinner never experience a saving change but in consequence of a corresponding, previous change in the conviction and apprehensions of his understanding.—He sees sin to be hateful before he hates it; and has a mental view of God's loveliness before he loves him.

How then, we wish to ask our Reverend brother Thatcher, and other old fashioned Hopkinsians, can the Hopkinsian doctrine be true, that sin and holiness are predicable of nothing but acts of feeling! Can that part of religion which "is a deep conviction of the understanding," be said to be neither holy nor sinful! How can Hopkinsians deny, that acts of the understanding may be sins as truly as any feelings of the heart!

Again, if through the understanding the heart is made to feel, how can the Hopkinsians say, that regeneration is an immediate energy of the Holy Spirit upon the heart, or the will of a sinner, whereby holy feelings are created, without any mediate agency of the understanding?

Biblical Calvinism teaches that regeneration and effectual calling are the same thing; and that God the Spirit in making a sinner a new creature, a new moral agent, ordinarily employs the instrumentality of truth in the enlightening of the understanding in the knowledge of sin, and of the Saviour from sin; so that being convinced of sin, and having right apprehensions of Christ, he is renewed in his feelings and in his will; and thereby is both persuaded and enabled to receive Jesus Christ freely offered in the gospel.

It teaches, that God's people shall be willing in the day of his power, but this passage of scripture does not even assert that he makes them willing; much less that he makes them willing by a direct, instantaneous, and immediate energy exerted upon their faculty of willing. When the sinner wills to come to Christ, it is, indeed, a day of God's power with him; and it is true that God makes him willing; but then he does it mediately, by his own moral influence, through the truth, whereby he rectifies the apprehension, the belief, the moral views, of the understanding. This change in acts of the sinner's understanding is the means by which his feelings are changed. His new thoughts, or views, apprehensions, and belief, with their consequent feelings, become his new motives to new and holy volitions, or acts of will; and without these motives it would be absurd, according to the constitution of the human mind, to expect any holy acts of the will. The real motives of any one for being willing to come to Christ, are the true reasons for his coming.

Motives to volition are not external objects: nor are they exertions of divine energy: they are mental operations of thinking and feeling, which are as uniformly antecedent to acts of willing, as any cause is antecedent in the order of nature to its own appropriate effect. If you would change a man's choice, purpose, intention, design, determination, resolution, or willingness, you must first produce a change in his motives, for no one of his volitions ever arose in his mind but from some motive, as the true occasion of his volition: and if God changes a man's volitions by changing his motives, then is the regeneration of the will not immediate but mediate. It is equally true, that the whole work of converting a sinner need not be in every part of it instantaneous. God converts him in all the moral exercises of his soul, without violating the order of those mental exercises which he has himself established; and at the same time, the sinner is a free efficient, moral agent in turning to God. There is an instant before which he is not, and after which he is a thoroughly renewed man; but God may take a longer or a shorter time, according to his own good pleasure, in bringing a man by HIS divine and gracious MORAL SUASION to holy thoughts, feelings, and actions.

FAITH AND REPENTANCE.

The Boston Telegraph of the 20th of August contains a piece by one modern Hopkinsian "Paul," which is entitled "the absurdity of maintaining that faith precedes love and repentance." It is an item of "old fashioned Hopkinsianism," that in every case love and repentance precede faith, and that this love and repentance are directly created exercises of the sinner's soul, immediately produced by the energy of the Spirit.

"It appears that it is very absurd, unscriptural, and dangerous, to maintain that faith is before love and repentance. Many who have written and preached upon experimental subjects have maintained, that faith is the first exercise of the renewed heart, and produces love, repentance, and every other gracious affection. They say that no man can love God, until he believes God loves him; that no man can repent of sin, until he believes his sins are forgiven; and that no man can love Christ, until he believes Christ loves him, and died for him in particular. Formerly, Mr. Boston, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Erskine, and Mr. Harvey maintained, that faith is the first exercise of the renewed heart, and the source from which all other gracious affections flow. More lately, the most popular preacher in Scotland, and many of the most popular preachers in America maintain and propagate the same sentiment. But it is the essence of Antinomianism, and subversive of all true godliness. For it is a faith founded in selfishness, and productive of nothing but selfish affection.

A man may believe, that God loves him, that his sins are forgiven, and that Christ died for him in particular, while he is in the state of nature and in the exercise of perfect selfishness. There is no need of his having a change of heart, in order to exercise such an appropriating faith. Let any sinner really believe, that God loves him, and he will love God for loving him; or let him really believe, that God has forgiven his sins, and he will love him for forgiving them; or let him really believe, that Christ died for him in particular and intends to save him, and he will love him for his gracious conduct and design.

Christ has laid it down as a universal truth, that "sinners love those that love them. To place faith before love, is to turn all experimental religion into selfishness. But to place love before repentance and faith, lays a solid foundation for that religion, which is pure, holy and entirely disinterested. If a renewed sinner loves God, before he knows that God loves him; if he repents of sin, before he knows that God has forgiven him; and if he loves Christ and believes in him, before he knows that he died for him in particular and intends to save him; then his love, his repentance, and his faith, are pure, holy, disinterested affections. His religion is genuine, and will stand the test of his own conscience, and of the all-seeing and heart-searching eye of God. He has that love, which many waters cannot quench nor the floods drown.

It is of vast moment, that preachers of the gospel should properly describe the nature and order of the first exercises of a renewed heart; and that hearers should know the wide and essential difference between placing love before repentance and faith; and placing faith before love and repentance. It is often said, that it is not much matter, whether love be placed before faith or faith before love. But it is of unspeakable importance to place love before faith, in order to prevent a very common and most fatal delusion.

PAUL.

The Calvinism of the Presbyterian Church does not maintain, that assurance of one's own personal salvation is of the essence of faith: nor is this a proper object of saving faith to any one, that God loved me and that Jesus Christ died to save me. He who practically and cordially believes that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life," or any similar statement of the gospel, has saving faith; whether he believes that he himself exercises saving faith or not.—Without attempting to justify every sentence of Marshall on Sanctification, we assert in opposition to Hopkinsianism, the Calvinistic doctrine, that he who cometh unto God in any act of acceptable worship must first believe that God exists and is a rewarder of all that diligently seek him; and that without faith it is impossible to please him by any other exercise of the mind. Whatsoever moral action is not directly or indirectly of faith is sin.

Not to waste time in logomachy we will here state, that repentance sometimes means godly sorrow for sin, and in this sense we conclude "Paul" must have used it: for repentance in the most common scriptural sense denotes the whole moral change of the soul which is required in order to salvation. "Repent ye" is in the Greek Testament, "Change ye your minds." Now we affirm, that it is very absurd, unscriptural and dangerous to maintain that a man may have love to God and godly sorrow for sin before he believes that there is a God who made him, and who has bound him to obey a law which is holy, just and good. It is by faith that we first become acquainted with God, and receive the revelation which he has made; and if one should love any deity without believing the testimony of Jehovah, and fixing his affections on such revealed attributes as he can become acquainted with only by faith, he would not love the God of the bible. Faith is the first exercise of the soul which the gospel requires of a sinner. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. When it is required, "repent ye," the very first change included in these words is a change from unbelief to faith. If a sinner does not believe that he is a sinner, and that sin is the dreadful evil which his Maker represents it, he will never have hatred of it and sorrow for it.—If he does not believe that God is lovely he will never love him: and if he does not believe that God is in Christ a God of mercy he cannot love the true God.

There is mercy with him that he may be feared; and without faith we have no knowledge of this mercy: nor can we worship him.

We know of no more than one popular preacher in America who holds, that a man must be assured of his own personal salvation in the very first act of saving faith; and that assurance of Christ's love to a particular individual is a prerequisite to the love of Christ by that individual. "Faith is the first exercise of the renewed heart, and the source from which all other gracious affections flow;" but we deny that saving faith is "founded in selfishness," and productive of nothing but selfish affection." To place faith before love is to render all experimental religion rational and scriptural: but to place love before repentance and faith, may lay a foundation not only for an entirely disinterested love of God which never existed, but for the doctrine that love is an exercise of the human mind created by God; utterly independent of all other exercises in the human mind, and wholly irrational; because not dependant on any apprehension of the loveliness of the object loved.

"Paul" in the above extract is fighting men of other days; for the moderate Calvinists of the present age maintain the priority of faith in the order of the Christian graces; and yet teach that a sinner may be renewed before he knows it, and may love Christ before he feels any assurance that Christ loves him.

If saving faith consisted in a man's believing that he is elected, redeemed, and shall certainly be saved, then the consequences stated by Paul might follow: but a man must have faith before he can be assured that he has it: he must receive Christ in the exercise of a holy, purifying, operative, benevolent faith, before he is warranted by scriptural evidence to say, "Christ loved me and gave himself for me."

CONVERSION.

In some, converting light is like a glorious brightness suddenly shining in upon a person, and all around him: they are in a remarkable manner bro't out of darkness into marvelous light. In many others it has been like the dawning of the day, when at first but a little light appears, and it may be is presently hid with a cloud; and then it appears again and shines a little brighter, and gradually increases with intervening darkness, till at length, perhaps, it breaks forth more clearly from behind the clouds. And many are, doubtless, ready to date their conversion wrong, throwing by those lesser degrees of light that appeared at first dawning, and calling some more remarkable experience, they had afterwards, their conversion, which often in great measure arises from a wrong understanding of what they have always been taught, that conversion is a great change, wherein "old things are done away, and all things become new," or at least from a false arguing from that doctrine.

The converting influences of God's Spirit very commonly bring an extraordinary conviction of the reality and certainty of the great things of religion; (though in some this is much greater, some time after converson, than at first;) they have that sight and taste of the divinity, or divine excellency, that there is in the things of the gospel, that is more to them, than reading many volumes of arguments without it. It seems to me, that in many instances among us, when the divine excellency and glory of the things of Christianity have been set before persons, and they have at the same time as it were, seen, and tasted, and felt the divinity of them, they have been as far from doubting of the truth of them, as they are from doubting whether there be a sun, when their eyes are open upon it in the midst of a clear hemisphere, and the strong blaze of his light overcomes all objections against his being. And yet many of them, if we should ask them why they believed those things to be true, would not be able well to express, or communicate a sufficient reason to satisfy the enquirer, and perhaps would make no other answer but that they see them to be true: But a person might soon be satisfied, by a particular conversation with them, that what they meant by such an answer is, that they have intuitively beheld, and immediately felt, most illustrious marks, and powerful evidence of divinity in them.—President Edwards.

TEMPERANCE.

[Extract from the Second Report of the New-York State Temperance Society.]

DISTILLERS.—One half to two-thirds of the distilleries in the state are no longer in operation. Aside from the diminishing profits of the maker and vender of spirits, they find it difficult to restrain the clamors of conscience against their business of making drunkards; for, disguise the business as they will, it is still, in its true character, the business of destroying. The vender and maker of spirits, in the whole range of them, from the pettiest grocer to the most extensive distiller, are fairly chargeable, not only with supplying the appetite for spirits, but with creating that unnatural appetite—not only with supplying the drunkard with the fuel of his vice, but with making the drunkard.

In reference to the taxes with which the making and vending of spirits load the community, how unfair towards others, is the maker and vender of them!—A town, for instance, contains one hundred drunkards. The profits of making these drunkards is enjoyed by some half dozen persons; but the burden of these drunkards rests upon the whole town. The executive committee do not suggest that there should be such a law; but they ask whether there would be one law in the whole statute book more righteous than that which should require those who have the profit of making our drunkards, to be burdened with the support of them!

TEMPERANCE EATING ESTABLISHMENT.—Mr. Pattinson of N. Y. city, furnishes at his eating establishment, various kinds of meats at six cents each; puddings or pies, at three cents; good spruce beer at cost, and wholesome water gratis. He dines between 100 and, 160 a day.

SHORT HISTORY OF A DRUNKARD.

G——living in Rutland County, has a worthy and respectable wife, and several children. When sober, he is a kind husband, and affectionate father. And before the retailer took it from him, had the means of providing well for them. But the unfeeling dealer in destruction, has ever been ready for the profits on one pint of whiskey, to send distress and anguish into his family, in all the wretched forms in which drunkenness can carry them. Very frequently has he gone home intoxicated, and beat his wife so unmercifully, that she has been obliged to flee for her life, and under cover of night secrete herself in the barn, or under the currant bushes in the garden. In this way she has spent between 40 and 50 nights of her life, because the retailer, knowing the consequences, will sell "grog."

On the fourth of July last, he went home intoxicated. His wife to avoid an inhuman beating, had fled to her mother's who lived in the neighborhood. On finding her absent, he took his child about two years old, from the house, and beat it nearly to death, in order to gratify his feelings, and to see if its cries would not bring the mother within his reach. The screams of the child were heard at the house of its grandmother, and a man went to its relief. The old lady followed & in attempting to assist in binding him, was kicked with such violence as to break two of her ribs and throw her on a rock with such force as to break her arm. Such is her age and infirmity, that her recovery is very doubtful.

QUITE REASONABLE.

Some two or three years ago, a member of the church who had been in the way of taking a little, like many of his brother members, got in the way of taking 'a little too much.' The church labored with him several times—he promised amendment at each successive reproof. At length he was cited to a church meeting to answer to the charge of Intemperance. He attended, acknowledged his fault, and promised to do better—i. e. not to drink 'so much.' This, however, they would not receive—he must pledge himself not to drink at all. This was a hard case: he would not say it was wrong, or unreasonable: but he was not prepared to answer them—and begged a week to 'consider on't.' The request was granted, and the next week the church was again together to learn his decision. He told them he had considered, as he thought maturely, the question of drinking spirituous liquors—and was convinced it was wrong: but he could not see why he should be pledged to total abstinence when the rest were at liberty to drink: 'if it was wrong for him, it was equally so for them!" He would, therefore, propose—that a pledge be written for the church to sign, and he would gladly place his name upon it with his brethren. What did they do, think you! They took time to consider!

From the Boston Recorder.

THE CIVILIZED & THE UNCIVILIZED.

Pomare II. (of the Society Islands) was excessively fond of distilled spirits; yet such was his conviction of their uselessness and their pernicious influences, that he would not permit distillation in his dominions. It had been practiced to a great extent; and Pomare was so fond of spirits, that, when brought to the Islands by foreigners, he could not resist the temptation to purchase, and to drink to intoxication. That he should prohibit distillation, therefore, even for himself, is a striking evidence of the clearness with which he saw the incompatibility of doing any thing to encourage spirit-drinking, with the principles of Christianity and his duties as a ruler. —A late letter from one of the Society Islands says: "Rum has been brought to our people's doors in casks, but they would not buy it. As far as I can discover, only two of our church members purchased it at all. One had four bottles, which he sold the next day for cloth; the other had ten, which he bartered away for other property." Mr. Ellis, formerly a missionary at the Islands, says that individuals visiting them for purposes of commerce, have "carried whole cargoes of ardent spirits; and not content with anchoring their vessels in the ports, have carried these spirits in small quantities from door to door, introducing them to the houses of the people, and offering them at a cheaper rate than usual; well knowing that ardent spirits would tend more to counteract the effect of Christian precepts, than any other means they could employ." "We have no hesitation in asserting that there is more immorality in the stations visited by shipping, and corrupted by such profligacy, than is to be found in all the other stations in the South Sea Islands put together."

Very similar is the state of things, and frequently the influence of visiters from Christian countries, at the Sandwich Islands. And among the Indians, where missions have been established, the same decided and spontaneous condemnation of spirit-drinking and spirit-selling is met with; and not unfrequently have unprincipled wretches bearing the Christian name, conducted among them as the kindred spirits mentioned above, do among the distant Islanders.

These facts suggest two remarks: 1. Some unholy influence is suffered to prevail where Christians do any thing to encourage spirit-drinking. Among late converts from heathenism, ignorant as they are, such conduct is seen at once to be incompatible with the spirit and principles of a pure religion which has not yet been dishonored among them, by the inconsistences of its professors. But for the frequency of the sin, and the indulgence with which we have long been in the habit of regarding it, we should look upon it as our less enlightened brethren do.

2. How important it is, that piety should prevail among sailors! They might act for the truth with great effect, wherever a white sail is seen; but now what multitudes of them counteract every Christian effort, and scatter pollution on every shore!

MISSIONARY.

Mr. Chipman—The inclosed letter is from a highly respectable source. It was directed to, and laid before the Presbytery of Ontario, during their Session last week in Sparta. It was read, and committed. The Committee reported, and recommended, that it be laid before our churches for their consideration, and acted upon, by the Presbytery, at our next meeting. That it may be laid before the churches, it was directed that it should be forwarded for insertion in the Observer. In obedience to that direction, it is herewith forwarded. Yours, affectionately,

S. C. BROWN.

West-Bloomfield, Aug. 29, 1831.

(CIRCULAR.)

Baltimore, March 18th, 1831.

DEAR BRETHREN,—At the last stated meeting of the Presbytery of Baltimore, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted, viz:

WHEREAS, in the view of this Presbytery, the Presbyterian church with which we are connected, in general, and we, as a Presbytery, in particular, have, to a most inexcusable degree, neglected the claims of Foreign Missions; and whereas, the present state of the heathen world, as well as the last command of our Divine Redeemer, most urgently calls us to exert ourselves in this noble cause—Therefore,

RESOLVED, That we, as a body, will make the attempt from this time to support at least one Missionary, from year to year, in the foreign field.

[It is to be understood, that the Presbytery reserves to itself the right to select the Missionary, when it is thought proper; but the details of the plan were designedly left for future and more general consultation—The object at first was only to present the general principle.]

Since that time we have attempted to carry into effect the plan therein expressed; and if we are not deceived, it is well adapted to interest the people of God in the great cause of Missions; & has been attended by tokens of the Divine favor.*

We feel at the same time, unfeigned diffidence in our own judgment—and desire the prayers and counsel of our brethren on this momentous subject. We therefore venture to lay before you the plan which we have been led to adopt, affectionately asking your co-operation if you approve it; or your suggestions as to some other plan, better fitted to promote the interests of foreign missions.

You are fully aware that we are doing almost nothing for the cause of Foreign Missions, in the Presbyterian Church in the United States.† And compared to what we ought to do, with what we might do, & with what we have done in other forms of Christian charity, our neglect of this is surprising, criminal and very perilous.

Much of this has been owing, we think, to the want of a specific plan, fitted to reach and excite our people, and to carry forward this great work. No such plan has ever been projected, or carried actively into general use among us.

Yet our church affords peculiar facilities for combined, uniform and powerful operations in this way.—It is organized already, and only needs to be set in motion, in order to make it a most efficient Missionary Institution.—The plan proposed above of operating, through the Presbyteries, seems to be at once the most simple and effective.

One reason why the cause of Foreign Missions has not more interested our people has been, their ignorance of the men to be supported by them, & of the destination of their money when given. From this, has resulted a vague, abstract sentiment on the whole subject; and their sympathies have not been enlisted, even when their consciences have been in part informed.—This scheme has the advantage of directly identifying the body of the people with the foreign missionaries whom they support; and with the field in which they labor. Thus the regards of our people will be in some measure located abroad; and out of their personal and almost pastoral relation to the missionaries whom they support, will arise attachments well calculated to secure their continued prayers and charities.—In confirmation of this, we need only refer to the striking fact, that those churches and neighborhoods, from which missionaries have gone out, have uniformly felt and done most for foreign missions; and for that portion of the Heathed world also in which such missionaries labor.

It is a very interesting circumstance in connection with this view, that many young men well qualified for the work, are now preparing in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, & elsewhere, who are saying with deep desire, "send me," "send me"—and who may at once be selected and sustained by their respective Presbyteries.

In proposing this plan, it is by no means intended to interfere with other societies already engaged in missions. On the contrary, the object is to co-operate with them, as far as it is possible to do so.—But the Assembly's Board of Missions is fully occupied on our continent, and has no purpose of effort beyond the two Americas.† The American Home Missionary Society is exclusively domestic as its name imports; and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, needs some such combined effort as this, to bring up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty," the whole Presbyterian Church.

The details of the plan may be left for future consultation—but the great principle of operation might be at once adopted; the whole church might be simultaneously excited through the Presbyteries; and the way be thus prepared to send forth from 100 Presbyteries, 100 missionaries to the foreign field.

Dear Brethren, we are wedded to no particular plan; but we feel that something must be done; that it must be done at once; that it must be done by all the church; and with all "our heart, and soul, and mind and strength."

Our prayer is that we may be divinely directed and sustained in all our efforts for this great and neglected cause. May millions now ready to perish rejoice forever in the great salvation sent to them through our hands—and may we escape the awful curse of having their blood found in our skirts.

RESOLUTION OF THE LAST GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The measures recommended in the following resolution, adopted by the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, are deemed of so much importance to the harmony and prosperity of the work of Home Missions in the West, that we ought, perhaps, before this, to have given it a place in the "Missionary." We now lay it before our readers, earnestly solicitous that, through the prayers and efforts of the friends of the cause, it may be directed to results in which the whole church shall rejoice.

"In view of existing evils resulting from the separate action of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly, and the American Home Missionary Society, the General Assembly recommended to the Synods of Ohio, Cincinnati, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Tennesse, Indiana, and Illinois, and the Presbyteries connnected with the same, to correspond with each other, and endeavour to agree upon some plan of conducting Domestic Missions in the Western States, and report the result of their correspondence to the next General Assembly. It being understood that the brethren in the west be left to their freedom, to form any organization which, in their judgement, may best promote the cause of Missions, in those States:—and also that all the Synods and Presbyteries in the Valley of the Mississippi may be embraced in this correspondence, provided they desire it."

Many of our readers are aware that, on the passage of this resolution, the Assembly was much divided. The friends of united action in the West, desired and urged its adoption, hoping that the proposed correspondence might result in some organization which would reduce to harmony the present discordant operations of the general Boards. But it was opposed by those friends of the "Board of Missions," who think it important to perpetuate the present divided action of that Board and the A. H. M Society. At lenth, however, a "compromise" was agreed upon between the two parties, in which the friends of this resolution yielded to the earnest solicitude of its opposers, that the same individuals, without any change, who had constituted the Board of Missions during the previous year, might be re-appointed. This was accordingly done, and the above resolution adopted, with a very few dissenting voices, and with the understanding, distinctly announced and mutually recognized, that the brethren of the West should be left to their unbiassed choice, to form such organization as they might deem best suited to promote the great object of the resolution, the harmony of Missionary operations in those States. Feeling bound by this understanding, we should consider it improper to suggest here any form of correspondence, which we may desire, or to make use of any considerations to bias the choice of our brethren in favour of any particular organization, which might be in accordance with our wishes.

We only add, that it has given us pleasure to notice the promptness with which our Western brethren have entered upon measures to compare their sentiments on this immensely important subject, and especially that, in some instances at least, they are inclined to commence their inquiries at the throne of grace, by fasting and prayer. Let them be thus conducted unto the end, with Christian simplicity, and singleness of motive, and we shall anticipate with confidence the happiest results from the deliberations of the Convention, which we perceive is already invited to meet at Cincinnati on the 23d of November next.

CAFFRARIA.

Mr. Kay of the Wesleyan mission to South-Africa, after mentioning the baptism of several natives at Butterworth says:—

"Three of the persons (one man and two women) baptised on this occasion, belong to the class of people to whom the Caffres have given the name of Amafingu, because poor and poor indeed they are; for excepting those who have become resident of the mission stations, few if any of them can command any kind of property that can be called their own. Most of them are complete vassals of those who may entertain them, and to this state of servile subjection they submit, for the sake of a mere subsistence. They are in short, strangers in a strange country, having for years been beaten about by the enemy, and the perpetual wars of the interior. Ask them respecting their own land, and the place of their nativity, and they almost invariably reply, "Far, far, far." That unprecedented numbers of these destitute exiles should have been literally driven into this quarter, by a train of uncontrolable occurrences, at the very time when christianity was becoming established in the land, and when the gospel was pushing its way onward, as if to meet them; that a strange variety of circumstances should have attended to scatter such numerous groups of them round our respective stations, and that increasing numbers are now to be found amongst the inhabitants of every mission village in Caffraria, are facts of the most pleasing kind; and facts too, in which not only the missionary, but every pious mind, is constrained to recognise the hand and providence of the Most High. But this is not all. They are not merely thrown within the range of missionary operation; but, by a distinguished and remarkable readiness, both to hear and to receive the gospel, they are obviously becoming special objects of missionary attention. Although equally, if not more superstitious than the Caffre, in general, they appear to be much less influenced by that sceptical spirit which he so frequently manifests.—It is clear that Jehovah, according to one of their own significant figures of speech, is placing them "under the missionaries' wing."—Our stations are evidently becoming their asylums; and I verily believe that the time is not far distant, when many of them will be added unto the church of our God.

"Whilst I reminded the candidates, when standing before the congregation, of the goodness and mercy of God, who had brought them out of a distant land, a land of total darkness, who had preserved them in the desert, and kept them alive among the dead, who had prevented their falling a prey to the enemy, or perishing in the field, and who had at length brought them to his "tabernacle, and to his holy hill," the tears trickled down their sable cheeks, and the whole assembly was deeply affected. The most distinguished individual amongst them was the son of an Amazizza chief; and a person who would have become a powerful ruler in that tribe, had it not, like many others, been dispersed, and in a great measure, destroyed, by the invaders."

CHOCTAWS.

EXTRACTS FROM A COMMUNICATION FROM MR. KINGSBURY, DATED APRIL 6, 1831.

Petition of the Choctaws for Missionaries to accompany them to their New Country.

The circumstances under which the following petition of col. Folsom, and many of the people of his district, was drawn up and presented, are stated below.

We had an interesting meeting at Mayhew on Saturday, Sabbath, and Monday, the 19th, 20th, and 21st of March. Col. Folsom was present, and more than 200 of the natives, old and young. The forenoon of Saturday was occupied in the examination of the schools. The evidence of improvement exhibited by the scholars appeared to give universal satisfaction. The afternoon of Saturday and the Sabbath were devoted to religious exercises. The holy sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered, and one person was admitted to the fellowship of the church on examination.

During the meeting, an address to the missionaries was drawn up by col. Folsom, on behalf of the members of the church, and signed by the leading members present. At the close of this meeting, col. Folsom delivered a talk to the missionaries, in which he spoke more at large on the topics mentioned in the written address. He requested that at least one or two missionaries might go with them to their new home.

This talk was replied to by myself. I brought into view the present situation of the mission, its embarrassments, and what it was that had occasioned them. I also stated our attachment to the Choctaws, and that wherever they might go, they would have our best wishes; and I gave it as my opinion, that one or two missionaries would be permitted to accompany them.

It seemed desirable, that the little flock that has been gathered into the fold of Christ should have some ground of hope that they would not be entirely deserted by the under shepherds.—The thought of this would greatly add to their other afflictions. The members of the church generally, and many others, never appeared more affectionate, or more sensible of the benefits they have received from the missionaries, than at the present time. I trust that the Committee, notwithstanding all discouragements, will not abondon this people in their present perilous and distressing situation. On whomsoever else the blame of disinheriting them may fall, the common people are clear; they have ever been opposed to a removal.

The petition, or address, was made at a time of very great trial. Although the Choctaw chiefs had agreed to certain articles of a treaty, under the impression that they must leave their present country, or submit to the laws of the state of Mississippi, and all the consequent evils; yet it was a prevailing opinion, almost universal among the common people, that the treaty would not be ratified. They knew that the great mass of the Choctaws were opposed to selling their country; that their wishes had not been consulted: and that the assent of many who were regarded as having agreed to the treaty, had been obtained by misrepresentation and deception. They knew, also, that they owned their country, and had a right, by solemn treaties, as well as by immemorial possession and usage, to hold it independent and unmolested, under laws of their own making, and rulers of their own choosing. They could not, therefore, believe that those, from whom they had been accustomed to look for just and kind treatment, would do any thing so unjust and oppressive, as to approve and bind upon them a treaty, which took their country from them without their consent. They could not realize that an evil so great as banishment from their own beloved land, and homes, and removal to a distant wilderness, could befall them. But when the news arrived, that the treaty was actually ratified, and that they must all find new homes within two years; gloom and despondence prevailed through the nation. The Christian party, and especially the members of the churches, felt the calamity most deeply. They hought of the breaking up of their meetings, and schools, and Christian neighborhoods, and the separation from the missionaries and teachers, the value of whose labors for themselves & their children they had begun to appreciate.

Assembled together immediately after receiving this mournful intelligence, having examined their schools, and sat together around the table of their Lord and Saviour; and while reflecting on the privileges which they must soon leave, and the unknown hardships and privations they must soon encounter, they drew up and presented this address.

To the Missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Friends and Brothers—Good many years ago you came in our nation, and said you come among them in order to teach the children of the Choctaw people. Our people rejoiced to have you teach their children, and were glad to embrace the opportunity. You told us that you had a beloved book, which tells about great Jehovah. The talk from this book we have not heard as we ought to have done. But good Spirit, who is the maker and head of all things, has been pleased to open the ears of many of our people to hear the words of this good book. You know all about—we need not make many words about it. But we will appeal to what is known to yourselves of our attachment to the schools among us, and more particularly the word which this good book teach us to walk upright before God and man. Also there has been much done for us to have books put in our hand, that many of our people can learn to read in their own language.

Friends and brothers, we can multiply words, and say much on many advantages that we have received. But we will stop, and ask our hearts, who has done these things for us whereof we are glad?

Friends and brothers, when you came among us, good many years ago, you found us no school—no gospel—no songs of praise to Jehovah was heard.

Friends and brothers, we will give glory and praise to Jehovah in sending some here to teach us the way of life. It is you our dearest friends, whom the Saviour of sinners has been pleased in his own goodness to make you an instrument in his hand of what has been done for us.

Friends and brothers, therefore you see our situation. We are exceedingly tried. We have just heard of the ratification of the Choctaw treaty. Our doom is sealed. There are no other course for us, but to turn our faces to our new homes, toward the setting of the sun. Our rulers have assured us on many accounts it will be best to make preparation to remove next fall; and as many as can get off, it will be done.

Brothers, therefore we claim it as our privilege, as members of the church here, and also we have the full assurance of approval of our head men generally—that we humbly request the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, to send us many of the preachers to go with us. Those who are here, we would be glad to have them go with us to our new homes. We would offer the same protection and friendship as we have done here. You see us, how we are situated. Unless you do something for us more beyond the great river Mississippi, we shall be in a distressed situation.

We humbly ask the prayers of the churches generally, and particularly the church which we stand in relation to, (the Presbyterian church.) We need their prayers, and help from them, as we are about to return to the wild woods.

We are your friends and brothers in Christ.

The following letters, addressed to one of the missionaries who was about to leave the nation for a few months, show with what resignation the pious Choctaws bear their calamities, how highly they value their Christian knowledge and hopes, and how constantly they keep their eye on heaven, as a place of holy rest from the anxieties and troubles of this sinful world. That gospel is worthy of all acceptation that can, in such a period of trial, excite such thoughts and feelings, and such hopes, in those who were, a few years ago, stupid and debased heathen. The change in its aspect and in its fruits is almost inconceivable. To have been the instruments of opening to some hundreds of the Choctaws, in this season of distress, such sources of support and consolation; of implanting such a spirit in them; giving to them such a fortitude for bearing calamity; and of pointing them, amidst the uncertainty and suffering of this world, to a permanent rest in heaven, must be deemed by the missionaries an ample reward for all their labors.

A young native, who is a member of the church, writes thus to one of the missionaries:—

Do pray to our Heavenly Father for me. I am a sinner—have a wicked heart; therefore perhaps my white brother will remember and pray for me. If we go over the river, oh that he would go with us. Though our land is gone—as to our souls, they are not gone. If we get to our Heavenly Father's country, we shall be happy.

Another writes as follows—

O my brother, though the people say our land is gone, it is nothing to me. The good land above—heaven—that good resting place, is reserved for me. This I continually think of. I may perhaps go over the Mississippi—but do not know. I may first get to heaven—I do not know. I want you to pray that Jesus would have mercy on me, and I will also pray to our Father above.—Jesus is altogether good. Jesus is our Saviour. Thinking of this, I greatly rejoice.

A third thus expresses himself—

O my beloved friend, I will tell you my mind. Formerly I did not know my Father above. I lived without a knowledge of the way of life.—Notwithstanding this was the case, my Father above designed that I should know him; and now, as I do know him, I greatly rejoice. Though I have in some way to die, yet if I have been true to my Heavenly Father, I shall be happy. Meditating on this, I humbly pray to him continually. O my beloved friend, this short talk I salute you with from my very heart, O my brother.

From another—

As the gospel has come into my heart I am happy. Although I leave my country and go away, my mind is to follow my Lord Jesus Christ wholly. If I break off from my Saviour, sorrow will come to me. Believing this and standing before Jesus Christ (or in his presence) I write to you. It will be long before we see each other; but our separation will not be eternal. Sometime we shall see each other at the right hand of Jehovah our beloved Father.

Another of the natives, who had enjoyed the advantages of an English education, uses the following language—

O remember this poor people while you are gone, and pray for them. Pray that believers may be strengthened in faith to go on their way to heaven; and pray that unbelievers may be brought into the kingdom of Christ. We rejoice to think you intend coming back and going with the Choctaws over the Mississippi river to preach to them. O may God have mercy on this poor people, and bless them abundantly with the riches of his grace. Remember poor us before a throne of grace. Pray continually for us, for we need the prayers of good people. Farewell.

Your friend and Brother.

THE [illegible] SOCIETY.

AUXILIARY TO THE A. H. M. S.

This Society, as named in our last Report, though not formally auxiliary at that time, had come into active co-operation with the A. H. M. S. within the year, and had conformed to the stipulations recommended to the adoption of auxiliary societies. We are now happy to state that since the date of our Report, that Society has become an auxiliary on the plan adopted by other State and Synodical Missionary Societies. Its annual Report for the year, ending in June last, exhibits an income of $2892 90, and indicates a course of energetic action, which promises hereafter important aid to the National Society. Besides furnishing aid to 26 congregations in Connecticut, it has already seven Missionaries located in the State of Missouri, which it proposes to sustain through the A. H. M. S. and which we shall have no occasion to notice more fully hereafter. But we cannot take leave of the interesting report now before us, without furnishing to our readers the spirit-stirring remarks contained in the following extract.

"The people of this state ought not to rest satisfied with cherishing their own feeble churches. The reputation of the state for early attention to missions in the new settlements, requires that our charities flow freely into every destitute region of our country. The circumstances and character of our forefathers require it. The Providence of God, in causing New-England to be settled by men of a common origin, of common principles, and of devoted attachment to religious institutions—by men who from the first, established a pastor wherever they planted a settlement, shows that from our hills and vallies salvation was designed to go forth to the remotest borders of this continent. 'Not for ourselves,' is the language of the sacrifices and sufferings of our Puritan ancestry—'not for ourselves,' ought to be our motto, as we enter into their labourers."

THE PROTESTANT.

We made some remarks relative to this paper some weeks since, and the Editor republishes one notice and subjoins the following comments.

We are here charged with "severity, harsh expressions and hard names." In reply we state that not a single epithet can be discovered in the Protestant, which is not a scriptural appellative, or the vernacular technical language of the Reformers, and the successive witness to the testimony of Jesus.

The Rochester Observer candidly confesses however, that further study and acquaintance with Romanism, have convinced them that it is the duty of all Protestants to sustain our paper; and that additional knowledge of the anti-Christian attributes, and pestilential effects of Jesuitism and Popery, would incline them "to censure less the strength of language and the tone of indignant denunciation so often complained of" by some of our readers.

This is exactly what we say—all the censures and complaints against Protestants, are the offspring of perfect non-acquaintance with Popery. Many persons in New-York, who ought to know better, used to condemn our paper in the presence of our late brother Christmas. He constantly begged them not to talk about Popery, as they only exposed their ignorance of that woful topic.

The folly of hypercriticism has never been more pitifully developed than in reference to the "editorial articles" published in the Protestant; which no persons can designate but ourselves. Authors of all classes have been condemned on account of extracts from their works in our paper, Luther and Knox, More and Edwards, Milton and Pollok and almost incredible, not only John Fox, even Thomas Scott also have been complained of, for their opinions upon Popery as promulgated by us—and upon several occasions, quotations from the Scripture have been denounced as "harsh expressions and hard names—all being ignorantly classified among our "editorial articles," because we designedly elude discovery.

We therefore maintain the propriety of the course which we have pursued; and shall not turn recreants to "the oracles of truth," and cast away the prophetical and apostolic weapons with which our immortalized and sainted predecessors fought and wounded the Dragon and the Beast, until they came off more than conquerers, through him that loved them!

We challenge any of our critics to expose to the world any unspiritual doctrines, any unchristian principles, or any unauthenticated historical details in the Protestant.

It is not a little remarkable, that the only persons who cavil at the Protestant, are professed friends of the Reformation. Do the Jesuits charge us of exhibiting Popery in untrue characters? Not they.——They are afraid to confront our documents, of which we have occasionally given them short specimens. With regard to harsh expressions hard names, and indignant denunciations," we ask any American citizen we appeal to every Protestant, and we demand of all Christians, in what terms they can characterize the following canon of the Jesuits. Tamburin. Lib. 7. Decal. 6. Sec. 2. Numb. xi. "Si quis rapiat mulierem causa libidinis, et non ad contrahendum cum illa matrimonium, non incurrit paenas"—which is thus translated in the following volume, entitled, the Jesuits morals," London, 1670. "If a man steal a woman to abuse her, he incurs not the penalty." Look at this rule in practice; a Layman who carries away the object of his attachment, expressly to marry her honorably, is a criminal; but a Roman priest who kidnaps violates, and abandons to prostitution, the virgin whom he has abused, incurs no penalty," now we defy any man, with the aid of Webster's Dictionary, and Crabbe's synonymes, to raise a pile of epithets, harsh expressions, hard names," so high as the authorized CHRISTIAN 'tone of indignant denunciation' requires: when he remembers that the above canon, with hundreds of still more abominable enactments of the Papal code, are constantly taught in every Jesuit Monastery and Nunnery in America; if the Monks and Nuns are consistent; and all history testifies, that this characteristic they can legitimately claim.

The acknowledgement and the recommendation of the Rochester Observer, are sanctioned by another impressive consideration; the character of the persons who oppose the Protestant. The old proverb is infallable—Man is known by his associates. Now we have on our part, all the anti-papist publications in Europe; all the Irish Christian Protestants; all travellers in Popish countries; all persons conversant with practical Popery; Dr. Snyder, Mr. Ryley, Mr. Cooper, and other students in the Jesuit Colleges, of the United States, and Messrs. Brewer, Temple, King, Dwight, Scudder, with every other Missionary to the East. It should also be recollected, that however criminal may be their acts, or spiritually dangerous their condition, sinners have a most keen discernment in the discovery of evangelical truth. Therefore, who is against us! All the nothingarians, Heresiarchs and Infidels from the nominal Half-Protestant professors in vain; "Mr. Smoothman, Mr. Fa[illegible]-speech, and Mr. By-ends, [illegible] reprobate Atheistic scorner in the rear—and we solemnly sound the alarm to those of our ministering brethren and Christian professors, who are always reviling the Protestant, which they never read unless by stealth, whether they can justify themselves for being found co-operators with Jesuits and Papists to impede the dissemination of the light and the truth. Mark the consequences! A youth who has been lately taught by the spirit of all grace, the errors of Popery, was requested to read the Protestant that his knowledge might be enlarged—he refused: and gave as his reason—"A protestant minister told me that it was a mean, we think he added, lying paper!" We truly pity such criminal ignorance, or such deplorable perfidy to the cause of Christ.

In the city of New-York, many of our subscribers who withdrew their names at the commencement of this year, so acted; avowedly in consequence of the persuasion of ministers, of the gospel; it was the same in Philadelphia and in Baltimore; and what is more affecting, those ministers, in general know little more of Popery, as it actually developes its "mystery of iniquity," in domestic life and political society, in fulfilment of Evangelic prophecy, than they do of the inhabitants of Hershel.

We therefore remind the Rochester Observer and our other friends, that our knowledge of Popery has been derived from books not only, but from actual and constant inspection during several years, aided by the testimony of persons of the very highest character and unimpeachable veracity. We have at this moment three packets before us from Canada; which we could print with impunity—but internal evidence would betray our correspondents; and we are therefore, for their sakes, unwillingly obliged to postpone, if not to reject the publication of them. We should however like to give some of their hard names, as a specimen of modern feeling; which would at least demonstrate, that the writers now residing on St. Laurence river, have not greatly degenerated from Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley and Hooper, the authors of the English Homilies. All persons who wish to see "harsh expressions, hard names, indignant denunciation, and a pile of epithets," raised against Popery, are requested to read the Homily on Whitsunday, and that on the perils of idolatry; the republication of which we will commence as soon as we have closed some of our present discussions—and then, we predict, no man will venture again to reproach our "Editorial articles."

In closing these remarks, however, we remind our Protestant Brethren, that the only efficient and certain method to sustain the Protestant is, for all its conscientious friends promptly to pay their own subscriptions; and if they would promulge those "facts which every Protestant ought to know," they should endeavor to procure additional Patrons; who by transmitting their subscriptions in advance, confide, that we will amply repay them by the information which we shall impart, and the anti-papal ammunition with which we shall furnish them, so that they may be able to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints."

From the Connecticut Observer.

THE 'BEGGING SYSTEM.'—The Editor of the Times thinks that after reducing his estimate of the receipts of the American Bible Society from seven millions to less than one million since its institution, the amount is still enough to excite alarm in the minds of all opposed to the 'begging system' by which benevolent Societies are supported. To remove his apprehensions, we would remind him that a large part of the receipts of the Society is for Bibles sold, and not from the contributions of the community. We have not at hand the means of determining with precision what proportion of the receipts of the first five years are from this source. The whole receipts of the Society since the first five years are $395,254 28—and of this sum $404,593 16 was for Bibles sold. If the ratio was the same for the first five years, the contributions of the community to this Society during the sixteen years of its existence, must have been less than $400,000. This is not more than the one hundred and fiftieth part of what is expended every year in consequence of the use of ardent spirits. Since the institution of the Bible Society hundreds of Millions have been expended for ardent spirits. Friends of country, awake—arouse yourselves betimes; lest poverty overtake you like an armed man!—The 'begging system, will impoverish the land. —To what a crisis the country is approaching! —How soon all will be over with our rights and liberties unless a stop can be put to the 'begging system.' What friend of his country; of man and of religion, who keeps silent while sixty or seventy millions a year are expended for ardent spirits and in consequence of their use, would not raise a note of remonstrance when about $400,000 are given in sixteen years for distributing the Bible!

The Times copies from the New-York Courier and Enquirer an article, the amount of which is that $38,900 were expended last year by the American Sunday School Union in the valley of the Mississippi, and 'not a school established. Of this $38,000 which the extract intimates was spent 'in tavern bills and stage hire,' $18,329 59, or almost one half, Was for 'books placed in the Valley for the supply of libraries.' And as to the statement that not a school was established, we remark that the number of Schools reported as in connexion with the American Sunday School Union, in the Valley of the Mississippi May 1830, was 770— the number reported in May 1831, is 1222—being an increase of 652 schools, while the increase of scholars was, as reported, 14,320. 'Thirty eight thousand dollars gone, and not a school established!' We are tired of correcting misrepresentations.

From the S. S. Treasurer

ADVENTURE OF A SABBATH SCHOOL TEACHER.

Some years since, I was walking in the suburbs of one of our large towns, in pursuit of Sunday school children, when my attention was drawn to a miserable looking dwelling. On entering it, I found a group of little children whose appearance bespoke extreme poverty, but among them, one of a most lovely countenance. I drew her towards me, and asked if she would like to go to the Sabbath school! "Oh yes, if my mother could spare me," was her ready answer. The mother sat busily at work, but her countenance wore the expression of sorrow—that dispairing sorrow which seems to hope for no alleviation but the grave. Her husband, (afterwards learned,) was intemperate, herself neat, frugal and industrious, toiling on alone, just able to cover and feed her little ones. The singularly interesting appearance of her litle girl determined me to plead with the mother to "spare her" for the Sabbath school, and she at length consented. The next Sabbath I watched the door for the entrance of the child, and soon had the pleasure of leading her to my class. But, if when sitting in that poor hovel, I thought I had found a pearl, judge of my surprise, when conversing with this little girl, to find her a lamb of the Saviour's fold! I shall never forget the expression, as she raised [illegible] eyes, and modestly said, "I [illegible] Saviour."—Many years passed by, still she was my scholar, and through this long and happy period our mutual affection strengthened, and she would often visit me to relate her little sorrows; for in her home, she often had to flee from her earthly father in his fits of intoxication, to hide herself under the wing of her heavenly Father. In the good providence of God, through the agency of her Sabbath school friends, she was removed from her abode to a Christian family, where she was cherished and instructed with great kindness. It is sufficient to add, that she is now a useful member and ornament to society, moving in a highly respectable sphere, a happy wife, and mother.

Teachers in the Sabbath schools, how blessed is your employment. Can you faint or be weary, while thus blessing society by leading up individuals from the deepest obscurity to spheres of extensive usefulness! When the history of your benevolent labours shall be told, how many such cases will be developed, and what illustrious names shall swell the catalogue which shall be read to a listening universe! Q.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 15, 1831.

TO CHRISTIAN MANUFACTURERS AND VENDERS OF ARDENT SPIRITS.—Among the great number of recent conversions, we have known but few manufacturers or venders of ardent spirits. Some such we have heard of, and we do not recollect an instance in which the business has not been at once abandoned; that is we have not known a young convert continue any length of time in this unholy traffic, and still give evidence that his conversion was genuine.

We have lately heard of the conversion of two or three individuals who have been pretty extensively engaged in this business. Whether they have abandoned their distillery or not, we have not yet heard, but we would say a few words which we wish them seriously to reflect upon, and we can now, we trust, with some propriety, and with a confident expectation of being understood, ask them to reflect upon this subject as in view of their final judgment.

In the first place then, if you are christians, you have the spirit of Christ, which is the spirit of LOVE—love to God and man. If then you love your fellow men, you will certainly do nothing deliberately which is calculated to injure them. Now, do you not know that the use of ardent spirit is productive of great injury to thousands; and can you say that it is ever useful as a common drink? Do you not believe that the country—that the world, would be better without it than with it? Would there be any drunkards if there were no manufacturers of ardent spirits? Are there not probably thirty thousand drunkards in the United States; and of course that number of whose salvation you can have no rational hope? Have not distillers and venders of ardent spirits, then, been instrumental—directly instrumental, in placing them beyond any hope that the mercy of God will ever reach them, and save them from going down to Hell? Your answer is readily anticipated. Can you then with the principle of LOVE reigning in your hearts—love to God and love to the souls of men—desiring, above all things that their souls may be saved, continue to manufacture and sell that which does no good, which in a temporal point of view does incalculable injury and places so many at a returnless distance from any hope of Heaven? Can you "love your neighbor as yourself" and yet be constantly aiding to destroy both his body and his soul? Is this the effect of love?

And now what is it which at bottom really is the motive for your wishing to continue in your present business? Is it love to your fellow men? A wish to benefit them? Can you say it is? If you can, you are dishonest to your God, and to your own souls. You know that were it not for the profit of it you would never make or sell a gallon more of this abominable poison.

And will you venture to say that this will be a satisfactory plea at the judgment, when a host of immortal souls whose perdition you have helped to seal, shall point you out to the Judge, as the instruments of placing them beyond the reach of heaven? Just imagine yourselves there, and the inquiring eye of the Judge turned upon you, waiting for your answer to the accusations of the drunkards you have made! Will you then dare say in justification of your conduct, "I made money in the other world by furnishing these my accusers with the means of their destruction." Love to your neighbor? No, the love of money as your chief good has been your reigning principle; and can you expect that the professed follower of Christ who supports himself by a business productive of so much temporal and eternal misery, will in fact ever find a more welcome reception, or a better place in an other world, than the miserable wretches whose final ruin he has been instrumental in sealing.

Now, then, is the time when you have commenced a new life, to act from a new principle. It is now time for you to enquire prayerfully, how you can do the most good with your property, and your talents. Do not delay—act with promptitude, with decision and boldness. Do not stop to parley with worldly wisdom and prudence; but ask what God would have you do, and do it. If you take this course you will not add another drop to the ocean of ardent spirits on which so many thousands are floating to the pit of eternal woe.

Do not expect to find any enjoyment in religion, while you attempt to stifle the reproofs of conscience, or when you engage in any business, in which you cannot go to God daily for his blessing. Do not attempt to shield yourselves under the sins of old professors. Their conduct—especially their sins, are not to be your Bible. Do not say that A. or Deacon B. runs a distillery, or sell spirits, and therefore I may do it. It is true you may find such examples, but do you see such men growing in grace—honoring their profession? Do you not see them dishonoring the cause of Christ—waxing worse and worse? From making drunkards, to make money, and fattening upon the ruin of their neighbors, becoming from love of money habitual Sabbath breakers and subjecting themselves to the discipline and censure of the church. And if you follow their example in one point, do you expect that God will preserve you from the same downward course?

HEALTH OF ROCHESTER.

It is understood reports have gone abroad, that sickness prevails to an alarming extent in this village. Now the fact on this subject is, that there is less sickness here with the exception of the whooping-cough and measles, among children, than there has been at the same season, in four years past. Indeed this village was probably never as free from disease at this season, since its settlement. We are informed by our physicians, and have no doubt whatever of the fact, that it is far more healthy in the village than out of it.

We are credibly informed that there is a great deal of sickness prevailing in the low grounds generally in the adjacent towns—that physicians of this village have more calls in the country that within the limits of the corporation.

POPERY.

The Pamphlet which Mr. Buchan promised week before last to give to the public, appeared in due season. It contains only what appeared in the Observer, except the communication which we refused to publish, and a few remarks about Presbyterians. It will be seen by the following that Mr. Buchan's veracity is called in question by the editor of the Daily. As to the influence of Presbyterians having been exerted to prevent the publication of Mr. Buchan's letter, we are perfectly satisfied from our own knowledge, that it is untrue. We believe that our course has been generally approved, in refusing to foul the columns of a religious paper with it, but we know that a number of Presbyterians did urge the editor of the Daily to insert it, and we know too, that Presbyterians were so anxious to have it published that they offered to pay something to procure its publication in a handbill, and we have no doubt that if Mr. B. had not saved them the trouble, it would before this have appeared in that shape. The truth is we are not only willing but anxious that Catholics should exhibit their sentiments, and show their true spirit—the spirit of Popery, but we do not wish to become the direct sewers through which their filth shall flow.

The editor of the Daily says,

"The statement which Mr. Buchan has given to the public in relation to his conversations with the editors of this paper, is a most gross misrepresentation of what actually occurred. He says—"it was not the terms of the letter that they could object to." It is impossible that he could so have misunderstood us. We told him expressly that "the terms of the letter," was the only objection to publishing it, and pointed out to him several sentences which we thought an editor could find no excuse for admitting into his columns; and the note we wrote while Mr. Buchan was looking over our shoulder, gave as a reason for not publishing his letter that it was "too indecently personal"—but lest that might sound too harsh, we destroyed it and wrote the one he has published. Instead of Presbyterian influence having been used in any manner to prevent the publication, several persons of that denomination urged us strongly to publish it.

IMPROVING THE BREED OF HORSES.

At a horse-race, near the white-horse tavern, Burlington co. N. J. a quarrel took place between a black man by name of Stewart and a white man by name of Crossley, which resulted in the black man's kicking the other, from the effects of which he died in a short time. He was committed to jail.

Such acts are not of unfrequent occurrence at horse races. Fighting, gambling and drinking, are among the lesser evils attending these philanthropic efforts to improve the breed of horses.

Would not these horse-racing philanthropists quite as effectually promote the public weal, by spending their time and their money in labors to improve their fellow-men? At least would not their memories be as highly honored, and their death bed reflections be quite as pleasant, were they to seek amusement (if they must have it) in some way that will not necessarily deteriorate the morals of their fellow men, more than they can hope to improve the breed of their horses?

Wm. P. Dunn was shot while riding in cape Girardeau co. Mo. some time since. John Renfroe, brother-in-law to Dunn, was tried for the offence, and acquitted. On the 9th ult. while Renfroe was walking in the orchard of A. Wright, with his wife and sister-in-law, he was shot dead by a person who was concealed, and who made his escape.

Geo. Lambert, of the same county, is in jail, for shooting at and wounding John Kinion, while he was ploughing in his field.

If christian philanthropists need any evidence of the necessity for making immediate efforts to improve the moral condition of the inhabitants of the great valley of the Mississippi, such facts as the above are precisely in point. We suppose that the laws of Missouri are as strict against murder as those of the other states of the Union, but they are rendered inoperative—a mere dead letter, from want of moral principle in the community to cause them to be executed. Indeed laws are of no avail, as they cannot be executed, where they award a punishment not sanctioned and approved by the moral sense of the inhabitants.

Let Sabbath Schools be established and shed their hallowed influence through these regions of moral darkness—let the Bible be placed in every family, and the blessings of education be generally diffused, and we will venture to say that the dirk and the rifle will not so often be the executioners of private revenge.

It is worthy of remark that in this great valley, the Cathoiic religion first took root and now holds in bondage the minds of most of its inhabitants.—Where is its purifying influence? Why is murder a matter of such frequent occurrence there, and why does the murderer go at large, bidding defiance to the arm of the civil power. Was it ever thus in N. England?

GALE AT NEW-ORLEANS.

A terrible gale of wind, accompanied by rain, occurred at New-Orleans on the 16th ult., more destructive than has been experienced in the last 20 years.

Nearly all the shipping were driven from their moorings, the heavy vessels ran foul of the small craft and destroyed or greatly injured a great many of them. A whole fleet of coasting schooners were nearly destroyed. A number of vessels were sunk. The back part of the city was inundated—houses were unroofed and the cane on the Sugar Plantations was laid flat and injured to so great an extent, that it is estimated the sugar crop will fall short 40,000 hhds. A number of lives were lost.

FOUR DAYS' MEETING AT NORTH PENFIELD.

With respect to this meeting, which commenced on the 7th inst. and closed on the 11th at evening, we can only say that the spirit of God was evidently there with its convicting influences.—At the close of the meeting it was thought that 50 hopeful conversions had taken place.—Eighty different individuals during the meeting appeared on the anxious seat requesting the prayers of christians. The Ministers who were there and took part in the exercises were Rev. Luke Lyons, Boyle and Kanouse.

MACKINAW MISSION.

MR. CHIPMAN.—A few years since, [illegible] ment of the wants of the Mackinaw Mission was made to a valued friend of Missions and of man in this place, now no more; particularly with regard to clothing. The call was promptly met—similar statements were made to friends of Missions at Utica and Manlius and produced similar results; results which filled the storeroom of the Mission—gave substantial proof of interest felt in the cause and in that Mission and greatly encouraged the hearts and strengthened the hands of those servants of Christ and the Heathen.

That Mission as you know, has been greatly blessed to the Island (see 3d report of Seamen's Friend Soc. statement of Rev. Mr. Winslow) To the Indian Traders—witness the fact, that as many as eight persons connected with the Indian trade, as agent, Trader or Clerk, who occupy almosts as many different Ports. Most of them widely scattered in the interior and exerting a healthful and salutary influence. Members of the Mission church at Mackinaw to the Indians—writing the numerous hopeful conversions at Mackinaw; the church of 80 or 90 members, about half from among the heathen, last, but not least the recent departure of a branch of that mission for Le Pointe above five hundred miles up Lake Superior.* One member of that branch, Mrs. Campbell who has long been a valuable helper, at Mackinaw, and is well acquainted with the Indian language has gone as an assistant to Mrs. Hall and Interpreter to Mr. Hall the Superintendent. She has gone with her youngest child for one year, and left her husband with six children at Mackinaw, without the hope of even hearing from them more than once during the year; she has gone; and why! Because the Mission must otherwise have failed, or have been greatly embarrassed for want of a devoted and well qualified Interpreter. The sacrifice was perfectly voluntary and cheerful on her part and that of her husband. Are there any among you who would be willing to go and do likewise! But I have wandered; where indeed I delight to wander, among the interesting scenes connected with that interesting Mission family. I only want to say that I was at Mackinaw a few weeks since and learned that their stock of clothing was exhausted, and that they must have a speedy supply (a northern winter is near at hand) or be under the painful necessity of purchasing and consequently drawing upon the funds of the American Board, now so much embarrassed for want of means to send out waiting laborers to various stations much in want of their services, I will close with a suggestion.

If Christians, those who love the cause of Christ in Rochester, have money to give let them pour of what Jesus has given them, (for I suppose they have got nothing else) into the treasury of the A. B. C. F. M. then let them go to their wardrobes and shake the dust from their cast-off clothes, pack them into boxes mark them Mackinaw Mission, send them to Allen, Wheeler & Co. and the expense of transportation shall be paid by a particular friend of the Missions in the North West.

For the Observer.

Mr. Editor:—In passing through the African settlement in the township of Biddulph, known by the name of Wilberforce, I was much pleased to observe the exertions making among them to rise above prejudice and slavery. Judging from what I saw while there, I am of the opinion that this colony will ere long convince the enemies of the African race of having spoken wrong concerning them. So far as it relates to their indisposition for improvement and the higher circles of civilized life, I am ready to say that I saw a disposition in these colonists to raise themselves to the dignity of men and citizens—such a disposition and desire to elevate their character as will induce the children of Shem to acknowledge their cousins the children of Ham. They have a prosperous day school, consisting of 20 or 30 children who attend every day decently clad. The instructer of this school is Miss P. the daughter of Rev. Mr. P. of New-York, whose character, ability and virtue well qualify her for her station.

On the Sabbath there are two sermons preached, one by Rev. Mr. Paul and the other by Rev. Enos Adams. Sabbath afternoon there is a Sabbath School, superintended by Mr. Austin Steward late of Rochester. All ages attend the Sabbath School and manifest great eagerness to receive religious instruction.

The exertions which this company of despised blacks are making to raise themselves from their degraded situation claim the sympathies and aid of christians and philanthropists in their behalf. Like all other people, when engaged in any good cause, and moved to complete it from the best motives, they have no disposition to faint by the way.

A FRIEND TO ALL MANKIND.

For the Rochester Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—For the benefit of those concerned, and to promote the cause of temperance and piety in general, I should like to have the following questions answered by yourself or some of your correspondents.

1. Does the law of the land require any man who keeps tavern, to keep it open on the Sabbath for the entertainment of travellers? 2. If the land does require it, is it morally right? 3. Can professors of religion engage in this business, if they must keep away from the house of God, or employ any one to keep away from it, in order to accommodate travellers who violate the fourth commandment? without forfeiting the the confidence of the Church, and exposing them to its censure? 4. Does not keeping open houses of entertainment on the Holy day encourage people to travel on that day? R.

Some part of the following article from the Kentucky Luminary, may afford useful hints to Christians in this quarter, and all of it may be instructive as showing us how they do things in Kentucky.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Notice was given in our paper several weeks since, that a Presbyterian Camp Meeting, would be held, commencing on Thursday next, on the farm of Mr. Sidney P. Clay, in Bourbon county.

In adverting to this subject, we frankly acknowledge, that, according to the present mode of conducting these meetings, our faith in their ultimate beneficial results, is not so strong as that of some of our brethren; both clergy, and laity, in whose judgment we repose great confidence. It has occurred to us, that a considerable improvement might be made in the plan of conducting Camp Meetings, by which, many of the objections of our brethren who are conscientiously opposed to them, might be removed; and a unanimity of sentiment and effort produced, [illegible] a subject which has now assumed a practical bearing among us. We briefly lay our suggestions before our readers, with the hope that they will give them that attention, to which, in their judgment, they may be entitled.

Some of the most serious and weighty objections we have seen to meetings of this description are, 1st. That in consequence of the attendance of so many clergymen, many congregations are necessarily left destitute of preaching on the Sabbath; 2d. That by receiving persons into the church, during seasons of such excitement, its purity is much endangered;—and 3d. The flagrant violations of the Sabbath,—which are always, in a greater or less degree, common on such occasions, by the crowds who attend merely through vain curiosity, and a love of gossiping.

Now, in order to remove these objections, which we are far from thinking unfounded, we would affectionately suggest for the consideration of our brethren, 1st. The propriety of but few clergymen attending on such occasions; no more than will be needed to labor; 2d. The propriety of receiving no members into the church on the camp ground; and 3d. The importance of dismissing the meeting previous to the Sabbath; in order that the ministers may return home to their respective charges, and the disorder be avoided which usually occurs on that day.

We perceive that many of our Methodist, and Cumberland Presbyterian brethren,—who have had much experience in meetings of this kind, are strongly advocating their dismissal previous to the Sabbath. And is it not more strictly according to Presbyterian order, that new members should be received into some individual church; and not merely into the Presbyterian church universal, as we should suppose must ordinarily be the case at Camp Meetings? And in addition to this, were the candidates for membership to unite with the churches in their respective neighborhoods, would not a more salutary influence be exerted over the several congregations where they might be received?—Would not the spirit of the meeting thus be diffused more extensively through the country; and would not the candidates themselves be benefitted, by having more time for reflection and self examination, before they united with any church?

Much could be said in support of these suggestions, but we will not weary our readers.—Our only design at this time is, to throw out a few hints for their prayerful consideration.

Were Camp Meetings conducted on these principles, would not the doubts and fears of many brethren respecting them be removed?—Would less good be done; and would not much evil be avoided? Every pious individual must feel the urgent necessity for special effort in the West. Many motives could be mentioned, which call loudly on every friend of the Redeemer living in the valley of the Mississippi, to redouble his activity in the cause of his Divine Master. Is it not then very desirable, that on a subject of such practical importance, as this has become, there should be among the friends of Righteousness, harmony of views, and unanimity of sentiment and action.

From the Charleston Observer.

Revival in Goochland, Va.—The Richmond Herald of the 19th, mentions that 245 persons have been added to the Baptist Church since the 1st of April.

In Bedford county, we learn from the same paper, that six churches are enjoying a season of refreshing. The revival is spreading through Nuckells. Large parts of the counties of Powhattan, Chesterfield, Henrico, Hanover, Louisa and Fluvanna are also refreshed by the showers of grace. Revivals are also mentioned as existing in King and Queen counties, and in Halifax. Four days meetings have been frequent and blessed. Temperance Societies have been formed, and large accessions have been made to the churches.

"The Spirit of Revivals is rapidly subsiding!"—So says the Albany "Telegraph & Register," and there is reason to believe it, from the fact that the spirit of controversy has again shown his cloven foot in that section of the church. The same was the case a few years ago; and it is lamentable to think that good men and friends of revivals too, will not learn wisdom by experience. The remark, however, we would hope is applicable only to a small branch of the church.—Taking the whole country together, there are now many more revivals than there were at the commencement of the year.—Charleston Obs.

Deposit, August 25, 1831.

DEAR SIR—I write again, to acknowledge the good hand of God upon another branch of the church in this place. This branch church is located in Sanford, Broome county, five miles from this village. As I am informed, it was organised with eleven members, and now numbers fifteen. The predominant influence in this section of the town is decidedly baptist influence, on the broad principles of antinomianism; and the little church in Sanford, without a pastor, and without the means of grace, has had little more than a name to live. At the earnest request of this feeble church, I went with a few of my brethren to hold a two days' meeting. And it is not too much, though it is painful to say, that the Baptists arranged themselves in opposition to the meeting. They opposed us in the meeting, in the house, and by the way. Under such circumstances, nothing appeared to encourage us until the evening of the second day, when fifteen took a seat as inquirers; and before the meeting closed three or four hopefully submitted to God, and many were deeply impressed. Saturday morning the 20th, being the third day of the meeting, I left them; but the brethren remained, and the Lord blessed their labors and heard their prayers. The 9 o'clock meeting of Saturday was a time of great interest. It continued till noon. Some hopefully submitted, and the interest increased. In this meeting, an aged man began his cries for mercy.

Meetings of our denomination were held Saturday evening and Sabbath evening, with increased interest. But Sabbath evening witnessed a scene of deep emotion. A female, who had sustained a reputable profession, came in and begged of Christians to pray for her, as she had then no hope; and for her father and mother, and six brothers and a sister, that were out of Christ; and such was her distress upon this occasion, that she fell prostrate upon the floor.—To prevent confusion, she was removed from the place of worship; and at intervals she would gather strength sufficient to lift her soul to God, for mercy on herself and friends. During this hour of her distress, her father became a subject of the work; and now, both father and mother are hopefully born again. Still, this distressed female is not satisfied. Behold she prayeth still. But this is not all. Several of the Baptists, who have hitherto opposed, publicly confessed their sin, gave evidence of their repentance, and entered heartily into the work; and one father and mother among them are now permitted to see two sons and a daughter rejoicing in hope. One staunch Universalist, also, acknowledged the power of God in this meeting, and began to exhort sinners to repent and believe the gospel.—There are now fifteen or twenty that give evidence of a change in the late meeting; also, a man and his wife from abroad, and the work is spreading.

Tuesday next I go to Sanford, to examine candidates for the church; and in my next you shall have the result of the meeting.

Last Sabbath week, I received fifty-one to the church in Cannonsville, as the first fruits of the meeting in that place. Truly, the Lord is good. Your's, L. HULL.

A Statistical Table, showing the influence of Intemperance on the Churches. By I. RICHMOND BARBOUR. 12mo. pp. 24. Boston, Perkins & Marvin.

The Table itself occupies but four pages,—the remainder of the Pamphlet being devoted to preliminary remarks, a commentary, and notes.—The following are some of the results of Mr. B.'s laborious and well-directed inquiries:

Of 800 cases of excommunication, reported from 135 churches, 370 were on the charge of intemperance; and in 24 other cases, the individuals are known to have become intemperate soon after their exclusion from the church. We may, therefore, safely put down 394 cases out of the 800—6 less than one-half—to the account of strong drink.

Of 834 confessions reported from the same churches, intemperance was confessed in 379.—32 other cases, the individuals died while under discipline, or are now under discipline for intemperance. As these may with propriety be added to the number of confessions, the whole amount is 411—being 6 less than one-half of the 834.

This is sufficiently appalling; it is enough to impel every friend of Christ and the Church, to resolve on abstinence, entire and perpetual, from the cause of such suffering and such dishonor to the Christian name. But it is not all. The influence of intemperance on the churches has been increasing with fearful rapidity.

From 135 churches, some of the returns from which embrace a period of 50 years, 1,634 cases of discipline are reported; in 805 of which—less, by 12 than one-half—intemperance was charged.

From 108 churches, whose returns are for 40 years and under, 1,348 cases of discipline are reported; of which 681 were caused by intemperance—7 more than one-half, and 14 more than are charged to all other causes.

From 112 churches, whose returns are for 30 years and under, 1,201 cases of discipline are reported, of which 632 were cases of intemperance—exceeding all the other cases by 63.

And from 94 churches, whose returns are for 20 years and under, 841 cases of discipline are reported; of which 480 are cases of intemperance—more, by 119 than all the rest—about four sevenths of the whole!

But even this statement is far from exhibiting the whole extent of the evil. How many of the other offences that are matter of discipline, are caused by intemperance! No man can tell. Mr. Barbour says that; judging from his Table and from the letters which he has received from those who furnished the materials, most of which express some opinion in regard to the indirect influence of ardent spirit, it is his "deliberate conviction, that at least SEVEN-EIGHTHS of all the offences requiring discipline, that have occurred in our churches for the last twenty or thirty years have originated directly or indirectly from this cause!" Add to this, the influence of moderate drinking on the cultivation of the religious affections, the acquisition of knowledge, and the discharge of duty—and also, in hardening the hearts and blinding the mind of those who know not the truth, both in Christian and in heathen lands, and what a fountain-head of iniquity and spiritual death is here opened to us. Who will dare to indulge the vile thirst for the poison, that may have been awakened in himself—or to become a pander to it in others—a feeder of the death-flame that is kindling up for the destruction, temporal and eternal, of his friends and neighbors!

Mr. Barbour has done the christian community an important service. His pamphlet is one that all the members of our churches should read. The following paragraphs are a specimen of the extracts of letters from his correspondents, which occupy several pages:

"I have no hesitation in saying, that during my connection with this church, nine tenths of all the difficulty we have had, has originated in the use of ardent spirits.—Bos. Rec.

"We have in this town no less than eleven or twelve Deacons, of all denominations, and only three of them have joined the Temperance Society. I am ashamed for them, but their prejudices are exceedingly strong; and it seems to me at times, that it is entirely out of my power to do them any good on any subject. Some of them will not touch our temperance publications. Like Bunyan's Pilgrim, they shut up their eyes and ears, and run, though I fear they do not run the same way.

"All the male members of my church advocate the use of spirit. Some of them use it to excess. A case of discipline for intemperance cannot be sustained in the church. Of my parish, I may be permitted to say, that for four years past, ten a year, on an average, have withdrawn from it, and sunk down under intemperate habits. With all the additions, the present number is only a little above sixty, and of these, at least twenty are intemperate.

"More than half the difficulties which I have known in churches generally, have sprung in a greater or less degree, from the use of strong drink. It is a matter of astonishment to me, that any pious man can still advocate the use of strong drink, and yet we have some among us, who I would, on the whole, we hope are pious, who do this.

"The subject of temperance began to be agitated in my church about three years ago. Two or three members, habitual drinkers, though not intemperate, were opposed to the business. Two of them are now friends to the cause. I have reason to think that our temperance movements have been the means of saving one or more of them, and of bringing them from a lifeless state in religion, to a state of humble and active engagedness. In one instance, in particular, the change in Christian character has been remarkably interesting, since the use of spirits has been dispensed with."

The Romish Church expends more on its missions than all other Christian churches together; an Indian prince will expend more upon a festival in honor of his idol god, than the total annual income of a Protestant Missionary Society.—So says a London Magazine. It may be added that, in this country we expend many dollars in pernicious indulgences, to one in efforts to extend the knowledge of the Gospel;—that, if the sums expended on distilled liquors and tobacco merely, were put into the treasuries of our Foreign Mission Societies, the want of funds would not prevent the establishment of Christian missions and schools in every nation under heaven, immediately.—Boston Recorder.

ROCHESTER INSTITUTE—No. 3.

MANUAL LABOUR, is in some minds associated with ideas of degradation. The Chinese, the honours of American industry, have well nigh broken the neck of this pride: but our Colleges originally of European importation, have not yet cast off this badge of Royalty. Students are ashamed to promote their health, by any exercise that is profitable. The childish sports of the Gymnasium, have been recently imported, at no small expense. To be ashamed of labour, belongs to a Turk. The Saviour of the world, the model of every perfection, laboured as a mechanic, till he began to be about thirty years of age, and in three years preached the Gospel to a whole Nation. Paul used manual labour, while preaching the gospel to the refined and learned. Moses, combined learning and useful industry. Truly the man that would separate them, contributes to bring back the African slave, and to compel the rich master to nurse his child in the bosom of corruption. The union of labour with study, accords with the most exalted views of rank, freedom, and refinement. It is the American policy. It is essential to the preservation of Health. The aspiring student, unwilling to climb or swing in the Gymnasium, grows languid, studies on his couch, breaks his constitution, and sinks to the grave a sacrifice to literary pride. The American Education Society, solicitous to patronize the highest order of talent and worth; have recently buried thirty young men, martyrs to the separation of learning from labour. A student entered this Institute, at first unable to study half a day; but by labour he has gained strength to pursue learning with the least prospect of spending five or six years in gaining a thorough Education. Young men from active occupations, commence a course of studies for a profession at the peril of life, unless connected with hours of manual labour.

IT PRODUCES NO LOSS OF TIME FROM STUDY.—The Student rises at four in the morning, from which, till nine P. M. is seventeen hours. Let one hour be assigned for meals, one for private devotion, one for personal attention, one for interruptions, three for labour, and ten hours remain for study, with mind and body fitted for vigorous effort.

AS A MEANS FOR DIMINISHING EXPENSE, it is important to the rich, and essential to those who are not. The expense at an Academy when the Student goes from home, is seldom less than a hundred dollars a year; and while at College, one hundred and fifty besides necessary clothing. How few Farmers, or men in good business with a family, are willing to pay six hundred dollars to educate a son for four years. To prevent the churches from becoming vacant of Pastors, to occupy the expanded west, to qualify men for public life, has become the work of charity. One Agent for the American Education Society from Boston, one from N. York, and one from Philadelphia, have in rapid succession, visited Rochester to raise some thousands of dollars to do for the country, what the parent will not do for the child. We must not however expect too much from the student. It was never intended that three hours labour should pay all their expenses, and in addition, purchase lands, erect houses and shops, and sustain all the departments of labour, board and instruction. The most successful experiment yet made in our country, is sustained by public contribution, and can only enable its students to pay board, having thirty three dollars increased by the expenses of every unfair day, and the entire expense during winter, to be paid in money. Some ardent friends, and unfurnished students, expecting three hours labour while learning a trade, to supercede the use of money, are requested to compare the price of learning with its value. The following results of two months experience will be gratifying to the community, especially to those who can calculate. 1st That no labourer on a farm, and no mechanical work going on in Rochester, winter and summer, can realize as much for three hours of a students time, as the making of Flour barrels 2d. Students of mechanical skill, can in six or eight weeks learn this art, and during that term earn ninety cents a week, while others can earn from fifty to seventy-five. Afterwards, the former earn one dollar and ninety cents, the latter from $1,20 to $1,75. 3d. The expenses charged to the students, do not exceed one dollar and seventy-five cents. It will be seen that while learning the trade, their labour will materially lessen the expenses, and afterwards in most cases pay the whole; in a few, only the board; in others furnish money for Books or clothing. During the recent vacation many earned from six shillings to a dollar per day. Those skilled in printing and joiners work, have made their earnings much exceed their expenses.

THE EXPENSE OF THIS INSTITUTE TO THE PUBLIC.—It is the expectation during the first year to increase the number of students gradually to one hundred. The expense for rents, shop, tools, furniture and some apparatus, and salaries, is estimated at three thousand dollars. At the end of the year, much of this will be property on hand. It is believed that the community will prefer raising twenty thousand dollars during the first year, and erecting all the requisite buildings for receiving two hundred students and give this Collegiate Institute a rural location near town. The amount of money saved by the manual labour of two hundred students, exceeds an interest of fifty per cent on all the money to be raised. Suppose the two hundred students able to pay their whole expense at the medium College rate of one hundred and fifty dollars a year: then thirty thousand dollars each year, must be drawn from the profit of agriculture, trade and manufactures. The labour of the Institute saves this thirty thousand.—Suppose the two hundred to be supported by Education Societies at seventy-five dollars in addition to what other friends, and funds could do.—This would cost fifteen thousand to be raised by subscription. This sum would be saved to the cause of education.

The building of one church, often costs more than the funds needed to save $30,000 yearly to the rich; or $15,000 of public subscriptions.—Fourteen students from Rochester if at College, would draw away about three thousand dollars a year, and the sum would rent buildings, and sustain the whole expense of two hundred. The Institute with two hundred students, with professors, with its own rural scenery and industry, will be a source of wealth and worthy praise. It will be an honour to lay its corner stone, to be among the list of its patrons.

Rochester has a thousand parlors furnished in princely style, and not a school of science or literature that does not blush to receive a visitor.—The fame of its enterprise, and some signal instances of liberality, have rendered Rochester conspicuous in the eyes of a great nation. The existence of its Institute is noticed in newspapers and literary journals. The success of its mechanical operations above agriculture, is already controling the calculations of other literary institutions. Its success is important to the dearest interests of our country.

BAPTIST IRISH SOCIETY.

It has been our pleasing task often to speak of the laborious and successful efforts of this Society, in preaching to and reading portions of the Bible to the peasantry of Ireland. The 17th annual Report, presented June 24; is very encouraging, as it relates indubitable evidence of a blessing from the Holy Spirit, attending the faithful efforts of the preachers and readers. The light thus communicated from the gospel, has prevented the continuance of some superstitions among the Roman Catholics. Pilgrimages and penances had lately been discouraged by the Priests in Connaught, and it was reported that some of the holidays had been prohibited. The state of society is improved. Nine persons, educated for Roman Catholic Priests, had been converted since this Society commenced its labors in Ireland; one of these instances occurred in the last year. One of the Bible Readers had been the instrument of turning 8 families to Protestantism, who had received Popery. The schools were doing a great and good work, in teaching the children of Roman Catholics, delivering them from vain superstitions. The scholars had increased the past year, & now amount to upwards of eight thousand. Two of the Irish Scripture readers were preparing for the holy ministry, to preach both in Irish and English. The receipts of the last year paid all expenses. One thousand six hundred and thirty English and Irish Bibles and Testaments, besides first and second spelling books in the Schools, amounting to four thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine copies had been distributed since the last anniversary.

The pleasing anecdote which follows is taken from the last Report. It gives us a cheering view of the laudable ambition and spirit of the Irish children:—

"SIR, ASK ME A QUESTION!"

Mr. Lang of Ballina, of the Methodist's Society, in conversation with one of the Irish Leaders; said, "Walking a few days ago thro' the village of Crinagh; I met some ragged children with Testaments under their arms. Observing them to be orderly and modest, I asked them with whom they were at school, and under what Society! What books they had! &c. Receiving satisfactory answers, I further asked them, 'Who was Jesus!' They replied, 'The Son of God, the Saviour of men, the Word who was with God, and the Word who was God.' Another, whom I asked what the scriptures were! answered, 'All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness.' Not having much time, I bid them good bye, after commending their mistress, and urging them to continue their scriptural course. On my return the same day, I passed again through the village, hoping I should meet with some of the good children. But how was I surprised, when nearly all the children of the village assembled, and ran on before me, with countenances which seemed to say, 'Sir, ask me a question from my book!' I commenced, and to whatever question I proposed, a speedy, sensible and scriptural reply was given; and whatever portion of the New-Testament I mentioned, some one or other of the little company, named the chapter and verse, and repeated it with as much accuracy as if they had read it from the book. They accompanied me to some distance, and never was I more astonished or delighted in my life. I could not hesitate to ascribe honor, and praise, and glory, to that God, who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hath perfected praise.—C. Watch.

A New Religious Sect in France.—M. de St. Simon has commenced the arduous work of establishing an entire new religion. He dismisses, without ceremony, the essential articles of christian faith revealed in revelation, while he borrows the moral attributes of the word of God. He had considerable success in making disciples among the higher classes of society. The principles of new christianity, or anti-christianity, appear to be nothing more than a refinement upon Owenism. Why should men strive so hard to find out new ways to heaven, when the old way is so easy, and is the only way that leadeth to eternal life!

THE REPORTED POLISH VICTORY—Taking all the late accounts from Poland together, and on a diligent comparison of dates, there can be no doubt that the story of the great victory said to have been obtained by the Poles over Gen. Paskewitsch, was entirely without foundation. We published a paragraph among our selections in the evening, proving as much, from the Quotidienne of July 31st. We now add the following still stronger piece of evidence, which in our hurry on Monday, was overlooked. The papers giving the account of the supposed victory, did not pretend to date from Warsaw later than the 18th of July. The official reports of Skryznecki are no later than the 13th; and therefore we are compelled to believe—deeply as the disappointment is to be regretted—that the following paragraph, of the latest date, and from an authentic source, is conclusive upon the subject:—N. Y. Spectator.

FRONTIERS OF POLAND, July 24.—According to the latest accounts from the environs of Niesbora the Russian main army said to consist of 60,000 men, with 70 pieces of cannon, has now completed its passage over the Vistula, the guards, under the Grand Duke Michael, having crossed the river on the 19th by the bridge thrown over for the purpose. On the 21st a Te Deum, accompanied by the firing of cannon, was celebrated on this accout in the Russian army. The van of the Russian army under Prince Jebachoffski, and Gen. Witt, is said to have already advanced to the environs of Warsaw, without meeting any opposition from the Polish troops. We hear from Lithuania that Gen. Dembrinski, with his troops, the last remains of the expedition sent to that country, has been taken prisoner by the Russians.—Prussian State Gazette.

THE VIRGINIA INSURRECTION.

A letter was yesterday received by the Gov. from Gen. Eppes, dated at Jerusalem, Aug. 24. He states, that it is ascertained, that forty-six whites have been murdered, some of them horribly mangled; some say that fifty-three are killed—that the number of insurgents was, according to the best intelligence, reduced to six—though it is not improbable that they may attempt to rally. Twelve had been taken; several had been apprehended, not of the riotous, but suspected—fifteen had been killed—the rest, with Gen. Nathaniel Turner, (a preacher and a slave) and Will Artist, a freeman of color, at their head, were trying to make off. Gen. E. states that he was disbanding the military, and had no doubt of restoring tranquility in a short time.

Extract of a letter from Jerusalem, Va. Aug. 24, 3 o'clock

"The oldest inhabitants of our country, have never experienced such a distressing time, as we have had since Sunday night last. Two negroes, about fifteen miles above this place, have massacred from 50 to 75 women and children, & some 6 or 10 men. Every house, room and corner in this place, is full of women and children, driven from home, and had to take the wood, until they could get to this place. We are worn out with fatigue, &c."

VIRGINIA INSURRECTION.—We take the following official document from the Richmond Compiler of the 29th ultimo.—

Official.—Gen Eppes reports to the Governor by express, from head-quarters, at Jerusalem, Southampton, that there is no longer any danger, in that county or its vicinity, and there is not the least danger of the renewal of the disturbances.

The insurgents are all taken or killed, except Nat Turner, the leader, after whom there is a warm pursuit.

The troops will be discharged shortly.

The General reports forty-eight prisoners.

The Richmond troop is at head-quarters.—Officers and members, all well and in good spirits.

The number of whites who have fallen victims to the ferocity of the miscreants is about sixty-four, chiefly women and children, who were murdered in the most shocking manner. We have seen several lists of the families who have suffered; but as they were not complete we shall not publish the names at present.

We trust that although this disturbance has, to all appearances, been quieted in Southampton, every precaution will be taken in that and the adjoining counties to guard against the recurrence of such an outrage. The public safety requires that the utmost vigilance should be observed, at least until all the circumstances of the revolt have been fully investigated.—New-York Spectator.

It is the intention of the President, we understand, to commence shortly enrolling the Cherokee people for emigration to the west of the Mississippi. The information comes by way of Georgia, and this step is to be taken in compliance with the urgent solicitation of Governor Gilmer. All Indian business is now transacted through that channel. The last attempt to enroll the Cherokees failed. Since that time, their oppression has been increased twenty fold, and now the, are again to be sounded. If it should turn out that this oppression has not been attended with the desired effect, another turn of the screw will be given.—Cherokee Phoenix.

Rochester Sept. 12, 1831. EBEN. ELY.

MARRIED,

In Springville, on the 24th ult. by the Rev. Mr. Willcox, Mr. Hiram H. Barney, Principal of Springville Academy, to Miss Mary Elliott.

At Black Rock, on the 31st ult. by the Rev. Mr. Shelton, Mr Albert Hayden of Buffalo, to Miss Sevilla Brace, of the former place.

At West Bloomfield on the 18th inst. by the Rev. J. Steele, Mr. Wm. Arnold, Jr. to Miss Emily Peck, both of that place.

Also, on the 5th inst. by the same, Mr. Heman Hall, of Geneva, to Miss Elvira C. daughter of Mr. Josiah Taft, of the above place.

At Lewiston, on the 6th inst. by Rev. J. Elliot, Mr. John M'Cosland, of Whitchurch, York co. (U. C.) to Miss Lydia Ann Walker of Niagara, Niagara co. N. Y.

In this village, on the 6th inst. by the Rev. G. Filmore, Mr. J. Hursh, to Miss Sarah M'Quertie.

DIED,

In Sweden, on the 2d inst. Mrs. POLLY STAPLES, wife of Chauncy Staples, Esq. aged 44.

Mrs. Staples had for several months been severely afflicted with a rheumatic affection together with other complaints, which she bore with christian fortitude and patience; she was, however, gradually recovering, until about three weeks before her death, when she went to the Avon Springs where she remained a week, and beside drinking freely, took the cold water bath, which is supposed to have proved seriously injurious to her.—She soon grew worse, was brought home with great difficulty, and continued rapidly to decline, until her spirit took its flight, as we trust to the society of the just made perfect.

Mrs. Staples was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Brockport; benevolent in her disposition, and consistent in her walk as a christian. She was much beloved by all her numerous acquaintances, and by them all, her death is deeply lamented.—Com.

Our readers will learn with regret that Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill, a citizen distinguished for the variety and extent of his knowledge, by the important public offices he has at various times filled, and by his many contributions to scientific and literary works, died this morning at his residence in this city, after an indisposition of but a few days.—New-York Eve. Post.

At Brighton, Monroe co. on the 7th inst. Mr. Henry Jefferds, aged 28 years.

At Richmond, 24th ult. in the 12th year of his age, John Titus, second son of the late Rev. A. W. Welton, and grandson of Titus Welton, Esq. of said town.

In Canandaigua, on the 2d inst. Lavant, aged 20 months, son of Jonathan K. Wells. On the 3d inst. Nathaniel H. aged 10 months, son of Jared Willson, Esq.

At Auburn, on Thursday, the 1st inst. of the typhus fever, Mr. Henry C. Williams, son of Dea. Isaac Williams, of Clinton. The deceased was a graduate of Hamilton College, and a member of the Auburn Theological Seminary. He sustained an eminent character for piety and talents, and bid fair for extensive usefulness in the Church of Christ. At the recent examination of the Students in the Seminary, he acquitted himself with much honor, though disease had then evidently marked him as its victim. His father arrived on the day of his death, only in time to close the eyes of his dying son, and his mother, not until the spirit had fled from its tenement of clay, to the invisible state.

At Avon on the 6th inst. Col. Wm. Gardiner, of Manlius, Onondaga co. aged 71; Father of the Hon. Addison Gardiner of this village. In the death of this gentleman the church of Christ has lost one of its firmest pillars—Society one of its brightest ornaments—and his relations a most endearing friend.

In this village, on Saturday morning last, Mrs. ANSEY, wife of Mr. Robert L. M'Collum, and daughter of Mr. Rufus Smith, of Greece, formerly of Groton, Conn., aged 26 years.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fowwick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,

NEW ENGLAND DIVINES.

The hosts of the northern divines have been abundantly celebrated by their colleagues, disciples or friends. They supply curious and animating specimens of a numerous race of theologians and godly pastors; men who preached unwearedly "with acceptance," and wrote with fulness and power; who rendered themselves, by indefatigable application, towering scholars —biblical, classical, and oriental. A number of them won, by their books and domestic renown, the highest academical honors from European Universities. The various toils of the pastors and teachers, seem to have been favorable to longevity; for the proportion of them is not small, who passed forty or fifty years in the ministry, and never suffered to lie fallow for a day. Increase Mather was a preacher sixty-six years; he commonly spent sixteen hours a day in his study; and his sermons and other publications bore a rational ratio to that allotment. His son, Cotton Mather, was even more laborious and prolific. His biographers aver, that no person in America had read so much as he:—and it is recorded in his diary, that in one year he preached seventy-two sermons, kept sixty fasts, and twenty vigils, and wrote fourteen books. His pulpit discourses were "equal in length to those of his brethren," which as he himself informs us usually went a good way into the sacred hour. His publications amounted to three hundred and twenty two; some of them being of huge dimensions. John Higginson boasts that no less than ten of the Mathers were serving the Lord and his people in the ministry of the gospel of Christ.

The father of Jonathan Edwards, the Rev. Timothy, died in the 89th year of his age, having been a minister for sixty years. Jonathan rose at four o'clock every morning, spent thirteen hours every day in his study, indited his sermons in full, for nearly twenty years after he began to preach, and reached the figures 1400 in numbering his miscellaneous writings. Eighty-two sermons are enumerated in the extensive list of his publications. He left, moreover, "a great number of volumes in manuscript." According to his biographers, he read with great avidity and delight, when he was not more than twelve years old, Locke on the Human Understanding. We have strong doubts whether he then comprehended his authors, but he afterwards proved himself in his celebrated Treatise on the Freedom of the human will, as deep a thinker and close reasoner, in metaphysics, as the English philosopher. By this masterly work, he gained at once the highest reputation in Europe. President Stile, of Yale College, "a man of low and small stature, and of very delicate structure," died in a good old age, a prodigy of acquirements and faculties. He was an indefatigable preacher, an able professor of metaphysics, theology, jurisprudence, and history; a voluminous author in print, and unconscious reader; an almost universal linguist; an adept in mathematics, natural philosophy, and astronomy; and his cabinet manuscripts, at his death, consisted of forty volumes, besides an unfinished Ecclesiastical History of New England. His hobby was the discovery of the ten tribes of Israel; a pursuit in which he took incredible pains, and addressed voluminuous epistles, in Latin, to Rabbis' Jesuits in Mexico, Greek Bishops in Palestine, Moravian Ministers, in Astracan, and to Sir William Jones in Calcutta. The missive to Sir William consisted of more than 70 pages in quarto. Dr. Samuel Johnson, born in Connecticut, was another such omniverous and omnicient divine; in learning not inferior to the Johnson in England, in temper and manners much his superior. He was the head and oracle of the Episcopal church in Connecticut. There was a Rev. Ivory Hovey of Massachusetts, long a principal physician of the body, who wore the robe of 90 years without the staff: preached sixty-five years; wrote so many sermons that they could scarcely be counted, and kept a journal, in short hand, which finally occupied seven thousand octavo pages. Samuel Hopkins, from whom the sect called Hopkinsains derive the name, reached the age of eighty-three, though he frequently devoted eighteen hours a day to his studies, and framed sermons, syntagmata without number. We observed among his works a Dialogue; dated 1776, "showing it to be the duty and interest in American States to get rid of their slaves." The Rev. Solomon Stoddard, of Northampton, Massachusetts, who published a variety of polemical and other tracts, and plenty of sermons, wrote so fine a hand, that one hundred and fifty of his discourses are contained in a duodecimo volume which may be commodiously carried in the pocket.

The great plurality of our clergy sided with their country in all the disputes with Great Britain—they prayed and preached in favor of Independence, at the proper period; some even took up arms. It was especially natural and consistent in New England ministers, to be republican patriots—they were proclaimers of civil and religious liberty—sturdy whigs, from the settlement. Old President Stiles, with his puny body and large soul, preached a discourse on the occasion of the death of George II. and the accesion of George III., in which he admonished the latter against suffering any retrenchments of the liberties of New England. In the best known of his works, his History of the threee Judges of Charles I., he is all for "republican renovation;" he announced—before our revolution—that the 30th of January, which was observed by the Episcopalians, in commemoration of the martyrdom of Charles I. "ought to be celebrated as an anniversary thanksgiving, that one nation on earth had so much fortitude and public justice as to make a royal tyrant bow to the sovereignty of the people." Johnathan Mahew, the famous leader in what was called the Episcopal controversy, was a republican of the boldest parts. Such pastors contributed not a little to prepare the people for a prompt and inflexible resistance to every attack on their rights.

It is unquestionable that the lives of the American clergymen have been sound as to morals, and active as to the duties of the priesthood. Making every allowance for the prudence or partiality of biographers, it is yet most edifying to find such a proof, as these records afford, of domestic virtue, public exemplariness, devout diligence, combined with various talents, profound learning, scientific honors and personal ascendency. The vices and the irregularities with which the ecclesiastical bodies of Europe and South America, are reproached, have no place in the true history of ours—indolence, luxury substitution, simony, licentiousness, horse-racing, cock-fighting, gambling, street-mendicancy, none of these things can be cast upon any portion worth mentioning, of the dead or the living ministers of the gospel in our country. This fact is, in part, one of the effects, and therefore one of the merits of our political system, and the order of our society.—American Q. Review.

A GOOD BEGINNING.

B. A. was a girl at service, in 1820. She lived with the family of Col. M. within the bounds of my parish. In the progress of a memorable revival of religion, her attention was arrested, & she became deeply convicted of sin. At length she ventured, with much diffidence and trembling, to attend an "inquiry meeting," where a number of anxious souls were assembled, to move that most important of all questions, what they must do to be saved? I conversed with them one by one, administering such instruction as their several cases seemed to require. On coming to B. I found her well informed as to her duty, and ready to admit the reasonableness of Christ's requirements, but complained, and seemed deeply sensible of her guilt in it, that she "could not feel." I told her, that there appeared to be enough in her case, that was alarming, to awaken the feelings of the hardest heart, that a sinner against so much light as she evidently possessed, could have no excuse for another hour's delay. I urged her, that night, before she gave sleep to her eyes, to surrender her heart to God, and she expressed a resolution so to do.

The next morning, I rose early, and passing into the street, unexpectedly met B. with her water-pail, returning from the pump. "Well B.," said I, "what is the state of your mind this morning?" She set down her pail and replied, with a smile, "O, I think it is delightful to glorify God." "But do you think, B., you have any reason to believe that you are a child of God?" She paused a moment, in a thoughtful mood, and then replied, "really, Mr. P. I had not thought of that; and I do not think it is much matter what becomes of me, if I may but serve and glorify God." I was struck with the humility and simplicity of this reply, and as I passed away, after dropping a few words of instruction, I was deeply and delightfully impressed with the reflection, that, for a new born soul to be so absorbed in desiring and seeking the glory of God, as absolutely to lose sight of itself, is a good beginning. And my hopes in this case have not been disappointed.—B. A. soon after became a professor of religion, and to the present time, has lived to adorn her profession, by a self-renouncing and devoted spirit of active piety.

THE MODE OF CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

It was a maxim of the Romans always to carry the war into the enemies country. When Hannibal by an astonishing movement had entered Italy, it was carrying the war into Africa, that saved the Republic. Fifteen years did that artful enemy maintaind his stand in Italy, bidding defiance to the utmost energies of Rome. But when Scipio with the legions of Scicily had carried the war into the "enemies country," Hannibal was recalled and conquered at the gates of Carthage.

Happy would it be for the interests of Zion, were the children of light as skillful and enterprising in executing plans of benevolence, as the children of this world are in conducting their projects of aggrandizement. Ever since New-England became the asylum of the Puritans, efforts have been made to raise up a community free from the contaminations of religious error, —a community in which the salutary restraints of the gospel should bear directly upon every heart. The hope has been confidently indulged that this land would become a moral Goshen, even though ignorance and Egyptian darkness should reign on every side. If ever such an experiment has been tried under favorable circumstances, it has been in New-England; and I need not add it has utterly failed. To raise up such a community is impossible, while the world continues in its present state. We might as well attempt to produce a vacuum in the atmosphere, without philosophical apparatus: or bail out a cavity from the depths of the ocean. New-England cannot be made a paradise, while she is linked in with infidel and pagan nations by social and commercial intercourse, by individual and national interests. Her moral atmosphere can never be purified, while pestilence contagion and death are hovering on all her borders. He who commanded his disciples to preach the gospel in all the world, wisely designed that they should never take undisputed possession of a part of it, leaving the remainder to be evangelized at their leisure. The gospel was designed for the whole world, and to the whole world must it be preached before its happy influence unalloyed can be witnessed in any community. Yet Christians are toiling at this hopeless experiment. They have established Sabbath Schools, distributed Tracts, carried the Bible to every family, and trained up ministers, till there is one for every thousand souls; and are still crying "send us more help, for iniquity is coming in like a flood."

When the Macedonian cry comes from China—from India, or the Isles of the Pacific,—a cry prompted by the deepest misery which human nature can endure, the reply is, "as for our men and our resources, we want them at home. Tarry till we have gained the victory here, and then we will send you the blessings of salvation.' Far be it from me to discourage effort at home; but I do fearlessly assert that if we wish to contend successfully with the Prince of darkness, New-England is not the proper point of attack. He is here, what Hannibal was in Italy—an unconquerable enemy. If there is a spot on earth, where he can meet us on equal ground, it is here. He has raised his strongest fortifications, and manned them with his best forces,—with men whose intellectual qualifications, zeal and energy of character would do honor to any cause —He can here oppose learning to learning. He can array moral power against moral power, and marshall his whole artillery of sophistry, falsehood and slander against the simple preaching of Christ crucified. But while he is here carrying on the war so vigorously, but with few reverses to damp his ardor, he knows that his own dark empire lies open to invasion with scarce a barrier to oppose the truth. He is fully aware of bondage not to be born, cannot withstand a moment, the tender, invitng spirit of the gospel. Already does this feeble barrier totter with the infirmities of age! already has disaffection spread far and wide, through his vast dominions. His subjects are weary and disgusted with his service, and ripe for a revolt. Disciples of Jesus, do you doubt it? Look then at the Sandwich Islands, and at all the Islands of the Pacific in which liberty has been proclaimed to his wretched captives. Hear them exclaim "our happiness is the joy of one just freed from prison," and will you doubt their readiness to hear, to accept and be free? Will you be the honored instruments of giving liberty to 600, 000,000, of your enslaved fellow men—of putting a successful termination to a war that has lasted 6,000 years? I would say then, slack not your efforts at home,—nay, pray with more fervency, and labor with more diligence; but give over the mad design of conquering the Prince of darkness in New-England. It is a hopeless experiment, unless you prosecute the war with more vigor in his own territory. Rouse then all your energies—concentrate all your forces and

THE WORK OF AFFLICTION.

An original, consolatary Letter, written to a friend, by Rev. Robert Hall.

It was once a reconciling thought to me in great trouble, that afflictions are compared in Scripture to workmen; all employed, and busy in the Christian's behalf. They work for you: it might have been against you, as is frequently feared. They work together; not separately, but in happy harmony. I then thought, the more the better, if God direct and point out their employment; for the end to be accomplished, is 'a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' As persons take pleasure in reviewing the industrious workman, so the Christian, with Paul, may rejoice, not only in the Lord, but in his tribulations also. 'I take pleasure in afflictions also,' &c. If God send a great affliction (thought I,) we may then view it as a fresh workman, engaged in our favor; and not only so, but look upon it as one who, in consequence of singular strength will despatch business (though of a heavy nature) at a great pace. Thus those for whom they are employed will grow rich at last. Among others let patience have her perfect work; she is a pensive, but a precious grace. Have likewise labors abundant in the Lord: Desire goes in search after celestial productions; Hope stands on tiptoe to view them; Faith goes to receive them, and brings them home. Thus, the just shall live by his faith; for what Faith brings, Love cordially receives, and Volition bids it welcome. Joy sings, and makes sweet melody; Peace possesseth; Rest receiveth; and Fear ceaseth to quake, and Jealousy to tremble. How well is it for the soul, when tribulation worketh for her, and when every grace is active in her! Angels encamp about her, and God rejoiceth over her to do her good.

SABBATH IN CONNECTICUT.

A writer in the Charleston (S. C.) Observer, thus notices the pitiful story inserted a few weeks since in the Courier and Enquirer. The anecdote here related, presents the character of Connecticut men in its true light.

Mr. Editor—A very pathetic piece has appeared in the New-York Courier and Enquirer, and from thence, extensively copied into other papers, bitterly complaining that a lady-passenger in a Stage, was stopped on Sunday, in one of the towns of Connecticut, in accordance with the law of that sovereign state. Now whether the law is wise or unwise, it is not for me to say —or whether the sworn officers of that Government can innocently or not permit them to be violated, is a question of causuistry which I shall not attempt to decide. But I will tell you an anecdote in point.

Nearly thirty years ago, two students in Yale, from the South, left College on an excursion of pleasure, and while absent, they put up on Saturday night at a tavern, intending to pursue their journey on the Sabbath. Sabbath morning came, and they were up bright and early for a start. But no preparation had been made on the part of the Landlord, for their accommodation in this respect. In short, the Landlord mildly informed them that he could not permit them to go, for two reasons, 1st, he was a Deacon of the church, and therefore bound to prevent as far as possible, the violation of the Sabbath; and in the 2nd place, he was a magistrate; and sworn to execute the laws. The young gentleman very reluctantly submitted, accompanied the family to the church, and in the evening, a number of the young people of the village were assembled at the Deacon's house, and the time was spent in singing and social converse. The next morning, the Landlord had made early preparations for their special accommodation. The breakfast was ready by the time they were up, and their horses at the door —and in their bill no charge was made for the Sabbath. "Sir," says one of the young gentlemen "we are more wicked than poor. We thank you for detaining us; and we insist that no deduction shall be made in the bill. The day we have spent here has been among the pleasantest in our lives, and we shall ever regard you as a benefactor in preventing us from doing what our consciences do not approve." Thus they parted; and one of the gentlemen, from whose lips I had this narrative, is now, and has been for a number of years a distinguished Minister of the Gospel. Who the other was, I do not remember. But in the Deacon's family, they had an example of the descision, the meekness, and beauty of true christian piety, which made an impression upon their minds lasting as life.

OMICRON.

A PRISONER'S CONFESSION.—An esteemed correspondent, whose mind was solemnly impressed by reading in the last Watchman the narrative, entitled, "A Father's Prayer," has obligingly sent us the following, as another instance of the power of parental affection and warning. It is a passage from a letter of Rev. G. Barrett, Chaplain of the State Prison in Weathersfiled Con.—Bos. Cris. Watch.

The Chaplain of the Prison at Weathersfield remarks—"Among our prisoners, I daily meet with circumstances to awaken in me feelings of the deepest interest. A man of fifty, who has been a wanderer over almost the whole earth, and a partaker in almost every sin that can be named, and who has also met with much which we should think was calculated to make him solemn, told me that nothing in his whole life had ever made him feel serious, but what his mother said to him just before her death.— She resided in Trenton, N. Jersey, and was a sincere, warm-hearted christian. When she found herself dying, she sent for her son, then a lad of 12 years old, to come to her chamber.— As he approached her bed, she took his hand, and spoke to him with maternal tenderness and fidelity. Telling him she must soon leave him, she earnestly besought him by every moving consideration, so to love the Saviour, and so to take care of his soul, as to meet her in heaven. She continued to clasp his hand, till hers became cold in death. For nearly half a century afterwards, this man was pressing onwards through a course of crime, too revolting for description. Yet he assured me, that amidst his lowest and darkest descents into the vortex of sin, he could never utterly drive from his mind the last words of his mother, and was never able to think of them without solemn emotions. This struck me with some surprise, and appeared to me a proof of the deep and lasting impression a pious mother may make upon the mind of her child.'

Weathersfield Con., Aug. 2d 1831.

MORMONISM.

It is certainly strange; yet nevertheless true, that this infatuated people, if we may place confidence in the reports of the newspapers, are becoming more numerous, and assuming a more formidable appearance.

We had hoped, that ere this the believers in the Book of Mormon would have been entirely extinct, and that no individual, however credulous, could be found so blind to reason and common judgment as to permit himself to be carried away by the absurdities of the Mormon doctrine. The frailties incident to human nature, have in all ages, invariably shown themselves, either in remarkable lethargy, or an enthusiastic excitement unsanctioned by reason or common sense. But the followers of the Book of Mormon, if the accounts received be not inconceivably exaggerated, are amongst the most blind and deluded people we have on record.

They believe that their leader is the real Jesus Christ, and that both he and his disciples have infinite power to work miracles, raise the dead, cleanse lepers—and THEY TESTIFY THAT HE HAS CAST OUT MANY DEVILS—that the millenium is nigh, and that Philadelphia is the place where Jesus Christ will meet his disciples and followers. They are now removing to the promised land—some indefinite spot on the Mississippi—some have gone, and others are disposing of their property, often at an immense pecuniary sacrifice, that they may join their companions gone before. To such an enthusiastic pitch have they raised their imagination that the entreaties and persuasive arguments of friends have no weight whatever.

Their religious ceremonies and observances are forms of obscenceness and blasphemy, and are conducted in a manner shocking to the sense of rational creatures. In their excesses, unrestrained by the presence of the opposite sex, and in one assembly—they roll naked on the floor, and exhibit a variety of grotesque and unseemly forms which humanity would blush to name. It is truly lamentable that such a state of things exists—yet nevertheless these fanatics are daily receiving new accessions from New-York, Indiana, &c.—Bucks Co, (Pa.) Int.

Mr. Noah Webster stated in a lecture recently, that the income of half a cent on each copy of his Spelling Book, had supported himself and family, during the whole time he was engaged in preparing his large dictionary, which cost him $25,000.

"TWA LITTLE BIRDIES."

There were two sisters in the North, who had saved a little property, upon which they lived.— When a case was presented to them by a minister, they said, that they cut and carved so close, that if the King were to come, they should not have any thing to give him. "Oh, but," said the minister, "I do come from the King!" "Well, we canna' gie ye ony thing." "Nae, what not a penny a week!" "A penny a week indeed! why that's just 4*s.* 4*d.* a year; nae, we canna do ony sic a thing." The minister was casting his eyes about him, and perceiving two birds hanging up in handsome cages, he said, "What hae ye gotten yonder!" "O, only twa little birdies." "And what might they cost ye, now!" "Abaut half-a-croon a piece." "And do they eat any thing?" "Aye, sure, and indeed they do." "And what does their food cost you!" "Oh, not less than two bawbees and a half, twopence halfpenny a week." "Oh, for shame o' yoursels! for shame o' yourselves! to spend twall shillings a year upon twa little birdies that ne'er lay ony eggs, and ha' naething to gi' to the cause o' God!" "Well, but now we ha' gotten them, what would ye ha' us do wi' em?" "Do wi' em —why open the window and let them fly awa!" Now, my friends, if you have got any little birdies, any thing that would prevent your giving to the cause of God, open the windows and let them go immediately.—Rev. J. Edwards, at London Home Miss. Anniversary.

PREACHING OF A LITTLE CHILD.

Several years ago, D——was visited with a revival. One evening Mrs.——and her little daughter attended a meeting, and the minister was speaking of the neglect of family duties, of reading the Scriptures, and of family prayer, the little daughter, who listened attentively, and perceived the preacher was describing a leglect, that she had witnessed herself, whispered to her mother this question—"Ma, is Mr.——talking to you?" This was powerful preaching to the mother; she was immediately brought under deep convictions which resulted in her hopeful conversion to God.—N. Y. Evangelist.

MELANCHOLY.—On Sunday afternooon last, in Connecticut River, near the Quarry in Chatam, a small row boat was upset, containing four young women and two young men; and melancholy to relate, three of the young women were drowned. The young woman who was saved, clung to the boat until she was taken off, and the men swam to the shore. One of the young women drowned, is Miss Minerva Hodge, about 18 years old, of East Granby, who had been employed for some time past, in the Arrowmamet Manufactory, in this town. The other two drowned were daughters, one of Mr. Amos and the other of Mr. Alvin Chapman, both of Glastenbury. It appears, as near as we can learn, that these young persons had very improperly and sinfully spent the afternoon of Sunday in going after fruit; and on their return, they commenced frolicking in the boat, by rocking it, when the girls became frightened, and crowding to one side, occasioned it to upset. The bodies of the two Misses Chapman were found the next day; and the search after that of Miss Hodge was continued yesterday.—Middletown Sen.

WARNING TO SABBATH BREAKERS.—We have been informed, that a gentleman in Upper Houses (North Society of this town,) who has resided there 29 years, has kept an account of the number of persons who have been drowned within that time, in that District, (including to the opposite shore of Catham.) He states the number to be 16 and that 11 of them were drowned on Sunday, when on sailing or pleasure parties! What a warning this to Sabbath breakers! —Ib.

OMINOUS.

The following curious incident was related to us by a gentleman who assures us it is strictly true.

A company of men, mostly Universalists, were seated at the table, and while eating engaged in conversation upon their favorite doctrine. They all expressed their entire confidence in the truth of Universalism. One of them, when about to put food in his mouth, observed in a confident tone, "I feel as certain that I shall go to Heaven, as I do of eating what now lies upon my knife." The words were no sooner uttered, than from some unperceived cause, the food fell upon the floor, and was devoured by a dog! The countenances of all the company fell, and they finished their meal in silence.

We do not relate this as evidence of the falsity of Universalism, but as an illustration of what we conceive to be true, that those who profess to believe it, feel no more certainty of going to Heaven, than they do of the enjoyment of any future temporal good which they may desire and expect. It is a striking figure of the disappointment which those must experience; who hang their hopes of Heaven on the futile scheme of universal salvation. We wish it might induce them at least to "stop and think," before their doom is forever sealed.—Christian Soldier.

As the robber escaped, crying "stop thief," so Joseph's mistress, for her own safety, accused him of the crume she had herself committed.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

DOCTRINAL.

From the New York Evangelist.

REPLY TO THEOPHILUS.

Mr. Editor—Theophilus is dissatisfied with certain articles quoted by him, because they hold that the "ground and foundation of God's choice or election is—his own sovereign pleasure."—Is he satisfied with God's word on this subject! Eph. i. 5, "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."—Eph. i. 6, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself." Eph. i. 11, In whom we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." 2 Tim. i. 9, "Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling: not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace," &c. Our Saviour has referred the difference which the Father has made in conferring his grace on sinners, to the same cause; Mat. xi. 25, "Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Let it be remembered, that when the sovereign good pleasure of God—the pleasure of his will, is assigned as the ground or reason of the election which he makes, we are not to regard this as a mere arbitrary exercise of his will. The will of God is always directed by his immutable design to promote the highest good of his kingdom. In every choice he has this in view; and where he chooses one sinner rather than another, it is because the salvation of that one will most perfectly secure this end.

Here you perceive the absurdity of the principal objection urged by Theophilus, against the doctrine, that the sovereign pleasure of God is the reason why some are elected rather than others. He holds that this amounts to saying, that God does thus, "merely to gratify his own feelings." Be it so; (although I dislike the phrase,) What then? He replies that this would make God infinitely selfish. But how does this follow!—What feelings does God design to gratify? Feelings that aim at the highest interest of that vast kingdom over which God reigns—feelings of perfectly pure disinterested benevolence. Is this selfishness!

Theophilus speaks as if it were wrong for God, in the administration of his moral government, to pay a supreme regard to himself. "If God be infinitely benevolent," he remarks, "his object is to promote the greatest possible good of his creatures." The benevolence of God binds him to no such thing. If infinitely benevolent, his object is to promote the greatest possible good of his moral kingdom. In this kingdom are found not only creatures, but also the infinite Creator, who is its supreme and glorious head. Were God then to seek the greatest possible good of creatures only, without regarding himself, his own rights and interest, he could not be impartial, for he would then regard a part only. To be disinterested and impartial, he must regard every thing in proportion to its value. And since all created being is but finite and God is infinite, God is bound in the administration of his kingdom, to pay an infinitely higher regard to his own character and rights, than to the good of created beings.—Where is it taught in God's word, that he pays a supreme regard to his creatures! Must God live and act, if not entirely, yet chiefly, for men and angels! I shudder at this sentiment; it is dethroning God, and raising creatures to his place. It appears too much like making God an almighty servant, to those whom he has created. He has commanded those, whose duty it is to be like him, to love him supremely; and doubtless he may and must pay the same regard to himself. Such is the doctrine of God's word. Prov. xvi. 4, "The Lord hath made all things for himself."

These remarks will exhibit the reason why, in the work of election, God is inclined to pursue that plan which will best manifest his own glory. Being perfectly and impartially benevolent, he cannot do otherwise. Although he is immutably disposed to give to his creation all the happiness which he consistently can, the promotion of his own glory, is that which must occupy in his mind, as it should in ours, the first and highest place. Eph. i. 5-6, "Having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace."

Theophilus would have us believe that there are some advantages peculiar to his system; such as a reconciliation of the decrees of God with the free agency of man—with the sincerity of God, &c. He speaks as if he believed that difficulties in these points were attached to the system he opposes. But it never has been proved, that those views of the doctrine of election throw the least obstacle in the way of man's free agency, or of the sincerity of God in his precepts, promises, threatenings, or invitations. M. A.

To the Editor of the Christian Intelligencer.

Dear Sir:—There is in the circumstances of the sound parts of the Presbyterian and Reformed Dutch Churches, and in their almost simultaneous movements, a remarkable coincidence, which should operate upon both as a mutual stimulus and a mutual support.

We have a proof in all this, that God is fulfilling his gracious promise; "when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him," Isaiah lix. 19. In the midst of the desolation of error and Protestant Jesuitism among the churches, it is encouraging to see the friends of the truth, and of ecclesiastical order, rising simultaneously in their strength and buckling on the armor of righteousness, and coming with vigor to the help of the Lord in the battle against the errorists and cunning craftiness of the day.

I send you a copy of the Circular containing the appeal and warning of the venerable Dr. Green, and his honored associates, to the Presbyterian Churches. The Reformed Dutch Church does not stand alone in her perilous situation, and in the struggle which her sons are nobly sustaining. The Presbyterian brethren are sympathising with us. Those of the Episcopal and Methodist Churches who are desirous of maintaining their ecclesiastical order, are lifting up a standard against those whose movements are calculated to break down the distinctive features of their households.

I request you to peruse the Circular which I send you, and to publish it entire, together with the respectable names composing the Committee of Correspondence in the several Synods of the Presbyterian Churches.

I wish you also to read certain statements of Doctor Green, contained in the last two numbers of the Christian Advocate, in which, as well as in the Circular, you will find many things to assist and support you, and the true friends of the Dutch Church. Should you insert the documents to which I invite your attention, you will promote the common salvation, and oblige

A Subscriber.

[CIRCULAR.]

Dearly Beloved Brethren.,

You must already have been in some measure apprized of the hazard to which the vital interests of our beloved church were exposed, at the last meeting of the General Assembly. For a time, it seemed as if nothing less alarming was to ensue, than the mutilation, if not the subversion, of the whole Presbyterian system. In these circumstances, a number of the brethren held meetings for prayer, and for conference on the measures which they might adopt, with the best prospect under Divine blessing, of averting the evils apprehended: and the Great Head of the church did, as they believed, remarkably interpose to suspend for a time, the impending calamity. The General Assembly was dissolved without carrying into effect the most injurious of those measures which had been projected, and one of which, the entire change of the Missionary Board, had been proposed and urged. Thus another year is afforded us to live under the unmutilated standards and institutions of the church in which we were born and nurtured.—But this is the last year, it is our solemn conviction, in which our church will remain without essential changes, unless her children shall be aroused to a sense of her danger, and call into vigorous action their united energies in her defence. It was under this impression, that the brethren who were instrumental in preventing the threatening evils to which we have alluded, did, after much prayerful deliberation, appoint the undersigned as a Central Committee, to correspond with other Committees in the several Synods of our connexion; and it was their judgment that the Synodical Committes would do well to appoint and correspond with Committees in such of their Presbyteries as they might believe to be friendly to their views, and disposed to co-operate in giving efficiency to their plans.

You cannot be ignorant dear brethren, that during the lapse of several years, circumstances have not unfrequently occurred, which seemed to prognosticate evil to our church; and which awakened in the minds of some, the apprehension that an important crisis was approaching. But with many of our ministerial and lay brethren throughout the country, we cherished the hope that the danger had been magnified through fear, & that no serious interruption, to the safety and peace of the church would ensue. This illusion of hope was dissipated at the last Assembly. We cannot pretend to give a detail of the proceedings of that Assembly; but having been near, and attentive observers of them, we are prepared to say, that the spirit and purpose, unequivocally manifested by a majority of the members, did impress on our minds the conviction, that our Theolgical Seminaries are in danger of being revolutionized, and perverted from the intention of their orthodox founders; that the property and endowments of our church are in danger of passing, for application and disposal, into the hands of those who have contributed little, if any thing, to their amount; that our doctrinal standards are in danger, either of total disregard, or of a revision, or alteration that will essentially change their character; that our supreme ecclesiastical judicatory is in danger of being controlled by delegates unconstitutionally appointed and commissioned, and destitute of every legal claim to membership; and finally that our Boards of Education and Missions, are in danger of being wrested from the hands of those who wish to make them the sources of supply to the wants of our church, in an uncorrupted state, and of being rendered subsidiary to the plans and purposes of voluntary associations subject to no ecclesiastical responsibility, and adopting no formula of faith, by which their religious tenets may be ascertained.

But although we believe dear brethren, that our beloved Zion is in danger, and that the danger is exceedingly imminent, yet we are far from thinking her situation hopeless. Our peril, we verily believe, arises chiefly from the want, in the sound part of our church, of a due sense of the danger which exists; and a consequent security and inactivity, apathy may we not call it—while those who are seeking to innovate, are all life and energy prompt and united in their measures and movements, and combined in their operations. We have not a doubt that if the orthodox part of our church had been as fully represented in the last Assembly as its opposers were, the majority would have been with us, and not with them, and when we consider the interposition of God's providence, for to this it must be ascribed; to save us from fatal innovations for another year, we cannot but consider the language of the dispensation to be; "You shall have another year to make it manifest, whether you have a sufficient love to the pure & holy truths of your Confession of Faith and Catechism, and to the sacred institutions of your fathers, to awake to their defence and preservation; or whether, with listless indifference, you will suffer them to be invaded and destroyed, and you and your children, deprived forever, of a birthright, which you ought to value more than life itself."

Are we asked then, what ought to be done? We answer briefly—

First of all, look to God for his guidance and blessing. Let there be much prayer, that he who has the hearts of all men in his hands, may incline his people of our denomination to think of the preciousness of those divine truths which drawn from the pure fountain of divine revelation, have been collected in our doctrinal standards, as into a sacred reservoir, and which every Presbyterian ought, without hesitation, to make every necessary sacrifice, to preserve, and perpetuate in their purity. To think, too of that invaluable form of church government and order, derived from the oracles of inspiration, which they have received from their progenitors, and under which our church has prospered, flourished and extended, in a degree altogether without a parallel.

Let us also both labor and pray to promote vital piety. Those who oppose us, love to represent themselves as the friends, and us as the enemies, of revivals of religion. Let us convince the world that this is, what it certainly is, a totally false representation. While we leave to others all those new measures for promoting revivals, which are merely of man's devising, & keep close to the guidance of the divine word and recognise as indispensable, the special agency of the Holy Spirit, in the conversion of sinners, let us, in prayer, and in preaching, in holy living, in zealous activity in doing good, and in striving to win souls to the Saviour, demonstrate that we are not less, but more, the friends to genuine revivals of religion, than those who slander it.

Let all lawful measures be used to rouse our brethren, both clergy, and laity, to a just sense of their situation and their duty. With this view, we advise that you correspond with Presbyteries, as stated in the beginning of this communication. Make, also, a free but direct use of the press; and encourage liberally, and circulate as widely as possible, those publications which maintain the real doctrines of our church, and advocate the support of her institutions. Our opponents, who wish a continuance of the existing apathy and baneful security of the orthodox part of our church, cry "peace, when there is no peace." Expose this artifice. Peace indeed! Would God, our peace had not been disturbed by innovations, which threaten our ruin.—Would God that peace and safety were compatible. But at present, they are not compatible.—We are called to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and for an inheritance of inestimable value, which we are in danger of losing. Let us pursue our objects with a Christian spirit, and by no other means than those which are lawful. But let us do it firmly, resolutely, perseveringly. Let no smooth words or soothing propositions, turn us from our purpose. We have been credulous and hoodwinked too long already.

Our Board of Education, and Board of Missions, must both receive a liberal patronage and a decided support. This is essential—without this, we are undone. The voluntary associations that seek to engross the patronage of our church, and have already engrossed a large part of it, have taken the start of us, in the all-important concerns of education and of missions.—They now labor to get the whole of these into their own hands; well knowing, that if this be effected, they will infallibly, in a very short time, govern the church; for education furnishes missionaries, and missionaries become pastors, and pastors, with their ruling elders, form Church Sessions, Presbyteries, Synods, and General Assemblies. The whole, it is seen at once, is traced back to education, as a salient point; and from this, it springs and rushes forward, through every channel of influence, till it reaches the highest fountain of power in the General Assembly.

At the present moment, our Board of Missions is experiencing a very distressing and embarrassing want of missionaries. The destitute churches are crying, in the most affecting manner to the Board, for the supply of their necessities; but how can the Board supply their importunate demands! The Board furnishes funds, but they cannot create missionaries.—Nor can they take them of all characters and descriptions, as the voluntary associations may, without regard to the correctness of their theological sentiments and teachings. The Board want men of knowledge and soundness in the faith, as well as of piety and zeal. Our churches ask for such, and are unwilling to receive any other; and the Board are equally unwilling to send any other. But where are they to be found? They cannot be found, in number at all adequate to the demand, till they are educated. Our Education and Missionary Boards we repeat therefore, must be sustained—must be promptly, and liberally, and efficiently patronized, or our church is gone. Yes, dear brethren, whatever other benevolent institutions we favor—and we wish well to all that are truly benevolent—Our Boards of Education and Miss. must share most largely in our charitable contributions. We must take from others, so far as is necessary, to give to these; and we ought to regard it as a sacred duty to withhold our aid from all institutions, that seek to supplant or rival these. These are the sheet anchors of our church, which must enable her to ride out the fearful fluctuations by which she is now agitated, and in jeopardy of being wrecked and lost amidst the quicksands and whirlpools of theological error and heretical innovation.

Finally—The several judicatoraies of our church must be carefully and punctually attended by every orthodox man whose right and duty it is to hold a seat in them. This is another item of vital importance. It may happen, and sometimes has happened, even to Presbyteries, that by reason of the absence of some of the members, measures of great importance have been adopted, contrary to the mind of a real majority—measures sometimes, which a majority could not afterwards correct. This is more likely to take place in the election of commissioners to the General Assembly than in any other case, and in no case, at the present time, can a presbyterial error so deeply injure the general welfare of our church. Every Presbytery that by the attendence of every minister and every elder entitled to a seat and a vote, has it in its power to send an orthodox delegation to the next General Assembly, and fails to do so, may justly be regarded as incurring criminal responsibility of no ordinary character—The neglected duty may occasion a wound to the church that can never afterward be healed. Nor was it ever so important in our church as at the present time, that orthodox Presbyteries should choose wise men, and firm men, to represent them in the Assembly. But it is most of all important that every man elected, whether minister or elder, unless prevented by invincible hindrances of a providential kind, should attend that body at the next meeting. For the want of this, at the last meeting, we were left in a minority. We are fully aware, beloved brethren, of the difficulty of a general attendance, by the distant members; and we sympathise with them deeply. But truly it is at present a question of existence—The life, so to speak, of the Presbyterian church is, under God, in the hands of distant members; and are they not ready, for the Preservation of that life, to make every necessary sacrifice?—We trust they are, and that they will not fail to do it. Should it be found in the General Assembly of 1832 that every orthodox commissioner—minister and elder—is in his place, we have not a doubt that the formularies, government, institutions, and endowments of our church will be preserved; but we shall not be surprised if they shall all be swept away, or materially changed, if the neglect in attendance shall be as great in the coming year as in that which is past.

Thus, brethren beloved in the Lord we have endeavored to acquit ourselves of a trust confided to us by those members of the last Assembly, whose exertions, under the Divine blessing, were made instrumental in arresting measures of fearful import to our much loved Zion. We have laid before you honestly and without exaggeration, our views apprehensions, and wishes. We pretend not to dictate—We have no right and inclination to do so. Adopt such measures on our suggestion as you deem expedient, and no more; and devise other measures for yourselves. A solemn duty to the Saviour and to his church is incumbent upon us. If we neglect it, we have a tremendous responsibility. If we perform it with fidelity, and put our trust in our covenant God, he will prosper the work of our hands; we shall rejoice in his mercies, and the Presbyterian church to the latest generations, may rise up and call us blessed.

CREEKS.

Letter of Mr. Vaill, dated at Union.

Statements relative to their Number and Condition.

A portion of the Creeks removed from their country, lying between the states of Georgia & Alabama, about the beginning of the year 1827.—These have been followed by other parties since, till the number of emigrants now amounts to between 2500 & 3000. Their settlement is near the junction of Arkansas and Verdigris rivers. Mr. Vaill remarks under date of Jan. 10th—

They are settled quite compactly, extending twelve or fifteen miles up the Arkansas and Virdigris rivers. The country intervening is one continued village, as thickly settled as some of the smaller parishes in New-England, having some neighborhoods more dense than others.—The people are strictly agricultural, and in many parts just as near to each other as their farms will admit. In almost any part of the settlement, 50 children may be collected within a circle whose circumference is two miles from any given centre. The country assigned to the Creeks is not yet marked off definitely; but the settlement which has been begun, it is hoped will be permanent, and growing.

The mass of the people are desirous of a school. This is evident from their repeated applications to us to take their children to the school at Union. Had we taken all that have been offered, we should have had a very large school at this time. Probably no children in any nation ever learned more rapidly than the Creek boys and girls under our care.

All the people seem desirous to have a preacher sent among them—the good people that they may be edified and comforted, and the wicked that the poor illiterate blacks may be stopped in their exhortations, and that some one may preach among them, who has, as they express it, a heap of sense.

Formation and Increase of a Creek Church.

Statements were made in the last volume of this work, pp. 285—7, respecting the number and character of the Creek scholars in the school at Union; and also respecting the attention to religious instruction which prevailed in their settlement, under the preaching and pastoral labors of Messrs. Vaill and Montgomery, in connection with those of one or two pious and intelligent Creek young men. The meetings were generally attended by nearly 200 persons, and at some periods the number of persons specially impressed by religious truth was supposed to amount to 100; half of whom, it was hoped were truly pious.

On the 12th of last September, a church was organized, consisting of thirty members, Indians and blacks, twenty-five of whom were baptized. The others had been members of some church previously, principally from the Baptist & Methodist churches, while missions from those denominations were in operation among them before their removal.

At a meeting of the missionaries of the Board west of the Mississippi, last October, they determined to visit all Osage and Creek villages, aiming to preach the gospel to the whole people, if they could get access to them. Under date of April 26, Mr. Vaill gives the following account of their visit to the Creeks.

According to our resolution, Mr. Dodge and Mr. Washburn came to this place, and on Friday, the first day of April, we commenced our march for the Creek nation. Our course lay west of south, through the open prairie to the crossing of the Virdigris, eighteen miles from Union, and eight or ten above the Creek agency. Then, by riding about six miles further, we came near to the place of meeting, where we put up for the night. We found John Davis, who had been dangerously ill, still feeble, and unable to aid our labors. But his heart appeared to be filled with love and peace. It was pleasant to meet with this brother in Christ, though in affliction—this converted Creek, so devoted, so humble, so steadfast. He belongs to the Baptist church, and is now supported as a catechist and exhorter by the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions. He commenced this service about two months ago, and should his life and health be spared, he promises to be very useful to his people. Oh! what a monument of grace have we in this youth.

On Saturday the people began to collect at their old meeting ground, which they had enlarged by cutting down additional saplings for seats. We continued religious exercises till ten o'clock in the evening, and closed by inviting those who were desirous of our prayers to come forward. Twenty or more came and fell on their knees.—After several prayers we advised them not to continue their praying and singing through the night, as they had been used to do, but to get sleep, and be prepared for the services of the coming Sabbath.

The next morning was occupied till the hour of meeting in examining those that came forward as candidates for the communion. Mr. Dodge and Mr. Washburn expressed their surprise at the satisfactoriness of the evidence they exhibited. We all said and felt, This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes. The Spirit of the Lord is at work among the Creeks.—There has been something like a continued revival among them of more than two years standing. The number baptised and received to the communion was fifteen; ten of whom were Creeks & five blacks. While presenting the confession of faith, when we came to this clause, "You believe that Jesus Christ died on the cross for your sins," &c.. tears flowed plentifully, and sobbing was heard, confirming the expressions which they had just given verbally, that their hope rested in this bleeding Friend. The number of this church is now forty-six.—There was quite a number more who had a desire to join, whom we had not time to examine or who we thought had better wait.

The Sabbath proved to be cold and rainy. We opened our morning exercises in the rain, and continued till Mr. Dodge had finished the first prayer, and it was interpreted. And even then many were for continuing the service in the rain; but fearing some would take cold who were thinly clad, we suspended the worship for one hour, and they resorted to their fires. Though they had no tents, yet scarcely any left the ground.—When we found that the rain continued, we resorted to a couple of small cabins, and proceeded with our duties. In these cabins we were so crowded that we were compelled to receive the communion standing, and to hold the elements in our hands, having no communion board but the births where our saddles and baggage were laid; yet the Lord granted us a sweet banquet with his lowly followers among the Creeks. Oh what will it be above! Had the weather favored, a much larger number of persons would no doubt have been present on the Sabbath, but as it was we had reason to thank God, and to go on our way rejoicing, for all the things the Lord has done to build up his own kingdom, and gather in many precious souls among this people. On Monday morning we left the Creek country with gladdened and revived spirits; and returning to Union, related at the monthly concert for prayer the encouraging things which we had witnessed.

GREECE.

Journal of Mr. King on the Island of Tenos.

The Island of Tenos is one of the Cyclades, opposite Syra, and in sight of the celebrated Delos. It has long been the favorite residence of the foreign Consuls for the Archipelago, and the manners and customs of the inhabitants of St. Nicholas, the principal town on the Island, are perhaps more European, than those of any other town in the Greek Islands. About one-third of the Greeks on the Island are connected with the church of Rome.

January 1, 1831. Most of this day I spent in paying and receiving visits, according to the custom of this country. Read with Mr. A. a dialogue in Greek, which his father had written and sent to me to examine, and, if I thought proper, to have it printed. It contains many good remarks, but, as a whole, did not appear to me to be quite according to the spirit of the gospel. Indeed it can hardly be expected, that one in this country should write in a truly evangelical manner.

When on a visit to the Austrian consul, I met with a Latin priest, and conversed with him on the New-Testament, which I distributed. In reference to it he remarked, that the pope must be obeyed. I replied, that neither the pope, nor any other man under heaven, had a right to prohibit the distribution of the sacred scriptures, and that the common people ought to read it. In answer to this he said, they did not understand it. Why then, said I, do you read it to them in the church, if they do not understand what is read? And if they do understand it in the church then they can understand it in their houses. He then said that, in order to understand it, it was necessary to read the Fathers.

2. Sabbath. I expounded in my school the 14th chapter of St. Paul's epistle to the Romans.

6. As this was the Christmas of the Greeks, I was obliged to make several visits. The population of this place consisting of Greeks and Roman Catholics, have a double portion of Christmases and New-Year's days. Among others, I called on Mr. B., who said he had been to pay his respects to the Greek bishop, and that the bishop told him that the sixth trumpet of the Apocalypse is about to be sounded—that all Europe is to be thrown into a state of war—and that next March, all the Roman Catholics, and all Lutherans and Calvinists, are to be destroyed. He is not, however, quite certain that this will happen next March; if not, it will take place four years after! The bishop supposes, as I am told, that all nations are soon to become Greek in their religion.

While Mr. King was at Athens, some time before this, a Greek named Sabbas, stole from him a considerable sum of money. The journal, describing the particulars of this event, was not transmitted to the Missionary Rooms, as Mr. King was not then connected with the Board. The leading facts are understood to be these. Two hundred and forty-five dollars were stolen—sixty dollars were recovered by Mr. King before he left Athens—the thief was apprehended—seventy-four dollars more were recovered—he was imprisoned in a tower, from a window of which, nearly fifty feet from the ground, he precipitated himself with a view to destroying his life, but missed his aim. He was afterwards tried in one of the courts of the country, confessed his crime, and was pardoned at the request of Mr. King. The affair excited a great deal of interest among the Greeks, & Mr. King has transmitted his correspondence with the provincial government on the subject. Livadia is the name of a province in continental Greece.

13. Received Letters from the government of Livadia, and from Mr. Lambros Nakos, of which the following is a translation.

"The Government of Livadia, Talanti, Mendanitza, &c. to the most noble Philhellene, Jonas King.

"The Government duly received your much esteemed letter, dated 14—26 October, 1830. In answer to it, is forwarded to you the enclosed bill of food, healing, and of the court expenses, which were incurred by Sabbas Demetrius, falsely called Ulysses, which amount to 103 phœnixes and 15 paras, which, taken from the 444, to which the $74, found with the above mentioned Sabbas, amounted, leaves in the hands of government 340 phœnixes 85 paras.* You are requested, most noble Sir, to give orders explicitely where the government shall send this money, notwithstanding you had ordered it to be sent to the teacher of the American school at Syra, or to the editor of the Greek newspaper, because it is not easy to send it there directly. You are requested to have an understanding with some one, that it may be sent to you immediately.

"The kind sympathy, most noble Sir, of your soul toward the young man who had turned from the right way of virtue, gives occasion to the government, and to all sensible Greeks, to praise and admire the greatness of your soul. This young man, who abused the benevolence and confidence of civilized men, brings this present letter to you, who, if he has escaped the laws of Greece, for this owes unnumbered thanks to your philanthropic and excellent sympathetic soul.

Livadia, Dec. 6, 1830.

Joannes Mamounes, Governor."

In reference to this letter, I must remark, that he had previously written to me, to know what I wished with regard to the thief, where to have him sent, &c., and how he should send the money to me. In answer, I said, that as to the thief, if he recovered, my desire was that he should be set at liberty; and as to the money, if there had been any expense incurred which belonged to me to pay, I wished him to take it from the $74 found with the thief, and to send the rest to me, to the care of Doct. Korck of Syra, or to Mr. Chrysides, editor of the Greek newspaper at Ægina. In consequence of this, he sent me the above mentioned letter, together with the following singular bill of expenses.

"Account of the expenses, which were incurred for Sabbas, and taken from the money which he stole, by the police of Livadia.

	Phœnixes.
When he fell from the tower, physician, medicine, and food,	24 00
Hire of a beast, when he was sent to court in Salona,	5 00
Expenses in Salona, which the court was at for his healing and his food,	44 05
Expenses of the court,	18 40
Hire of a beast for his return after he was freed,	6 00
What was given to him for his food,	5 70
	103 15

There remain, therefore, 340 phœnixes and 85 paras.

Livadia, Dec. 5, 1830.

Joannes Mamounes."

I could not have supposed it belonged to me to pay the above bill of expenses; and all the Greeks to whom I have shown it, think it very strange that such a bill should have been sent.

The letter from Mr. Lambros Nakos was as follows:

"My Venerable Father—With gratitude I received the books you sent me. I rejoiced greatly that you were in good health, and that you had me in remembrance. With regard to the unhappy man, I wrote to you before. He is now coming to you to seek forgiveness of his crime. Sir, you are an apostolic preacher of the holy gospel. Be long-suffering. Have pity upon one who returns repenting of his wickedness. Rejoice that he was not killed in his terrible resolution, and that Jesus Christ did not permit him to become a murderer [of himself,] and you to have your conscience troubled. Your philanthropy towards him is glorious, and your care a high virtue. I remain, with the deepest veneration, your friend and servant, Lambros Nakos.

Livadia, Dec. 6, 1830."

The books which he mentioned having received, were a few copies of my Farewell Letter, which I sent to him at his particular request.

Conversed to-day with S., a young man whom I employ as teacher of the grammar class in my school, on the use of the word Theotokos, (Mother of God,) and showed him some of the passages in the New-Testament, which speak of the brethren and sisters of Christ, and endeavored to show him the impropriety of praying to the Virgin Mary and saints. He seemed to be in part convinced of the truth of what I said.

14. In the evening several persons came by invitation to take tea with the American party; that is, Messrs. Robertson, Hill and myself. In showing to Mrs. M. and B. the pictures in Mr. Hill's bible, I took occasion to make some remarks upon what I thought to be the proper use of pictures, and spoke against the attempts to make an image, or picture of the Almighty, and told them that we considered it a great sin. Mrs. M. in reply said, she could not see why it was a sin, as "man was made in the image of God." This led to further conversation on the subject, in which Mrs. B. advocated my cause. At the table grace was said in Greek, and towards the close of the evening, Mr. Hill and myself sung "Guide me, O thou great Jehovah."

15. Priest Gerasimus called in the morning, and said he had come to bring me joyful and important news; that there was a revolution at Rome, and that it was thought the pope would have no successor. It is customary here, when one is the bearer to another of joyful news, (if the bearer be a servant,) to receive a present; and priest Gerasimus said, that for bringing this news I must make him a present of a Septuagint. But unhappily I have as yet been unable to procure a single copy of it for distribution. I have written to the British and Foreign Bible Society, but cannot obtain it.

16. Sabbath. Expounded the Scriptures, as usual, in my school.

19. Was the feast of the President Capo d'Istrias, or of his arrival in Greece; and we were all invited by the governor to spend the evening at his house. As Mr. Robertson was unwell, Mr. Hill and myself only attended. There were present perhaps two hundred people. All, with whom I conversed, seemed very pleasant and polite, even those who had been most opposed to my school.

23. Sabbath. Expounded in my school the last chapter of the epistle to the Romans. In the morning, was a little disturbed by the firing of guns and a wedding procession. The people who attended, had afterwards a ball. They seem to have no idea of the holiness of the Lord's day.

Heard to-day that measures had been taken by the bishop of Smyrna, to prevent the Greeks there from buying and selling on the Lord's day.

25. Received a letter from Professor Bambo of Corfu, of which the following is a translation.

"Reverend Sir—I received your letter with brotherly joy, to which the friendship of those ever-memorable friends of mine, Fisk and Parsons, whose names I read in your letter with brokenness of soul, added not a little. Untimely death, (I speak as a man) snatched them both from the midst of their sacred labors. How much would they have done for the present renovation of Greece! But as it seemed good unto the Lord, so it was.

"I rejoice at the establishment of your school, not doubting that your pupils improve morally and spiritually under your fatherly instruction.—Glory to the divine goodness! Greece is free; and from America there are in Greece supporters and teachers of Grecian females, and Greek youths are taught in America! It seems that fore-ordained, great epoch is approaching, when there shall be one fold and one shepherd.

"I regret that you have so long waited for the first part of my grammar, without my knowing it. As soon as I received your letter, I prepared twelve copies of it, adding also two of the Moral Philosophy, which I send to Syra to the care of the Rev. Mr. Korck, by the ship Penelope, bearing the Russian flag. The name of the captain is George Kolas. The price of the grammars is three shillings each—the same they sell at here. But the two books of Moral Philosophy, I beg you will accept as a token of brotherly love, the one for yourself, the other for the Rev. Mr. Korck. If you think this work on moral philosophy (the second part of which appears so to me) useful for children, as I have a few copies of it by me, you can write to me that I may send to you.—The price of these is two shillings each.

"May you have health, and be rendered successful of the Lord. May we soon have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance.—Your friend,

N. BAMBAS.

Corfu, Dec. 27, 1830."

In the evening received the Greek newspaper, No. 102, in the following notice with regard to my school.

"Nauplion, Dec. 30, 1830.—For some time past, the philanthropic Americans, Messrs. Korck† and King, have devoted their attention to the establishment of schools for girls in the islands of Syra and Tenos.

"The one in the last mentioned Island, under the direction of Mr. King, has at present 64 scholars, who are taught grammar, arithmetic, the catechism, the gospel, and the art of writing. From the commencement of this school, 12 girls have learned by heart the gospel according to Matthew, and some others both the epistles of Paul to Timothy, the epistle to the Romans, and also the epistle of John.

"With pleasure we make known the progress of female schools, because from them will go out mothers, worthy to lay the first foundations of good instruction for the tender scions of our country."

It must be observed, that the paper in which this article appeared, is under the immediate direction of government, and that it is under the inspection of a censor appointed by government.

Received to-day a letter from the Rev. Mr. Lowndes, also of Corfu, dated January 3d, in which he states, that the translation of the Old Testament into Modern Greek is going on; that they have finished the Psalms, and are now at the 43d chapter of Genesis; and that they have at Corfu four female schools, in which more than two hundred girls are regularly instructed.

28. Mrs. Hill and my wife commenced teaching needle-work in my school. This had been taught some months previously by my wife, and left off on account of illness. Mrs. Hill also gives lessons in English to the teacher and a few of the scholars, who have expressed a desire to learn our language.

To-day the assistant teacher informed me, that one of the daughters of Mr. Gandades, had expressed a wish to return to my school, in case I would permit her so to do, and I of course gave my permission.

30. Sabbath. Expounded in my school the 1st chapter of the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians.

Feb. 1 and 2. Read in Bambas' "Principles of Moral Philosophy," and think it would be a useful book in scoools. Have found but little in it, to which I should feel disposed to object.

7. In the evening went with my wife to Mr. Heaios' to take tea, with Prince Mavrocordato and his wife and several others. About fifty persons were present, and it was one of the most agreeable companies I have ever visited in Tenos.

12. The most of this week was spent in reading, Greek, the different works of Komita. His epitome of Ecclesiastical History, taken from Meletius, is very good, so far as I am able to judge from a hasty perusal of it. The whole work of Komita is printed in sixteen volumes.—The first three volumes and the Ecclesiastical History are the best part of the work. In his Chresoedeia are some remarks on good manners which might be useful to put into the hands of children. (To be continued.)

*Doct. Korck was regarded as an American because he was at the head of the school at Syra called the "American school."—Ed.

REVIVAL IN CEYLON.

Extracts of a Letter from Rev. Miron Winslow, Missionary in Ceylon to a young gentleman in this city, dated Oodooville, Jaffna, Jan. 3, 1831.

MY DEAR ——,

I wrote you a few days since a hasty letter, giving some account of a pleasing revival of the work of the Lord in the midst of us, and I have the happiness of informing you now, that we have reason to think that the operations of the blessed Spirit are still manifest at our different stations. We do not see that breaking forth on the right hand and on the left, which we could desire, but there is an evident progress of the truth, and in many individual cases the triumphs of the Gospel are manifest. As yet the work is principally confined to the children and youth in our boarding establishments and Native Free Schools, and the schoolmasters and others connected with our stations. Some in no way connected with us, have however, been more or less affected; and some we hope, convinced of sin. Attention on our meetings, at evenings and at other seasons besides the Sabbath, in our villages and at our stations, has become better.–Some meetings have been very solemn. A fortnight since, a general meeting of all those who appear to be under special concern of mind, was held at one of our stations. Including a few church members, there were about 300 persons present, of whom perhaps one-half may be considered as real inquirers. Indeed, as many as half the number expressed a determination to forsake all for Christ, and tho' persecuted, to follow him. Several of them expressed their hope in Christ, but whether any considerable number are as yet converted, remains doubtful. We have had prayer meeting of church members and inquirers, at some of our stations, which have been much like conference of free discussion and prayer—as held in times of revival in America. A meeting of this kind between the members at this station and Manepy, held alternately at each has been peculiarly interesting. In some instances there has been great fervor of intercession in prayer, and humble confessions of deficiences and sins, with weeping and bitter repentance. I have seldom in any meetings been more convinced of the actual presence of the Holy Spirit [illegible] and it is so unusual to see the natives here, who are to a proverb, indolent and unimpassioned, earnestly engaged in spiritual things, and almost borne down with intense feeling, that the sight is peculiarly affecting and encouraging. Perhaps there is reason to fear, that just at present there is not much progress in the work, and that it may be at a stand. We hope however, that it may spread even into the villages round about us, and especially among the children of the native Free Schools.

LETTER FROM SMYRNA.

Smyrna, June 1, 1831.

To the Editor of the New-York Observer.

Gentlemen—Vessels arriving in America about the time this reaches you, will probably bring some alarming accounts respecting the plague. To quiet the apprehensions of friends, I am happy to say that for two days no new case has been reported, and by many it is even doubted, whether any genuine instance has actually occurred. Our schools, which have been wholly suspended for a week, will we trust be shortly resumed.

It gives us pleasure also to inform you of the safe arrival of Messrs. Smith and Dwight at Constantinople, after a year's absence in Armenia and Persia. Mr. Goodell, with his wife and family, are now here, on their way to Constantinople. Miss Reynolds, our Missionary associate, who has been suffering from ill health for some time past, but is now better, accompanies them, to try the effect of a change of air.

Our hearts are greatly rejoiced by the glad tidings which reach us from so many parts of our country, of the precious seasons of refreshing churches are permitted to enjoy. Oh! when it is well with them, will they not intercede for these dry and thirsty lands, which, since the early days of Pentecost, have been as the heath in the desert, that seeth not when good cometh!

REVIVALS.

While we place great reliance upon, and expect great things from, well conducted protracted meetings, we think that the cautions in the following article well timed and judicious, and recommend them to the especial attention of the Clergy and Laity in this quarter who have assisted at those meetings and who are particularly looked up to by the churches for their advice with respect to them. We say read the following attentively.

FAULTS AT PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

We do not mean faults peculiar to these meetings, but faults which we have observed during our attendance on a few of them, and which have struck us as worthy of being laid aside.

1. Confidence in the meeting, the ministers, the efforts;—instead of confidence in God. This must be broken down, before a blessing is granted. Sometimes the failure of ministers to attend, and sometimes the evident inefficiency of self-confident labors, and sometimes other considerations, answer this purpose.

2. Reliance upon plan, contrivance, adaptation &c instead of truth, as the means of success. This is as pernicious as the other, for truth is the only means of promoting holiness.

3. Having more confidence in our own talk than in the Spirit God. This shows itself in taking much and praying little.

4. The telling of stories which teach nothing. We know that "facts are subborn things,"—that "facts are powerful," and all that; but we know, too, that facts are absolutely worthless, except as they illustrate or enforce principles. Besides one half, perhaps, of the audience will not believe your facts to be facts, and you sink in their estimation by telling them. We believe that the "Swearer's Prayer" would be rendered more powerful, by leaving out the stories at the end of it.

5. Trying to make people weep. Some appear to think that weeping and piety are the same thing. Better try to make them understand. We doubt whether weeping is ever a good sign, except in some cases of actual penitence. Rum drinkers, when alarmed, are very apt to weep, but are very seldom truly converted.

6. Talking about the amount of feeling, the glorious season, and this interesting age, and all that class of subjects,—the consideration of which never led any body to repentance, and from the very nature of the case, never can. If you wish people to repent, talk of things which are unseen and eternal.

7. Directing the mind to transactions which are to take place during the meeting. This may not always be amiss; but we once heard the expected transactions of to-morrow alluded to, in a way which gave sinners leave not to repent to day. Besides, it is sometimes like the lawyer's telling the jury, "Now I am coming to the pathetic." And besides, how do you know what shall be on the morrow! Are you not dependent on divine influence?

8. Thinking that such a man must preach, because he is present, and will think himself neglected, if we do not invite him. If he is not willing to take the place he is most fit for, he is not fit to preach.

9. Preaching on a text "by way of accommodation." If you cannot find a text which exactly answers your purpose, it is because you are not familiar with your Bible, or because your purpose is unscriptural. "Spiritualizing," as some call it, may sometimes edify believers, but will never do any thing towards convincing gainsayers. They must have a plain, direct, literal, "thus saith the Lord," or they will not regard it.

We have noticed other faults; but enough for once.—Vt. Chron.

From the New-Hampshire Observer.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.—Hanover. A friend of ours directly from College, gives us the following information.

A revival has been progressing in Hanover for some weeks since. It commenced at a protracted meeting held in the first Congregational Church the last of June. Since that time, about 50, among whom are several of the students of the college, have indulged the hope that they have passed from death unto life. The second congregational church and society, are experiencing a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The precise number of conversions is not exactly ascertained; but probably, about 30 or 40 have expressed a hope in the pardoning mercy of God. The baptist society has also been visited with the outpouring of the Spirit. A protracted meeting was held by this church about the first of June, since which time, 15 or 20, have been made the subjects of renewing grace.'

At Lebanon, a protracted meeting commenced on the 9th inst: and continued four days.—The collection of people was very large; divine truth was exhibited in a forcible and plain manner, and we trust was applied by the Holy Spirit to the consciences of many sinners. At the close of the meeting about 300 persons repaired to a neigboring house to receive the instruction and attend the prayers of ministers, thereby manifesting that they were determined to seek the salvation of their souls without delay.

The extracts are from a letter addressed by a clergyman in the western part of this state, to a gentleman in this town, dated, 19th August, 1831:

[illegible] and now. I had endeavored to rouse the slumbering faith of the church to ardent prayer and supplication. And although I expected the blessing of God to follow, yet I feared the eyes of so many in the church were directed to a "Camp Meetnig" as the only means of a revival, that nothing could be done. Last Sabbath was appointed as the day for communion. Meeting commenced the Friday previous, in the church. Never before have such crowds flocked to the sanctuary of the living God. It was a time of deepest interest and most intense, and I trust believing prayer, a "day of the right hand of the Most High." Before the meeting closed, the number of hopeful conversions was between fifty-five and sixty;—of these forty-two have joined our church. Eight or ten belonging to other congregations in the neighborhood, were refered to their own sessions. The others who entetain a hope, have not been before the session as yet. How many are under serious impressions we cannot tell; but the number is very great."

THE TREE IS KNOWN BY ITS FRUITS.

On the last Sabbath a number more were added to the churches in this city, and commemorated for the first time, the death of Him who hath redeemed them from the world, and as they hope from sin and death.

In a time of general excitement like the one we have enjoyed since the four days' meeting in this city, it would not be strange if the elevated feelings of christians should have led them to anticipate more than they had a right to expect.—There is always some seed that falls by the way side which is devoured by the fowls of the air, and some that falls in stony places or where the soil only just covers the rock, which springs up quick, and then withereth away because it does not take deep root. And much is usually choked by the cares of the world; and besides these are tares which look green and flourishing, which cannot be distinguished from the wheat till the time of bearing fruit. Notwithstanding all these sources of failure and disappointment may be expected, yet we believe they are less frequent in times of revival than in ordinary seasons. At any rate, this shower of divine mercy, which lasted but for a few days has brought forth a more abundant harvest than any ten years of ordinary cultivation.

The following statement will show some of the fruits of the revival in this city. Since the first of April there have been added

To the Church in Yale College 69; several have united with other Churches, making the number about	80
To the Church under the care of the Rev. Mr. Bacon	98
To the Church under the care of the Rev. Mr. Merwin	125
To the Church under the care of the Rev. Mr. Boardman	134
To the Episcopal Church, by Confirmation, last week	141
To the Methodist Society about	175
To the Baptist Church	46
To the African Church	20
To the Church in Fair Haven, under the care of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell	37
Total	856

If we add to the above statement a number of young ladies in the several female seminaries, & the lads in the Messrs. Dwight's Gymnasium & some of the students in College, who may have preferred to unite with the churches where their parents reside; together with a large class who are hoping that they are christians, but who prefer to wait, in the neglect of duty, till they are more fit to come, the number will probably amount to at least 1000, which exceeds the largest calculations that have been made. But it is the Lord's work and to him be all the glory.

Thirty-four were added, on the last Sabbath, to the Church under the care of Rev. Mr. Stebbins, in West Haven, (a small parish about three miles from this city, and formerly a part of New Haven.)

In North Milford about forty were added on the last Sabbath to the Congregational Church over which the Rev. Mr. Parsons is settled. It is expected that from 40 to 60 more fruits of the revival will follow their example.

An interesting state of revival has been enjoyed in Woodbridge, Amity Society, ever since the four days' meeting in that place.

The four days' meeting at Cheshire, which was notified in our paper a short time since, was held during the last week. The same results that have usually attended these extraordinary means, have followed. God has owned and blessed his word. Sinners have been pricked in the heart, as on the day of pentecost. More than a hundred, it is said, tarried on the last day, to inquire what they must do to be saved; and a number are rejoicing that they have found Him who is the way, the truth, and the life.

A friend from Massachusetts informs us that a great and glorious work is going on in Plainfield, Ashfield, Hawley, and several of the neighboring towns.—Rel. Intell.

INTERESTING CASE.

Revival in Jefferson Ashtabula Co. Ohio.

"One individual who now sits at the feet of the Saviour, came into this place about three years ago, and soon established a character for almost every thing that could be desirable in one man; but he was wrong in one thing—he was a Deist. His prudence and apparent candor were such that his coming was not viewed with much alarm, (this was the first entrance of infidelity here,) except by such as could see far enough to know that he was far more dangerous than a more boisterous foe;—but all that was feared by any one had begun to exhibit itself. The poison had begun to spread, and the minds of our youth appeared to be the medium through which it was to circulate. But God who is rich in mercy did hear and answer prayer. This man was brought some weeks before our six-days meeting, to resolve within himself that 'if there was any truth in the Religion of Jesus Christ, he would know it.' He says he exerted every faculty of his mind to place his own system in such a situation that he should have no partiality for it,—or that his attachment to it should not have the least effect in turning him from the conviction of truth. He resolved, (and without doubt lived up to the resolution,) that he would attend all the morning and other religious meetings. This he was probably induced to do the more heartily, from the fact that some of the effects of conversion on those who came within his observation, appeared to be unaccountable to him;—and from the stillness and regularity of all meetings, he could lay nothing to the charge of fanaticism. About the commencement of our six-days meeting, he began to pray God to lead him in the way of truth. We thought from his apperance during the meeting, that there was a change in his mind. Yet he says there was; none—and that he all the while thought his former system would prove triumphant, until the day after the close of the meeting—when, as he was alone, he says there was a sensation which appeared to him like the trembling and falling of a mountain, under which he seemed for a moment to lie prostrate. His next reflection was interrogatory—'Where am I?'—and the answer appeared to be at hand, viz., 'In the hands of God.' He saw and believed that 'Jesus was the Christ, and 'his Savior.'"

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1831.

DIVISIONS IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

We give this week the Circular of the minority in the General Assembly, touching the grievances & stating the grounds of their dissatisfaction with the majority of that body. It is mortifying, to be compelled to acknowledge the existence of a division of such serious import, and one which portends so much evil in its consequences to the Church of Christ. We should not now become the herald of the fact that such a schism exists, but from a sense of duty—It is in vain to attempt concealment, and the Presbyterian Church ought to be put in possession of the charges, brought by the friends of the Assembly's Board of Missions and the Board of Education, against their brethren, that if they are well founded, justice may be done, and if not, that the Presbyterian Church may act understandingly, and be prepared to resist the measures proposed by Dr. Green and his associates.

Among the many subjects of special prayer proposed, we know of no one more worthy the consideration, of its members than that for the harmony and peace of the Presbyterian Church the present time.

We hope that this subject may not excite angry discussion and unchristian recrimination. No good to the cause of truth can grow out of it.—We do hope that our friends in this quarter, will not be disposed to load our columns with this business at present—If they must write, let it be short, to the point, wholly avoiding personalities.

We have seen, and our readers have seen, with how much readiness our brethren can wield the pen when a controverted subject is brought up, although we may not receive a line from them on the more important subjects, relating to the interest of the soul, the conversion of sinners and the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom, in the course of the year.

Is it not strange that we should be so much more ready to gird on the armor to war with our brethren than with the common enemy?

A division in the church, is certainly to be deprecated by its friends, but the train is now laid, which unless christian caution is used, will take fire and explode—the consequences of which cannot be fully forseen, but which must prove very injurious, especially at a time when God is pouring out his spirit, and the attention of the community is extensively turned to the concerns of the soul.

We shall from time to time, publish such articles as may appear on this subject, that our readers may be so informed as to be able to judge and act understandingly.

Dr. Ely, in publishing this Circular, in the Philadelphian makes the following remarks.

"We can no longer deny that there is a Party in the Presbyterian Church, organized after the fashion of a political faction. We publish the following Warlike Manifesto for the information of all concerned; and if we must have battle, we are glad that we may enter the field in full possession of the plan of our fraternal foes."

TWO MORE FASHIONABLE MURDERS.

We learn from a St. Louis Paper that, owing to some political difficulties between Maj. Biddle and a judge Pettis, the latter challenged the former; and the Major being near sighted, chose the distance of five feet at which to shoot. At the first fire they both fell mortally wounded, and expired not long after. When on the ground Maj. Biddle called God to witness that he harbored no animosity against Pettis. This we presume, is adduced as evidence of honorable conduct and a great mind, and of course that he was less guilty than if he had placed himself as a mark for a man against whom he was at enmity—less guilty in killing, and being killed, by a friend than an enemy!! But such is the morality of duellists.—Does the religion of Christ make men less patriotic or less ready to defend their country in the hour of peril, or less courageous when danger threatens? Does it ever lead men to throw away their lives and deprive themselves and their country of their services, to settle some private pique, or adjust a private quarrel? Had these men possessed the spirit of Christ they would have waited until God in his providence should have summoned them to an honorable grave instead of sending eachother to his bar with the guilt of murder upon his Soul.

When the Millennium shall have been ushered in, duelling we apprehend, will be quite out of fashion.

"A friend lately from Louisville, Ky. states, that such is the political animosity, that editors of papers and other warm politicians go armed with loaded pistols, dirks, knives, sword canes, &c.—They perhaps go on the principle "in time of peace, prepare for war!"—Roch. Dai. Adv.

This Pistol, Dirk & Knife business, does not speak very favorably of the state of public morals in the Valley of the Mississippi.—Where is the strong arm of the Civil Authority? Paralyzed by public sentiment—for laws however wholesome and just, cannot be executed any farther than public sentiment will approve of their execution.—This state of things affords an additional inducement to the friends of Sabbath Schools to renewed & vigorous exertion to hasten the establishment of schools in that great valley from whence we daily hear of duels and assassinations which nothing can correct but raising the standard of morality.–Place it where the Bible places it, and we will venture to assert that Pistols, Swords & Dirks will greatly depreciate in value, and human life will not be held at so cheap a rate or on so uncertain a tenure. After all, nothing but the christian religion can give security to property or life—nothing else can control the passions or tame the civilized or uncivilized savage.

THE AFRICAN SENTINEL.

We have received a number of the "African Sentinel and Jouraal of Liberty," a weekly paper, in quarto form, published at Albany by Mr. John G. Stewart. It is sufficient to say of this paper, that it is an advocate for the emancipation of our colored population—is advocating the fundamental principles of our Constitution, that "all men are born free and equal"—We wish it success.

It will be recollected, that we published last Spring, an account of the noble conduct of a colored man by the name of Roberts in the City of New-York, in furnishing the poor with a quantity of wood gratis—being offered, but refusing pay for it. We also copied an article from the Journal of Commerce, stating that Roberts had disappeared, and that it was feared he had been murdered to obtain a sum of money which it was supposed he had accumulated and laid up from the fruits of his honest industry.

We now learn from the African Sentinel, that no information respecting him has yet been obtained; and that suspicions are strongthened, that he has been inhumanly murdered, and that, in consequence too, of the noble act of disinterestedness which we published.

We cannot but hope that the perpetrators of this deed of darkness, may be ferreted out and brought to the punishment which such horrid depravity and baseness so justly merits.

SPIRIT OF POPERY.

We ought, perhaps, to apologize to our readers for publishing the following effusions of Catholic spleen; but we believe upon the whole, that they will do good, as they show the spirit with which Papists attempt to defend themselves against the force of truth, and the kindly feelings and the forbearance and meekness which they exhibit when the Catholic Faith is made the subject of discussion.—These letters will explain themselves. The abuse with which they are interlarded, is no objection to our laying them before the public, so long as it is confined to the Editors of this paper—and we ought here to observe, that the letter to the Editor of the Daily Advertiser we should not publish had we not obtained their permission to do so.

To the Editor of the Observer:

SIR:—I see you have reprinted the statement of the "Daily" in reference to what was said in my pamphlet as to the Editors of that paper refusing to publish my letter to you, and have added some statements of your own which are totally destitute of truth. With regard to your statement that some Presbyterians offered to defray the expense of publishing the letter in handbills there is not one word of truth in it. If such offers were made they must have been made to me. To whom else could they be made? No such offer was ever made, nor should I have accepted of it. This is something like the other statements circulated through your paper about the Catholics;—pure invention. I ask for proof. With regard to the Editors of the Daily I have to state that when their paper came out containing the article you have quoted, I immediately wrote to them the inclosed letter, which they refused to publish because they say their statement is correct and mine not; nor did they even take notice that they had received such a letter. If what was contained in this letter was false and their statement true it would throw the odium on me and exonerate them; but it is the truth that galls these Editors; and it is their conviction of the impropriety of their conduct that prevents them publishing the statements of both parties. Their conduct shows conclusively the "malign influence" they are under. They say in their letter which I have printed in my pamphlet that "they "would willingly give an individual or society the "privilege of defending themselves when unjustly "aspersed"—and yet they immediately show the contrary; for, in this instance I am publicly accused in their paper of stating a falsehood, and when I reply, they not only refuse my letter a place in their paper, but take not the least notice of it. Is this fairness? Is this impartiality? They have not here the least ground for the old excuse of my letter being "indecently personal." It merely states facts and offers proof.

I hope you will not be so unjust as the Editors of the Daily have been, and that you will not refuse to publish my present letter and the one which I inclose.

If you have the least spark of justice in you, you will publish them both.

I am, your ob't serv't, JAMES BUCHAN.

To the Editors of the Daily Advertizer.

Instead of making out my statement to the public in reference to your refusing to publish my letter, to be a gross misrepresentation of what actually occurred, all that you have stated in your paper of to-day is on the contrary a direct corroboration of it. You have not denied that you agreed to publish my letter after two days consideration on the subject; you have not denied that it was put up in type, and a proof thrown off; you have not denied that afterwards you changed your mind and resolved not to publish it, but you have not told us in what manner or by whom you were so influenced to alter your resolution so suddenly and after so much trouble and expense. You cannot deny that you wrote me first one letter and then another on the subject, the first letter being written by your Mr. Tucker and the other by Mr. Porter, while I was present. In the one it was stated that my letter was "indecently personal" which you now say you considered "too harsh." If this means any thing it means that such was too harsh a term to apply to my letter, and that it could not be considered "indecently personal."—(a phrase, by the way, which you have borrowed from the Observer.) In the other letter Mr P. stated that my letter was not warranted by any previous publication. Both of these letters you destroyed and the next day sent me the one which I have published, which is different from the others, and states what is not true in point of fact.

You have not denied the fact of your being called on by several Presbyterians after my first notice was published in your paper, and threatened in the manner I have stated in my pamphlet. If you choose to deny this, I can bring forward proof.—Whether their threats had an effect upon you lie in your own breasts. But we must judge of people by their actions; and your refusing to publish my letter even as an advertisement, shows how you were influenced. Besides this real indication of the feelings of the Presbyterians here already alluded to, you well knew the spirit and the power of this party in Rochester, and being Presbyterians yourselves you were not likely to become martyrs to our cause by allowing the insertion of my letter in your paper. I would willingly therefore excuse you on this point, but there is no excuse for the article which you have inserted in your paper to-day in which you have the hardihood to charge me with grossly misrepresenting the matter, when you well know that every circumstance I have stated is substantially correct.

As to your statement that several presbyterians requested you to publish the letter, I have to state that this took place after the type was taken down and your new resolution announced; but that instead of several presbyterians doing so there was only one gentleman, (who appears to be more liberal than his brethren) who told you that he considered that it was your duty to have published the letter. I am, your most ob't serv't,

JAMES BUCHAN.

Rochester, 8 Sept. 1831.

We will not occupy much room in remarking upon the above—The denial of our assertion that some Presbyterians did offer to pay the expense of publishing Mr. Buchans letter in a handbill, comes just as near the truth as we should expect a man to come, who is so ready to charge falsehoods upon others—What epithet should be applied to Mr. B's. bold demand, may be understood when we say that the Editor of this paper offered to defray part of the expense; and another prominent and wealthy Presbyterian, offered to pay his proportion, and had not the notice that the whole would appear in pamphlet form, been given at the time it was, we have no doubt whatever, that its publication would have been effected, without any expense to Mr. Buchan, or his friends. To do this, it was not necessary to make any offer to, or have any communication with Mr. B. as the article in question was in type at the office of the Daily, and remained so for a week.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

As to the interference of Presbyterians to prevent the publication—When the Editor of the Daily Advertiser inserted the first article, which appeared as an advertisement, one gentleman and but one did object to its publication. Republicus called at the office of the Observer, when we declined publishing and strongly urged that we should reverse our decision—Other Presbyterians were very anxious that the rejected letter should appear in our columns, so that we, in fact felt ourselves as having acted in opposition to the wishes of our brethren.

Having conversed with one of the Editors of the Daily, we will barely remark in reference to their not noticing the above communication, that they did write a private letter to Mr. Buchan, in which they deny the truth of his statement in substance, as they had done in their paper.—This letter we have seen, as well as Mr. B's reply.

Our readers require any reason for our declining to insert any further communications from Mr. Buchan, they will see it abundantly in the above letters—The Merits of the controversy between Protestants and Catholics, they carefully avoid. They dare not, and will not attempt before an enlightened community, who have the Bible in their hands, come out in defence of their Creed. Their aim is to excite sympathy, by making it to be believed that they are persecuted. We repeat again, that if they will attempt to defend the tenets, or practices of their church by argument, our columns are open to them.

We would further observe, that we do not publish either of the above letters as an act of justice to Mr. Buchan or his friends. We do it because are we sensible that an enlightened community will know how to appreciate them; & therefore, we believe they will do good.

GENEVA LYCEUM.—We have rec'd the Circular of Rev. E. Lathrop, who has engaged as principal of this school—and shall notice it in our next paper.

PROTRACTED MEETING IN RICHMOND ONTARIO CO.

We have just heard from a gentleman residing in Richmond, the following facts respecting the Protracted Meeting which commenced there on the 1st inst. and closed on the 11th.

The excitement was very general—There are at least 100 hopeful conversions—These are from all classes, and of all ages; those now under conviction, are as numerous as at any time during the meeting—as our paper is already made up, we have no time for further particulars. We shall expect a detailed account at some future period.

For the Observer.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A THOROUGHLY EDUCATED MINISTRY.

Mr. Chapman:—I closed my last communication, on the importance of securing permanence of settlement to the ministry,—remarking, that education was required to do this.

My Fourth argument for thorough education in the ministry, arises from the great and growing demand for ministerial labor. In the Presbyterian Church alone, there are now near a thousand vacant congregations and perhaps, half as many more, might be at once formed within the bounds of our country, if ministers could be found to go forth and organize them. It is no doubt the case, that in proportion to the intelligence and pious efficiency of the ministry, will be the demand for its labors; that is, the ministry will be valued and sought for, in proportion to its intelligence and piety—and my argument is, that its number will increase, as the demand becomes more and more pressing. Not only so, but the number of ministers will be greatly increased or diminished by the spirit of ministers. As they become active, prominent, influential men, men sought for and valued by the community, (and I need not say that uneducated men as a general thing will not find this the case in respect to them) young men will be easily induced to turn their attention to the ministry—they will regard the profession not only as respectable, but as useful, securing a wide range of influence; for as I have said, influence, rightly directed, is usefulness. Let the spirit of the ministry be what it ought to be, and that spirit will increase the number of the ministry beyond any other human power whatever. Nor are unholy feelings appealed to in this case. I will illustrate what I mean. The men who have been sent abroad, as foreign Missionaries, have been well educated men;—men of enlarged minds; and what has been the result? They have carried influence; to the once despised cause of a missionary, they have given a dignity and a charm too;—they have opened the way for missionary exertion;—their success has rendered foreign and heathen lands, fields of promise as to influence and usefulness. The result is, that young men now feel, that they are not to be lost to the church and the world by engaging in missionary labors; and multitudes now stand ready to engage with all their hearts in this life of foreign exertion. What would have been the result if these pioneers in the missionary cause had been half educated and common men? They had secured comparatively a small amount of influence—the formidable difficulties of foreign languages had not so easily yielded before them—they could not, so like the apostle, have accommodated themselves to the manners and customs of Pagan nations—the Bible had not so soon and so extensively been translated into new and different dialects, and hence the grand amount of usefulness and influence had been vastly curtailed;—the churches at home had been discouraged and relaxed in action—the missionaries abroad had been disheartened and returned with reports like the men sent to spy out the land of promise;—Satan had triumphed over their defeat, and few if any had arisen to fill their places vacated by death and desertion. But now there is no want of men for missionaries. No difficulties of distance, nor deadly climates can intimidate and keep back the sons of the church. Here is opened a field of glorious warfare—consecrated by the piety, honored by the intelligence and enriched by the success of those endeared men who first explored it. I repeat it, there is no want of foreign Missionaries. Men now stand ready, qualified and anxious to go, and are only waiting for the church to send them.

So let any department of ministerial labor be shown to be respectable, influential and useful, and so long as there is piety in the church her sons will be pressing into it, in constantly increased numbers. But let there be an inactive, uneducated ministry, whom the people do not demand and will not employ, and the impression is at once given that the profession is crowded and few will look forward with confidence of employment and success if they enter the ministry. One unsuccessful minister will keep back [illegible] been burning and shining [illegible] while one elevated and successful champion of the cross will lead the way for a hundred to pant for his influence and to press upon his footsteps. Let us place the ministry where God, both in his ancient and new economy has placed it, pre-eminent in intelligence, influence, dignity and piety, and a few years would consecrate a tithe of all our men, if the world demanded it, to the service of the ministry. This is the way to increase our numbers.

As a fifth argument, I would remark, that while an increased number of ministers, is infinitely desirable, we should regard the character of the ministry as of still greater importance. As says a judicious writer, "it is not more additions to our numbers—a larger list of ministers of any sort that we need, but more ministers of the right stamp, men fitted by the union of holy zeal, sound wisdom and solid knowledge, to enlighten, counsel, guide and bless the church; and if they be essentially wanting in the qualifications necessary for this purpose, they had better be in any other profession than that of the holy ministry." "The truth is, if we had but half our present number of ministers, yet, if that half were all men of the primitive apostolic spirit, our beloved church and country would be far more richly blessed than they are at this hour." This single quotation will present all I wish to say on this point. He that gives one minister to the church well qualified, will on the whole give a greater amount of ministerial influence than he who gives ten of an ordinary character, and to say nothing as to the positive injury such men may do to the cause they labor to advance, no doubt the amount of positive good of one well qualified man will more than equal all that their combined agency will secure. Look at Paul, his influence was as extensive and his success as great as that of all the rest of the Apostles combined; and who will say, that his learning was not a powerful auxiliary in his labors? Let it be remembered, that it is ministerial influence that is wanted, not simply ministerial numbers, and that influence is by no means increased necessarily, as the number of ministers is augmented—the very contrary may be the fact, and it will be the fact, if the increase is not of the right character. Burden the church with a multitude of unqualified, inefficient, unsuccessful ministers, and the very incubus of death is on her bosom.

Let it be the prayer and effort of the church that we may have men like Paul, Luther, Knox, Edwards, Martin and Gordon Hall. The ranks of her ministry would soon be full. The sweet, clear and full sounds of the gospel trumpet would speedily be heard on all the hills and through all the valleys of our fallen world and the jubilee of its emancipation would be sung in more than prophetic raptures. Yours, &c. A. D. EDDY.

Sunday drowning.—On Sunday the 28th ult. fourteen persons were drowned in a boat, ferrying between Dartmouth and Halifax, N. S. The ferry boat had about 30 aboard, when it struck on a shoal; and the boat put off to their assistance, and took on board 10 of the number; more were about to go on board, but some of the crew being drunk, they were prevented. A squall arose, & only six were saved out of the large boat.

From the African Sentinel.

Rev. Nathaniel Paul, agent of the Wilberforce settlement in Canada, and formerly pastor of the African Baptist Church in this City, arrived here on Wednesday, the 10th inst. bringing with him letters of instruction, and other credentials, authorizing him to visit Great Britain, to solicit such aid as may be conducive to the prosperity and future welfare of that infant settlement. Mr. Paul's papers were signed by his Excellency, the Lieut. Governor. The information received by the above gentleman, was very gratifying, and it is to be hoped that the friends to that, and every other good cause, will assist him in his philanthropic exertions, so requisite to the immediate prosecution of his mission abroad. The state of affairs in the settlement, may be seen from the communication in this number, from the above place. Editors friendly to the above mentioned settlement, will please give the communication an insertion in their papers.

Wilberforce Settlement, U. C.

Mr. Editor:—It will no doubt, be gratifying to our friends who, in different parts of the State of New-York and elsewhere, have taken an interest in our welfare, and have aided us in effecting this infant settlement, to hear from us, to know how we are getting along: we therefore beg the favor of communicating to them, through the medium of your very useful paper, a short account of our affairs: through the blessing of God, we have all enjoyed our usual degree of health. We have erected for our accommodation, comfortable log buildings, and have a portion of our land in a state of cultivation; our crops at present continue to smile upon the labor of our hands; we shall raise the present year nearly enough to supply the present number of settlers. The people are industrious, and well pleased with their present location; and it is believed that none of them could be hired to go back to the states. Two religious societies have been organized, one of the Baptist, under the pastoral care of Elder Nathaniel Paul, and the other of the Methodist, under the care of Elder Enos Adams, and we are happy to add, that the utmost harmony exists between the two churches. A Sabbath School under the superintendance of Mr. Austin Steward, late of Rochester, is in successful operation; and a day school for the instruction of the children, is taught by a daughter of Eld. Benjamin Paul, late of the city of New-York; and in addition to which, a Temperance society has been formed, consisting of about thirty in number, and the voice of the people is decidedly against ardent spirits ever being introduced as an article of merchandise among us. There are, however, a number of families who have emigrated from the states, whose pecuniary circumstances will not admit of their coming at present to join us, but are compelled to take lands in the neighboring settlements, upon shares, and hundreds more in the states, are longing to join us, but on account of their limited means are not able to carry their designs into effect. We feel grateful for past favors, but will not the eye of the philanthropist be turned towards their condition, and his hand opened to supply their wants, that they may thereby be enabled to join their brethren to help forward one of the most noble enterprises that ever was started, to elevate the too long degraded African, this side the Atlantic!

The annual election of the Board of Managers, whose duty it is to appoint agents and take the oversight of the general concerns of the settlement, took place July 11, when the following persons were duly elected. Austin Steward, Benjamin Paul, Enos Adams, William Bell, Philip Harris, Abraham Dangerfield, and Simeon Wyatt. The newly elected Board, considering the limited means of the colored people generally, and the absolute necessity of pecuniary aid, in order to carry so desirable an object into effect, and to secure its permanent character, have re-appointed Mr. Israel Lewis as their agent to obtain collections in the states and the Rev. Nathaniel Paul, late of Albany, whose standing as a minister of the gospel, and whose devotedness to the cause of his colored brethren, is too well known to need any recommendation from us, to embark for England, for the same purpose. He will probably sail as soon as necessary [illegible] I had sent my reasons [illegible] upon me. His object was, he said, to inform me that I had made a misstatement in regard to the conversation that had before taken place between us. He did not complain of the missionaries coming out and publishing statements under their own names, but for making me the medium of communication to the public. They (the Guard) considered me a peaceable, passive, inoffensive and ignorant kind of a man, and as not possessing sufficient talent to write (as I understood him to say) the editorial articles which had appeared in the Phœnix. He intimated that the missionaries were the authors of those articles, and he blamed me for claiming them as mine. He requested me to make this correction, which I have now done according to my best understanding of his language.

After further conversation, in which he proposed several questions, I told him I wished to know, in order that I might not be guilty of misstating things, on what ground he had arrested me? He said, "for the firing of that gun." He took the opportunity, also, of repeating his former threat of flagellation. I observed to him that as to his threat I did not care any thing about it, he could execute it if he pleased. He replied to this effect, "Dont be short here—if you do I will mount you d——d quick." And again, "If you do," meaning I suppose that if I made any more misstatements, "I will send hell to you," or something like it. I inquired if he had now done with me. He said yes, and I returned. It is proper that I should here observe, that when I said I did not care about his threat, I meant that his threat should have no influence on my course as Editor of the Phœnix. THE EDITOR.

From the Richmond Compiler.

A letter from Southampton states that Nat Turner "is very improperly represented to be a Baptist preacher. I wish you to see the editors of your papers on this subject, and say to them, that that account, from the best information I can obtain, is an entire mistake. He never was a member of the Baptist or any other Church; he assumed that character of his own accord, and has been, for several years, one of those fanatical scoundrels, that pretended to be divinely inspired; of bad character, & never was countenanced, except by a few of his deluded black associates. To give this explanation, is an act of justice, to which I am sure they will readily accord."

Union Seminary, Sabbath, Sept. 4th, 1831.

DEAR SIR,—

It has become my duty to announce to you a most afflicting dispensation of Providence—DR. RICE is no more—He breathed his last at about 9 o'clock yesterday evening. His remains were interred this day.

Throughout a sickness of nearly nine months, Dr. Rice had, with various changes in external symptoms, been gradually and steadily declining. By an examination made at his own instance, several extensive strictures were discovered in the bowels, in which, no doubt, the disease originated, and which precluded the possibility of recovery.

The sickness of this servant of God was attended with great suffering. The disease itself and the highly nervous character which it put on, caused not only much bodily suffering, but great mental depression. Yet to the last, his mind was collected and perfectly itself. Saturday morning he revived from a death-like stupor, and sensible that the hand of death was upon him, he remarked that there were a few things which he wished to say. He then bid those who stood around his bed an affectionate farewell; commending his now deeply afflicted partner to the blessing & protection of heaven; & expressing with regard to all his friends, an undiminished affection. He spoke about fifteen minutes, and found himself unable to proceed farther. During the day, he said very little, and was evidently in great bodily suffering. This increased towards night.—At nine, rousing himself again, he said—"Mercy is triumphant."—The last word died upon his lips—He gasped for a few moments and expired.

Dr. Rice was born Nov. 28th, 1777. Not yet 54 years of age, there was room to hope that he would long be spared to labor on earth in the cause of his Lord and Master. But he who knows what is best, and who loves the Church better than we, had decided otherwise. Our part is to bow with submission to the Divine determination.

LONGEVITY.

DEATH OF NOAH SEAMAN.—This venerable man closed his earthly career on Monday, 11 o'clock, A. M. 18th July, at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr Richard Swain, in Jackson Co. Michigan Territory, aged 100 years and 4 weeks. He was born in Swansey, Bristol Co. Mass. and previous to his coming to this Territory, had resided in Berkshire Co. Mass. and Washington, Jefferson and Niagara Counties, N. Y. His manner of life was particularly temperate in all things: and up to his 97th year, his health was but little constitutionally impaired. At that time an attack of the ague made him considerably deaf, and in fact, his other infirmities seemed to have originated more from that, than exclusive old age. Until then; his memory was retentive, and even till a short time before his last illness, he referred to the prominent events that had fallen under his observation with much clearness. His eyes continued bright and animated, and his voice clear and distinct. Eleven months before his dissolution, in company with the family of his son-in-law, he emigrated to this Territory. He was much pleased with the idea of becoming in his advanced years one of the pioneers of improvement in the West. During his passage hither, a distance of near 500 miles, which he bore with uncommon ability, he greatly admired the novelties of improvement and the advancement of society. He lived truly an exemplary life,—the life of a Christian,—and died, no doubt, in the full hope of a blissful immortality. At the death of his wife, which happened six years since, aged 90 years, he said, "Life has no object now for me. Old age is not desirable. The sting of death is all I dread. Save that, I have nought to fear. And yet I am willing to wait the proper time of my dissolution."

His eldest brother died at Rehobeth, Mass. aged 104 years, and 7 months. Was a preacher of the gospel, and occupied the pulpit until he had completed his hundredth year.

From the Cherokee Phoenix.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

In the last number of the Cherokee Phoenix I stated that I was summoned before Col. Nelson, Commander of the Georgia Guard, from whom I received lectures in regard to my future conduct as Editor, and a threat of personal chastisement in case I should be guilty of publishing abusive and slanderous articles. It is proper that I should inform the reader of additional transactions of a like nature which have since transpired.

Yesterday morning three of the Guard came to my house unarmed, with a message from the Col. that I should walk up and see him before he left the place. I refused, and gave as my reason, that I did not feel myself bound to comply inasmuch as I was ignorant of his object. He had before sent a similar message, and it was only for the purpose of lecturing and threatening me. If his object was to repeat or execute that threat, a proper regard for my own honor and character must compel me to refuse. I stated furthermore that if he wished to have an interview with me on some friendly business, I should feel myself happy to comply, or if he could come down, I would be glad to see him at my house.

The Guard then left my house, but soon returned with four others, as I anticipated, all armed.—They came into my yard. One of them observed that it was the wish of the Col. that I should walk up. I said, "You then take me as a prisoner, Sir?"—"Yes Sir," was his reply. As I stepped out of the house the same gentleman asked, "Mr. Boudinot, who fired that gun?" I told him I did not know—I heard the report, but there was no gun about my house. They told me as they were walking from my house some person, as they believed shot at them, for the ball struck a tree near them. When we got to where the Col. was, he asked me who had fired that gun. I replied as before. He then said that if he thought any person had really fired at the Guard, he would keep me as an hostage until they could get the right man. I told him he could do as he pleased as to that, but if he did keep me he would certainly have an innocent man. He then ordered the men to release me.

After this he asked me why I did not come when [illegible]

"The Cholera Morbus has taken most dreadful hold of us here. From the 27th ult. to the 10th inst. there were 2850 cases, and during the last three days certainly not less than 560 to 600 daily with hardly a single cure: and the physicians are of opinion that it will go on increasing thro' the warm months. I made up my mind to quit the city and go down to Copenhagen; but now there will be no possibility of this. A cutter is cruising off Bornholm to prevent vessels coming nearer the shore than necessary, two Swedish brigs to prevent landing on their coast, and no one is allowed to go on shore at the Sound. The above date as to numbers attacked are from the official reports; and I have no idea that they comprehend all who have fallen victims to the disease; for many sick have wished to conceal the fact from the public authorities, fearing an interference of the Police. We have reason to fear that the vessels which arrive hereafter will be subject to great detention; for nearly 20,000 Russians, mostly laborers, have this week taken out their passes to leave the city; the working Russians at Constadt are so frightened that I should not, at any moment, be surprised to learn that they refused to labor on board the ships. It is dismal to walk through the streets which are comparatively deserted; the Imperial Family, the Cadets, and nearly all who are masters of their own movements, having left the city. Every individual whom one meets, looks anxious as if expecting that his turn would come next; we are unwilling to leave our houses without company."

THE ADELPHI.—We have just received the Adelphi, a quarto pamphlet,* the columns of which are principally occupied with original articles, furnished, we presume by the students of that institution. From it we select the following account of the late COMMENCEMENT.

WILLIAMS COLLEGE.

A Poem was also pronounced by Mr. Tutor Lasell, on Women, as exhibited [illegible] of an Individual mind.—The Oration before the Society of the Alumni was delivered by William Porter, Esq. of Lee.

At the close of the exercises the degree of A. B. was conferred upon 17 young gentlemen, Alumni of this College.

The degree of A. M. was conferred (in course) upon the following gentlemen, viz. Alonzo Clark, Moses A. Curtiss, Fordyce M. Hubbard, Charles G. Judd, Edward Lasell, Consider Parish, Joseph L. Partridge and Edmund B. Penniman.

The degree of M. D. was conferred, (in course) upon J. Blodgett, Stephen D. Hand, and Edward C. Hoxsey.

The Honorary degree of M. D. was conferred upon Asa G. Welch, of Lee, Henry D. Wright of New Lebanon, N. Y. Jonathan Dorr of Cambridge N. Y. and Abraham Allen of Salem, N. Y. Wm. Parker, Professor in the Berkshire Medical Institution, M. D. of Harvard, was admitted ad eundem.

The degree of D. D. was conferred upon the Rev. Mark Tucker, of Troy, N. Y.

The evening preceding Commencement the annual Oration before the Adelphic Union Society was delivered by the Hon. Daniel D. Barnard of Rochester, N. Y. We might say much in praise of this Address, but as he has consented to its publication, we advise our readers to peruse it and form their own opinion of its merits.

The prize declamations were heard on Tuesday evening. The prizes were awarded to Henry M. Parsons of the Freshman class—Lewis Allen of the Sophomore class, and Thomas Dutton of the Junior class.

On Wednesday evening a Sermon was preached in the College Chapel by the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, President of Amherst College.

The Rev. Dr. Sprague of Albany, N. Y. and Daniel N. Dewey, Esq. of Williamstown, were elected members of the Board of Trustees, and Mr. Fordyce M. Hubbard was appointed Tutor.

*We would just say to the gentleman who sent us the pamphlet, that by writing on the cover he subjected us to three shillings postage, or had we refused to take it from the office, and the Post Master here had returned it, as he would have done, to the Post Master at Williamstown, the writer would have been subjected to a fine of Five Dollars. We mention this for the information of all who would study economy in the article of postage.

SUICIDE!—The Auburn Free Press states that Miss Betsey Harris, a very respectable young woman of 22, fell down, while standing at a window, and instantly expired. She had eaten a hearty dinner, and it was the opinion of the surgeon, that her stays being tightly laced, prevented the blood from circulating, and the food from being properly digested.—The verdict of the jury was that she came to her death of apoplexy, caused by her stays being too tightly laced.

New-Orleans, Aug. 26.

It is stated in the Louisiana Advertiser of this morning, that a number of fisherman and their families amounting to no less than 150 persons had disappeared during the late gale at Barataria. The huts of these unfortunate people were all washed away, and the boats into which they had fled for safety in the storm, are no longer visible. It is much to be apprehended that every soul perished. The cane, it is said, has not suffered to the extent which was at first imagined.

CHOLERA AT ST. PETERSBURGH.

The Boston Daily Advertiser contains the following extract of a letter to a gentleman of that city, dated St. Petersburgh, July 13th.—

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

The accounts from Warsaw are one day later.

From the London Standard, Aug. 2. (evening.)

The accounts from Warsaw, by the Dutch steamer, to the 22d of July, state, that on the 17th the Russians had only completed half of the bridge at Nieszawa, and 4000 of them had passed over on that day. Owing to heavy rains which had fallen for several days, nothing decisive had taken place. It was reported that the Russians had abandoned the redoubts which they had raised at the head of the bridge, and retired to the right side of the Vistula. It was also stated that Gen. Colowin had repassed the Bug, and the remains of his corps were collecting at Biala.

The London Star of August 4th, (evening) says:

From Poland there is nothing new to-day, if we except some distorted accounts in the Berlin Gazette. These would make it appear, that while the Polish left wing is pursuing Rudiger southward, the right wing is inactive, and allowing Paskewitsch and his whole army to cross the Vistula, and march leisurely on Warsaw. We expect, however, that Skryznecki will first give a good account of Rudiger: and that he and the Warsovians will then dispose of Paskewitch, who, in his new position, is cut off from all intercourse with Russia.

The last direct accounts from Warsaw speak of his retiring from a contest which, under existing calamities, the Court of St. Petersburgh can no longer sustain.

Installation.—Aug. 24th, 1831, A. M., Rev. Amos P. Brown was installed Pastor of the 1st church in Sparta, by the Ontario Presbytery.—Introductory prayer by Rev. John Eastman, of York, Sermon, from 2 Cor. 2: 16. "Who is sufficient for these things," by Rev. John Barnard, Lima; Installing prayer by Rev. Silas C. Brown, of West Bloomfield; Charge to the Pastor by Rev. Jacob Hart, of Avon; Charge to the people by Rev. Norris Bull, of Geneseo; Concluding prayer, by Rev. John Walker, of Moscow.

In the evening of the same day, by the same, [illegible] Evangelist. Introductory prayer by Rev. Reuben Parmalee, of Victor; Sermon by Rev. Silas C. Brown, of W. Bloomfield, from Mat. xi: 20. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light. Ordaining prayer by Rev. Jacob Hart, of Avon; Charge to the Evangelist by Rev. James McMaster, of Mt. Morris; Concluding prayer by Rev. Jeremiah Stone, of Livonia.—Com.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fennick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist.

Mr. Skillman—In reading the address of S., "On Slavery," in your last Number, it brought forcibly to my mind, a circumstance that occurred with a relation of mine, many years ago. As they furnish a practical comment on the piece of S., I give you the facts, as detailed to me by the gentleman himself, a few days after they happened. If you think proper, you are at liberty to insert them in the Luminary.

ANECDOTE OF A MASTER & SLAVE.

In 1806, A. E. M., who had been born and educated in Virginia, settled in one of the frontier counties of Kentucky. His father held slaves; and he had been always used to the practice of associating with the term Slave, the true Virginia acceptation. Mr. M. purchased a negro man to assist (or rather attend to his little farm) for he was a Lawyer by profession, and knew very little about farming. And sometime about the last of July, the negro was directed by his master, to take his hoe, and go through the cornfield, and cut down the rank weeds and luxuriant sprouts, that had grown up there.—Jack took his hoe and went to his work; for he was really an excellent Slave. Some days after, his master taking a ramble through the cornfield, to see if the roasting ears were not fit to use, accidentally comes across Jack, not engaged in cutting weeds, but sitting at his ease between the extended roots of a large stump, with his head leaning on the top of the stump, and fast asleep. The day was very hot, and Jack had selected a stump, the tall sprouts of which formed a complete protection from the scorching rays of a meridian sun; where he was enjoying Nature's grand restorative, happy as a prince. His master at first felt provoked, and concluded that he would apply one of the sprouts that formed Jack's pleasant arbor, to a very different service. But as he had never before had occasion to even reprove Jack, he hesitated, and upon second thought concluded that as he appeared to be quite happy, it would be ungenerous to interrupt his enjoyment. He therefore took a seat on another stump, a few feet from the negro, and fell into a train of reflections on the relations between Master and Slave. This engaged him for an hour or more. He then got up, and returned to the house, leaving Jack to his repose. His wife inquired how Jack made progress in cutting weeds. He told his wife the circumstance of finding Jack asleep, and that he had left him happy as he had found him. She expressed some surprise, that he had not at least awoke him, and set him to his work. He then gave his wife the reasons for his (as she thought) extraordinary conduct. "I was at first disposed," said he, "to pull off one of the tall sprouts that formed Jack's pleasant shade, and give him a good whipping. I then concluded to set down, and rest myself, and let Jack indulge in his repose. While sitting musing on his happy countenance; I fell into a train of reflections on the subject of Master and Slave, as personified in Jack and myself, still feeling strongly inclined to flog Jack when he awoke. While musing on the subject, the rule laid down by the Saviour, occurred to my mind, "do unto all men," &c. I was obliged to decide, that I would not like to be interrupted in so happy a sleep, by the application of a sprout; and so I determined not to whip Jack. My next reflection was, how I came by the right to chastise my fellow man, for indulging in the embraces of balmy repose. Lyttleton, Coke, Blackstone, &c. were called in to aid my enquiry. None of my law authorities established my right—they all gave me power to chastise my slave, but I was searching for the right to do so. I found that my law authorities, would punish me for whipping my fellow-man who was free; but my slave I might chastise at pleasure. Why! Because he was my slave. My next enquiry was, how did Jack become deprived of his freedom. Oh! he was born a slave; that is, his mother was a slave when he was born. And here my law authorities left me. When at College, I had read and always admired the principles of our Government, as developed in our Declaration of Independence, and the first paragragh of that noble instrument stared me "flat O the face:" "All men are born free and equal." I blushed for my folly, denounced slavery as inconsistent with Law, Religion or Humanity, and left Jack to his repose. I have been compelled as a Lawyer to decide against Slavery, as a Philosopher to decide against it, as a Philanthropist to decide against it, and how can you who profess the Christian Religion help deciding against Slavery, when the golden rule of the Saviour so expressly forbids it? From this day Jack is free."

This man was then a disciple of Tom Paine, his wife a member of the Baptist church. The sequel is short. Jack was informed by his mistress of the whole transaction. He was greatly mortified at his own bad conduct; but he had a nobleness of mind that would not be outdone in generosity. He positively refused to part with his master, but determined never to go to sleep at his work again. He lived in the family about two years, and died. His master, in two or three years afterwards, died of the consumption, rejoicing in the hope of the gospel. His wife, I believe, is still living. L.

From the Epis. Recorder.

A FRIENDLY SALUTATION.—There is an article in the September number of the Protestant Episcopalian, extracted from the Canada Sentinel, in which the editor gives his readers a criticism upon the periodical publications of the Church in the U. States.

After awarding the palm very decidedly to our sister journal of this city, (to whose pages we are indebted for his remarks,) and speaking favorably of all the others that he has seen, he pays us the compliment to say, "the Philadelphia (now Episcopal) Recorder, ranks the lowest in our estimation, of any Church paper that we have seen." The reasons given for this opinion are, that we are not Episcopal enough, and are friendly to revivals. Referring to the latter, he speaks of our paper as being "Of these intemperate proceedings, a warm advocate and recorder." We notice the production, not for purposes of controversy, but merely because it gives us an appropriate opportunity of explaining our views in reference to the subject to which he has referred, and of making, at the same time, an editorial bow to our brother in the earth.

In reference to the former of his charges, we think that this Canada friend has done us less than justice. It is true that we have not carried our speculations on the subject of episcopacy so far as to unchurch Christians of other names, invalidate their ordinances, and consign them, as the Sentinel would in all kindness probably feel constrained to do, to the "uncovenanted mercies of God." This would be an especially hard and ungracious task for us, inasmuch as we should not be able to brighten the "blackness of darkness" with which all but our own denomination would be thus deplorably invested, without a single ray of hope emanating from the pages of the Bible, that there is in store for a fallen world any mercy but that which comes to it through a covenant of grace But although we may be to this extent delinquent, we think that all who have had an opportunity of reviewing our labors for several years past, will find that our attachment to the characteristic excellencies of our own church, is very frequently and affectionately presented; and that there is scarcely any journal in the country in whose columns the Episcopal intelligence of the day is more faithfully recorded than our own. Indeed it is the standing rule of our office to give to matter of this description the preference over all others; except when it comes in a form so cumbrous as to be better adapted to the purposes of a Monthly or Quarterly Magazine, than to those of a weekly newspaper. It is true, also, that we freely record the general operations of benevolence, in which Christians of all parties congenially unite; and have no objection even to give our patrons an occasional glimpse into the penetralia of other denominations, whenever we think that there is any thing passing within them that will afford either pleasure or instruction. This we do upon the principle that a man may be entirely faithful to his own family, and at the same time take a friendly interest in the prosperity of his neighbor; whose domestic economy and views of social obligation may be nevertheless very much at variance with his own. Besides, we do not think that it would be consonant with the wishes, any more than favorable to the spiritual improvement of our readers, to confine their attention to such events as are taking place within our own borders, however they may be to us invested with a peculiar and primary importance. The pages of a religious journal should, in our opinion, be a mirror, on whose varying surface all the important transactions of the Christian world appear with panoramic vividness and harmony; those of course assuming the most enlarged dimensions which transpire in the immediate vicinity of itself.

To the second count in this editorial indictment, we must honestly plead guilty; and confess that at such a tribunal as the one before which we have been arraigned, we have nothing to say why sentence should not be pronounced against us. We are friendly to Revivals. The objections which have often been so strenuously & eloquently urged to their disparagement, from the partial abuses to which they are exposed, have had no weight with us. We plainly perceived that the same reasoning would constrain us to burn our Bibles, and give Christianity to the winds; for Satan himself we know can quote Scripture, for purposes the most unhallowed: and the name of Christianity has often been employed to deluge the world in blood. We therefore pray for them in private, and freely advocate them before the public. We watch their progress with anxiety, and witness their triumphs with joy; and then gladly publish them to our readers, not doubting that they will participate in the pleasure which the theme affords. Nay, we confess that we are sometimes enthusiastic enough to give indulgence to the hope, that they are only the cheering prelibations of that general outpouring of the divine Spirit, which is destined to usher in the blessedness and glory of the millennial age.

We conclude this article with offering to our friend in Canada, a little fraternal counsel. We hope he will accept it in kindness at our hands, for it is kindly meant. It is in reference to those who are friendly to Revivals. It shall come to him in the words of Scripture; "And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsl or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.',

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.
Interesting illustration of John x. 3.

Last night my attention was directed to the words, "The sheep heareth his voice, and He calleth His own sheep by name."

Having been informed that it was usual in Greece to give names to the sheep, and that the sheep obeyed the shepherd when he called them, I had this morning an opportunity of verifying the truth of this remark. Passing by a flock of sheep, I asked the shepherd to call one of his sheep. He did so, and it instantly left its pasturage and companions, and ran up to the hand of the shepherd with a prompt obedience, and signs of pleasure that I had never before observed in any other animal. It is also true of the sheep of this country, that "a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of a stranger." The shepherd told me that many of his sheep are still wild, that they had not yet learned their names; but that by teaching, they would all learn them. The others, which knew their names, he called tame. How natural an application to the state of the human race does this description admit of! The good Shepherd laid down His life for His sheep; but many of them are still wild; they know not his voice. Others have learned to obey his call, and to follow Him; and we rejoice to think that even to those not yet in his fold the words are applicable. "Them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."—Extracted from the Journal of the Rev. John Hartley, during a tour among the Greek Islands, in 1828.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

If there were no other evidence yet given of the usefulness of these societies, the fact that a society of young men was formed in 1808, in Moreau and Northumberland, composed of forty three persons, and that not one of those is intemperate, would prove an unanswerable argument; especially when it is known, that one, if no more, was an intemperate man, according to the standard of temperance then observed.

Where is the society which numbered in its ranks forty-three men in 1808, that has no intemperate ones in their number, or who have not died from intemperance! We apprehend it would be a difficult matter to point out another, whether religious or not, that could begin with the name of man and count to forty-three alive at that day, whose number has not been broken by the foul spirit of intemperance.—What, then, can professors of religion be doing when they refuse to lend their influence to the cause of temperance, by witholding their names! Or is intemperance, in the estimation of such, necessary to induce them to become religious! or, do they delight in having cases of church discipline! for, be it observed, about three-fourths of these cases grow out of intemperance, and that, too, which commenced with 'taking a little.'

DEATH IN THE CUP.—We are informed that a man who was intoxicated, made a disturbance at the Methodist Chapel during the morning service, on Sunday last. At evening he died drunk! It would seem impossible for any language to enhance the horrors of such a terror-striking fact. A man is hurried out of life, in the midst of crime against Heaven, with the sentence flashing in his face, "Drunkards shall not inherit the Kingdom of God."

What responsibility have they, who retailed self-destruction to this man? Are they not accessory to self-murder? Are they not "partakers of other men's sins?" What should be thought of a man who could sell arsenic to one he knew designed to swallow it? Is there not a law prohibiting the sale of spirit on Sunday to any but travellers?—Canadian Watchman.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the S. S. Instructer.

THE BOY AND THE TRACT.

Some children love to read little tracts—those messengers of good, and are always glad when they are presented with any. There is a little boy, who was so pleased with one the other day, when the distributer carried them round, that nothing else, for a long while, employed his mind. He was so interested in it, that he would hardly answer the questions that were put to him, by his mother and sisters. He was as anxious to obtain this tract, as many children are to get play-things. And now, I would ask my little friends, if they can tell me, why he was so pleased! Most of you care nothing about religious tracts—perhaps when they are received into your houses, you never think of reading them, supposing they are designed for your parents, or older persons. But it is not so—they are for you to read as well as for your father and mother. They contain those truths, which, if obeyed and practiced, will make you happy here, and prepare you at last to dwell at the right hand of God. I can tell you, little readers, why this boy loved his tract so well: because he is a Christian. He loves God, he loves the Sabbath, and he loves the Bible and all good books.—Once, he cared as little about tracts as you—he would not read them. But a short time ago, he attended a prayer meeting—he heard some earnest prayers for himself, and he went away convinced that he was a sinner. He began that night to pray for a new heart, and he felt so unhappy, because he had sinned against a good and holy God, that he could not close his eyes in sleep all night. He asked his brother to pray with him, but still he felt no better—his load of sin was not removed. In the same anxious state of mind, obtaining but little rest, he continued for a few days, when he felt that his sins were forgiven, and that God had indeed given him a new heart. Now; if he had never been convinced that he was a sinner, that unless he repented of sin and loved the Saviour, he could not go to heaven, the little tract which he was so eager to get, would have been left at the house unnoticed by him; he would have cared as little about it as any of my impenitent readers. But, dear friends, is there not need of your becoming good? Do you not as much need a new heart and a right spirit? Are not your sins as great, and your hearts as hard as this little boy's! Then why will you longer refuse to pray!—why dislike to read your Bible and the little tracts' Your sins are as many, and your souls are as precious as his—then forsake them all, and come and be the children of the Lord—and when you die, you will be prepared to sit at the right hand of your Judge. ALFRED.

From the Same.

PARENT, ARE YOU READY!

Three of my scholars, in less than four months, have each been deprived of a parent by death. But there are associations connected with these dispensations of Providence, upon which it may be well to reflect. These parents were all intemperate—would profane the worthy name of God, abuse his word and break his holy day.—As heads of families, what an awful weight of responsibility rested upon them. But they taught not their children the fear of the Lord, but died as they lived, without God and without hope. The first who was called away from earth, was one who had from his youth been noted for his impiety. He was acquainted with all manner of sin, and never failed to cheat or purloin whenever an opportunity presented itself. He was a number of times cast into prison, but still continued in his evil practices till he was confined to the bed of death. Soon after his confinement, his reason departed, and in less than one week from the first day of his sickness, he was followed to the grave. But a few moments before he closed his eyes forever, he reached out his hand and grasped, as it were, the inebriate's cup—put it to his lips, and with a ghastly smile, leaned back on the pillow, and expired!

The second was one, who, but a little while ago, when the Spirit of the Lord was poured out in the neighborhood where she resided, was struck under pungent convictions of sin. But her habit of using ardent spirit was so strong, that she could not resist it. She grieved away the blessed Comforter, and clung to the fatal drug, till the destroyer came, sudden and unexpected, and hurried her iumortal spirit to the bar of that God, whom she had so often profaned, and whose invitation of mercy she had but so recently slighted.

The last of the three, was also intemperate and profane. Soon after her sickness commenced she was deprived of speech, and most of the time of reason. No change took place in her heart—but as she lived so she died.

Thus have three of my little scholars been afflicted—afflicted! ah, no—for better friends will they find, than those who gave them existence. For an intemperate parent is lost to all the finer feelings of the heart, and his soul is dead, comparatively, to the interests of his offspring. Although a child fondly clings around a father and a mother, yet it may be, that that father and that mother, are less worthy of the endearing name, than the brutes that perish.

If it were not for the Sabbath school, where, O, where could the children of such parents learn to fear God and keep his commandments! Who else would teach them the way of life, and point them to the Lamb of God! Ungodly parents, you cannot tell what were my feelings, as I have been instructing these poor and ignorant and more than orphan children. I knew they received no instruction at home—and that none cared for their souls. But as one and another of their parents have gone down to the tomb, in a solemn and awful manner, I have endeavored to improve the dispensation, and teach them the value of religion in preparing them for death.

As parents know not how soon they will be called to leave their children orphans in the world, how very important it is, that they should leave them in possession of that treasure, which nothing will corrupt, but which is as imperishible as the throne of God. Who knows but the next bell may toll its solemn notes for you! Reader, are you prepared to leave your children destitute of religion—without hope and without God in the world! Can you answer for your neglect of parental duty, at the bar of your Judge! If not, I pray you, lay these things to heart. And let it never be said, that you refused to train up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord—but by your unchristian example was the instrument of dragging them to perdition. Y.

ALWAYS RECOMMEND THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

"I'm going to the Sabbath school now—I'm going to the Sabbath school!" joyfully exclaimed a litte fellow, to whom I gave a small present, accompanied with a few recommendatory remarks in relation to the Sabbath school. His little eyes brightened, and his countenance bespoke the purpose of his heart, as he uttered these words. May not teachers often recommend the Sabbath school, to those poor children, that they may accidentally meet;—and in this way be of lasting benefit to some young immortals, who might otherwise be suffered to grow up in ignorance and sin! A teacher should be ready, at all times, and in every place, to recommend this humble institution, and invite the wandering lambs to this precious fold, into which if they enter, it may prove to their souls the entrance of eternal blessedness. Never suffer an opportunity to pass by, if there is the least expectation of doing good. For there are other duties devolving upon a Sabbath school teacher beside those which he owes to his own class.—He must labor to build up the whole school, and enlarge the number of scholars—and how can he better perform this duty, than by inviting from the highways and hedges, all those with whom he daily meets, to come in and learn the way to life everlasting. AMOS.

INTELLECTUAL INFLUENCE OF SABBATH SCHOOLS

If the influence which these schools exert, were confined to the habits of study which they tend to produce, and the increased information obtained by attendance; they would be worthy the cordial support of every friend of the rising generation. In confirmation of this remark, we have the pleasure of laying before our readers the following extract of a letter from the General Agent to a member of the Board of the Maine Sabbath School Union.—S. S. Instructer.

After I had finished my address to the people in ——two gentlemen made a statement of facts, which confirmed what I had been saying and strikingly exhibited the intellectual influence of Sabbath schools.

One of these gentlemen was an agent for a district school in that town. He said, "Two years ago, the young lady who taught our school set up a Sabbath school, and continued it two months. This spring, a man in that district, who is not pious, and seldom attends meeting on the Sabbath, came to me and wanted I should obtain a teacher, who would keep a Sabbath school too, for, said he, my children learnt more in the Sabbath school, the two months which it kept two years ago than they did in the day school, during the same length of time, and, to use his expressions, these children, who attended the Sabbath school outstripped those who did not attend."

The other gentleman, said, "a Sabbath school was kept five or six Sabbaths in the district where I lived. Since then, a gentleman, who is not pious, but a very respectable man, and finally a representative told me, that his children received more benefit, in relation to their learning, from the Sabbath school, during these five or six Sabbaths, than from any three months' schooling in their lives."

"BLESSED ENTHUSIASM."

That influence which leads men to see that they are sinners in the sight of God, and as such, are condemned by his Holy Law—which makes them new creatures, renews and sanctifies their hearts—which prepares them to live happily, to die in peace, and to be forever blessed in heaven, is called by some, enthusiasm. They term the principle alluded to, religion. But if we set aside the name, and examine candidly its influence upon mankind, every person must acknowledge that it is a hallowed influence. Every person is conscious to himself that, that man who is made a subject of Divine Grace, becomes in consequence of it, a better man in every department in life. However men may contend with the influence of religion, yet there is a sort of inherent respect for it which they cannot destroy. When we see a good man struggling with adversity, and bearing the afflictions which are incident to mortal life, with the greatest possible fortitude and composure, we are sensible that he is in possession of a principle, call it what we may, which is of infinite value. It was this which enabled a pious Job to say with perfect resignation, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." If that which makes men happy in all the changing scenes of life, is "enthusiasm," yet it must be a Blessed Enthusiasm. But we have not only seen persons live happily under this influence, but we have seen them die in the triumphant exercise of this principle. And it has not been merely those who were young and easily excited that have thus been exercised, but we have seen men of the greatest firmness and decision of character, as they were engaged in the last struggles of dissolving nature, manifest an unshaken confidence in the Religion of Christ. And does any one suppose that a mere delusive excitement would enable a man, who is standing as on the threshold of another world, to lift up his head rejoicing that the time of his deliverance is come! In view of the fact that this enthusiasm is so eminently calculated to smooth the rugged path of life—to scatter light around the gloomy recess of the tomb—and to brighten the prospect of immortality, who will not say that it is a Blessed Enthusiasm.—Lowell Evangelist.

Daniel Frost jr. Esq. General Agent of the Connecticut State Temperance Society, delivered an address, on Monday last, in this city, before the New-London County Temperance Society—it being the annual meeting. The subject of the address was, the inconsistency of professing Christians being engaged in the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits. We are glad that one or two guilty sinners of that stamp, had the courage to be present: we are not without hope, that the truths which they then heard may become the means of adding to their virtue, knowledge, and to knowledge, TEMPERANCE; for if but half the tales we hear are true, their is sufficient need of their acquiring both. It is one of the obstacles most difficult to be overcome by the friends of temperance, and for the removal of which, they must yet struggle patiently, to induce men who profess to make the Bible the rule of their conduct, to live up to their professions. They cannot much longer continue to pollute their own souls and endanger the eternal welfare of their customers, without some twinges of conscience, and when that monitor takes them to task, it is possible that they may listen to his dictates.—Rel. Mes.

DRUNKENNESS IN THE RUSSIAN ARMY.—Is it any wonder that the Poles are so superior to their Russian foes, when the latter are in the habit of going to battle in a state of intoxication! In the sanguinary struggle which occurred at the passage of the Nawrey, the Russian soldiers were so drunk as scarcely to be able to stand erect. What marvel, when their commander was so much addicted to the beastly crime.

It is a common observation, that public criminals, when they come to their unhappy end, and make their dying declarations to the world, generally charge their sinful courses in which they have lived to the neglect and abuse of the Lord's day, as the first occasion of leading them into all other wickedness.

A Temperance House.—A temperance house is kept in Vernon-Centre, by Mr. Levi Hills.—The fact ought perhaps to be more generally known, for the accommodation of those who practice abstinence.

BY virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the State of New York against the goods and chattels lands and tenements, of the Trustees of St. Paul's Church, in my bailwick, I have seized and taken all the right title and interest of the said to the following described premises viz:—all that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being, in the town of Brighton, County of Monroe and State of New York, being lot number two in section B. reference had to Johnson and Seymour's map of a part of the village of Rochester, said lot being bounded west by Market Street, (now St Paul's Street,) north by lot number one, east by lot number four, and south by lot number three, owned by Giles Boulton, which I shall expose to sale as the law directs, at public vendue on Friday the 21st day of October next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day on the premises. They have on the New York and Ohio Canals, thirty first rate Boats, all manned, by practical Boatmen, and with frequent relays of Horses, they are able to promise the transportation of property, with the utmost care and expedition.

On the New York Canals, their Boats will leave Albany, Troy, Oswego, Rochester and Buffalo, and the intermediate places, daily,. On the Ohio Canal, they will run a regular line, between Cleaveland and Newark, or the southern termination of the canal, all running Night and Day, except the SABBATH.

Their arrangements with owners of Tow Boats, and Line Sloops on the Hudson River, and owners of Steam boats and Vessels on Lakes Erie and Ontario, will enable them to forward property on any of these waters, without detention. Property shipped on the Hudson River, fully insured.
