The following persons will receive property, and forward according to the direction of the owners.

HILL, FISH & ABBEE, T. M. SOUTHWICK, } Philapelphia,
BIGELOW & BANGS, Boston,
W. HUBBELL, 29 Coenties Slip, N. Y.
E. COOK, 66 on the Dock, Albany,
ALLEN, TIBBITS & Co. Troy,
BUTLER, M'DONOUGH & CO. Utica,
JAMES MOORE, jr. Syracuse,
JOHN RICE, jr. Weedsport,
J. A. CLARK, Montezuma,
J. T. TROWBRIDGE & Co. Oswego,
ALLEN, WHEELER & Co. O. N. BUSH, } Rochester,
J. COGSWELL, Brockport,
WILLIAM ALLIS, Holley,
N. INGERSOLL & Co. Albion,
E. FOLSOM, Lockport,
E. F. NORTON, Buffalo,
KELLEY & WALWORTH, JOHN S. HUDSON, } Cleaveland, O.
JOHN C, DAVIES & Co. Newark.

☞ They also continue to occupy the two Store Houses on Sophia-street, in Rochester, which will enable them to store any kind of property, on the owest terms. 16tf

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.
Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. he subscriber as Agent for the above, mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.
January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

NOTICE.—The partnership of the subscribers, under the name, firm & style of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent, and all the property and debts due the firm are the property of David Bush, and all settlements to be made with him, and those having debts against the firm, willcall on said Bush for settlement.

WM. Mc. COY.
DAVID BUSH.
Rochester, July 26th, 1831. 31tf.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. Mc'Coy & Co., begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an eleg'nt assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets, &c comprisng almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.
No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. tf.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For ale.
Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber,
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.
8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eeaves-Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY.
Rochester, june 15, 1831. 25tf

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware, Communon setts. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.
Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.
May 5, 1831.
20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ROCHESTER
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes. Chochineal, smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella, of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. JACOB GOULD.
22tf

IN CHANCERY,
James Waugh Complainant vs. Samuel H. Hoag and Joel Wheeler Defendants.
At a Court of Chancery held for the State of New-York, at the village of Rochester on the eleventh day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one; Present Addison Gardner vice Chancellor of the eight circuit.

It appearing by affidavit to the satisfaction of this court that the defendant Samuel H. Hoag resides out of this state, but within the United States, on motion of Mr. N. Dixon solicitor for the complainant it is ordered that said Samuel H. Hoag cause his appearance to be entered, and notice thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance, that he cause his answer to the complainants bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof that said bill of complaint may be taken as confessed, and it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the state paper, and in the Rochester Observer published in the County of Monroe, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers at least once in each week, for eight weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Samuel H. Hoag at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.
8w34. ISAAC R ELWOOD. Dep. Clerk.

At a Court of Chancery, held for the State of New-York, at the village of Rochester, on the ninth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one. Present Addison Gardiner, Vice Chancellor of the eighth Circuit,

Jacob M. Schermerhorn, Complainant, vs. Richard Dibble, Naomi Dibble, William P. Rossiter, Thomas H. Murrey, Levi Ward Jr., Joseph Stocking, Joseph Bull, William Penfield, and John Penfield, Defendants.

It appearing by Affidavit to the satisfaction of this Court, that the defendant Thomas H. Murrey resides out of this State, but within the United States, on motion of Mr. S. Miller, Solicitor for the complainant, It is ordered, that the said Thomas H. Murrey cause his appearance to be entered, and, notice thereof to be served on the Complainant's Solicitor, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the complainant's bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof, said bill of complaint may be taken as confessed. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the State paper, and in the Rochester Observer, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers, at least once in each week for eight weeks in succession, or, that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Thomas H. Murrey, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.
ISAAC R. ELWOOD, Deputy Clerk.
S. MILLER Solicitor. 8w35.

IN CHANCERY—Before the Vice-Chancellor of the 8th Circuit.
Isaac Spencer, Treasurer of the State of Connecticut, vs. Brewer Jarvis and Amanda his wife, James Boyd, Ferdinand Suydam, & John P. Sage, Jacob Lobdell & Peter Decker.
By virtue of a decretal order in the above entitled cause, will be sold by the subscriber, at public auction at the inn now kept by Burnum, at Bushnell's Basin, in the town of Perrinton, in the county of Monroe, on the twenty-seventh day of September next, at one o'clock in the afternoon, the mortgaged premises described in the proceedings in this cause as follows, viz. "All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Perrinton aforesaid, namely, the west half of lot number sixty six, in township number twelve in the fourth range of townships, in Phelps and Gorham's purchase, bounded as follows, north, west, and south by the lines of the said lot, and east by a line run parallel to the west line and through the centre of said lot, containing one hundred and sixty acres," or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the complainant for the principal, interest and costs in the said cause —Dated August 10, 1831.
WALTER HUBBELL,
Master in Chancery.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in liber 6 of Mortgages at page 384 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 16th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division, now Monroe, and state of New York viz,—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz:—East west, and south by the lines of said Division, and Northerly, by aline to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Smeiller Esq.—including all buildings if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.
L. ADAMS, Att'y. 25 24w.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of two several sums of money, secured by two several Indentures of Mortgage, one executed by Chandler Farrar of the village of Rochester, in the County of Monroe, to Isaiah Brown, of the town of Rush, in said County, bearing date the first day of May, in the year 1827, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of said County, upon which is claimed to be due this day the sum of one hundred and five dollars;—the other executed by the same Chandler Farrar to one William Lawrence of Rush aforesaid, bearing date the twenty third day of February in the year 1828, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the said County of Monroe, and duly assigned by the said Lawrence to said Isaiah Brown, on which last mentioned Mortgage is claimed to be due at this day the sum of two hundred and eighty two dollars and forty two cents;—NOTICE is given that by virtue of two several powers contained in the said Mortgages, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public vendue at the Inn now kept by John Sines in the town of Mendon, in the said County of Monroe, on the fifth day of September next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, all that tract or parcel of land lying and being in township number eleven in the seventh range, in the town of Rush aforesaid—to wit, fifty acres situate in the south end of Section number one, of lot number five of the old survey to be bounded on the north by a line parallel with the south line of said section number one, being the first division of said lot number five ISAIAH BROWN.
Dated March 3, 1831.
JOHN DICKSON, Atty.

IN CHANCERY.
Francis Williams, Complainant, vs. Peter Bracket and Elizabeth his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Veazie, William Hardwick, George A. Avery, Walter L. Griffith, Evan Griffith and Matthew Brown 3d, Defendants.
In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a Court holden at the Court-house in the village of Rochester on the 22d day of August, 1831, I shall sell at public Auction, to the highest bidder, on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in said village of Rochester, and county of Monroe, the following described premises, viz. "One certain house and lot lying situated in said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Walnut Alley, and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot deeded to the said Peter Bracket by Harmon Bissell, on the twelth or thirteenth of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, on the Everard Peck purchase of Enos Stone."
ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery.
6w 35

IN CHANCERY.
Ezra Coe Complainant, vs. Philo Rigley, Samuel Adams, & Lewis Benedict, Defendants.
In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester, on the 22d day of August 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern in said village of Rochester, & county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. "All that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the said town of Clarkson, being a part of the west half of lots one and two, in the sixth section of town number four on the triangular tract, and bounded as follows, viz.—beginning at a stake in the centre of the Ridge-road, where the same is intersected by the centre of the west lake road—Thence southerly along the centre of said Lake road, eight chains and fourteen links, to a stake, thence easterly on the north line of Abigail Tuttle's land, three chains and sixty two links to a stake, thence northerly on the west line of Peter Row's land six chains and thirty five links to a stake, thence north, seventy two and a half degrees west, one chain and thirty four links to a stake, thence north sixty four degrees west one chain and ten links to a stake, thence north twenty and one half degrees east two chains and five links, thence to the place of beginning be the same more or less." Dated 23th August, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON,
6w Master in Chancery.

WM. H. WARD & Co. (MARBLE BUILDING Carroll Street,) have just received a full supply of GOODS. Rochester, June 2, 1830.

New Arrangement in the Hardwar Business.

HENRY BUSH and GEORGE BUTLER have formed a connection in business which will be carried on under the firm of Bush & Butler at the old stand of H. Bush, where they are now receiving their spring importation of Hardware, Cutlery, Saddlery, Fancy Goods &c direct from the Manufacturies in England together with a general assortment of American goods in their line, which they offer for sale at wholesale & retail on as good terms as any house in America. Their stock being very heavy, and patterns new, we hope to receive a share of public patronage.

*Buffalo Street in the Arcade

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 40.

OCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TTLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
ffice in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, 00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or ore, where payment is made when the names are ecorded, $2,00.
Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

For the Observer.

THE DUTY OF CHRISTIANS TO BELONG TO THE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. NO. 3.

One reason more, why christians should belong to the temperance society is, they have done much in the cause of intemperance. Few, very few are the professors of religion, past the age of twenty, who have not by their example and otherwise, encouraged and persuaded their fellows to habits of intemperance; while many have dealt out the deadly drug, that drowns its victims in the lake of fire. The writer of this well remembers when christians urged him to drink ardent spirits; and when he replied it caused pain in the head, they answered, 'O, you must drink enough, drink more and it will cure you.' Thus christians believed, and thus they acted. But it has been proved that this belief is not correct, that ardent spirit is not good for any and that those who are deceived thereby are not wise. And now all men are called upon to counteract their former influence; and will christians refuse to do it? Some may say we have only drank before, and all that is now required of us, is, to discontinue this practice: but we boldly assert that this is not all. It is not all that they have done, or are required to do: you have invited others to drink with you, and if they were reluctant, you invited them again. Can you do away evil as fast as you can propagate it? Certainly not. If then you cease drinking and invite others to do likewise, you only do the two opposites of what you did before; and if it requires more effort to do away evil than to propagate it, then certainly something remains yet to be done; another step must be taken, give your name to the temperance society; having for your encouragement, the fact, that every one who joins a society that regularly reports, will add one to the number of abstinent persons, whose influence will be felt alike in Michigan, Louisiana, Georgia and Maine, and likewise will be felt across the Sea. At present, there is no other means of extending your influence abroad; and will you not improve this means? It is vastly important that you do it. Suppose there were but five members of the temperance society in America, what would their influence be?—Could their influence lead to the formation of temperance societies in Europe, and the reformation of 700 drunkards in America? We should have no reason to expect it. No! it is the number of thousands that is influencing the world in this cause. It ought to be millions, and soon would be, would professors of religion do their duty in this thing—and now we call upon Christians to remember that many of those they have influenced to drink, are in other parts of the country, or the world, so that the only probable way of influencing them not to drink ardent spirits, is to add to the number of temperance members.

Another reason why christians should belong to the temperance society is, many, if not most of those who are now out of the society, have taken the liberty, especially when societies were feeble, to speak against them. Now it will be hard for those of you who have done this, to make men believe that you feel friendly to this society, until you join it. Opposers of this cause are prone to cling to what they have heard you say, which has strengthened them in their opposition; and there is no way in which you can counteract your former influence. And now when the Christian is made sensible of this, will he still suffer his influence to go against the cause of God. Remember that for all this, he will bring you into judgement.

And now christian brethren "what you do, do quickly" "for the night of death cometh in which no man can work." "There is no device nor knowledge in the grave to which we are hastening." It might overtake you before you have performed this important duty; the enemy of this cause, will hold your name on his side, and your influence will ever remain with him. Remember the line of distinction is drawn between members of temperance societies and those who are not; all men are on one, or the other side of the line. Whatever your feelings may be, if you belong not to the society, you are on the same side of this line with the most bitter opposers; and they receive much strength from your company: and unless you speedily join the other company, the brittle thread of life may be severed, your probation closed, your accounts closed up, and all opportunity of joining the temperance society, be forever lost. And it will be said of you as it has been said of one whose memory is dear to me, who at first was opposed to the temperance society, but became thoroughly convinced of its utility and vast importance; and would ere long have united with it had his life been spared. But alas! the night of death came, in which he could not work. And notwithstanding all the proof I had of his friendship to the society, opposers say to me "your friend was a man of too much sense to join your temperance society." They still hold him as their own. Not all the powers of earth can free him from their grasp. This will be your condition, if you remain where you are, however friendly you may appear to the society.

I entreat you christian brother prayerfully to read what I have written, and let nothing keep you back from duty. O! listen to the voice of woo that breaks upon the ear. It cometh from the habitation of drunkenness, where, foaming with rage the demon is beating his innocent wife, while their children are crying for food, and of pain. But hark! those dismal groans! they are the wailings of the drunkard in hell.—Now the voice of mercy is heard; it is the voice of the temperance society saying come, in me there is safety from all this misery and woe; and Lo! seven hundred have saved themselves from self destruction, and three hundred thousand have fled to her for refuge for themselves, and thereby to build a shelter, to screen others from the impending storm—Oh! come, christian brethren come; the voice of woe is not yet hushed. The widow and orphan cry for help. The treaties of your brethren are sounding in your ears, and the awful voice of God has said, whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.

M. N.

A report of the Georgetown Temp. Society in Lower Canada states, that the annual consumption of ardent spirits, in that town and vicinity, has fallen, within the short space of three years, from 8000 gallons to 300; and all the venders have abandoned the sale except one.

POPERY.

From the Protestant.

You are probably not aware that the same tricks, which you gave an account of, as practised by the "massing knaves," as you rightly call them, at Florence, in Italy, are constantly practised in New York. I shall tell you a robbery which is now in execution near the office of the Protestant.

A woman, one of whose daughters is learning the Millinery and dress making business with Mrs. H——, in Pearl street, lately was bereaved of her husband. A certain Priest has constantly been employed in frightening the widow, respecting her husband's "roasting away on the coals of Purgatory."—He finally agreed to get her husband's soul out of torment, for a good mass of dollars. The woman not being able to raise the money, proposed to Mrs. H. to take away her daughter, that by her earnings, she might satisfy the Priest's swindling demand. Finally, however, Mrs. H. agreed, contrary to her prior conduct, to pay a certain sum to the widow every week, for the Priest, for the delivery of her husband's soul out of purgatory. This outrageous robbery of the widow and fatherless will continue, until the Jesuit obtains his full amount, to squander upon his sisters. What think you of New York Irish Roman Priests?

REED.

We think it is a shameless open burlesque upon all decorum, morals, and common sense, to say nothing of justice and Christianity—to build the Sing Sing Penitentiary for the petty bungling rogues who are now lodged there for labor and security; and at the same time, not only permit Jesuit wholesale massing there to goat large; but also to honor them in exact proportion to their daring perfidy, traitorous impudence, and multiplied felonies. For we maintain, that a Massman who obtains money from the living, under the pretext of releasing the soul of a dead person from purgatory, is an arrant knave; who ought to be inducted by a Grand Jury for larceny, upon the same principle as all other similar felons, who defraud honest men of their property, upon false pretexts. A gentleman of the Bar offers his services, to aid any poor person who has thus been robbed, in bringing the swindler to justice and punishment.

From the Same.

The two narratives which follow, are extracted from the Irish Londonderry Journal.

HORRID OUTRAGE.

The Rev. A. Ross, lately gave notice that he would deliver Lectures in the Episcopal church of Banaher, on the differences between Protestantism and Popery. Four Protestant orphan girls with their brother, well known for their exemplary conduct, were returning home from hearing a lecture, when they were assailed by a number of ruffians, and cruelly beaten. The boy saved his life by flight and concealment; and the girls vomited large quantities of blood in consequence of the abuse which they received. After becoming furious with large draughts of whiskey, the Popish bigots made a second attempt upon the youth, having resolved to murder them only for hearing a lecture against Popery, by Mr. Ross. The design was discovered and their object frustrated. The men being known were arrested, and are now in prison to answer for their atrocious deed.

POPISH CONFESSION.

Mr. O'Flaherty, Roman Priest of Dungiven, gave notice to his hearers that he would hold stations, in the house of one of the Papists for Confessions. When the day arrived, among others, Mrs. McL—— was escorted by him into a private chamber—where O'Flaherty attempted to force her to submit to his vile desires.—She resisted all his efforts, and as soon as she could escape from him, returned home, and informed her husband—who procured his immediate arrest, and he was bound over for trial. He was convicted and banished from Ireland.

After the trial was over—as Mr. McL. and his wife were returning home, they were attacked by a large mob of Papists, who beat and abused them in a cruel manner. The whole family however have deserted the Masshouse, and now attend the Protestant church."

Did not that same O'Flaherty come to America!

ROMISH DELUSION.

John England, in the Catholic Miscellany of August 27, publishes with great complacency the following ridiculous paragraph, to recommend the "massing mummery" of the Roman idolaters. "A gentleman asked his footman, who accompanied him to High Mass in Brussels, what he thought of the ceremony. "Sir—answered the poor stupid creature—I never saw God Almighty served like a gentleman before." One of the British ambassadors observed, after attending High Mass at Paris, "If I were king of France I would permit no subject to elevate the host; that sublime act should be performed only by myself." From which stupid example; the inference is drawn, that as Popery is a very imposing ceremonial, therefore it is the true evangelical ordinance—which is most marvellous, the logic or the absurdity of this childlike deduction!—Protestant.

From the Same.

POPISH GAMBLING FOR HEAVEN.

The "most illustrious and most Reverend Lord Don Frey Rafael Lasula, Bishop of Solsona!" a Spanish Massman, has issued a notice to his priest ridden Romans; of which the ensuing translation is a faithful summary.

PURGATORIAL LOTTERY.—One Hundred Spiritual Lots for the Relief of the blessed Souls in Purgatory.

This religious catalogue, numbered from one to one hundred, expresses by each number the character of some one of the blessed, who are supposed to be detained in Purgatory for more complete purification: and who, therefore, need that alleviation of punishment, and may be benefitted by the increased expedition in their passage through that "refining furnace," which the prayers of the devout may and will procure for them. Every number, or lot, describes a distinct case of some such soul. I give you a few, as a specimen of the whole.

Lot 1. For the soul which was most devoted to the mystery of the most holy Trinity.

10. For the soul which was most devoted to the most sacred wounds of Jesus.

20. For the soul which was most devoted to the grief of Mary in the presentation of her Most Holy Son in the Temple.

50. For the soul which was most devoted to the prophet and patriarch Elias.

100. For the soul which was most devoted to our Lady of Carmel, the special mother of defunct devotees.

At the foot of the catalogue, there is this direction as to the use to be made of it.

"The devotee who, by these means, desires to afford some relief of punishment to the blessed souls, is to put his hand into the little box, and drawing from it a little ticket or ball, he will find upon it a number: referring to the same number, or lot in the prefixed table, or catalogue, the devotee is to repair, in spirit, to the soul which the number describes, and then pray for it as devotion may dictate."

It is then desired that, for charity-sake, the ticket, or ball so drawn, be returned into the little box, that the same soul may not be deprived of the succor which some other devotee might afford by again drawing the same lot.

But what advantage is offered to tempt the devotee to this drawing of a number to direct his prayer!

The most Illustrious and most Reverend Lord Don Frey Rafael Lasula Bishop of Solsona, gives notice, that he grants forty days indulgence, for every time that a lot should be drawn from the hundred in the catalogue.

SHOCKING MURDER BY A POPISH PRIEST.

We have received more precise information on the circumstances of the case of Rev. Mr. Hughes, respecting the death of James Reynolds. On the evening of Monday, the 19th inst. a young man and woman accompanied by some friends, went to the priest's house to be married; the parish priest, Mr. Dogherty, was not at home, but his curate, Rev. Mr. Hughes, who felt enraged by their noise, and calling them "scrubs," attempted to drive them out of the house, in doing which, he gave several of the party a box, and as he got near the door, he seized a wooden bolt, used for fastening the hall door; this was wrested from him in the scuffle, but he subsequently recovered it, and pursued Patrick Reynolds into the street with it, and not being able to overtake him, was returning to Mr. Dogherty's house, when he met James Reynolds, who threw himself on his knees and asked his reverence's pardon, if he, or any of his friends had offended him. While Reynolds was in this attitude, the priest raising the bolt with both hands, gave him a blow on the head of which he died the next day: from ten to fifteen persons were present when the blow was given in the public street of Mohill, amongst whom was his brother and other near relation. Yet on the coroners holding an inquest, not one person could be found, to give evidence as to who the person was that gave the fatal blow (three persons however have stated, that the deceased said the blow was given by the priest;) neither would the friends of the deceased permit the coroner, or his jury, to examine the wound, and the constables, who were there to preserve order, were rather roughly handled by the mob, while the coroner was trying to hold the inquest: and thus in some respects, the ends of justice have been frustrated, as far as regards the inquest for the present; for while it was going on, the delinquent quickly walked out of town, disguised in a great coat, and white hat, and, it is supposed, he is now on his way to France.

Since the inquest sat, the mother of the deceased has, I am informed, burnt the bolt by which her son was killed. Nothing, it is stated, will induce them to prosecute the priest, even if he can be found.—London Recorder.

THE YOUTHFUL MARTYR.

William Hunter, aged 19 years, finding a chapel open, entered and began to read in the English Bible which lay upon the desk. He was imprisoned; but Bishop Bonner offered to make him a freeman of the city, and set him up in business, if he would recant. He answered, "I thank you for your offers; but, my lord, I cannot find it in my heart, to turn from God for the love of the world: for I count all things but loss, in respect of the love of Christ." His parents came to him and desired heartily of God that he might continue to the end in that good way which he had begun. As he went to Martyrdom, he met his father, who said, "God be with thee son William." He replied, God be with you, good father, be of good comfort; for I hope we shall meet again." At the stake, he kneeled down and read the fifty-first psalm, till he came to these words—"The sacrifice of God is a broken spirit—a broken and contrite heart, O, God, thou wilt not despise." He refused to recant when offered the Queen's pardon. The sun shown suddenly out of a dark cloud. The Martyr said, "Son of God! shine upon me." He cast his psalter into his brother's hand, who said, "William, think of the holy passion of Christ, and be not afraid of death." "Behold," he replied, "I am not afraid." He then raised his hands to heaven, and said,—"Lord receive my spirit!"

What a striking instance is this of the power of religion, not only in the prospect of suffering, but in the very scene itself. Reader, is your religion of this kind? Have you renounced the world!

MISSIONARY.

From the Missionary Herald.

GREECE.

Journal of Mr. King on the Island of Tenos.

(Continued from our last.)

Feb. 13. Sabbath. Expounded in my school as usual. In the afternoon I partook of the communion with Messrs. Robertson and Hill. Prince Mavrocordato and wife, with her sister and brother, were present.

14. Examined the Arithmetic, Grammar, and Child's Assistant, the new Greek books I had just received from the missionary press at Malta.

27. Sabbath. I expounded the Scriptures in my school. During the week past, I employed much of my time in reading a book in Greek, called Canonicon, by Christophoros Moruchos, printed in the year 1800 at the patriarchal press in Constantinople, and containing the apostolical canons, a short account of the seven general councils recognised by the Greeks, together with the canons, adopted by them, and also the canons of the councils at Carthage, Antioch, &c.

According to this book, the canons, called Apostolical, were in doubt till the time of the fifth-sixth council, (called also the sixth,) which was held in a hall of the palace at Constantinople, in the year 681, or 682, and consisted of 227 fathers, who voted these canons to be apostolic.—The canons formed by the Pendecte council, were 105. The 90th is the following: "Those who pray on the Lord's day are not to kneel, beginning on Saturday, after the evening entrance of the priest to the altar, till the same hour on Sunday evening, so as to celebrate the resurrection a whole night and day, ending it from darkness in light;"—that is, beginning with darkness and ending with light.

In a note to canon 66th of the Apostles, I find the following expression, containing a reason why the church was prohibited from fasting on Saturdays,—"But perhaps on account of the Lord's day beginning on Saturday evening."

From this it appears, that it was formerly the custom, as it is with many at the present day in New England, to begin the Lord's day on Saturday evening, and to close it at the going down of the sun; and this agrees with the present practice of the Greek church, so far as they keep the Lord's day at all. They at least consider it as commencing on Saturday evening, and I cannot but think that the practice of keeping Sabbath evening, instead of Saturday, was derived from the Roman Catholic church, as that church universally, so far as I know, keeps Sabbath evening. With regard to the time when the Jews begun their Sabbath, there can be no doubt, as it is said distinctly, "From evening to evening shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths;" and though we keep the first day of the week in memory of our Saviour's having finished the work of redemption, still I know not why we should alter the time of commencing the day of rest, which we keep in obedience to the spirit of the fourth commandment of the decalogue, and with regard to the beginning and ending of which a special direction was given by God himself, and which, so far as I have been able to learn, agrees with the practice of the oriental church, even to the present time.

March 1. A nun from a Greek monastery called, and in a very suppliant manner begged me to give her the New Testament, saying she was too poor to purchase it; and also begged one for her sister nun. I of course readily granted her request, and gave her also some tracts.

In the afternoon, as I was walking out, I saw an old man at the corner of a street, reading a book. So I went up to him, and inquired what he was reading, and asked if he had the New Testament. He replied no, but that he heard it every day read in the church. I then stated to him what St. Chrysostom said to Christians on the subject of reading the Scriptures in their dwellings, and told him not to remain another night without the New Testament. "Sir," said I, "your hairs are now gray and it is high time that you apply yourself to the reading of the word of God, and a preparation for the other world. If you have not the means of purchasing a New Testament, I will make you a present of one; but if God has so blessed you that you have the means, you ought to purchase it." On hearing this he went immediately into his house, got some money, and went and purchased the book I had recommended.

6. Sabbath. Expounded the 9th chapter of 1st Corinthians. During the day, there was a great deal of noise and confusion, arising from multitudes of boys and young men parading the streets, some with masks, and some with little drums, & others running hither and thither to see them, and all, at times, laughing and shouting, and rendering the day more like a feast of Bacchus, than a day of holy rest and heavenly meditation.

I have many times conversed with the teachers of the schools, and some of the priests, and many of the people, with regard to the importance of their keeping the Lord's day holy; and they all seem ready to admit the truth of what I say: but still continue to do as they did before. I have reason to think, however, that some of those who have attended my school, have much more respect for this day, than they had a few months ago; and I do not know, that I saw one of them running about with the masqueraders.

At Syra. 10. I met with several Turks, whom I had known at Athens, and who, as they told me, were on their way to Smyrna to keep the feast of Ramadan. Four or five of them called to see me at Doct. Korck's. To one of the principal of them, I made a present of a bible in Turkish, which Doct. K. let me have, and Doct. K. also made a present of a New Testament to another Turk. The one to whom I gave the bible, seemed to be a very noble-minded, and in the common sense of the word, upright man. In conversing with him about a house, which he has at Athens, and which, when there, I had thought of purchasing, he said, "The President, I am told, talks of taking the house; but if he does not, and you wish it, you may have it; though I should advise you not to buy it, as it stands in a place where there will probably be a public square, or street, which will cut off part of it, and it will not be for your interest to take it. And in speaking of another house which he had for sale, he said, I should advise you to take such an one (one belonging to his neighbor,) instead of mine, as it is much better, and will be more for your profit." In speaking on the subject of religion, he remarked, that he thought that the time was at hand, when we should all become one. This, I am told, is a remark which of late has been made by many of the followers of the false prophet.

After giving him the bible, I asked him to read the ten commandments, and told him not to judge of the Christian religion from what he saw of Christians in this country, for they had wandered from the truth as it is in the gospel; that the use of pictures and graven images in the churches, and the praying to saints was contrary to the gospel; that I condemned these things as much as he; and that these Christians, I hoped, would one day be reformed.

I also met with a Greek priest, who has lately been at Jerusalem, and speaks in the strongest terms of disapprobation of the proceedings of the Greeks there: he says, the "holy fire" is a deception and a lie.

13. Sabbath. In the morning I went to the school of Doct. Korck, and heard him expound the gospel to the children. In the afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Jetter, and Mr. Hildner, came to Doct. Korck's where we had a service, partly in English, and partly in Greek. Mr. Hill read the prayers in English, and we sung a hymn in the same language. I then expounded in Greek the 3d chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Philippians, after which we sung a hymn in Greek, (from Mr. Willson's New Lyre,) and then I offered a short prayer, and gave the benediction in the same language. In the evening Doct. Korck read one of Nardin's sermons in French.

14. Having learned by one the Turks above mentioned, that my deeds had been ratified by the Greek government, and having learned, by a letter from Mrs. Korck's brother, that the marble and many of the stones belonging to my house at Athens had been stolen, I sent a man to build a wall around the premises, in order to prevent further loss.

16. As I was going with my wife to Mr. Jetter's, a soldier came up to me very suddenly, and said he wished to speak with me a moment; and on my demanding what he wished, he replied that Sabbas, the man who stole my money, was there and desired very much to see me, and wished to know where I lodged. So I gave him my address, and in the evening the soldier called, and announced to me that Sabbas had come and was standing at the door ashamed to come in. After sending to him to invite him to come in he entered, limping along with a cane to support him, and drew near, and took my hand and kissed it, and I asked him to take a seat. Perceiving, however, that he felt uneasy, I took him into a room alone with me and my wife, and there we conversed with him a long time, endeavoring to show him the heinousness of his crime in attempting to destroy himself, and what would in all probability, have been the situation of his soul, had he succeeded in his attempt; and how important it was that he should avoid lying and drinking, which had led him to theft, and then to the attempt at self murder. I then knelt down, and begged of Him, who, on the cross, granted pardon to the dying thief, to pardon this man, to renew and sanctify him, to preserve him in future from the evil which is in the world, and fit him for heaven. Having offered this prayer I arose, and told him that, so far as I was concerned, I freely forgave him, but that God alone could grant him that pardon which was most necessary; and to be sure and not to let any priest persuade him, that he could grant remission of sins.

During our conversation with him he remarked, that he did not wish to live, but that as he now knew that it was a great sin to destroy himself, he should not again attempt it; that he should be glad, if he could be my slave as long as he lived. My wife, in reply to this, said to him, that instead of being my slave, and laboring for me, he must read the gospel every day, and consider that, in doing this, he was performing that which I most wished him to do, and which would give me the greatest satisfaction. I then enjoined upon him to spend twenty or thirty minutes every day in reading the New Testament, meditating upon the truths it contains, and in prayer. This he promised to do.

We then returned to the parlor, and I took a New Testament and wrote in it at the beginning, —"Let him that stole steal no more," and presented it to him in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, enjoining upon him to keep it, and read a portion of it every day as long as he lived; to learn his religion from that alone, and to seek pardon from Him, who come to seek and to save that which was lost.

This interview with Sabbas was to me very interesting, and one which I had much desired. He is a young man about twenty-two years of age, as he thinks, (for he does not know precisely,) and has probably never received much religious instruction. I cannot but hope that this event, together with the reading of the gospel, may be the means of bringing him to repentance, and to the knowledge of the truth. Two or three days after this interview, I gave him, at his request, a letter to Mr. Lambros Nakos of Lividia, who wrote to me by him, as above mentioned, begging me to forgive him. Would that I could have written such a letter as Paul wrote to Philemon with regard to Onesimus.

Tenos, 20. Sabbath. Expounded in my school the 10th chapter of the first of Corinthians. From the passage, "The people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play," I took occasion to speak against the manner in which multitudes here spend their time during the carnival, and endeavored to show them how inconsistant it was for those, who bear the name of Christians, to indulge in practices so much like those of the ancient idolators.

22. Yesterday saw in the Smyrna newspaper, that the Grand Signor has given freedom to all religions, and says that man, for his conscience in religious matters, is accountable only to God.

25. In the morning I learned, that Mr. Brigham had arrived from Malta, by way of Smyrna, with the printing press under the direction of Messrs. Robertson and Hill.

This week have arrived from Smyrna about two hundred and fifty worshippers, and from a thousand to fifteen hundred more are expected soon. Among those I saw, was one poor lunatic woman constantly uttering the most plaintive moans. My heart was affected at seeing so many deluded people flocking to this place to pay their devotions to that which cannot profit either soul or body.

These people go on pilgrimage to Tenos to pay their adorations in the magnificent church not long since erected there, in a conspicuous situation, in honor of the Virgin Mary. It is the common belief that miraculous cures are affected there.

26. I sent a copy of the Clergymen's Guide to the Bishop of Crete, with whom I was formerly acquainted at Ægina, and who, I had been informed, desired to have a copy of it.—When I saw him at Ægina, I urged him upon the duty of preaching to his people—and of preaching Christ and him crucified, and told him that he had a solemn account to give as a shepherd of these poor sheep, which are wandering as without a guide. He replied with considerable feeling, "I know it; but I am not worthy; I am not capable; one must have the Holy Spirit in order to preach as he ought."

27. Sabbath. I expounded in my school the 11th chapter of 1st Corinthians; I spoke particularly on the subject of the Lord's supper; the design of it, and the qualifications necessary in order worthily to partake of it. About fifty scholars were present. After the exposition of the scriptures and prayer, I made a present of the Village Sermons (in Greek) to six of the scholars, who had committed to memory the whole of the epistle to the Romans. They finished it last Monday. On presenting each with a copy of the above mentioned Sermons, I addressed them on the importance of treasuring up in their hearts and meditating upon the truths, which they had learned, and gave a summary of the doctrines, which that epistle contains.

In a letter dated March 7th, Mr. King makes the following general and important remarks:

As to myself, I can say, that thus far, government has done nothing (that I know of) against me, or my school, and has shown itself rather friendly than otherwise. My views with regard to what is to be done in Greece, and the means of performing it, are the same as when you were here; though there are some impediments in the way, which did not then exist. I hope much from a school at Athens, if it can be made of a superior order; and I should wish to have one for males, as well as females. The school I have here, consists of about sixty scholars.

KARAKAKOA BAY.

Island of Owyhee, June 18—.

TO THE EDITOR OF BADGER'S WEEKLY MESSENGER.—After a pleasant passage of forty days, we have reached this bay, so well known from the circumstances connected with the death of the celebrated circumnavigator, Capt. James Cook. I have visited the spot, and obtained a few pieces of the rock on which he fell, for distribution among my friends in America. The island presents a far different moral appearance now than it did when the great circumnavigator first set foot upon its shores. The missionaries have done great good here; the natives are truly quiet and orderly; not a single theft has been perpetrated on us since our arrival, and our decks have been constantly thronged with natives during each day, who have been exchanging their produce for calicoes, cotton cloth, and clothes—the latter being preferred by them to money.—These natives seem well inclined to attend to all means of religious and mental improvement, as loaded canoes are passing every afternoon from one side of the bay to the other, to attend schools and religious meetings.

HEATHEN CRUELTY.

EXTRACT FROM MR. STOKE'S JOURNAL.

Bombay, June 27.

Mr. Wilson informed me that a letter received from Ram Chundra, the baptised brahman, dated at Tanna, states, that nineteen natives have been condemned to be executed, and sixty others to be banished for life, for the following crime, viz. Report was circulated among the natives of a village near Tanna, that the devil had possessed different individuals, who, under the demoniacal influence, had committed murder, robberies, &c. The people being alarmed for their safety, repaired to their temple to ask counsel of their god. The response of the idol to the anxious inquiry was, that four young men must agree to be possessed of the devil at the same time, and so divide Satan's power into four parts, which would so enfeeble him as to enable the men to overcome him, and bring him to terms. Not doubting but that the counsel of their wooden god would prove true, four fine, healthy, strong young men were selected to grapple with the power of Satan. The devil acceded to the terms, and dividing himself into four parts, and entering the men commenced the combat; but, instead of being vanquished, he conquered, and drove the men mad. Thus, instead of verifying the counsel of the god, proved him a liar. The people, full of alarm for their safety, again repaired to the temple to inquire of their idol what could be done to dispossess the devil. The idol replied, There is no other way than by killing the men possessed. Under the infatuation of this oracle, two or three hundred people associated together to carry the mandate of their god into effect. They began to beat those poor deluded beings supposed to be possessed of Satan, and actually killed two of them, and severely injured the other two, before the mob could be quelled by the proper authorities. "The dark places of the earth are filled with the habitations of cruelty."—Miss. Her

From the New-York Observer.

ROBERT OWEN.

A correspondent of the Richmond Telegraph, in a letter dated Edinburg, May 6th, makes the following statement respecting Mr. Owen and his family. Whether the anecdote related here of Mr. O. is true or not, his experiment will undoubtedly result in confirming the truth, that no state or community can permanently prosper with any other religion than the religion of the Bible.

New Lanark, as you know, is the scene of Robert Owen's experiments upon human nature. How they are succeeding, I could not accurately learn; but it is impossible not to see that in Scotland, a community of infidels must be influenced by the principles of the Bible, whether they intend it or not. And if they are moral, they ought to acknowledge that, surrounded by such a population as almost every parish in Scotland furnishes, they could hardly be otherwise.

Mr. Owen has just lost his wife, who is said to have been truly pious, as was Mr. Dale her father, and as is her sister, the wife of a Rev. clergyman of the Church of England, with whom I spent an evening. The children of Mr. Owen, constituting a large family, and all I believe, "come to years," are said to have adopted the principles of their father. If however, the following anecdote be true, the mother's principles are more to be relied on in common life, and in the formation of such character as inspires confidence, than the principles of the father, he himself being judge.

When about to sail for America, perhaps the first time, his agent in Glasgow, is said to have observed to him, that the dangers of the sea, the length of the journey, and perhaps the unhealthiness of the climate, rendered it possible that he might not return. "In the event of your decease, whom would you select as trustees for the settlement of your estate—those who have been following you lately, or "the saints?" "That is a hard question," was the reply—"a close question—but I believe I should prefer the saints." "Adopt the sentiments of your mother," said the dying infidel, Col. Eathen Allen, to his inquiring daughter. Mr. Owen's experiments will issue in this, that after all, the religion of the Bible, is the only religion for fallen men. The question may be considered as settled.

From the Youth's Guide.

THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE.

Thirty-six years ago, Mr.——, an attorney at ——was a scholar in the Free German School at ——. I was then a fellow scholar, but my parents being in humble circumstances, I was obliged to leave the school, for the purpose of learning the trade of my father, and of earning an honest livelihood, some years before my companion had finished his education. After my friend left the school, our intercourse ceased;—but we lived in the grateful recollection of days that were passed, and that were to return no more. It was not until the lapse of thirty-two years, that, one evening as I was passing along a certain street in——, I met a venerable looking gentleman, and thought I recognized the features of an old friend. Looking earnestly at his countenance, I felt persuaded that this must be my old school fellow. I stepped up to him, begged his pardon for the liberty I was about to take, and asked him if his name was ——; to which he answered in the affirmative; and then with joy I exclaimed, "my name is——." At this, old recollections revived; hand squeezed hand, and affection met affection; our pulses beat in unison with each other; and the words, "I am glad to see you," were frequently exchanged between us. Our conversation turned on the days of our youth: but before we had long conversed together, my friend very seriously said "I have something to mention to you, which, in the reflective moments of my past life has always been a source of sorrow. If you will inform me where you live, I will call upon you tomorrow; and then we will talk about our youthful adventures."

On the day following, my friend paid me his promised visit; and after conversing on several subjects of a pleasurable sort, he communicated to me the cause of his sorrow. "About thirty-four years since," said he, Mr.——, the son of my master, coming to see his parents, we agreed to amuse ourselves in trying to shoot. Returning home in the evening, disappointed in our expectations, as we were crossing the new bridge, we saw four or five ducks little above it, belonging to your father; and in my foolishness I exclaimed, 'here is a fine shot,' and immediately fired at them, and killed two. We then proceeded home, and related the circumstance to the gentleman and his lady, who interrogated us respecting the ducks which I had shot. To which I answered 'we have left them dead in the water, a little above the bridge.' I was strictly charged, as soon as it was sufficiently dark, to

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

to and fetch them. I did so, and was ordered to take them up into the garret, where they were stowed; and on the following Sabbath, after returning from church, we all dined on them, enjoying ourselves at the expense of a poor industrious man. On this subject, I have often sorrowfully reflected; and frequently purposed, and wished for an opportunity, to make restitution; but never before now, was I so highly favored; and I will most assuredly perform what I have so repeatedly determined." To this I replied, "The statement you have made, brings to my recollection the loss of the ducks: and your frank acknowledgement of the truth I consider an ample restitution for the injury my father sustained by your juvinile indiscretion." He added, "I shall not feel comfortable, unless I make restitution." I said, "My father and mother are dead." He replied, "I will give the money to you, as I feel it is my duty;" presenting me with a note thus inscribed, "value of the ducks, and thirty-two years compound interest, 13s. 4d." which sum he paid down, rejoicing, that he had an opportunity of relieving his mind. It is two years since this was done. The subject has not been forgotten; and the fact is now made public, that others who have acted in a similar way, may "go and do likewise." The principles of strict justice between man and man, ought to be sacredly maintained; and if in any instance, they have been violated, restitution ought to be conscientiously made. The lapse of years, can never can cel that obligation.

REVIVALS.

We make the following extracts from the narrative of the State of Religion within the bounds of the Synod of Utica.

Protracted meetings have been signally blessed. Thus the light of divine truth with a glowing and concentrated and long continued intensity, has been brought to bear on the consciences of sinners with an energy which no transient exhibition of it could produce. Such meetings tho not invariably followed with the desired results have generally been attended with happy effects; sometimes with the mighty power of God. While congregations have been shaken as if by a rushing mighty wind, filling all the place where they were assembled.

Among the churches of St. Lawrence Presbytery, Pottsdam and Gouverneur have shared most rich in the Spirit's influence. As these revivals are of quite recent date, it would be premature to form an estimate of their extent and power. Many other contiguous churches have shared also in the same grace of God. Watertown, Belville, Sackets Harbor, Adams, Brownville, Le Roy, Orleans, Lowville, Martinsburgh, Denmark, Turin, and Leyden; within the bounds of Watertown Presbytery, have been refreshed from the Lord. Other places adjacent have been likewise visited. In most of these places the work of the Lord has been very powerful. Oswego Presbytery has been no less favored with revivals. Every town within its bounds with only one or two exceptions, where the gospel is statedly preached, has been watered with refreshing showers of salvation. Among the places thus favored are Camden, Florence, Volney, Oswego, New Haven, Mexico, Richland, Sandy Creek, and Hannibal. Within the limits of Oneida Presbytery many congregations have been graciously visited during the past year. The Spirit of God has descended with power upon Utica 1st, 2d and 3d churches, Whitesboro, New Hartford, Augusta, Trenton, Floyd, Boonville, Rome, Bridgewater, Fairfield, Vernon, Verona, Norway and other places. In the Presbytery of Otsego, the showers of divine grace have descended upon Westford, Worcester, Fly and Oaks Creek, Maryland, Cooperstown, Hartwick, Milford, New Lisbon, Butternutts, and Bowmans Creek.

It deserves also to be recorded as an event auspicious to Zion, that the Bethel Flag has been erected at Oswego, Sackets Harbor and Ogdensburgh, and provisions have been made by the generosity of a single individual, to supply all the seamen on our borders with the word of God.

In these revivals God has shown himself no respecter of persons. Individuals of every age, condition and sentiment—the child, and the man of gray hairs; the orthodox sinner, and the open infidel, have been converted to God. Many have trembled before the power of those very truths which they before discredited. The universalist has trembled at the view of eternal punishment; the deist has felt the truth of divine revelation; the atheist has been forced to acknowledge that there is a God in heaven. A considerable number of drunkards have been reclaimed, and give pleasing evidence of a regenerate mind. No such cases, however, are known to have occurred, except in connection with the principle and practice of total abstinence.

New-Salem, Mass.—A work of grace, we learn, is at this time occurring here. About 70 are supposed to have become partakers of the grace of the gospel. It commenced in a Sabbath School.

In Prescott, in the Congregational Society, about fifty have become the subjects of renovating grace.

In Shutesbury, also, there is a revival.

WARE, MASS.

Extract of a letter from a friend, to the publisher of the Christian Watchman, dated Ware, Sept. 6, 1831.

About ten months ago, Christians here began to mourn over their coldness, and to pray with earnestness in little circles of three or four in a place; and thus they continued to do, until by some means the places and the object of their meetings became known to others, who came flocking in "as doves to their windows." The first case of special conviction was a female who attended a Sabbath School. And here I would say, that I have no doubt that at least seven-eights of those born into the kingdom of Christ in this place during this precious revival, have been connected with the Sabbath School. It is impossible to ascertain precisely the number of real conversions.

Meeting at Methuen.—We are informed that so interesting a season was never before known in that town. More than a hundred have indulged hopes in the mercy of God.

In Wentworth, N. H, lately a very unpromising place, with no church of any denomination, and about 100 men who called themselves Universalists—a Congregational church has lately been formed, and there is now a powerful revival. The missionary, having been absent a few days, was met on his return by two leading Universalists, inquiring, with tears, the way of salvation. Most of the converts were Universalists, & among them are those who were the most violent opposers of the work. Three female members of the church had husbands professing that creed, very unhopeful characters. The members of the church agreed to pray for their conversion; and before the next communion they were all hopefully pious."

In Athens, Ga.—Extract of a letter to the editor of the Cincinnati Journal, dated Gainesville, Ga. June 22, 1831.

"There has been for a few weeks past, a very interesting revival in Athens, and the College has shared largely in the blessing. I have learned from a gentleman recently from Athens, that on the second Sabbath of June, there were added to the Baptist church, 10; Methodist, 13; and the Presbyterian, 45. And also, that 30 more were expected to unite with the Presbyterian church next Sabbath week."

A four days' meeting commenced on the 18th of August, at Glens Falls, and another on the 25th, at Chester, in Warren County, both of which resulted in the conversion of a number of souls, and in quickening of God's dear people.

The Presbyterian Sabbath-School of Salem, reports eight teachers and fifty scholars; of whom one teacher has made a profession of religion within the last year.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

In Westerloo, (Chesterville,) N. Y.—The following communication of Sept. 8, was received last week too late for insertion.

"A revival of Religion, extraordinary, for the singularity of its commencement, and its great powewer, is now in progress in Westerloo, County of Albany.

"A few weeks since, (as the writer is informed,) two intemperate men were at a tippling house at that place, drinking, when one of them by way of amusement, commenced the singing of religious hymns. The conscience of the other was alarmed; he went home, but found no relief. Sometime after midnight, his conviction of sin and guilt continuing to increase, he repaired to the house of a neighboring professor of religion, and calling him out of bed, entreated his advice and his prayers. The convictions were soon followed by hopeful conversion to God —and this individual is now an avowed follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. This circumstance, together with some indications of seriousness growing out of it, induced two elders in a church in the vicinity, to appoint a prayer meeting in Chesterville, where the occurrence took place.—The school house was too straight to contain those assembled, and the meeting was transferred to the church, which to the surprise of all present, was literally full to overflowing. At the close of the usual services, thirty persons came forward as inquirers after the way of eternal life; the number of anxious is now increased; it is presumed to one hundred. A four days meeting began there on Tuesday last. May God bless it to the salvation of very many souls from sin and hell! When the Lord speaks, the wilderness rejoices, and springs of water break out in the desert.

EXTRACTS.

From Reports to the last General Assembly on the state of Religion: by the Editor of the Philadelphian.

From the Presbytery of Carlisle.

The cause of Temperance is gradually gaining ground. Special revivals in some of their congregations. The most interesting is in the Congregation in Carlisle. Some encouraging appearances have been observed in Dickinson College; a number of the students have manifested considerable anxiety about their souls; and in general, they are regular and decorous in their moral deportment, and studious in their habits.

In Fannettsburg, and in Path Valley there has been a considerable excitement on the subject of religion. 225 scholars have recently joined the Sabbath school in the Valley.

From the Presbytery of Susquehannah.

During the past year many of our churches have been revived; and small additions made to their numbers. We trust that most, if not all our Churches have been revived; and small additions made to their numbers. We trust that most, if not all our churches, are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Redeemer. At the present time, many of the professed followers of Christ are disposed to humble themselves before God and confess their wanderings; and cry,—O Lord revive thy work.

Many of our Churches are feeble, and therefore unable to support the stated preaching of the Gospel. In many of them, there is a laudable zeal manifested in erecting houses for worship and in supporting Ministers of the Gospel.

In nearly all * our Churches, the Monthly Concert for prayer is regularly attended, and a collection taken up for missionary purposes.—They are also actively engaged in support of domestic missions; and we fondly indulge the hope that the time is not far distant when all our churches will be supplied with the regular means of grace.

Sabbath Schools are kept in operation in all our Churches during the summer season; and in some of them during the whole year. Catechisms and Biblical instruction are also attended to.

The cause of Temperance is steadily advancing within our bounds: a large majority of all our Church members are members of the Temperance Society. This cause has advanced rapidly during the past year.

From the Presbytery of Athens, Ohio.

We can report no remarkable revivals of religion, but in some of our congregations the still small voice of the Spirit has been heard, and felt —and our churches have been strengthed with additions of those whom we hope will be saved.

The cause of Christ seems to be advancing among us. There are probably about two thousand and five hundred members of the Sabbath schools within our bounds. Much is doing among us to advance the temperance reform, and many societies are reported, whose influence is wide, powerful and salutary. We believe there is an increased attention to the observance of the Holy Sabbath. The various objects of benevolence, receive increasing aid from our churches. Many of our Churches, which but a few years ago were wholly unsupplied with the means of grace, now have Pastors and Teachers.

From the Presbytery of Harmony Ga.

It is painful and humiliating for us to state that Zion with us wears much the appearance of gloom and sadness. There has, for a season past been no special outpouring of the Spirit of God. Our churches have become more formal. The love of some waxes cold. Infidelity and Heresy lift up their standard aginst us. The leading and characteristic doctrines of Christianity are opposed with boldness within our limits. Under these circumstances, how much cause have we to lament our coldness, our inactivity, our slumbering condition. Yet, it is with gratitude to Almighty God, that we state there are two or three churches in which there has been an interesting state of things, during the last year. Our benevolent institutions are supported with an increased activity. The monthly concert of prayer is observed; and Sunday Schools are established in most of our churches. It is the belief of our Presbytery that the temperance cause is gaining ground. The prospects of our Theological Seminary in South Carolina wear a more cheering aspect. The interest of the Bible Society has been well sustained. And we are encouraged to believe that the doctrines of the gospel as faithfully preached.

From the Presbytery of Lexington, Va.

Religious prospects in Union, Augusta, Hebron, Bethel, New Providence, Lexington, and

*Why not all.

Spirit. About 900, probably, have been added to the churches. Several of the churches there, two years ago, consisting of but a handful; yet feeling the importance of a stated ministry;—and a few individuals coming forward and pledging themselves that a faithful minister would be supported, are now, not only independent of aid from abroad but are able to help the needy and the perishing besides.

In the Presbytery of Rochester the work of the Lord has been no less conspicuous. The three Churches in Rochester have increased during the year by the number of 635 members. Twelve or thirteen other Churches have likewise been revived, and very considerable additions made to the most of them. Pittsford and North Bergen have experienced a more powerful work of the Spirit perhaps than any other in that Presbytery. The whole number reported, as added last year is 1225.

The Presbytery of Niagara state that 600 members have been added to the churches under their care. Twelve towns are reported as having received a revival season from the great Head of the Church. Among the churches most highly favored we might name Lockport, Albion, Niagara Falls, and others. To the other churches considerable numbers have been added. In Lockport a very general effusion of the Spirit was had. Of one protracted meeting the fruits, in cases of professed conversion, were 150. To the church there, 190 were added last year. At the protracted meeting, the hand of God was most signally displayed, when in one day, 50 individuals are believed to have passed from death to life.

In Ontario Presbytery nearly all the churches have, less or more, shared in the blessing of God. Eleven churches have seen the Holy Spirit given in answer to prayer, and the hand of the Lord "doing valiantly" in the conversion of sinners. To this branch of Zion, namely, the churches under the care of the Ontario Presbytery, 410 have been added last year. In North Bristol, Bloomfield, Lima, and Richmond the work appears to be the most extensive and powerful, and in the last mentioned place still progressing. The aggregate number of communicants received by us last year is about 4035; and the number of churches revived and blessed is 73 or 74. Whilst the churches are thus generally prospered and blessed of the King of Zion; whilst no one church has been reported as being in a state of distraction and disorder, some nine or ten new churches have also been organized in the more waste places of our moral field, and as many houses of worship erected, or in process to warps completion, the last year. And here we cannot but express our gratitutde to the great Head of church for the aid which our feeble churches have received and still are receiving from the Home Missionary Charity, but for which they could not enjoy the stated means of grace; and without these means could not reasonably hope to be blessed: "for faith cometh by hearing." By the term Home Missionary charity, however, we mean both the American Home Missionary Society, and the General Assembly's Board. These institutions deserve our fervent prayers, and ought to receive our cordial patronage. They have effectually contributed to the watering of this part of the garden of the Lord. At a survey of the success which has attended our poor labors, and instrumentality, feeble and inadequate as truly we feel it to be, during the year, we cannot but exclaim with equal wonder and gratitude, "what hath God wrought."

The Synod moreover, beg leave to say that the Sabbath School Institution amongst us is generally increasing as to the number of scholars, as well as improving in the skill and devotedness of the teachers, in this very important branch of christian enterprise. Hardly a church within our limits but what maintains at least one school. Some of the churches deserve our special notice and approbation for their zeal and efficiency in this holy work. Very many of the Sunday Schools have been visited of the Holy Spirit, & numbers of the dear youth, the hope of Zion, have not only given their hearts to God; but have been received into covenant with his church and people, on profession of their faith. These generally have thus far given as good evidence of true piety as adult converts.

The tract distribution is carried on by our churches to some extent, and the plan of monthly tract circulation has been adopted by some of the churches, embracing the town in which they live. This measure has been favorably received by the community; there being but very few families who decline accepting of the tract, when brought by the hand of christian kindness to their fire-side.

Together with our revivals the spirit of the great christian enterprise and general benevolence, distinguishing the present day, has been enkindled. In these revivals it has found a kindred element. Here, if it has not been produced altogether, where it was not, or was well nigh extinguished; it has been, at least essentially nourished and strengthened. Numbers of our young men, the fruit of these revivals, looking at the already "whitened field" of the world, because they had no money to give, have cheerfully given themselves to the Lord, and are now preparing for the work of the ministry, while many others, who used to give ten dollars, for the support of the Cospel, will now give a hundred. We find indeed that they who sow sparingly in christian liberality, reap also sparingly in spiritual things. Where a worldly spirit pervades the Church, insomuch that its members cannot make great sacrifices to support the Gospel—these churches droop and die. But where a handful have come forward, and have said with tears to Christ's ambassadors, "come into our town—we will support you—preach the gospel to every creature," (& in some cases three or four men have thus pledged to support a minister,)—these churches, are greatly blessed and built up. Numbers of them are now able to maintain the ordinances of grace, without any difficulty; and not only to sustain themselves, but contribute liberally to the public charities of the day.

With great satisfaction this Synod observes that the cause of Temperance is constantly, tho' slowly gaining ground over our territory. In one instance a revival grew out of a temperance meeting; and the pledge of entire abstinence has been received from the candidates for admission into the churches generally. We have heard of but one church that has not proposed it to their candidates. To us, as a Synod, it is abundantly clear, that the truth of the Gospel will prevail in the world, and piety flourish in the church, just as this Hydra is slain all over the earth. Especially do we think that the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, should immediately wash their hands from the accursed thing, "touching, tasting, and handling it not." We hear from all parts of the Synodical bounds, "the temperance cause is the pioneer of revivals." With this sentiment, our own actual experience and observation entirely coincide.

Amid these cheering and comforting prospects however, there are some things to discourage and make us sad. Many of our churches are destitute of the stated means and ordinances of Grace. Some of these churches are so, from feebleness and want of zeal and energy; and others are vacant, by the frequent change of ministers among us, and but few new ones coming in. In Genesee Presbytery alone embracing but one county, there are seven or eight churches vacant;—three or four of these able to support the Gospel, with little, if any foreign aid. We want laborers in the ministry to break to our people the bread of life.

Another thing we have to mourn over is, that the Spirit of prayer and activity in our blessed Master's service appears to have declined in many of the churches during the past summer. Brethren, this ought not so to be. Has not the Lord Jesus done enough for us already to secure our utmost confidence in him, and utmost devotedness to his cause, till we die?

Again we are grieved to see the spirit of Infidelity, and the pernicious and vain hope of universal salvation, occupy still so much dominion over the minds and hearts of deluded mortals. Nor is the error which denies the eternal Deity of our Lord and Saviour less pernicious or less prevalent within the bounds of some of the Presbyteries. These errors, and others less fatal to the souls of men have been brought, and now are in the field, against us. The abettors of these doctrines have greatly opposed, and bitterly withstood both our words and actions. Correct, as they undoubtedly are, in their judgment, that their cause & ours are at eternal variance, and that the up-building of the one is of necessity, the overthrow and ruin of the other, they have heaped upon us much reproach, charged us with designs upon the liberties of our country, and ascribed our best exertions to save souls from Hell to the basest motives. "Nevertheless, none of these things move us, neither do we account our lives dear so that we may finish our course with joy, and the testimony of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." If our past exertions, to save sinners from the second death, poor as these exertions are, be "vile," we hope, we "will be more vile than this."

We are likewise compelled to express our deep regret that the cause of Temperance is not making more rapid progress. We beg this great, flourishing, and intelligent public among whom we dwell; we beg Christian denominations whom we fellowship as brethren in Christ; and especially beg of every communicant under our care; to come to our help in this great and good cause. Christ's kingdom cannot come except as the Demon of strong drink is banished from every walk of Society.

One thing more we cannot but name among our discouragements, and which we regard with unmingled sorrow and commiseration is, that sinners are waxing more and more hardened in proportion to the greatness and intensity of the Spirit's work, in those places where he has displayed his richest grace and power, before the eyes of saints and sinners. Thus it is our painful lot to find our fellow men absenting themselves from the means of grace, and especially from a second course of protracted meetings, where the first had been greatly blessed; and absenting 'or fear, as we think, that they should be converted and their souls saved. How distressing to witness many of our dear fellow men thus falling easy victims to Satan before the threshhold of the city of Refuge and within sight of the cross; falling such victims by believing a lie, and posting swiftly toward the place of outer and everlasting darkness! Tho' our Master told us that some would be hardened and speak evil of the way of life;—yet the sight thereof makes us weep. Let it be added further, that four days' meetings have been eminently owned of God, in the promotion of these glorious revivals narrated in this paper.

To conclude, we say to our churches, and to all the friends of the Redeemer, let us go forward in the great and glorious work, trusting in Israel's God. To go back, or even to be stationary, is to die the death of a traitor.

The cause is the Lord's and must prevail until Jesus shall reign King of the nations. Let us be faithful unto the death; at which time we are assured that we shall be received of our divine Master with the plaudits of good and faithful servants;—Yea, that we shall sit with Him on his throne, even as he has overcome and is set down with the Father on his throne.

For the Observer.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A THOROUGHLY EDUCATED MINISTRY.

Mr. Chipman:—As an additional argument, to thorough, systematic education in the ministry, I would mention the importance of an humble, teachable spirit. No other qualification will supply the want of humility, and when a minister is beyond the disposition to learn, he is far above the office of the christian ministry. I am aware, that, to many, this will appear a very singular argument, as it is one which is most always brought on the opposite side. Yet I am confident of the truth of the assertion, that men are generally humble and teachable in proportion to the extent of their knowledge, and that no class of men are more in danger of being arrogant and proud on the subject of religion and doctrinal theology, than those who are uneducated. I here make no invidious distinction by appealing to existing facts and the observation of men; for it would not be difficult to establish the probability, if not the certainty of this position, a priori. Thoroughly educated men are better acquainted with the extent and powers of their own minds;—the correct principles of reasoning, and the limits of reasoning on any given subject: They know better where to suspend their investigations; to make the boundary between established principles and mere hypothesis; between what is knowable and what is conjectural. In their investigations they are not so ignorant of difficulties, and hence, take up opinions at first with more diffidence and caution.

Nothing is more common, than for a young man, to embrace his system without one shadow of doubt: all is perfectly clear to him and he wonders at the blindness and stupidity of older theologians: but as he advances in the subject of sacred science, he finds it extending and demanding the highest order of intellectual power: much, that once was perfectly plain, becomes abandoned altogether: many things appear very doubtful and he holds others with becoming diffidence, and while he becomes increasedly firm in the substantial doctrines of experimental and practical piety, the system of theology spreads before him like a mighty ocean, too broad to explore, and too deep to fathom, and eternity is made doubly dear in hope of mysteries to be revealed and the wonders of redemption to be studied and admired forever.

An educated man may bring the result of his laborious investigation, which may be so clear, that while it will greatly benefit his hearers, they will not for a moment think of the pride of human learning, or perhaps I should say this is the natural tendency and the right use of human learning. As illustration, we may refer to the huge folios of scholastic jargon, which, in ages past, astonished and bewildered, and the modern disquisitions in sacred literature, which so delight and instruct the mind. Men are in danger of maintaining opinions with great confidence, being fully persuaded of their truth when they have but a partial and superficial view of them, and they are more disposed, than any other men, to talk learnedly, to make up their real deficiency by the affectation of learning. I have only to refer to the preaching and writings of the English and Scotch clergy, in proof of this, to say nothing of the preachers of our own country. No men talk so much about the original languages, in which the Bible was written as those who never studied them—and none quote more abundantly from the lore of past ages, than such as seldom read at all. And no men are more disposed to enter at once & fearlessly into the most profound and difficult branches of theology, than those who are young and such as are perfectly ignorant of it, either as a system or a science. Those subjects, that are the most purely metaphysical and complicated, such as regeneration, faith &c. are the first to be seized and investigated, and the difficulties of mental philosophy, which baffled the minds of Locke, Stewart and Edwards, are clear as noon or die away as by enchantment before them; while they appear from their hearts to pity men of their character and with true sincerity, return thanks, that the days of ignorance are past and metaphysical subtleties, and that men now walk by the clear light of the bible. I have not a doubt of the sincerity of such men and that the whole system of theology appears very plain to them, while they look upon learning as only calculated to ensnare and bewilder. When advised to a course of study, they feel, that it would be to suspend and destroy their usefulness, and often they are heard to compassionate men who are lumbered with logic, metaphysics and systematic theology, and with, I fear as much complacency as piety, boast of preaching the gospel free and untrammeled—and at the same time asking, with no small degree of confidence; "were the apostles college learned men"—"was Jesus Christ?" thus intimating that they are their true and accepted followers. I should be glad to say to all such, yes, the apostles were educated men, in the truest and highest sense of the word. Yes they were divinely taught by Him who was himself divine, and who though divine and descended from heaven to teach mankind, entered not upon his ministry till he had reached the age of man's maturity, and then, diligently instructed his disciples, for the space of three years, before he would invest them with the ministerial office; nor would he send them forth, even then, till the Holy Ghost had descended to inspire them. When the men to which I have alluded have spent as much time in preparation for the ministry as the apostles did, and are as well instructed as they were, it will be early enough for them to make the enquiries above. As a general remark, those men who are the most learned, make the least attempt to show it, and are, (other things being equal) the most humble men.

In connexion with the above argument, I mention the value of humble confidence, that is, the importance of being well established and rationally convinced of the correctness of the sentiments we preach, coming as the apostle said, when he had closed a course of sublime reasoning, "with boldness," that is with CONFIDENCE. This is perfectly consistent with humility, and can, from the nature of the case, exist in the minds of such only as have come to their conclusions by fair and legitimate reasoning, and who, from investigation have proofs at hand, to satisfy their own minds and the minds of their hearers. All other confidence is secured and maintained by hazardous assumptions, and strengthened by boldly and positively demanding the assent of others upon individual and personal authority. We should remember that assertion is not argument, nor is positiveness, demonstration. Yet it is all important that a minister of the gospel be able to satisfy his own mind, and to give a reason to his hearers, which while it shall enlighten their minds, will establish them in the conviction of the truth. In closing this topic, I am forcibly reminded of the proverb of the wise man, "the sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason."

As I have to an unexpected and perhaps to an undesired extent protracted this discussion and as the field continually widens before me, I shall briefly state a few more arguments without extended illustration.

1. I have stated that Jesus Christ did not enter on his ministry till he was thirty years old; this fact together with the age and experience required in the Jewish priesthood, and the age and qualification demanded in the case of the apostles, with the addition of what Paul says on the subject, fully settles the question, that age, experience, rich intellectual resources, as well as true piety, are required in all who enter the ministry. I can see no warrant in the bible for assuming the character of a religious teacher without them.

2. The pulpit is to the great mass of the people the only medium of religious instruction, and in fact, about all they learn, on this momentous subject—is from their minister.

3. We have tried the experiment, of supplying the deficiency in the ministry, by a short and partial course of study, and the attempt has failed to example; the Bangor Theological Seminary. The Institution was erected for that purpose, and having failed of success, a thorough course of study is now adopted.

4. Other denominations have long tried the experiment and are fast abandoning it.

5. Inadequate preparation for the ministry will create two classes of ministers, and thus endanger the harmony and unity of the church.

6. Union of all christians, is to be ardently desired. This union will never be secured, until the minds of men are enlightened and the ministers of the gospel, by full and fair investigation of the Scriptures, aided by correct principles of biblical interpretation and of intellectual philosophy, shall be made to see eye to eye, and preach the same truth, in all its substantial and important articles. Union of sentiment is the only way to secure union of feeling and of action.

7. Uneducated ministers, from the extravagance of their assertions, the looseness of their preaching and the frequent absurdities of their conclusions, do much towards creating and perpetuating prejudice against the gospel and religion; and also of creating and perpetuating open and avowed infidelity.*

8. The valuable influence of a learned ministry, on the other learned professions and on the literary and scientific character of the community.

The last direct argument, which I shall adduce, in favor of a learned ministry, is its influence on the liberties of our country, and on this subject, volumes could be written, showing the intimate relation, that correct theological sentiments and ecclesiastical economy, hold with the principles of rational liberty. Place a learned and evangelical minister, in every community of a thousand souls, within the United States and there would be a security to our republican liberties, which no wisdom of legislation, no diplomatic policy, no force of martial power could give. Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, is a sentiment of gospel truth that has an extent of meaning not always apprehended. The genius of the gospel is suited to secure the rational liberties of men,—and kings and arbitrary power die away before it. The ecclesiastical polity of the leading evangelical denominations of this country; is founded on the most strict republican principles and I may say with safety, that these republican principles were first conceived and inculcated, by men, who drew them from the divinely constituted economy of the Bible.

I shall allude to a few historical facts on this subject and leave it for the examination of your readers. When and under what influence was the act of uniformity repealed by the British Parliament? I reply, under the influence of men, who cordially embraced and ably defended the sentiments of evangelical religion and of republican representation in the church. The dissenting pulpits of England bore upon the throne with tremendous power, and was it not a power favorable to the cause of civil liberty? The corporation and Test Acts; how were they abolished? I answer by men of the same religious principles, while men of opposite principles opposed them with all their power.

The time was early when the state sought an alliance with the church. Henry the VIII. consummated this unnatural alliance, and it continued so long, and so intimate, that many good men thought it right and essential to the best good of both church and state. Out of this relation grew undue and ruinous reciprocal influences. There was one man, among the Reformers who was first to discover and apply an adequate remedy. "He was bred to the profession of the law." Having fully embraced the doctrines of the Reformation, "he became the best ecclesiastical historian and the ablest commentator on the bible of his age." He retraced the wanderings of ecclesiastical polity and approximated the primitive discipline of the church. He safely balanced clerical and ecclesiastical power by reducing all the ministers of the gospel to an equality, as far as their sacred office was concerned, and introduced the representation and equal authority of laymen in the government and discipline of the church, which he boldly

*A writer of first rate sense and extensive observation, in speaking of the extent and grossness of infidelity in the valley of the Mississippi, attributes it, in a great measure, to the extreme want of education in the professed teachers of religion, and many seriously question whether the multitude of itinerant, uneducated men who have gone into that country as preachers of the gospel, have on the whole aided at all the cause of truth and vital piety.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 20 1831

☞ The absence of the Editor will be considered a sufficient apology for any deficiency in the editorial department of this paper.

Cato, Cayuga Co. N. Y.—We learn that a powerful work of grace is in progress in this place. A four days meeting recently held there was attended with the most happy results. Many open and violent opposers have been brought to lay down the weapons of their rebellion.—One incident is worthy of note. Several individuals who had been remarkable for their infidelity & profligate habits, yet possessing much influence, met for prayer in the place where one week before they had assembled for the unholy purpose of gambling and carousing. Many persons of talents and wealth are numbered among the fruits of the revival.

We learn from the last Cherokee Phœnix that Judge Clayton, at a late sitting of the Superior Court of Walton Co. Ga., decided that the Cherokees have the right to dig gold on their own lands, the act of the last session of the legislature of that state to the contrary notwithstanding. A Cherokee prisoner, who was confined in jail in that county for digging his own gold, was discharged.

The Phœnix further states that the Georgia Guard have taken possession of a missionary station, compelling the Cherokee family, in whose charge Mr. Thompson had left the premises, to remove.

We are compelled to omit the notice of the "Genesee Manual Labor Seminary." It came to hand too late for this paper. The communication of "S." is necessarily delayed. "An Old Connecticut Man," was received too late for this paper.

We take pleasure in removing from our advertising column the Sheriff's notice of the sale of St. Paul's church of this village. The judgment we understand has been satisfied. We are also informed that the congregation of that church are making an effort to relieve it from financial embarrassments, two individuals having made a donation of $1,500 each.

Mr. Chipman;—The enclosed Narrative of the State of Religion within the bounds of the Synod of Genesee is forwarded to you for publication in the Rochester Observer, by their order.

NORRIS BULL, Stated Clk of Synod.
Brockport, Sept. 22d, 1831.

NARRATIVE.

The Synod of Genesee, in reviewing the field of labor allotted them in Divine Providence, during another year, are constrained to adopt the words of the Psalmist, "Not unto us O Lord, not unto us; but to thy name be the glory, for thy truth and mercy's sake."

Last year, only a few churches indeed, were reported as refreshed by the dews of divine grace: but this year, we are happy to say, that but few, within our bounds, are left without sharing, less or more, in the blessing of God. To state each of these cases, in their details separately would exceed the usual limits of a brief Narrative of this kind. A minute detail of each, moreover, is the less necessary, as the history of one, is, for substance, the history of all the others. For both the means by which they have been effected, under God, and also their particular results very much resemble each other.

As to the means producing these happy revivals amongst us, there is nothing remarkably new in them. They consist chiefly of a close application of the word to the sinner's conscience, and prayer. After the word is plainly and faithfully preached, then ministers and christians take hold on God, and plead his promises by prayer. These simple but scriptural means, have been followed in this western district of New-York, with the divine blessing, in a very signal and glorious manner. Such has been the result invariably wherever these means have been fairly tried, altho' in some churches more so than in others. Yes, and we believe that such will be their result always, as long as there are sinners to be converted, and the Lord Jesus Christ has a church to pray on earth. What we mean by close preaching is the undone condition of the sinner, and the all-sufficiency of Christ clearly held forth to men; together with taking away all the false and destructive refuges of sinners. Then they are pressed to unconditional & immediate submission to Christ, by every consideration of divine truth presented in an affectionate manner. We endeavor to preach and pray, as if we expected sinners would be converted without delay.

The general result of these means within our bounds are very blessed out-pourings of the Holy Ghost. Multitudes of sinners are converted; and the churches have been greatly enlarged and edified. Much brotherly love among the members of a particular church has been awakened, as well as much greater affection, and union of effort amongst the churches and ministers round about. The great love of christians to those ministers, particularly, that have been with them during the revivals; & that had wept and prayed with them over anxious sinners, is both pleasing and abundant. At no period, since the planting of our church in this part of the Vineyard of our Lord, did we enjoy such a degree of brotherly love and harmony.

The Presbytery of Buffalo report 900 communicants added to their churches during the year.—Twenty churches have enjoyed a season of divine grace. Among the more favored, in this respect, are Buffalo, Sheridan, Evans, and Aurora. The revival in Evans had its origin in a meeting convened on the subject of Temperance. At Aurora, a protracted meeting was held the summer past, continued for 10 days. The assembly at last grew so large that they adjourned to a neighboring grove, where it is thought nearly 3000 people were present the last Sabbath of the meeting. During that meeting, no less than from 200 to 300 hopeful conversions took place. The church there from a broken and distracted state, of long standing, is now happily united and is in a very prosperous condition. A number of the feeble churches, hitherto unable to support a stated ministry, are now able.—"The desert is truly, in some measure, made to rejoice, and blossom as the rose."

From the Presbytery of Genesee, no regular report has been received; but by information verbally communicated in Synod from the members of that Presbytery, it appears that fifteen churches located in an equal number of towns, have been visi-

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

declared, that the civil arm had nothing to do with religion, but to afford it protection. This man was JOHN CALVIN. It was this man who re-introduced the principle of ministerial equality and of republican representation to the church, which began to disappear under Constantine and died away in the reign of Henry VIII. This principle of state and ecclesiastical polity, not his religious doctrines, has rendered John Calvin obnoxious to the friends of arbitrary power, both in church and state, in every country of the civilized world. From the day in which he lived to the present hour, "his bitterest enemies have always been found among those whose church and state governments most approximate to a monarchy." A wise man declares, "that all the principles of religious liberty, which are now embodied in the fundamental laws of our country, were taught by men of Calvin's school, long before the fathers of those who framed our institutions were born." These principles were brought to this country,—when a trackless wilderness—they were cordially cherished, clearly exhibited and broadly developed in our revolution and have perpetuated, to this hour, our civil and religious liberties. I say it without fear of contradiction, the world owes more to the pulpits of the evangelical and Dissenting Ministry in Europe and America, from the days of Cromwell to the present time, in securing a successful result in this experiment with the principles of republican representation both in church and state, than to any other cause whatever. Even Infidel Hume will pay an honest tribute to the influence of the Puritans, where the religious bigot will reiterate the stale charge of ignorance and contracted policy. I will only ask, who were the men who so powerfully opposed the courts of High Commission and the Star chamber? Who opposed the oppressive measures of the house of Stuarts. Who were the men who secured the revolution of 1688? And who advocated and achieved the more splendid revolution of this country! They were men who drank in the spirit of the reformation. Who adopted the ecclesiastical polity of John Calvin, and who generally were the friends of evangelical religion, and for the age in which they lived, men of great intellectual strength and resources. And who I ask, opposed these glorious revolutions and the spread of these religious principles! They were men neither evangelical in their religious sentiments nor republican in their political views.

I wish those men among us, who are so clamorous about religious influence and priestcraft, would examine the history of civil and religious liberty, and learn wisdom from the recorded facts of past years, and be made "to distinguish between things that differ." As I trace the line and mark the influence of an educated, evangelical ministry through the multiplied revolutions of religious and political sentiment, I see a security to the civil liberties of this country in the multiplication of a learned and pious ministry, which can be drawn from no other source whatever. The gospel preached in its purity—the principles of the divine administration clearly developed, and men will know what rational liberty is, and under the guidance of the light of heaven, will be able to preserve it.

Yours, &c. A. D. DDDY.

Canandaigua, Sept. 23, 1831.

For the Observer.

PETER THE FIRST POPE,
AND FOUNDATION OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Dear Sir:—It must appear alarming to every attentive observer, who is interested in the welfare of the Church and the perpetuity of our representative form of government, to behold the spread of Popery and the indefatigable zeal of its deluded advocates. I have witnessed from North to South with painful anxiety the rapid growth of Popery; striking deep its roots in the fertile soil of Columbia: it is impossible in the nature of things, that Popery and Republicanism can exist in harmony together; as the iron and the clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image could never become one, for as in the physical so in the moral World, heterogenious quantities, the closer they come in contact the more powerful the opposition. It is not my design to notice the scurrilous pamphlets circulated in your village by some of the pedlars of indulgences; for it carries its own refutation along with it —I have no other object besides endeavoring to defend the Gospel of Jesus Christ and to promote the good of my fellow men. That Peter and the Pope, his supposed successor are the foundation and head of the papacy, is declared by the decrees of the council of Trent, Session 6th Chapt. 1, Session 15, Chap 7th, "That the Roman Bishop is the vicar of Christ, the successor of St. Peter, and has the supreme pastorship over the universal church." If by plain declarations of Scripture I can remove the foundation, the superstructure with all its mummeries must fall to the ground.

The Spirit of God, 1st Corinthians 3 11: declares this doctrine to be false, For other foundations can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus. If Jesus Christ be the foundation and the chief corner stone, how is it possible that there could be a second foundation. If it be true as Belarmine and others maintain, that Christ ment Peter as the foundation, when he says, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," then scripture contradicts itself, the true interpretation is this; Thou art Peter, on this rock, myself, whom thou now hath confessed to be the son of the living God I will build my church; in this manner Peter himself determines this point, 1st Peter 2: 7th, when he speaks of believers coming to the living stone, Jesus Christ the precious corner stone laid in Zion; and he that believeth on me shall not be confounded; common sense if scripture were silent on the subject, might teach rational beings that a frail sinning man could neither be the foundation nor head of the church; Peter thrice denied his master, and Paul withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed; surely this is not a good characteristic of infallibility. That Peter had no unusual supremacy delegated to him, and consequently could not delegate to others what he did not possess himself is evident from the following circumstances, or the plain scriptural declarations Mark 10: 42, Jesus called unto them and said, ye know that they who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise Lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them; but so shall it not be among you, but whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever of you will be chiefest, shall be servant of all. If Peter had been invested with supreme authority over the rest of the disciples, why did Christ use such an universal negation of universal domination. If Peter were Pope why did he not except him, sad declaration! either Jesus had no authority to command, or Peter was no Pope—Math. 19; 28; Jesus speaks of his twelve disciples following him, that when the Son of man should set upon the throne of his glory, they should sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. If Peter had been invested with supremacy over the other Apostles here, why is he not represented as having a throne superior to the rest? But no! instead of superiority, equality in authority is the doctrine of the text. Again; John 20: 21 [illegible] ed upon his disciples and said unto them; receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, and whose sins ye retain, they are retained. Here the power which was supposed to have been given to Peter exclusively, is given to each of the disciples, indiscriminately; whose sins ye retain, plural number: consequently, this authority was not restricted to Peter: it is evident to a demonstration, from these texts that Peter was only equal in power, and authority with the other apostles; hence it is absurd to suppose, he could delegate to others what he had not himself; consequently the Pope must have obtained his authority from some other source than from Peter. Concerning the origin of the Pope's tyrannical power, we are not left in uncertainty; see Revelations, 13: 2, and the Dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. Having derived this great authority from the Dragon, the Devil, consequently, its exercise must tend to promote the interest of him, from whom he received it: that this is the fact, a reference to some of the most zealous advocates of popery will sufficiently show. Belarmine and others, teach that the Pope as a visible judge, in all matters of religion, is absolutely necessary; papists are not content with Christ the judge in Heaven, and the scriptures the judge on earth, but like Israel they must have a visible God to go before them, it be but a calf, hear Belarmine in his own words—De Pontifice Book 4, Chap. 5—If the Pope could, or should so far err, as to command the practice of vice, and to forbid virtuous actions, the Church was bound to believe vices to be good, and virtues to be bad." This is plain dealing, there is none can misunderstand the authority of the Pope, when thus explained by one of the ablest advocates of the Romish Church.

Similar to this is the decree of Gregory the IX, book 1, chapter 3, speaking of his holiness, he says "In what he wills, his will stands for reason, neither may any say why doest thou so! He can make justice out of injustice, by correcting and changing of laws, and has a fullness of power." Council of Trent, book 5, chapter 18, we have more of the christian benevolence of the holy mother church; "We do not esteem them as murderers, who, burning with zeal for the holy catholic mother church, should happen to kill any that are excommunicated; and besides; heretics are reckoned in so black a catalogue, that no faith is to be kept with them." Must not such a system, must not such a people professing that system, cradled in the darkest shades of ignorance, be dangerous to the interests of religion, and to the interests of republicanism; nay, fatal, if God in his providence prevent not! J. F.

For the Observer.

A CHURCH SAVED.

The Church in Orangeville Gen. Co. had in 1828 come nigh to ruin. On the question of retaining a minister, who has since been put out of the work; the church and society became divided and public worship was almost entirely for a season suspended; Mr. A. Mahan since of Pittsford, and who was now cast among them sick at his fathers house, called them together and prepared the way with some aid from the Miss. Society to supply one half of the time. It seemed however to be almost a question of life or death with them. There were but three or four men that maintained family worship; and to maintain public worship when they had no preaching, the deacon must twice lead in prayer and the other exercises were performed by persons who were not members of the church — The years 1829–30 saw their house so far finished as to be a comfortable place of worship; a Sabbath school and bible class in a flourishing state, tracts circulated and six influential men brought into the church.

The way seemed prepared for a protracted meeting which begun June last, & was continued through two Sabbaths and conducted harmoniously by Baptist and Presbyterian ministers.—The results were glorious, whole families were taken, and the society is nearly merged in the church. Sixty-three on one Sabbath united with the Presbyterians and twenty-four have joined the Baptists; others it is expected, will make a profession of their faith in Christ. This is a great work in a small society, and holds forth encouragement to persevering effort among the people of God in sustaining that gospel which is designed to sanctify and to save.

For the Observer.

DUTY.

Converts.—Lord, what wilt thou have me to do!

Jesus Christ.—Go preach the Gospel.

One Convert.—But I am engaged in business

J. C.—Follow me and I will make you fishers of men.

Evangelist.—And they forsook their nets and followed him.

Another Convert.—But I am a Physician.

Bible.—Luke the Beloved Physician.

L. C.—Let the dead bury their dead—[The sick take care of their sick.

Another Convert.—I am a Lawyer.

Paul—Bring Tenas the Lawyer.

Another.—I am a Merchant.

Bible.—And as Jesus passed from thence he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the recent of Custom: and he saith unto him follow me. And he arose and followed him.

Another Convert.—I will follow thee but suffer me first to go and bid them farewell at my house.

Jesus Christ.—No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God.

Another Convert.—But I have married a wife.

Bible.—And when Jesus was come into Peter's house he saw his wife's mother laid and sick with a fever.

Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all and followed thee. And he said unto them verily I say unto you; there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren or wife or children for the Kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in the present time and in the world to come life everlasting.

For the Observer.

DUTY.

Mr. Editor:—A few prominent facts in relation to a revival of religion, which has been in progress among the Tuscarora Indians the present year will, it is believed, interest the friends of Zion. Said revival commenced with power about the middle of February last. The Church then consisted of 15 members, who with a few exceptions, "slumbered and slept." 3 of our christian brothers, and six or eight impenitent persons, attended a four days meeting held in Lockport February 10th. Four or five of the latter class returned home we trust, in a justified state, having been reconciled and brought nigh unto God by the blood of his holy Son, during the meeting. The former returned baptized with the Holy Ghost. The members of the church soon learned that, which had long been pressed and enforced, viz. believing agonizing prayer and corresponding effort, are the great secret of revivals. Families and neighborhoods were visited, prayer offered, and obdurate sinners might be [illegible] their consciences; [illegible] and 21854, for the contingent expenses of the General Assembly. The total of these collections is $101,902.16.

Our increase, during the year past, has been in Synods 1; Presbyteries 6; in churches 95; in ordained ministers 93; and in the additions of communicants 4339. After making allowance for deaths, dismissions and other removals, our net gain appears to be no more than 3033. This is owing to no returns from many churches. The real increase cannot have been less than 15,000; and our total of communicants if all reported, would be 190,000. Our 1500 ordained and licensed preachers of the word exceed those of 1830 by 89. Our licentiates are fewer than they were a year ago, by 4, and our Candidates for the ministry, by 18. The baptism of adults last year exceed those of 1830 by 1135; the infant baptisms decreased by 4; and the increase in the total of baptisms was 1131. The grand total of charitable contributions reported is less this year than the preceding year, by $82,490.66.

EZRA STILES ELY, stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

DOMESTIC.

REPORTED INSURRECTION AT WILMINGTON N. C.—A slip from the Baltimore Patriot states that a letter to Mr. Barnum, keeper of the City Hotel, from his brother in Raleigh, N. C. brought information that the town of Wilmington has been burnt by the negroes! We are very much inclined to doubt the correctness of this report, as we are informed that letters two days later from Raleigh make no mention concerning it. A gentleman who arrived yesterday from Baltimore, informs us that very little credit was attached to the report in that city.

The Raleigh Star of the 15th inst. two days later than the date of the letter, says,—"On Tuesday evening (the 13th) certain intelligence from various quarters reached us of an insurrection having occurred on Sunday night last, in a part of Sampson and Duplin counties. Its extent or the damage done is unknown to us; but as the militia have been called out in the adjacent counties, we flatter ourselves that it will be speedily suppressed." A meeting of the citizens of Raleigh had taken place in consequence of the intelligence of the insurrection, and energetic measures were adopted for the security of the citizens.—Jour. Com.

From the Fayetteville Obs. of 14th Sept

Rumoured Insurrectionary Movements in Sampson County.—We have an unpleasant duty to perform, in acquainting our readers, that there is no doubt of a conspiracy having been recently formed among a portion of the slaves in the counties of Sampson and Duplin, in this State.—Suspicion having been excited, we learn that during the last week, a slave of Thos. L. Morrissey, Esq. Sheriff of Sampson, who had been esteemed very faithful, and was usually entrusted with his master's wagon whenever it was sent to Wilmington, was arrested, and on examination, confessed that he and six or seven others had designed to bring about an insurrection on the first of October ensuing. That their plan was to muster what forces they could in those two counties, and thence to proceed to Wilmington, where they expected to collect a large force. The negroes implicated by him were arrested, and committed for trial.

What we have subsequently heard, we trust has grown out of the above circumstance, or at least is greatly exaggerated; but we do not feel at liberty to withhold it from our readers, and therefore state, that on Monday evening an express arrived here from Clinton, in Sampson, bringing letters from a respectable gentleman in that village, stating, upon the authority of two persons, names not mentioned, who had come express to Clinton, at 12 o'clock on Sunday night, that the negroes had embodied themselves to the number of 500, about 17 miles from Clinton, in what direction it was not stated; but from the known intimacy and connexion existing between Mr. Morrissey and the gentleman at Clinton, we infer that the express came from Mr. Morrissey, who lives near the line of Duplin county, about 14 miles from Clinton. The letters received here, state that an express had been forwarded to Wilmington.

When the stage from this place arrived at Wilmington on Monday morning, it was immediately despatched back without any mail except a letter from C. Dudley, Jun., Esq. Postmaster, to the Postmaster here, informing him that the place was under martial law, in consequence of information received at 8 o'clock that morning, that the negroes, to the number of two hundred, had encamped on Sunday night, at Rockfish Bridge, in Duplin 40 miles from Wilmington, and about 50 miles from this place; that they were; and had been for several days, expected at Wilmington. The letter was written in great haste and excitement: Mr. Dudley had been under arms all the morning.

It is evident that the account received here, and that which produced such excitement at Wilmington, proceeded from the same source; and our readers may conjecture how much both accounts are exaggerated, from the circumstance that they vary so materially in the numbers stated to be assembled. For our own part we confidently hope it is nothing more than a false alarm, growing out of the arrests stated above.

The Richmond compiler of the 15th says:—

We understand that a letter was received yesterday from the country of Fauquier, which alludes to circumstances calculated to excite some attention in that quarter of the country. As a measure of precaution the same letter applied to the Governor for a supply of arms—which, we presume, will be immediately sent to the county.

EXECUTIONS.—A slip from the office of the Norfolk Herald announces the result of the trial in Southampton county, as far as they had proceeded.

The following slaves had been condemned and executed. About thirty more remain to be tried.

Daniel, belonging to Richard Porter; Moses, to Thomas Barrow; executed on the 5th inst.

Hercules, (or Hark,) belonging to Jos. Travis; San. to N. Francis; Nelson to J. Williams; Davy, to Levi Waller; Nat, to Edward Tutner's est; executed on the 3d inst.

Davy, belonging to Eliz Turner; Curtis and Stephen, to Thos. Tidley, executed on the the 12th inst.

To be executed on Tuesday next, Isaac, belonging to G. H. Carlton.

Removed to Richmond—punishment commanded transportation: Jack and Andrew.

Recommended to mercy—Nathan, Tom and Davy, belonging to Nath. Francis; Hardy and Isham, to Benjamin Edwards.

INSURRECTION AT CARACCAS.

On the 11th May, the black population of the Caraccas rose and took forcible possession of the goal, from which they liberated about 150 prisoners. The Governor of the prison and several others were killed, but the police, aided by the inhabitants, restored tranquility. These formed themselves into a guard, and about 140 persons concerned in the rising were arrested, of whom thirty (including two women) were shot. At Santa Martha the Tiradores revolted, and on the 25th July took possession of the authorities. On the 27th, the militia, assisted by the Indians, who came to the support of the Government, succeeded in quelling the revolt.

GENEVA LYCEUM.

Arrangements have been made for opening, in the Village of GENEVA, on the 5th of October next, a Classical Seminary, to be called "THE GENEVA LYCEUM."

For this purpose the Family Mansion of the late Dr. Axtell has been purchased. This situation, as is generally known, is retired, elevated and healthful, commands a beautiful view of Seneca Lake, and is embosomed in a delightful grove of native growth.

The object of this Institution is to help forward our Young Men in the accomplishment of a thorough, practical Education for usefulness. It has no design to diminish public confidence in the Colleges and Theological Seminaries of our country, or to degrade the learned professions by recommending a short and superficial preparation.

As a School introductory to the regular Collegiate and Professional course; to fit Young Men, where circumstances require, for an advanced standing in College; to complete their education for the pursuits of Commerce and Agriculture, or to qualify them to be competent Instructers in Common Schools; the Lyceum aims to afford the highest advantages.

That the energies of the body may not be sacrificed to the improvement of the mind, special attention will be directed to the cultivation of the physical powers. An extensive GARDEN, and WORK-SHOPS, will furnish opportunities to the Pupils to devote a portion of each day to the most productive kind of Manual Labor, and thus to defray, wholly or in part, the current expenses of their education.

For the instruction of the School, the PRINCIPAL will be aided by as many ASSISTANT TEACHERS as the number of Students may render necessary.

Instruction will be given in Reading, Writing, Orthography, Elocution, Composition, Geography, and History, Botany, and Geology, Mathematics, Civil Engineering, Astronomy, Natural Philosophy and Chemistry, the Latin and Greek Classics, together with the French and Spanish Languages. It is is intended to have regular Courses of Lectures on Physical Sciences. Advantage will also be taken of a Course of Lectures in Philology, Moral Philosophy, Natural and Revealed Religion, during the Winter term, by an Association of Gentlemen of this village.

Pupils from abroad to the number of twenty, can be accommodated with board in the family of the Principal. By a tender and vigilant regard to their comfort, manners and morals, every effort will be made to provide, as far as possible, an equivocal for parental guardianship at home. The charges in this department will be $1,75 per week for Board and lodging; and $2,00 for board, lodging and washing: Or youth will be taken in the family of the Principal, and furnished with instruction, board, washing, mending, fuel and light, for $150 per year, payable quarterly.

The Academical year will be divided into four quarters: these will be embraced in two seasons —the first, to commence after the present year, on the third Wednesday of September; the second on the third Wednesday of May.

A Vacation of four weeks will follow the close of each Season.

Tuition to those who pay quarterly, will be $6,00 per Quarter. The French and Spanish languages, will be subject to a separate charge.

The Founders of the Geneva Lyceum have been urged to this enterprise by the demand for a Manual Labor School in this vicinity, and with the hope of affording increased facilities and encouragements to Young Men in the pursuit an education for usefulness, especially in the Christian Ministry.

ELEAZER LATHROP, Principal.

GENEVA, AUGUST 27, 1831.

We omit the two closing paragraphs and the recommendations of the Rev. Clergymen, of Geneva, Canandaigua and a large number of other members and Laymen. The object of this school is sufficient to recommend it to public patronage!

SUMMARY STATISTICAL REPORT
Of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, for June 1st, 1831.

The General Assembly now has under its spiritual government TWENTY SYNODS; ONE HUNDRED AND FOUR PRESBYTERIES; 1584 ordained Bishops; 216 licentiate preachers; 215 candidates in a course of preparation for the ministry; 2253 churches; and 182,017 communicants. From April 1st 1830 to April 1st 1831, we have returns of 20354 persons received to the full communion of the Presbyterian Church, of whom 15357 were added on examination and profession of their faith; and 4997 were by certificate, either translated from sister churches, or removed from one of our congregations to another. In the same period, 4390 adult persons and 12198 infants were baptized; which gives a total 16588 baptisms. The collection of funds reported for the same year amount to $47,501.70 for domestic and foreign missions; $3880.30 to defray the expense of the Commissioners to the last Assembly, whose joint travel to and from Philadelphia was very near to 100,000 miles; $16,884.30 for the use of different Theological

FOREIGN.

The Editors of the N. Y. Spectator have received London papers of the 9th, and Liverpool of the 10th August, which contain the following important news.

It announces that the King of Holland, dissatisfied with the Protocol which placed Leopold on the throne of Belgium, had, after the termination of the armistice on the 4th of August, marched an army into Belgium, said to be 80,000 strong. In consequence of this, Leopold despatched messengers to England and France, requesting of these powers that protection which they had promised him. On receiving his message Louis Philip immediately summoned a Cabinet Council, consisting of M. Perier and his colleagues, who it appears had not been displaced, at which it was resolved to send Marshal Gerard at the head of 50,000 men, to protect Belgium and preserve the neutrality guaranteed by the Protocol. The King's two sons, the Dukes of Orleans and Nemours, had joined the army. The English government, on their part, fitted out a fleet under the command of Admiral Codrington, to proceed to the Scheldt, and co-operate with the French.

From Poland this arrival furnishes nothing important.—The Russians were advancing on Warsaw.

The Cholera was, we are glad to observe, abating in it its ravages in Russia. Recent accounts from Russia, by commercial letters, state that the emperor Nicholas is attacked with a consumptive complaint, which is bringing him gradually to his grave.—The news of the approaching termination of his life is accompanied by reflections on the fate of the various Emperors of Russia since Paul I. The masters of this vast empire, by wishing to rule through means disproportioned to the resources of the country, create general discontent. No weak Emperor can reign for any length of time in Russia.—The Grand Duke Constantine, who will succeed his father, is not more than five years old, and great events cannot fail to take place on his accession to the throne.—Courier Francais.

Declaration of the Renewal of Hostilities against Belgium by the King of Holland.

We (Globe) have received this morning the following important announcement from our private correspondent at Brussels:

"Brussels, Aug. 2, 1831, (evening.)—The important intelligence has just reached us that General Chasse has declared that the armistice will be at an end on Thursday, the fourth August, at nine o'clock in the evening. This news has excited the greatest sensation in this capital. Groups of people, gathered round the cafes and on the public places are discussing it with a lively interest. Couriers are despatched in all directions. His Majesty, King Leopold, who is now at Liege, would, of course, receive the intelligence direct from Antwerp. It will, no doubt, accelerate his return hither."

The following is an extract of a letter from Lloyd's agent at Antwerp, dated 2d inst. in relation to the same determination:

"A notice of the cessation of the armistice between the Dutch and the Belgians arrived at the head-quarters in this city at one o'clock, A. M. It was sent by General Chasse, upon orders from his Majesty King William, notifying that on Thursday next, at half-past nine P. M., each belligerent should be considered at liberty to commence hostilities. General Chasse adds in his letter, that if provoked sooner by any act of hostility, he would consider himself necessitated to open his fire. The town is in a state of great alarm."

Our correspondent's letter was accompanied by the Belgian Independant of the date of yesterday, but printed on Tuesday evening, previously to the news being made public, but while something of the sort was fully expected. The reluctance of the latter on the headlong determination of the King of Holland, read with a due allowance for pardonable nationality, are such as will occur to every calm spectator of the peculiar situation of Holland, and the commercial interests which this rashness may place in jeopardy. We may collect, both directly and indirectly, that the main reliance is on Prussia but it is difficult to perceive how Prussia can defend Holland without drawing on either a general war or a wider interference.

From the London Herald.

We have nothing to add to our notice of the Paris papers of Saturday. The great political problem of the day—the conduct of Prussia with respect to the Dutch war, is not yet solved; for it seems to be conceded upon all hands that the fiat of a European war or peace must issue from Berlin. The French papers generally lean to the conclusion that Prussia is not hostilely resolved, and it gives diplomatic assurances to the same effect. But a very few days must put an end to all doubt upon the subject. France, it is very evident, is burning for a war—the troops which left Paris on their way to Belgium were loudly cheered and fondly caressed by the people. It will require some judgment to lay the spirit thus unreasonably revoked.

With regard to the co-operations of the French with the Belgium forces, there is a paragraph in an article from Malines, which informs us that the "fact of 40 or 50,000 Frenchmen, coming to assist Leopold against the Dutch does not afford much satisfaction to many of his subjects, for the soldiers and the Civil Guards are not afraid to meet the Dutch single-handed.

From the Times 6th Aug.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 4.—Thursday evening, 6 o'clock.—The greatest enthusiasm prevails in this city & throughout the country. Every preparation is making to repel the invasion of the King of Holland, to whose rage and madness this unexpected aggression is attributed. It is now stated that he will be expelled from that country very soon; for the barbarous manner in which his troops have began the war is regarded as deserving retaliation, and the Belgians threaten, in return for the fire and inundation caused by his soldiers, to enter Holland and devastate it unless he be expelled.

General Bellard arrived in this city last night, and at 3 o'clock he had an interview with the King. He set out this morning for Antwerp, in order to have a personal communication with General Chasse, and if possible to convince him of the dangers which must result to Holland and its King from bombarding Antwerp, which is considered a peaceable city.

M. de Meulenaere, addressed a note to Gen. Chasse dated 3d Aug. stating that the Belgian Government had heard with surprise, the announcement that the armistice was about to end—refers to the Protocol signed by the five Great Powers on 20th Nov. 1830, which caused a suspension of arms between the Dutch and Belgians; and adds that Leopold had referred the affair to the meditating powers, and leaves it to Gen. Chasse, if his sense of duty does not prescribe him to suspend hostilities until answers from London, &c. are received, at the same time informing him that the Belgian commanders had instructions to abstain from all hostilities against the citadel, so long as he (Gen. Chasse) shall not have openly provoked them.

SIR DAVID LAIRD.

At an early hour yesterday morning, the Editors of the Commercial Advertiser received their regular files of London papers to the 10th, Liverpool to the 10th and Glasgow to the 13th August inclusive.

The news by this arrival is of a much more pacific character, than might have been expected from the tenor of the preceding accounts by the Sultan. It seems certain that the King of Holland had no promise of assistance in his invasion of Belgium, from Prussia, or any other power at least he received none, and that the decisive movements of France and England, have forced King William to declare that in commencing hostilities against the Belgians, he had not the slightest wish to embroil himself with the Five Great Powers—that he had regarded the quarrel strictly between himself and the Belgians, and not at all connected with the interests of the Great Powers—but being assured, that a continuance of hostilities will be viewed with dissatisfaction by the Conference, and desirous of remaining on friendly footing with the Great Powers, he will withdraw his Troops within his own Territory, as soon as he shall have received intelligence that the French troops have actually entered Belgium, for he will regard such an entrance as an intimation on the part of France as adopting the quarrel on the part of the Belgians by the Conference. The King of Holland has intimated also, he has sent orders to the commanders of his troops to retire upon the advance of the French army, and on no account to commit any act of hostility after such an advance.

The Prince of Orange Commander-in-chief of the Netherlands Army in a proclamation to the inhabitants of the countries to which the army of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands should penetrate, declares the object of the war to be a more speedy establishment of a durable peace.

A Four Days' Meeting will be holden at the brick church in West Bloomfield, commencing on Thursday, 6th of Oct. next at 11 o'clock, A. M. Ministers and churches in the vicinity are affectionately invited to attend. By order of the con. JULIUS STEELE, Stated Supply.

The Genesee Consociation will meet at Victor, the first Tuesday in October next at 10 o'clock, A. M. WM. P. HENDRICK, Scribe.

Canandaigua, Sept. 23d, 1831.

"O SING PRAISES!"

THE subscriber takes this method to inform the Christian public, that he has in a good degree recovered his health and voice, and is again ready to engage in teaching Psalmody in those societies and churches in this village and vicinity which are anxious to revive this important (tho' too much neglected) part of Divine Worship. A line addressed to him through the P. O. will meet with prompt attention. Also, private instruction will be given to individuals living in the village who may desire it, on reasonable terms. D. CLARK.

☞ The subscriber wishes to dispose of a superior toned CHURCH ORGAN, comprising 8 stops. Price, $800. Piano Fortes tuned on short notice. 403w D. C.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

SIR—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Sec'ry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk, are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, Sheriff.

Rochester, Sept. 20th, 1831. 7w39.

C. J. HILL,

HAVING taken the Stone Flouring Mills near the east end of the Bridge, and established himself in the Flouring business, has removed his Office to the Brick building (opposite the mills) recently occupied by Messrs Ford, Bissell & co., where he will at all times pay Cash for Wheat.

Rochester, 20th Sept. 1831. 39 tf

VALUABLE PROPERTY AT PUBLIC AUCTION.

THE Subscriber as Guardian for the infant heirs of Josiah Bissell, Jr. deceased, and pursuant to an order of the Court of Chancery, will sell at public auction at the Temple Hall in the village of Rochester, on Wednesday, the 5th day of October next, at 12 o'clock, all [illegible] and the Arcade property so called, situated on the east side of the great Falls of [illegible] comprising nearly one half of the water power and every way to be considered as one of the most eligible situations for manufacturing business, in the village of Rochester or its vicinity. The property also comprises about six acres of valuable land, fronting for a considerable distance, on St. Paul street, along which the proposed Rail Road from the canal to the navigable waters of the Genesee river is laid out.

Also—The following valuable property belonging to the estate aforesaid, to wit: A variety of lots of land situated at the corner of Goulah and Clinton sts. in Dublin containing about 10 and 2-3 acres, purchased by J. Bissell, sr. of the heirs of Nathaniel Goulah deceased.

Also—A house and lot recently owned by Russel Green, on Church Hill, in good repair, and well situated.

For terms of sale, and a particular description of the property, application may be made to Everard Peck, Asher W. Riley or S. Wadsworth.

VINCENT MATTHEWS.

VILLAGE LOTS FOR SALE.

The Subscriber offers for sale Village lot No eleven, (11) Caledonia Tract, supposed to contain one acre of land, situated on Homer st. Also village lot No ninety seven, (97) on Carroll, Carnahan Tract, on which is a small dwelling house. Said lots will be sold very cheap, and on liberal credit. EVERARD PECK.

BY virtue of two Executions issued out of the court of Common Pleas, to and for the county of Monroe and to me directed against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen B. Bartlett I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz. All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the town of Henrietta, county of Monroe being—one lot, lying near the [illegible] in the Genesee River, bounded on the S. W. corner of the great Sec. 100—from thence running easterly from the S. W. corner of said lot, to the S. E. corner of the same lot, thence northerly on the line of Abraham and Christopher Hoffman's farm [illegible] north, 2 west, along the Eastern line of Christopher's farm, [illegible] 60° W. East two chains and fifty links, thence south 10° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of said lot number five and six, reference being had to the map and field notes of David Hudson Esq. in the survey of lots number 1 2 3 and 4 and being the same land and was conveyed to Stephen Bartlett, by W. F. Stevenson and wife by deed of June 23d, 1831, which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the Tavern of Mrs. Lowe in East Rochester on Monday the 14th day of Nov. next, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 20th, 1831.

For JAS. SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. SEAMAN, late Under Sheriff.

SCOTT'S & HENRY'S Commentary. Persons by mailing may obtain them by immediate application at the Wholesale Price. Inquire of MITCHELL LODER,

No. 34 Exchange-street, or
Mr. SIBLEY'S Auction Store, Buffalo st. 39tf

CASH FOR FLAX SEED,

THE highest price in Cash is now paid for flax seed at the "Rochester Oil Mill."

JAS K. LIVINGSTON.

Sept 20th, 1831 2w.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

BLESSING ON THE MONTHLY DISTRIBUTION.

The Monthly Tract blessed to a Foreigner.

A Foreigner, in New-York, trained in the Roman Catholic Church, ignorant of religion, and but partially acquainted with the English language, says: "A kind, benevolent young man brought a Tract monthly to the shop where I worked as a journeyman. Sometimes I read the Tract; if I found it an interesting story; but I received and destroyed many of these messages of grace. At length came the Tract, The way to be saved. As soon as I laid my eyes on it, I saw that if I would be saved I must leave off every sin. I felt determined to commence leaving off my aggravating sins, and began to pray. My mind was in such a crisis, that makes me tremble to look back, having no Christian to help me, and ashamed to let my acquaintances know my feelings. But the Lord provided for me a friend, who first led me to cease from working on the Sabbath day, and next to a place where the Gospel is preached. Now I say, The Distributer planted, the Preacher watered, but God alone gave the increase, to whom be glory for ever and ever. And now, "by the grace of God, I am what I am," and God has granted me the great privilege of distributing Tracts.

THE TRACT "TO DAY" FOUND IN A GARRET.

A young Lady in the city of New-York, on her examination for admission to the church, gave, in substance, the following relation:—A few months since, being in one of the upper rooms of her dwelling, her eye caught the title of the Tract To-day, as it lay among some rubish on the floor. She took it in her hand, and felt inclined to peruse it; but hesitated, thinking she might defer it to a more "convenient season." She, however, resolved to read it. As she proceeded her mind was overwhelmed with a sense of her own great sinfulness and of the necessity of applying at once to Christ for pardon and salvation. She formed the solemn purpose of dedicating herself to the Lord, and saw that To-Day was the saviour's appointed time. In that upper room, without leaving it, she trusts she was awakened, convicted, and converted to God through the blessing of the Holy Spirit on that alarming and pungent Tract. She is now in full communion with the church, and gives gratifying evidence of real piety.

THE TRACTS "BIBLE ABOVE ALL PRICE" AND THE "AGE OF REASON"

An Anecdote for those who think Tracts useful only to Children.

In a remote part of my congregation, writes a clergyman of Virginia, there lives a man of great wealth, but who has been entirely without God in the world. Not long since, he received from a member of our church the third volume of Tracts. He read one or two of them, and the impression they made on his mind was so great, that he began to think of the salvation of his soul. He read a third, and sent to know if the other volumes could be obtained. Being informed that they could not for some months, he said to one of his family: "I will shut up the book now, and read but one Tract a-day—I shall get through the book too soon." When he came to Dr. Payson's Tract, The Bible above all price, (No. 71,) he said, "It ought to be written in letters of gold. I have read the Age of Reason until I believed the Bible to be a tissue of falsehoods—now I believe it to be the word of God." This gentleman has ever since been a regular attendant on public worship; and many of those who are interested in his spiritual welfare, have hope that a work of Divine grace has been begun in his soul.

ADMONITION FROM A CHILD.

A gentleman in New-England, who has maintained a religious character through a long course of public life, told me that a remark made by his little son was the means of his conversion. He said that when he became the head of a family, he knew nothing of experimental religion; but having a respect for its institutions, he required his children to keep the Sabbath as a day of rest, and on that day to commit to memory and repeat catechisms and short prayers from their primers. One Sabbath morning while his eldest child was learning his usual lesson, he suddenly looked up, saying, "Father, you pray longer prayers than you learn us, don't you!" The enquiry was like an arrow in his heart, for he felt that instead of praying longer prayers, he did not pray at all. He was convicted of sin, induced to apply for grace from God, and within one week, found peace in believing. And, said he, from that time, through all my public duties, when at home, I have been enabled daily to offer morning and evening prayer with my family.—Parents Gift.

BAPTIST IRISH SOCIETY.

Extracts from the Society's Report.

Reason restored by the Bible.—In the annual Report of this Society, presented June 22, in the meeting at the City of London Tavern, Mr. Allen, one of the Society's agents, speaking of the Hammersmith School, as being in the parish of the Roman Catholic Bishop, and as having been greatly opposed, says—

"In this village a boy resided, who from his infancy had been considered an idiot. He is now about twelve years of age; some of his family too, have been idiots before him. About a year and a half ago, he came to our School, was soon remarked to be less mischevious, has now learned to read, and at the last general inspection, repeated the whole of the first five chapters of Matthew with the utmost readiness and fluency. His neighbors are all aware of this change, and the effect produced by it upon their minds is surprising. They all affirm that the good book, which the priests and bishop condemned, was that by which this change was effected; and that they are determined, in future to send their children; the consequence is, the School is crowded. Waiving all superstitious notions, I would only remark, from what I have seen and heard, it is my decided conviction, that God, in restoring the reason of this boy, has determined to place honor upon his own word, in a village where it had been so long despised; and I have no doubt but, in a way of providence, it will be overruled for good."

Conversion of Roman Catholics.

The name of Mr. William Moore, the Society's long tried and faithful agent, is a sufficient attestation to the following pleasing statements. "I have, I hope, by my letters, during sixteen years, satisfied the Society that numbers, by my feeble labors, have been truly converted to God: many of them have died in the faith. Among the converts, have been nine persons intended for the office of priests in the Romish church who had been to college, and some of them had received the first, second, and third ordination. In this last year, Mr. O. F. has been converted, and is become obedient to the faith. He had just finished his education for the priesthood in the Bishop's Academy, and under the prelate's own tuition. He was of a most excellent character, and universally respected, and his prospects of advancement in the church were considerable; but just as he was arriving at the age to receive ordination, he was seized and for six days together we conversed upon the gospel. The consequence was, that he promptly renounced popery, though at the risk of his life, and with the prospect of losing all temporal support. For nearly two months he endured great persecution, and then it pleased the Lord to open a door, in his providence, for his supply, by a gentleman employing him, with a sufficient income, as a resident tutor to his family. His example in leaving the church of Rome, from his unimpeachable character, and from his relinquishing such prospects of worldly advantage, has had a powerful effect among his former connexions: many of them appear to doubt as to what these things will grow. If the Society had no other instance of usefulness to relate this year, than the conversion of this individual, their labor would not be in vain. In consequence," he adds, "of my employment by the Society, as an Irish Reader of the Scriptures, I have been introduced to all ranks of my countrymen; I have read in their own language the wonderful works of God, to rich and poor; in the mansions of gentlemen of family, and in the cabins of beggars."

Testimony of an Old Man.

An old pauper cripple, thus addressed one of the Society's agents:—"You well knew what was my poverty and distress. My little ones, seven in number, were feeble and helpless. On these crutches I travelled, begged, and brought home every night what supported them. You, as master of one of the Society's schools, was the first person who put a book into either of their hands. The opportunity of getting for them free education induced me to send them; otherwise, I know they would never have obtained a word of learning. One of my sons was, for some time, a school-master under the Society, he then went into the constabulary, and is now a non-commissioned officer in the East India Company: two others, in consequence of the education they received, were enabled to conduct business as dealers in the country for sometime, and are now trading between Ireland and America. My eldest daughter is at present conducting a prosperous school in the town of Sligo, and the rest of my daughters are receiving instruction under her care." The old man added, "For these blessings, I have to thank God daily, and never omit to pray for the Societies which he has raised to scatter his blessings so profusely through this land."

INFLUENCE OF RELIGION ON SLAVES.

The following is a note, to a published address by C. C. Pickney, of Charleston, S. C.

"On a plantation in Georgia, where, in addition to superior management, the religious instruction of the blacks is systematically pursued, the crops are invariably the best in the neighborhood, and the neatness and order which the whole establishment exhibits, prove that the prosperity of the master and the best interests of the slave are not inconsistent. The same State furnishes another instance of this position. The people of an absentee's plantation were proverbially bad, from the abuse and mismanagement of the overseer; the proprietors residing in England, and the attornies in Carolina, the latter dismissed the overseer, as soon as his misconduct was discovered, and employed another, who was a pious man. He not only instructed them himself, to the best of his abilities, but accompanied them every Sunday to a Methodist meeting-house in the neighborhood. At the end of five years, their character was completely changed, and has so continued ever since.—After nearly fifteen years, the surviving attorney is now in treaty for the purchase of these very negroes; whom he formerly considered a band of outlaws.

EVILS OF SLAVERY.

The following remarks are by the editor of the New-Bedford Weekly Register.

In the event of an insurrection of slaves, like that which has lately occurred in Virginia, we never fail to hear and see an abundance of sage remarks in relation to the "evils of slavery!"—The number of deaths of white persons, are carefully mentioned, and the circumstances of each, minutely detailed; and then the occurrence is set forth, as a lamentable evil, resulting from slavery. And such indeed it is; and one would think this alone a sufficient argument in favor of abolishing the slave system; but is this the only one? are there no other evils connected with slavery? In many of the accounts given of the evils which the poor slaves are made to suffer, and which are by far, greater than the whites have ever suffered from this cause, are thought not worthy of mention. The epithets "dastardly cowards," "savage monsters," infernal demons," &c., are very liberally bestowed upon them; but not a word is said in extenuation of their guilt. Slavery is mentioned as an evil only, as it effects the interests, or endangers the the lives of white persons; and yet we verily believe, that were the slaves to rise and slaughter every white person of the slave states, the amount of suffering would be unworthy of comparison with what the slaves in our country have endured; and these their sufferings, while they do not entirely justify such acts as we have recorded in the account of the Virginia insurrection; still, in a great measure palliate their guilt. The indiscriminate massacre of women and children, is only the result of ignorance; and at the hands of their human master alone, ought the blood of these victims to be required. They have been suffered to grow up in almost total ignorance, & consequently without the least moral restraint; and from such circumstances, like results might have been, and may be reasonably anticipated.

We hope the time is not far distant, when this subject will be viewed in its true light; when all the evils of slavery, as well in their bearing upon the interest of the slaves themselves, as upon those of their masters and of the country at large will be duly appreciated; and when the American people will be ready to act in accordance with the spirit of our declaration of Independence, which declares all men to be born free and equal.

RATHER QUEER.

There is an old story of a conversation between a professedly religious retailer and his clerk, which we will here relate. " 'Have you wet the tobacco?' 'Yes.' 'Have you watered the rum?' 'Yes.' 'Have you sanded the sugar?' 'Yes.' 'Then come in to prayers!"'

"I was forcibly reminded of this," said a man whose principles touching evangelical religion are rather infidel; "a day or two since:—A certain man who sells rum (a professor of religion) was trying to prevail on another individual to keep his grocery while he went to camp meeting——to make drunkards for him, while he attended prayers!"

Shame—shame! When will christians ('save the mark!') cease to put infidelity to the blush, by their disregard of men's welfare, for the sake of 'making money!'—Temperance Advocate.

On the second Monday of this month the Superior Court of Gwinnett County, Ga., commences its session, when ten white men will be indicted, for the crime of residing within the limits of the Georgia charter without taking the oath of allegiance. Penalty—not less than four years hard labor in the Penitentiary.—Cherokee Phœnix.

IDLE WORDS.

Mr. Editor—I would direct a few words to those who are given to the practice of foolish jesting. You are ready to say, I know it is foolish, and I ought not to indulge myself in it; and I believe I must give it up. Talking about this is not enough. You believe that God by his inspired Apostle, has forbidden it. Suppose for a moment, that you had put down every other sin, but this was so trivial a thing that it had escaped your notice. You love to jest; you roll it as a sweet morsel under your tongue. You hold to it as the darling of your bosom. After returning from your neighbor's house, where you have been indulging freely in your former practice of jesting, you kneel down by your family altar, and pray to God this prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Can you expect that your prayer for the building up of Christ's kingdom will be heard, when you are laboring to build up the kingdom of Satan!—What can strengthen the walls of Satan more, than to see the followers of Christ willfully disobey his commandments, and complying with the insinuations of Satan. Can you with a sincere heart, pray that God's will may be done, when you know it is his will that you abstain from this practice of jesting! And yet you hold to it! If a man were to send his son to gather ten sheaves into one pile, and he leaves two, will his father be satisfied! No. Do you dream of satisfying a Holy God, with less than would satisfy a sinful man? The man had made his requirement of his child, because he wanted to test his obedience. Not because he needed his labor. So God has chosen the obedience of his children, whereby to work; though he might have carried on his work without them, or their obedience. Then it remains certain, that obedience is necessary, before we can pray this prayer. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done," in its fullest sense.

M.

DR. HEWITT IN LONDON.—Dr. Hewitt from America, said he entered that room with the depression and anxiety of a stranger, exhausted by a long and rapid journey, and ill fitted for the service he was now called upon to perform; but the speakers who had preceded him, and the countenances before him, made him feel himself at home. (Applause.) Although his being began in New-England, he was of Old English origin, and British blood, in mingled streams of Irish and English, ran through his veins. (Cheers) If therefore he should be too free, remember his English blood; and if he should err, remember his Irish blood. (Laughter and applause.) It would afford him gratification deeper and sweeter than he had ever felt before, if he could occupy half an hour more in giving utterance to the gush of emotions and thoughts that the present occasion forced upon him. But allow him to say, that he could not gratify the ear of an Englishman, nor waken up the sympathies of an Irish heart, better than by relating narratives of the growing happiness of human beings; for such were esteemed more than the richest strains of eloquence said or sung. (Cheers.) The efforts made in his native land in the cause of temperance, had been repeatedly mentioned on that occasion, and he felt bound to express his thanks for the high rank in which the labors of his countrymen had been placed. He then proceeded to take a review of the progress of temperance societies in America, from their first commencement about five years ago, with a small company of eight or ten persons; in the course of which he stated, that in the month of May last, the parent society had a knowledge of 2000 temperance societies, 1194 of which had been formed, or first reported, during the preceding year. There were many others, however, in existence, not reported. The number of enrolled members was computed at not less than 300,000. There had been very little opposition, and where it was attempted it proved an abortive effort. The consequences were not only the decrease of intemperace, and all its evil results, but the introduction of health, comfort and respectability, where they were unknown and unenjoyed before. He related some individual cases in illustration of this statement, and concluded by observing, that all persons of every rank should join the temperance society; it was calculated to make the wise man wiser, the good man better, the strong man stronger, and to assist all in preparing for an introduction to a better world.—London World.

HABITS AND CUSTOMS OF NATIVES OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

When one dies a natural death, the corpse, shrouded in pieces of bark, is laid on the ground, and four small fires are lighted at the head and feet on either side. A grave is scratched up in the ground, and another fire lighted in the hole, which is allowed to burn out; the body of the deceased is then laid upon the ashes, with any little property which belonged to him,—his club, his spear, his clothes,—and the earth is heaped over all. But if the person fell in war, or his blood was shed by murder or chancemedley his body is not buried, but burnt to ashes. Like all savages, the Hollanders use their women cruelly. They get their wives by violence, seizing them by storm, or springing upon them from ambush—when, if the unfortunate female makes any resistance, her uncourteous suitor knocks her down with his waddy, (a tremendous cudgel,) and carries her off, on his shoulders, in a state of insensibility, with the blood streaming from the love tokens which he has inflicted on her. Ever afterwards she is his slave; at meals she and her daughters sit behind her husbands and he sons, picking the bones, or gorging on the refuse of the garbage with which the lordly sex appease their gluttony, and which are occasionally thrown to them, as dogs are fed in a poor man's family in England. Their cross, deformed, and diseased children are often killed out of the way, but they are very fond of those whom they rear. 'From the quick and eager exercise of their eyes, in seeking for their prey, they are exceedingly keen sighted, and discover birds in the trees, or venomous reptiles in the grass, where Europeans see nothing. Of serpents they are much afraid, and flee from them as from death. The are proportionately skilful in tracking the kangaroo, the emu, or any other animal over the grass, which might seem to our eyes, as undisturbed as though Virgil's Camilla herself has passed over it, without bending a blade or shaking the dust from the blossom of a flower. They follow the trail of their countrymen, with equal sagacity and confidence, for leagues together, through woods, and over wilds, apparently as pathless as the air; and when once they have seen the foot marks of a European, they never forget it, but can instantly recognize the faintest vestige of the same.—Bennett's Voyage.

ALARMING TO MONARCHS.—Within thirteen months, ending the first of July, no less than thirteen Sovereign rulers ceased to govern either in consequence of the will of their own subjects, or by the will of a higher power.

England—George IV., dead. France—Charles X., deposed. Algiers—Mahmoud, turned out. Rome—Pius VIII., dead. Saxony—Anthony, deposed. Sardinia—Charles Felix, deposed. Greece—Capo d'Istrias, resigned. Brazils—Don Pedro I., abdicated. Colombia—Bolivar, dead. Poland—Archduke Constantine, deposed.

GROW IN GRACE.

From Dr. Wells's Sermon on the Death of Mr. Evarts.

The employment of MR. EVARTS was unquestionably among the most powerful causes of his growth in piety. He was active in doing good—was continually consulting and laboring for the salvation of men, particularly the heathen. This brought into lively exercise all the pious affections of his heart, and so contributed to increase them. And if he was occasionally so engrossed with his great object, as to forget himself; his sanctification was not impeded on that account. If a Christian wishes to advance in holiness, let him engage, with all his heart, in some benevolent and pious work. As far as may be, let him choose his calling with a view to this important end. At the present day, there is a great variety of ways in which good may be done. There can be no lack of opportunity to any. Let every Christian, then, be devoted to some work of benevolence. And if he aspires to improve his character in the highest degree; let him be active in such a way, as will require him to exercise zeal and fortitude, to practice self-denial, and endure sufferings. This is the way, and according to the wise appointment of God, the only way, to rise high in spiritual attainments. If then we covet the best gifts of heaven, let us use the right means to obtain them. If it is our desire to mortify sin, and to cultivate a spirit of elevated piety; let us engage with ardor in works of piety. And let us take care to pursue a course, which will not only be favorable to the good dispositions, which we wish to cherish, but directly opposed to the sinful propensities and habits which we wish to overcome. Are we conscious of a culpable indolence! Then let us do good in a way which will require diligent personal effort. Have we an inordinate love of money! Then let us be frequent and liberal in our contributions, and so diminish those treasures which are the idols of our hearts. * * * * * *

The same might be said in regard to other particulars. Now it is obvious, that such a work as that in which our departed friend was enlisted, is eminently fitted to promote the divine life. Any one who, from pure motives, makes a full surrender of himself to the cause of Missions, and, either at home or abroad, devotes his talents and his life to the salvation of the heathen, will be under the best advantages to grow in the spirit of piety. And it will doubtless appear in the great day, when all characters, and all which has helped to form them, shall be revealed, that the holiness, which eminent saints in all periods of the church have attained, was owing in no small degree, under God, to the exertions they made and the sufferings they endured for the present and eternal welfare of their fellow men.

From the Connecticut Mirror.

MEMORIAL AGAINST SCHOOLS.

The annexed, which was actually presented to the State Legislature at Harrisburg, and which we copy from the Pennsylvania Inquirer, is a sufficient comment upon the absurdity of the request and object which the paper wishes to have acted upon by the Pennsylvania legislature. For the honor of Pennsylvania we hope that Northumberland is the only county in that State, where one or two hundred "inhabidance" may be found, who would be willing to place their cognomens under such a spelled memorial as the following. We should suppose that a "masseur" tending to "Dyrekt Schuls" in that quarter, would suit "the sitens of upper and Lower Machnoy," to a tittle, and certainly would prove a "Convenensy" to the members, who are obliged by actuel "Compulcjen" to read their uncouth remonstrances against Education:

"To the Honoumbel the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in general Assembly Met We under named inhabadance of Northumberland county We have lately under stud that the general Assembly have Parsted an Act, on a object of Schuling or to Dyrect Schuls on a mote by tax this masseur is Contrary to the moste of our fallow sitens of upper and Lower Machoy in said county we wish to Be at Liberty to Dyrect Schuls for our Selfs and to our Convenensy and not by force or Compulejen of Law to be passed on our sholders we therefore pray your Honouable Bodies that the Said Bill or Act may not Be came a law."

From the New-York Observer.

GOOD EFFECTED BY A SINGLE TRACT.

A lady from the country, three or four weeks since, while on a visit to the city, received of her niece some tracts which had been left in the family by the monthly distributors. Among them was No. 240, ("Putnam and the Wolf,") which her husband, on her return, read with much attention and interest. His neighbors occasionally called to see him, and he improved the opportunity to speak of, or read this tract to them. The young lady visited the place a few days since, & found that her uncle and six of his neighbors had, through the influence of this single tract, sealed their testimony to the soundness of its doctrine by voluntarily pledging themselves to TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

COMPLIMENT TO AMERICAN PHILANTHROPY.

It is with uncommon pleasure we read such tributes to individuals, whose labors in the sacred causes of humanity, as well as morals richly entitle them to a distinction far above worldly greatness. We extract from the Glasgow and West of Scotland Temperance Society's report, the following kind overflowing of a Scotchman's heart:—

"Your Committee cannot close their sketch of triumphs of "the Temperance Emancipation," without a notice, however cursory, of the progress of the cause in that continent where it had its origin. It would be an act of ingratitude towards our American friends, were we in any degree to throw into the shade the obligation under which we lie to them for having originated this noble cause. If the name of Washington and others are deservedly dear to them for their struggles in the cause of freedom, there are other names which will descend to the latest posterity, as the deliverers of their country from a thraldom more dreadful by far than that of any foreign yoke. It was reserved for such men as Beecher, and Kittredge, and Hewitt, to stand forth before an astonished world, and with a moral courage which invests them with immortal honor, to seize this hydra-headed monstor, Intemperance, and to lay him prostrate in the dust. They looked abroad on their country, and they saw that a sweeping flood was desolating the fair plains of a New World; they attempted not, by a puny effort, to roll back its waters of death, but they conceived the project of stopping them at the fountain, and drying up the sources of supply; and already the raging torrent has almost subsided into a brook. Well may those noble men rejoice in what they have achieved! How many bitter waters of sorrow have they dried up, and how many streams of gladness have they opened, to those whom misery had marked as her own! What a consolation to such a man as Beecher, to think, that not in America alone he is enjoying the results of his labors, but that many thousand copies of his little work have circulated through Britain—have helped to awaken the energies of her slumbering people, and to dispel the long and dreary night of sorrow which reigned in so many of her dwellings!"

1831.

ALLEN, WHEELER, & CO.

OF THE

HUDSON & Erie, and Oswego Lines, have their arrangements completed, and are now ready to forward goods from Boston, Philadelphia and New York, to Oswego, Buffalo, or any part of Ohio, Michigan, or Upper Canada.

They have on the New York and Ohio Canals, thirty first rate Boats, all manned, by practical Boatmen, and with frequent relays of Horses, they are able to promise the transportation of property, with the utmost care and expedition.

On the New York Canals, their Boats will leave Albany, Troy, Oswego, Rochester and Buffalo, and the intermediate places, daily. On the Ohio Canal, they will run a regular line, between Cleaveland and Newark, or the southern termination of the canal, all running Night and Day, except the SABBATH.

Their arrangements with owners of Tow Boats, and Line Sloops on the Hudson River, and owners of Steam boats and Vessels on Lakes Erie and Ontario, will enable them to forward property on any of these waters, without detention. Property shipped on the Hudson River, fully insured.

ALLEN, TIBBITS & Co. Troy.
ALLEN, WHEELER & CO. Rochester.
JOHN C. DAVIES & Co. Newark, O. Hudson & Erie Line Owners.
ALLEN, TIBBITS & CO. Troy.
JAS. LYON & CO. Oswego, Oswego Line Owners

The following persons will receive property, and forward according to the direction of the owners.

HILL, FISH & ABBEE, } Philapelphia,
T. M. SOUTHWICK, }
BIGELLOW & BANGS, Boston,
W. HUBBELL, 29 Counties Slip, N. Y.
E. COOK, 66 on the Dock, Albany,
ALLEN, TIBBITS & Co. Troy,
BUTLER, M'DOUGH & CO. Utica,
JAMES MOORE, jr. Syracuse,
JOHN RICE, jr. Weedsport,
J. A. CLARK, Montezuma,
J. T. TROWBRIDGE & Co. Oswego,
ALLEN, WHEELER & Co. } Rochester,
O. N. BUSH. }
J. COGSWELL, Brockport,
WILLIAM ALLIS, Holley,
N. INGERSOLL & Co. Albion,
E. FOLSOM, Lockport,
E. F. NORTON, Buffalo,
KELLEY & WALWORTH, } Cleaveland, O.
JOHN S. HUDSON, }
JOHN C. DAVIES & Co. Newark.

☞ They also continue to occupy the two Store Houses on Sophia-street, in Rochester, which will enable them to store any kind of property, on the owest terms. 16tf

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. he subscriber as Agent for the above, mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

NOTICE.—The partnership of the subscribers, under the name, firm & style of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent, and all the property and debts due the firm are the property of David Bush, and all settlements to be made with him, and those having debts against the firm, will call on said Bush for settlement.

WM. Mc. COY.
DAVID BUSH.

Rochester, July 26th, 1831. 31tf.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. Mc'Coy & Co. begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an eleg'nt assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets, &c comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. 1 f.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For ale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber,
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eeaves-Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY.

Rochester, june 15, 1831. 25tf

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware, Communon sets. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.

Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.

May 5, 1831.

20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ROCHESTER BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes. Chochineal, smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella, of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. JACOB GOULD.

22tf

DISSOLUTION.—The firm of Bloss & Harrison is dissolved by mutual consent. All persons owing said firm by note Book account or otherwise, are requested to call and settle with J. B. Bloss, to whom all the accounts are assigned, and who will pay all demands against said firm.

J. B. BLOSS,
M. A. F. HARRISON.

The subscriber still continues the business, where any calls in the Dry Good and Grocery line, will be promptly attended to, and Cash thankfully received. J. B. BLOSS.

February 7, 1831 tf

IN CHANCERY.

James Waugh Complainant vs. Samuel H. Hoag and Joel Wheeler Defendants.

At a Court of Chancery held for the State of New York, at the village of Rochester on the eleventh day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one; Present Addison Gardiner vice Chancellor of the eight circuit.

It appearing by affidavit to the satisfaction of this court that the defendant Samuel H. Hoag resides out of this state, but within the United States, on motion of Mr. S. Miller solicitor for the complainant it is ordered that said Samuel H. Hoag cause his appearance to be entered, and notice thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance, that he cause his answer to the complainants bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof that said bill of complaint may be taken as confessed, and it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the state paper, and in the Rochester Observer published in the County of Monroe, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers at least once in each week, for eight weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Samuel H. Hoag at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.

ISAAC R ELWOOD. Dep. Clerk.

S. MILLER Solicitor. 6w34.

At a Court of Chancery, held for the State of New-York, at the village of Rochester, on the sixth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one. Present Addison Gardiner, Vice Chancellor of the eighth Circuit.

Jacob M. Schermerhorn, Complainant, vs. Richard Ridale, Naomi Dibble, William S. Rossiter, Thomas H. Murray, Levi Ward Jr., Joseph Stocking, Joseph Bull, William Penfield, and John Penfield, Defendants.

It appearing by Affidavit to the satisfaction of this Court, that the defendant Thomas H. Murray resides out of this State, but within the United States, on motion of Mr. S. Miller, Solicitor for the complainant. It is ordered, that the said Thomas H. Murray cause his appearance to be entered, and, notice thereof to be served on the Complainant's Solicitor, within four months from the date of this order; and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the complainant's bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof, and that the bill of complaint may be taken as confessed. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the State paper, and in the Rochester Observer, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers, at least once in each week for eight weeks in succession, or, that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Thomas H. Murray, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.

ISAAC R. ELWOOD, Deputy Clerk.

S. MILLER Solicitor. 6w33.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in liber 6 of Mortgages at page 384 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 10th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division, now Monroe, and state of New York viz,—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz:—East west, and south by the lines of said Division, and Northerly, by aline to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Smedley Esq.—including all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

L. ADAMS, Att'y. 25 24w.

IN CHANCERY.

Franc's Williams, Complainant, vs. Peter Bracket and Elizabeth his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Yeazie, William Hardwick, George A. Avery, Walter Littlefield, Evan Griffith and Matthew Brown 3d, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a Court holden at the Court-house in the village of Rochester on the 22d day of August, 1831, I shall sell at public Auction, to the highest bidder, on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in said village of Rochester, and county of Monroe, the following described premises viz: "One certain house and lot lying situated in said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Walnut Alley, and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot deeded to the said Peter Bracket by Harmon Bissell, on the twelfth or thirteenth of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, on the Everard Peck purchase of Enos Stone."

ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery.

6w 35

IN CHANCERY.

Ezra Coe Complainant, vs. Philo Ilgley, Samuel Adams, & Lewis Benedict, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester, on the 22d day of August 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the 8th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M of that day at the Eagle Tavern in said village of Rochester & county of Monroe, the following described premises viz: "All that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the said town of Clarkson, being a part of the west half of lots one and one, in the sixth section of town number four on the triangular tract, and bounded as follows, viz.—beginning at a stake in the centre of the Ridge-road, where the same is intersected by the centre of the west lake road, thence southerly along the centre of said Lake road, eight chains and fourteen links, to a stake, thence easterly on the north line of Abigail Tuttle's land, three chains and sixty two links to a stake, thence northerly on the west line of Peter Row's land six chains and thirty five links to a stake, thence north, seventy two and a half degrees west, one chain and thirty four links to a stake, thence north sixty four degrees west one chain and ten links to a stake, thence north twenty and one half degrees east two chains and five links, thence to the place of beginning be the same more or less." Dated 24th August, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery.

6w

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Job Northrup deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on me for settlement within six months from date.—Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.

6m 38.

WM. H. WARD & Co. (MARBLE BUILDING Carroll Street,) have just received a ful supply of GOODS. Rochester, June 2, 1830.

New Arrangement in the Hardware Business.

HENRY BUSH and GEORGE BUTLER have formed a connection in business which will be carried on under the firm of Bush & Butler at the old stand of H. Bush, where they are now receiving their spring importation of Hardware, Cutlery, Saddlery, Fancy Goods &c. direct from the Manufactories in England together with a general assortment of American goods in their line, which they offer for sale at wholesale & retail on as good terms as any house in America. Their stock being very heavy, and patterns new, we ho pe to receive a share of public patronage. Buffalo Street in the Arcade June 1.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fennick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,

At the sign of the alligator, No. 11 Carroll st

6w 35

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. THURSDAY, [illegible]6, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 41.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3,00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00.
Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

For the Observer.

HINTS TO MINISTERS
WHO PREACH AT PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Mr. Chipman:—I have had the privilege of attending several of the protracted meetings in this part of the country, and while I highly approve of such meetings and the manner in which they are conducted, and the preaching generally, I would make a few suggestions.

1. Have more of Christ crucified in your sermons, and back up your assertions with scripture proof.

2. Avoid all points which are controverted among evangelical christians.

3. Make no doubtful assertions, i. e. such as well informed christians will be disposed to say to, "it may be so, but I doubt it."

4. Let your sermons be well studied and written. Prune every thing off that is not to the point and calculated to arouse christians to activity or convert sinners.

5. Give the office work of the Holy Spirit its rightful prominency.

If ministers would have more Divinity and Scripture in their sermons they would be better, at least in the apprehension of an OLD CONNECTICUT MAN.

For the Observer.

GENESEE MANUAL LABOR SEMINARY.

In a communication made to the public some time since, it was stated that this Institution would be open for the reception of Students the second Thursday of the present month; but the weather having been so unfavorable for the completion of the building, we have not been able to accomplish our design. But we are now so far advanced in our preparations that we feel warranted in saying that students may commence their studies in this Seminary under very favorable circumstances on Thursday the 20th of Oct. next.

The terms of admission as have been already communicated, are as follows. Each student is to labor three hours daily, and for this labor may receive his board, room, rent and fire-wood prepared by himself. Tuition will be $4 only, per quarter. Each student will be required to find his own bed and bedding, light and washing.—These are the general terms. For the reception of students under the age of 14, there must be a special contract with the faculty. Should there be any young men desirous of connecting themselves with the institution who are somewhat perfected as artificers in wood and who can bring their tools with them, they will be allowed something more for three hours labor than is specified above.

We earnestly desire that this institution so evidently designed for the good of the church and for the advantage of so large and worthy a class of our young men may be fostered by all the aid and influence which can be brought to bear on so laudable an object. While therefore we make our appeal to the benevolence of the public, we would wish to enlist the feeling of the ladies, and trust that whatever may be done by others—that they will not be backward in manifesting their regard to so good a cause by furnishing articles of household furniture, such as beds, bedding, table linen, &c. for the use of the Seminary family, and students for whose benefit specially, the institution is designed. And for the benefit of such students who are preparing for the ministry, articles of clothing will be thankfully received, and we trust judiciously appropriated.

To the public generally we would say—That we depend entirely on the aid of the benevolent for the establishment and success of this Institution—we must therefore visit them by our agents that we may receive at their hands the fruits of their liberality, when it is not forwarded to us.—For this purpose the Rev. Gilbert Crawford of Le Roy is appointed general agent and is authorised to employ agents under his direction to act in behalf of the Institution, and we trust they will be cordially received by the public and that they will thus be able to advance the interest of the object for which they labor.

Application for admission to the Seminary may be made to REV. RUSSELL WHITNEY, or REV. MOSES ORDWAY.

East-Bethany, Sept. 26, 1831.

From the Philadelphian.

DISAVOWAL.

The Rev. Dr. Green, the Editor, and apparently the writer of several pieces in the Christian Advocate, in describing "the present state of the Presbyterian Church," represents it as having come to "a very fearful crisis," through the censurable influence of a party which he denominates "New School Presbyterians."—This party, he says, constituted a majority of the last General Assembly; and he represents it as threatening the Presbyterian Church with "changes, affecting materially her doctrinal purity, her ecclesiastical order, and all her institutions and endowments." How this alleged party came to be the majority in the last Assembly he attempts to show; and in so doing has "no hesitation in saying, generally, that it was the result of pre-concerted plan and effort." Of course some persons must have concerted the plan and employed the effort, before that Assembly met. "The pre-concerted operations and arrangements which have now been noticed," he says, "were conducted with wonderful secrecy and address; for widely extensive as they necessarily were, those whom they were to affect unfavorably, did not, we know, even suspect their existence." He intimates that these operations were the result of "an extended, active, and systematic combination" which had been entered into against the Old School, by which, "in military phrase, they had been completely out-generalled, and were taken perfectly by surprise."

The Doctor admits that he and his friends had "made some exertions to secure a return of such members to the Assembly as they believed would favor their cause; and they did not doubt their opponents had done the same." "We have admitted," he says, "that in the year past the Old School Presbyterians made use of some exertions to secure a majority in the last General Assembly; but they certainly did not make use of half the efforts employed by their opponents; and some means to which their opponents resorted we hope they never will employ."

Now if any persons adverse to the views and measures of Dr. Green, whom he calls opponents, are implicated by the foregoing charges, it is natural to suppose, from local circumstances and other causes, that some or all of the subscribers to this paper are intended: we think it, therefore, our duty to the Church and to ourselves, hereby solemnly to declare, that no one of us knew of any pre-concerted plan, combination, or effort, designed to affect the members, the character, or the measures of the last Assembly. No one of us countenanced or participated in any such combination, if any such existed in this city or elsewhere. We took no measures to influence any Presbyteries near or remote, by any correspondence, pre-concert, or arrangement. Two extra numbers of "the Philadelphian" were printed by the direction and at the expense of some of the lay members of the First Presbyterian Church, and sent to most of the Ministers in our connexion: but this was done without any arrangement on the part of any one of us; except that the Editor consented that his publisher should issue the papers desired. These papers were issued without any secrecy, and had no more of plan, combination, pre-concert, or intended generalship, than certain pamphlets styled "A correct Narrative," by the Rev. W. L. McCalla, and "A true and complete Narrative" by the Rev. Wm. M. Engles; the former of which was circulated three months, and the latter several days, before the numbers of the Extra-Philadelphian were distributed.

So far were we from being marshalled as a party, even in the last spring meeting of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, that scattering votes for Commissioners were given on our side; while on the other side every one of their eight Commissioners had an equal number of votes; thereby giving fit occasion for the Doctor's own lamentations, "Well do we remember the time—and we have a melancholy pleasure in recollecting it—when there was no planning or electioneering for Commissioners to the Assembly; when, in some Presbyteries, going to the supreme judicatory of our Church was a privilege or a duty—and regarded more as the latter than the former—which was taken in rotation by the members; when there was no pre-concert whatever on the subject; when all the inquiry was, who could go with the greatest convenience, or who were the ablest men that the Presbytery could send;—but how totally different the state of our church now is, the foregoing exhibition demonstrates."—(See Christian Adv. vol. ix. p. 419.)

That Dr. Beman, would be a member of the last Assembly or a candidate for Moderator, not one of us knew, until the day before the Assembly met. That he used any influence at the south with "several," or even any, "judicatures of the church in that section of our country—to insure the result which was witnessed when the Assembly convened," we neither know nor believe. On the contrary, we have understood on what we think good authority, that Dr. Beman's attendance on the Assembly was a matter of uncertainty to himself until a short time before he came to this city.

That those who charge their brethren with concerted operations, "made use of some exertions to secure a majority in the last General Assembly" we can readily believe, on their assertion, for we are credibly informed that no less than two of them, before the election of the Moderator, remarked that they were sure of electing their candidates, because they were certain of 93 votes. He received 92; and would have had 93 had not a member, on whom they calculated, tarried too long with a friend to be present at the election. That the Assembly would be so numerous as to give 102 votes to another candidate they did not expect. We had made no such estimate of forces; and while they who accuse us of party measures could tell within one how many Commissioners would vote for their own candidate; not one of us knew or could tell, at any time before the votes were given, that ten persons would agree in supporting any other man.

The only measures any of us have employed to render the Assembly and its decisions such as we desired they might be, have been a free candid disclosure through the press of what we believe to be the truth, amicable discussion, friendly conversation, and prayer to the supreme Disposer of all events that he would give a right direction to the Assembly, and save the Presbyterian Church from prejudice, party passions, and distraction.

In relation to the next and all future Assemblies, we hope they may convene with the spirit which we believe actuated the majority of the last Assembly; who, having it "in their power to dispose of every measure that came before the judicature, just as they pleased;" exercised exemplary moderation and kindness towards their brethren of the opposite side, "even amidst much that was calculated to produce unpleasant excitement."

We agree that in disposing of the missionary business of the Assembly "there occurred such disorder and confusion as we have never before witnessed in the General Assembly, and which we devoutly pray, never may be witnessed again." At the same time, we feel thankful, if the Presbyterian Church must be divided into schools, that it was not the "new school" which made the "disorder and confusion;" for they were the majority, and had no disposition clamorously to assail their own measures.

In self defence, since we may seem to be implicated by Dr. Green's general accusations on the subject, we would further remark, that we have never denounced the use of Creeds and Confessions; and that we do now sincerely publish our affirmative answers to every question directed by our form of government to be put to persons about to be ordained to the work of the gospel ministry. We profess to understand and assent to these questions; and we receive and adopt the Confession of Faith according to the plain and obvious meaning of the English language, as containing the system of doctrine taught in the sacred scriptures. We deny that we are bound by any other understanding or construction than that which we believe to be the natural, philological, and grammatical construction of the Confession itself. We repel, also, the numerous insinuations directed against us, if classed with those who are called "new school Presbyterians," that we are hostile to the evangelical orthodoxy, sound Presbyterianism, and the best interests of the Presbyterian Church.

We have read with pain the Circular signed by a Central Committee of Correspondence in this city; and we solemnly declare, that we know of no members of the Presbyterian Church who has been willing to expose to hazzard the vital interests of the same, or who desires either the mutilation or subversion of the Presbyterian system. We know of no person or persons who projected, or attempted "the entire change of the missionary Board." We believe that nothing more was desired by any with whom we co-operate, than to produce such a change in the Board, as would prevent all collision with the American Home Missionary Society, and contention concerning missionary operations. The nomination made by the Committee of the Assembly retained most of the persons who are now members of the Board.

We also solemnly declare that we know of no persons who have associated with us, who have sought, or now seek to revolutionize our Theological Seminaries: to displace the professors in them; or to pervert these schools of the prophets "from the intention of their orthodox founders." On the contrary, the changes which were lately made in the direction at Princeton were effected, we believe, entirely by Dr. Green's coadjutors in the Assembly. They also were the voters which produced whatever alterations were made in any of the institutions of the Church.

Devoutly seeking the peace and prosperity of the whole church, we do most earnestly deprecate whatever may be productive of discord among brethren, or hinder the effusions of the Holy Spirit.

EZRA STILES ELY.
JAS. PATTERSON.
THOMAS H. SKINNER.
JOHN L. GRANT.
ALBERT BARNES.
THOMAS EUSTACE.
ALBERT JUDSON.
ALFRED H. DASHIELL.
CHARLES HOOVER.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19th. 1831.

N. B. Several brethren in the city and vicinity, who have corresponding views of ecclesiastical policy, with the above subscribers, have had no opportunity of reading the foregoing Disavowal, but we believe they would cheerfully confirm all which we have stated.

From the South. Rel. Tel.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.
Glasgow, April 29th 1831.

The poverty of Ireland is proverbial, and I have mentioned as causes, the dominant superstition of the island, and the customary diet of the poor. If some statements lately sent have reached you, on the consumption of ardent spirits, you will probably conclude that by that alone you could account for their poverty. Politicians, however, do not speak of these things, but of abuses in the civil and ecclesiastical arrangements of the country. Of these I will only notice two.

The first I happened to over hear, nearly in these words described by a lady, to a little circle of young people in Belfast. Can you solve the enigma!

"The curse of this happy nation,
The fittest subject for taxation,
Making our wretched people poor,
By process simple, and most sure.
And by it Irish men most treasonable,
Are made at once, of all men, the most reasonable."

To save your time I will give you the word Absent-tee, as the explanation.—The number of gentlemen who derive their income from the soil of Ireland, and spend it among the people of other lands is very great, and may be greatly complained of. Such foreign expenditure is obviously a serious deduction from the resources of the country; and the evil is still greater when the property of this land owner is not taxed for the support of the poor, even though they may have been made poor by striving to make him rich.

The tythe system, however—that is, the support of the Established Church, is more loudly complained of than any thing else. Many of her own members, both ministers and laymen are aware of abuses here, and they desire reform, but reform they fear will be destruction. I cannot give you all the facts on this subject, but that the many are taxed for the few is very plain.—The population of Ireland is at least eight millions, of whom, it is suppposed, that from 9 to 7,000,000 are Catholics. Some think all the Protestans do not exceeda million. Others say a million and a half. Others two millions. An estimate which seemed to rest on plausible data divides the population into fourteen parts, and gives one fouteenth to the Episcopalians; another fourteenth to the Presbyterians and dissenters; and the remaining twelve fourteenths to the Catholics.—This would make the Episcopalians amount to 575,000. You may reckon them at one million. The religious teachers of this one million number about 1,300, receive a tenth of the produce raised by the whole eight millions. The actual sum absorbed by this establishment is supposed to be about £1,426,000 sterling, or $6,330,000, yearly. In addition to this, seven-eights, or as some think, thirteen-fourteenths of the population are building churches and supporting teachers for themselves.

It would require much more time and patience than I can command at present, to give you all the bearings of this subject. But you can see at once I think, that the church establishment must be a serious burden to such a country as Ireland; especially when the great majority of the people will not accept their religious instruction from that church, though they pay for it, but are voluntarily supporting an independent establishment of their own.

I have spoken of the tythe system as a cause of poverty to the state. It is more in accordance with my object in these communications, to speak of it as a source of injury to the church. In 1766 the Protestants in Ireland amounted to nearly one-half the population. In 1822 they were only one-seventh. Within those 60 years, while the Catholics had more than quadrupled, the Protestants had not doubled their number. The following is said to be from parlimentary returns.

	A. D. 1766	A. D. 1822.
Protestants	544,865	980,000
Catholics	1,326,960	5,820,000
Total	1,871,725	6,800,000

Truth is mighty we say. Magna est veritas. Why then has it not prevailed in Ireland? Because I may venture to say, that Protestants there, as in the rest of the world, until these few years have been asleep. But I will add, that now, when they are waking out of sleep and beginning to labor, this tythe system and other unscriptural arrangements and abuses are in the way. The Catholic considers himself most unrighteously called upon, and often he is very offensively compelled, to pay a tythe of the produce of his farm for the support of a man, who, as he believes at present, is teaching "damnable heresies." How could that Catholic be converted by him! Allow that he saw his own religion to be an absurdity—a ruinous delusion; would he be likely to feel a predilection for the religion of that minister whose tythe proctor had so long been picking his pocket! Worldly men are quite apt to suspect that ministers preach to live; and this man will hardly fail of being tempted to believe that, as to his protestant minister, there is no doubt. He has proof, and that proof he feels in his annually diminished income, perhaps in his gradual descent to poverty. He may renounce popery, notwithstanding, but he is more likely to continue under the convenient shelter of its forms, and instead of embracing the faith of a protestant, to become, in his heart, an infidel.

A day or two before I passed thro' the County Kilkenny, 20 sheep had been distrained for tythe, which their owner refused to pay. They were canted, i. e. put up to auction, but none would buy. They were driven to Dublin, but the Catholics were before them, and there none would buy. They were shipped to Liverpool, and finally sold for 5*s.* instead of 25*s.* a head, which was their value when seized. Here the tythe was collected indeed, but a whole community of papists, under whose eye the transaction passed, were sealed up to popery forever. "Our religion may be bad, they would say, but that man's religion is worse."

From Kilkenny to Dublin we had on the coach, P—— I.——, Esq. a man of property, and a leading Catholic in the country. He as many of late are doing, had determined, that voluntarily he would pay tithes no longer. Some of his cattle were driven to the pound, and sold for the following debt and charges, as exhibited in a newspaper.

Tythe	£7 17*s.* 9*d.*
Drivers with blunderbusses,	2*s.* 4*d.*
Pound keepers,	11*d.*
Lawn, Bailiff, Process server, & Auctioneer,	5*s.* 0*d.*
To release from Pound,	5*s.* 0*d.*
Total,	£8 11*s.* 0*d.*—$38.

After the sale, the populace had him on their shoulders immediately, with loud cheers. The magistrate interfered, and seized Mr. L. as the instigator of a riot; and now, full of wrath, he was going to Dublin for legal redress.

I say nothing in regard to the debt. I only allude to the effects of its exaction. The Rector did certainly obtain his tythe, but as certainly had he, in obtaining it, "made his religion to stink among the inhabitants of the land." Who could even hope for their conversion, whilst the memory of this transaction should remain! What Catholic in that county, would not nauseate the most distant thought of forsaking his persecuted brethren, and embracing the religion of this Rector! These are the things which have quadrupled popery in Ireland. I have no doubt that in this instance, the parish minister in question, did more to injure the interests of the church, than in his whole life he can do to promote them. It is but just to say, that in other countries where there are no tithes, there is sometimes seen this same unhappy anxiety about the salary, and similar unhappy results always follow the discovery.—A minister must not be gready of filthy lucre; nor indeed may he spend many thoughts about his temporal support. The Lord knoweth what things he hath need of, and so do his people; and if through anxiety for their good, the salary should be lost sight of by him, there is the less probability that it will be forgotten by them. But at all events, the rule of Paul, in such cases, would be "to give no offence, that the ministry be not blamed;" and it is quite certain that rather than prove himself the minister of an establishment, by such an offensive exaction of tythes, he would have "approved himself the minister of Christ, by the patient endurance of afflictions, necessities, fastings, imprisonment. Not as rich making others poor, but as poor making many rich."

TEMPERANCE.

From the Boston Recorder.

TEMPERANCE IN LONDON.

By letters just received in this city, from London, we learn, that the Temperance Cause is making most gratifying progress in England.—The London Temperance Association are about to resolve themselves into a Society by the name of the BRITISH AND FOREIGN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. The Solicitor General, for Ireland advocated the measure, and in one of his speeches, said that Sir James Mackintosh had declared his adhesion to the Temperance Society, and is ready to plead its cause when called upon. The Chairman of one of the meetings, pledged himself to give $50, in case a British and Foreign Society should be formed. Another individual, a member of the London Temperance Society Committee, pledged himself to give a sum double to that which any other member of the Committee should give. A great meeting is soon to be held in Liverpool, for the purpose of forming a Temperance Society. It is stated that the late meetings have been much talked about at Court, and that Lord John Russell, and Lady Holland, in particular, had manifested their warm approbation. The Bishop of Sodor and Man sent a request that an individual might proceed to his diocese, to form a Temperance Society there. Similar requests were making from a great number of towns in the vicinity of London. Dr. John Pye Smith, after reading Prof. Stuart's Prize Essay, declared that he was convinced that it was his duty to put away wine.

We hope that these animating tidings will produce an effect here. We, in the United States, ought to take a more vigorous hold of this great cause. Shall BOSTON be behind London! We trust not. We hope that Dr. Edwards, or some other competent man, will soon be at work here.

The Rum Cholera.—It is a medical fact well attested, that the terrible cholera of the North of Europe does not sweep away its victims with a promiscuous carnage. A physician at Warsaw says:—

"It is an ascertained fact, that cholera does not select its victims at random, as some pretend; on the contrary, this disease has up to the present time spared all those who have led a regular life and resided in healthy situations, whereas those persons whose constitutions have been broken down by excess and dissipation have invariably been attacked by this scourge. It has been proved that out of 100 individuals carrid off by cholera, 90 were addicted to the abuse of spirituous liquors. The ravages which this complaint will make among the Russians must be immense, as they are in the constant habit of drinking brandy. Marshal Diebitsch used to drink brandy and punch frequently through the day.

"The women very rarely become addicted to the use of spirituous liquors, and few of them have been attacked by the cholera.

"Thus we should live temperately, employing the necessary precautions, and we may rely on being spared by this formidable disease."

THE GREAT SOURCE OF PAUPERISM.—The Providence American makes the following, among other remarks, on the cause of pauperism. By the returns this year from the indefatigable Medical Board of the Dexter Asylum in Providence, we have the melancholy and striking fact, fully authenticated, that out of 126 adults admitted to the Asylum the past year, who have come under the observation of the attending physicians, ninety eight were intemperate persons, being five sixths of all the adults, who have been directly reduced to poverty and disease, by the use of ardent spirits! And what made them intemperate! They were not born so: they did not become so in a day, a week, or a month. What but the habit of temperate drinking, with the facilities offered all about town for indulging in that habit has done this!

Of the other inmates of that Asylum, how many, who are themselves temperate, have been reduced to pauperism by intemperate husbands and parents!

Thus we find, that five sixths of the expense of supporting the poor in this town about $5,000, annual expenditure, have their different origin in drinking ardent spirits. The town receives for licenses, about $2,000, and expends $5,000 for the support of drunkards, besides the utter and entire loss of so many individuals, who but for Rum, would be useful members of society.

We also learn another striking fact, from the report on the condition of the Asylum, viz: that out of ten deaths, the past year seven were the result of intemperance, all the males and two females.

The statistic of intemperance, presented under our immediate observation, with an accuracy that cannot be doubted, furnish conclusive evidence of the correctness of the aggregate estimate throughout the country, of pauperism and death, resulting from intemperance.

From the Temperance Advocate.

FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Every day's observation adds to our convictions of the necessity of persons who have been in the habit of drinking distilled spirits, (in attempting a reformation,) at the time they resolve to drink no ardent spirits, including in the proscribed articles not only wine, but beer and even cider. It is a fact, that scarcely one individual has withdrawn from the temperance societies with which we are acquainted who has not kept up his appetite for intoxicating liquors by the use of those fermented, until he could stand it no longer, and then he must have a little rum.

If a man really wishes to be reclaimed from the sin of intemperance, he must not drink any intoxicating liquors. The only safety is in not touching the "accursed thing." Let the rum-bottle; the wine-cup, the pewter-mug, and the cider-jug alone.

The Difference.—In 1799 there were fifty-two journeyman tailors in the city of Albany—only two of whom were temperate! The whole fifty intemperate ones could not produce of their own funds fifty dollars; while the two who were temperate could show of their own earnings eighteen hundred dollars! This shows the difference between 'taking a little,' and 'total abstinence,' when no hazardous business is entered into by the individual.—Ib.

HOW MUCH DOES IT TAKE.

The difficulty of pointing out how much rum or whiskey a person may use and still be temperate,' has at length been solved; and for the benefit of those who take 'just enough to do them good,' while they completely govern themselves, we give it. It is not one of those attempts at solution, that we often hear: but a plain statement in open court under oath.

Question.—Had you drank any spirituous liquor!

Answer by witness—I had drank a little, what's necessary.

Question—How much rum or whiskey is necessary for a man to drink, to 'do him good!'

Answer by witness—For some, half a pint or a pint will answer; but some others require a quart, two quarts, and sometimes four quarts!

This is the testimony of one who from his habits is supposed to know. What shall we say of the many who advocate moderate drinking—i. e. taking 'what's necessary!' Do they not support the system of indiscriminate tippling—of drinking any amount of liquors; under the false coloring of taking 'just enough to do them good!' —Ib.

REVIVALS.

CHARACTER OF REVIVLS.

The Spirit of the Pilgrims for the present months, among other interesting articles, contains one from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Beecher, on "The necessity of Revivals of Religion, to the Perpetuation of our Institutions," which ought to be read by every one who values the liberty of this country, or prays for the universal spread of the gospel. We would gladly transfer the whole of the article to our columns but the limits of our sheet will not permit. We can only present a single extract, in which some of the objections so frequently urged against revivals are triumphantly refuted.—Ch. Soldier.

I am aware that revivals of religion, so called, have been regarded by many with suspicion and by not a few with aversion, as the device of men and the result of human weakness and credulity. But all who thus judge, form their opinions from hearsay, through prejudiced mediums, and not from a correct knowledge of the real, moral results of these days of mercy. That they may be abused, is certain; and so may civil liberty be abused. That sometime they are alloyed by enthusiasm and fanaticism is true; but what great change of human character and condition was ever accomplised without defect! The Reformation, though the sunrise of liberty, was attended by noxious vapors and obscurations, which its growing light has chased away. The defects of Luther and Calvin were spots on their sun; but still they were suns, without whose blessed light the night of ages might still have brooded over the earth. In the civil wars of England, there were defects enough in the puritans for infidels to ridicule and Christians to lament; but if, to escape these defects, the world had been bereft of their virtues, still the untutored savage had dwelt in his forest, and the rod of iron had ruled the children of the Pilgrims. Our own revolution, was it marked by no excess of folly, and stained by no crime! and yet the great principle which beat in the heart of the nation was that of liberty.

Why must the moral renovation of man alone be expected to move on, unattended by the accidents of human imperfection,—or be discarded as wholly human, and unworthy of confidence and gratitude to God? When any thing which God in his mercy does for man, by human instrumentality, is perfect, the imperfection of revivals may occasion doubt concerning their origin and utility.

For more than thirty years, there have been a series of revivals in our land, with increasing power, extent & frequency—unalloyed in a great measure by those irregularities which had marred some of the previous seasons of refreshing. Generally they have been free from enthusiasm and excess—have been seasons of silent attention and deep feeling, of clear, intellectual, argumentative, doctrinal preaching, with pungent applications to the conscince, attended with deep convictions of sin, and with subsequent joy and peace in believing. Their effect upon religion and morals has been most auspicious. They have furnished 3-4ths probably of the living ministry of the evangelical ministry of our land, and nearly three-fourths of the members of these churches. They have reared and sustained the family altar and trained up the rising generation in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. They have provided hearts, and hands, and means, to superintend the manifold ministrations required to organize infant and Sabbath schools, and all our benevolent and voluntary associations. Thirty years ago, it was a rare thing to meet with a young person in the church; and now, more than half the professors of religion are in early life. And it may be truly said, that almost the entire moral energy by which the cause of Christ now moves on from conquering to conquer, is the result of those revivals of religion which for thirty years have been enrolling, augmenting, and disciplining the sacramental host.

It has been objected that revivals of religion are seasons of mere temporary excitement—transient as the overflowing of a summer's brook, and evanescent as the visions of a heated imagination. But instead of this, they are the moral heart of this great nation, whose pulsation throbs with unceasing stroke and rising healthful tone, propelling the life-blood from the centre to every extremity. And instead of febrile dreams and emphemeral emotions, they are fast waking up the nation to the abiding realties of God's eternal government, and affording fast practical illustration that 'godliness is profitable unto all things, both for the life that now is, as well as for that which is to come.'

It is true that the intense interest of a revival, when in a few weeks or months, hundreds are brought out of darkness into marvellous light, does not continue. It is not indeed, perhaps could not be permanently sustained; but that the results are transient is not true. If there be religion on earth, sustained by the exhibition of all the fruits of the spirit, Christian graces, and good works, that religion is the abiding product of revivals. If death beds of peace, and hopes full of immortality, are the seal of heaven's work in the soul, then does God progressively, for forty and fifty years after the revival has passed away, set his seal to it that it is his own most blessed work.

It has been inquired whether a more gradual dispensation of the Spirit were not better than these sudden outpourings. But we have been accustomed to feel that God is the best judge in this matter, and that man cannot make a revival either gradual or sudden. When he gives us drop by drop, we are thankful; and when the cloud of mercy above bursts and pours down a flood at once, we dare not request him to stay his hand—we cannot but exult and rejoice in the exuberance of his mercy. Nor can we perceive how it is possible that 800,000,000 souls, or any considerable part of this number, can be washed from their sins, within the most distant time to which the millennium can be deferred according to prediction, by single drops falling in such slow and deliberate succession as should satisfy the prudence of some apparently very good men. We doubt not that greater revivals than have been are indispensable to save our nation, and to save the world, by giving universal and saving empire to the kingdom of Christ; and as clouds thicken and dangers press, we look for them with strong confidence, and with an increased urgency of unutterable desire.

FAULTS AT PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

10. Being afraid of Metaphysics,—such metaphysics, we mean, as the Bible teaches. Some think that they must labor wholly for excitement, and that instruction, argument, discussion, would be out of place. On the contrary, sound, doctrinal instruction is never more in season, never more needed. The minds of men are prepared to receive it with avidity and think upon it in earnest, and candidly. They are excited. Let them be excited about something in particular,—something important,—something permanent, that their excitement may itself be made durable and permanent. Choose, however, proper subjects. Keep close to the Bible. Let your metaphysics be only such as bear directly on faith and repentance.

11. Special prayer for all sorts of objects, and at any one's suggestion. Sometimes special prayer for the conversion of individuals and classes of persons is introduced, we think, with propriety, and to profit. But the attention of the worshipper ought not to be distracted by the introduction of subjects not embraced in the object of the meeting. All requests should be handed, in writing if convenient, to the minister of the place, who should use his discretion whether to present them, and when.

12. Persons coming in during the progress of the meeting, and addressing the audience without understanding the state of feeling. Such an one, from a hasty glance, is liable to underrate or overrate the degree of feeling, or to mistake its character, essentially, and to say what is wholly inappropriate, and will do more hurt than good. —Vermont Chronicle.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman to his friend in this city, dated Clinton, N. Y. Aug. 27, 1831,

While at Hannibal, I witnessed a powerful revival. During a seven days meeting, there were 120 hopeful conversions. The change in Clinton I found very great, there being nearly 200 converts during absence.—Charleston Obs.

IN NEW VILLAGE.—A correspondent in Upper Aquehoge, L. I. under date of September 7th, writes as follows, "This week I have just returned from New Village, where I spent a few days witnessing scenes of thrilling interest. On the evening of the 6th inst. the place was literally a Bochim, a place of weepers. Such a scene I never before witnessed. Four days meetings was held in this region last week, week before last, and this week; next week two are to be held at Aquehoge and Brookhaven.

"It is truly a year of release—a jubilee indeed. Backsliders are returning in my society, and Christians are entering deeply into the spirit of a revival."—N. Y. Evangelist.

IN MOUNT PLEASANT, HARRISON CO. KY.—We learn from the Rev. Mr. Forsythe, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Mount Pleasant, Harrison County, Ky., that at a sacramental meeting of that church on the 29th of Aug. last, twelve members were added to the communion of the church.—W. Luminary.

IN DANVILLE, KY.—We are pleased to be enabled to inform our readers, that the state of religious feeling at Danville is still highly interesting and encouraging. Nine members were added to the Presbyterian church there, on the Sabbath previous to the last.—Ib.

IN BOZRAH, CONN.—Last Sabbath about forty persons were added to the Congregational Church in Bozrah, under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Jared Andrus.—Rel. Messen.

IN LEACOCK CHURCH, PA.—A general seriousness has attended, and followed a prolonged

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

meeting of four days; and as many as 100 persons under apparently deep conviction of their sin and misery; have attended meetings for inquiry into their personal interest in the Redeemer.

In the Rev. Robert Steel's congregation, in Washington, Pa. the greater part of ten days were lately devoted to religious meetings, which were well attended, and unusually solemn. The congregation is not large, but nearly one fourth part of it appears either to have lately received, or to be now enquiring with anxiety after a participation in the great salvation.—Philadelphian.

From the Christian Spectator.

APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF COMMON SENSE TO CERTAIN DISPUTED DOCTRINES.

Joannis Christiani Gottlieb Ernesti Commentatio de usu communis vitæ; ad interpretationem Novi Testamenti.

In a former article on this able treatise of Ernesti, we endeavored to shew that the language of the bible, and particularly of the new testament, bears a close and designed resemblance to that of common life. From this resemblance the following principles of interpretation were derived, and stated in the language of the author. "First, that we should use that simplicity in interpreting the language of the scriptures, which is so marked a trait of that of common life, not making allegories, or emphasis, or mystical senses, unless the obvious design of the writer requires it; that we do not cut to the quick, or press every word to the utmost it will bear; and that we compare corresponding forms of expression in the language of common life, as we find it at the present day." We likewise endeavored to show, that the ultimate appeal, on questions of scripture doctrine, must be made to the bar of common sense—"that the decisions of the common sense or reason of mankind, are to be depended on as certain truth, in all cases in which it is competent to decide, and free from perversion; that the real meaning of any divine declaration whatever, is always in accordance with these decisions, and consequently, that the scriptures can never teach any thing positively inconsistent with them, even on those subjects which lie beyond the reach of unassisted reason; and that no passage, to which fair and just interpretation assigns a meaning known to be false, can be part of a divine revelation."

We now proceed to apply these principles to certain doctrines, which have been extensively supposed to be taught in the bible. The first which we propose to bring to the test, the Roman Catholic doctrine of the real presence. We give this the precedence in the application of these principles, chiefly indeed because it affords a striking illustration of their correctness and importance, but likewise with the hope that at a time when the catholics are making such efforts in our country, it may be of some use to show the real spirit of their system of interpretation.

A full statement of the doctrine in question would be as follows; That the material body and blood of Christ, are literally eaten and drunk under the form and appearance of the bread and the wine, at the celebration of the Lord's supper. This notion, as we have already shown, is founded on a literal interpretation of the words of our Saviour, "this is my body," "this is my blood," &c. And plainly, if the principle of literal interpretation ought to be adopted as a universal one, the doctrine in question is true. No language could be imagined more explicit than that just quoted. It was of the consecrated bread before him, that Christ declared, "this is my body," and of the wine that he said, "this is my blood." How then shall we avoid the conclusion that the bread was his body, his very flesh, only changed in its external form and appearance, and the wine his real blood, as the catholic strenuously claims! And that when he commanded his disciples, "this do in remembrance of me," he meant that they should, to the end of time, continue to do the identical thing which he had done, viz. break, distribute, and feed upon his very flesh, and drink his very blood, and that he would, at every celebration of the supper, interpose to effect a miraculous change in the elements, which would enable them to do it? On what principle, we ask, can we avoid being shut up to this conclusion? Why may not the catholic justly charge us with rejecting the obvious meaning of the bible, if we refuse to receive a doctrine which stands out in such bold relief upon its pages!

Now, we think, there is no answer to these questions, except on the principle which we have stated above, viz. that the very nature of things forbids the literal interpretation of these passages, or in other words, that we must first know that a declaration can be true, before we can receive it as part of the word of God. We are aware that Faber, in his Difficulties of Romanism, has placed the argument on another basis. He maintains that the principle of homogeneous interpretation, as it is called, is sufficient to decide a question like the one before us—that the passages which assert the bread and wine to be Christ's body and blood, are to be interpreted figuratively, because we interpret similar passages in that manner. But, we would ask, what constitutes the similarity between these & such other passages? Why is the declaration, "this is my blood," analogous to that other, "I am the true vine," or to these, "I am the way," "I am the door!" Why may we not reject the idea of a man's being, literally and truly, a vine, bearing grapes, or a real door, and still, with perfect consistency, hold that in the bread and wine, we do truly eat and drink our Saviour's body and blood! Is it because the mere form of expression is so much alike in all these cases, that they must come under the same rule of interpretation! We are at a loss to see the necessity arising from this kind of similarity. On the same ground we might prove that the declaration, "I am the first and the last," and even this, "I am Jesus of Nazareth," are to be understood figuratively; for they obviously resemble the passages in question, in the general form of expression. Will it be said that the ancient christians, those who lived near the time of the apostles, regarded the language of Christ as figurative! But this is denied by the catholic. And even could this figurative import be proved to have come down to them by tradition, how did the first disciples, from whom the tradition was derived, form their opinions on the subject! Why did not they understand the words, "this is my body," literally! We have no reason to suppose from the history, that any explanation was added by our Saviour. He did indeed speak of the fluid in the cup, after its consecration, as the fruit of the vine; but he had also said of it, that it was his blood. Which of the two declarations then, were they to understand literally? Considering the circumstances, the form and manner of expression merely, we, in common with the catholic, should say without hesitation, the latter. What saved them, then, from such an interpretation? Simply the principle we have stated, the dictates of their own common sense,—the obvious impossibility involved in the declaration, if literally understood. Here then we come to the real basis upon which the principle of homogeneous interpretation, as it is called, rests. We interpret certain declarations alike figuratively, or alike literally, because other principles of interpretation requires us to do so; and that truth is established by observations which our own reason makes upon the nature and relations of things. It is upon this solid ground, too, that every principle of interpretation, which is of any value, must be built. The reason, the justice of no principle can be shown, without referring it back to this origin. It must be shown to have its foundation in the dictates of common sense respecting what is true or possible, and what is false or impossible, in the nature of things.

It is upon this ground, then, and only this, that we reject the doctrine of the real presence. It would be the height of absurdity to suppose that the disciples actually ate the flesh and drank the blood of Christ, while he was standing before them, or sitting at the table with them, clothed in the very same body on which they were then feeding. If such a thing is possible, then any thing of which we can conceive is possible. It is equally impossible too, and contrary to the known truth of things, that the glorified body in which our Saviour now exists, should become the bread and wine of the sacramental supper, while at the same time, he is "ever at the right hand of the Father," clothed in that very body, making intercession for his saints. It is a settled axiom, we believe, that the same thing cannot be in two different places, or be actually two different things, at the same identical moment. Yet it involves this glaring absurdity, to make either of the foregoing suppositions. It is not indeed impossible, in the nature of things, that the body and blood of Christ, should have been changed into bread and wine—this simple idea involves no contradiction, no impossibility, any more than the changing of water into wine at Cana of Galilee. But the contradiction lies in this, that the disciples should be supposed to be eating and drinking the material body and blood of Christ in the form of the bread and wine, while, at the identical moment, the same body and blood constituted a living, breathing, human being, whom they saw in that form before their own eyes.—Any one who can believe that even omnipotence can make flesh bread, and let it still, at the same identical moment, remain flesh, must be pronounced, in this matter at least, as regardless of common sense as he would be, if he were absolutely destitute of reason.

We have stated already, that all decisions of this kind must, to be relied on, have two qualities; first, the subject must be one on which reason is competent to decide, (and this distinguishes the present doctrine from that of the trinity,) secondly, the decision must be unperverted. Both these qualities belong to the present decision. Reason is competent to decide whether it is possible for the same thing to be two different things, and in two different places, at the same moment. If it cannot decide this, it cannot decide any thing. Nor can its decision on this point, be shown to be perverted. There is no possible inducement for any one to reject the doctrine of the real presence, save its obvious inconsistency with other known truth. But the catholic has a point to gain by his interpretation. He wishes to establish the belief of a constantly recurring miracle, in order to impress common people with awe and reverence for his system of worship and its ordinances, thus hoping to make the bands of delusion and oppression stronger. Here, then, the unhallowed lust of power and influence, and of every gratification that they can secure, is enlisted to pervert the decision of the catholic. His decision, then, in favor of the doctrine in question, is likely to be the one that is perverted; while that of the rest of the world against it, is one of common sense, of reason, both competent and unperverted.

The catholic, likewise, in his interpretation, obviously "cuts to the quick, or presses every word to the utmost it will bear." The expressions, "this is my body," "this is my blood," he understands just as if each specific word must be made to mean the same thing as it would if it stood by itself, and could not possibly depart from its single original signification. This is putting language to the torture; or rather, it is putting it into a strait Jacket, like a maniac.—We have seen that we are not to interpret the language of the sacred writers, as though it were in fetters. It is a mystical sense too, which the catholic makes out, and that in a case, which, it is plain, does not require it. Our Saviour may certainly have meant no more than this, that the bread and wine were to be taken as symbols, or mementos of his death, in which his blood was shed, and his body bruised and pierced. This is a natural interpretation, and exhausts all the necessary meaning of the language. And as this interpretation is consistent with the known reality of things, while that of the catholic contradicts that reality, we adopt the former, and reject the latter. And in doing so, we are wholly governed by the principle under consideration, viz; that nothing can be received as revealed truth, which contradicts common sense, or the competent and unperverted reason of man.—Nothing but this principle can ever decide between us and the catholic, as to which interpretation of these passages shall be received.

REV. WM. PRIESTLY.

The following anecdotes in the life and experience of the Rev. Wm. Priestly, are related by his sister. They may prove encouraging to the faith and prayers of pious parents with regard to their beloved offspring, for the welfare of whose immortal souls they are so tenderly solicitous.

One morning, when under great distress of mind, he rose very early, and went to unburden his mind to a young friend, expecting to return before any one knew of it. His father, thinking he lay longer in bed than usual, went to call him up; but not finding him in his room or in the house, became, together with my mother, excessively alarmed; and search was made for him in the back premises of the house, which were very extensive, but without success. It was a thing so unusual for him to absent himself, without first acquainting his parents where he was going, that they were quite in an agony, not knowing what Satan and distress of mind might drive him to. My father went to his young friend's to inquire, where, to his great joy, he found them both together at prayer. Oh! with what different feelings did he return to inform my dear mother! Who can describe their joy at family prayer that morning! It was like the "oil of joy for mourning, and the garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

In 1785, my eldest sister, being then nineteen years of age, joined my father's church at Dublin. I also, who was younger than my brother, was at the same time under great soul-concern. These circumstances made my dear mother (of whom it might justly be said, that she travailed in birth over her children till Christ be formed in their hearts the hope of glory,) exceedingly anxious for the salvation of my dear brother, who was then seventeen years of age. She desired my father to set apart a day of fasting and prayer in the family for his conversion, for the Lord had said, "For these things will I be inquired of," and "by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God."—Accordingly, a day was set apart; each was to spend it alone in prayer. In the afternoon, my mother came out of her room, telling my father she had good news for him; for she was assured that William would be called and be a minister, & that as sure as she had heard my father preach she knew it was so, and that he would preach; she should not die till she had heard him. The rest of the family knew not of this communication till some time after my brother's call; but we observed my dear mother's countenance, like Hannah's of old, was from that time no more sad. In less than two months from this day of fasting and humiliation, my dear brother was called. He joined the church the next year, and, before the end of the year, wrote a letter to my father, expressing his views and desire to be a minister.—It so happened, that owing to the bad state of my mother's health, and other circumstances, she did not hear my brother preach till a fortnight before her own death, though he had preached several times for my father. He had been settled at Buckingham, his first place, a few months when he sent word to my father and mother, that he felt such delight in his work, that he longed for the return of the Sabbath. When he came unexpectedly to see them, he preached for my father; and my mother, being in better health, went to hear him for the first and only time. She came home in a delightful frame, saying, "Now lettest thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation;' I have now heard my son William preach, and desire no more." The next day he returned to Buckingham; and, what was very remarkable, that day fortnight came home to attend his mother's funeral.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the S. S. Instructor.

We are happy to have it in our power to furnish to our readers another proof of the growing success of Sabbath schools in our state. The following is a letter just received from the Agent of the Maine Sabbath school Union, dated.

Turner, Sept. —, 1831,

I have witnessed some interesting cases of seriousness, and hopeful conversion, among children and youth, since I saw you at B. It does appear to me, that the Spirit of God, is moving upon the hearts of the young generally, in a manner unprecedented; and I do believe, God is intending to remove that criminal incredulity respecting the possibility of early conversions, which has so long hindered the prayers of the church, in behalf of the salvation of children.

I have seldom addressed a company of children, in the Sabbath or common school, but they have evinced great tenderness. I have seen many a tearful eye, and anxious look. In several instances, numbers of little children have gone from the school to their chambers, to pray.

Just before finishing my address, a few evenings since, I saw a little boy, seven years old, get up and leave the room. After meeting, his mother told me, that she heard him crying, before he reached home. He came in, and said, with great feeling, "Mother, it won't do for me to live any longer as I have done. I have been very wicked all my life, and I am determined, this night, to begin my life anew." He then left the room, weeping, retired to another, where he knelt down to pray.

I visited eight or ten families, and found some children serious, or indulging a hope that they have become Christians, in almost every family. In one family a girl 14 or 15 years old, has begun to rejoice in her Saviour, whom she thinks she has found precious to her soul.—Three or four younger brothers are very serious. One little boy, about seven years old, when I first went into the room, sat in his little chair weeping; presently he moved behind the table, out of my sight. I supposed he had hurt himself, or was sick; or perhaps had been corrected for some improper conduct, by his father, who was sitting near by him. But I soon found that the family had just been called round the domestic altar, and the father had prayed and conversed with his children. This little boy was weeping on account of his sins. He did not show his face while I was in the room; but continued to weep—and when I conversed with him, he was so much affected, as to be scarcely able to answer any of my questions.

O, I wish every parent, especially Christian parent, could have witnessed this scene. There was a father and mother, exhibiting the mingled emotions of joy and deep anxiety: and there were their children; the children of their prayers, all of them, except, perhaps, two little ones, either rejoicing on account of pardoned sin, or weeping over sin unpardoned.

In another family, I found a pious father and mother, rejoicing over two new born children, one sixteen, and the other perhaps twelve; and weeping over two others; one younger than either of the others, and one between them, and both more or less anxious. The oldest has, since, as he hopes, given his heart to his Saviour.

When talking to the children in another place, a Sabbath or two since, I noticed two young girls, thirteen or fourteen years of age, who seemed very serious. On Coming out of the meeting house, they were talking with an acquaintance of mine, who introduced them to me. On asking them a few questions, I found they had begun, only a few days before, to hope that Christ had pardoned their sins, and "put the new song into their mouths, even praise to the Lord.

This seriousness among the young, is not confined to this vicinity. A few weeks since, I was in another part of the State, and visited a sick boy. I there witnessed a scene, enough to kindle up the soul of a Christian, into a flame of love. There were eight lads, all under fourteen, and all but two, hoping that they had but recently found the pearl of great price.—They had assembled there, to spend a short season in prayer and religious conversation with their little friend who was sick.

I have recently heard too, that there is an unusual interest, on the subject of religion, manifested among children in some parts of New-Hampshire.

The following is an extract from a letter from Massachusetts: "A little boy, about eleven years old, who lives with ————, has recently become hopefully pious. His convictions of sin were very strong. He had attended a four day's meeting, and was considerably affected. One night, after he had retired, he was heard crying out as though in great distress. Some members of the family, went to him, and found him so much agitated, that his bed shook. At times he would shrink back and shudder, as if standing on the verge of some dreadful precipice. Some of the family remained with him till morning and left him. In an hour or two, he came down. His countenance was lighted up with a smile. The Saviour had appeared for him, and he hoped his sins were pardoned. He then told them of all the distress he felt in the night. He now gives good evidence that he is a Christian."

Do not these instances afford glorious evidence that the Lord is remembering the rising generation for good! And ought they not to encourage parents, teachers, and ministers, to look and pray for greater things, and expect greater things, in relation to early conversions, than they have been wont to do!

ASA BULLARD.

OBEDIENCE.

Parents cannot take a single step to advantage in their efforts to train up their children to piety, without first obtaining their unlimited, unqualified, entire submission to their authority.

The very first lesson to be taught the child is to submit to obey. There are various methods of obtaining this ascendency. In some cases it is to be done by kindness, in some cases by severity; but some way or other it must be done. Your children must be habituated to do what you command, and to refrain from what you forbid; not because they can see the reason for it, but because you command or forbid; submission, not to your reasons but to your authority. If a child is in the habit of disregarding parental injunctions,—if it is necessary to repeat them,—or if obedience is slow, or reluctant, or ill-humored,—I mean if this is so habitually,—there is something radically wrong in the parent's management. No parent can under such circumstances, expect success in any efforts to promote piety; for be it remembered, insubordination is the essence of irreligion.—Abbot

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, OCT. 6, 1831.

WHAT WE HAVE SEEN.

The Editor of this paper has just returned from a tour to the west on business connected with the interests of the establishment and in visiting, as he has done, every village on the Canal and on the Ridge-Road, from this to Lockport, has had an opportunity of learning something of the state of society as it might be gathered from a hasty view, and from calling on a large number of individuals and presenting to them our accounts or soliciting their patronage where it was not already given.

In the first place then, we have seen the poorer class and those in middling circumstances, who profess to be the followers of Christ, manifesting pretty uniformly a deep anxiety to know what is doing in the religious community to promote the Redeemer's Kingdom. We have seen them ready to deprive themselves of luxuries and perhaps of some of the comforts of life, rather than forego the pleasures of learning weekly, through the Observer, or some other religious publication the success attending our Missionary operations at home and abroad and the progress of revivals in the American Churches. We have seen too, in every town and village some of the most wealthy and respectable men who have learned that they are the stewards of God, and are prompt and liberal in aiding the circulation of religious papers. But some other things we have seen less honorable to men "professing godliness." We have seen some wealthy professors excusing themselves from taking a religious paper, because they were already too heavily taxed with those of a political character. We have seen others who were not ashamed to declare that they were too poor to pay for a religious periodical—among those most ready to make this plea were those who have money loaned.

Indeed, we are satisfied that there are more of our farmers who are worth from five to fifteen thousand dollars that plead poverty as an excuse for depriving themselves and their families of the privilege of learning from a religious periodical, what God is doing at this interesting period of the church and the world, in building up the waste places of Zion, than there are among those who are not worth five Hundred Dollars, many of whom depend upon their daily labor for support. This we do not mention as a new discovery. We have found it so since our first connexion with the Observer—but we are confident that this number of wealthy christians who grasp their money with so much eagerness, is rapidly diminishing. Some we fear will continue to grasp their worldly possessions until their hold is loosened by the grasp of death. Were we to be the judge who most needed the influence of a religious publication, we should certainly place our paper in the hands of those who are least disposed to take it.

But another thing we have seen which has somewhat surprized us and which we find is a very heavy draw back upon our patronage—it is the uniting of two or three wealthy families in taking one copy only of our paper. It is true in this way they are not entirely destitute of religious intelligence, but it is obvious that in many cases the children and domestics of the family, cannot enjoy the same privilege of perusing it, that they would have were the paper to remain where they could have access to it through the week—in many cases too it is lost in passing from family to family. In these instances there is obviously no individual responsibility felt to assist in sustaining the paper. Were all professors thus to calculate, our list of subscribers would hardly be sufficient to defray our contingent expenses.

Were this parsimony to extend generally through the community, it would be absolutely impossible to sustain the Rochester Observer notwithstanding the numbers and the wealth of the Presbyterian Church in the western part of this state. Happily for us and for the cause of religion, there are many noble examples of benevolence among the more wealthy part of our patrons. Indeed to some of this class we are indebted for much of our patronage.

THE CANAL.

Among other things that we have seen is the influence of Sabbath Breaking on the Canal.

This great thoroughfare is, at this season particularly, crowded with boats, and business on its borders is extremely active. But to those who are in any way concerned in it there is no Sabbath.—And when we saw the crowd of boys that are employed as drivers trained up in disregard of the command to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," deprived of all its benefits—deprived of Sabbath School and other religious instruction—compelled to disobey God while permitted and encouraged by the example of those around them, to profane his name, and, many of them at least, permitted to indulge without restraint in the use of ardent spirits, we could not but look upon it as the recruiting ground for the adversary of souls, and the thoroughfare to Hell. To talk of morality among those who habitually disregard the Sabbath, is perfectly preposterous. The morality of Sabbath breakers is the morality of the profane swearer, the intemperate drinker, the gambler and the adulterer—and the parent who will place his child in such a situation might as well send him to school, expressly to fit him for a thorough knave or vagabond. We do not pretend to compare the present state of morals on the canal with the past. We have no doubt there are men engaged in canal transportation who deplore the immoralities which are practised upon its waters—who wish and endeavor to promote reform. But moral reform without the rest of the Sabbath, and the restraining, enlightening and purifying influence of the services of the sanctuary never has been and never can be effected. Let boats lie by on the Sabbath, and let those who navigate them have an opportunity of attending public worship, and there is nothing in the nature of the employment which will necessarily deteriorate the moral character. Christians must awake to this subject. Those who are extensively concerned in the forwarding business must, if possible be persuaded to rest themselves and allow those in their employ to rest on the Lord's Day. They must, if they can be made seriously to reflect upon the subject, see that it cannot greatly increase their worldly gains to disregard the imperious claims of an institution which God gave for the express benefit of man. They need its instructions to counteract and restrain the vicious propensities of the numerous agents in their employ. They need it to make them honest to their employers. Surely little dependence can be placed upon the faithfulness of those servants and agents who are habitually dishonest towards God.

The inhabitants on the line of the canal have a deep interest in the moral character of those who are engaged in its business. A moral miasmata is continually exhaling from it which must infect, in a greater or less degree, all who are exposed to its contaminating influence.

INTEMPERANCE.

We have also seen a flood of intemperance which surprized us. Having been almost entirely confined in this village, for the last four years, where intemperance, if it is not banished from our limits, is compelled by the voice of public opinion to seek concealment in the dark recesses where vice and profligacy riot in security, and having heard so much of the good effected by the temperance efforts, we did not expect to see every public house making a display of bottles to entice the intemperate on to ruin and to tempt the hesitating to break their half formed resolutions of entire abstinence. We did not expect to see the young and the old in open day parade before the bar and pour down glass after glass without shame or hesitation. We did not expect to see bloated masses of living corruption treated for their money without compunction by those who are licensed by authority for the accommodation of the traveller and the man of business. But this we have seen to an extent that should arouse the friends of Temperance to renewed efforts in the good cause. We have called at tavern after tavern where our call for the landlord was answered by a bar-room drunkard whose officious politeness was a constant source of annoyance. It is true that we have seen houses of a different description where ardent spirits were sold; where those in the front rank were treated with contempt and were compelled to resort to the village grog shop or grocery to obtain the means of satiating that depraved appetite which every vender of spirits assists in forming.

These respectable houses only cater to the appetites of those of the second or third ranks, and when from temperate, they have taken the rank of the hard drinkers, they are turned over to the lowest class of tippling shops to complete their ruin and to hurry them off to the drunkards grave. All of these keepers of public houses are in fact engaged in the same business. All are making drunkards and paupers. The one it is true only instructs in the rudiments of intemperance, while the other gives the finish to their education—completes the ruin which the other has begun, and is more liberally rewarded with the sighs and groans of the broken hearted widow and the orphan's tears. Let it not be supposed that we have seen no improvement. We have seen wherever we have been that ardent spirits is banished from the houses of professors of religion—we have seen them taking a decided and correct stand on this subject. In this we rejoice. But let the friends of religion and the advocates of temperance awake to renewed effort. The monster Intemperance is not dead or asleep. He is only wounded. Let not his wounds heal.

OUR PATRONS

Are earnestly requested, if they have not already paid, to transmit us the balance due from them without delay. We do hope that this call will be promptly answered. Our wants are pressing.

NEGRO INSURRECTION IN VIRGINIA.

The slave tragedy at the south is probably closed. The suffering and alarm which has been experienced there, will, we should think, cause slave holders to deprecate the dreadful evils of holding their fellow men in bondage, and lead them if possible, to devise some effectual method to rid themselves of this curse which has been entailed upon them by their ancestors. We cannot suppose that even an unsuccessful attempt to regain their liberty, especially when they have inflicted so much suffering upon their oppressors, will be likely to lead the slaves to wear their chains with any less reluctance or deter them from further attempts at emancipation. Indeed the terror which this insurrectionary movement has inspired must lead the slaves to feel more sensibly their own power and we doubt whether this will not prove the precursor of further attempts at resistance, of better digested plans, and of more extended concert. While such indiscriminate murder as that which has marked the progress of the conspirators is to be deprecated, yet we cannot but hope that He who can bring good out of evil will overrule these events to the ultimate removal of the evils of slavery.

That the judgments of God will be visited upon us as a nation for this national sin of holding our fellow creatures in bondage, we have no doubt, unless speedily removed.

We have noticed in some of our eastern papers an appeal to the patriotism of northern men to turn out and assist our southern brethren to bring their revolted slaves to submission, should the revolt of the slaves assume a more serious aspect and require more force than the white population of the south could muster. We will not venture to express our feelings on this subject. We only would say that for various reasons we hope the military of the north will not be called upon to assist in riveting still firmer the chains of servitude upon those who are deprived of their liberty for the high crime of wearing just such a skin as God has given them.

Mr. Chipman:—Some weeks since the Session of the third Presbyterian Church in this village passed a resolution requiring persons who presented themselves to that church as candidates for membership to pledge themselves not to engage in the manufacture, to traffic in, or use ardent spirits, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes, and directed me to communicate the fact to you with the request that you would publish it in the Observer. This duty thus imposed has been neglected hitherto partly through forgetfulness, and partly in consequence of a sincere regret that we have so long left undone the thing that we think every church in the land ought long since to have done. If you ask, "Do you require them to subscribe a temperance test? I answer no. But we expect them to say to us that they will not manufacture, traffic in, or use it with the above exceptions.

H. B. PIERPONT, Clk of Session.

Rochester, October 6th, 1831.

Mr. Chipman,—At the last stated meeting of the Congregational Church of Brighton, the following resolutions were adopted and directed to be forwarded to the Rochester Observer for publication.

Resolved, (1)—That the efforts to suppress the evils of Intemperance now being made on the part of the friends of Temperance, call not only for a decided expression of the favorable views & feelings of all true Christians, but for their hearty and serious co-operation.

Resolved, (2)—That as a Church of Christ, we deem it our privilege and duty to express our disapprobation of either the manufacturing, or vending of Ardent Spirits except as a medicine.

Resolved, (3)—That, so great are the evils of Intemperance—so opposed to the best interests of our fellow men, temporal and eternal—so hostile to the spread of religious knowledge and influence and to the progress of the kingdom and glory of the Great Head of the Church, and so directly connected with the augmenting and perpetuating of these evils are the use, manufacture and sale of Ardent Spirits, with the exception above stated, we cannot but deem each and all of them inconsistent with the principles and profession of a follower of Christ.

Resolved, (4)—That we consider the use, manufacture and sale of Ardent Spirits, except as a medicine, opposed in nature and consequences to the commands of Jesus Christ—to be followers of him—to do no evil—to do good to all men as we have opportunity—to do unto others as we would have them do to us—to be perfect in every good word and work and to let our light so shine before men that they may be led to glorify our Father who is in Heaven.

Resolved, (5)—That we have sufficient and just reason to be grieved with our brethren, the members of this Church, who will not, for any reason, coincide with us in views and feelings on the greatness of the evils of Intemperance—and on the inconsistency of the use and manufacture and sale of Ardent Spirits, except as a medicine, with the principles and profession of a true friend of Christ and who will not co-operate with us in the efforts to entire abstinence and voluntary association and other proper means, to suppress these evils.

HIRAM L. MILLER, Moderator

Extract from the Minutes of the Synod of Genesee Sept. 22 1831.

Whereas we are believers in the predicted latter day glory of the Church—when the watchmen of Zion shall see eye to eye, when Ephraim shall not envy Judah nor Judah vex Ephraim—when the collisions and the diversities of opinion and practice which have long and unhappily distracted the Christian Church and kept brethren at a distance from each other shall cease—and whereas many in consequence of this disunion among the professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus have spoken evil of the way of life, and as we think that some of these existing differences may be wholly removed and others perhaps mitigated so far that all Christians should cordially co-operate in every desirable effort to bring in the latter day glory, therefore,

Resolved, That this Synod appoint a delegate to meet and represent it in a General Council of the CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THE WHOLE WORLD, if similar measures should be taken by other bodies and such council should be convened and if not, then to represent this body in the largest Council of the Church which may be convened to promote the general interests of Christ's kingdom and all the legitimate and proper objects of such council.

Mr. Chipman, Sir.—It was made my duty to communicate to you for publication the above extracts from the minutes of the Synod of Genesee at their late meeting at Brockport. Perhaps it should be accompanied with some explanation, which, I take the liberty of hereby adding merely in the character of an individual member and a witness of the proceedings which led to it.—The Narrative of the State of Religion which you published last week presents a view of the cheering intelligence from every corner of the field of the Synod's supervision which filled that body with a degree of humble, grateful, holy joy which we presume has rarely been witnessed in any meeting of a church judicatory. The Spirit of Christ that had prospered their labors in the field manifestly presided in the hearts of his ministers in Council. Fruits of the Spirit were to be expected, and I, for one, think they were manifest in a degree not to be mistaken. The Synod seemed to have drunk deep of the spirit of a better age yet to come.

Instead of jealousy of trifle among themselves, the universal wish seemed to be that all dissension among all that love Jesus Christ might cease. Reports of the success of the Gospel among other denominations and of large additions to their communion added to our joy—and the question naturally presented itself, cannot something be done to impart our enjoyments and blessings to others—to all?—In this day when we begin better to understand how all God's blessed promises are brought about by means—by a blessing on the faithful evangelical efforts of christians, is not time we were doing something to remove the darkest stain on the face of the church of God—to take away the sharpest weapon her enemies have wielded against her!

Is it not a sore evil that the ONE body of Christ should be torn, and the church, instead of acting with the power of its mass on the Kingdom of Darkness, should have little more efficiency than belongs to its individual members, and even that sometimes impaired by mutual collisions—How the host of evils naturally passed in rapid review before the mind;—christians of different denominations misapprehending each others opinions and feelings—misrepresenting each others doctrines, denying themselves all edification, all comfort, except what comes thro' thier own particular chanel, inculcating and perpetuating prejudices and hatred, and suffering the pain in their own bosoms—committing the sins of schism and indulging feelings of envy and jealousy, seemingly without consciousness of the fact, or at least without a sense of its unholy nature and guilty character.

But what could be done. Attempts at unifomity and concord have in past ages been sometimes only other names for sinister policy, intolerance and a violation of the sacred rights of conscience and private judgment. While all perhaps admit the voice of the whole church—the virtual aggregate of the true disciples of Jesus to be the true and proper umpire in all that private judgment ought to submit to compromise and all that the essential & practical unity of the church requires—the very thought of a General Council associated as it has been with the ideas of despotic usurpation and vile corruption in convening, organizing and desolving, is the last resource to which a wounded & dismembered church has in late times been accustomed to look for redress.

And even in an age when rights and liberty are better understood, and where the happy separation of Church and state cuts off the chief chan-

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

...el of corruption, from the councils of Christians, many difficulties embarrass the prospect of the happy execution of such a design. Who shall assume the office of Convener to such a council? Where shall it assemble? How shall preliminary differences be so far composed to take even the first steps with the universality and cordiality of sufferage which would be essential to the accomplishment of the great good in view? And what security could there be had that love would reign, that jealousy would be absent; that pride of party opinion and of learning, would not set up unreasonable claims and that breaches would not be widened, instead of healed or even new ones made? We need O pudor! we need ten years labor of a peace society in the church to inculcate the doctrines of concord and to teach us the details of practice in the first simple law of Christ, "Love one another." Yet something can be done to prepare the way for this most desirable consummation which we know must one day take place. It seems to me that the act of the Synod of Genesee is a decided a grand and yet a safe and unobjectionable step. It dictates nothing to any, without its own peal. It forestalls nothing.—It arrogates nothing—but looking forward to an event which all must admit to be in itself, every way desirable, every way worthy of all who profess and call themselves christians, it declares we are ready. If the spirit shall be reciprocated by other bodies only so far as to have a similar resolution entered on the records—and who can decline it! If as in the temperance cause, some one simple, but fundamental principle whose truth and soundness is self evident to all, but which only be sustained only adopted & avowed in rapid succession all over the land; over the world—what glorious consequences would not necessarily follow! All ready all enlightened and convinced on one point, however they may differ on others, viz. that all Christians are brethren, and ought not to differ, that their differences mean evil to be deplored, not a matter of glorying—that as far as they do agree they ought to know it, that they ought not to be willing to think of each other according to the surmises and imputations of uncharitable jealousy, but hear directly from each other, within ear of charity, the frank explanations of brotherly love. All ready!—what a blessed announcement would it be, and yet there is perhaps not a Christian in the land that would not this moment make the declaration for himself. And if this were done, half the evils and difficulties would be already removed. Then the spirit of Christ speaking from every corner of the land would properly be the convener. Then under the same spirit, we might hope that the interests of Christ's Kingdom and no low nor secular policy would guide and govern as a common motive in every heart. What an essential difference would there be between the principles and structure of such a council and many we have known—and what different results would necessarily follow. Instead of coming together with the purpose each to achieve victory to his party, then each should meet determined as far as possible, to attain to peace and concord with all. Instead of committing points of difference to be reported on by heartless logic and learned pride—candor and love, and the wisdom that cometh down from above should be employed on this service—and instead of heralding the issue to the people with the jarring notes of rival parties, beating up for recruits to their several factions, we should hear a thousand voices with each its peculiar tone like the mingled harmony of a mighty organ where variety and even discord gives richness to the whole, swelling back to heaven the overture it taught us on the morning when to Us a son was born—Peace on earth and good will to men.

J. PENNEY.

Mr. Editor—I wish, through the medium of your paper to inquire what has become of the Genesee Sabbath School Union, with its thirteen county auxiliaries, and if its officers are within the reach of your paper, I hope they will be able to give an account of their Stewardship to the people by whom they were appointed. Some of the County Unions have made out their reports but to whom to send them they know not. FORWARD.

From the Boston Recorder.

UNITARIAN PURGATORY.

In the Christian Register of August 27, the editor gave his views of the day of judgment, and of the future state of the righteous and the wicked. He believes:—

1. That "Christ is represented to be the judge of mankind, not because he will pronounce sentence in person literally in a tribunal, and in a formal manner, but because he, under God provides the rules, and publishes the laws, by which judgment shall proceed."

2. That "mankind will not be brought before a judgment-seat together; but that they will be judged singly and successively, as they are removed from their earthly state of trial and discipline."

3. That the effect of the judgment will not be "to separate mankind into two, and only two divisions, the one saints and the other sinners;" but to give "various shades and gradations of happiness or of unhappiness," according to character.

4. That the result of the judgment will not be a "fixed state and measure of enjoyment or of suffering;" but a state in which individuals may become vicious, and lose their happiness; or virtuous, and rise out of misery; i. e. a state of probation.

5. "Every one who leaves this life with a sinful character, will be subjected to suffering more intense than we can now conceive of, and every one who leaves this life with a virtuous character, will be admitted to enjoyment more exquisite than any we have here experienced; yet the question, how long the suffering in the one case, and the enjoyment in the other case, will continue, cannot now be determined, but must depend, as we have already said, on the exertions which each individual, under God, shall choose to make. In other words, every vicious one will continue to suffer until he voluntarily becomes virtuous, and every virtuous one will continue to enjoy until he voluntarily becomes vicious. And now, if any one should ask, whether the time will ever arrive when every human being will be restored to virtue and happiness, we could only answer, we do not know. We indeed hope that such will be the case, but we do not know; because the scriptures have not, as we think, undertaken to decide the question, and because we are by no means competent to determine how every individual will choose, in the future world, to exercise the powers and use the means which God shall give him."

We hope that those of our readers who may feel any interest in the subject, will not fail to compare the above "scheme" with the divine plan as exhibited in the scriptures. Particularly do the two last articles demand attention.

The unitarian view of the future state, as here exhibited, differs from the popish, in the following particulars:—

1. The Papists acknowledge a hell—a place of unalterable doom, for "infidels and heretics;" the unitarian creed acknowledges but one place of punishment, a purgatory.

2. The Papists place their purgatory before, and the Unitarians after the day of judgment.

3. The Papists regard heaven as a place of confirmed happiness; with the Unitarians, it is a counterpart of their purgatory.

4. The sufferings of the popish purgatory are definite, so much for so much sin, (save the good that the individual or his friends may have to "balance.") Those of the unitarian purgatory are continued till reformation.

From the Boston Telegraph.

REPENTANCE.

It is the immediate duty of one sinner to repent, as well as another.

Since God commands all men every where to repent, because all men every where have sinned and come short of his glory, it appears that one sinner ought to repent as well as another. God requires some duties of some men, which he does not require others to do, and which others are under no obligation to do; but repentance is a duty which he commands all men, without exception or distinction, to do. It concerns every person to become a penitent; because he has become a sinnr, and stands condemned for all his transgressions of the law of God.

Some sinners are undoubtedly greater transgressors than others, and have more to answer for and repent of, but the least sinner is a transgressor, and one whom God expressly commands to repent. It is the duty of the young as well as of the old; and the best as well as the worst of sinners, to repent. And if persons of all ages, of all characters, and of all conditions, would seriously, critically, and impartially review their past lives, they would find themselves to be sinners, and great sinners. If they would view themselves in the light of divine law, which extends to every thought, to every exercise of the heart, and every action of life; they would find their transgressions to be not only great, but immensely numerous, and highly displeasing to God. The externally fair and faultless sinner, would find himself as indispensably bound to repent, as the externally vile and vicious.

It is extremely unwise for any to make a distinction in their own favor, which God does not make; and to imagine that he is such an one as themselves, and views them with all the partiality with which they view themselves. They deceive themselves and not God, who will view and treat them at the last day with perfect impartiality and justice, and this he forewarns them of, when he commands them all to repent, and prepare for the great day of decision. The command which I have considered in these numbers, stands in a very solemn connection. "But now God commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." It is just as certain that men must obey God's command to repent, in order to be saved, as it is that he will finally judge the world in righteousness. And as it is as certain that one man will be called to an account & judged at the last day, as that another will; so it is just as certain, that one man ought to repent as another, in order to prepare for his final and eternal state. If the heart of every impenitent sinner condemns him, let him remember that God is greater than his heart, and knoweth all things, and will certainly condemn him in the day of final decision, if he repents not. Repentance is an immutable condition, upon which the final destiny of every sinner depends.

Since God justly commands all men every where to repent, because they are sinners, and because they are as capable of repenting as of sinning, it is the immediate duty of every sinner to repent. As God now commands every sinner to repent, so now is the proper time to repent.—Sinners have no right, nor occasion to delay repentance. They have no right to delay, because God commands them to repent immediately.—Nor have they any occasion to delay repentance, because they are as able to repent now, as they ever will be, or as able to repent, as continue impenitent. It is easier to love God, than to hate him, to love holiness than sin, and to renounce sin, than to persist in it against the commands of God, the dictates of reason and conscience, and the dread of future and eternal punishment. The way of transgressors is hard.

It is in vain to except and wait for a more convenient season to repent. No impenitent sinner has the least excuse for delaying repentance.—God requires him to repent immediately. His own conscience requires him to repent immediately. And his own eternal happiness requires him to repent immediately. He runs an awful risk of losing his own soul, every day he neglects to repent. The neglect of this duty, there is reason to believe, has ruined millions and millions of mankind. And neglect now is as dangerous as ever it was. It is a continual provocation to God to destroy the impenitent; and a treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath. Wherefore the Holy Ghost saith, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." PAUL.

DOMESTIC.

Our attention has frequently been drawn to a dangerous and abominable nuisance, which has existed and now exists in the street east of the Globe Building. It is an open place in the street, large as 15 ft. by 10 ft.; leaving the deep and rapid canal which turns all the machinery on the east side of the river, open to view! This hole is within thirty feet of Main-st., and not a night passes at this time of the year, when there are not hundreds of strangers passing on the verge of this maelstrom. If the Honorable, the Corporation have no power—to act in the premises—a subscription ought to be set on foot, to raise money to repair the place, or to furnish a life boat to be stationed in the abyss, to rescue any unfortunate remnant of mortality who may drop in.

At the least the matter should be explained—so that an intelligible answer could be given to the various inquiries made by strangers, as to the reason on of the place being kept open so long. —Roch. Dai. Adv.

We think that the Editor of the Daily deserves great credit for being able so to restrain his temper, when speaking of this outrageous & abominable nuisance, as to make use of sotemperate & respectful language.—We know not that the corporation have the power to abate this nuisance, but if they have not, we think that no time should be lost after the meeting of the Legislature, to obtain such an extension of their powers as to meet such a case as this—and if they have the power and neglect to use it, the remedy lies with the citizens—let them, by contribution or otherwise, repair this breach in the raceway, and bear this case in mind next spring. The lives of our citizens are in danger—such a trap is a disgrace to this village.

NORTH CAROLINA.—The Daily Advertiser publishes the substance of a letter from Wilmington, dated the 20th inst. giving an account of the discovery of the negro plot, and the execution of four negroes concerned in it. They were all residing in Wilmington. Three had been previously executed for participating in a plot, in Sampson and Duplin Counties. It was the plan of the four ringleaders on a certain night [illegible] the town, at the Little Bridge, a short distance from town; where they were to divide their forces, and enter by different streets, burning and butchering as they proceeded. The houses were to be set on fire, the inhabitants killed on appearing at their doors. They would endeavor to get possession of the arsenal as soon as possible, and take possession of the place. Seven thousand stand of arms had been deposited in the arsenal. The plot was discovered through a slave to whom the plot had been incautiously communicated, and who had no disposition to engage in it. The four ringleaders were seized, and separately questioned as to what they know of a conspiracy. At first, they affected ignorance, but by flogging and menaces they were made to confess; and having been tried by three justices and twelve freeholders, they were found guilty, sentenced and executed. One of them was upwards of 70 years old. He was the last to confess, and only did so after he found that they had been fully betrayed. He conducted with surprising courage and firmness throughout, even to death.—N. Y. Spectator.

Although we regret the cruelties practiced by the negroes at the South, in the late insurrection, we acknowledge that we feel indignant to see such a mockery of the forms of law as that of scourging the accused, whether black or white, to obtain the evidence necessary to conviction.

It would, in our estimation be as just, and certainly more convenient and expeditious, to hang these blacks on suspicion, and when there is more le's sre—when the insurrection is put down, give them a trial.—Ed. Roch. Obs.

From the New-York Spectator.

FATAL RIOTS IN PROVIDENCE.

At a late hour this morning we received the papers by the Eastern steam-boats, and hasten to present the public, with the following painful narrative of the transactions of last week in the heretofore peaceful town of Providence. In order to do so, however, we are again compelled by the pre-occupancy of our columns with Mr. Berrin's letter, to trespass upon the rights of our advertising friends. But in an emergency like the present, we are confident they will excuse us. The results of the renewed riot of Saturday, is a melancholy, but necessary one. The forbearance of the magistracy was highly exemplary. Had they carried it further, they would themselves been criminal.—

From the Providence Journal.

RIOT.

A Mob assembled in this town on Saturday and was not dispersed until several of our citizens had lost their lives, or been severely wounded in the conflict. A statement of the circumstances which led to it is due to the public.—The following, we believe to be substantially correct.

On Wednesday evening, a party of sailors on a frolic, proceeded to some houses of ill fame, on Olney's lane, occupied by blacks, an altercation ensued, stones were thrown; three muskets discharged at the assailants by persons occupying the houses, whereby a sailor was killed on the, spot, and two others wounded. The report of the transaction was rapidly spread through the town and a mob was soon collected, the furniture such as it was, was demolished, in one or two houses, in despite of the attempts made to check them. A black person was arrested and thrown into prison on suspicion of being one of the offenders.

To prevent a recurrence of similar outrages, and to preserve the peace and quiet of the town, the Town Council doubled the usual number of Watchmen, and called out Constables, ordering them to arrest all persons committing public outrages on public property. The Sheriff with his officers, and the Governor of the State with the members of the Town Council, and many of the most respectable citizens, assembled also at the same place. The utmost exertions of the civil authorities to maintain order, proved inadequate.

The Mob assembled and carried on their attacks systematically, with implements of various kinds. Several of the ritous persons arrested by the Sheriff, were openly arrested rescued by their companions, and taken forcibly from the custody of this officer. In this situation, with all the power of the civil authorities set at defiance, the Governor of the State, at the request of the Sheriff of the county, called out one of the military companies, to aid in suppressing the tumult. The order having been issued at a late hour of the evening, only about 25 members of one company could be collected. Under the order of the Sheriff, these few spirited men proceeded to the spot, where they were assailed by various sorts of missiles, and several of them were wounded by large stones. One individual of the company was so severely wounded as to falter and leave the ranks, and another was bathed in blood, from a wound cut in his head, which was the blood first drawn by the offensive attacks of the Mob. Thus assaulted, they continued firm in their ranks, under the shower of stones, until it became evident that no alternative remained, but instant resistance or retreat. Unwilling to resort to fire-arms, although exposed to being maimed, or even to the loss of life, from the weight and impetuosity of some of the stones discharged at them, while standing forth openly, to sustain the laws of the land, they patiently bore their attacks, and finally retreated by order of the Governor. The Mob went on steadily until nearly morning, with their work of destruction, in open defiance and derision of all the constituted authorities of the town and of the State. A few of the rioters, were however, seized and securely lodged in jail.

On the subsequent day, notice it is stated, was given by the Sheriff to the Governor of the State, of intimations thrown out of a premeditated attack upon the State jail, by the rioters, to rescue their companions confined there, and also to repeat the same scenes of destructive violence as had taken place on the previous evening. Upon the communication of this official information of a threatned attack against the property of the State, as well as in open defiance of its laws, the responsibility devolved upon its supreme executive officer to sustain the due course of public justice, and the execution of the laws, as bound to do by his oath of office. To effect this object in the most overawing and determinate manner, orders were issued to the several indipendant companies, to hold themselve in readiness to repress any recurrence of riots that might occur.

As had been contemplated, the Mob again assembled at the approach of evening; but intimidated by the vigilant and energetic measures that had been taken, after some ineffectual attempts to excite to open outrage on the part of the leaders of the Mob, one of whom was armed with a sword, they dispersed; not however, as it was openly expressed, without a determination of mustering an overpowering force to complete their purpose on the ensuing evening.

To again defeat these renewed systematic attacks to be repeated for the fourth night in succession, orders were again issued to the hands of turned citizens to hold themselves in readiness.

According to the proposed plan, the attack was recommenced for the fourth time by the Mob at an early hour of the evening, and the work of destruction of buildings and other private property, went on as usual. The noise of the crash of falling materials, mingled with shouts and imprecations, were on this calm night distinctly to be heard even in the distant parts of the town to interrupt the quiet, and excite the alarm of every peaceable citizen, and of every man capable of reflecting on the consequences of living in a land while lawless rioters continued unchecked and triumphant.

The alarm bell having been sounded, the citizens repaired to the scene of riot, with their muskets in martial array, passed through the mob, accompanied with their hisses and derision, and took post on the hill above. Proclamation was then made by a magistrate under the riot act, the mob ordered to disperse, and notice audibly given, that otherwise in five minutes they would be fired upon. They came down to do so. Instead of dispersing, a part retired to ground west of that held by the authorities, and another portion in open resistance to those laws, attacked a house within stone throw, with great violence. Upon this, the Sheriff with a part of the force, proceeded with an intention to disperse this assailing multitude; but were compelled to halt before leaving the hill, by showers of stone thrown from the mob on the west. Two vollies were now fired over their heads without any other effect than producing repeated vollies of stones in return.

Another portion of the military were despatched as a reinforcement, and the Sheriff with the first, then proceeded down the road to protect the buildings, the mob partly separating on each side, and partly retiring before them. After effecting a passage over the adjacent bridge, amidst shouts and insults, the mob closed in their rear, separating them from the main body, and threw stones so unremittingly, that many of the soldiers were severely wounded. An order was now distinctly to be heard directed to the mob to leave the street, or it would become necessary to fire upon them. Renewed discharges of stones were the only result. Thus assailed, they were now compelled to turn and face the rioters, and, as a last resort, it having become absolutely necessary for the preservation of the lives of those under arms, orders were at length given to fire, which were obeyed. Until this moment, all entreat es, all orders, all force had proved ineffectual. In a few minutes afterwards the mob dispersed, and quiet was again restored.

FOREIGN.

From the National Gazette.

We have just conversed with an intelligent American gentleman, who is just returned from the continent of Europe, through which he passed as far as Berlin. He says that the great subject of interest and anxiety at present is the Cholera Morbus. It had reached the frontiers of Silesia and was making its way steadily, but slowly into the heart of Europe. The public authorities of the various towns and cities, were taking every precaution to guard against it, and to obviate as much as possible its fatal effects.—In some places it has been excluded by the extreme care of the police, and the strictnes with which non-intercourse has been enforced; in others, notwithstanding every precaution, it has penetrated into the towns. In St. Petersburg, especially, this has occurred, where the most vigorous measures were adopted, but where its ravages have proved excessive. Though the official reports endeavor to lessen the number of cases, they have not been fewer than fifteen thousand. No remedies generally successful have been devised; those which proved so in some places, were totally unsuccessful in others. The sea air is said to have produced favorable effects in several instances, and this encourages the hope that the pestilence may not cross the Atlantic: but its slow, sullen and fatal progress which is now viewed with deep anxiety in Europe, should warn the public health officers, along the whole of our coast.

Our informant thinks that the cause of the Poles is comparatively prosperous. And that the operations of the Russians are not pushed with the vigor, good fortune, or ready resources that were at first expected to attend their arms.—There does not appear however, to be any probability of the warlike interference of other nations or of a general war. The situation of the people east of the Rhine is such, that thier governments would become excessively unpopular by subjecting them to the scourge of war, while they are threatned with the approachiug pestilence. After an absence of ten years, no change for the better is observed among them. Some of the Governments, especially that of Prussia, have introduced partial reforms in the laws, but none in the national economy. Of a revenue of about fifty millions of dollars raised in that kingdom, one half is applied to the maintenance of the army, and is drawn from a population little exceeding eleven millions. The poorer classes are all desirous to emigrate, but they want the means to do so. In England at present, every thing appears quiet; but it is evident that there is great distress among the poorer classes;—while in Ireland, it has at no period been more dreadful.

We give these, as the observations of an intelligent eyewitness. The picture of distress may seem more darkly colored, from the contrast it presents to our own country; but it cannot be doubted that the situation of Europe is one offering many gloomy reflections to a philanthropist, as well as a republican. We think ourselves, that the Cholera Morbus will not cross the Atlantic; and we think that a general war is likely to happen; indeed, we cannot conceive how the great strife of principles and interests can be much longer deferred. There may be partial changes, seemingly favorable, in the political horizon of Europe, but the common aspect portends violent storms and convulsions.

DR. BARRY'S ACCOUNT OF THE CHOLERA.

We subjoin an extract of a Letter from Dr. Barry, which contains the most striking and graphic description of the Cholera which has yet fallen under our notice;—

"St. Petersburg, July 20th 1831.—The disease is certainly somewhat mitigated, both as to the number and the fatality of attacks, though the weather has continued unchanged. Thermometer in our apartment steadily above 70 deg. of Fahrenheit; very little wind, and what there is, constantly from the east, with the exception of twenty-four hours last week. I came here with an impression strongly fixed upon my mind, that the essential and dangerous features of cholera morbus were immoderate and ungovernable vomiting and purging of a serous fluid, violent spasms, and exhaustion and collapse necessarily attendant on such a state; consequently, that the first indication would be, to restrain these depressing evacuations. The fact is, however, that vomiting and purging are amongst the least important symptoms of the present epidemic, though the appearance of the fluid evacuated is highly characteristic. Rice water strained, and allowed to settle down, is, when shaken up, the best type. The evacuations, both upward and downwards, either soon cease or are easily suppressed; while in many cases, and these the very worst, there are either none, or they are very trifling. It is the sudden paralysis and rapidity diminishing action of the heart, of the arteries and of the organs of respiration, with the stasis and thickening of the blood, the loss of the power to generate heat, that constitute the real danger of the first,—the most fatal stage of the disease. Blue black, flat lines mark the course of the larger veins; a deadly livor colours the skin; even the tongue is icy cold; the respiration is short, quick, and imperfect; the scrotum, the cords and diaphragm drawn violently upwards; the pulse and voice extinct; the limbs and belly torn with spasms; the hands and the feet shrivelled, corrugated, and much diminished in volume; the reason unimpaired. It would seem as if all the colourless cells and vessels, upon which the fergur of plumpness of the integuments so much depends, were squeezed to emptiness, and nothing left but the thickened colouring matter of the blood. If this state cannot be overcome in a very few hours, the sufferer must die. Mordechi, or mort de chien, or mort noir, would either of them be a much more appropriate name for this inexplicable malady, than that by which it is at present designated. I am now quite convinced that neither Celsus nor Sydenham ever saw this disease, else they surely would not have omitted all the symptoms that I have just enumerated.

"It is in the above state, particularly if there be violent spasm, that the magisterium bismuthi has been found so serviceable, assisted by cordials, synapisms covering the whole belly, and frictions. Neither warm bath nor vapour baths will do. The body is warmed by them, as a dead animal would be, but the faculty of generating heat not being restored, the patient cools down rapidly again, and with increased debility. Opium appears really to be contra indicated, unless to allay vomiting and spasm, which the bismuth effects much better, and calomel they have not ventured to give in large doses.

"Two physicians (Germans,) Yeenbeck and Brunlow, stated publicly and firmly yesterday in my presence, at the Medical council, that during the preceding eleven days they had treated at the Custom-house Hospital, thirty cholera patients, of whom they had not lost one. They give two table spoonfuls of common table salt in six ounces of hot water, at once; and one table spoonful of a similar mixture, cold, every hour afterwards. They always begin by bleeding.

"But in the ordinary way of treating the disease; suppose the first stage safely past; very rarely indeed—not five times in the hundred—does the patient return to health without passing through a dangerous fever, which not unfrequently assumes a typhoid character, with reddish brown dry tongue; stupor; suffused eye; constipated and tender belly; dark sordes about the lips and teeth. The pulse, however, is generally quicker and the skin hotter, than in primitive typhus. In this state many die from the fourth to the seventh day and even after. In other cases the fever is benignant, and goes off within the fourth day by copious perspiration.

"My object in entering into this detail is to warn you that many, and fatal cases of the present epidemic may occur with little or no vomiting or purging. The shrivelling of the fingers and toes, the colour of the skin, the shrinking of the features, the coldness of the tongue, the feebleness or extinction of the pulse and voice, the rice-water evacuations when there are any, are the true marks of the disease, not to be mistaken."—Med. Gazette.

From Badger's Weekly Messenger.

POLAND.

Warsaw is still hid from the eye of Europe by the Russian armies. The Poles however, are said to be prepared for a terrible resistance.—They have undermined the whole of Warsaw, and are ready, if overpowered, to bury themselves and their invaders in one common ruin. It is said, however, that the Russians are disposed to treat with them, and allow them a separate national existence, to be governed by a Viceroy of their own people. General Rudiger, who had crossed the Vistula against Paskewitch, has recrossed it, which shows that the cause of the Poles is not so desperate as we might expect. We look with anxiety for every arrival from the Continent, as likely to bring news of the fate of this magnanimous people.

Letters and papers from Warsaw up to Aug. 4th have arrived, at which time, nothing decisive had occurred. The expectation that it would give rise to numerous rumors, one of which is, that the Poles have been defeated, but which is not credited.

☞ An interesting account of a protracted meeting in U. Canada has been mislaid, or it would appear in this paper.

A CARD.

The Ladies of the third Presbyterian Society in this village have contributed fifty dollars to constitute their Pastor a life member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.—This token of affection is very gratefully acknowledged with ardent desires that it may be attended with the blessings of God and the pleasure of doing good. L. LYONS.

Rochester, Oct. 3d. 1831.

Mr. Editor—Please insert the following:—Received of Rev. S. C. Brown, twenty-five dollars, contributed by the 1st Presbyterian Church in West Bloomfield, at the monthly concert to aid the A. B. C. F. Missions.—Also, of Mr. Harvey Bushnell contributed by the Congregational Society in West Bloomfield, thirty dollars and fifty cents, to aid the A. B. C. F. Missions. JOHN ELLIOT.

Sept. 29th, 1831.

A Protracted Meeting will be held at East Bloomfield, commencing on Thursday the 18th inst. Ministers and members of churches are earnestly invited to attend. ROBT. W. HILL.

New Agents for the Rochester Observer.

G. M. Woodbury, Ogden.

Gould & Benedict, Holley.

CONTENTS.

Of the Christian Spectator for Sept. 1831.

Review of the Works of President Edward's

Review of Hawe's Tribute to the Memory of the Pilgrims.

Review of Memoirs of Howard.

Review of Dyspepsy Forestalled and Resisted.

Review of Outlines of Ecclesiastical History.

Review of Derham's Physico Theology.

Application of the Principles of Common Sense to certain Disputed Doctrines.

Review of the Memoirs of Bruen.

Review of Lectures on Practical Subjects.

Review of the Child's Book on the Soul.

The Biblical Repertory on the Doctrine of Imputation.

MARRIED,

On the 21st, inst. at Belvidere, by the Rev. Mr. Thibou, Nathaniel Pendleton Hosack, of New-York, to Sophia Harrison daughter of Philip Church, Esq. of the former place.

DIED.

At Angell's Corners on the 21st of June, Amasa Angell, Esq. P. M. aged 40.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, Genesee	91 @ ——	Ashes, pot	$7 00 @ 7 12½
Flour, bbl.	5 25 @ ——	Potatoes	.25
Corn	.50	Butter, lb.	.12½
Oats	.25 @ .31	Lard	.8
Beef, best	5 @ 6	Cheese	.8
Pork, do.	5 @ 6	Wool, lb.	1 00
Pork, mess	14 00

Rochester prices for wheat do not vary.—Feeds 100

☞ NOTICE.—Those Subscribers for the New York Evangelist the past year, are informed that by leaving their dues at the office at C. J. Hill's within a few days, they will save the proprietors the expense of sending an agent to their dwellings.—Those who wish to pay it once for the past and the current year will find their account as above.

October 6, 1831. 2w41

☞ BARLEY.—The Subscribers will pay Cash for 500 Bushels prime quality Barley delivered at their Store.

ROSSITER & KNOX.

Rochester, Oct. 1831. 3w41

ROCHESTER CHEMICAL MANUFACTORY AND NEW DRUGS & MEDICINE ESTABLISHMENT.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the public generally, and Physicians in particular, that he has recently connected with the Rochester Chemical Manufactory a full assortment of carefully selected to which he invites the attention of purchasers, both by wholesale and retail.

DRUGS & MEDICINE,

Dealers are desired to take particular notice that all the varieties of approved patent and certified Family Medicines now in use will be furnished at the lowest New York Factory Prices, and that every reasonable inducement will be offered for purchasing at this Western Establishment in addition to saving of transportation, risk of breakage, &c. &c.

All orders for Drugs and Medicine, operative Surgical and Dentist instruments, infirmary apparatus, ordinary and extraordinary, executed with promptness and care by

LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,
At the Sign of the Alligator, No 11, Carroll St.
4w41

REMOVAL.

WILLIAMS & MERRILL, Druggists and Chemists, Office and Chemical Laboratory, No. 3, Exchange Buildings, corner of Buffalo and Main streets, have removed their old stand to the Globe Building, where they have now on hand a large stock of Leather, Oils, Dye Stuffs, Chemicals, Medicines and Chemical Apparatus.

N. B. The highest price in Cash always paid for Beaver and Coon Skins. 2w41

SILAS SMITH, Physician, Surgeon, and Dentist, Office No. 7, Carroll-st.
Rochester, Aug. 24, 1831. 3m 2m

JUST Published the TEMPERANCE ALMANAC,

FOR 1832,

containing, besides the astronomical matter, many useful hints, friendly admonitions, and solemn warnings, on the subject of INTEMPERANCE. Also,

THE CHRISTIAN ALMANAC,

FOR 1832,

for sale by the thousand or less quantity, by
4w41 HOYT, PORTER, & Co.

SELECT SCHOOL.—I intend to open a School on Monday the 10th of Oct. next, in the Franklin House, on the corner of St. Paul and Main Sts. in East Rochester, where every attention will be given to the progress of such students as think proper to attend.—Visitors welcome at all times when the school is in session.

S. D. MOORE.

Rochester, Sept. 28, 1831. 4w41

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 428, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit:—All that certain piece or parcel of land being and being in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, in sub division of lot No. Seventy two, bounded south by lot no. 28, east by part of lot No. 71, north by lot No. 30, and west by Clinton Street, containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK, } Executors of
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } J. Bissell, Jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased

V. & S. MATHEWS, Att'ys. 25w 41.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 4 of mortgages at page 332, executed by Adam Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Gates in the county of Monroe and in lot No. fifty three, Township No. one, and distinguished on a map of Cornhill (a sub division of said lot No. 53) as lot number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Bissell Jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased

V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829 & recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 518, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit.—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Gasham Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number fourteen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe, on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1831. LAURA M. ELY,

S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

IN CHANCERY.

Francis Williams, Complainant,
vs.
Peter Bracke, and others, Defendants.

Ezra Coe, Complainant,
vs
Philo Higley, & others, Defendants.

The sale in each of these causes advertised in another part of this paper, which was to take place this day at ten o'clock, (see the advertisement on last page,) is postponed till the 20th inst. at the Eagle Tavern, in the village of Rochester, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day.—Dated 6th October, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON,

Master in Chancery.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

POPERY.

We know not what name to give to the following article written by a Catholic in defence of his creed—We leave it to our readers to decide whether there is more of puerile folly or of blasphemy—whether it is calculated to excite more to laughter or weeping.

DEFENCE OF POPERY.

I could recite the miracles of Francis, Anthony, Bridget, Catharine of Sienna, Tersa, Margaret, Dominic, Almanac, Curandarum Virum, George Christopher, the seven sleepers, the 10,000 virgins of Cornwall, Faith, Hope, Charity, and the three daughters of Wisdom—but I shall only cull out a few, on purpose to show a heretical world, what holy ones we have had among us, that they may come into the unity of the church, and be obedient to her decrees.

The Virgin Mary has made very frequent visits to many of the above, and other personages.

When Stanislaus was sick, she brought her son to him, and put him into his bed, and so cured him of his disorder. Sometimes she has been known to come down and give her votaries suck, when they have been in a languishing way. At other times, she has brought the little Jesus to be dandled, kissed, and embraced in bed, so as to overcome them with joy; as it did Lucia, who had him with her for three nights together.

Tersa was a highly favored saint, Christ came once, in company with Dominic, to visit her when she was ill; and a great deal of savory discourse is recorded to have passed in the interview. Her heart burned with such a fire of love to Christ, whom she had formerly made her spouse, that she had "a vision of an angel piercing her bowels with a dart tipped with fire;" and she died at last, "not so much, says Holy Church, by the force of any distemper, as by the intolerable burning of divine love." The like accident happened to Gertrude. It would be endless, to recite all that happened to Tersa, and of the miracles she wrought. When she died, with a crucifix in her hand, her soul was seen flying out of her mouth, in the shape of a little white dove, which mounted up to heaven, where many nuns and other religious, saw her in a high degree of glory; and some of them had even seen the Lord's Christ sitting by her beside, before she departed. Her dead body was surprisingly beautiful and odoriferous, by the odour of the ointment wherewith her most holy body was perfumed by our Lord: and it remains odorous and uncorrupt to this day.

Francis, our doctors hold, is greater than John the Baptist, and better than all the apostles. This great saint received in a vision the five wounds of Christ, suffered the same griefs; and in him are concentrated, unitive et conjunctive, all the virtues of the saints both under the Old and New Testament; for which reason, he is placed next to Jesus Christ in glory. This is confirmed by the schedule, which Leo beheld falling from heaven and resting on the head of Francis, whereon was written, This man is the grace of God, and the example of all perfection —All this, and much more, is to be found in the Liber Conformitatum, which was the imprimatur and recommendation of the chapter of his order.

Dominic was also a wonderful man; for he raised three persons from the dead in one city, whereas Christ raised only three during all his abode on earth. Anthony, who wrote his life, affirms that Dominic had the angels at his service, that the elements obeyed him, that the devils trembled at him, that he had a star in his forehead when he was baptized, and restored forty persons to life, who had been drowned in shipreck, and had laid long under water.

We have extraordinary relations, given us by Ribadeneira, in his lives of the saints, concerning their power over the devils. Thus the devil threatning Anthony with great fury, at his voice all the room was shaken, the walls opened, and a legion of devils rushed in. But all would not do —The saint was firm as as a rock. We have mentioned before, how Dunstan served the fiend with the red hot tongs; but this was nothing to the trick Gertrude played him upon a gibbet, truly, literally, and corporally, says her historian. How he got down again I do not know; but I find that Julian and Margaret had a very smart rencounter with him, and, in the issue, taking him up in their arms, threw him out upon a filthy dunghill. We have also a narration of Catharine of Sienna; how that Christ came to her one day, opened her left side, took out her heart and carried it away. In a few days, says Ribadeneira, he returned and brought his own ruddy heart with him and put it into her left side; saying, my daughter Catharine, thou hast my heart instead of thine own; and then he closed up her side again, but left the mark of the scar behind, in testimony of the miracle. So when Clara died; her body being opened, and her heart dissected, the representation of Christ's passion appeared as plainly as if it had been carved. Nor can I help remarking the excellence of friar John's nose, who had a clear perception of friar Giles, at twenty-eight miles distance, by the odour of his sanctity. Equally to be admired is the miracle upon the person of Xavier, who in baptizing the Indians, did manifestly, but gradually, swell to a most gigantic size, to the astonishment of the beholders; yet, as soon as he had finished his office, he dwindled again into his natural proportion, and sunk into himself. Rosa had also taken Christ for her spouse; and being one day ill of a soar throat, when Christ came to visit her, he invited her to play a game at cards to divert her pain. She insisted the winnings should be whatever the winner pleased. The cards were played, and she wone the first game, and demanding instantly a relief of her soar throat, it was done immediately; but losing the next game, her soar throat returned and increased. Columb seeing a boy fall from the top of a house, commanded an angel to fly in the twinkling of an eye, and catch him before he shoul touch the ground. The angel obeyed, and the boy was saved. Denis, when he was beheaded at Paris, took up his own head after it was severed from his body, and walked two miles with it in his hands, to a place called Martyr's Hill, and there lay down to rest. Edmund, preaching in the open air, was threatened by a black cloud with a very heavy rain; but he making the signs of the cross, commanded the spirit of water to depart, and not disturb his audience. Accordingly, though it rained hard all round about, not a single drop fell upon them.

Thus it appears, as plain is demonstration, that all these were extraordinary miracles; that they were all performed in the Holy Roman Church, and by members of it; that they are all allowed and confirmed by bulls of Popes, decrees of councils, and records of historians; and consequently that no true Catholic can or may doubt them. It is also evident, that none of the heretical communions can or do claim any of these miracles, or the power of working them; but, on the contrary, endeavor, when pinched by their authority, to laugh them away; as I fear some of them will attempt to do in the present case. But this is no matter: it is easier to laugh at a good miracle, than to work one. Upon the whole then, we may fairly deduce the conclusion, which I proposed to maintain, "That the Church of Rome is the only true Church; and that, consequently, all other pretended churches are heretical and damnable."

From the Religious Intelligencer.

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

The following passages of a letter from M. de Felice, a Protestant pastor in France, to the Rev. Mr. Bacon of this city, have been translated for the Intelligencer.

Bolbec, Seine Inferieure, July 1, 1831.

You ask for particulars in respect to the progress of the gospel in France. It would be indeed delightful to be able to tell you that our late political revolution in favor of liberty, has produced also a religious revolution in favor of Christianity. But it must be acknowledged—whatever grief we may feel in admitting the fact—that the Christian religion has gained nothing at present by the new order of things; on the whole it has rather lost since the month of July last. The reason of this is every where in the Roman Catholic clergy of our country. The priests are hostile, and stand in opposition to public opinion; and of course public opinion is directed against them. And as the French by a deplorable tendency, confound religion with the men who teach it, it follows that the gospel itself is unjustly accused, and men are more and more averse to Christianity on account of the imprudences and follies of some Roman priests.

Besides this deplorable conduct of a part of the Romish clergy, there is another obstacle, not less powerful, to the progress of the Christian religion among us. All minds are absorbed in political affairs. Nobody thinks, or speaks, or writes, but on politics; hardly any thing is read but what relates to politics; this is the exclusive subject of attention with almost all elevated minds. And if here and there a solitary voice is raised to speak also of Jesus Christ and of the high calling of man, that voice is not heard; it is lost amid the noise of factions & of the interests of this world. Christianity in France, is like an orphan, like a stranger, like a poor child, unknown in the midst of those who will not even take the trouble to look at it, and who will not care at all to receive it into their houses.

I ought to observe, however, that I speak here only of the mass of the nation, which is Roman Catholic. If we confine our attention to the little Protestant family which is scattered over the face of the country, the view which that presents at the present day is certainly more cheering. I perceive, by your letter, that you are already aware of the waking up in the reformed churches. There is in fact a great difference between what we now are and what we were in 1814. The gospel has been restored in our congregations and in our pulpits. Many of our pastors preach boldly and sincerely, the glad news of free salvation by Jesus Christ. In a word, we are beginning to live again; for the ancient orthodoxy of the age of Louis XIV.; the orthodoxy of Jurieu, of Claude, of Saurin, had become extinct among the Protestants of France, and had been succeed by a corrupt doctrine compounded of Socinianism, Arianism, and Generianism, (for the system taught at Geneva deserves a peculiar name.) But now we have many faithful ministers and their number is increasing. In general, the pastors most distinguished among us by their eloquence, and by their intelligence, are also eminent in piety.

At Paris, many christians are laboring with success to spread the knowledge of the gospel, and they neglect no means to dissipate the absurd prejudices which govern a great part of the nation. For it ought to be remarked that France is not acquainted with the true gospel; she does not know at all in what it consists; even the most learned men according to the world, are ignorant respecting the work of the Son of God. Two celebrated professors at Paris have lately been heard to profess the strangest opinions respecting Christianity, which showed how little they had studied religious truth. One of these professors said before several hundred pupils, that Christianity was MADE by three men, St. Paul, Gregory VII., and Luther!—So that in his view Christ went for nothing in the Christian religion. The other affirmed that the sole motive of Christ's coming into the world was to make complete the history of literature! As if Christ had effected nothing here but a literary REFORM. You see, my dear sir, to what the French wise men have descended. And what is more curious, our political journalists applaud these absurdities and regard them as fine conceptions.

As for our philanthropic societies respecting which also you ask for particulars, they have not been making progress for the past year. Many works of beneficence have been suspended, because the public exigences and the stagnation of commerce have very much diminished the number of subscribers. Much was hoped several years ago, from the "Society of Christian Morals," of which you have doubtless heard. But that society has—so to speak—committed suicide because it rested in the principles of a vague and dead morality and would not declare itself boldly for christian morals. It brought together in its bosom sceptical philosophers and believers, the impious and christians, and it resulted in nothing but a work without life, and plans without consistency.

REASONS

FOR BELIEVING THE BIBLE TO BE THE WORD OF GOD.

Young persons among all denominations of Christians would do well to commit to memory the following reasons in support of the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures; with the view to fortify their mind against the objections of infidels.

1. Because what we learn from the natural world of the existence, power, wisdom, and goodness of God, agrees with what the Bible states of them.

2. Because a book like the Bible was much needed to make the will of God more clearly known to man, than nature alone could do.

3. Because holy men were inspired to write, without error or mistake, those truths and facts with which they were previously acquainted, or which had been made known to them by the Holy Spirit.

4. Because the account given in the Bible by various writers, differ from each other so far as to prove that they had not consulted together, and yet agree in the main particulars, so harmoniously, as to prove their truth.

5. Because the fulfilment of many prophecies, proves that the Bible contains the truth of God.

6. Because many miracles that were wrought prove that the Bible contains a religion which came from God.

7. Because the account which the Bible gives of the condition of man, agrees with his real state all over the world.

8. Because the subjects contained in the Bible were so very acceptable to the friends of religion, and so very objectionable to its enemies, that under such contending circumstances nothing but truth could have been preserved.

9. Because the original copies of the Holy Scriptures were the oldest books in the world, and our English translation has been made with great care and faithfulness.

10. Because the religion of Jesus Christ as contained in the Bible, bestows the greatest benefits on all persons who believe in it, and live according to it.—Quarterly Christian Spectator for June, 1831.

From the New York Jour. of Commerce.

LOTTERY.

Shewing how much the Proprietors of the Grand Lottery in France will gain by the Lottery, calculating what proportion of the monies arising from the sale of Tickets in a late lottery went to the ostensible object of the lottery, and what proportion to the support of that worthy class of citizens who are sacrificing their lives to make the fortunes of their neighbors and customers, and the result of this calculation being in my opinion not unamusing, I give it you to use as you think fit.

The lottery which I have taken for dissection, (any one will do equally well) is the Grand Mammoth Lottery, lately drawn in this city, the profits of which are, I presume, destined for some very excellent purpose, although I cannot find out what. And upon this presumption, we must naturally feel interested, that as much as possible of the monies raised, should be so directed.—This lottery has 36 numbers by alternate permutations, and consequently (although none of the printed handbills which I have seen will tell you so,) there were 42,840 tickets; which at the price they were advertised and sold, ($16) would produce the sum of $685,440

The amount of prizes by the scheme is	$556,920
Loss 15 per cent.	$83,538
	$473,382
	$212,058
To which must be added 1 per cent interest on $685,440; the prizes being only paid in 60 days, whilst the venders enjoy the use of the money received for Tickets,	$6,854
Whole profit on the lottery	$218,912
Of which the amount of 15 per cent on prizes is devoted to the objects of the Lotterty publicly given out,	$83,538
The balance goes to the main object of the Lottery, that is, to support all the Lottery Office keepers, and pay the rent of their fine offices in Broadway,	$135,374

This amount of One Hundred and thirty-five thousand, three hundred and seventy-four dollars, arises to the gentlemen from one single Lottery, and when you recollect, Mr. Editor, that as you pass through the street the large letters, To-day or To-Morrow, stare you in the face at each step, you may form some idea of the aggregate of the profits.

It results from the above calculation that the intrinsic value of the tickets in the above Lottery was $10,91 each, and for these, the unauspicious are induced by a flaming advertisement with red and black letters to give $16. ABACUS.

CHURCHES IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1831. —It has been ascertained that there are now in the United States, more than 12,000 churches. The principal religious denominations are Baptist and Methodists, who have together 4484 churches; the Presbyterians have 1472 churches; the Congregationalists have 1381 churches; the Episcopalians are also numerous, and have 922 churches; the Roman Catholics have 784 churches; the Dutch Reformed, 602 churches; the Friends have 462 societies; the Universalists have 297 churches; the Lutherans have 240 churches; the Unitarians have 127 churches; the Jews have 96 Synagogues; the Calvanistic Baptists have 84 churches; the Swedenborgians have 73 churches; and the Moravians 56 churches.

FACTS RESPECTING THE VALLEY OF THE MISSISSIPPI ENTERPRISE.—The following facts may serve to stimulate the friends of this measure to continued exertion.

In the state of Illinois it has been reported, that no more than one child in fourteen, between four and sixteen is at school; that three fourths of the population have not sufficient knowledge of the language to enable them to read the Bible intelligibly to themselves or to others; and that not less than twenty-nine-thirtieths of the children are unable to read. Though this statement may be much exaggerated, it will not surprise those who know how few children, in the most favored States, are able to read a single paragraph with correctness or intelligence. And it will be recollected, that the statement is of general, and not of local application, and might remain true, though in many parts of the State the people should prove to be educated as thoroughly as in any other part of the country.

To change this aspect of things, there were in Illinois but five hundred and fifty-four daily schools, three-fifths of which were in ten counties; and there were, until our Valley operations commenced, only about fifty Sunday-Schools, or one school to every thousand children between fourteen and sixteen. It is obvious that these means of instruction are wholly inadequate, and the citizens themselves express the persuasion that their last, best hope is in Sunday Schools.

In Kentucky, about one child in four, between five and fifteen, is supposed to to be in a course of education. Of one-hundred and forty-eight thousand who should attend school, only thirty-two thousand actually attend, and these, at an expense of two hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars per annum, or eight dollars and thirty cents per head; and in forty-six counties, there is not a single female teacher. In this State also it seems to have become a settled conviction, that no means of education will meet their wants but such as our resolution proposes us to supply.—Sabbath S. Jour.

RAVAGES OF THE CHOLERA PREVENTED.

Extract of a letter from Madrid, dated July 28.

The appearance of Cholera at Mahon has created much apprehension both here and in the provinces, and measures are about being taken to prevent its extension. May heaven grant success, as otherwise the consequences would be dreadful in this country, where the practice of medicine is confined to most ignorant beings! As a proof of this fact, and of the supine ignorance and want of feeling of some of the Spaniards, I have simply to relate to you a circumstance which has just taken place in a small pueblo or village of Catalonia. An unfortunate man was attacked with diarrhœa—a disease very prevalent through all Spain at this time of the year. The attack was rather violent, and he sent for the village doctor, who, as is generally the case in Spanish villages, exercised besides the profession of barber. This man fancied that his patient was afflicted with cholera, and immediately informed the Alcade thereof, in order to prevent its extending through the village. He certainly took a most effectual mode, for he went to the poor man's dwelling accompanied by four Royalist soldiers, and without making any inquiry into the case, ordered his satellites to fire, which order was instantly complied with, and their victim, immediately despatched. The poor fellow's dwelling was at once levelled to the ground, and well it was that there were no other inmates as doubtless the same fate would have attended them.

DENDERAH AND INFIDELITY.

When Buonaparte invaded Egypt, his scientific attendants discovered on the ceiling of the temple of Denderah, a sculptured zodiac, containing many hieroglyphical figures. In their learned investigations, they asserted that this presented a picture of the heavens some 15,000 years ago, and that the origin of the zodiac and the temple far beyond the time of the creation. In 1821 this zodiac was detached from the ceiling, and brought with immense labor to Paris, where it attracted the universal gaze of the learned and the unlearned. "The zodiac," said the infidels of Paris, "has destroyed the authority of the bible." But when Champollion discovered the key to the hieroglyphics, he demonstrated at once, that this temple with its zodiac was built in the time of the Roman Emperors; that the sculptured figures on it were simply astrological, and had nothing to do with astronomy or chronology. And thus fell with a shock, the baseless fabric which infidelity had raised against the bible.—Vt. Chronicle.

The Editor of the New York Observer, in giving accounts of various calamities which have transpired of late, observes, "It is seldom that it falls to our lot to record in one week so many and so great disasters as will be found noticed in this paper. The hurricane at Barbadoes, which rendered the whole island one scene of desolation, and according to some estimates destroyed the lives of several thousand human beings—the storm which swept over Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina, destroying crops and other property probably to the value of millions of dollars—the negro insurrection in Virginia, in which it now appears that more than one hundred beings suffered a horrible death—the insurrection in Rio Janeiro, which struck terror into the hearts of a large portion of the population—the ravages of the Cholera Morbus in St. Petersburgh—and last, not least, the near prospect of a bloody conflict between 200,000 men at Warsaw—these form a catalogue of woes surpassing in number, variety and magnitude, any which we ever placed on record in a single week. God appears to be visiting the earth with his judgments, and the devout mind will not fail to derive from them the lessons which they were doubtless intended to inculcate.

From the New-York Observer.

We are happy to learn that the plan of procuring the place of worship at the corner of Frankfort and William sts. for the colored Presbyterian Church, under the care of Rev. Mr. Wright, has so far succeeded, that the committee of the Presbyteries have ventured to assume the responsibility of completing the subscription, and that the house has been recently set apart for the use of the congregation. At their communion on the first Sabbath of the present month, we understand that forty members were added to the church on profession of their faith, making the whole number of church members at present 175, of whom 125 have joined during the three years of Mr. W.'s connection with the society. Most of those who have recently joined, are members of the Temperance Society which has been formed in the church.

From the Providence Journal, Sept. 24.

SERIOUS RIOT IN PROVIDENCE.

In an affray last evening in Olney's lane, between 8 and 9 o'clock, a sailor was shot dead, and 4 others wounded. The deceased sailor is a Swede by birth, and was one of the crew of ship New Jersey, from Canton. Among the crowd assembled after the occurrence, it was difficult to obtain the particulars which led to this melancholy termination. The shots, we understand, were fired from a house occupied by blacks, and before the police officers arrived, the furniture of three houses was destroyed.

P. S. About twelve o'clock, a large mob had collected who demolished one house and part of two others.

The Journal of Friday states that there was an alarm the next night, by the re-assemblage of a mob in Olney's lane, of about 7 or 800, who commenced pulling down houses occupied by blacks, and succeeded in destroying 8 buildings.

A military company were under arms part of the night, assisted by the sheriff and constables, and the town council.

A postscript of the same paper, of 2 A. M. says the mob have defeated both civil and military authority; finished their work in Olney's lane, (and moved to the head of the Cove, where they had re-commenced tearing down houses and destroying furniture.

EXTENSIVE PEACH ORCHARD.

It is stated in the Springfield Republican, that a Mr. Jones, of Shrewsbury, N. J. about 25 miles from New-York, has the largest peach orchards in America. One of them is a mile and a half long, and contains 110 acres; the other contains 50 acres—in both there are about twenty-two thousand trees. They were commenced about nine years since, and the profits are fast raising the enterprising owner from poverty to wealth. It is said he last year refused $7,000 for the peaches on the trees.

PALESTINE.

"You will expect to hear, as usual, a little of our Syrian news. Every day there is a little done but needs the sum of many days together to make any thing worth mentioning. We have a late case of seriousness in the wife of the Amenian Bishop, who led the van in breaking away from his church traditions, and made himself "the husband of one wife." She is likely to come before him into the kingdom of God.—Wortabet, one of the Armenians who was admitted to the church, is apparently doing good at Sidon. There is now here an ecclesiastic from Smyrna, who baptized a number of those Jews at Constantinople. He was persecuted and banished for the part he took, and is now apparently a speculative evangelical believer. He says there were hundreds of Jews at Constantinople, who would have been willing to be baptized and openly renounce their synagogue and lying traditions, but the Armenian Patriarch and the government interfered to prevent them. It is said there is to be a general council held at Constantinople this year for the purpose, as is supposed, of discussing the measure of a union of churches. Great events are in the womb of providence. Let us be much at a throne of grace."—Rev. Mr. Bird.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

Revivals of religion are indispensable to sanctify the literature of the nation, and to associate intellectual culture with holiness of heart. In all our systems of education, from the common school up to the college, these have been dissociated. The care of the heart, if any care has been bestowed upon it, has been turned over to the nursery, while the intellect and the memory have been sent to school to receive a separate education. The result has been such as might have been expected. The depravity of the heart, unwatched, unresisted, and, in some respects, deliberately fostered, has made fearful proficiency in the government and perversion of the understanding.—Spirit of the Pilgrims.

It matters not what a man loses, if he saves his soul.—But if he loses his soul, it matters not what he saves.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. he subscriber as Agent for the above, meationed Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

NOTICE.—The partnership of the subscribers, under the name, firm & style of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent, and all the property and debts due the firm are the property of David Bush, and all settlements to be made with him, and those having debts against the firm, will call on said Bush for settlement.

WM. Mc. COY.
DAVID BUSH.

Rochester, July 26th, 1831. 31tf.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. Mc'Coy & Co. begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an elegant assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets, &c comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. 1 f.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For sale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber.
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eeaves-Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY.

Rochester, june 15, 1831. 25tf

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on haud a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware, Communon setts. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.

Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.

May 5, 1831. 20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ROCHESTER BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes. Chochineal, smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella, of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. JACOB GOULD.

22tf

DISSOLUTION.—The firm of Bloss & Harrison is dissolved by mutual consent. All persons owing said firm by note Book account or otherwise, are requested to call and settle with J. B. Bloss, to whom all the accounts are assigned, and who will pay all demands against said firm.

J. B. BLOSS,
M. A. F. HARRISON.

The subscriber still continues the business, where any call as in the Dry Good and Grocery line, will be promptly attended to, and Cash thankfully received. J. B. BLOSS.

February 7, 1831. tf.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

SIR—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Sec'ry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk, are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, Sheriff.

Rochester, Sept. 20th, 1831. 7w39.

C. J. HILL,

HAVING taken the Stone Flouring Mills near the east end of the Bridge, and established himself in the Flouring business, has removed his Office to the Brick building (opposite the mills) recently occupied by Messrs Ford, Bissell &co., where he will at all times pay Cash for Wheat.

Rochester, 20th Sept. 1831. 39 tf

BY virtue of one Execution issued out of the court of Common Pleas, to and for the county of Monroe and to me directed, against the Goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen B. Bartlett, I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz. all those certain pieces of land, situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe being—one lot, lying near the great falls of the Genesee River, beginning at the N. W. corner of village lot, No 104—three chains northerly from the S. W. corner of village lot No. 102, on the corner of Atwater and Clyde street and running from thence north, 3° 8' west, along the Easterly line of Clyde Street 2 chains, thence north 82° 30', East two chains and fifty links, thence south 1° east, two chains, thence south 63° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of said lots number five and six, reference being had to the map and field notes of David Hudson Esq. in the survey of lots numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7, and being the same land that was conveyed to Stephen Bartlett, by W. P. Shearman and wife by deed of June 23d, 1824—which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the tavern of Mrs. Bloss son, in East Rochester on Monday the 12th day of November, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 20th, 1831.

For JAS. SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. MYGARES, late Under Sheriff.

SCOTT'S & HENRY'S Commentary. Persons by uniting may obtain them by immediate application at the Wholesale Price. Inquire of

MITCHELL LODER,
No. 34 Exchange-street, or
Mr. SIBLEY'S Auction Store, Buffalo-st. 53tf

VILLAGE LOTS FOR SALE.

The Subscriber offers for sale village lot No eleven, (11) Caledonia Tract, supposed to contain one acre of land, situated on Hawley st. Also village lot No. ninety seven, (97) on Clay-st. Corinthi Tract, on which is a small dwelling house. Said lots will be sold very cheap and on liberal credit. J. VERRARD PECK.

*3w38

IN CHANCERY,

James Waugh Complainant vs. Samuel H. Hoag and Joel Wheeler Defendants.

At a Court of Chancery held for the State of New York, at the village of Rochester on the eighteenth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one; Present Addison Gardner vice Chancellor of the eight circuit.

It appearing by affidavit to the satisfaction of this court that the defendant Samuel H. Hoag resides out of this State but within the United States, on motion of Mr. B. Davis solicitor for the complainant it is ordered that said Samuel H. Hoag cause his appearance to be entered, and copy thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance, that he cause his answer to the complainants bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainants solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof that said bill of complaint may be taken as confessed, and it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the State paper, and in the Rochester Observer, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers, at least once in each week for eight weeks in succession, or, that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Samuel H. Hoag at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.

ISAAC R ELWOOD, Dep. Clerk.

At a Court of Chancery, held for the State of New York, at the village of Rochester, on the ninth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty one. Present Addison Gardiner, Vice Chancellor of the eighth Circuit.

Jacob M. Schermerhorn, Complainant, vs. Richard Dibble, Naomi Dibble, William S. Kneeter, Thomas H. Murray, Levi Ward Jr., Joseph Stocking, Joseph Hull, William Penfield, and John Penfield, Defendants.

It appearing by Affidavit to the satisfaction of this Court that the defendant Thomas H. Murray resides out of this State, but within the United States, on motion of Mr. J. Miller, Solicitor for the complainant, it is ordered, that the said Thomas H. Murray cause his appearance to be entered, and notice thereof to be served on the Complainant's Solicitor, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the complainant's bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitor, within forty days after service of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof, said bill of complaint may be taken as confessed. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause this order to be published in the State paper, and in the Rochester Observer, and that the said publication be continued in each of said papers, at least once in each week for eight weeks in succession, or, that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Thomas H. Murray, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance. A Copy.

ISAAC R. ELWOOD, Deputy Clerk.

S. MILLER Solicitor. 8w33

DEFAULT having been made in the payment at a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe, liber 8 of Mortgages at page 364 on the 17th day of September 1828, and re-leased to be due thereon on the 12th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage and by force of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that one tract or parcel of land situate in township number three in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario before the late division now Monroe, and state of New York viz—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows viz.—East west, and south by the lines of said lot, and Northerly, by a line to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeable to the survey of James Standley Esq.—including all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at two o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

L. ADAMS, Att'y. 25 3w.

IN CHANCERY.

Francis Williams, Complainant, vs. Peter Brackett and Rosabella his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Vesey, William Hardwick, George A. Avery, Walter Griffith Evans Griffith and Matthew Brown, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery made in this cause, at a Court held at the Court house in the village of Rochester on the 22d day of August, 1831, I shall sell at public Auction to the highest bidder, on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern in said village of Rochester, in the county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. "All that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the said town of Charleston, being a part of the west half of lots one and two, in the sixth section of town number four on the triangular tract, and bounded as follows, viz.—beginning at a stake in the centre of the Ridge-road, where the same is intersected by the centre of the west lake road. Thence southerly along the centre of said Lake road, eight chains and fourteen links, to a stake, thence easterly at the north line of Abigail Tuttle's land, three chains and sixty two links to a stake, thence northerly on the west line of Peter Row's land six chains and thirty five links to a stake thence north, seventy two and a half degrees west, one chain and thirty four links to a stake, thence north sixty four degrees west one chain and ten links to a stake, thence north twenty and one half degrees east two chains and five links, thence to the place of beginning be the same more or less." Dated 27th August, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON, 6w Master in Chancery.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Job Northrup deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on me for settlement within six months from date. Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.

6m 38.

WM. H. WARD & Co. (MARBLE BUILDING Carroll Street,) have just received a full supply of GOODS. Rochester, June 2 1830.

New Arrangement in the Hrdwa Business.

HENRY BUSH and GEORGE BUTLER have formed a connection in business which will be carried on under the firm of Bush & Butler at the old stand of H. Bush, where they are now receiving their spring importation of Hardware, Cutlery, Saddlery, Fancy Goods &c. direct from the Manufacturies in England together with a general assortment of American goods in their line, which they offer for sale at wholesale & retail on as good terms as any house in America. Their stock being very heavy, and patterns new they hope to receive a share of public patronage.

Buffalo Street in the Arcade June 1.

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fenner's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist.

At the sign of the alligator, No. 11 Carroll st. 6w36

IN CHANCERY.

Ezra Coe Complainant, vs. Philo Rigley, Samuel Adams, & Lewis Benedict, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester, on the 23d day of August 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern in said village of Rochester, in the county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. "All that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the said town of Charleston, being a part of the west half of lots one and two, in the sixth section of town number four on the triangular tract, and bounded as follows, viz.—beginning at a stake in the centre of the Ridge-road, where the same is intersected by the centre of the west lake road. Thence southerly along the centre of said Lake road, eight chains and fourteen links, to a stake, thence easterly at the north line of Abigail Tuttle's land, three chains and sixty two links to a stake, thence northerly on the west line of Peter Row's land six chains and thirty five links to a stake thence north, seventy two and a half degrees west, one chain and thirty four links to a stake, thence north sixty four degrees west one chain and ten links to a stake, thence north twenty and one half degrees east two chains and five links, thence to the place of beginning be the same more or less." Dated 27th August, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON, 6w Master in Chancery.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 42.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3,00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00.
Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

"OUR DEACON."

"OUR DEACON," is either a very good man, or else he is the worst of characters. He is almost always either too fast or too slow—heterodox or super-orthodox—sometimes, not often, too liberal, generally esteemed too close and pernicious—either a warm advocate or a practical opposer of benevolent operations:—in short, "our deacon," either does a great deal of hurt or a great deal of good. Of heterodox deacons in matters of religious faith, probably there are not many in our churches. Of super-orthodox, perhaps the same remark may be made; although we may fear there are some, who in this respect, "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." Of the too liberal deacons, we have but few—not any within the knowledge of this writer. Now and then we find one, of whom the complaint is, "our deacon" is too worldly—too avaricious—lends his money at more than lawful interest, and rather grinds the face of the poor. Then "our deacon" is a very bad man; though perchance, some of the same church in which he is an overseer, may make, or sell, or drink ardent spirit—oppose the cause of temperance, and of benevolence—break the Sabbath—forsake the house of God—neglect family and personal religion, and in short rob God in every method they can devise—still "our deacon" is a very bad man—and if he would only do better the church would have greater prosperity. But "our deacon" must bear his own sins.

"The Temperance cause would go very well in this town," said one not long since, "if it were not for "our deacon." Indeed madam, and what does "our deacon" do? "Why he does nothing in favor of the cause—he will not join the society—he owns a tavern, and although he does not sell ardent spirit himself, yet he lets it to a man who does, and pockets a part of the avails." "Our deacon" in this case, is, I should think, "a partaker in other men's sins;" and if he do not repent, God will judge him. And Mr. Editor, one of "our deacons" has a quarrel with you—for when he read in your paper that a spring had been discovered in a certain place, at which if any man drink he would become a villan; "he means my tavern," said "our deacon," "and I have a mind to write him a letter."

It is much to be wished that all "our deacons" would cease to do evil and learn to do well. Suppose they all make it a rule to read the two Epistles of Paul to Timothy, once a week, with prayer and supplication,—might it not be of advantage?

***

For the Observer.

The Agent of the N. Y. State Temperance Society, having completed the tour of the counties of Orleans, Niagara, Erie, Chautauque, Cattaraugus, Allegany, Genesee and Livingston, desires to express to the friends of the temperance cause in these counties, his warmest thanks and liveliest gratitude for the hospitality, and kind attention with which he has uniformly been received. And now being about to pass to another field of labor, for the winter months, he takes the liberty of suggesting the importance of continued exertion and of persevering efforts that the good work may still move onward.

In the prosecution of his labors during the years past, many things calculated to discourage as well as many things to encourage have been presented. Among the latter may be mentioned the fact, that so many, who once dealt largely in ardent spirit, have discontinued the unholy and unprofitable traffic. Scarcely a village in either of the counties named above, but can tell of one or more merchants who have cleaned their stores and their hands of the deadly poison. Many men have come to the patriotic, the benevolent and the virtuous resolution, no longer to be accessary to the ruin of character, of happiness, of property, of health, of life, and of the immortal spirit, which so uniformly and so inseparably attends the intemperate use of ardent spirit.

Still there are many, and even some who profess to be the friends of God, and of his Son, who, in the very face of light and of evidence, continue to pour forth torrents of beggary, of misery, of disease and death through our country. But their number is becoming less and less, as public opinion becomes more and more firm and decided, and without incurring the charge of uncharitableness, we may confidently indulge the anticipation, that the day is not far distant, when men shall cease to forge chains, and erect dungeons for their fellow-men, that they may fill their coffers from the spoils of their victims.—Public opinion will soon rank the manufacture and the vending of ardent spirit with man-stealing and piracy, and stamp the impress of infamy upon the man who shall scatter "fire-brands arrows and death," and say, "is it not for my sport!"

But to accomplish this great work requires time, zeal, and concentrated effort. Without these we shall fail. And the crisis, in this state, and especially in some of the counties named, is at hand. Depend upon it, friends of the temperance cause, the scale will soon cease to vibrate—the point will soon be gained or lost—and gained or lost forever. The problem, whether our children and our children's children are to inherit the blessings purchased by toils, by sacrifices and by blood; or whether they are to be disfranchised, and ruined and enslaved, will soon be solved. Their weal or woe hangs trembling in a point; and upon this generation rests the decision and the responsibility. And it is a fearful responsibility—a momentous decision.—If the temperance cause succeeds, our ruin is sealed. No mathematical problem is of more certain demonstration—and then the last hope of humanity will be extinguished.

The present then is no time for cold-hearted, unfeeling apathy. If we flounder, it will be upon the rock. Apathy in this cause is ruin; inactivity is death. Merely to have given our pledge is not enough; our influence, our efforts are required to indoce others to give their pledge. A soldier completes not his duty when he receives the bounty and signs the muster-roll. Activity is expected; effort is yielded. Every person adding his name to the cause of temperance, should feel pledged to induce, if possible, some one to do the same; and if every one now enlisted would do this, what a host might soon be marshalled! How it would tell upon the enemy! What dismay would it carry into all his ranks! The people of this state—of the United States, have only to will, and they are emancipated. One single day, did our nation simultaneously will it, would close forever the progress of the Demon of intemperance. Let the people will, and the work is done—the strife is over—the contest is ended—the victory is won—the fetters are broken,—the prisoners go free. And who is there who will not pronounce the mystic word, which dissolves the charm, and breaks up the spell? Our fathers decreed it, and even Britain let go her hold, and the arm of power was nerveless. Have their sons less power? Have they degenerated?

From a close, and I believe an accurate investigation, I have come to the conclusion that if the cause does not succeed in the counties named, it will be for want of zeal and perseverance in its friends. Our enemies cannot injure us.—Their hour is past. But that the cause is ruined beyond redemption, in some of the counties visited, unless its friends awake speedily, is without a question. The Ex. Committee are now putting forth every effort, and are willing to do all in their power, but all will be in vain unless they are seconded by the efforts of their fellow-citizens. The District system, recommended in the state circular, a copy of which has been sent to every society, if carried into effect, must work wonders. But to carry it into full effect depends entirely upon the town societies. They are competent to the work, and they should lose no time. Their annual reports will soon be called for, and their ambition should be to report as many members as possible. The Ex. Committee wish to report in January next, 200,000 members in the state; but to do this requires a special effort on the part of town and county societies. Will not the counties which have been named make the effort, and make it now!

CHAS. YALE,
October, 1831. Ag't N. Y. State T. S.

For the Observer.

LETTERS
TO A FRIEND ON THE CONFESSION OF FAITH
NO. 1.

Mount Observation, Oct. 4, 1831.

I used to think the confession, usually called the Westminster confession, was an infallible rule of faith and practice. Though still possessed of great veneration for that noble instrument, and though I think it has far more scripture on its side, than any other confession, or public standard of the present day; yet I do not conceive that this document is without its frail points, if not real errors. Sensible however, I am, that when I even intimate the word error, in reference to that document, I am anathematized by many as an incorrigible heretic. So blind are we to the faults of great names—and so sensitive are we to any infringement on that unbroken current of veneration with which we are accustomed to regard our pious forefathers. If this feeling nevertheless, so amiable in itself, and in many respects so praiseworthy, is well founded, it will loose nothing by investigation. Honest enquiry will always go to establish truth.

In consequence of the differences of opinion which now agitate different parts of the Presbyterian church, I have been induced to look a little more narrowly into the confession of Faith than I had done heretofore.—I have pried a little into the New Haven divinity. I have also read something of the controversy concerning the Rev. Wm. Barnes in the Philadelphia Presbytery. Last of all, I have read the portentous manifesto of Dr. Greene and his associates, teaching, what he calls the "faith once delivered to the saints." "His voice is for war." Of all these things I have not been an entirely listless spectator, although my avocations give me but little time, to read controversial speculations.

As to the confession of faith, since you have asked me which way it seemed to lean, as to these rival opinions I have no hesitation in saying that Dr. Greene has the best of that argument.

The New Haven divinity, I look upon to be, as we say, the whole heavens from the Westminster. And no nearer to it is our distinguished evangelist whose praise is in the northern churches. For ministers of that stamp to take the vow of the confession upon them, and preach under its banner, is not a little absurd. They are any thing but confession-of-faith-men. But before I go any farther I must distinguish the three contending powers, at present in the Presbyterian denomination into

1st. High Calvinists. At the head of this class allow me to place the venerable Dr. Greene, without a shadow of change since the Synod of Dort.

2d. The Puritanical Calvinists, who follow the Owens, and the Edwards, and Bellamys. At the head of this great body, whose march is in the valley, and between, I shall place the schools of Andover and Auburn. While

3d. On the top of the mountain, right against Dr. Greene and his veterans, "of the covenant of works," you discover just appearing the New-Haven array. Between the first and the last there is such a distance that they can hardly discover each other without the help of their best glasses. Such appears to me to be the disposition of the host. Every thing depends on the main division; or the Puritans.

Dropping military metaphor however, I must now repeat that the High Calvinists and the confession of faith go hand in hand. Dr. G. understands the confession as it speaks. He receives its most rugged corners without a wry face, and with the most rigidly literal interpretations:—He holds up this to the world, saying this is heaven's revealed will;—and in perfect consistency denounces as heretics and traitors "all and every singular person" who departs from this standard. Now this much I can understand. This is consistent.

Such being the state of things, it has appeared to me rather remarkable that all these classes; specially the first and second should so eagerly contend for the palm of orthodoxy not according to the Bible; but according to the confession;—This is marvellous. The confession says that man has neither "natural nor moral ability" to repent. So Dr. Greene and his party understand it. But the Puritans say that the sinner can repent if he will. This doctrine they preach and publish with all energy and argument human and divine. Vast commotions among sinners is the consequence. Many are awakened. But these Puritans turn round and tell Dr. G. that they dont deny the confession. This dissimulation the good old man cannot away with; and hence he calls the Puritan party, or the Hops, as they are sometimes stiled, by very hard names. I merely state the instance on the subject of moral ability as one out of many others, wherein the puritan party do not agree with the confession of faith, and the Scotch Theology; and yet hold to it as the standard of their belief and practice. Nay, some, strange as it may seem, contend that they have the true interpretation of the confession; and that Dr. Green is wrong!

Nor will it at all answer to say that this is but one point, and a metaphysical nicety, rather than a revealed truth. For my part, I hold it to be of the first magnitude. One system of religion which saith that a sinner can repent, and another that saith he cannot repent are indeed vastly apart. If the one is greatly in error so is the other as eminently in and of the truth. But to grasp both these theories one on each side of the confession of faith, makes as odd a figure as John Gilpin and his dangling bottles. So far from "keeping the balance true," the one or other must preponderate. They will not cement on the same stem.

Neither is the bare statement of these opposite doctrines, opposite as they are, all that is contained in the question. Involved in this question are also a number of other collateral truths of vast importance. Let it be admitted for instance that man so far as regards natural ability, can comply with God's command to repent and believe on Christ, and we immediately ask, is he then totally depraved! How has he come by his depravity! Is it taste, or instinct; or is it volition or exercise! The Sovereignty of divine grace; the extent of the atonement;—the doctrine of a covenant of works—of imputation of Adam's sin,—the nature of faith, and the prayer of faith, with other topics are all more or less connected with this simple enquiry, can a sinner repent or not!

Now, the manner in which this moral ability of the sinner has been pressed in Presbyterian sermons lately, all over the land has justly alarmed the high Calvinists. Take this away, and you awaken upon their fancy all the horrors of an Arminian civil war. Take this away, and you remove the best battlement of their system;—yea, the quiescent principle of it. The vis inertiae is extracted, contrary to all expectation and all prayer; and the whole fabric is felt to move and rock, the prelude of some sad catastrophe. With the moral ability well established, it is easy to enter into the strong man's house, the triangle, and spoil his goods. I think I could show you that every other opinion, wherein the parties differ, depends upon the ability of the sinner to comply with the divine requirements. Before I close, allow me to put an enquiry, which shall be considered in my next, Is it not better to call for a revision of the Confession, than to subscribe, and then preach contrary to it!

Yours, AUSTIN.

DOCTRINAL.

From the Philadelphian.

THE ATONEMENT.

The misnamed "Christian Register," of Boston contains the following heretical declamation against the vicarious sacrifice of Christ:

"We lately heard a discourse from a Calvinistic preacher, in which the old dogma of vicarious sacrifice was taught in its boldest and most offensive form. He represented God as refusing to forgive and save men, however penitent they might become, until his wrath was appeased, his justice satisfied, and his broken law made good, by the infinite sufferings of his Son. We were shocked by the doctrine; and we appeal to our readers, whether any thing can be conceived of more dishonorable to the Divine character. Is it not wholly at variance with the attributes which the best minds and the best hearts delight to ascribe to the object of their religious worship! Could we possibly love such a being, a being who would not forgive a sincere penitent, without an equivalent paid him by the terrible expedient recognized in a multitude of passages that might be cited from Calvinistic writers! But more than this, are we not required to imitate our heavenly Father! Now suppose we should attempt to conduct ourselves towards our fellow men after the manner that God is represented as treating his creatures; should we not deserve, nay, should we not incur the abhorrence of all who know of it! Suppose that we should refuse to forgive one who had done us a wrong, however thorough his contrition and however strong his desire to make us all the reparation in his power, unless some second person should first come forward and offer himself the voluntary object of our vengeance; should we, does any one think, merit any longer the name of Christian? No. He who has not the spirit of Christ is none of his; and he, every body knows, at once taught and exemplified the duty of free pardon. Nor is this all. How inconsistent is the doctrine to which we have adverted, with unnumbered scriptures that declare our Maker to be merciful and kind, ever ready to forgive and bless his repentant children."

No well informed Calvinistic preacher ever represents God as implacable, unmerciful, or malignant in his nature. Nothing was ever done by Christ to produce any change of disposition or feeling in the divine mind. God is love, benevolence, goodness, kindness, justice, truth and wisdom, from everlasting to everlasting. In the essential goodness and mercy of his own nature he designed the salvation of all who will be saved; provided the way of showing mercy consistently with his essential and governmental justice; sent the Saviour to seek the lost; gives his Holy Spirit to bring men to Christ, and saves all who are willing to be saved agreeably to the plan of mercy which he has revealed. Does this whole representation impute any want of goodness to God, because he neither can nor will forgive sinners, except in such a way, and through such mediatorial, vicarious sufferings, on the part of the Saviour, as he deemed requisite to vindicate his truth in uttering his law and its penalty, and all his attributes which are exhibited and affected by his judicial treatment of moral agents!

We represent God as having so loved the world that he gave his only beloved Son to die, the just for the unjust, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life; because through the death of his Son, God can be just in justifying persons who are in themselves ungodly. If any view this exhibition of God's love as the Socinian writer above quoted does, we mourn over their blindness and folly.

Revelation teaches us, that if we are forgiven, God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us. When man is placed under obligations of justice to treat his fellow men with strict justice according to their crimes, and is made the righteous dispenser of vengeance, then he must find a vicarious sufferer of the penalty of the law for all whose sins he shall not punish in themselves, or else it would be a relinquishment of justice to exercise remission at all. But vengeance belongs to God; not to man as an individual; and only imperfectly to him as a civil ruler among mankind. Man, acting as a judge, ought not to forgive any lawfully convicted criminal, in any such circumstances as to nullify the law of the land; and were human laws and judges perfect, we should say that the Governor of a commonwealth ought never to pardon any one, unless some substitute should redeem him by suffering a vicarious, equivalent penalty. Men to whom retribution of evil does not belong should forgive their offending fellow men without atonement, for this very reason, that retribution does not belong to them, but to their Maker. Were the Deity by a sovereign act to dispense with the penalty of the law in part, in any one case, we see no reason why he should ever have punished at all; and why he should not in all cases and in every respect forgive all sins. The God of the Socinians, however, is a different being from the God of the Calvinists and of the Bible; so that we need never expect to harmonize with them in our views of justice, mercy and salvation. On their theory, no real Saviour is necessary, and none exists.—Christ according to their scheme is merely a martyred teacher, and every man is the Saviour of himself.

From the Spirit of the Pilgrims

ABUSE OF THE DOCTRINES OF GOD'S PURPOSES.

1. It is an abuse of the purposes of God, to endeavor to pry into the nature and grounds of them, any farther than these are disclosed in his works or in his word. In some leading particulars, God has been pleased, by the mouths of his holy prophets, to make known his purposes.—These particulars however, are comparatively few, beyond which, we are left in entire blank ignorance. Attempts have been made in all ages, to open the seals of fate, and pry into the secret councils of the Most High. This was the object of the various pretences to divination and augury, which so much prevailed in ancient times. A variety of expedients have also been resorted to in modern times, to gain a knowledge of future events. Some persons have presumptuously decided that they were not in the number of the elect,—and have abandoned themselves to consequent despair. With equal presumption, others have decided that they were in the number of the elect,—and in a vain confidence of heaven, have neglected to prepare for it. Some have rashly presumed that individuals around them were reprobates, and on this account have relinquished all exertion to bring them to the knowledge of the truth. Conclusions of this nature, and the practices growing out of them, are sinful and vain. They are an unwarrantable prying into those secret things which belong only to the Infinite Mind.

And it is equally presumptuous, in most instances, to decide upon the grounds or reasons, of God's determinations. What can we know respecting the reasons of his eternal counsels, any farther than these are unfolded in his providence or in his word! He doubtless has reasons, the best reasons, for what he plans, and for what he does; and in some instances, these may seem plain to us. But beyond where they are made plain, we have no occasion, nor are we at liberty, too curiously to search.

"Not Gabriel asks the reasons why,
Nor God the reason gives;
Nor dares the fav'rite angel pry
Between the folded leaves."

In numberless instances, the most we can say respecting the purposes and dealings of God is, "Even so Father, for so it seems good in thy sight."

2. It is an abuse of God's purposes to set them in opposition to human freedom and accountability. This has been often done. How often do we hear it said, "If God has an eternal plan according to which all events are ordered, then man is a machine. He must act just as he does act, and has no freedom or accountability left." But is not this a rash and unwarrantable inference? Is it not rushing upon a conclusion in the dark! The fact of God's eternal purposes is demonstrable both from reason and scripture. There need be no doubt about it and among thinking men, there would be none, any more than there is about the omniscience or omnipresence of God, were it not for the inference which has been drawn in opposition to human freedom. On the other hand, we know man is a free agent. He has all the freedom which a creature can have, and freedom enough to render him entirely responsible. Of this fact, we have the evidence of our own consciousness; and on the ground of it, are based all the dealings of God towards us. Suppose then, that we cannot reconcile, to our own satisfaction, or that of others, the purposes of God with human freedom. Are we sure from this circumstance that they cannot be reconciled!—Who of the sons of earth is competent to draw a conclusion such as this! Who knows enough of the purposes of God and their influence on the one hand, and of moral agency and the things implied in it on the other, to decide peremtorily that the two cannot harmonize! How much more reasonable & safe to conclude as the two doctrines are true, that must be consistent, and to attribute whatever seems inexplicable to us, to the darkness and imperfection of our present views!

3. It is an abuse of the purposes of God, to confound them with his law, and to undertake ourselves to accomplish them, in violation of his law. Misguided and unprincipled men have not unfrequently attempted to do this. The Crusaders in the dark ages, supposed it was the purpose of God that all the Infidels in Palestine should be destroyed; and in violation of all law and justice, they entered on the bloody work of destroying them. The abbettors of slavery have sometimes urged in justification of themselves, the presumed purpose of God that negroes should be slaves. The enemies of Indian rights believe it to be the purpose of God that the Aboriginal Americans, should waste away before their neighbors; and hence they think themselves justified in wasting and opposing them. But all such modes of judging are in the highest degree deceptive and wrong. The law of God is the only rule of our actions. His eternal purposes, or his universal plan of providential government is a very different thing. The law of God is clearly made known to us; but respecting the purposes of God beyond the mere fact of their existence, we can know but little; and the little we do know, was not revealed that it might be made the rule of our conduct. Long before the death of Saul, God revealed to David his determination that this proud and envious Monarch should be destroyed; but David on this account did not feel authorized to destroy him. The law of God required him to treat Saul with respect and kindness; and with the purposes of God respecting him, David had nothing to do. God would himself take care of them. God revealed to Jeremiah his determination to destroy the Jewish city and temple; but Jeremiah did not feel authorized on this account, to join the Babylonians in the work of destruction. The distinction here illustrated, between the law and the purposes of God, is one of great practical importance—one which cannot be confounded or lost sight of, in the daily occurrences of life, without perpetual hazard.

4. It is an abuse of the purposes of God to act them in opposition to the invitations of the gospel. The invitations of the gospel are made alike to all. "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Whosoever will, let him come and partake of the waters of life freely." These free and universal invitations, those who preach the gospel are not only authorized, but required to urge. They must urge them sincerely, earnestly and indiscriminately, upon all their hearers—But in doing this, religious teachers have some times felt a check from the doctrines of God's purposes, especially his purpose of election.—"If God has determined to save only a part of mankind, why does he extend his invitations to all! How can he do it with sincerity! And how can I, believing as I do the doctrine of election, invite and urge all men to come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved!" To attempt reconciling the doctrine of election with the free and universal invitations of the gospel, is not part of my present object. That both doctrines are true, and consequently reconcilable, I have no doubt. It is true that on the one hand, God did in eternity determine to save a part, and only a part, of the human family from the deserved ruin into which all have plunged themselves by sin; and it is true on the other, that he does himself invite, all men to partake of the water of life freely. Whatever else is false these things are undoubtedly true. And whether we can reconcile them or not, in the view of God they are beyond all question, harmoniously consistent.—Consequently, it is an abuse of these doctrines, to array them one against the other. It is an abuse of God's invitations to array them against his invitations. The minister of God's word is bound to urge the invitations and motives of the gospel with as much impression and power, and with as little check and embarrassment of any kind, as though God had made and revealed no determination respecting the final salvation of men. The Apostles seem to have felt no embarrassment in going out into all the world and preaching the gospel to every creature, from any views which they entertained respecting the purposes of God; and whenever religious teachers now feel embarrassments of this kind, they may be sure that they have departed from the ground of the Apostles, and do not hold the truth as it is in Jesus.

TEMPERANCE.

THE BLOODY GROCERY.

The Editors of the Genius of Temperance have just received by mail, the following letter from a friend residing near the Western Lakes. It is from a source which entitles it to entire confidence.

O——, Sept. 10, 1831.

MY DEAR SIR,

I have just returned from the West. If you can use the following sketch from my journal, please accept it. Every word is true.

Your ob't serv't, J. T. M.

[From my Journal.]

Saw at B—— a most appalling illustration of Intemperance. We heard before reaching the place, that a murder had been committed, and early the next morning I went with my friend, Capt. H. to see the corpse. Long shall I remember the scene. We entered a dark, dirty "Grocery and Provision Store," recently kept by the murderer, and passed into the back room where lay the murdered wife and mother! All was silent as death, and a sepulchral gloom came over the soul. The cloth was removed from the head and face of the poor victim, and exposed the fatal wounds made by a hammer. She was apparently 35 years old, and a very good looking person. Every one said she had been a meek, unoffending wife, and as far from having given cause for jealousy as possible. But her infuriate husband, in his drunken fancies, conjured up a belief that there was cause for suspicion, and taking a last and natural resource of the drunkard, sealed his crimes by murder, and murder too, under circumstances which the fiends of the pit can hardly believe, for it was when a fond mother was giving a mother's sustenance to her infant babe!!!

Talk of law; of policy; of right; or any thing else which suffers the demon of the still to prowl around our land, and 'tis mockery of law and policy and right!

As I gazed on a faithful wife, dashed to the earth a lifeless corpse by a husband, I did hope the laws of our land would awake to duty, and chain up the foul accessaries to the crimes caused by intemperance. Who are accessaries!—The rum-drinker alone! No—the rum-maker, the rum-importer, the rum-vender.—Oh! Merciful God! roll on the Temperance cause, and set the world free from the damning gripe of the hyena of the still.

After viewing the corpse, my eye wandered around the room. A beautiful, yes, beautiful child, she had left, was near me. Poor child! My prayer indeed is, that God, for Christ's sake, be merciful to you, and take you, with the other motherless babes, into especial care, and make you subjects of renewing grace. Yes! blessed God! raise up earthly friends, and order all things so that they shall be saved and redeemed.

The poor woman had suffered much abuse and although advised to leave her husband, had declined, dreading that dreaful resort. 'Tis hard for a wife to take such a course. She had often told her friends, "she hoped her husband was not so bad at heart as he appeared." But she was deceived, and now sleeps beneath the grave a specimen of the drunkard's handy work.

Long will that morning's spectacle dwell on my memory. That low and dirty grocery leading to the room of death—the decanter of gin standing on the sideboard—the anti-religious newspaper on the table, instead of the holy bible and the tract—the fact of being in a murderer's house—all—all was enough to draw from every pore the cold sweat of horror, and load with terror the midnight dream.

Glad was I to leave the house; and hastening to my lodgings, I fell instinctively upon my knees to thank my God for his restraining grace, that I was not left to such foul murder, and to implore further restraint. WHO maketh us to differ! To HIM be all the glory.

The same afternoon, just at twilight, I went with my friend, Mr. H——, to the jail in which the murderer was confined.—Although he had requested to be alone, the jailor gave us admission. We found the cell in the basement story. It was very dark, and rendered more so by the gathering shades of night. The door was opened, and although the murderer was in irons, and two persons were with me, I felt an instinctive dread to enter. The soul recoiled, and we involuntarily ejaculated, "Have mercy upon us." The jailer went to bed side and aroused him. He asked him a few questions, and then inquired if he wished to see some ministers—for being dressed in black, and having made allusions to religion, we were mistaken for clergymen. The murderer answered—"No, 'tis all a trade—I want to be left alone!

We left him alone, and bent our way home in silence.

Who maketh us to differ! To HIM be all the glory. J. T. M.

We copy the following from the Le Roy Gazette which appears to have been extracted from an address on the subject of Temperance, delivered at Ithaca by Dr. Chapin late of this village.

"A young gentleman, a stranger, but who we afterwards learned was a Doct. Chapin, on his way to the Sandwich Islands, asked leave to make a remark or two which would be expressive of his feelings, and might in some degree, increase the broad blaze of light already thrown upon the subject of Intemperance. He stated that while at hundreds of miles distance he had heard of Ithaca; how it had been peculiarly favored of Him, whose eye rests upon every part of creation, and who governs all things after the counsels of his own will—how it was celebrated for its civil and religious regulations—how the cause of Temperance and religion flourished here. And when winding his way along the hills which surround our village and looking down upon the valley below, he saw the regularity of our streets, the air of neatness and comfort about our houses, and spires of our numerous churches glittering in the beams of the setting sun, he said, 'surely thou art blessed of the Most High.' But when arrived and passing through the village, he saw the monster was here—he saw him painted upon the sign boards of our groceries, and reclining upon the shelves of our public houses. He regretted that a place that had become so celebrated and was so highly favored, should contain one advocate for the beastly practice of rum-selling. He adverted to the evils produced by ardent spirits; their demoralizing effect upon society; the unhappiness, misery and death that attend them in the bosoms of their families, friends or individuals.—In proof of the latter positions he related an anecdote which he had from unquestionable authority. The person who related the circumstance to him was a physician. He said, that while pursuing his studies there were six besides himself in the class. Five of them had died drunkards. He was called at different times to attend one of these professionally. On one of those visits, he believes the last, he told his patient he could do him no good. He had raised him from a sick bed when he was snatched as it were from the jaws of death, but he had returned to his cups again, 'like a dog to his vomit, and the sow that had been washed to her wallowing in the mire;' and now there was no hope: all would soon be over with him for time. The drunkard replied: 'It is useless to urge me to to quit drinking, for if there was but one sixpence in the house and my family were starving for the want of bread and freezing for want of fire, I would spend it for drink. If my wife with tears should implore me to have mercy upon myself and family, and my children should cling to me in hollow accents for food, I would turn away and spend my money in a grog-shop—and if, in my way thither the earth should open before me, and I see the fiery surges of hell itself lashing its fretted walls below, I would make an effort to leap the awful chasm, to obtain the damning draught."

AMERICANS ABROAD.—A gentleman I knew, went with a party to look over a very beautiful American ship, lying in London Docks; the Ontario; and while they were admiring her, the captain came up to them and said,—"You may well admire the beauty of this ship, gentlemen, for the men that built her were in their sober senses the whole time. There was not a glass of grog drunk while the ship was building." Another friend of mine went on board a ship in the London Docks, about going to America, and heard a young gentleman, who was going as a passenger, talking with the captain on the same subject. The young man asked what he should prepare for the voyage; if he should bring spirits for his own drinking. "No," said the captain,—"you need not bring any." The young man understood that the captain would provide the passengers with spirits for the voyage; and was very much surprised when the captain explained himself by saying that they should not want any spirits. He could hardly believe the captain when he said, that neither he nor any of his crew should take a single glass of grog the whole voyage.

From the Pastor's Journal.

ILLUSTRATION OF THE EVIL EFFECT OF GIVING CHILDREN ARDENT SPIRITS.

I am yet a young man, but I will tell you what I have seen. I have seen—and I can almost fancy I now see—the village school house, and its green lawn, on which forty or fifty robust and active children were sporting in all the gaiety and recklessness of early youth. I had several particular associates there, whom I often accompanied to their respective homes. Of these, some had parents who loved the liquid poison, and frequently put it to the lips of their little sons. And now, when I ask after these same once loved associates, where have they gone! Alas! of several, I too well know the sad history. One grew up a tipler, at eighteen, was held to bonds to a large amount, for a violent personal attack on a highly respectable gentleman—fled his native state, and after a year or two of profligacy, died by his own hand. His brother, who was saved from the like course, only by the mastery of another passion, avarice, which combatted for a time the strength of intemperance, has at length, under thirty, gone down to the verge of the grave, over which he now totters, with the bottle in his hand. A third, though born to a large property, and having the finest advantages for obtaining an education, now drives a team—a drunken waggoner; on the same road on which his fathers coach used to roll. Another ran away from home at sixteen, and is supposed to have found a grave somewhere amid the revolutions of South-America. Another, on his passage from New-Orleans to some Northern port of the U. States, laid a plot for seizing the vessel, rose upon the captain, was wounded, and finally was thrown, bleeding, into the sea, and perished. Those all loved strong drink, and, I am convinced, imbibed their passion for it from the example of their parents, and from being permitted to drink the "leavings in the bottom of the glass."

Intemperance.—A Montreal paper, of Sept. 18, says:

"Eight of the unfortunate passengers of the Lady Sherbrooke, which lately suffered shipwreck on the coast of Newfoundland, presented themselves yesterday to the Emigrant Society of this city to be forwarded to Upper Canada. One of them, a man about sixty years of age, lost his wife and all his children, seven in number. Another had two saved of a family, which, including relatives, consisted of sixteen persons. He had gone to the bottom with his family, but being an expert diver, rose to the surface and swam to the shore. His son escaped similarly. His wife who perished, had one hundred and twenty sovereigns sewed into part of her dress. These passengers asserted that the captain and mate were both in a state of beastly intoxication; the captain particularly, who had to be carried into bed by three men, on the evening of the fatal calamity, and that the mate was on deck about half after ten o'clock, quite unfit for the performance of his duty. It is a dreadful thing that the cause of so many lives should have been entrusted to such persons. It will be remembered that nearly three hundred souls perished by this shipwreck."

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the Cincinnati Journal.

REV. RALPH CUSHMAN.

When we announced to our readers the mournful intelligence of the death of this eminent servant of God, we promised some particulars respecting his life, character, and last sickness.—This promise we hasten to perform; believing it a duty which we owe to that cause to which our beloved brother was so ardently attached; and to the promotion of which he gave all the energies of both mind and body.

The Rev. Ralph Cushman was a native of Goshen, Massachusetts. He received his collegiate education at William's College; and was a graduate of Andover Theological Seminary, of the class of 1820. He was licensed to preach the gospel by the Andover Association, July 4th, 1820. The first three years of his ministry were spent in Hopkinsville, Ky., where he received ordination by the Muhlenburgh Presbytery. From Hopkinsville, he removed to Manlius, Onondaga county, N. Y., and was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church in that village. His labors during his residence in Manlius were blest with one or two powerful revivals of religion, besides the seal which God set to his ministry, by constant additions to the church in seasons when no uncommon excitement prevailed.

In November, 1829, Mr. Cushman received the appointment of Corresponding Secretary of the Central Agency of the American Home Missionary Society for the State of New-York. After much deliberation and prayer, he determined to accept of this appointment, although he found much difficulty in obtaining a dissolution of the pastoral relation existing between himself and his beloved charge at Manlius. After a day of fasting and prayer, however, the question was proposed to the church, whether, in view of existing circumstances, they were willing that Mr. Cushman should leave them. The whole church rose up in answer to this call, and then sat down and burst into tears. This painful separation from his church being effected, Mr. Cushman removed to Utica, and entered upon the duties of his new station in December, 1829. In this new field of usefulness, Mr. Cushman labored with much acceptance and usefulness about one year.

* * * * * * * *

In 1830, Mr. Cushman received the appointment of General Agent of the A. H. M. S. for the valley of the Mississippi. In December, 1830, he removed with his family to this city, and immediately entered upon the responsible and difficult labors of his new station, the duties of which he continued to discharge with great acceptableness and success up to the time of his death.

His last sickness was a bilious remittent fever. He was taken on the 11th August, at the house of Gen. Beal, Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio. Here in the bosom of a christian family, he received every attention which his situation required. The physician who attended him was remarkably kind and attentive; but all his efforts proved unavailing; and after a protracted illness of sixteen days, he closed his eyes in peace on the 27th of August, about 20 minutes after 6 o'clock. During his sickness, all who waited upon him bear testimony to his great patience, his deep humility and unshaken faith.

On Thursday evening, 11th of August, though much indisposed, he preached his last sermon to the people of Wooster from these words, "Ye must be born again." All who heard him, bear witness to the fervency, the plainness and pathos with which he pressed this all important truth upon the attention of his audience. His physician remarks that "his sermon on that occasion was unusually interesting; & the prayers partook much of the devotional spirit & ardent desires after the enjoyments of the heavenly state. He prayed that it might not be long before he should fully enter upon the enjoyments of those heavenly mansions which the Lord Jesus had prepared for those that love him." He often spoke of his family, to which he was most tenderly attached.—He remarked, "I have no fear of dying—but when I think of my family;—Oh when I think of my family;" but with the most implicit confidence and resignation he was enabled to commit them to the protection of his Divine Master. His physician observes, that "he was much engaged in prayer, his hands folded and resting on his breast. Not a repining word—no complaining." All is right—it is the Lord."

"He always received me with a smile, held out his hand, and pressed mine most affectionately, and told me he could not express the deep sense of obligation he felt. "Jesus, kind friend—friend of sinners—my frfend—Thou hast promised to be with me—Thou art with me—Thou art here—Precious Jesus, how I love thee!"

Another person who was much with him, remarks that soon after he was taken sick, he observed, "I do not know what the Lord is going to do with me; but I am of little consequence."—At another time he said, "God is good, and I am a poor miserable sinner, but Christ is full." He prayed much for the light of God's countenance and his presence to be with him—spoke often of his miserable depraved heart, and prayed that God would not let his wicked heart deceive him. On his remarking that he was a great sinner, and being told that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin, he looked up with a heavenly smile, and said, "O yes, I know it. He is a precious Saviour. I do love Jesus. I love to talk about him. He has been a good master to me, but I have been an unprofitable servant." He often said he would like to live, should it please God, to aid in advancing the great work in which he was so labouriously and energetically engaged,—but would as often repeat—"God has no need of me—THE WORK WILL GO ON." When informed that his case was very critical, he with perfect calmness and resignation; clasped his hands, and lifting up his heart to God, said, "Lord Jesus, into thy hands I commend my spirit." His last breath seemed to be one of prayer. "Just at the moment when his spirit departed, he raised his hands, clasped them, and thus clasped, they fell quietly across his bosom, to move no more until raised again by the power of God in the last day."

We have been thus particular respecting the last hours of our beloved brother, because the "Chamber where the good man meets his fate,

Is privileged above the common walks of life."

From the Philadelphian.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Pleasant-grove, Tuscarawas Co. Ill. Sept. 7th, 1831.

Rev. Ezra Stiles Ely, D. D.

Dear Sir,—It is extensively reported and believed, through this region, that you have publicly inculcated the sentiment, that the Church should be united with the State. A Discourse which was delivered by yourself, and which has been published, has been quoted to prove, that the above report is true. Although I have never given it credence, but it is so firmly believed by the multitude—and it is so impossible to convince them to the contrary, that I have determined on writing you, that I may know the whole truth of the matter.

Now if you will trouble yourself to forward me the Discourse which has been referred to—and also to write and let me know what your precise views are respecting such an union; you will not only confer a favor on a single individual, but in this region it would go far towards answering forever the charge, that the Presbyterians are actually desirous of uniting Church and State.

Yours, respectfully,
CALVIN W. BABBITT.

Rev, Sir,—As I have a great desire to understand the truth, of so important a question, I also trouble you with a few words; for I wish to correct Error; if the people in this are in Error; for I assure you it is a prevailing opinion of the citizens of this State, as above stated.

Yours respectfully,
THOS. BENNETT.

REPLY.

To Messrs. Calvin Babbitt, & Thomas Bennett.
Gentlemen,

If I can find a copy of my Sermon, which is not bound in a volume with other pamphlets, I will forward it to you by mail; that you may read and judge for yourselves. In the mean time, I deny that I ever advocated the union of Church and State, or any union of Ecclesiastical and Civil government. The Presbyterian Confession of Faith lays down the broadest principles of civil liberty; and those principles I have publicly and sincerely adopted. Moreover the Presbyterians and Congregationalists of Great Britain have been the founders of nearly every thing like civil liberty which now exists in the world.—They established the republican institutions of these happy United States; and where the Presbyterian and Congregational principles of religious liberty have not been taught, there is at present no such thing as a settled civil government free from all ecclesiastical usurpation and oppression. Infidelity has not been able in France and South America to deprive the Papacy of the power of tyrannizing over the civil and religious rights of the people; but let the protestant principles of Presbyterianism prevail in those countries and they will become free & possess all the requisites for a happy self-government.

Let Presbyterianism conquer Spain, and even Spain would then be governed by such principles of civil and religious liberty as are established in our delightful country.

But your letter seems to require my personal creed on the subject of Church and State. It is my firm conviction that the church and the state should for ever be distinct and separate: and that ecclesiastical and civil governments should not interfere with each other.

Every man in the nation who is twenty one years of age and who pays his proportion be it much or little, towards the expense of the State and the National government under which he lives, and enjoys protection, should be a freeman, eligible to any office and entitled to vote at every election of civil rulers, for any one whom he may prefer.

For nothing but such crimes against the State as are commonly punished with transportation or imprisonment should this right of election and this eligibility to office be taken away.

Civil government should take no cognizance of a man's opinions upon political, moral or religious subjects; but should allow him to think, speak, write, print, and publish any thing which he pleases, provided he does neither slander his neighbor, nor excite men to commit such crimes against the state as are punishable by statute.

No kind of religion should by the constitution or statute of the state be forbidden, or required, or made a test for office.

The law of course should place all denominations of Christians, Jews, Mussulmen, Pagans, Theists and Atheist on an equality. What can any persons demand more; unless they should wish peculiar privileges to be granted themselves above all others.

In perfect consistency with these principles of civil liberty, I maintain that every rational creature of God is under the highest moral, and religious obligations to receive every kind of revelation which God has made to him, whether through the constitution of his mind, the light of reason, or any other means, and to act in all things in conformity with his known duty. Civil government may neither enjoin or prohibit any religion; but God may, and has enjoined on all obedience to whatever they know to be his revealed will. Hence I conclude that every man who has opportunity of knowing the truth of christianity, is religiously bound to be a christian, and in all personal, private, public, ecclesiastical and political relations to act like a Christian. God gives a man who is a ruler by the suffrages of his fellow citizens no more permission to be wicked, despise the gospel of Christ, and serve the devil, than is granted to any one in a private station. A ruler has no more right to steal, murder, and be an infidel, than a minister of the gospel, or a private communicant.

A christian freeman may by his civil right vote for any one to fill an office whom he may choose; but as a Christian he is bound to his Maker not to choose one whom he believes to be unprincipled a man of bad moral character, and an enemy to what he deems the best interests of of mankind. I judge that it would not be consistent with my obligations to my Maker, nor conducive to the best interests of the community, to give my suffrage for the election of an openly immoral man, a thief, a liar, a gambler, or a drunkard, for instance; I determine, also, that rulers who fear God and serve Christ are the fittest characters to govern our country; and as a freeman I will always, therefore, use my influence to support no habitually vicious man, no person who scoffs at the law of God, no individual who openly contemns what I believe to be the essentials of christianity. In this resolution I invite my fellow Christians of all denominations to unite with me; and if they resolve to act in civil and political matters as I think all Christians ought, they will thereby form what I have denominated "a Christian party in politics" which is nothing but a number of Christian freemen, determined to co-operate with each other in voting conscientiously for such men as they verily think would be the best incumbents of civil offices.

If all the Christian freemen in the United States would fix these principles of action in their own minds, and carry them out in practice, they would thereby prevent the election to any office of importance of any man who is by them known to be of bad moral character, and a declared enemy of God our Saviour.

None but bad men have any thing to fear from the operation of these reasonable principles of Christian conduct on a Christian's political relations. If the majority of the people of the United States were Musulmen, or Atheists, or gamblers, I should expect them to support the men of their own preference instead of any whom I might nominate; and may the time soon come when our electors and the elected shall all be

I am, gentleman, yours respectfully,
E. S. ELY.

Extract from the Narrative of the State of Religion, presented before the General Convention, at its late meeting at Windsor.

With earnest gratitude to God, be it recorded, never did the General Convention of Vermont meet under circumstances of deeper interest, or of more auspicious promise, than at the present time. From every part of our beloved Zion, we are cheered with gracious tidings. Revivals of religion, numerous, powerful, & in many respects of a peculiarly happy character, have bro't joy and gladness to this heritage of the Lord.

Special revivals of the work of God are reported in the following towns, viz. Brattleboro', East Parish, Halifax, Wilmington, Marlboro', Wadsborough, Grafton, Putney, Springfield, Weathersfield, Windsor, Woodstock, Bridgewater, Barnard, Hartford, Norwich, Thetford, West Fairlee, Vershire, Bradford, Newbury, Corinth, Washington, Chelsea, Tunbridge, Royalton, Randolph, Braintree, Rochester, Brookfield, Williamstown, Waterford, Lyndon, St. Johnsbury, Peacham, Danville, Barnet, Lunenburgh, Walden, Cratisbury, Barton, Derby, Brownington, Irasburgh, Troy, Westfield, Hardwick, St. Albans, Berkshire, Enosburgh, Montgomery, Jericho, Williston, Burlington, Westford, Essex, Cambridge, Swanton, Middlesex, Waitsfield, Moretown, Fayston, Waterbury, Barre, Plainfield, Marshfield, Addison, New Haven, Weybridge, Middlebury, Cornwall, Shoreham, Bridport, Vergennes, Ferrisburgh, Charlotte, Monkton, Hinesburgh, Bristol, Whiting, Salisbury, Brandon, Pittsford, Rutland, Fairhaven, Benson, Westhaven, Orwell, Hubbardton, Wallingford, Tinmouth, Sudbury, Clarendon, Castleton, Poultney, Rupert, Dorset, Manchester, Sandgate, Peru, and Bennington, in this state, and S. Granville, and most of the churches in Essex co. Association, N. Y.

The number of towns in this state is 245; the number in which are churches in connexion with this body, according to our last printed minutes, 197. The number in which revivals have been reported, is 99, besides many others not mentioned in the above list, in which conversions have taken place, and appearances are uncommonly favorable. These towns are situated in every part of the state. Many of these revivals have but just commenced, and the greater part of them are yet in progress; yet it is believed that the number of conversions already cannot be less than 5,500. Of these, some have united, and others probably will unite, with other Christian denominations, who are our fellow laborers in this great work, and through whose labors there have doubtless been many conversions, of which we have received no information.

Looking for the means which have been more or less directly concerned in bringing about the blessed results over which we rejoice, we cannot but feel that the "Temperance Reformation" has been an important pioneer in preparing the way for the "coming of the Lord." To a great extent, our churches had been freed from the deadly influence of "strong drink." The sweet incense of the sanctuary was no longer polluted in its ascent to heaven by the tainted breath of intemperance; and impenitent men in our congregations no longer paralyzed their moral sensibilities and grieved away the Spirit of God by a resort to the intoxicating cup.

The whole number of conversions were probably [illegible]. It was worthy of special notice that most of the conversions appeared to be in immediate answer to prayer. Some universalists who came to the meeting to oppose and who had endeavored to dissuade others from attending, were made the hopeful trophies of redeeming grace. Some men of talents and standing were, at this meeting, gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd.

Could this meeting have continued, great results might rationally have been anticipated, and the work have extended into many other parts of the province, but tho' the harvest was great, the laborers were few indeed. A single Presbyterian minister extends his labors to 5 or 6 congregations.

The want of ministerial help is very great in this part of Canada, and in no place perhaps would ministers receive a more cordial welcome, or find a field which could promise more abundant usefulness.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, OCT. 13, 1831.

Interesting Four Day's Meeting at Gainesborough, U. Canada.—The following interesting account is made from a brief memorandum furnished the editor of this paper, at his request, by Rev. Mr. Curry of Lockport, who was the principal laborer at the meeting. It should have appeared last week but the memorandum was mislaid.

It commenced on Friday the 19th of September, on which day a number of church members took the anxious seat and on the day following it was evident that a powerful work had commenced among sinners, and the feeling was evidently much deepened on the next day, (Sabbath).

On Monday the whole congregation with the exception of 6 or 8, kneeled in token of submission. It was a time of overwhelming interest, and appeared to be in immediate answer to the prayers of christians who were supplicating a throne of grace while the minister was urging them to repent and submit to God.

The young converts were invited to place themselves immediately under the care of the church—a number gave in their names. It was determined to continue the meeting one day longer, and administer the sacrament. On Tuesday, about 50 converts were examined and received into the church and sat down at the Lord's table. Some of these were from a distance and took letters of recommendation to the churches to which they might most conveniently attach themselves. On Tuesday evening another appeal was made to sinners, and the meeting was closed.

The whole number of hopeful coverts was 60 or 70. There was a perfect readiness on the part of young converts to pray and warn the impenitent. Females retired to a grove with their young associates to pray for and converse with them. The converts were from all classes of society, and of all ages from youth up to 70 years. An infidel who came merely out of idle curiosity, and imagined himself able logically to confute every argument was led to see his lost and undone condition, and a few remarks near the close of the meeting were set home by the Spirit upon his heart, and he went away rejoicing in hope.

Mr. Curry also furnished us with a few facts concerning a previous meeting which he attended at Fifteen Mile Creek, (in U. Canada,) which commenced on the 23d Sept. On the first day the members of the church manifested but little preparation to receive the blessing of converting grace upon the hearts of sinners—only 30 persons were present, and among them only 3 or 4 besides professors. In the evening, however, a few church members came forward and professed their penitence, and resolved to come up to the help of the Lord.

On the next day the audience was somewhat increased, a number took the anxious seat, and a few expressed hopes. On the Sabbath the house was thronged, and 30 came forward to the anxious seat, most of whom were hopefully converted during the meeting, and on the following day the solemnity upon the minds of sinners appeared to be deeper, and the hopes which followed appeared more clear. On Tuesday 30 were examined and admitted to the privileges of the church. After the administration of the ordinances of the supper the judgment Hymn was sung, and a call being made for those who would promise to submit to God to come forward, a few came. In the evening a number more expressed hopes.

Our Missionaries in State Prison.—We refer our readers to the extracts which we give from various papers relating to the imprisonment of our Missionaries in the Georgia Penitentiary. There never has been probably since the organization of our government such a high handed act of oppression committed in the United States under color of Law. We can find no parallel to it in the history of our country. The Missionaries, it is well known, have been patronized by the general government and encouraged to go on in their work and enabled to do so by appropriations from the U. States Treasury.

Now they are suffering for it in a prison, with thieves and other felons. And what is the crime of which they have been guilty! Why of civilizing and christianizing the Indians so that Georgia cannot as readily obtain their lands—cannot induce them to go to the west. Their moral characters have been so improved and the use of ardent spirits so much diminished, that there is no hope of their continuing to waste away and become extinct. Besides, just at the time that Georgia was grasping for the Indian lands, her cupidity is increased a thousand fold by the discovery of Gold Mines. When these are discovered, States prison, fetters, scourging, oppression in every shape, and even murder are resorted to, to effect her purpose of obtaining the possession of these lands & mines.

What will be the result as relates to the Indians, we cannot predict—but one thing is certain, our nation is disgraced in the eyes of the civilized world. The high-handed acts of oppression which have so often marked the conduct of monarchs and despots, it is now demonstrated, may be committed under a government calling itself Republican. How must those who are now laboring in Europe to break the chains of oppression and to establish free governments, and who are laboring to convince their fellow-citizens of the superiority of our Government to their own, blush and be confounded at such an exhibition of the excellencies of Republicanism.

Missionaries—Ministers of Jesus Christ, immured in dungeons, because they will not swear to oppress the Indians whom they were endeavouring to instruct and to civilize, & whose souls they were laboring to save—doing this too with the approbation of the national authorities, and with funds furnished in part from our national Treasury! This is surely an era of light and improvement! At this rate what rapid advances may we republicans not expect in the progress of reform in the old world, in their efforts to assimilate their institutions with our own? Why the Grand Seignior has only to make a very trifling advance and his subjects will be worthy to shake hands with their republican brethren of Georgia.

Why may not Christians by Obedience to the Commands of God do something to merit their Salvation?

This, we have no doubt, is a question that often puzzles the impenitent—but the obvious reason we think is the nature of the Divine Law. That law if obeyed would be productive of our highest happiness. If there were no hereafter, if there were no state of future rewards and punishments, and this were not a state of probation, it would be for our interest—for our own temporal happiness to keep the law perfectly, and every deviation from the strait and narrow way it points out, would just so much diminish that happiness. How then can we, by doing that which would be for our own good—that which in its very nature would make us happy, lay God under obligation to us—we are under infinite obligations to God for giving us such a law. It was infinite benevolence that dictated it. To illustrate—Suppose a fellow-man were to point out to us a particular course of conduct by which we might amass wealth, obtain honor, and gratify our own ambition and thus vastly increase our own happiness. Suppose we should with the greatest exactness follow his directions and obtain all the good promised or anticipated—on whom would the obligation rest? What claim should we have upon this person for further blessings? Would not the obligation rest upon our own shoulders? If the question be asked, would not the person be sure of heaven who should keep the whole law?—the answer is yes; but not because he had earned the glories of heaven. The promise of God would secure it as a result of obedience. Perfect obedience would carry to the heart of the obedient its own reward.—The enjoyment of the love and smiles of his Heavenly Father; but would not give the person a right to demand still further happiness—would not bring God in debt to him any more than we should, were a fellow-being to present certain rules to us, by the observance of which we should be greatly benefitted, lay him under obligation to confer still further blessings. To lay a person under obligation to us we must do something to benefit him. Can we lay God under obligation to grant us the joys of the future world, because by obeying the rules he has prescribed for us here, our highest earthly happiness has been secured?

This explanation and illustration we believe is in accordance with the scriptures, and may possibly lead the sinner to see why he cannot make up an account of merit that shall balance that which divine justice shall exhibit against him at the day of final reckoning, when "every mouth shall be stopped and the whole world become guilty before God."

Negro Butchering.—We learn from the Nashville Banner and from other Southern papers, that the inhabitants who live in the district where the late insurrection of the negroes existed, were so much exasperated that in some instances, negroes after they have been taken, have been butchered without trial, and that in many instances their lives have been preserved with the greatest difficulty by the interference of the more intelligent and humane among the military officers and inhabitants. We rejoice to find that no editor approves of this summary way of inflicting punishment, indiscriminately upon the innocent and the guilty. One thing however we regret to see. The editor of the Nashville Banner in giving a connected account of the circumstances attending the insurrection, gives it as his opinion, if another revolt should soon take place, that nothing could restrain the whites from a general and indiscriminate massacre of the blacks in the district of country where it should occur. What an unenviable state of society must that be where the masters are in constant apprehension of being murdered by their slaves, and what must be the state of feeling & of morals where such a murderous spirit of revenge exists. A few more such attempts on the part of the blacks to assert their freedom will probably produce awful results and may possibly lead to some important crisis in the history of slavery. A crisis will come sooner or later. One part of the human family cannot forever hold another part in bondage merely on account of the color of the skin! God is the avenger of the oppressed. We cannot but deeply sympathize with those of our Southern brethren who are compelled by circumstances to retain about them these living monuments of the horrible injustice of their ancestors—but for those who justify this abominable traffic in flesh and blood we——wish their eyes may be opened to the enormity of their crimes—that they may repent and make all the reparation which is in their power to the injured, oppressed and enslaved African.

THE REPUBLICANISM OF SLAVE HOLDERS

A gentleman who was a sojourner by the name of Robinson, in Richmond Virginia, during the late negro insurrection, and who assisted the military in guarding the city against an expected attack, expressed in a conversation with a gentleman of the Medical profession, his opinion that the slaves had a natural right to their liberty. For this he was grossly abused, and on the following morning was told that a mob of the gentry were collecting to inflict summary punishment on him for this frank expression of his opinion. The conversation by the bye was not in hearing of any but whites. He was advised to leave the city without delay and took the stage but in a moment after found that the mob had collected at a bridge over which the stage was to pass, and having no doubt, of their intention to treat him with personal violence, he left the stage, returned to his lodging and shut himself up in his room. Here he was attacked and in spite of the remonstrances of his landlord, his room was broken open and he was dragged through the city into an adjacent grove, where he was stripped of all his clothing, tied to a tree and whipped in the most brutal manner, and then turned adrift and ordered to leave the place without delay. He was compelled in this situation to travel a number of miles under a burning sun, and as a report of the mobbing had preceded him, he could not obtain from any one, horse or carriage, and finally, in the dusk of the evening, when completely exhausted, was so fortunate as to hire a passage with a dryman to the house of an acquaintance, where he was treated with the kindness his situation demanded.

It is further stated that Mr. Carter with whom Mr. Robinson lodged in Petersburgh, for his interference in his behalf, to prevent his probable murder, has been compelled to flee from Richmond, to leave his store and business; although he had just received a new stock of Goods from N. York.

We trust northern men whose morality and republicanism have not been formed under the influence of slavery, will know how to appreciate this outrage upon personal rights and will make such comments as their indignant feelings may prompt.

We may naturally ask, are there not laws in Virginia? Even suppose that the object of Robinson had been to excite insurrection among the slaves, have they no law providing for such a case? Must the appeal be made to the tribunal of Mobocracy? Can this be the best way to punish the supposed culprit?

It appears too, that Robinson was an infidel and that some of the principal actors in this scene of brutal violence, were professors of religion. So much the worse—a fine story this for the propagators of infidel slanders against the professors of christianity. Better far that they were suffering with our southern Missionaries the horrors of the Georgia Penitentiary for teaching the Indians the principles of the religion of Christ, than thus to trample on all laws human and divine, and then flatter themselves that they have done God service.

But let us suppose even, that under the circumstances of the case, there was a necessity for this resort to brute force. How long should a christian voluntarily live, where he is under the necessity of taking the making judging and executing the law into his own hands to enable him to hold his fellow men in bondage? In short in this day of light and in this land whose boast is that all men are by nature free and equal, can christians continue to deal in flesh and blood—and that too where it is deemed necessary to pass laws to punish as a crime, those who are so wicked as to teach these slaves that they have souls destined to immortality—to show them the way of life and point them to a Saviour? There is something so revolting in the very idea of inflicting the punishment of perpetual servitude merely for the crime of wearing a black skin—so utterly at variance with that blessed summary of the second table of the Divine Law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," that we do not know how christian republicans can engage in this traffic, and treat as beasts, those who are destined to the same judgment bar with themselves.

However they may affect to believe that a black skin renders its wearer inferior to themselves, this cannot change the immutable laws of God—cannot render that right which is in itself the height of injustice—cannot nullify the command "whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye the same to them." It is because the blacks in the late revolt totally disregarded this requirement in their indiscriminate massacre of men women and children that they stand condemned and must receive the united execration of every christian. It manifested a blood thirsty spirit of revenge, and could not tend to meliorate their condition or free them from the chains of servitude under which they groan. It may indeed operate upon the fears of their masters, and render them more willing to "let the oppressed go free"—may make them more keen sighted to discern some practicable method to rid themselves of the curse of which they are so ready to complain, but which, after all, they appear so much to cherish.

We regret to see, as we have done, some of the ringleaders in the late murderous revolt and indiscriminate massacre, compared to Washington, Bolivar and others who have been instrumental in breaking the fetters from their fellow men. Such a comparison is degrading to those distinguished statesmen and patriots, but were the blacks to devise and execute some practicable plan to obtain their freedom—conducted in consonance with the principles of humanity, we know not why they should not be as justly entitled to the appellation of patriots, and their resistance to oppression, to the name of revolution, as that was which freed us from British domination. Americans were reduced to a state of abject slavery—they were required to labor through life without compensation—were not driven in chains and exposed at public sale to the highest bidder, and subjected to the caprice of an inhuman task master. And if a black skin does not afford prima facie evidence that they are not men—the work of the same Almighty hand—we know not why the principles of eternal justice should not be as applicable to them as to us, and entitle them to the same privileges and immunities which we claim for ourselves. We know not why the declaration that "all men are born free and equal and are possessed of certain inalienable rights among which are, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," might not sound as well from the mouth of the African as from that of an American.

In this age of light and free investigation, the subject of slavery cannot escape the ordeal of public discussion.

REVIVALS.

Our exchange papers abound with accounts of protracted meetings and revivals—especially those from N. England and those from the south. We could fill our columns with these accounts but we find it difficult to keep track of them, so as to avoid the republication of the same account as they are republished by our different exchange papers, and in many instances there is nothing particularly instructive—and moreover, as we are compelled reluctantly to acknowledge that there are very few revivals at the present time in this section of country, we believe that our readers will be as well satisfied and as highly interested with other matter.—But why are we obliged to say that the spirit of revivals has in so great a measure, ceased in the western part of this state? It cannot be that there are not in all our societies multitudes of impenitent sinners. It cannot be because God is not as ready now as at any former period to grant his spirit in answer to importunate, believing prayer. The same means which God has blessed, in times past, to the conversion of sinners, he will at any time bless, when used in dependence upon him.

These means are the awakening of christians to a sense of their sinfulness in remaining in a lukewarm state—their deep feeling for sinners accompanied by faithfulness in warning and admonishing them of their guilt and danger. There never was a time when the churches around us, have been so signally blessed by a season of refreshing from on high, rested under a heavier weight of responsibility than at the present time. They have had the most abundant evidence of the readiness of God to answer prayer and bless the faithful exertions of christians, in the use of the appointed means of grace. They have had great additions to their numbers. The ranks of the enemy have been diminished in proportion as those of the friends of the Redeemer have been increased.—What then should prevent the chariot of salvation rolling on with accelerated speed and converts being multiplied in a ratio proportioned to the increased number of laborers in the churches.—There is a fearful responsibility resting upon us. A load of guilt is accumulating which can only be removed by immediate repentance, produced by our returning to God—returning to our closet and praying and laboring as if we believed that we might call down a blessing and that souls might be saved by our instrumentality. Let us realize that what we say to sinners of the danger and folly of delaying repentance, is equally applicable to us. Let us resolve that we will now awake—we must resolve to do it or we never shall do it—and let the time be now for this is just as much the acceptable time for the christian to repent and return from his wanderings as it is for the impenitent to make his peace with God. Can Christians be satisfied to see a time of coldness and spiritual death so soon succeed the glorious season of the ingathering of souls? We must awake.

United States' Troops.—We learn from Badger's Weekly Messenger that the United States Troops stationed on Governor's and Bedloes Islands, have been removed to Virginia—and that a considerable portion of the standing army is to be stationed in that state and vicinity, in order to protect the inhabitants from their slaves.

The address of the New-York Magdalen Society is received and will be noticed next week.

The communication of S. has been on hand two weeks but on trial it is found that we have not a hand in the office who can decypher it.—it is absolutely illegible.

Ship Lost on Lake Erie.—We learn from the Clearcland Advertiser of the 4th inst. that as the Steamboat Ohio was on her passage up the Lake, she discovered the hull of a vessel which on examination, turned out to be the "Marshall of Conneaut." It was a new vessel which had just been launched, and from the situation in which it was found there was no doubt but all on board had perished.

We learn from the same paper that the corn crop in the St. Joseph county, Michigan, is almost entirely lost, owing, as is supposed, to early frosts.

The side cut from the Ohio Canal to Columbus, having been completed, and the water let in, the navigation is now opened from Clevelend to that place.

TANNER'S MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

From a Circular to the Tanners of this state, signed by Mr. Jacob Graves, we learn that the Insurance companies in Hartford, and N. York refused to renew any of the policies of Insurance upon Tanneries. He therefore proposes to the Tanners of this State to [apply to the next Legislature for an act to incorporate them into an Insurance company. For this purpose he proposes that the owners of Tanneries in each town in the State hold a meeting in November to choose a town Delegate to form a County convention of Tanners in the respective counties—to make out a schedule of the Tanneries in each town, containing the names of the owners, the value of their establishments of land, buildings and apparatus, the value of the leather made by them annually, and the several kinds. The object of this is to ascertain the amount of leather manufactured in the state. The convention of each county to appoint delegates to attend and present their petition to the Legislature.

RETURNED TO THEIR VOMIT AGAIN.

The following letter is from a friend in the city of N. York. The previous letter to which the writer refers will be recollected by our readers. We do hope and trust that our churches will awake to the subject and make Sabbath breaking, as well when absent as when at home, matter of discipline

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

that is until it shall be shown from the authority of Scripture that the fourth commandment has been abrogated. This subject opens a wide field for remark, but we trust the reflection of our readers will suggest to them all that we could say. We thank our correspondent for his attention to this business.

New-York, Oct. 1, 1831.

Mr. Chipman, Dear Sir,—I wrote you some weeks since, mentioning that the "Hudson River Steam Boat Line" had abandoned the practice of running their Boats up and down the river on the Sabbath.

I thought this information an act of justice to the proprietors as it was evidencing an improvement in their favor, of which they were entitled to the benefit. I felt too that the information would be useful to the moral and religious part of community, as by the change, those, whose consciences kept them here on the Sabbath, might be enabled to go on, early Monday morning, and so be subjected to no inconvenience.

It becomes my unpleasant duty now to inform you that the proprietors of that Line have again "returned to their vomit," and that their Boats run as heretofore, twice on the Sabbath, and not again till the eve of Monday.

Many who profess to love our Lord Jesus Christ, so far neglect their obligation to keep his commandment, as to leave here on Saturday evening, and this they do upon the plea that by the present arrangement "if they remain over the Sabbath they must lose the whole of Monday also." How good this plea is, I will not pretend to say, but will leave it to the dictation of the conscience of those, who will let it have its "perfect work." This practice is here made a matter of discipline among members of the church and I think with propriety, and I hope that other churches will see their duty in similar cases and act accordingly.

You are at liberty to make such use of the preceding as the interests of Zion shall require. The practice of professing Christians leaving here Saturday evening to reach Albany before breakfast time on Sabbath morning, and also to come from there here, is of alarming extent, and I think it high time the churches were awake to the subject. One western professor left here on Sabbath morning two weeks ago and with no other pretence only that he was in haste to get home.

A protracted meeting is now in progress at Prince street. I cannot say with what success as I only get time to attend evenings, and so learn be[illegible] as [illegible]ld

[illegible]n-
[illegible]-
[illegible]s,
[illegible]m
[illegible]a
[illegible]-
[illegible],

[illegible]drew uc

You may laugh at the old lady's simplicity, but how many are there, even at this day, who save themselves the trouble of brewing by their preference for the whiskey barrel.—Ed. Roch. Obs.

For the Rochester Observer.

ROMAN CATHOLICS ARE IDOLATERS.

Dear Sir,—Having in a recent communication shown, that the Popish church has no foundation in Scripture; I will now present some of the materials of which that structure is composed. In exhibiting these mummeries, I shall most generally quote from their ecclesiastical deeds; the canons of their church; these I will bring to the test, the law and the testimony, and if they speak not according to these, it is because there is no light in them.

That they are idolaters, is evident from their own decrees at the council of Trent, Session 25th, De invocat, where they have enacted, "That it is lawful to represent God and the Holy Trinity by images; and that these images, and the images and relics of Christ and the saints are to be duly honored, venerated, or worshipped: & that in this veneration and worship, those are venerated who are represented by them." In the same session they affirm that there are other Mediators in heaven besides Christ—such as Angels and Saints, and that it is good and profitable to invoke them." That their canons enforce idolatry, and establish iniquity by law; is evident from the following declarations of Scripture: Ex. xx, 4; Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them. Deut. xxvii, 15; Cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination to the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman. These express declarations, prohibit the making of any representation of things visible or invisible; in heaven or in earth; and denounce a curse against the man who makes, or bows himself down to it. Notwithstanding all these prohibitions, the Roman Catholics have expunged the second precept of the decalogue from their catechism; no doubt for two reasons; first, because the second commandment sweeps away their whole trumpery of image worship; and second, because the council of Trent declares that it belongs to the infallible church of Rome, to judge of the sense of Scripture, & all persons are bound by her judgement." What a convenient church this Roman church is, which can legalize murder, adultery, and every thing which defiles the man!

There are, however, many Catholics of the present day who are ashamed of these antiscriptural tenets of this Church, who tell us that they do not worship these images; but those whom they represent; that they use them as incentives to worship. The canon already adduced condemns this subterfuge; it is declared by that decree; that images are to be worshipped, and in this worship, those whom they represent are worshipped; the most favorable exposition that can be put on this, is; that the worship is divided between God and the images; although God is a jealous God, who cannot bear a rival, for he says, "his glory he will not give to another, nor his praise to graven images." This compromise in worship, for which the Papists are notorious is analagous to the idolatry of the heathen, Acts xix, 35; "What man knoweth not that the men of Ephesus are worshippers of the image which came down from Jupiter;" here they did not consider the image, Jupiter himself, whom they considered the supreme God, but worshipped it as his representative; as the Catholics do their images before which they bow. That the worshipping of God through images is idolatry; is confirmed by the case of Israel at the basis of Mount Sinai; while Moses was in the Mount, they said to Aaron, make us gods to go before us; for as for this Moses we wot not what is become of him; Aaron in compliance with their sinful request, formed them a molten calf of [illegible] and said these be thy gods O Israel. Now it is perfectly evident that neither Aaron nor Israel tho't that calf, which they had seen made, was the God that brought them from Egypt; but the symbol of Jehovah, who had delivered them from bondage; or if you please his representative; for when Aaron saw it he built an altar before it; and made proclamation, to-morrow is a feast to the Lord, (Jehovah in the original) here it is declared that the burnt offerings & the peace offerings, offered before the golden calf, were offered to the Lord. Hear O Catholics! ye blinded dupes of priestcraft, the decision of God concerning your compounded worship; away, (says God to Moses) get thee down, for the people have corrupted themselves; they have made a molten calf and they have worshipped it, let me alone that I may consume them;" why? because they had given that worship & honor to the calf, which were due to him alone; these denunciations once thundered against Israel, from Sinai's craggy summit, are also levelled against you; may you take warning ere it be too late.

Again, The practice of worshipping saints & angels; notwithstanding the decree of the council of Trent; is idolatrous and antiscriptural. When Satan tempted our Redeemer in the wilderness to fall down and worship him; Jesus Christ in repulsing the old adversary, uses the sword of the Spirit; It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve; no other object to be worshipped but the Lord only, every species of worship given to any other object is sheer idolatry. It is somewhat remarkable that although angels are a more exalted grade of beings in the scale of creation, yet they are not so much worshipped; nor so often employed as mediator, as saints are. In the Breviary, or hours of Sarum, we find many high strains of devotion, sometimes ascribed to the whole quire of angels; sometimes to particular angels, as Michael, Gabriel or Raphael; whom they dignify with the title of archangels; although an angel prohibited John the Divine from worshipping him. Rev. xix, 10; See (says he to John,) thou do it not, I am thy fellow servant—worship God, he only is the object of worship. The saints are the grand object of their devotion, for one Pater noster, they are taught to say ten Ave marias.—The slightest acquaintance with their Rosary, will show that many more prayers are directed to the Virgin Mary, and other influential saints, than to God. Mary is styled the fountain of mercy, the mother of all grace, the Saviouress, &c. Arnold de laud Virgin, declares "that she assumes to herself the omnipotency of her son, comes before the golden altar, not interceding only, but commanding; being a mistress." Bernard Sen. Sermon 61st, Art. 1st; maintains, that "it is a mother's right to command her son."—But notwithstanding this remarkable authority; when some new Saint is canonised she is neglected; thus in the case of Thomas Becket of Canterbury; the people remembering his many services in behalf of Pope and Popery, showed to him particular respect. In the Church of Canterbury there were three altars, one to Christ, one to the Virgin Mary, and one to St. Thomas.—The offerings at his shrine amounted to one hundred pounds; and those to the Virgin five pounds; and at the altar of Christ none at all; it seems that there is a charm of novelty attached to every new saint that is deified. There is no telling where the neplus ultra of the number of their gods may be placed; who can tell but they may rival their sister Rome Pagan, who professed only to worship thirty thousand gods. St. Francis is a very distinguished personage amongst them. In his book of conformidus published in 1590 it is maintained that he was equal to Christ, in his prophecies, doctrines, and miracles; nay, superior in his intercession, hence it it is said, "Christus navit, et Francisus exaravit;" that is, Christ has prayed, and Francis has obtained, absit blasphemia. These distinguished saints are not only invoked as usurpers of Christ's office as our interceding high priest, but also as a sacrificing priest; thus in the prayers addressed to Etheldred, and St. Thomas "Look O most blessed Virgin upon our troubles, and by the merits of thy holiness, appease the angry judge." To St. Thomas they pray, "that by his blood they may climb to heaven, as he has done before them." It is therefore, a false declaration they make when they say that they have only one Mediator of redemption; but many mediators of intercession.—Are not these antiscriptural doctrines equally incompatible with revelation as with common sense! yet, two of the most distinguished catholic writers acknowledge, that worshipping saints is antiscriptural; Barnesius says that it is not taught in scripture, neither expressly nor impliedly, that prayers are to be made to saints. Belarmine de beat. Chap. 19; confesses, that it was not the manner under the old Testament to say "holy Abraham pray for us." Thus the hands of catholics are not only against every man, and every man against them; but they are also against themselves. These, sir, are a few of the materials that compose the holy mother church.

Yours respectfully, J. F.

DOMESTIC.

MISSIONARIES SENT TO THE PENITENTIARY.

The facts stated below, which with shame we feel obliged now to believe, must kindle up a degree of indignation in American bosoms which will never be appeased until justice is restored to its authority. Missionaries confined in a Georgia Penitentiary with felons!—for the crime of quietly teaching the poor Indians to read and write and cultivate the soil, and imparting to them the hopes and motives of the Christian Religion!

Such disgrace has never stained the character of the Esquimaux of the North, the cannibals who inhabit the Islands of the Pacific; the Hottentots, Hindoos and Turks of the East: or the wild and cruel natives of the American coast in the West—all have treated the Missionaries kindly. It is reserved to America, the government of Georgia acting as principal, to act a part of cruelty and oppression, which has never been practised by Turks and cannibals.

The following letter comes to us from a very respectable source.

Extract of a letter, dated Augusta, Sept. 23—Eight intruders on the Indian land, and three missionaries, have been sent to the Penitentiary for four years for refusing to take the oath of allegiance. I met them on the road, tied and under guard, on their way to the prison.—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

THE MISSIONARIES CONDEMNED.

Another scene is now presented in the barbarous policy and persecution which the Government of Georgia has commenced against a few Christian Missionaries, whose lives have been faithfully devoted to the improvement of the Cherokees. The following is from the Georgia paper.

Athens, Sept. 20.—At the Gwinnett term of the Superior Court held last week, the Rev. J. J. Trott, Rev. E. Butler, and Rev. S. A. Worcester, Missionaries in the Cherokee Nation, were sentenced to imprisonment in the Penitentiary for four years, each, for refusing to take the oath to obey the laws of Georgia. At the same term, seven other white men residing in the nation, viz: Messrs Ghan, Delosier, Mayes, Copp, Eaton, and two persons by the name of [illegible] were convicted of [illegible] and sentenced to the same punishment. [illegible] putting off. They were all lost,—a lap-dog belonging to them, came ashore lashed on a plank!

These Missionaries, be it remembered, went to reside among the Cherokees with the entire approbation of the Government of the United S.—that the Government aided them in planting schools—that there was no act in the laws of Georgia prohibiting their settlement in the Cherokee territory, till last winter. It was well known that these men had been the instruments of promoting the great improvement witnessed among the Cherokees, in knowledge, morals, religion, and the arts of civilized life. They were therefore considered serious obstacles to the prosecution of the plans which the government of Georgia had adopted to seize on the lands of the Cherokees. Hence the origin of the act, made to legalize, if possible, a system of persecution worthy of Nero!—Are our citizens—the question should be put to men of all political parties, and all religions—are they prepared to witness in silence tyranny of this character! !—The authors of it should know that a retribution awaits them—that when the present excitements of party politics shall have subsided, their acts will be held in detestation by all good men—and that the infamy of their deeds will follow them to the tribunal of Eternal Justice.—South. Tel.

Dirdin Holt who murdered his wife while intoxicated, at Buffalo, was last week arraigned, plead guilty, and was sentenced to be hung on the 18th November next.

The Travel from Albany—Rail-Road Statistics and Revenue.—The number of passengers arriving at, and departing from Albany, is not only much greater than is generally supposed, but it is increasing in ratio nearly incredible. Those coming in and going out at a single point, will illustrate this remark.

From the 10th to the 20th August, there were 1,986 1-2 passed over the Mohawk and Hudson rail-road, on an average of 180 1-2 per day.

From the 20th August to the 17th September, four weeks, the aggregate number of passengers on that road was 9,029, or an average, daily, of 322 1-2.

This is a revenue equal to $58,766,25 per annum. The expenses of the road are estimated at $40 per day, or $14,600 per annum. Leaving a nett revenue of 44,166 35, or nearly 15 per cent per annum, or $300,000, for a single track. The passengers by the canal and turnpike are estimated to exceed the number now passing on the rail-road; so that the actual number of passengers to and from Albany in one direction, may be estimated at not less than 600 per day.

The above returns, it will be perceived, do not include any part of the season of the influx at the springs. Including that season; with the Saratoga rail-road in operation (and that work is rapidly progressing,) and with the general abandonment of other modes of travel and transportation, which may be expected when the rail-road shall be completed from one city to the other; and the number that will pass on the road will average 800 per day.

This fact is not only a striking exhibit of the number of persons arriving at and departing from this city, but of the great and increasing income of the rail-road company.—Alb. Arg.

Commissioners—The Supervisors and Judges, at their present session, have appointed the following persons Commissioners to take acknowledgment of Deeds, &c.

Brighton—William B. Alexander, Joseph Bloss. Chili—George Brown. Clarkson—Elijah Rowell, Theophilus Randall. Gates—Benjamin H. Brown, George H. Mumford. Greece—Nathaniel Hall, George C. Latta. Henrietta—Abel Post, Luther C. Chamberlain. Mendon—Alexander Sheldon, Jr. Ogden—Amasa Dutton, George W. Willey. Parma—Roswell Atchinson. Penfield—Leonard Adams, William Corning. Perrinton—Enoch Strong, Jeremiah D. Thompson. Pittsford—Ira Bellows, John Armstrong. Riga—Charles Castle, Orange Sacket. Rush—John P. Stull, Simeon M. Coe. Sweden—Elias B. Holmes, Samuel H. Davis. Wheatland—Jirah Blackmer, Ira Carpenter.

FOREIGN.

Brave exploit of the Polish Gen. Deminski.

After the retreat of General Gielgud into the Prussian territory, it will be remembered that General Dembinski, who was then the only Polish general remaining in Lithuania, resolved to perish with the corps under his command rather than follow the example. From the latest Warsaw papers it appears that General D. succeeded in cutting his way through the Russian forces, and had arrived with his corps in the neighborhood of Warsaw. A letter from Warsaw dated August 3d says:

The Warsaw State Gazette contains an order of the day of General Skrzynecki, of the 1st inst. praising General Dembinski and his corps, for having, in spite of the dangers that surrounded them, formed and executed the resolution to fight their way through the Russian troops. Some of his officers are commended by name. The same paper states that Gen. Dembinski, with his corps of 5,000 calvary, with six cannon, is near Hozek, a few leagues from Warsaw.

In consequence of the corps of Gen. Dembinski having crossed the Bug, an extraordinary movement was observed among the Russian troops, near Siedlec; they belong to the corps of Gen. Golownin, and were afraid of being attacked in their rear. Dembinski has sent word that he has taken up a very strong position at Hoeczk, and waited for orders from the Government, either to enter Praga to-day, or attack Gen. Golownin.

Preparations at Warsaw.

According to letters from Warsaw of the 31st of July the Poles laugh outright at the idea of being starved into submission by the Russians. They had provisions enough to stand a siege of four months, and the town was too well fortified on every side to allow of any fear that the enemy will attempt to take it by storm. There was a regular army of 40,000 men within the city, and a great number of undisciplined troops, who were in the course of training; the whole of whom, as well as the other inhabitants, were animated with the best spirit, and resolved to fight to the last.

HUNGARY.

The Cholera was spreading in Hungary. The mortality in Pesth and Ofen was already considerable. It was said that cases had occurred in Wesselburg, only 60 miles from Vienna. It had also reached Bucharest.

Wreck of the Rothsay Castle Steam Boat.

This boat plied daily between Liverpool and Beaumaris, and was totally lost on the Dutchman's bank, Menai Strait, on the night of the 22d August last. She was commanded by Lieut. Atkinson, who lost his life, together with about 100 of passengers and crew: the whole number of which were about 125,—crew 15; upwards of 100 were drowned. They were mostly persons who were on a trip for pleasure, and resided principally at Liverpool and the vicinity.

The Boat was delayed in starting two hours, which allowed time for M. W. Foster, Lady and servant, of Regent Park, London, to take passage

The sea had been boisterous the day before, and was very rough that day on the banks. The boat had but one boiler, and had not strength to stem the tide, and wind; the conduct of the captain too, after dinner, was insolent to the entreaties of his passengers; remaining two hours in the cabin, without paying the least attention to either boat or passengers.

When the boat struck on the bank, the scene was dreadful and is thus depicted by a Liverpool editor:

Certain death seemed now to present itself to all on board, and the most affecting scenes were exhibited. The females, in particular, uttered the most piercing shrieks; some locked themselves in each other's arms, while others, losing all self command, tore off their caps and bonnets, in the wildness of despair. A Liverpool pilot, who happened to be in the packet, now raised his voice and exclaimed, "It is all over—we are all lost!" At these words there was a universal despairing shriek. The women and children collected in a knot together, and kept embracing each other, keeping up all the time, the most dismal lamentations. When tired of crying they lay against each other, and with their heads reclined like inanimate bodies. The steward of the vessel and his wife, who was on board, lashed themselves to the mast, determined to spend their last moments in each other's arms. Several husbands and wives seem to have met their fate locked in each other's arms; whilst parents clung to their beloved children,—several mothers it is said, having perished with their dear little ones firmly clasped in their arms. A party of the passengers, about fifteen or twenty, lowered the boat and crowded into it. It was impossible for any open boat to live in such a sea, even though not overloaded, and she immediately swamped and went to the bottom, with all who had made this last hopeless effort for self-preservation.

For some time the vessel, though now irrecoverably lost, continued to resist the action of the waves, and the despairing souls on board still struggled with their doom. But hope had forever fled; the packet was beaten and tossed about by the tumultuous waves with a violence which threatened to dash her into fragments at every shock, and the sea now made a continual breach over her. The decks were repeatedly swept by the boiling ocean, and each billow snatched its victims to a watery grave. The unfortunate captain and his mate were among the first that perished. About thirty or forty passengers were standing upon the poop clinging to each other in hopeless agony, and occasionally uttering the most piteous ejaculations. Whilst trembling thus upon the brink of destruction, and expecting every moment to share the fate which had already overtaken so many of their companions in misery, the poop was discovered to give way; another wave rolled on with impetuous fury, and the hinder part of the luckless vessel, with all who sought safety in its frail support, was burst away from its shattered counterpart, and about forty wretched beings hurried through the foaming flood into an eternal world.

"Then rose from sea to sky the wild farewell,
Then shrieked the timid, and stood still the brave."

Those who retained any degree of sensibility endeavored to catch at whatever was floating within their reach, with the vain hope of prolonging their lives, though it was certain that life could only lengthen their sufferings. Many grasped with frantic despair, at the slightest object they could find, but were either too weak to retain their hold, or forced to relinquish their grasp by the raging of the surge. The rudder was seized by eight of the sinking creatures at the same time, and some of them, we are happy to add, were ultimately preserved. The number of those who clung to the portion of the wreck which remained upon the bank gradually grew thinner and thinner, as they sunk under their fatigues, or were hurled into the deep by the remorseless waves. At length, about an hour and a half from the time when she struck, the remnant of the Rothsay Castle disappeared from the bosom of the ocean, and the remainder of her passengers and crew were precipitated into the foaming abyss.

The following is extracted from the statement of one of those who were saved, James Martin: (Mark Metcalf, his friend it will be seen was lost.) The whole 22 were saved in a similar manner, except two picked up by a pleasure boat:—

Observing several individuals on a plank, which reached across the vessel and rested on the paddle-boxes on each side, upon this plank I endeavoured to get, and, after some effort, succeeded. I then exhorted Mark to try and do the same; he made several attempts, but failed through want of strength. He then got near one of the paddle-boxes, and laid hold of the iron under the plank; there were a great number of persons in a similar situation, holding on by the iron. I was situated just over him, and had frequent opportunities of conversing with him. The waves were continually dashing over us with great impetuosity, sweeping away the passengers at every stroke. A short interval of ease occurred, and I looked for my friend; I found him still at his post, clinging to the iron. I asked him had he a firm grip. He answered 'Yes; but I am nearly exhausted.' At this period, all the passengers who had previous hold of the iron which was under the plank, had disappeared, from the violence of the breakers, except my friend Metcalf and another person. A short time only had elapsed, and I saw the latter carried away by a dreadful wave towards the paddle-box, poor Metcalf exclaiming, 'James, I'm afraid it's all over!' I replied, 'O! Mark, Mark! lay hold of the paddle-box!' He then attempted to do so, and I saw his right hand laying hold, when another wave came, and swept him right away. 'O! James,' said he, as he was carried into the sea, 'it's all over now!' I then saw him throw back his hands over his shoulders, and in great anguish I exclaimed, 'O! my friend, my friend! I shall see him no more!' I commended him to God, he disappeared, and I saw him no more. Shortly afterwards, the plank on which I myself and about twenty other persons were situated gave way, and we were all precipitated into the deep, in the midst of the breakers. I rose to the top of the surge, and struck out my arms, in the hope of laying hold of some floating substance, when I providentially grasped the identical plank by which I had just before been launched into the sea. On recovering from the stupor of the moment, I discovered two others who had hold of the same plank; one of them was without clothes. We were not long in getting into smooth water, and the tide was taking us on to Beaumaris. The naked person, after some floating, disappeared, and shortly afterwards the other individual, leaving me alone with the plank.—As I was thus struggling and floating, I bethought me it would be much easier for me to get on the plank; I accordingly made an effort, and succeeded, after which I found myself greatly relieved; my chief fear now was, that the tide would turn before any one could perceive me, and that I might thus be carried back and left after all. These and similar reflections occupied my mind whilst in this perilous situation when, casting a longing look towards Beaumaris, I descried two individuals upon a log of wood, floating in the same direction as myself. Presently I came in sight of Beaumaris harbour, could see several boats, and perceived chimneys smoking. A strong hope now sprung up in my breast; and, on looking after my fellow sufferers on the log, I discovered only one, the other having met with a watery grave. Now I could distinctly see boats passing to and fro, at a considerable distance, near to Beaumaris. I shouted, in the hope that some one might hear me; and, finding a small spar with a spike, I endeavoured to secure it, and succeeded. To this spike I affixed my handkerchief, waving it over my head, and shouting with all the strength of my lungs. Presently I perceived a boat making towards me, and was satisfied, by the cheers of the boatmen, that my distress was perceived, and that relief was at hand, which, I need hardly say, truly gladdened my heart: in this I was happily not deceived, for the boat was brought alongside, and I was pulled in, being the second rescued, one having been taken into the boat before me. I then informed the men of the individual on the log; they immediately pulled away in the direction pointed out by me, and we secured him, almost in the last stage of human existence. We were then taken to Beaumaris, where we arrived about half-past eight, praising God for the wonderful deliverance he had thus wrought out for us. To his name be the praise!"

From the statement in the Liverpool papers, there remains but little doubt, that this tremendous accident and loss of lives is justly ascribable to the conduct of the captain, after dinner, which is sufficiently intelligible to mean, that he was under the influence of liquor. One hundred human beings sent into the presence of their God, with perhaps as little preparation, as any similar group of men, women, and children; as they were quite all made up of parties of pleasure! One party from Bury, enumerated 26 persons, all lost but two.

On the evening succeeding, the affair of the loss of the Rothsay Castle was brought before Parliament, by Col. Sibthorp who observed that he had lost two relatives on the melancholy occasion. Col. S. expressed a hope that Ministers would bring forward an enactment for the purpose of preventing the occurrence of such circumstances in future, by summarily punishing the proprietors or owners of steam vessels by fine or imprisonment where such accidents are the result of wilful negligence, and also enacting that the captain or any of the crew who should survive in such cases, should have a summary punishment imposed upon them for drunkenness, or any other wilful error with respect to the management of the vessel.

DIED.

In this village on Sunday last, Mr. Benjamin Lurvy aged 39, formerly from Portsmouth, N. H.—On the 1st inst. Eliza Ann, daughter of Mr. Wm. Pitkin, aged 8 years.

In the city of New-York, Oct. 5th, Mr. Leonard H. Clapp of Pittsford, aged 35.

At Ellicottville, Cat. co. July 28th, Mrs. Margaret Rust, wife of Mr. Justin Rust aged 64.

In Brighton, Sept 24th, Doct. Josiah Gale, son of Henry Gale, aged 38 years.

At Perrinton at the residence of her brother, where she had been a few days, Mrs. Parmelia Jones, aged 54, wife of Isaac Jones of this village.

Suddenly at Carlisle, on the 29th ult. Hon. William Ramsay, one of the members of Congress of Pennsylvania.

At Rensselaerville, on the 4th inst. after an illness of about two hours, Asa Colyard, Esq. Sheriff of the city and county of Albany.

At Ellicottville, recently, Henry Wooster, Esq. Sheriff of Cattaraugus co., aged 43 years.

In this village, on Thursday last, Eli Blair, aged 40 years, and Abby his wife, aged 35 years.

The circumstances connected with the death of these individuals, were very peculiar.—They were both taken sick on the same day—with the same disease—and died within seven hours of each other. Mr. Blair was taken unwell in New-York, and returned home sick. At the time of his arrival, he found his wife in much the same state of disease, as himself. Soon after, they were both confined to their beds, from which, after a few days of suffering, they were removed to the same grave. Their funerals were attended on Saturday last and we have never witnessed a more affecting spectacle.—W. (Lyons) Argus.

At Henrietta on the 11th inst., Mrs. Civil P., wife of Mr. Gurdon Ellis, aged 34. Mrs. E. was one of the many who during the season of general revival in this vicinity the last winter, became experimentally acquainted with the religion of Jesus Christ. Its consolations she enjoyed in her last illness and in the firm hope of a blessed immortality she could cheerfully leave her little ones with her afflicted partner to follow her. Her anxious solicitude for the spiritual welfare of her surviving friends, and the affecting desire she expressed (though in vain) to be enabled to communicate her feelings to them were calculated to produce a permanent impression upon their mind. Though dead she yet speaketh.

CONTENTS

Of the Museum of Foreign Literature, Science and Art, for September.—Published every month, by E. Littell, No. 219 Market Street, Philadelphia.

Plate—John Galt, Esq. Poland under Sobieski. Whale Fishery. The late Mr. Abernethy. Song by Mrs. Hemans. The Disinterred Warrior. French Colonization of Algiers. German Manners in the Sixteenth Century. Libraries of Celebrated Literary Men. Remarks on the Personal History of Shakespeare. The Hypochondriac. Jeanna Baillie. Henri Gregoire, late Bishop of Blois. Death of Petronius Arbiter. The Loved One's Slumber. Present State of Egypt. Poland. Grand Duke Cesarowitch Constantine. Tu Modalina. The State of Europe. Song. The Bell of St. Regis. The "Spirit of the Movement." Borelli and Monotti. Don Pedro, and the Brazilian Revolution.—The Sepulchre. The Magdalen. Spring. Progress of Evening. Navigation of the Mississippi. Sir Edward Seaward's Narrative. Stanzas. The Oak Tree. Skirmish in Persia. American Lion and Deer Hunting. Varieties—Errors respecting the Sensibility of Inferior Animals—Queen Elizabeth's Navy—Stamp Duty on Receipts—Turtle Catchers on the Coast of Darien—Buried Love—Settlement of the Portuguese in China—Diamonds—Mode of Burial in Wales—The Dutchess Abrantes—Mexican Bees—The Human Voice—Augustus Lafontaine—Pressure of Sand against Walls—An Extraordinary Wet Nurse. Literary Intelligence.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Genesee County Temperance Society, will take place at Le Roy on Tuesday the 25th of October, at 2 o'clock P. M. Delegates from Auxiliaries are requested to attend. Hon. John B. Skinner is expected to deliver the address. By order of the Board,

Mt. Morris, Oct. 8th, 1831. J. B. WILCOX, Secretary.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 10	Moose, lb.	$1 to 1
Flour, bbl.	5 25	Potatoes,	20
Corn,	50	Butter, lb.	12
Oats,	20	Lard,	8
Beef, fresh	2 to 3	Eggs, doz.	12
Pork, do. bl.	12	Cider, bbl.	1 50
Salt, bush.	62

Rochester price Pot ashes 100 lbs 105 lbs—Pearls 105 a 115

NOTICE.—Those Subscribers for the New York Evangelist the past year, are informed that by leaving their dues at the office of C. J. Hill within a few days, they will save the proprietors the expense of sending an agent to their dwellings.—Those who wish to pay at once for the past and the current year will find their account in so doing.

October 6, 1831. 2w41.

BARLEY.—The Subscribers will pay Cash for 500 Bushels prime quality Barley delivered at their Store.

ROSSITER & KNOX.

Rochester, Oct. 1831. 3w41.

Rochester Chemical Manufactory
AND
New Drugs & Medicine Establishment.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the public generally, and Physicians in particular, that he has recently connected with the Rochester Chemical Manufactory a full assortment of carefully selected to which he invites the attention of purchasers both by wholesale and retail.

DRUGS & MEDICINE,

Dealers are desired to take particular notice that all the varieties of approved patent and certified Family Medicine now in use will be furnished at the lowest New York Factory Prices, and that every reasonable inducement will be offered for purchasing at this Western Establishment in addition to saving of transportation, risk of brenkage, &c. &c.

All orders for Drugs and Medicine, operative Surgical and Dentist Instruments, Infirmary apparatus, ordinary and extraordinary, executed with promptness and care, by

LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,
At the Sign of the Alligator, No. 11, Carroll-st.
41tf

REMOVAL.

WILLIAMS & MERRILL, Dealers in Leather, Hides, Oil, &c. would inform their friends and the public that they have removed from their old stand on Mason St. to No. 16 in the Globe Building where they have now on hand a large stock of Leather, Hides, Oil, Curriers Tools, &c. &c. which they expect soon to replenish, and will be happy to wait on their old friends and customers, & as many new ones as shall be pleased to call on them, assuring them that they will sell as cheap as the cheapest.

N. B. The highest price in Cash always paid for Hides and Calf Skins. 3m41

SILAS SMITH, Physician, Surgeon, and Dentist, Office No. 7, Carroll-st. Rochester, Aug. 24, 1831. 35 2m

JUST Published the TEMPERANCE ALMANAC, FOR 1832,

containing, besides the astronomical matter, many useful hints, friendly admonitions, and solemn warnings, on the subject of Intemperance. Also,

THE CHRISTIAN ALMANAC,
FOR 1832,

for sale by the thousand or less quantity, by
4w41 HOYT, PORTER, & Co.

SELECT SCHOOL.—I intend to open a School on Monday the 17th of Oct. next, in the Franklin House, on the corner of St. Paul and Main Sts. in East Rochester, where every attention will be given to the progress of such students as think proper to attend.—Visitors welcome at all times when the school is in session.

S. D. MOOR.

Rochester, Sept. 28, 1831. 4w41

PERMANENT DENTIST OFFICE.

J. S. Ware, and Dr. S. SMITH, Surgeon Dentist at No. 7, Carroll-st., respectfully tender their services to the public.

They make use of natural and artificial teeth of the finest quality, which being rightly prepared, will retain their beauty for years; whole sets can be inserted on reasonable notice.

The utmost attention will be given to the preservation of decaying teeth and every other branch of their profession, and they trust, that by executing all their work in a careful, scientific and durable manner, to merit and receive the patronage of the Ladies and Gentlemen of Rochester and its vicinity.

Their charges are reasonable and as their office is permanent, they will with pleasure at any time make good whatever work of theirs may chance to fail. 38 tf.

FANCY DYING.

Neither from Dublin nor London.

H. YOUNG, lately from the city of Glasgow, has taken the stand formerly occupied by Mr. Kinchella, at the west end of Curtiss' Stone Building, Main-St.

H. Y. respectfully informs the citizens of Rochester and its vicinity that he has commenced dyeing and dressing all qualities of Silk, Crapes, Ponges, Bombazine, &c. &c. Likewise woollen, linen and cotton goods—Clouded woollen yarn for Stockings any color wanted, kept on hand. Carpet, or fine worsted yarn, dyed to any pattern.

N. B. Merino Shawls cleaned. Ladies and Gentlemen's wearing apparels cleaned and renovated in the first style.—Reward Merit. 38 6m

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the N. Y. Obs.

FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN NEW-YORK.

Last Sabbath Rev. Joel Parker preached in Masonic Hall, to a crowded audience, an anniversary sermon, it being a year since the organization of his church. The text was I. Sam. vii. 12. He glanced at the principal incidents in the history of this church, contemplated the measure of its success, and inquired why only just such a measure of success has attended the efforts made. It may be interesting to the friends of this christian enterprise, to see some particulars of the Free Church, as noticed by the pastor.

The congregation commenced its existence on the 28th of June, 1830. It primarily consisted of four families. They met in the Lecture-Room in Thames-street, formerly belonging to Rev. Dr. Romeyn's church. A church was organized on the 22d of Sept. 1830, by a commission from the Presbytery of New-York, consisting of sixteen members. The congregation increased from forty to three hundred and fifty persons, in the course of a few months, and it became necessary to procure a larger room. Masonic Hall was hired, and since the 20th of February last the congregation have assembled there, consisting of 800 to 1200 persons.

The weekly services have been as follows, three services on the Sabbath; a prayer meeting and an inquiry meeting, at a private house, eve. Monday evening; a meeting on Tuesday evening for session to converse with new converts; a lecture on Wednesday evening, neighborhood prayer meetings on Thursday evening, generally at four to six places; Bible instruction to the congregation on Friday evenings; and a prayer meeting on Saturday evening. The Lord's Supper is administered the third Sabbath in every month. The previous Wednesday is observed as a fast day by the church. Since January last, morning prayer meetings have been held every morning. Candidates for admission to the church, by letter or profession, are examined by the session publicly. Besides the confession of Faith and Covenant, they are required to assent to a declaration that they will not manufacture, vend or use distilled spirits. A prayer meeting is held every sabbath morning by the teachers of the Sabbath school: and the young men and females of the church hold separate prayer meetings every week.

There have been added to the church 189 persons; 121 of them by profession of their faith. The whole number is now 205; of which 79 are males and 126 females. Several young converts have united with other churches in the city. Six young men, hopefully converted, are studying with reference to the ministry. Each member of the church keeps a catalogue of the members, and prays for them successively every day, agreeably to the practice of Rev. Cotton Mather.

There have been enrolled in the Sabbath school 477 scholars and 83 teachers, of whom 95 teachers and scholars have been hopefully converted, 85 of whom have joined the church. There are now in the school 305 scholars; and 55 teachers—including six Bible classes. Several of the members of the bible classes have gone to assist in teaching in other Sabbath schools. The teachers hold a monthly meeting for prayer, receiving reports of the classes and discussing measures for the welfare of the school. A branch school was established last March, in another part of the city, which now consists of 10 teachers and 112 scholars. Twelve of the scholars have been hopefully converted.

The expenses of public worship have been defrayed by collections in boxes placed at the doors. All the members of the church contribute weekly as the Lord has prospered them. The collections at monthly concerts have averaged about $40.

A meeting house is nearly fitted up, corner of Dey and Washington sts., 60 by 70 feet, with galleries, capable of seating, 1,000 persons. The basement story is left for stores, which rent for the interest of the whole purchase money. The cost of fitting the chambers into a meeting house will not exceed $6,500 which will be raised by subscription, by the congregation and those who have occasionally attended public worship with them. The seats are all to be free.

Measures have been taken by this church to organize a new church, styled the Second Free Presbyterian Church, and to elect a pastor. A portion of the first church will be colonized, and public worship will be held at Masonic Hall after the Rev. Mr. Parker's congregation take possession of their new house of worship.

In view of the above well may this church thankfully exclaim, This is the Lord's doing it is marvellous in our eyes. And, with deep humility, under a sense of unprofitableness, remissness in duty, it becomes them to say, Not unto us, oh Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

From the North Star.

TEMPTATION.

The following striking remarks are from a sermon of the Rev. C. Wolf, a late devoted young minister, who spent several years of his short life in preaching with great effect in an obscure part of Ireland:—

"The only thing to which men do not appear to be naturally alive and awake, is the state of their immortal souls. They are in the midst of temptations every hour of their lives; and they appear at home when surrounded by their enemies. There is no alarm, no watchfulness.—They watch against other things—against poverty, sickness and robbery. This state the Scriptures describe to be a kind of watchful sleep, and when the word of God summons the world to salvation by Christ, it says, 'Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give the light. And again, 'Awake to righteousness, and sin not.' How many of those who call themselves the disciples of Christ are sleeping this day in security, as if they had no Master that watched, and prayed, and bled, and died for them all! Where is temptation not to be found? In what shape does it not appear! Under what disguise does it not present itself! And what means does it not employ to ruin our salvation! It meets us in the market places, and thrusts itself into our bargains; it offers gold, it offers silver; it leads us into the house of riot and intemperance; it brings wine and goblets, and says, 'Eat and drink for to-morrow you die;' it turns us from men to beasts, and having deprived us of our senses and our reason, it puts the weapon into our hand, bids us to commit violence and murder; it sits at our sides at our meals, and joins in our conversations; it creeps in our minds; and poisons our thoughts; it puts venom and impurity upon our tongues; it hides our Bibles from us, or it shuts them when we open them. Sometimes it crosses our path like a serpent: sometimes it steals upon us like a thief; sometimes it comes muffled as a friend: sometimes it rushes upon us like an assassin. 'It is about our path and about our bed, and spieth out all our ways:'—how, then, shall any man, pretend to say, that he is to sit still and sleep, and that every power of his soul is not to be in arms, with such a spectre as this following him through life!"

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the Sabbath School Visitor.

SABBATH SCHOLARS CONVERTED.

Children let me tell you something more. In this state, there are more than twenty-five thousand who attend Sabbath schools. And there are a large number of youth and children among them, who have become hopeful christians. In one town, fourteen children and more than forty youth hope their sins are forgiven. In another town about fifty children, and more than seventy youth. In another town, sixty persons belonging the Sabbath School indulge hope.

In one town the children had prayer meetings. A good man used to go in and take the lead of these meetings. But the children were not satisfied with that. They used to pray when they were alone. And sometimes the boys would mention a little meeting, and three or four, and sometimes more than a dozen boys would get together. And they would pray and talk, and sing. One time the boys went into a barn and made seats and a little pulpit at one end of the floor, and left it. Shortly after a very good man went into the barn for something and saw it. He inquired of some children about the preparation in the barn. And they told him they had a three days' meeting appointed for the children. But this man told them he loved to have them pray. "But," said he "if you meet without some man with you I fear you will have disorder. Some bad boys may go in and get you into trouble. Now" said he "when you want a meeting, let your superintendent meet with you in some house." And the boys loved that good man for his advice, and ever after did accordingly. One little boy got up in a children's meeting and told his experience. He said when he learned this verse, "Swear not at all," he felt very bad. He said he had used some naughty words. And he felt that God remembered it. And he said that was the first thing that made him serious. One young lady, in another meeting, said she loved the Sabbath School, for this had benefitted her more than any other school; for there, she said, she formed a taste for reading, and there she became serious. Another little boy said he should love the Sabbath school as long as he lived. One day a pious school teacher went into her school, and saw a little boy on his knees. She asked a child who was very still beside him, what the boy was doing; for she could not understand what he said. "He is praising God," said the child. O how lovely a sight to see little Sabbath school children meet a teacher in a quiet room to hear him talk and pray. How lovely to hear the children sing their little hymns.

"Permit them to approach, he cries,
"Nor scorn their humble name;
"For 'twas to bless such souls as these,
"The Lord of angels came."

CHILDREN'S MINISTER.

From the S. S. Instructer

FALLACIOUS REASONING.

There is a mode of reasoning among parents, the fallacy of which, is observable to every thinking mind. It is this. When parents are conversed with, respecting the conduct and religious views of their children, they are apt to say, "I know my child is a bad boy now, but he will outgrow all his evil propensities in a few years," or, "I do not expect him to conduct better, young as he is, but probably before he is two or three years older, we shall see a manifest change in him," or, "If he is not converted now, he may be by and by." Strange as it may appear, such language is common.—But how do parents know that their children will live to see another year! And should their lives be prolonged, will not their hearts be more abdurate and unfeeling! Will not religious instruction be less likely to result in their conversion, years hence, than at the present time! You know, and so does every body know, that,

"Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

And who have more command over the rising generation than yourselves! Who else have the power to say to them, do this, and they will do it! And yet parents, even professedly Christian parents, are neglecting the early cultivation of the minds of their children in religious knowledge; while by example, and often by precept, they are feeding their pride, and fostering their vanity, by teaching them in the false philosophy of the fashionable worldling, that a fair exterior and superficial accomplishments, are the only securities to a life of respectability and honor. It is a lamentable fact, over which angels might weep, that parents, almost universally, care more about the fine outward appearances, and genteel manners of their offspring, than they do about their possessing that inward adorning of the mind, that will secure for them a seat among the blessed, long after the fashions of this world shall have passed away. How great the weight of responsibility resting upon parents!—but how little realized!

MOST HORRIBLE CANNIBALISM IN NEW-ZEALAND.

The Tasmanian Journal [published in Hobart Town,] of the 21st January last, contains a narrative of some truly terrific scenes, related to the editor of that paper by a highly respectable and intelligent eye-witness, Capt. Briggs. About the middle of last year, Capt. Briggs arrived in the Dragon, at New-Zealand, and found that a great deal of animosity existed between two savage tribes, one of which was commanded by a chief called the Marinewie, and the other by two chiefs called the Robulloh, and the Hecho. On Capt. Briggs' arrival, the two latter chieftains "endeavored [says the Tasmanian Journal] to induce him to accompany them in an expedition which they had been for some months preparing against the Marinewie. Capt. Briggs, however, peremptorily refused to be associated in the horrid enterprise. Not so the commander of another British vessel, which happened just then to arrive upon a trading voyage. She was a fine brig of 300 tons, whose name, and that of the commander, we forbear, for the present, to insert. The two chiefs agreed with this person that his ship should convey them and their people to the country of the Marinewie, where the war was carried on to utter extermination. On the 23d of October of the last year, the expedition sailed; there was a fine fleet of war canoes, and two chiefs, with about one hundred piked warriors on board the English brig. Capt. Briggs remained at the anchorage, procuring, by the usual means of barter, a cargo for his vessel. On the 11th November, the expedition returned, having been entirely successful. The Marinewie had been taken by surprise, his whole people destroyed, except such as fled into the interior, beyond the reach of pursuit, and himself, his wife, and his daughter, a beautiful girl of 15, taken prisoners. The Captain of the English vessel stated that, on their arrival at Bank's Harbour, the Hecho and the Robulloh had caused all their people to conceal themselves below; that the Marinewie sent immediately on board to negotiate for trading, which he of course supposed was the object of the Englishman's arrival. The trade commenced, and he, the Marinewie, not suspecting the fate which awaited him, went himself on board. After he had been seated in the cabin a short time, the Hecho and Robulloh jumped upon him from their places of concealment, as did their people upon all who attended him on board, and, seizing him by the hair, explained to him his fate. Chiefs, priests, and slaves, in succession, then commenced a scene of butchery and cannibalism which we have no disposition to describe. During the night, the Robulloh, the Hecho, and their men landed from the ship, and having succeeded in capturing the wife and daughter of the Marinewie, they sent them on board, and a work of death ensued, utterly unspeakable or indescribable, for the horrible cruelties which were perpetrated. The whole population of the place who did not escape were killed, except about fifty, reserved to be taken back to be sacrificed at the bloody feast of triumph which awaited their return. At day light in the morning, the victors were actively employed in cutting up, and preparing for the steam kettle, the dead bodies of the slaughtered victims of the night. The crew of the vessel described the horrors which they witnessed as beyond every thing dreadful. The whole of the day was occupied in salting and packing in baskets, heads and bodies to be conveyed back. Amongst the victims was a fine young woman, who was cut open, her head and part of her body salted, and the remainder, in the presence of the captain, officers, and the whole crew of the British ship, given to the pigs, which they themselves feed on!

On the 11th November, in the morning, the brig having arrived with her cargo of human flesh, living and dead, at about 11 A. M. the prisoners were landed and ranged, seated on the beach; their conquerors having brought on shore in baskets, the salted bodies of the victims of their ferocity. Each basket is of sufficient size to hold a human body cut up in pieces; of these were, according to Capt. Briggs' calculation, about one hundred. The war dance then commenced. It is the most frightful method of rejoicing of which the human mind can convey to itself an idea. The warriors entirely naked—their long black hair, although matted with human gore, yet flowing partially in the wind—in the left hand a human head—in the right a bayonetted musket, held by the middle of the barrel.—Thus with a song, the terrible expression of which only can be imagined by being heard, did they dance round their wretched victims—every now and then again threatening death under its most horrible form of lingering torture! But they did not inflict it. None of them were killed. All were apportioned, among the conquering warriors, as slaves, one old man and a little boy excepted, who were sentenced to be sacrificed to their demon of vengeance. The feast was then prepared, at which these two victims were to be killed and eaten. It consisted of about one hundred baskets of potatoes, and a sort of green vegetable of delicious flavor, and equal quantities of whale blubber and human flesh! Every thing being arranged, the poor old man was brought forth horribly accoutred for death, having affixed round his neck the head of his son, whose body formed a part of the infernal banquet then exhibited. Here, for the first time, to the disgrace of the female character, a few women appeared. Some few, wives or mothers, whose husbands or whose sons had been in their turn killed and eaten, approached the poor old man, and plucking the hair of his head, and his beard, pricking him with the teeth of some fish or animal, inflicted upon him every possible bodily toture, while the inventions of the demonical countrymen were doing their utmost to agonize his mind! Capt. Briggs, who witnessed all this, determined to save this poor man's life and that of the boy who was also to be sacrificed, if such could be done by either force or price. The boy was brought forth to die. A man had the axe extended over his head and was about to cleave it in twain, when Capt. Briggs, at a hazard which may be easily understood, seized him, and by threats & entreaties, the risk of which, at such a time, he cannot now contemplate without shuddering, obtained the life of the boy altogether, and that of the old man for the time! The next day he was taken to another place, where his doom was sealed with every circumstance of horror and atrocity. The boy still lives. Capt. Briggs paid the ransom of his life in muskets and gun powder. He conveyed him in safety to his ship, and he is now here, in Hobart Town, gratefully acknowledging his obligations to the worthy man who saved him from death.

In the mean time the bloody banquet went on, the Hecho, the Robulloh, and the rest, devouring the contents of the baskets we have described with the greatest delight. The manner in which the bodies had been salted, at nearly the hottest season of the year, had been too imperfect to prevent the process of decomposition from proceeding to so considerable extent, that the worms crawled upon the putrid flesh as it was devoured. It was a horrible sight. Capt. Briggs had the curiosity to open one of the baskets which was near him. It contained the head and body of a beautiful young female. One of the officers of the ship who was with him, had resolution enough to dissect the breast away with his penknife; he wrapt it up in a handkerchief, took it on board the Dragon, put it into spirits, and presented it to a gentleman in Hobart Town, in whose possession it now is.

"While this dreadful scene was going on, the Marinewie was confined in irons in the fore cabin of the English brig, of which we have spoken. On the passage from Bank's Harbour to Cook's Straight, this chieftain and his wife, well knowing the dreadful tortures which awaited them from their ferocious enemies, took an effectual method of preventing their daughter from undergoing the sufferings to which they knew she was destined: they strangled her. The Capt. then placed both the Marinewie and his wife in irons, to prevent them from destroying themselves.—They were landed on the 12th of November by the Robulloh, and conveyed some short distance into the interior. Capt. Briggs was not able to ascertain their fate; but we understand that it was intended, that after they had been despatched with all the torture usual in such cases, the heart of Marinewie should be sent to be eaten by the Hecho's mother, the widow of the Payie, who had been eaten by the Marinewie, that the Robulloh should eat his brains, the Hecho his eyes, the Hecho's sister his tongue, and that the rest of his body should be sent as presents to the chiefs of the interior!!!

PROVIDENTIAL DELIVERANCE.

Too little attention is often paid to the tokens of divine providence. Though the Lord often speaks to man in visions of the night when deep sleep falleth on him, yet is he inattentive and reckless. The following narrative illustrates the truth of our remark.—Chris. Index.

"Mr. Tyerman preached in the morning of July 20th, 1821, when we were sailing off Cape Horn; from Psalm cxxi. 4. "Behold, He that keepeth Israel, shall neither slumber nor sleep." At the close of his discourse, he mentioned the following circumstance;—Yesterday was the anniversary of a great and very remarkable deliverance which I experienced in the year 1793. At that time, I was intimate with several young men as gay and trifling as myself; and we frequently spent our Sabbaths in pleasure on the Thames. Early in the week, on the occasion referred too, I, and four others had planned a Sunday party down the river; to make the most of it, we agreed to embark on Saturday afternoon, and to proceed to Gravesend. On Friday night when I lay down to rest, a transient misgiving, whether it was right so to profane the Sabbath of the Lord, gave me a little uneasiness; but I overcame the monitory feeling and fell asleep. On Saturday morning when I awoke, the thought again came upon me, but again I resisted it, and resolved to meet my companions in the afternoon. I was about to rise; but while I mused, I fell asleep again and dreamed. I thought myself in a certain place, whether divine Providence had often led me at that season of my life. Here a gentleman called me to him, saying that he had a letter for me, which I went to receive at his hand. When I reached him, he had opened the enclosure, and appeared to be reading the contents. I imagined then that I looked over his shoulder, and perceived that the letter was closly written; but a pen had been drawn through every line, and had obliterated all the words.—Wondering what this could mean, I was going to take hold of the letter, when a large black seal presented itself to my sight, and so startled me, that forthwith I awoke, with this sentence upon my mind, "You shall not go!" Though I had never been in any way superstitious regarding dreams, this so affected me, and the words, "You shall not go," seemed so perpetually sounding in my ears, and haunting my imagination, that I determined to be obedient, and not go; persuaded that some evil would befal me if I did. I spent that day and the two following, with great anguish and anxiety, expecting hourly, to hear something that would explain this singular presentiment. No tidings, however, arrived till Tuesday morning, when I read in a newspaper, the following paragraph:—"Last Sunday, in the afternoon as four young gentlemen, a waterman, a boy belonging to Mr. ——, of Wapping, was coming up the river in Bugbey's hole, a little below Blackwall, a gust of wind upset the boat and all on board perished." That was the identical boat on which I was to have embarked. I could scarsely believe my eyes. I read the paragraph again and again. There it was, and there it remained, speaking the same words. I cannot express my horror and consternation of mind. I was constrained to exclaim, "This is the finger of God! Who am I, that God should in so wonderful a manner interpose for my deliverance! what a warning against Sabbath breaking!—What a call to devote myself to the service of the Lord!" A warning which I took, and a call which I humbly hope I was thenceforward enabled to obey. "For God speaketh once, yea twice; yet man perceiveth it not. In a dream in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon man, in slumberings upon the bed; then He openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction, that He may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man. He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing." (Job xxxiii. 14, 18.(—Tyerman's and Bennet's Voyages.

INCREASE OF PUBLIC CRIME.

The Massacre in Southampton Co. Virginia, and the repeated Riots and Murders in Providence, R. I. which have recently occured, bear some fearful resemblance to the tumults and disorders in Europe, of which we are accustomed to hear. They are alarming occurrences, warning us of the dangers incident equally to republics as to monarchies. They loudly tell us, that misery is inseparable from sin, both to nations and to individuals. As our country increases in its population, and especially as that increase shall arise from the ignorant and superstitious part of the population of Europe, our perils as a community will augment. We cannot but observe the difference of moral feeling with which these criminal disorders are now spoken of and viewed by the public, from what they formerly were. Massacres, duels in cold blood, riots, and murders, would formerly spread over the minds of the people a universal sensation of detestation & horror. Now, the facts seem to be but cursorily spoken of and alluded to, but speedily forgotten. We fear that crime, and insensibility of its evil, will mark us as a people to be signally punished, unless education and moral instruction shall more adequately keep pace with the rapidly augmenting number of our inhabitants. A southern paper states, that the whole number of lives sacrificed in the Southampton tragedy is about 110 or 112. The whites massacred were 64, and about 30 or 35 blacks are estimated to have been shot down by the troops called out to quell the insurrection. One militia man was killed in a rencontre, and 12 blacks have now been probably executed.—Chr. Watchman.

A NEW CREATURE.—"Several chiefs of this district have waited upon us with presents of fruits and hogs. Among these, was one named Manabuaa, or pig-owner. His office under the idolatrous system, was to provide human sacrifices, when the king required such from this neighborhood. With a stone, or other weapon, he used to spring upon his selected victim unawares, and, when slaughtered, he packed the body in cocoa-leaf baskets, and delivered them to be hung up, according to custom, upon sacred trees around the marues of Oro. This man has slain many for such offerings. He is now a member of a Christian church, and to all appearance 'a new creature."—Tyerman's and Bennets Voyages.

A HORN-SNAKE was killed a few days since in the neighborhood of this town. We had regarded the existence of such a snake as fabulous; and as others may be under the same impression a brief description of this one may be acceptable to many. The snake measures nearly six feet in length, and is somewhat slenderly proportioned; its scales are quite hard, and form along the back large dark brown spots set in a broad chain of white; along the sides there is a slight mixture of red. The horn is in the tail, and appears rather insignificant, but when the snake is enraged no doubt it enlarges considerably. This reptile is said to strike over its head, by throwing itself in the form of a hoop. The black man who killed the one just described, says it struck at him in this manner, but missing its aim, the horn entered a stump, and held it fast until h despatched it.—Staunton Spectator.

A young ungrounded Christian, when he seeth all the fundamental truths, & seeth good evidence and reasons of them, perhaps may yet be ignorant of the right order and place of every truth. It is a rare thing to have young professors to understand the necessary truths methodically; and this is a very great defect. For a great part of the usefulness and excellency of particular truths consisteth in the respect they have one to another.—Flaver.

"It would be easy to prove," says Humbolt, "that the whole Archipelago of the West Indies, which now, scarcely comprises 2,400,000 negroes and mullattoes, (free and slaves) received from 1670, to 1825, nearly five millions of Africans! In these revolting calculations on the consumption of the human species, we have not included the number of unfortunate slaves who have perished in the passage, or been thrown into the sea as damaged merchandise."

PROGRESS OF REFORM.—But fifty-four cases were entered at the last session of the Court of Common Pleas in Hampshire County, Mass. These cases were to be divided among thirty-two Lawyers. In former times, a single lawyer had entered a larger number at one session. We guess folks in Hampshire Co. do'nt drink so much ardent spirit as they used to.—Jour. of Humanity.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. he subscriber as Agent for the above, mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Job Northrop deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on me for settlement within six months from date.—Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.

6m 38.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. Mc'Coy & Co., begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an eleg'nt assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets, &c comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. tf.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For sale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber.
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eaves-Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY.

Rochester, june 15, 1831. 25tf

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware, Communon setts. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.

Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.

May 5, 1831.

20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ROCHESTER BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes. Chochineal, smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella, of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. JACOB GOULD.

22tf

C. J. HILL,

HAVING taken the Stone Flouring Mills near the east end of the Bridge, and established himself in the Flouring business, has removed his Office to the Brick Building (opposite the mills) recently occupied by Messrs Ford, Bissell &co., where he will at all times pay Cash for Wheat.

Rochester, 20th Sept. 1831. 39 tf

DISSOLUTION.—The firm of Bloss & Harrison is dissolved by mutual consent. All persons owing said firm by note Book account or otherwise, are requested to call and settle with J. B. Bloss, to whom all the accounts are assigned, and who will pay all demands against said firm.

J. B. BLOSS,
M. A. F. HARRISON.

The subscriber still continues the business, where any calls in the Dry Good and Grocery line, will be promptly attended to, and Cash thankfully received. J. B. BLOSS.

February 7, 1831. tf.

SCOTT's & HENRY's Commentary. Persons by uniting may obtain them by immediate application at the Wholesale Price. Inquire of MITCHELL LODER,

No. 34 Exchange-street, or
Mr. SIBLEY's Auction Store, Buffalo st. 33tf

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty;—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fenwick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,

At the sign of the alligator, No. 11 Carroll-st.

6w36

NEW GOODS.

At No. 46,—Carroll-Street.

W. BARRON WILLIAMS, has just received a well selected stock of fresh SPRING GOODS, which will be sold low for Money. 19tf

8d, 1831.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

Sir—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Sec'ry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, Sheriff.

Rochester, Sept. 20th, 1831. 7w3t.

BY virtue of one Execution issued out of the court of Common Pleas, in and for the county of Monroe and to me directed against the Goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen B. Bartlett, I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz: all those certain pieces of land, situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe being—one lot, lying near the great falls of the Genesee River, beginning at the N. W. corner of village lot, No. 104—three chains northerly from the S. W. corner of village lot No. 102, on the corner of Atwater and Clyde street and running from thence north, 3° west, along the Easterly line of Clyde Street 2 chains, thence north 83° 30' East two chains and fifty links, thence south 15° east, two chains, thence south 83° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of out lots number five and six, reference being had to the map and field notes of David Hudson Esq. in the survey of lots numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7, and being the same land that was conveyed to Stephen Bartlett, by W. P. Sherman and wife by deed of June 23d, 1821—which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the tavern of Mrs. Elisson, in East Rochester on Monday the 19th day of Nov. next, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 29th, 1831.

For JAS' SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. McCRAKEN, late Under Sheriff.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in liber 6 of Mortgages at page 284 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 16th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division, now Monroe, and state of New York viz.—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz:—East west, and south by the lines of said Division, and Northerly, by aline to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Smedley Esq.—including all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovill, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HAMPTON.

L. ADAMS.

CHANCERY.

Ezra Cox Complainant, vs. Philo Bigler, Samuel Adams, & Lewis Benedict, Defendants. } In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester, on the 23d day of August 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the 5th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M of that day at the Eagle Tavern in said village of Rochester & county of Monroe, the following described premises viz: "All that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the said town of Clarkson, being a part of the west half of lots one and two, in the ninth section of town number four on the triangular tract, and bounded as follows, viz:—beginning at a stake in the centre of the Ridge road, where the east line is intersected by the centre of the west lake road. Thence southerly along the centre of said Lake road, eight chains and fourteen links, to a stake, thence easterly on the north line of Abigail Tuttle's land, three chains and sixty two links to a stake, thence northerly on the west line of Peter Row's land six chains and thirty five links to a stake, thence north, seventy two and a half degrees west, one chain and thirty four links to a stake, thence north sixty four degrees west one chain and ten links to a stake, thence north twenty and one half degrees east two chains and five links, thence to the place of beginning be the same more or less." Dated 24th August, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON, 6w Master in Chancery.

Postponement.—The sale in the above cause is postponed till the 20th inst. at the Eagle Tavern, in the village of Rochester, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day.—Dated 6th October, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON, Master in Chancery.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 488, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, in sub division of lot No. Seventy two, Bounded south by lot no. 28, East by part of lot No 71, north by lot No. 30, and west by Clinton Street, containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 8th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK, } Executors of
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS, } deceased.

V. & S. MATHEWS, Att'neys. 29w 8z.

DEFAULT having been made on the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 4 of mortgages at page 352, executed by Adam Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Gates in the county of Monroe and on lot No. fifty three, Township No. one, and distinguished on a map of Cornhill (a sub division of said lot No. 53) as lot number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 8th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS, } deceased.

V. & S. MATHEWS. Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829, & recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 318, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Gasham Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number fifteen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe, on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided Dated October 6th, 1831. LAURA M. ELY.

S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 43.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $1,00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00.
Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

DOCTRINAL.

From the N. H. Observer.

HOW ARE BELIEVERS PARDONED?

Convicted sinners, and often real christians inquire how they can obtain the pardon of their sins. This is a very solemn and interesting question. It is of the utmost importance, as it respects our present comfort and future prospects that we should be well informed with respect to the ground on which pardon of sin may be obtained. There is but one way in which this rich blessing can be secured. And this way is ample and immutable. There is no other way given under heaven, among men in which pardon can be extended to our sinful race. But before we directly answer this question it may be well to inquire, what we are to understand by it; what is the meaning of pardon. To pardon, forgive, or justify, are expressions used in the Bible, synonymously, to mean the same thing. If we can understand the nature of sin, or what sin is, then we may ascertain what pardon, forgiveness, or justification is. If a transgression of the law is sin, and the wages of sin is death —eternal death, the penalty affixed to the law, and that which is threatened to all transgressors, then we may soon discover what is implied in pardon or forgiveness. When God pardons a sinner, he remits unto that person his sins; he forbears to inflict that punishment which his offences deserve, and which the law in strict justice demands. This is pardon, or forgiveness; such a one is justified. Although there is but one ground on which pardon can be granted, yet it may be complete or partial. A complete pardon removes all the penal evils and consequences of a violation of the law to which the transgressor was liable. The convict, found guilty of a capital offence, is not only sentenced to imprisonment and labor, which is according to the provisions of the statute but he also as a consequence loses his citizenship—his oath is not admitted in a judicial court, not even after having complied with the sentence of the law. But should he obtain from the executive a full and complete pardon, at any period before the penalty of the law was fully executed on the transgressor, this liberates him from confinement, and removes all the disabilities which were consequential on being convicted of a capital offence. He might also obtain a pardon from the same source which would extend only to the expressed sentence of the court, which would liberate him from imprisonment, and be a partial pardon. In forgiving or pardoning believers, God removes the penalty of the law, by which the transgressor is restored to the forfeited favor of his justly offended God. The demand of the law is canceled; but the demerit of sin, which is inseparable from its nature, is not taken away. A person who is once a transgressor, will forever remain so; he will never cease to deserve punishment. Although the demerit of sin can never be removed, yet believers by being pardoned, may be absolved from the punishment it deserves. This is the essence and true meaning of pardon. So far as they are absolved from the punishment due to their offences, so far they are actually forgiven. Hence, as before observed, partial forgiveness is the remission of part of the evil which the sinner deserves. Rebels and traitors may receive a partial pardon. The punishment of death may be forgiven; but all the civil disadvantages may remain—he may lose his citizenship and be disqualified for holding any office of honor or profit under the government against which he has offended. But a full pardon remits all penalties and consequences arising from the conviction of a violation of the law which is to govern human conduct. A violation of the moral law deserves the everlasting displeasure of the law-giver. "The wages of sin is death." But God may forgive the believer the deserved punishment of all his sins in a future state, and, at the same time exercise his discretionary power to punish in this world, in the manner and to the degree infinite wisdom and goodness may think best. God in infinite mercy assures real believers that they shall be rescued from eternal death, which is the wages of sin, and never come into condemnation in the world to come. Christ says, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." And the Apostle says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." After God has pardoned a believer, he bears not only the love of benevolence toward him, but the love of complacency. He can now justly express his approbation by peculiar tokens of favor. The pardoned christian is as suitable a subject of the approbation and favor of God as if he had never offended. He has a new heart, and really loves God; and God says he loves those who love him, so he may express his feelings toward him in any manner that he pleases. We would here observe that the forgiveness and pardon which God grants believers, is also called justification, for the reason that it puts the subject of pardon in a condition in which he may properly treat him in the same manner that he would have done if he had never offended.

APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF COMMON SENSE TO CERTAIN DISPUTED DOCTRINES.

The theory of our oneness with Adam, which we now propose to examine, may be more fully stated as follows: That Adam and all his posterity, constituted one moral being, and acted as one, in his first transgression. Here the first question is, whether common sense is competent to sit in judgment on the case. If it is not, then surely no dependence can be placed upon that decision which affirms the theory to be correct, any more than on its opposite; and it is entirely idle for any one to think of deciding the question at all. The human mind is declared incompetent to ascertain the truth on this subject, and we have nothing to do but to meet with resignation, the fate of remediless ignorance. Still more, if we are not capable of deciding this question, then we neither do, nor can know what constitutes personal identity, nor whether there is, in fact, any such thing as a distinction of being. It may be, that instead of being distinct agents, as we have been practically accustomed to suppose, we are all one, from one end of the world to the other, and from Adam down to the end of time; yea, every living thing, and for aught we know, the earth itself,—all one moral being, thinking and acting as one. If we are wholly incompetent to decide in the case, we do not know but these things may be true. But every man does assume that they are not true; & in assuming it, takes the very position that we do—that he is capable of knowing, and does know, without mistake, what constitutes personal identity. We consider therefore the universal assumption of the competency of common sense to decide this point,—an assumption made by the advocates of the theory in question, equally with ourselves,—as abundant authority for taking the ground we do.

The next point of inquiry is, whether common sense is likely to be perverted, in deciding on the theory of our identy with Adam, and if so, which decision—the one in favor, or against it—is likely to be influenced by an undue bias. By referring to the inducements which operate to lead the mind each way, we may determine this question. A guilty conscience, there is no doubt will find a degree of repose by adopting the idea that we were all one with Adam. For with this idea the impression is inseparably connected, that Adam acted for us—that though we might perhaps have concurred in this act, as the theory supposes, still he was the author, and the only guilty author, of that concurrence. We can never feel a conviction of guilt, and a sense of self-reproach, for any part which we may suppose ourselves to have had in Adam's transgression; and that for this plain reason, that we never blame ourselves for that in which we are not conscious of having had any voluntary agency. The lesson which common sense teaches on this subject, no power or authority in the universe, can make men practically forget. They know they are not one with Adam, and never were; and that they had no more to do in his first transgression, than the angels that never sinned.—Hence, if you tell them, that all their sin, their criminality, of which they are conscious, is to be traced to a supposed participation in Adam's sin, of which they are not conscious, they will inevitably feel themselves excused. They will be glad to have it so. They will readily acquiesce in a theory which traces all their conscious depravity and guilt back to the act of another, or to their concurrence in it, of which concurrence they are not, and cannot be conscious; especially when it is added, in the further explanation of the theory, that as a necessary consequence of the joint act of the race, they came into the world individually forsaken of God, and under his displeasure,—commence a course of independent moral action without his grace, and therefore, as Edwards says, "without hope or possibility of any other than violating God's law, and being thereby justly exposed to eternal ruin." Such a view of sin makes it neither more nor less than an unavoidable calamity, and the mind which is led to regard it in this light, will rather complain of God, unless indeed it should feel wholly at ease on the subject, than be tortured by any just feeling of self-reproach, or conviction of self-ruin. "For this we thank Adam," will be not only a true expression of such a mind's inward thoughts, but a just expression of the truth. But the probability is, that it will leave the conscience of the sinner entirely at rest. For the theory is merely imaginary. It supposes us—a mere supposition—to be one with Adam, and so guilty of his sin. It can never be realized, nor can there be any approach towards realizing it, as we do realize a personal act of transgression. It can never, therefore, bring the conviction of guilt home to the breast. It will float in the mind like a soothing dream, or a lulling song. It will never sink heavily and painfully upon the heart, as the real consciousness of sin does. No wonder then, that the guilty mind should embrace a theory proffering such silken repose for the conscience.

But good men, we admit, have embraced this theory; and they have done so from the necessity of accounting for the supposed imputation of Adam's sin to his posterity. They have seen that we are, unquestionably, as a race, involved in the consequences of that sin, and have inferred from this fact, that we are also involved in the guilt of it,—which they cannot make consistent with the justice of God, without supposing that Adam and his posterity were properly one, and acted as one, in that affair. This theory, if true, would indeed make it perfectly just for God, to treat all men as guilty, before they had done any evil in their own individual capacity. And it is because it reconciles the justice of God with the supposed fact, that he treats us all as guilty, prior to any personal transgression, that the doctrine of our oneness with Adam has been extensively adopted by theologians. The question then arises, whether the circumstances under which they have adopted it, are not such in themselves, as are calculated to mislead the mind. It seems obvious to us that they are. It is done to carry a point. The theory has been invented by them, not discovered, and invented for the purpose of defending a doctrine, (that of imputation,) which is revolting, not to the pride, nor to any of the sinful passions of men, but to the plainest dictates of common sense, respecting the nature of things. Had the fact, or the possibility, of our oneness with Adam, been discovered by any one, while investigating the subject of personal identity by itself, and in tracing one thing to another in the simple search of truth, and nothing else, the case would be entirely different. There would then be a presumption in favor of the truth of the theory. But as the case actually stands, the presumption plainly is, that the adoption of it, in every case, has resulted from mental perversion. On the other hand, there is no suspicious cause or influence which is likely to lead to the rejection of the theory.—So far from it, that he who rejects it, only lays himself open thereby to the unmitigated consciousness of personal guilt and ill-desert. He admits, that in his departure from God, and truth, and holiness, he has chosen and acted for himself alone, as an independent, voluntary agent from first to last, & consequently, that the blame is his own, in a sense which he could never realize or acknowledge, if he believed that the race were, originally, but one moral agent, Adam the head, and he but one of the branches, though he were taught ever so solemnly, that he is just as guilty as if he were the head itself. In short we know of no influence which can lead to a rejection of the theory of our oneness with Adam, but a regard to the consistency of other known and established truth. It is common sense which rejects the equally erroneous notion, that by a covenant to which we never gave our assent, he became our moral representative; and that by such a oneness, we are made truly responsible, and are literally punished for his acts. If you would satisfy yourself on this point, propose it to any common man, who has never heard of it; explain it at large; and as you proceed to tell him how it has been attempted to illustrate it, by supposing all mankind to be living in the time of Adam, and "somehow or other, to be growing out of him," or to become deserving of death by mere representation; mark his look of pity, or sneer of contempt, at such statements. And these are the men to try such doctrines. They judge impartially. They have no system to defend, for which they are willing to sacrifice every thing that saves them from the character of idiots.—We freely confess that we set a high value on the opinions of common people upon subjects of this kind. Nay, we would almost go to the very "infant of days," if we wished to learn correctly the first elements of moral truth. We would never go to the man of professed learning for this object. For the subjects in question are tangible, perfectly so, to common sense, and we would go where we could find the most and the best of it. And decide as we may between the two classes of people, learned and unlearned, as to their respective original stock of common sense, or the ordinary power of the mind, the latter have unquestionably this immense advantage, that they are completely unshackled in the exercise of what they possess, and that they have the first elements of truth distinctly and prominently in view, and not thrown into the shade by a huge and misshapen growth of learning, or philosophy, falsely so called. Even real learning, an extensive knowledge of truth, is perfectly consistent with a diminished ability to judge correctly on common subjects. The mind becomes engrossed with its favorite objects of pursuit; it has perhaps long since passed beyond every thing of an ordinary nature; and in retirement from real life, learns to speculate itself of things which would once have been regarded with perfect incredulity. But to the common people the first principles of knowledge are ever fresh, because they go but little, if at all, beyond them. The dictates of common sense respecting the state and relations of things, are not obscured to their minds by speculations, called profound; nor are likely to be perverted by the desire of carrying a point in an argument, for they have but little interest in any other than practical subjects. When the case is one where the truth must lie near the surface, then, if the subject of inquiry is simple in its kind, and one of practical and common interest to all, we may expect that the decision of the generality of mankind will be correct. Now the question before us is obviously of this kind. Not a man living, but acts constantly and habitually on the conviction of his distinct personal identity. It is not a possible state of mind for a person to believe really and practically, that he is one being with another. The idea cannot be formed, without confusion. To conceive of such a union at all, one must change his notion of that being which he calls himself. For the idea which every one naturally and necessarily attaches to the terms I, and myself, is that of a being, in his own nature one, independent, and incapable of a literal commingling of his powers and faculties with another. That such a being, in those very respects which constitute him an independent and distinct existence, is a gross absurdity, and so common sense views it. Nor is there any difference in this respect between the advocates of the theory of our oneness with Adam, and the rest of mankind. While the former speculatively maintain that we were all one with Adam, they still act as entirely and uniformly as others, on the supposition that they are distinct beings.—There can be no question then, in regard to their practical decision on this subject. Whatever they may hold theoretically, their actions show that they are as well satisfied of their own distinct being, as others; and to a man's actions the appeal lies, when he would ascertain his practical belief. It is then a universal decision of the common sense of mankind, the holders of the theory in question not excepted, that every man constitutes, in himself, an independent being, and by an unavoidable consequence, that he could never have been one with Adam. For how is it possible that a being, now confessedly distinct from others, and that too in his very nature, should ever have been one with another! He must change his nature, and become a different being, to be capable of such a union. If we ever were one with Adam, then, we were not the beings we are now. Our constitution must have been entirely different, to have rendered such a connection possible or conceivable. Common sense then does decide, fully and unequivocally, that we, such beings as we now are, never were, and never could be, one with Adam.—Christian Spectator.

DIVINE AND HUMAN AGENCY.

There are some valuable thoughts on this subject in a sermon recently preached by Dr. Woods from 1 Cor. 13: 7. So then neither is he that planteth any thing,—neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. He represents the agency of God to be as much more important than ours, as his perfections are exalted; and to the inquiry, why we are so prone to overlook it? why do we make so high an estimate of the agency of man, and so low an estimate of the agency of God? he replies in several particulars. Man's agency is visible, God's agency invisible. When a Christian minister is laboring to make known divine truth and bring sinners to repentance, the agent and the agency are both objects of our senses; but when God accomplishes his most conspicuous work, the agent and the agency lie wholly concealed from our senses. Besides in the very instances in which the invisible agency of God is specially employed, there is also, for the most part, a visible human agency. The manner of the divine agency is different from ours. The pride of the heart inclines us to overrate our own agency, and to withhold from God the glory which is due to him, especially for the agency which he exerts in the souls of the redeemed.'

The body of the discourse is devoted to showing that the doctrine of divine influence, as held forth in the text, presents the only adequate encouragement to the servants of Christ, to labor for the conversion of sinners, and the prosperity of the church. It is shown conclusively, that the fact of our entire dependance on God is one of the most powerful motives to human exertion which could exist. This was its operation on Paul, one of its most strenuous assertors, as it has been also on all eminently successful evangelical ministers. That it may prove such a motive, however, it must be felt in a right manner, and with right accompanying circumstances.—Christ Mirror.

JEWS IN POLAND.

We learn from the Jewish Expositor, that the six missionaries employed by the London Jews' Society in Poland, have remained in that country during all the recent troubles. The Jews in Warsaw, in November last, were in great alarm, and it was found a happy time to direct them to the only Refuge. Thirty or forty individuals would sometimes listen attentively to a missionary. Twenty-nine Jews, either converted or in an inquiring state, had been connected with the Institution at Warsaw, of whom 17 had been baptised.—Boston Recorder.

TEMPERANCE.

From the Massachusetts Journal & Tribune.

WOMAN'S LOVE STRONG IN DEATH.

There is nothing more true than the homely old proverb that 'one half of the world don't know how the other half live.'

We think we are a happy and prosperous community, and that the blessings of life are very equally divided among us; and all this is very true, but there are instances of misery among us, known only to the searching eye of benevolence, the recital of which are enough to make the heart thrill with anguish. The following facts were related by an excellent lady, whose active exertions in the cause of charity, (not in the slightest degree impeded by the infirmities of declining years) deserve a statue. She was herself a witness of the scene of suffering, to which her kind heart and ready hand brought all the alleviation that circumstances would admit. Having heard that a poor Irish woman was dying in ——st. amid unusual sufferings and privations, she immediately went to the distressing scene—and a distressing scene it indeed was! The dying woman who three days before had given birth to an infant, was lying on the naked bed-cords, with nothing to rest her emaciated limbs but a few bunches of hard shavings. She had had a bed: but her drunken husband had pulled it from under her to buy rum, to keep a wake over her dead baby. He and his companions were singing, swearing, carousing and fighting in an adjoining room, separated only by a thin partition. On the bedstead, with her feet thrown over the poor sufferer, lay a gigantic woman, senseless in liquor; the creature was mistress to the intoxicated husband. After such comforts as could be readily procured were given to the invalid, the lady who came to her relief urged her to have her cruel companion sent to the work-house. The patient wife begged and intreated that no complaint might be made of him. 'He had been' she said, 'such an industrious man, such a kind husband. He was led astray by bad company, who made him believe they loved him better than she did; but she was sure he would reform. He had been such a good husband! If they sent him to the House of Correction, it would break his spirits and discourage him. She was sure he would reform.'

It would have been cruelty not to have listened to these urgent entreaties—and the husband was left unmolested.

The dying woman, being asked if she had no friends, whom she wished to see, mentioned a female friend, whom she had known in Ireland; the kindness of strangers sought out this friend, who hastened to the sufferer's bed side with the prompt affection of a good Irish heart. When endeprav'ed by vice, what people on earth have warmer and better feelings than the Irish!

When the invalid was visited the next day, her female friend was with her, weeping bitterly, and sobbing, 'Och! and have I lived to see it come to this with her—and I not to know of the same! Och, why didn't they tell me it had come to this!'

The sufferer was weaker, and was evidently dying. With her skinny and trembling hand she tried to hold the sheet up to one of her temples, faltering out, in broken accents,' 'Don't say any thing about it—Don't say—they will blame him.'

Poor fond creature! The temple she tried to cover was clotted with blood! Dying, as she was, she had been struck by her heard-hearted husband! And yet with the strong endurance of woman's love, she tried to the last to shield him from blame. He had been the beloved husband of her youth, and her heart could not rebel against him—poverty, insult, suffering, and cruelty—it braved them all, and loved on, even in death!

By a conversation with the female friend, it was ascertained that the poor heart-broken wife had once, been a domestic in the family of an Irish nobleman with whom she was a great favorite, on account of her intelligence, and winning sweetness of disposition. By their kindness she was enabled to receive a much better education than usually falls to the lot of people in her condition. She married, and came to America with her husband, and the friend, who told her story. Whether her patrons approved of her union we know not—but it seems the husband behaved very well for a few years, and his wife was contented and happy. At last, he went away from home to work—he became acquainted with an abandoned woman, who soon enticed him to a familiarity with vice in every form.

He returned home a drunkard, and brought his dissolute companion with him. Tears, arguments, entreaties, and kind attentions availed nothing. The patient wife had only to keep her heart from breaking as long as she could, for her children's sake. She gave birth to an infant.—As I have already said, the bed was dragged from under her to buy rum. Another bed was furnished by the hand of charity; and this the wretch insisted should be shared by himself and his drunken, shameless companion. The poor wife begged that her dying moments might not be disturbed. Her husband incited by his profligate companion, and enraged with intoxication, caught up a broken stool, and hurled it at the sufferer's head.

Some friend called in the aid of the police; but even after this last act of cruelty, the devoted wife wrote a note requesting that the complaint might be withdrawn from the Police Court,—stating that the charge against her husband had originated in mistake. Although this generous note was written with a weak and trembling hand, its correct and handsome style excited remark.

The last effort of her rapidly decaying strength was to hide the blood, which oozed from her wound, lest the visiters should blame him. She died a few hours after.

From the Genius of Temperance.

A STRIKING CASE OF REFORMATION.

A correspondent has given us a detailed account of the reformation of a vender in New Jersey, who heard a part of Mr. Graham's lectures in that State. Our correspondent heard the relation from the vender himself, and gives it, as near as he can, in his own language.

"I have done with it," said he—"I have done with it forever. I have been the very Saul of opposition to the Temperance cause in this county. I have contemned it—I have ridiculed it. I have said every thing against it and its friends, and done all I could to prevent its success.—Pamphlets, addresses, and sermons, almost without number have been sent to me on the subject, and I have read them and laughed at them, and treated them with contempt—my neighbors have talked to me, and I have ridiculed them. Nothing touched me—nothing shook my confidence at all, in the correctness of my course, and I was determined to sell spirits as long as I could make money by it. But I turned the Temperance addresses and sermons which I received to some good account for my own interest. I had a neighbor engaged in the sale of ardent spirits who was a member of the church. I knew if I could break up his selling, it would much increase my sale—so I took my addresses and sermons to him, and asked him to read them, which he did; and then I asked him, how he could be a Christian, and sell spirits, after reading them. My project succeeded. He quit the sale, and I got all his rum business!—but when others who sold spirits, out in the country, and who bought of me, talked of quitting the sale, I laughed at them, and persuaded them to stick to their business."

"Such," said he, "has been my opposition to the temperance cause, and such was the course I had fully determined to pursue; but Mr. Graham has converted me. I saw in his first lecture the direction and bearing of his course, and I determined to hear him through; but I was fully convinced by the time he had got through his third lecture, before he had said any thing particularly about ardent spirits. I went home from the third lecture and found my store full of men—most of them laboring men, who had come in, after their day's work, to spend a part of their wages for spirits; this was a scene which, till now, had pleased me; but now it made me shudder. The sight filled me with conviction of the injury I had been doing to my fellow creatures. I could not endure the sight, and turned around and went out into the field back. I burst into tears, and wept like a child. When I thought the store was cleared, I went in, and went to bed, but not to rest; I found it impossible to get to sleep. I was harrassed all night with my conflict. On the one side were conviction and conscience—on the other, were interest and pride. I thought of all I had said and done against the Temperance cause—of all the sneers, and ridicule, and derision, which would come upon me if I quit the sale of ardent spirits. I thought of the heavy sacrifice it would be to my interest; and seemed impossible to stop selling. While, on the other hand, conviction and conscience goaded me to agony, and I found that I could never again sell spirits in peace. Thus did I struggle on, till near morning, when I came to the full resolution to abandon the sale of ardent spirits entirely and at once, and then I was able to get a little sleep."

This statement, adds our correspondent, was made with much fervency and feeling. The gentleman also said, that a number of others, whom nothing before had moved, had been equally affected. "At least 20," said he, "to my knowledge, and probably many more have quit the use of Tobacco in consequence of Mr. G's lectures. A distiller declared himself fully converted, and has come out warmly in favor of the Temperance cause."

Military Temperance.—The Field Officers of the Brigade of Artillery, at their meeting at Middletown, Ct. on the 12th August, voted to abstain from the use of ardent spirits, and to recommend to all Brigade, Regimental and Company officers to discontinue the use of the same at their meetings and parades.—N. Haven paper.

THE INDIANS.

From the Connecticut Observer.

CHEROKEES.—The following extract from a letter written by a young lady to her friend in this city, contains an interesting account of a visit to the Cherokee country. It is dated——
Sept. 9, 1831.

'In company with Dr. Butler, a missionary at Hawcies, and——we left——for the Cherokee nation. On horseback of course, as this is almost the only safe mode of travelling in a new country. We left —— very early in the morning and arrived at Creek path before dark, after riding forty miles. The mission family at Creek path, is composed of Mr. and Mrs. Potter, and Miss Nash. They have a school of about thirty Indian boys and girls, of which Mr. P. takes charge, besides attending to his ministerial and other duties. These all board in the family, and the girls are instructed in domestick economy by Mrs. P. out of school, while the boys are taught to labor on the farm. Their board, tuition &c. are all gratuitous, and many of them are clothed entirely by the mission family. I think I never saw a more interesting group collected, than this school, and the improvement made by many of them is extremely gratifying. One thing in particular, struck me as quite different from the ideas I had formerly of the Indian character, especially in the females. There was a remarkable degree of diffidence in their deportment. I found them uniformly soft and retiring in their manners, and some whom I became acquainted with during my stay, evinced much sweetness of temper.*

We attended a four days meeting there, during which time there were two added to the church, and the sacrament was administered. We heard two sermons delivered by a Cherokee in his native tongue. He was the most intelligent of his tribe, remarkable for his strength of mind, dignity and native eloquence. David Brown who was educated in New-England, and had heard many celebrated preachers at the north —said after he returned to his own nation, that he could turn to his Cherokee John Huss and pronounce him to be the most eloquent man he ever heard. He cannot speak a word of English, still, I listened to him with delight, though unable to understand one word he uttered—his engaging manners, soft language and animated fervor completely overpowered me. He was once a famous warrior, a captain of the light horse, bold, daring and savage. A more complete change I suppose was never visible in any one;—he is now as mild as a lamb, and gives cheering evidence of being a meek and lowly follower of Jesus. As I contemplated what he once was, a degraded heathen, and beheld him standing in the pulpit, an ambassador for Christ proclaiming the tidings of peace and pardon through a Saviour to his fellow men, with so much zeal and earnestness, it was too much for my feelings.

On Saturday we rode out to see the grave of Catharine Brown, about three miles from Mr. Potters. It is enclosed by a neat picket fence, and covered with a roof to shelter it from the weather. As I entered the enclosure, I felt that I was standing on Holy ground, rendered sacred by the sleeping dust of one who is now a glorified saint before the throne in Heaven. I could but raise my thoughts above, and pray that her mantle might fall upon me. It was an interesting spot, and I felt reluctant to leave it

Tuesday was the day fixed on for our return to ——but Dr. Butler was so anxious to have us visit his family at Haweis, that he persuaded two of us to go with him. We rode two days, thirty-five miles a day, through a beautiful country, covered with the most beautiful flowers and forest trees which I ever beheld. Riding through level plains covered entirely with shade, ascending and descending mountains, crossing rivers &c. afforded us a pleasing variety on our way.—We stopped the second day at the house of the principal Chief who treated us very cordially, invited us up stairs into his office, where were books, papers, writing materials &c. which gave the room quite a literary appearance. Indeed he is a literary man, a fine scholar, writes extremely well, speaks English fluently and appears like a gentleman. I should have told you that Mr. P., Miss N. and two Cherokee girls accompanied us from Creek Path, besides our other company, and the first night after we left Creek Path we staid at a log house in the woods. We arrived at Haweis Wednesday eve —and the next morning we started again for New Echota intending to make our visit at Haweis on our return. Left the Dr., who was afraid to accompany us, on account of the Georgia Guard, who are scouring the land, seizing missionaries, and carrying them to prison. I suppose you have read the account of his former seizure. We expected to reach New Echota the following night, but greatly to our discomfiture we found night approaching fast, and ourselves lost in the woods. We proceeded, however till we found several Indian huts, where we begged permission to stay until morning, but we could not be accommodated, and knew of no alternative but to fasten our horses and sleep on the ground. For my part, I felt more like amusing myself with the novelty of the adventure than repining at our lot. We at length ascertained that we were in 2 miles of a Moravian station and procured an indian guide who piloted us safely there. This was nearly 10 o'clock, and to our sorrow we found the Georgians had driven off the missionaries, and every thing wore the dreary aspect of desertion. The establishment was left in the hands of an Indian man, who was keeping house with his two sisters. Here we had a wholesome supper and a good night's rest, and the next morning we reached New Echota. Found Mr. Worcester's family in deep affliction. Mr. W. had been obliged to leave his home and sick wife for fear of the Georgia Gur'd. During his absence, one of his children had died, and he was sent for to the funeral. The Guard hearing that he had returned, came and seized him prisoner again only night before we got there—but on his stating the particulars respecting his family, he was released, and met us with welcome the next morning.——We took tea on Thursday evening at Mr. Boudinott's, Editor of the Cherokee Phœnix, and I can say, that I have not seated myself to a more genteel tea table, since I left Connecticut. It seemed so much like being among Yankee people that we enjoyed it much.

I feel as if my visit had given me a new impulse as it regards missionaries and missionary labors. I wonder I have not always felt more interest in them and done more for them. At this time, in particular, I think the Christian world ought to be alive and put forth all their energies in behalf of the afflicted laborers in Christ's vineyard.——The poor Indians too—I long to have them enjoy their rights unmolested. I wish every body would go into the nation and see for themselves what they are.

ARKANSAS CHEROKEES.

A letter from Mr. Washburn, dated at Dwight, July 11, gives the following account of a revival of religion in that vicinity:

It is with feelings of thankfulness and joy, to which I cannot find full utterance, that I announce the fact that we are enjoying to a considerable extent a revival of religion among this poor people. Five natives now stand propounded for admission to the church. Ten others are rejoicing in hope; and, as far as we can judge, give us reason to hope for them, that they are indeed born from above. All these are persons living above us on the Saliaau. In addition to these, we are permitted to rejoice over four of our dear Cherokee youth in the female school, as the children of God. For several months past there has been an unusual solemnity and tenderness upon the minds of a considerable number of the girls, which has convinced us that the good Spirit was striving with them. For a few weeks, the four alluded to have been rejoicing in the sense of pardon. We never saw youthful converts appear better. Several of the scholars, and more among the people, seem to be subjects of conviction more or less pungent; and many have their attention more solemnly arrested than ever before.

In the north-east part of the nation, bordering upon the white settlements, there is also very considerable excitement among the Methodists. They have lately taken into their society about twenty persons connected with the Cherokees. Several of these had been professers in the old nation, and had fallen back and become desperately wicked. Others are serious persons, received as seekers; and a few others we hope are true converts.

The work is evidently of the Lord. It illustrate the sovereign freeness of his grace.—The church here has for a long time been in a state of great coldness. A few have mourned and prayed in secret over our declensions; but as a church, we have been, and I fear still are, very far from what we ought to be. There is now evidently a waking up, and I hope we shall all soon be engaged with our whole hearts in seeking for the continuance and spread of the good work. Most of our native members are revived, and I think this is the case with all, or nearly all the mission family here, as it is with our fellow laborers at Fairfield and Forks of Illinois.

We have three appointments for three-days meetings in the nation, the first to begin next Friday. I believe all who love our Lord Jesus Christ among us have made these meetings the subject of special frequent prayer. I trust many will go to them under the influence of a heavenly unction, and we hope and pray and expect to witness displays of God's saving grace. We expect our brethren from Union will unite with us, and also some of our Methodist and Cumberland brethren from the white settlements.

Georgia and the Cherokees.—We infer from an article in the Savanna Georgian, that the course of Governor Gilmer, in regard to the missionaries, has awakened, as well it might, a strong feeling of disapprobation in the minds of many of his constituents: His Excellency appears to have taken the alarm, and "has instructed Col. Sanford, immediately to inquire into the facts, in relation to any unauthorized oppression exercised towards the prisoners of Col. Nelson, or any other of the Guard."—Jour. of Com.

New-Haven papers state that Col. Trumbull has consented to [illegible]

*These are the effects of Missionary instructions under the auspices of the United States Government! And what is their reward? Four years imprisonment in the Georgia Penitentiary!

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

of the College—on these conditions: Col. T. is to receive an annuity during his life, from the avails of the collection or other sources—and those avails after his decease, shall be appropriated to the education of indigent young men. Copies of these paintings are also placed in Hartford in charge of Trustees, for the same purpose of educating indigent students.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the S. S. Instructer.

THE RAGGED LITTLE BOY TURNED EDITOR.

"You cannot play with my boys, James, unless you will go to school," said a mother to a patched up, ragged little boy, who was very intimate with her children, but who did not love to attend school, or give any attention to his books.

James went home with a sorry heart, and thought to himself—"If I do not love my school now, I shall grow up an ignorant man, and I can no more associate with my little playmates." He was troubled and ashamed, as he thought of his past neglect, and, before the day closed, had fully resolved to do better. And he made good his resolution. A day or two after, James was seen in school, an attentive scholar, pursuing studies as though he was determined to make amende for past neglect. He now could associate and play with his former companions, and seemed much happier in their company than before. His master noticed his studiousness, and would often speak in his praise, to the mortification of those scholars who had long been in the school, but who nevertheless made but slow progress in their studies.

It was but seldom, that James received a reproof from his master. His eye was steadily fixed on his book, and he seldom noticed the conduct of the boys around him. I sat but one seat above James, and can remember as if it was but yesterday, how attentively and diligently he pursued his studies. Whenever I succeeded in drawing his attention from his book, he would look kindly towards me, as though he would have said—"I am busy now—do not disturb me—by and by I will attend to you." And when he could spare any time, he was very kind to help me or any of the boys.

James continued to attend his school constantly and punctually, till he was of a suitable age to be apprenticed to a master mechanic.—All his leisure moments were now spent in the improvement of his mind. He was not only fond of books, but he delighted to pen his tho'ts on paper, and many of his juvenile productions would do credit to those of riper years.

But where think you, youthful reader, is that ragged boy, who once cared so little about his school and his books? Who would think it?—he is now the Editor a respectable paper, published in a neighboring State. Thus has James risen to respectability and honor by his own unaided exertions. Perseverance has removed all hindrances—and he is now in a fair way to make a good livelihood, beside helping support his widowed mother. I would fain quote some beautiful stanzas, which he has written, but it might lead to the detection of the subject of this story, who would be highly displeased with my freedom; and so I forbear. I will not close however without making one short extract from a letter, which I received from him not a great while since.

———Religion has occupied much of my attention for a year past, and I have thought that I have found a hope in Christ—but should not wish to have you make it known until I am certain.———

James is a worthy member of the church of Christ. He has separated himself from the world, with the determination to live in the fear of the Lord, and to devote himself to his service. May the great Sheperd of the flock graciously bless him in all his endeavors to live to his glory on earth, and, when he is removed from the church below, receive him into mansions of bliss, where he can unite in the eternal song of praise to Him who sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb. ALFRED.

From the Same.

ROBERT RAIKES.

"Blessings on Robert Raikes," said one of his cotemporaries, the other day. Amen, say we, so mote it be, Robert Raikes was the founder of the Sabbath School system; the first man whose active benevolence was exerted in producing an ultimate good, by a direct and immediate application of his energies to the moral subjugation of the mind. Robert Raikes was born at Gloucester, England, in 1735. His father was a printer, and published a newspaper, called the 'Gloucester Journal,' to which poor honor, Robert Raikes was the successor.—He acquired a competency, and lavished his pecuniary surplusage on works of benevolence.

We do not intend to write his biography; but such facts as are presented to us, we offer to our readers, fully assured that they who have not access to more perfect histories, will not be displeased with the little information it is in our power to give them.

He had exerted himself to ameliorate the condition of the unhappy beings confined in the Gloucester bridewell, and had already acquired some notoriety, when accident threw in his way a group of little vagabonds whose conversation, surcharged with imprecations, caught his attention. Raikes inquired if the children lived in the vincity where he found them. He was told that they did, and that if he should frequent the neighborhood on Sundays, his feelings would be still more outraged, by remarking their increased numbers and profinity. "This conversation (says Raikes in a letter to a friend) suggested to me, that it would be at least a harmless attempt, if it were productive of no good, should some little plan be formed to check this deplorable profanation of the Sabbath."

The "little plan," which the benevolent philanthropist so modestly suggests as possessing a chance of checking the profanation of the Holy Sabbath, has been developed and executed.

Time runs on, but it diminishes not the remembrance nor the influence of his exertions. An event—an accident, which occurred fifty years since, suggested "a little plan,"—that little plan pursued during life time, by a good man, and an unimpeachable Christian, has produced a mighty change in the moral intelligence, religious feelings, social intercourse, personal freedom, and eternal destiny of millions. "Blessings on Robert Raikes."

"He commenced (we use the language of another) by engaging four female teachers of day schools to receive as many children as he could send on the Sabbath, and instruct them in reading and in the church catechism. For this he engaged to pay them each a shilling for their day's employment. After he had collected a goodly number of children; and set his school in operation, wholly at his own expense, he unfolded his plan to his minister, and received his approbation and promise of co-operation. He printed a little book, copies of which he used personally to distribute among such as were distinguished for their attention and good behaviour. The Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, sent him a number of bibles and testaments, which he distributed in the same manner. It is said, that from this circumstance, originated the British and Foreign Bible Society."

In the course of three years he had collected thirty-three hundred children, who became constant frequenters of the "House of God," and humble petitioners at the "Gate of Heaven."

Encouraged by success, he exposed his "little plan" to the world, through the medium of the "Gloucester Journal," then under his direction. His remarks and statements were copied by his cotemporaries, and the London papers giving currency to them, his system was immediately adopted in that city, whence it spread with the rapidity of lightning, and before the close of his valuable life, Mr. Raikes had the exhilerating satisfaction of seeing Sabbath Schools, for three hundred thousand children, established throughout the British Empire. Mr. Raikes died in 1811, leaving behind a very durable monument, which defies corrosion and decay.—Boston Transcript.

Extract from an account of a protracted meeting at Gillisonville, South Carolina.

Gillisonville, Sept. 20th, 1831.

To the Editor of the Charleston Observer.

At length, the first day of the meeting, the 8th of September, arrived. The people gathered together in seeming indifference; but three preachers were present—the brother who proposed the meeting having been detained by the death of a child in his flock. God's people began to tremble lest the work might not be blessed; but their faithful prayers had been recorded in his book of remembrance. At length, the services of God were begun by the brethren there met, and fervent prayers were repeated at that throne where those who ask in entire reliance upon the promises of God, through Christ Jesus, never ask in vain. Solemn and impressive were the addresses and exhortations to the hearers, upon the necessity of salvation to the soul—and pointing to the cross of Christ as the only way of salvation. The passages of Scripture read, the texts expounded, the Hymns sung, the prayers poured forth—all echoed that name at which all knees shall bow, that only name under heaven by which man can be saved, Jesus Christ and him crucified. Unrenewed carnal hearts began to say, "these men are laying a snare for our animal sympathies—they are getting up a revival, we will shew them that we are men."

Services for the afternoon were announced from the pulpit, and prayers in families or groups, were recommended by the Preachers, while the efficacy of incessant, fervent and faithful prayer, was impressed upon the minds of God's people. In the afternoon, the services increased in solemnity; none but those who had prayed knowing wherefore. At sunset, or near about that time, every house was a house of prayer—all who had an interest in Christ, supplicating the salvation of souls dear to them in the body. At night, the solemnity of the services became still greater, and those who had been thinking of nothing but this world, began to think of the next.

About this time, a young man in the village, a Member of the bar, a stranger amongst us from the North, intimately connected with most of the young men of the place, and, by the harmlessness of his life, and the graces of his mind and heart, endeared to them, who had been ill of a fever, and visited and nursed by most of them, sickened unto death. It was awful—While the Preachers of God were laboring with the unction of the Holy Spirit, to carry their thoughts from this world to the next—it seemed as if God's finger pointed to the couch where the body was returning "to the dust as it was, and the Spirit to God who gave it."

On the second day of the services, the interest deepened in intensity. Politics and temporal matters began to lose their charm, and an anxiety about the soul was manifested by many.—Even those who professed indifference lingered around the spot, and by silence and attention seemed to feel it was holy ground. The faith of God's people began to strengthen, and they laid still stronger hold of the promises of their Master. They prayed for their Preachers—they prayed for an increase of faith in themselves—they prayed for their unconverted friends—they prayed for a signal manifestation of their Lord's glory. After the night service, those desirous of having the prayers of the congregation for the salvation of their souls, were desired to kneel before the altar, while the pious were singing the praises of Jesus. Amid the weeping of mothers and sisters—which was however confined to the limits of good order—almost all the unconverted females advanced to the aisle of the meeting house and knelt. The males were invited solemnly from the pulpit, and many were the anxious glances turned to husbands, sons, and brothers, entreating them to be partakers of the blessings to be invoked—and many were the fervent aspirations and prayers breathed silently to heaven, that stubborn pride might be broken down, and stiffened knees be bent, and stony hearts be broken and converted. Many a Felix trembled—but most of them said within themselves to their convictions "go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." That night the young man who had been ill, died; the delirium of his death-bed had precluded all concern for his soul, and none dared to say whether its departure was for death or for life.

The next morning at nine o'clock, the young persons of both sexes were desired to meet at one of the houses to be addressed. Scarcely one was absent. They were prayed for—they were exhorted—they were warned by the vacancy just made in their ranks by the angel of death, to prepare for an approaching eternity. The services of the day were continued in the wonted routine, beginning at 11 A. M. and 4 P. M. and again at half past 7; the intervals engaged in inquiry meetings of those who desired holy counsel touching their souls, and all the time spent by the pious in the silent, fervent prayer of faith. In the afternoon, besides the usual service, funeral ceremonies were performed over the corpse of the young man who had died. The night service was more than usually solemn; yet the proud Heart of man would not bow before the God who made it. The next day was the Sabbath, and the last of the four days. The preaching was overwhelming—not "with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power."—Knees which had not perhaps bent for years, knelt to the prayers of the pious that night, and the burning tears of penitence burst freely from broken hearts. A young man of intelligence, who had been filling the seat of the scorner, and had denied the divinity of the Holy Scriptures, was convicted of his rebellious sin, and solemnly warned on the next night, in the face of the congregation, his young friends of the error of their ways. As the four days first appointed, had elapsed, and many souls were still unconverted, though scarcely one unconvicted, it was unanimously requested by the householders in the village, that the Preachers should remain and see out the good work of the Lord. It was resolved to send for other Preachers, and for friends to come and take of the waters of life. In the mean while, prayer was offered up always, every where, and by all. It was the vital breath of the whole people;—the world was forgotten—newspapers and letters were unopened, untouched. The day of the week was unknown to many—the planter took no thought of his fields—the Lawyer heeded not his business—the merchant his counting house. The only interest was the soul—what shall we do to be saved?" As the Preacher rose in the pulpit almost every pious heart prayed that the Holy Spirit might be with him and strike conviction into the hearts of his hearers.

An incident, illustrative of the entire change effected by the manifestation of God's power, in the pursuits and desires of those converted, may perhaps be inserted with propriety. An old man of some influence in a neighboring Parish, deeply devoted to State Rights, had made at a political meeting, a fortnight previous an engagement to meet a young partizan in the cause, at this place on Friday last, to spend that night with him and carry him up to a muster, near his own house. On passing a house in the Village, he saw many horses at the door; he walked in, and to his great surprise found his friend reading aloud the Bible, and about twenty gentlemen, young, old, and middle-aged, listening with deep attention. On his entrance, no one rose—he took a vacant seat. At the close of the chapter, another of the persons present was called on to pray—every knee was bent, and the old man heard himself as well as the others prayed for. He was deeply impressed, and that may yet prove to him the most precious moment of his life.

The number of persons hopefully converted during the meeting, that is to say, those who handed to the Preachers their names, as having been under deep convictions of sin, and as having received an humble hope of pardon through the blood of our Redeemer, is forty-six. There are others still under strong convictions. Of the number of converted souls by far the greater part consists of males, which augurs well for the spread of the gospel. The effect upon the face of Society here is inconceivable, by one who has not witnessed elsewhere the victories of the Cross of Christ. Party Spirit is fled before the breath of the Spirit of God, which abideth in those who dwell in Christ. Political wranglings have given place to spiritual conversation; and personal hostilities have been washed away by the precious ointment of brotherly love. We can indeed say that our "wilderness is blossoming like a rose." As one of those who had experienced the blessing of this manifestation of God's glory through Christ, it was proposed to me by the Preachers present, to prepare for your Journal, such an account, as by the grace of God might let it be known what he has been doing for us here. Feeling myself not my own, but in God's hands, to do his will, I have, in that love of truth & justice which he requires of his servants, written the above, willing that it shall or shall not, as to you seems most conducive to his service, appear above my own signature hereunder subscribed.

Perhaps it may not be amiss to add, that before this, I have been very distrustful of Revivals in Religion, and expected but little good from our four days' meeting. I had also omitted mentioning the number of Preachers present. At one time there were as many as seven of various denominations; and it was one lovely characteristic of the meeting, that the Presbyterian, the Baptist, and the Episcopalian, were heard to unite in preaching the same doctrine—Jesus Christ and him crucified. Yours, &c.

WM. H. BARNWELL.

MISSIONARY.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY FALLEN.

Our readers will feel a mournful interest in perusing the following letter. It contains intelligence of the death of one whose name has often appeared in our pages, but who is now numbered among the happy dead. The departed one to whom we refer is the Rev. GEORGE D. BOARDMAN, the faithful Missionary among the Burmans. The letter is from Mr. MASON, and is extracted from the last Number of the "Baptist Magazine." It here follows.—Christian Index.

Mr. Mason's Letter to the Corresponding Secretary.

TAVOY, Feb. 12, 1831.

Dear Sir,—Having an opportunity to send to Maulmein immediately, I sit down to communicate the melancholy intelligence that brother Boardman is no more. He died yesterday, about noon, ten or twelve miles from this place, on his return from the Karen jungle, and was buried here on the mission premises, this morning at 7 o'clock.

You are perhaps aware that when he left Tavoy last April, he promised the Karens that, if possible, he would return and make them another visit at their villages. Soon after his return here, in December, the baptized Karens were in to see him, with many others applying for baptism; requesting him to make them his promised visit; and stating that there were many females in the village who wished for baptism, but were unable to come to Tavoy.

At my arrival, last month, I found that twenty-two Karens had been baptized, and brother Boardman preparing to go into the jungle to examine others for this ordinance. He told me the Karens were building him a zayat at the foot of the mountain, which he crossed two years ago, and were about coming in to carry him out there. When he first met me on the wharf, I clearly saw the characters of death in his countenance. He was unable to walk to meet me, yet unwilling to show me any thing but the kindest attention, he had himself brought in a chair to the jetty, to welcome me on my landing.—Though I looked upon him as a dying man, yet as I saw his heart was set on visiting his Karens, and as the doctor not only approved but even encouraged the journey, I did not advise against his going. Indeed I felt unwilling to deprive him the privilege of exhibiting so fine an illustration of the "ruling passion strong in death." Accordingly we proposed to start on the 31st of last month, the Karens having come in two days previous.

It was not contemplated, at first, that sister Boardman should accompany us, but on the morning of our departure, she felt unwilling to be absent from him without any one to perform those kind offices that his situation required, and which no one can perform like a wife. We therefore all started together in the afternoon, leaving the mission premises under the guard of a couple of sepoys with which the military commander had readily furnished us. Brother Boardman was carried on a cot bed all the way, excepting when the path around a precipitous hill was too narrow for two to walk abreast, and arrived at the place of our destination, on the evening of the third day, without any patricular exhaustion. During our stay, however, he so evidently lost strength, that sister Boardman on one occasion advised him to return;—he replied with more than common animation, "The cause of God is of more importance than my health, and if I return now, our whole object will be defeated. I want to see the work of the Lord go on. Ministers often wish to die in their pulpits, but dying in the pulpit is nothing to dying here in the midst of the Lord's work." Last Wednesday morning however, it became so apparent that he could not live long, that we deemed it expedient to return without delay, and on condition that we complete the examination of the females and of old men, that day, and I baptize in the evening he consented to return on the day following. Accordingly a little before sunset, he was carried out in his bed to the water side, and raising himself a little, he could gaze on the glowing scene. I had the pleasure to baptize in his presence thirty-four individuals, who gave satisfactory evidence to all, that they had passed from death unto life. After this, he seemed to feel that his work was done; he had said in the course of the day, that if he could live to see this ingathering, he could in a special manner say, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.

On Thursday morning we started on our return; when we arrived at the first house, its inmates refused us admittance. With some difficulty we got him into a covered corner of the verandah, in a very exhausted state. Through the assidious attention however, of sister Boardman, he appeared to revive, and he seemed materially different on the succeeding morning from what he had been for several days. Still it was very evident that the closing scene of his earthly existence was rapidly approaching, and we concluded with his approbation, to take him in a boat down a stream which was near, and which passes within two or three miles of Tavoy. He was carried out of the house, or rather from the house, by the Karens, who put him on board the boat, and sister Boardman and myself followed. But on turning to see if he wanted any thing, we found his countenance fixed in death, and it was difficult to determine whether he breathed or not. Thus did this indefatigable Missionary die, about his master's business, and surrounded by those in whose conversion from heathenism he had been instrumental. The evening before, on asking him what I should read to him, he said the thirty-fourth Psalm. He remarked a few dys ago, "I have no transports, no extacies; mine is rather a calm, settled hope, on the atoning blood of Christ." On Wednesday evening, he was bolstered up in his bed, and at family worship prayed, speaking with great feeling of the love of Christ, of wholly trusting in Him for pardon and justification from his "infinite sins," nor closed without remembering his poor Karens. Almost the last words I heard him utter were, to tell sister Boardman that he had felt to pray more for his children than he had ever done before.

Alas! my brother, I have lost a friend of whom I had just seen enough to love. But what is my loss compared with that of his widowed companion? You who knew something of the affection existing between them, may form some faint conception of her feelings. He was respected as well as loved, by all who knew him, and his funeral this morning was attended by all the European gentlemen and officers of this station.

Of the Karens I can say nothing at present, except that they are a very interesting people, and a people for whom I feel most deeply interested. We want here, at the present moment, a full set of the Infant skool apparatus, and whatever else is used in schools that addresses itself to the external senses.

Respectfully Yours, FRANCIS MASON.

From the Connecticut Observer.

The following letter, received by a lady in New-York, has been sent us for insertion.

Godoville, (Jaffna,) Jan. 14, 1830.

MY DEAR MADAM,—A few days since; while conversing with the girls in the Boarding school concerning their friends in America, who contributed to their support, your beneficiary C—— B—— was quite affected at the thought that you remember her in your prayers. When I mentioned it, (which I felt myself authorized to do, from your letters to Mr. Poor,) her eyes filled, and she turned her head to wipe the tears from them. A day or two after, she brought me a Tamil note to send you, of which the enclosure is a correct translation. You will I hope, receive it as an evidence that she feels grateful for all your kindness to her. Could you see the evidence that we do of her being a sanctified child, you would I am sure desire no other reward for any sacrifice you may have made on her account. She has long appeared in most respects like a christian, and for some months so decidedly so, that she has been admitted to the Church; and I think I can say, that none of the girls give as much real satisfaction. I trust dear madam that we depend on your continued persevering prayers for her, and for others of the School, that they may be converted, and do much for their benighted countrywomen. Indeed, your letters to Mr. Poor, have made me feel almost as though I could ask the same favor for my own dear children, who, though not heathen, must be born again. Mr. Poor is now absent to the neighboring continent, to return in a few days, or I should ask some message from him. Mr. Winslow joins me in the sentiments of esteem and christian love. Yours sincerely,

H. L. WINSLOW.

Oodoville, Jan. 4, 1830.

I write my dear mother in the Lord, the following. By the mercy of God, I am well, and wish to know much of your welfare. It is on account of your kindness, that I am able to write you this letter. You, my dear mother, who have received the Grace of God, have prayed much for me. When I heard that from Mrs. W., I was very glad and thanked God, and prayed to Him, and that he will hear my prayers, I believe. My dear mother, though I shall not see your face in this world, if I walk according to the commands of God, in the world to come we shall see each other. When I think of this I am very glad, but, if it be so, God must give us grace.—Though unworthy, I write this letter with humility, and beg you to read it from

*C——B——

*C. B. is supposed to be between thirteen and fourteen years of age. She has been supported eleven years. $143 is all that has been sent for her support.

From the Jour. of Commerce

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.—This Board met at New-Haven on Wednesday the 5th inst. at 10 o'clock A. M. Hon. John Cotton Smith, President; Rev. Calvin Chapin, and Eleazer Lord, Esq. Secretaries. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Miller, of Princeton, N. J.

The Treasurer's Report was read by Henry Hall, Esq. of Boston, from which it appeared that the total receipts of the year were $100,931 09, and the total payments $103,875 62, making the present debt of the Board $2,941, 53.

The Report of the Prudential Committee was read by Rev. Rufus Anderson, and Mr. David Greene, Secretaries of the Board. This report gave a summary view of the Board at all the stations, including the Missions at Bombay, Ceylon and Canton; in Southern Asia, Constantinople, Beyroot, Malta, and Athens; in the Mediterranean; the Sandwich Islands; and among the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, &c. The Report of each Mission was referred to a special Committee for examination, and was finally accepted and adopted.

The view of the several missions was peculiarly interesting and encouraging. The facts show that great success has attended the labors of the missionaries in the different quarters of world. At the Sandwich Islands, where ten years ago no native could read, there are now nearly 50,000 persons attending school, and 20,000 persons taught by the missionaries, or under the supervision, who can read all the books which have been printed in the language of the Islands. The printing at the Mission amounts to about 13,000,000 pages.

The Sermon before the board was delivered in the Centre Church by Rev. Dr. Woods, of Andover, to a large and attentive audience. Text Isai. 62, 1st and second verses. Subject, Hindrances to the spread of the Gospel.

On Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock, a large congregation assembled at the Centre Church, to hear extracts from the Annual Report, and addresses on the subject of Missions. The meeting was addressed by Rev. Drs. Cornelius of New-York, Lansing of Utica Beecher of Boston, and McAuley of Philadelphia. The great importance of Christian Missions to the unevangelized parts of the world was set forth by the several speakers in a clear, forcible and interesting manner, and much to the gratification of the auditory. At the close of the services a collection was taken up amounting to $314.

Yours truly, R.

Oct. 7, 1831.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, OCT. 20, 1831.

NEW YORK MAGDALEN REPORT.

On the first appearance of this report, we hesitated some time, as to the propriety of laying it before our readers, and finally came to the conclusion that although its details might be highly interesting to them yet they could not be useful in the country, and the facts, from the very nature of the case, were of such a character that we deemed the latter as indispensable to justify us in giving them publicity. Not having published the original report, we have not noticed, from time to time, as they have appeared, the proceedings of the grand Jury and of a public meeting which we have since seen in reference to this subject. But having received the address in behalf of the Magdalen Asylum, it is necessary in order that our readers (some of them at least) should understand the case, for us to state that the object of the Magdalen Asylum is to reclaim that class of abandoned females which, to the disgrace of human nature, is more or less numerous in all our cities, and to restore them to the paths of virtue.

This society made a report of its doings last summer, from which it appeared after as strict an investigation as the nature of the case would allow, that there were not far from 10,000 of this degraded class of females in the city This fact some how or other gave great offence to a certain class of the citizens of N. York. We have not the means of knowing whether those most disturbed by the report were in theory or in practice, or both the disciples of Miss Wright. Be this as it may, such was the feeling excited that the subject was brought before a Grand Jury which very promptly reported that instead of 10,000 they had ascertained from the closest scrutiny, the number of public prostitutes was only 1414 or somewhere about that number—we do not exactly recollect—at any rate the precise number was given—but it turned out that only five wards had been examined and the number of kept mistresses was not included in the number. These were included in the Magdalen Report, and if we understand right, formed not a small proportion of the 10,000. The finding of the Grand Jury rather threw ridicule upon those who had brought the business before them, and thus not answering the purpose intended, a great meeting was called and resolutions of the most inflammatory and abusive character were adopted—even threatening personal violence upon the most prominent members of the Magdalen Society. One or two of the papers of the city, besides those avowedly infidel, came out in great wrath—indeed one would suppose from the great prominence given to the subject, and by the feeling elicited, that the old saying about "the galled jade" might possibly not be mal apropos in their case. This suspicion has been greatly strengthened by every movement they have made. Indeed we can hardly conceive why all the most pious and respectable part of the inhabitants of that city—those who certainly have as much at stake and who ordinarily are foremost in promoting the interest of every society and institution designed to elevate its moral character, should be so little disturbed by the report in question, while those who esteem these aberrations from moral rectitude in the female sex, but mere peccadilloes, and in men, but evidences of a manly spirit, are so sensitive about thus spreading these facts before the community lest the good people of N. York should suffer in public estimation.

It is worthy of special remark that one ground of complaint against the report was, the indelicate language of some of its details—that such things were unfit to be placed indiscriminately in the hands of the young, especially in those of females. It can hardly be conceived how such a subject, at once the most disgusting and indelicate in its very nature, can be treated in very chaste language.—The object of the report itself was to shew the citizens of New York the extent of the evil that they might the more readily co-operate with the society that made it, in their endeavors to apply the remedy. And yet these very delicate souls who feel so much for the reputation of the city as to endeavor to excite the mob to aid them in preserving its reputation, by inflicting summary punishment upon the authors of this report—mark! mark! these very men have been the most industrious in giving publicity to this very indelicate document. They have published and republished its most exceptionable parts and proclaimed them upon the house tops. There can be no doubt therefore that their principal objection was the laying of these indelicate statements before the public. We are not much acquainted with the city of N. York, but every doubt of the truth of certain statements we have heard about the number of abandoned females that are supported by men laying claim to respectability, is entirely removed by the extreme sensitiveness manifested towards the report of the Magdalen Asylum. We have not room in our columns for the extracts we should like to give from the address before us. It must, we are confident, with honorable men, prove a complete vindication of the course this society has pursued and insure the cordial co-operation of every man and woman who is not made to "flutter" by the reproof which the very existence of such a society administers.

THE CIRCUS.

This village has again been visited by this nuisance. They exhibited here for a time without license, and the Trustees of our village prosecuted them and obtained a verdict of twenty-five dollars, and afterwards granted them a permit for which they charged five more, to continue their exhibition.

We have often been surprized that men of respectable standing and of good moral characters, occupying the responsible station of guardians of the peace, and in some measure of the public morals, knowing the corrupting tendency of such exhibitions, should give their sanction to them, by granting in such a case, an application for a license. The plea we know is that such licenses have never been refused. Whether this is true to its full extent we cannot say, but one thing we can say without fear of contradiction, that these pests of society will continue to visit our cities and villages—pick up the money of that class of the community least able to pay such a tax—lay temptations in the way of young clerks and apprentices to pilfer from their employers and guardians, to pay the expense of this pernicious show, until those who have the power shall arrest the evil. And if no village authority has ever done it, there must be a beginning or it never will be done.

And we would enquire from what village authorities would such a refusal come with more propriety and with better effect than from that of the populous village of Rochester? We presume that our Trustees would not be considered as friends or patrons of the Circus—they would not encourage their children or wards in frequenting it. We presume that they consider its influence as pernicious. The riotous and disgraceful scenes which were witnessed during the recent visit of this corps to this village, affords conclusive evidence that such exhibitions are the occasion if not the cause of much immorality—and this can be prevented by the refusal of our Trustees to license these exhibitions.

We are aware that oftentimes, much complaint is made of officers holding the responsible station occupied by these gentlemen without just cause, but we will leave to parents and guardians to say whether they would not exert all their influence to sustain a Board of Trustees who should be bold and singular enough to strike at the root of this demoralizing and expensive exhibition? Our Trustees are mistaken in supposing that it would be unpopular not to license these men. So far from it, we have no doubt it would be one of the most popular acts of their administration. We believe that there is virtue and good morals enough in Rochester to sustain its public servants in any act which shall promote the public good—diminish vice, and encourage virtue and good order.

We would ask them then whether they believe that they consult the good of their constituents, by giving these strolling players the privilege of levying a contribution of some two or three hundred dollars once in five or six months upon this village—whether upon the whole we are not seriously injured by the visits of these gentry? If they must answer in the affirmative, we do hope that they may not attempt to screen themselves under the plea that a refusal to grant a license of this kind is unprecedented. Let them have moral courage to make a precedent. Let it be said that the village of Rochester has elected officers who are not afraid to be singular—have not waited for some other village to set them the example before they dared to do an act which the good sense of the whole community, demanded of them. Let them not imagine that the "THIRTY PIECES" which this demoralizing exhibition has put into the village Treasury, will be more readily received as a justification of the act, than the same sum was on a former occasion.

DIFFERENCE IN OPINION.

The Richmond Compiler says, when speaking of the late negro Insurrection, that to prevent a recurrence of similar scenes and to keep the slaves in subjection, the laws forbidding schools and education must be enforced—by keeping regular patrols in the counties and cities—and the editor closes by saying "but others would go further still and ask if some means had not better be devised for striking a gradual stroke at the root of the evil."

If this last paragraph had not been connected with the sentiments above stated, we might hope that some humane and benevolent plan was alluded to for the benefit of the blacks, but take the whole in connexion and an inference of a very different character must be drawn. We are happy however to see that the editor of the Southern Religious Telegraph, a Presbyterian paper published at Richmond Virginia, recommends a remedy of another kind—that the slaves be instructed, and that pains be taken to imbue their minds with the principles of the christian religion. Which of these savors most of the benevolence of the gospel—whether to strike at the root of the evil by keeping them in total moral darkness—or (as is probably intended) to sweep them off into the darkness of the grave—whether this, or to teach them that they have souls to be saved or lost and so to cultivate their intellectual faculties as to fit them for the enjoyments and duties of civil society and the exercise of the rights of self government, is most in accordance with the feelings of men and the principles of patriotism—to say nothing of christianity—is not very difficult to decide.

But a difficulty occurs even here. If slaves should receive instruction and should understand the spirit of the gospel, would they not be likely to enquire of their teachers something about the import of such passages as "whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even the same to them." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This must be a truly perplexing subject to a slave holder who believes that our Saviour meant just what he said.

It appears to us that it would be well for those who are suffering so much under the increasing evils of slavery, to devise some plan to "strike at its root" pretty speedily. That the blacks increase faster than the whites is well known and we can hardly then see how any thing will be gained to the latter by delay.

We would just enquire of our Southern brethren who appear so sensibly to feel for their own misfortunes, in being slave holders, whether it would not afford to us, hard hearted northerners, an evidence of the sincerity of their regrets on account of the evils of slavery, which is now entirely wanting, were they to take measures to prevent the importation of slaves. Moreover, if slavery is a real calamity, we would ask why take measures to extend and entail this curse upon others? The vote on the Missouri question is not forgotten here!

"ROMAN CATHOLICS ARE IDOLATERS."

The two articles which we have published under this head over the signature of J. F., we intended to have called the particular attention of our rea-

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ders to last week, but in the hurry of business it escaped our mind. We hope if any have laid the paper aside without having given these numbers an attentive perusal they will not fail of doing so now. The arguments of the writer in support of his position are, in our opinion, incontrovertible—

We hope that J. F. will continue to favor us with articles on the subject of Popery which he appears so well to understand, and which are so loudly called for at the present time.

THE FATAL DUEL.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Observer, writes from St. Louis, to the Editors of that paper giving some particulars of the duel between Mr. Biddel and Mr. Pettis, which we noticed some days since. It appears from this statement and others that we have seen, that Mr. B. was the aggressor—that he exhibited the most rancorous enmity in the whole of the transactions which led to this murderous affair. This account says that they were both compelled as it were by their friends to fight—that the preparations for the meeting were public, and that so far from any attempt being made to prevent it, gamblers in the city were engaged in betting on the event of the duel.

Both parties exhibited the most perfect coolness and courage until they received their summons to the bar of God. When they found they could not survive, neither had the courage to face death. The courage requisite at such a crisis is not the courage of the duellist. Mr. Pettis asked the prayers of a minister of the gospel. Two of them conversed and prayed with him a few hours before he died.

Mr. Biddle in his last moments, received Baptism and extreme unction from a Catholic Priest.

And this is the kind of preparation with which two immortal souls have gone to give up their final account.

That men should thus act is, alas! too common to excite surprise—but what must be the state of public morals where such a scene can be exhibited in the face of the population of a great city without an attempt to prevent it, and where bets are made with the same coolness and publicity as if it were about the speed of horses or the prowess of two bullies.

We say again, let the friends of the Bible and of Sabbath Schools, be prompted in view of such things, to redoubled exertions to diffuse the light of the gospel, and to instil in to the minds of the rising generation the blessed and peaceful precepts.

HEALTH ALMANAC.

Among the new things of this day of novelties is the Health Almanac published by H. H. Porter of Philadelphia. It is a pamphlet of eighty pages, and from the cursory examination we have been able to give it, have no doubt that it is both highly interesting and instructive, and contains a great many useful hints and directions for the preservation of health. Although its primary object is not to promote temperance, yet temperance and health are so intimately connected that in its directions for its preservation, the entire disuse of ardent spirits is necessarily urged as indispensable.

We not only have no room for extracts from this valuable publication but have not even room to give the names of the M. D's. and D. D's. which are attached to the recommendations which accompany it. Aside therefore from the Calendar which is accompanied with an unusual quantity of useful matter, we might with propriety recommend the Health Almanac to every family.

It is to be obtained at Skinner and Phelps' Book Store one door south of the Rochester Bank, Exchange Street.

THE POLES.

The extract from N. Y. papers, which we give this week will satisfy our readers that the situation of this patriotic people is indeed desperate, if not hopeless. The fact is they are contending against immense superiority of numbers and against a power whose resources are next to inexhaustible. But the most discouraging circumstance in their case is their intestine divisions. The brave Skrzynecki has become unpopular and has been superceded in the supreme command. And the very ground of complaint against him, so far as we can judge, is that which should have inspired the people with confidence in his qualifications to direct her military forces.

He has been disposed to avoid a decisive battle which it is agreed on all hands, would be extremely hazardous, and in case of defeat, ruin to the cause of Poland must be the result. The Russians are pressing upon Warsaw, but with the forces which the Poles have in its neighborhood, together with the aid of its fortifications, there may be strong hopes that it might at least for a long time, resist an attack.

If the Russians are kept at bay until the approach of winter, their situation would be desperate and the Poles might improve any advantage which this circumstance might give them—but if the Polish commander is compelled by the popular voice to engage in the open country with the Russians, with such immense superiority of numbers against him, nothing apparently but a direct interposition of Providence can preserve them from total defeat, leaving Warsaw their Capital and strong hold, to the mercy of the enemy.

The Rev. E. Cornelius, is appointed Corresponding Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. in the place of Jeremiah Evarts, Esq. deceased.

HASTY AND CARELESS ADMISSION TO THE HOLY COMMUNION.

We republish one of the two articles which appeared in this paper last June on this subject. We do it because we believe that the writer takes a correct view of it, and because we believe that the minds of many christians need to be enlightened with respect to the duty there enjoined.

We hope that this article will be read attentively. We shall probably give the other article on the same subject next week.

For the Observer.

HASTY AND CARELESS ADMISSION TO THE HOLY COMMUNION.

Mr. Chipman:—I learn from a communication which appeared in your paper of the 2nd inst. over the signature of A., that the Editor of the Presbyterian and Dr. Rudd of Auburn, have had their fears very much excited, lest revivals should be brought into discredit by the "hasty and careless" proceedings of western men. I know not to what portion of the West, the two sage editors allude.—I write as if the West was a little hamlet or village, in which each inhabitant was not only privy to, but responsible for all that was done, and they seem to suppose that when they speak of evils prevailing in the West, they lay their finger upon the very spot. Now sir, I am a Western man, and have resided in the western country for more than 31 years, and yet I have never seen all the West. I am well acquainted with western New-York, and if the complaint of the haste and carelessness in the admission of members, is intended to apply to that section of the West, I should be prepared with A. to repel the charge. I know of no place where church officers are more careful in the examination of candidates for church communion, than this, and I think I can say, I know of no portion of Zion, where the members of our churches bring less reproach upon the cross of the Redeemer.

It is true, we do not generally require our candidates to perform a quarantine, but receive them as soon as they give satisfactory evidence of a change of heart. We do this,

1. Because we conceive it to be according to Apostolic precedent. We no where find either the Apostles or primitive ministers of Christ withholding the ordinances from [illegible] because they had recently [illegible] to light. Paul did not require the jailor to wait one hour, though it was between midnight and day light that he was converted. Philip did not require the eunuch to wait till he got home, but as soon as they came to the water he baptized him upon confession of faith. This was indeed, the universal practice from the day of Pentecost until the church became corrupt enough to substitute for the commandments of God, the traditions of men.

2. Because we believe that the ordinances of the church belong to the people of God, and no man has a right to withhold them, unless, in the course of a regular discipline. If it is the duty and privilege of a Christian, ever to make a profession of religion, and walk in God's ordinances, it is his duty and his privilege as soon as he believes; and we do not feel authorised to "shut up the kingdom of God against men."

3. Because we believe it prevents the convert's growth in grace, and lessens his usefulness to keep him out of the church of God. He not only needs the sincere milk of the word, but the care of the church and the children's bread for his spiritual nourishment, and to deny him either, is to deprive him of the means God has appointed for his edification and growth in grace. We should think it quite as rational for the parents of a new born babe to withhold from it a mothers care and its natural food, till they can see whether it would be a healthy child, as for the officers of a church to withhold from a young convert the means of his spiritual nourishment till they can see whether he can live and thrive without them. We are not among those who wish to see the experiment made, how a young disciple who is now ardent and engaged will get along, after he shall have become cold.—We wish him to enter the church with the ardor of his first love, and be so engaged in duty and strengthned by the word and ordinances of Christ's house, that "his path, like the path of the just, may shine brighter and brighter till the perfect day."

But to all these reasons for giving the children's food to the children, as soon as they are born, it is objected, that expediency requires a different practice. We are told that these early admissions fill the church with hypocrites, and distract our judicatories with discipline.

To this objection my first answer is, that if it were as the objector supposes, still, I should not feel authorized to attempt a remedy for the evil by a departure from scripture example. But I would answer 2ndly, by denying that early admissions are the occasion of the evils complained of.

The writer has been a pastor more than 18 years, during which time he has received into communion nearly a thousand members; and, though he has always suffered them to come into the bosom of the church as soon as they embraced the Saviour, he has never had half the difficulty with those early admitted converts, that has prevailed in many churches with whom he has been acquainted who have pursued the same practice. In all the time of his ministerial life, he has never had what he could call a disturbance in his church, and in the few cases of discipline which have occurred, he has never had an appeal brought from any decision of the session which he has moderated. The writer can say, that the most troublesome members he has ever had any thing to do with, are those who have come with letters from other churches and from churches too, where they were kept long on trial before they were admitted to the communion.

These, Mr. Editor, are some of the reasons which influence the conduct of western men, and we must be permitted to say that we shall, some of us at least, consider the practice of the Apostles and the command of the Saviour, good authority for Western New-York—the opinions of the Presbyterian and Dr. Rudd, to the contrary notwithstanding.

A Western Man.

For the Observer.

Mr. Editor:—A few weeks since I made an enquiry of the officers of the Genesee S. S. Union (through your paper) but have not received the information desired. I now wish to inform that body of officers in name that unless they show themselves officers indeed the business will go on by other hands, and they will, to a man be deprived of the privileges that they have for more than a year slumbered over. PUBLIC.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Does not the cause of Sabbath Schools in the limits of the Genesee Union, demand more attention than they have hitherto had. For the past year not an effort has been made or an agent been in this extensive field which is white already to the harvest, not a dollar has been contributed to its funds. Surely these things ought not so to be. I would first advise that a general meeting to consist of delegates from every county in this Union, be called at Geneseo during the present fall or on the first day of January, to take more energetic measures towards increasing the number of attendants at S. Schools and to stir one another up to duty in this glorious but too much neglected cause. S. G. T.

For the Observer.

LETTERS

TO A FRIEND ON THE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

NO. 2.

Mount Observation, Oct. 15, 1831.

Dear Sir,—In my last I simply stated the three great divisions which now exist in the Presbyterian Church in America. All the parties, however, hold each other in fellowship as yet; altho' the appearances seem to threaten a separation and schism in the Church. As to the creed of these three parties it would be difficult to arrive at any precise information. The sentiments of the High Calvinists, and of the Synod of Dort are in the Westminster confession, and well known to the world. The New Haven party are fully on the Armenian ground, as to original sin, and the ability of the creature; while in the middle party there is no common standard of Faith. It is likely there are different and very various shades of opinion existing on the minor parts in theology. Such must be the case while the public standard is not entirely coincided in, and no new one adopted in its place. I shall not therefore attempt any minute account of these subdivisions in religious sentiment which exist at this day, in the Presbyterian Church. Nor do I believe that there is a much greater diversity than in many other denominations, who perhaps care not enough about their own creed even to question its correctness and truth.

Let me occupy the rest of my paper then, in some remarks on the covenant of works, a point strongly asserted in the Confession. (Quest. 22d.) and a question concerning the soundness of which, on Scripture testimony, the puritanical Calvinists entertain serious doubts. That question sets forth that there was a covenant made with Adam;—that he was the federal head of the human race;—and that they of course sinned in him and fell with him, &c.—To a great many this covenant relation is not clearly taught in the Word of God. One of the prominent evils attending this doctrine is the shelter it affords to sinners when the claims of God upon them to repent is pressed on their consciences. Frequently have I had a conversation like the following:

A. God commands you to repent on pain of damnation.

B. I know he does.

A. But you can repent, if you will.

B. I cannot repent for I have lost my ability in Adam.

A. Do you think that a good and merciful God will damn you for not doing what is impossible for you to do?

B. Certainly, why not. I have sinned in Adam, and it is no more cruel that I should be damned for that sin, than to make me guilty of the sin itself.

A. But do you not think the confesion of faith is wrong on that point?

B. No, I am satisfied with the Confession: I believe it; my father did so before me and I am sure they were good Christians; and you are false. Sir, for you have sworn to receive the Confession [illegible] vow you [illegible] and [illegible]

Such would be the result of a conversation on immediate repentance, with vast multitudes particularly of the Scotch and Dutch people who believe the Westminster confession. As to there being another interpretation of that question; an interpretation to favor modern revival men, on the ability, I say it is pitiful equivocation. I am sorry to see it; and to see it so late as the "Disavowal," from Philadelphia. Why not come out and say I dont believe the confession on that point; I am honest: I have counted the cost, let it cost me my living and my life! But to deny a plain proposition point blank; and then plead that you are merely interpreting, is, I repeat it, pitiful. It will require no common skill in this art, to interpret a yea until you make it a nay. For my part I desire not such fruitful invention. Be this as it may, sure I am, that this bowing to a Confession and then turning against it, is the way to create discord and distraction far more than an honest and open avowal of sentiment.—Does it not leave room for the other side not only to suspect the piety of the persons who do so, but their integrity also? Such are some of the unhappy effects of the covenant of works, as learned by millions of sinners from the Confession of Faith. Such, moreover, the impropriety of subscribing and upholding a Confession which the subscribers (being ministers) preach, and of course, do not really believe. But this is not all the inconvenience. Every member that is received into the Presbyterian Church is sworn to the Confession. The same affirmative is usually required again on the Baptism of children and households: the Confession itself demanding this at the hand of the parties.

Now, how can such a minister demand in the name of Christ and of his church a Confession from an individual that has not only fallen in Adam, but also in him lost the natural ability as well as moral, to repent? It is well indeed for those who believe this doctrine, both minister and candidate to go through this ceremony. There, it is consistent. But suppose a minister of the new school should take this affirmation of an individual who really believed that he lost all ability in Adam; and suppose that minister should mount the desk immediately to preach a sermon on repentance; and to offer as one motive for this duty immediately, that the sinner could repent, how infinitely absurd would the conduct of that minister appear, both to his observing candidate; and to the eyes of heaven and earth! Let me suppose farther, that both the minister and candidate were of the same opinion and of the new school; that the minister requires his assent to the Confession of Faith, that the candidate tendered that assent; and then both minister and candidate believe and act contrary to it. How inconsistent! To me it is almost as absurd as to see an infidel swearing on the Bible.

The truth is, however, that there may be no intent at dissimulation or hypocrisy in either candidate or minister in the case. No; but both are cramped by the Confession of Faith as they read th word of God. Here they came in contact, I mean in entering the church, under the most solemn circumstances. They have their reservations and exceptions; but that is not the proper time to state or explain them. Thus some ministers have entered the ministry, and candidates the church, not wholly coinciding with the confession; and have felt it their duty to preach and pray a doctrine entirely opposite to this venerable instrument. This is the case with some, while others have entered in good faith with the Confession; but have since seen cause to change their sentiments on some points. They cannot well go out of the church to another denomination. They are grieved at creating division.—Presbyterians or Congregationalists in principle, the names of John Knox in Scotland, and of the Puritans in England, are dear to them as their vital blood. Offensive, as they are to the High Calvinists, and though differing from them on points of great moment to the success of the Gospel; yet, they are Calvinists vastly more than they are any thing else. Hence they remain where they are, so long as Providence will, in his sovereign ways, suffer it. To me however, it is plain, that either the Confession must be revived, and some of the "five points" smoothed and softened a little, or else this body of Presbyterians and the High Calvinists cannot live much longer in the same family.

With your permission, I will examine in my next, the Scripture proof for the covenant made with Adam, as laid down in the Confession of Faith.. Meanwhile, I am yours indeed,

AUSTIN.

REVIVALS.

Chautauque co. N. Y.—Rev. Abiel Parmele, Forestville, Chautauque co. N. Y. in a letter to the Directors of the A. H. M. S. says: "It is now probably the most interesting season which this region has ever witnessed. The spirit of reformation pervades not a small part of Chautauque county. A new state of things exists. Protracted meetings have become abundantly multiplied, and no less abundantly blessed. A Four days meeting has been recently held in Forestville. The result was about thirty hopeful conversions. The prospects of the church in Hanover are brighter by far, than have ever before been. On the 17th of July, a protracted meeting was in progress at Sheridan, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of 80 souls. Numbers of my congregation have attended, and as I trust, been savingly benefitted. On the last Sabbath fifteen were admitted to our communion, and there is still, a prospect of a larger increase."

In Evans Erie co.—Rev. Wm. Beardsly, in a letter to the Directors of the A. H. M. S. says: "since my last report, 45 have been received as church members, and five as candidates. Of these received, 11 were by letter from other churches, and one was a person who had been excommunicated for unchristian conduct. This man for two years or more, had been addicted to an immoderate use of intoxicating drinks, and had in consequence, been led into the company of the intemperate and profane, and could make a free use of their filthy and profane language. When under the influence of strong drink, which was not seldom, he was given to violent anger. His whole conduct, as well as the expression of his countenance, showed that he was wretched. He had become exceedingly enraged against the temperance measures and temperance friends, and especially against me. He had openly denounced me, and threatned with the most awful oath, that he would "drop" me. He had forbid me to enter his house, though his wife was a member of the church.

"About three weeks before the revival commenced here, he went to Canada, sixty miles distant, to labor there a few months. Soon after the revival began, he was troubled in spirit, though he could not tell why. For several weeks his distress increased, so that he spent sleepless nights and wearysome days. At length he received a letter from an old companion here, who had just renounced his sandy foundation of universal salvation, for a hope in the mercy of Christ.

"The news of what the Lord was doing in this place, and especially in his own family, as three of his children and a son-in-law had been hopefully [illegible] him to the heart, and was the means of restoring him to his right mind." Soon afterwards, he returned home, another man. He was "clothed and in his right mind."—His heart was broken for sin, and he manifested his penitence, by calling on those members of the church whom he had abused, and freely acknowledging his sin; and the first Sabbath after his return, he came forward unsolicited, before the congregation, and made so ample a confession, accompanied with such marks of repentance, that the church, at the next meeting, restored him."

Genoa, Cayuga co. N. Y.—Rev. N. E. Johnson, in a letter to the Directors of the A. H. M. S. says: "the late part of March, a revival commenced. This work of grace became soon pretty general, extended not only to the different sections of our families; but into families belonging to other denominations, residing within our bounds. The number of conversions within our families, is probably about sixty: the whole number of subjects of the work is not far from one hundred. Of these a number have joined the Baptist brethren; and more than thirty have united with us. Others are expected to present themselves soon for admission. We think that the whole increase to our church from the revival will be about fifty, and we trust that God is about to revive us again. The number of members now in communion is about 130.—Our Sabbath school is peculiarly flourishing; all the teachers, we have reason to trust, are pious, and seem to take a deep interest in the work. Our Temperance society has recently considerably increased in numbers, and is becoming more and more efficient. The church will now make another attempt to go alone, as it respects pecuniary matters.

"The work of God around us has been glorious; almost every church in this vicinity has been favored in a greater or less degree. Three days meetings have had a very salutary influence."

Pultney, Steuben co. N. Y.—In the last report of Rev. Samuel White of Pultney, it is stated that a work of grace has been experienced in that town, which has resulted in the hopeful conversion of upwards of one hundred persons. The work was uncommonly rapid and powerful. Forty-six have already been added to the Presbyterian church on profession of their faith, and an impulse has been given to the cause of temperance, Sabbath schools, &c.

DOMESTIC.

SLAVE INSURRECTION.

It would appear from the following letter, received in Baltimore on Saturday morning, from the Eastern shore of Maryland, that there was some ground for the apprehension of a rising on the 4th inst.

Easton, Oct. 6, 1831.

I suppose you have heard the various reports that are in circulation about the insurrection of the negroes for the last week or ten days. On Monday an express arrived from Seaford, stating that they had assembled in large force in that part of the country; last night we were aroused from our beds about 11 o'clock, with an express from the same quarter, saying they had assembled on the Nanticoke near Seaford, and had murdered a family and shot at others. The express was after arms—there have been some arrests in Easton, and we are not without considerable excitement.

P. S. 9 o'clock.—Another express has just arrived from Denton, confirming the news of the rising of the blacks—they have murdered Dr. Bain and his family, and commenced an attack on Seaford. We are sending arms and ammunition to arrest their mad career.—Balt. Pat.

It also appears that there have been movements in North Carolina.

The Raleigh Register of Thursday says;—We learn from authentic sources, that the plot of a meditated insurrection has been discovered amongst the slaves engaged in the Gold Mines of Rutherford and Burke. Several arrests have taplace in consequence, but no disturbances are now apprehended. There has been great excitement in that quarter, and many exaggerated statements have got abroad as to the extent of the plot, the design, and number of the insurgents, &c. A very serious plot has also been detected in Richmond county. We learn that there are about twenty negroes in the jail of that county, and that a number of iron spears have been found, manufactured for the purpose of carrying their diabolical plans into operation. The report of the Anson plot is, we believe, without foundation.

In consequence of the alarm excited by recent events, we learn from the St. Louis Beacon that the authorities are taking measures to exclude from Missouri all free persons of color, who cannot give security for their good behavior.

Ontario Female Seminary.—The examination, at this institution, closed on Tuesday last week, and we beleive to the entire satisfaction of those who witnessed the performances.

The intelligence and assiduty of Miss Upham and her five assistants, have raised the standard of improvement at this school as high, as at any similar institution in the state. While natural and intellectual Philosophy, (geometry, Botany, Astronomy, and other of the higher branches of science, are thoroughly taught—and while Music, Drawing and the other ornaments of Education, receive their due attention—we are happy to find that there is no neglect of the plain, useful branches of reading, writing and arithmetic, which are so often lost sight of, in the acquirement of a fashionable finish. It gave us peculiar pleasure to learn, that one assistant teaches only the art of reading, the perfection of which, is one of the most rare and yet delightful of female accomplishments.

It would by alike difficult and invidious to say which class excelled: each did its duty, with credit to its members, and to their teacher. Many specimens of composition were extremely creditable to their authors; and the several poetic effusions by which the examination was enlivened, shewed that "the Muses had a daugeter there."

The number of pupils, during the last session, was about one hundred, and we do not doubt that the next term, which commences in November, will shew an increased number.—As there is no institution offering greater advantages for instruction, and few at which the charges are so moderate as here, we cannot doubt that our Seminary will continue to be one of the most flourishing schools in the state. It is a fact worthy of record, that during the five years of its progress, and with an average of from sixty to an hundred scholars, there has never been a death, nor a case of severe sickness, among the pupils.—Ont. Rep.

Letters received for the last three weeks.—R. Lloyd; Wm. Goff; J. Dixon; S. T. Fairbanks; M. Noyes 2; N. Lewis; P. R. Reed; A. P. Haskall; J. S. Dodge; H. Wheeler; Marshall, Forman, & Co.; H. Smith; J. F. Baldwin; E. Judd; J. B. Van Dusen; A. Gage; R. Davis; E. Kinney; E. H. Platt.

FOREIGN.

EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

The news from Poland is of the most afflicting character, yet hopes are entertained by some of the London papers, that the whole may prove to be the fabrication of the Prussian State Gazette, which has time and again sent forth the most alarming accounts without the shadow of truth.

The London Courier says:—"It will be seen by our extracts from the Prussian State Gazette, under the head of "Poland," that the gloomy view which we took of the prospects of the Poles was but too correct. The Russians were, at the date of the last accounts, within a very few miles of the capital, which was comparatively destitute of resources, and, as it would appear from these accounts, under the control of the mob. The atrocities which were said to have been committed in Warsaw, show but too clearly that the Government no longer possesses the power necessary for the organization and good direction of the means which it still retained; and it is but too probable that at this moment the struggles of the patriots of Poland are at an end."

These extracts will be found in another column and in alluding to them the Times of the 31st holds the following language:

"We have as yet received no further accounts from Warsaw, to contradict or confirm those which we yesterday extracted from the Prussian papers. But in the absence of positive intelligence, we are happy to say that the more we reflect on the Prussian statements, the less probable they appear.

The Polish Diet and Government, which have hitherto exercised such unresisted power, and which have shown themselves so hostile to Jacobin or revolutionary excesses, are not likely, all at once either to have changed their policy or have lost their influence. In the Chamber of Nuncios a motion was made by M. Haysin, on the 1st inst. to address all the people and representative assemblies in Europe, on behalf of suffering Poland, and to call upon them to come to her assistance, in spite of the orders of their respective Governments."

"We shall not disguise our conviction, that if the accounts which we yesterday published should turn out to be correct, the cause of Poland is lost, and that, for a season, streams of noble blood have flowed in vain. The promotion of the two Generals above-mentioned to the head of the Government and the army, would be both the evidence of a deadly schism in the state, and the immediate precursor of Polish subjugation. All those who have hitherto defended the good cause with their swords, or supported it with their counsels, would refuse to range themselves under men whom they deem unworthy of their confidence, and who would betray them into the hands of their enemies; a civil contest would thus arise with a foreign foe at the gate."

Poland.

A letter from Cracow, states it was reported that negociations were on foot between the Russians and Poles.

It is again said, that the health of Emperor Nicholas is bad.

The greatest economy is used in provisioning the Polish Army. Ready money was scarce at Warsaw.

The Polish Gen. in Chief, and the Government appear to possess calmness in the approach of the Russian General Paskewitsh, whose army amounts to 70,000—and that of Gen. Rudiger to 30,000, of whom, 20,000 have already passed the Vistula.

The inaction of Skrzynecki is loudly complained of; a deputation from the Government had repaired to head quarters to examine into the facts and were invested with plenary powers as to appointing a successor.

Warsaw, Aug. 17.—The 15th and 16th, were days of horrow in Warsaw. The Patriotic Club on the 14th demanded that Gen. Jankowsky be condemned to death; and proceeded to the Castle, (with little or no resistance by the National Guard) and killed the prisoners of State; they then proceeded to the debtors and cheat's jail, and destroyed, in all 35 persons! The next day, they murdered a Russian captain who was a prisoner, and hung the Curator of the Schools. The existing Government was dissolved and Gen. Krukorecki was put at the head. It was reported that Gen. Prondzynski was appointed to the chief command of the army. Ten of the club had been arrested.

Belgium.

The French army has commenced its retrograde movement. It is said that there is a renewal of hostilities in Flanders. General Belliard has interposed to put a stop to the violations of Territory.

The Dutch are erecting strong batteries on the frontier

Russia.

The Empress, Aug. 8th, was delivered of a Prince. His name is Nicholas.

The cholera continues to abate, only 99 deaths in four days.

Hungary.

The peasants in the North Eastern counties have risen; firstly against the oppressive restrictions against the cholera; but they afterwards bent their vengeance against landowners, noblemen and physicians, alleging that the physicians wanted to poison the poor people.

Austria

The cholera has reached within 12 leagues, (and it is reported that it had broke out in the city) of Vienna; and remains about the same distance from Berlin.

For the Rochester Observer.

To the friends of Piety and Humanity in the county of Genesee.—Notice is hereby given, that the annual meeting of the following Societies will be holden at the east church in Bethany on the 1st Tuesday of November next, at 1o'clock P. M., viz.—The Sabbath School County Union, and the Genesee County Temperance Society. Reports on Sabbath Schools are to be handed immediately to Revd. Russell Whiting East Bethany, the Secretary of that Society: And as the Secretary of the County Temperance Society has left the county, Reports on Temperance may be sent Rev. G. Crawford of Leroy, who will act as Secretary so far as to prepare a report for the county Society. But this report is to be made up of reports from town associations. Without them we can do nothing. Let every Sunday school and town temperance association, send at least three delegates each—to represent their respective sections at the county meeting. All reports ought to be in the hands of the secretaries one week before the said meetings and those delegates who come to meeting with their reports in their pockets or on their tongues given by word of mouth, cannot be received into the county report. No more at present, from yours in the Lord. G. Crawford.

A protracted Meeting will commence in the Brick Church in Brighton, Tuesday Nov. 1st. Ministers & Laymen from the neighboring congregations are respectfully invited to attend

In behalf and by order of the church,

H. L. Miller.

Brighton Oct 17th 1830.

MARRIED,

In this village by Rev. Mr. Lyons, Mr. Robert A. Hall, to Miss Eleanor C. daughter of Mr. William F. Watson of this village.

In St. John's Church, Canandaigua, on the 11th inst. by the Rev. Ravaud Kearsay, Henry Morris, Esq. Attorney at Law, of Buffalo to Mary Natalie, daughter of the Hon. John C. Spencer.

DIED,

In this village on the 15th inst. Mrs. Eunice Follows, widow of the late Elkanah P. Follows, aged 51.

At New-Orleans on Sept. 23d inst. Col. George Fisher of this place, aged 45 years.

In Sparta Liv. co. Sept. 29th Widow Margaret McNair, aged 53.

With little to dazzle or interest the superficial observer, Mrs. McNair possessed much to endear her to her family and friends. By the early death of her husband, the whole care of providing for and training up her children, together with business of considerable difficulty devolved on her.—These arduous duties she discharged with uncommon fidelity and success; she watched over the temporal and spiritual interests of her family with uncommon solicitude; and was eminently a person of prayer: one who acknowledged God in all her ways. In counseling, admonishing, or reproving, she was kind, affectionate and faithful; and many besides her own immediate charge, will have cause long to remember her kind advice.—This was the meekness of wisdom. She felt much and prayed much for the prosperity of Zion.

In the near prospect of death she manifested together with a suitable jealousy over her own heart, entire trust in Christ for her whole salvation, and calm submission to the will of God. She evidently departed in peace.—Com.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	51 @ ——	Hams lb	$ 12 @
Pork, bbl.	5 @ 5 75	Potatoes,	@
Corn,	50	Butter, lb.	@
Oats,	25	Lard,	@
Beef, fresh	2 50 @ 3 00	Tallow do.	@
Pork, do.	5 @ 6	Cider, bbl.	@
Salt, bbl.	1 75

Rochester price Pot ashes $140 ton—Pearls 115

New Fall Goods.

W. BARRON WILLIAMS has removed to the Stone Store, No. 38 Stat[illegible] (formerly Carroll) Street, two doors above his former stand, and is now opening a new and well assorted stock of Goods, such as

6-4 real French Merino cloths, various colors,
6-4 German do from 9 to 14 shillings,
Merino and common Circassians,
Changeable and plain silks, Levantines, &c.
Drab Levantines, superior quality,
Extra rich Ribbonds,
Bolivar Leghorns, (cheap,)
Elegant worked Edgings and Insertions,
Figured and plain Swiss Mulls, (some fine,)
Long and square Merino Shawls, from $5,50 to 18,00
4-4, 5-4, 6-4 Thibet wool Shawls,
6-4 Cashmere, do
4-4 Gauze Merino H'dk'fs,
White Merino Hose,
Random and Fancy colored worsted do.
Random cotton, do.
Children's red and random worsted do.
do Grecian Boots,
White Bombazette, for Baptismal dresses,
Ladies and Gent's Horse Skin Gloves, white and colored,
Gent's Extra heavy Buck do.
Gent's Hair, Broccoli, Ladies' and common Camlet,
Fringe cloths and Flannels,
Broad cloths, all colors, from $1,75 to 10,00 per yard
Satinets, Fustians and Beaverteens,
Rose and Duffel Blankets,
Seed Beads, for safety guards, 19 colors, &c. &c.

Oct 18, 1831. 43 w6

NEW BOOK STORE.

THE subscribers would respectfully inform the inhabitants of Rochester and vicinity, that they are now receiving and opening a splendid assortment of BOOKS among which are Quarto BIBLES of every description.

Henry's Exposition, Scott's do. Brown's and Cruden's Concordance, Testaments, Theological and Classical Books.

An elegant assortment of PRAYER BOOKS together with a general assortment of Blank Books, Albums, Slates, Pencils, Wafers, Sealing Wax, Expointed Pencils, Wallets, Ink, Inkstands, &c.

All of which will be sold on the most reasonable terms. Store one door south of the Bank of Rochester.

The public are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves.

SKINNER & PHELPS.

Rochester, Oct. 20, 1831. 43

ANNALS OF TRYON COUNTY By W. W. Campbell, just published and for sale at the New Book Store, one door south of the Rochester Bank. SKINNER & PHELPS.

Oct. 17. 43

BARLEY.—The Subscribers will pay Cash for 500 Bushels prime quality Barley delivered at their Store.

ROSSITER & KNOX.

Rochester, Oct. 1831. 3w41

JUST Published the TEMPERANCE ALMANAC, FOR 1832,

containing, besides the astronomical matter, many useful hints, friendly admonitions, and solemn warnings, on the subject of Intemperance. Also,

THE CHRISTIAN ALMANAC, FOR 1832,

for sale by the thousand or less quantity, by

4w41 HOYT, PORTER, & Co.

"O SING PRAISES!"

THE subscriber takes this method to inform the Christian public, that he has in a good degree recovered his health and voice, and is again ready to engage in teaching Psalmody in those societies and churches in this village and vicinity which are anxious to revive this important (tho' too much neglected) part of Divine Worship. All who addressed to him through the P. O. will meet with prompt attention. Also, private instruction will be given to individuals living in the village who may desire it, on reasonable terms. D. CLARK.

☞ The subscriber wishes to dispose of a superior toned CHURCH ORGAN, comprising 8 stops. Price, $800. Piano Fortes tuned on short notice.

D. C.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

For the Observer.

"And she had a sister called Mary who also sat sens' feet, and heard his word."—Luke 10: 39.

The blest, blest seat that Mary chose,
How would my spirit fly
From life's dark cares, of heaven to learn,
Beneath that gentle eye.

That holy place—The Cherubim
Had veiled his glorious brow
At the same seat, where erring man
In meekness now might bow.

That lowly seat how dear to those
Who sin and are forgiven—
That humble place at Jesus' feet
Is all earth has of heaven.

Emmanuel! Though Judea's plains
No more thy footsteps know—
No more thy midnight prayer ascends
From Olives' sacred brow—

No more her children's wondering gaze
Sees thee awake her dead—
No more Gennesaret's stormy wave
Is hushed beneath thy tread—

Yet to thy throne of light we turn,
And at thy feet we bow;
Thou who on earth didst hear our prayer,
In heaven wilt hear us now.

And if to love and worship thee
On earth, meek sufferer,
Were sweet, how sweeter far in heaven,
Victorious Conqueror!

S. H. B. L.

From the Daily Advertiser

THE SCEPTIC

In early youth he had drank deep
Of that delusive lore,
Which knoweth not of holier things
Nor teacheth to adore;
Which maketh man the only lord
Of this fair world we see,
Nor owneth any future lot
Of bliss or misery.

And yet he had a gentle heart,
That fain would do no wrong;
And only sought that truth should shine,
Life's dim pathway along.
But he mistook her heavenly beam:
It was a meteor's glare
That led him with its lurid gleam,
Thus into error's snare.

The false devotion of his heart,
Ideal beauty claimed;
And on the altar of his mind,
Her idol incense flamed
And all that God-like intellect,
And lofty will had done,
He worshiped—as the Gheber bows
Before the morning sun.

And thus he passed youth's fervent years—
Nor deemed this earth was given
By its Creator, but to be
A nursery for heaven;
That all its perishing delights,
And evanescent bloom,
Were only quenched in death, to be Renewed beyond the tomb.

But oh! the chilling influence
Of that dark creed had stole
His better feelings, one by one,
And damped the generous soul.
He felt the fearful withering
Of all his bosom shrined,—
But thought the cold world's heartlessness
Had thus mildewed his mind.

There came a change—the light of truth,
With its resistless force,
Upon his mental vision broke,
And shewed his erring course.
He shuddered when he turned his gaze
Upon the waste within,
As conscience whispering in his ear,
Revealed each secret sin.

He turned him from his idols then,
And sought that better way;
And felt new hopes within him spring,
With each returning day.
He bowed himself in humbleness,
Before his Maker's throne,
And gave his contrite spirit to
That High and Holy One.

No more when ills around him rise,
And cankering cares molest,
Shall dark despair its bitterness
Infuse into his breast:
For as he lifts his troubled eye
In trembling hope to heaven,
He reads the gracious promise there—
"Thy sins shall be forgiven." G. H. S.

From the Pastor's Journal.

A SECOND VISIT: OR DELAY NOT TILL TO-MORROW THAT WHICH MAY BE DONE TO-DAY."

[Furnished by an anonymous correspondent]

Mr. H. and his wife had lately settled in the bounds of my congregation. They were young and just entering upon the world, with fine prospects of prosperity. They were amiable, intelligent, and well educated; but they had been educated only for time, and not for eternity. In the all important subjects of religion, and the soul's salvation, they were not instructed. However, since their residence in this neighborhood, they were frequent attendants at the house of God, and seemed to appreciate highly the privilege.

Not many weeks after their settlement here, I was introduced, and called to see them. I was cordially received, and the morning was spent very pleasantly in their company; and I was happy to think what an agreeable accession, the newly-arrived couple would be to the society of the neighborhood. I was particularly pleased with the intelligent conversation and amiable deportment of Mrs. H. She was not a professor of religion, nor had I any evidence of her piety; but she seemed willing and inclined to converse on religious subjects,—rejoiced that she had an opportunity to hear the Gospel preached, and expressed a desire to become a member of my Bible class, &c.

All this was very gratifying to me, and I looked forward, with hope, to the time when Mrs. H. would be an ornament, not only to our society, but also to the church of Christ; and I promised myself much happiness in social and Christian intercourse with her in future. But as this was my first call, and as I knew that she was unaccustomed to pastoral visitation, or to practical conversation on the subject of religion, I thought it would be prudent not to enter into a particular conversation with her at the time, but to defer it to a second visit. I expected to see her soon again, and supposed that I would then feel a greater freedom to inquire into the state of her soul,—to ascertain the grounds of her hope, or to urge upon her the necessity and importance of immediate repentance. I thought that a second visit would be more convenient season to talk to her about her soul's salvation. Our conversation, therefore, so far as it was religious at all, was very general. It was more about religion, than religion itself. And so I left her for that time, without learning even "what she thought of Christ," pacifying my own conscience, with the promise that I would soon see her again, and that I would be more faithful.

But, reader, learn the danger of delay! The next day I was taken sick, and one week after, while I was still confined to my room, the melancholy tidings were brought to me, that Mrs. H. had been thrown from a gig, and was in a moment bereft of reason! She never spoke afterwards. I saw her as she lay speechless and insensible upon her bed, before the breath left her body. But though she still lived, the avenues to her mind were closed forever! And as I looked upon her fractured and insensible body, I reflected,—that this was my "second visit!" This was the "more convenient season," in which I was to converse with her about her soul's salvation!

She is dead! She was suddenly cut off, without a moment's preparation. The cup of life was sparkling with animation at the instant it was dashed from her lips! She has gone to eternity. Whether to heaven or to hell, I know not. But should she be lost, will not her blood be found in my skirts, and her ruined soul testify, at the day of judgement, to my unfaithfulness!

My brethren in the Ministry, I record this, to my own condemnation; hoping that you may profit by my experience, and not to put off till to-morrow, that which may be done to-day. Especially where the great concerns of eternity are involved, and the welfare of an immortal soul may depend on a word spoken in season, do not defer that word to a "second visit." A. H.

From the Connecticut Observer.

'PREACH THE WORD.'—If ever there was a time when the truth ought to be exhibited clearly and pungently, it is now. Additions are rapidly making to the churches in almost every part of the country—but every addition of numbers is not an addition of strength. If the new members are ignorant of the doctrines of the Bible, and what is more, if they are unwilling to hear these doctrines in all their length and breath, better would it be for the churches if they were out of their fold. The man that shrinks back when the character or law, or government of God is exhibited, will be of no benefit to a church—No more will he who cannot on any proper occasion, bear to hear that he is not his own—but that in uniting with God's people he gave up himself and all his, to be disposed of to the glory of God. The man who shrinks back from hearing any doctrine of the Bible, however humbling—or any duty enjoined in the Bible, however much it may try his pride, or his love of the world, will add nothing to the strength or influence of a church of Christ'.—Such additions, are only additions of weakness.

When so many are enquiring the way of salvation, and forming resolutions to lead a religious life, ministers, we think, cannot too often illustrate the character of God, the extent and purity of his law, and the true nature and principles of his government. Let men know what God is, what his law is, what his government is, and then they can make up their minds intelligently to serve him. They will not be disposed to draw back from their purpose, when the truth is afterwards presented. "It is a good time, said a clerical brother to us lately, it is a good time now to urge on our people, the admonition of Joshua to the Israelites," Ye cannot serve the Lord; for he is a Holy God." Those who enter into a covenant with God, under the influence of such preaching, such views of truth, will be likely to be 'steadfast in his covenant.'—They feel in some degree what they undertake when they enrol themselves among the followers of Christ. They have counted the cost, and not united with the church under the influence of sympathy, or because multitudes are turning their feet to the way of life. 'FIRST pure, is the true motto of the church; and the spirit of the motto ought to influence the ministers of Christ in their preaching in such a time as this, and of their admission of members into the church.—If Satan can only corrupt the church, he cares not how fast it grows, or how large it becomes. He does not fear an increase of members in the church, but an increase of piety of love for the truth.

SISTERS OF PRESIDENT EDWARDS.

Timothy Edwards, the son of Richards, is well known as the first pastor of the church in East-Windsor, and distinguished alike for his sound and cultivated understanding, and exemplary piety. His wife is also generally known as the daughter of the venerable Stoddard of Northampton, and a woman of singular strength of mind, and superior education. He had eleven children, of whom President Edwards was the fifth in age, and the only son. These were all trained from their earlist years to habits of thought. The daughters were exercised in the same learning, and with the same exactness, as was required in young men for admission into college; and were then sent to finish their education in the schools of Boston. If such a course of female education be judged of by its influence on the daughters of Mr. Edwards, it is sufficient to glance at the names of their posterity as they are registered in this volume, to show its immeasurable superiority over all the lighter and more glittering accomplishments, which have been extensively thought sufficient for the sex. In the bosom of this family, where intelligence and piety and industry and social affection were blended in the constant intercourse of life, were formed the rudiments of all that the world has seen and admired in the character of Edward's. Such a family circle could not indeed furnish him the same advantages as were enjoyed in the schools of England; but it furnished others better suited to the high and holy purposes for which God, in mercy to mankind, designed him. Previous to his admission to College, his education was conducted under the exclusive direction, and chiefly under the immediate instruction of his father. His mother too, could have had no small influence in the formation of his habits; while his sisters, clustering around as a beautiful constellation, in the centre of which, he was destined to shine brightest, must have contributed their share to heighten & adorn the splendor of his early years. Four of them preceded him in the paths of learning; and at least two of them, and probably others in the paths of holiness. They were his first and principal associates. In their various pursuits he took a lively interest; by intercourse with them, his thoughts, from the first, were directed to noble objects, and his mind was enriched with useful knowledge; and from them no doubt, he learned much of that softness of manners, and purity of feeling, with which his greatness was so peculiarly adorned; while the faithful religious instructions which he received from his parents, and the mild and steady lustre of holiness which he saw in their lives, fastened indelibly upon him those impressions of divine truth, which, more than all other means gave an impulse and direction to the mighty operations of his mind.—Ch. Spectator.

MATTHIAS BRUEN.

What better [illegible] Bruen could have done for [illegible] Paris? [illegible] else could have done so well, just what he did by his peculiar personal influence and his gratuitous services, for so many benevolent institutions! Who, without just such qualifications, could have filled that identical niche of usefulness, which he occupied in the city of New York! How loud a demand is there in this land, and over all the world, for thousands of ministers furnished for their work with just the same endowments. Men of wealth must learn to give not only a portion of their substance, but their children & themselves to the service of the gospel. The churches want men who can give their time and their accomplished talents to the business of perfecting, conducting, and commending to public favor the great benevolent enterprises of the day. In the large cities, where there is room for a wide diversity of gifts in the ministry, they want men of refinement as well as men of strong and homely popular eloquence. And in these days men are wanted who can go, at their own charges, to every great capital in Christendom, where the door is open, and carry on the same work which Bruen commenced at Paris. It is a time for many to run to and fro in the earth; and men are wanted who can go, unpensioned and uncommissioned, not only to Athens and Constantinople, but to Alexandria and Jerusalem,—nay, into the heart of Persia and of India, preaching Christ and him crucified to the polished Meollahs of Shiraz and the Pundits of Benares. —Ib.

DO YOU PRAY IN SECRET?

Attention to secret prayer is one of the strongest evidences of spiritual life. Other duties may be performed to be seen of men, but closet devotion can be induced by no such motive. It is a private transaction between God and the soul, to which the church and the world are strangers. It may be neglected without incurring censure from any being but one, and probably is neglected by all who are more anxious to maintain a standing before man than God.—Reader, is this your character? Do you join in social prayer, and yet habitually neglect your closet! Is not this hypocrisy with a witness! What would you think of your neighbor who would converse with you in the most familiar manner in public but would never speak to you in private! What does God—what do angels—think of your pretended friendship displayed in the congregation, when you are for weeks and months without praying in secret.

If you would measure with a high standard of personal piety, pray in secret. Without frequent meditation and self-examination your imperfections will remain unperceived. This cannot be done in a promiscuous crowd. It requires retirement from the world. While connected with the multitude you may suppose yourself to be in possession of excellencies which you only feel by sympathy. By retiring and exposing your naked breast before God, and entering into the secret recesses of your heart, you may find yourself entirely destitute of them. Only by such private reckonings with the heart can its errors be detected.

Without secret prayer we have but little hope that you will derive benefit from public ordinances. Your closet is the place for meditation, without which, hearing of the word will be vain; it will neither affect the heart nor amend the life. This requires the truth to be pondered and brought home. Effects of a momentary character may be produced in the congregation, but unless you retreat from the world and record on your mind what you hear by serious meditation, the impression will pass away like the early dew. If you will "grow in grace," attend to secret prayer. Backsliding often commenced at the closet door. First secret prayer is performed in a careless manner, then attended to irregularly, then perhaps neglected altogether.

Some complain of a want of time to attend to this duty; but surely this complaint is unfounded. Out of twenty four hours you can find time enough to pray at least morning and evening, in your closet if you are disposed so to do. You may rest assured, that when you have not time to attend to duties which are binding, some portion of time has been misapplied.

Perhaps the greatest hindrance to secret prayer is spiritual sloth. This is the CANKER WORM that destroys the pious resolutions of Christians, creates difficulties, and raises objections to every duty that requires the least sacrifice of ease.—Reader, do you stand reproved?

Then, suffer a word of exhortation. You profess religion—have turned your back upon the deceitful honors, riches, pleasures and applause of this world—and have set your face towards heaven; you expect ere long to join an august assembly where your soul will be filled with the most sacred delight—have its nature exalted—its thoughts elevated—and its happiness confirmed forever. This world of glory may burst upon you to-morrow. In prospect of it can you any longer spend your time in lazy inactivity!

The little ants for one poor grain,
Labor and tug and strive;
Yet we who have a heaven to obtain,
How negligent we live!

Your dying testimony will soon be demanded in favor of the efficacy of religion. Remorse for present neglect of duty at that solemn period may render your testimony doubtful.—Rel. and Lit. Intelligencer.

LUTHER'S PRAYER.

Loveville, Del. Sept. 19th, 1831.

Dear Brother,—While the Lord is visiting his Zion, awakening, convincing and converting sinners; reviving christians, and uniting them in such bonds of christian affection that the gazing world are constrained to say, "Behold how these christians love one another," it is heart rending to see leaders in the affairs of Christ's kingdom, and Editors of religious publications pursuing such courses as are directly calculated to destroy the purity, peace, and unity of the church. I do heartily wish that the following petition of the great Reformer was in the mouth of every christian, and offered up from every heart, with such faith and fervency as would bring down an answer, not of judgment, but of mercy, from "The Lord" who reigneth.

Luther's Prayer.

"From vain-glorious Doctors, contentious Pastors, and unprofitable questions, the good Lord deliver us."

Respectfully yours,

T. LOVE.

REPLY.

Rev. and dear brother, I subjoin to Luther's prayer my most hearty Amen, and Amen. Yet, let us not forget that the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther was required, by a sense of duty to his divine Master, and the circumstances in which Providence located him, to spend much of his life in religious controversy, with those who claimed all the othodoxy, ecclesiastical order, love of the church, and piety, then to be found on earth, to the exclusion of all the new lights, and the new school of the Reformation from popery.

Of thirty volumes folio which he wrote about 25 it is said, are wholly controversial.

Let us remember that large portions of Paul's epistles are controversial: and that all saints are required to contend earnestly for the faith [illegible] delivered to the saints.

[illegible] Commend you to God, brother Love, that I have heard that he is reviving his work among the people of your charge, and converting many sinners in your neighborhood. Urge on the good work of grace, by prayer, and truth, and faith. Give your people no new and needless knowledge of old heresies. Alarm none of them by proclaiming dangers which do not exist, and denouncing brethren as heretics who preach the same gospel that you do yourself; and let us strive together for the building up of the Presbyterian church in every thing which is spiritually good, great, useful, and glorious. You are Love by name, love by grace, a dweller at Loveville; and may the God of love be with you.

I remain yours in the best bonds,

E. S. ELY.

From the Boston Recorder.

MORTALITY OF THE EMIGRANTS AT LIBERIA.

Some individuals are diposed to consider the difficulties in founding the colony at Liberia altogether unprecedented, that the mortality especially has been such as to render it presumption to induce any more emigrants to go thither.—Now such persons are very faint hearted, or they must have a very slight acquaintance with the facts of history. The English attempted to colonize Virginia four times before they succeeded. In 1586, the whole colony after remaining one year in Virginia were transported to England. In the third attempt, the ship in which the emigrants sailed, was taken by the Spaniards and carried into Spain. In 1607, a few months after the first permanent settlement, the storehouse at Jamestown took fire, and the whole settlement, fortifications, arms, and a great part of the goods were consumed. In the same year, from May to September, fifty persons died. In November, Capt. John Smith, the father of the colony, was taken prisoner by the Indians. In 1610, a dreadful famine wasted the colony.—This period was for many years distinguished as the starving time. The colony was reduced in six months, from five hundred persons to sixty, partly by the famine and partly by the Indians. In 1617, they amounted to only 400 souls. In 1619, twelve years after the settlement, after £80,000 of the public stock had been expended, there were remaining in the colony, but about 600 persons, men, women and children and about 300 cattle, and the Virginia company was left in debt nearly £5000. Now compare these facts with what has transpired at Liberia. The colony in Africa has not experienced one half the adversity which the Virginia emigrants experienced. Two hundred persons out of 1500, that came with John Winthrop to Boston in 1630, died in six months.

Men may sacrifice life in the pursuits of gain at Havana, at Calcutta, and at any other unhealthy spot on the globe most prodigally, and no complaint is made. But if a number of individuals fall sacrifice in a benevolent enterprise, in an effort to pour the light of eternal life on dark and forlorn Africa, why it is a criminal waste of human life. But no, it is not thus. Ashman lived only six years after he went to Africa, but he lived nobly. Mills lived hardly six months, but Mills lived not in vain. His example shines with no feeble lustre. His voice speaks from the depths of the Atlantic, and it will speak till Africa is free. Anderson and Lott Carey and Randall and Skinner were soon cut down, but their names will live till time shall be no longer.

Noble Resolution of the New-Jersey Bible Society.—At the Annual Meeting of the New-Jersey Bible Society, in New-Brunswick, on the 30th ult. the following motion was made by the Rev. Wm. T. Hamilton, of Newark, and seconded by Samuel Bayard, Esq. of Princeton.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Society, it is expedient that the different Bible Societies in New-Jersey should unite their efforts, with the view of supplying, as soon as it may be practicable, the inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands with copies of the Holy Scriptures, or with such portions of them as may be translated into the language of those Islands.

The adoption of the resolution was advocated by the gentleman who submitted the motion, and also by the Rev. Dr. Miller, and Professor Maclean, of Princeton, and by His Excellency, Peter D. Vroom, Governor of the State. The Rev. Dr. Alexander, chairman of the meeting, also favored the meeting with an expression of his views in regard to the proposed measure, the expediency of which, he had suggested at the last annual meeting. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and an Executive Committee was appointed to correspond with the other Bible Societies embraced in the resolution, and to adopt such other measures as the committee may consider expedient, in effecting the purpose of the society.—N. Y. Obs.

From the Charleston Observer.

The Revivals in this State are, every week, extending and assuming a more interesting character. In Hamburgh, a town on the Savannah River, opposite Augusta, we learn that thirty-five persons have recently professed a hope in Christ, and that a number more are deeply anxious. In Edgefield District, there are no less than ten or elven churches which are enjoying a refreshing season. Since the commencement of the revival, it is said that nearly one hundred a week have become hopeful subjects of grace. The revival mentioned in our last, as having commenced at Gillisonville, bids fair to be extensive and powerful.—Other churches in the vicinity of the place are beginning to feel its influence. We understand, also, that a revival has commenced at Barnwell C. H. and in a church nine miles above. From Pendleton we have no recent accounts. The revival at Darlington still continues, and has extended to other churches in the District. In a number of other places there is an unusual attention to religion; and at no time since our acquaintance with the State, has this field appeared so white for the harvest as at the present. From the East and the West, the north and the South, cheering intelligence has been received; and we do hope that it may tend to awaken those who are slumbering, and give additional energy to those who are diligent in their Master's work. Its language is—"The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Such visitations of the Spirit at our very doors cannot be slighted with impunity. Churches that can slumber through a season like this, may expect that their last state will be worst than the first.

West Indies.—Emancipation of Slaves.—We have great pleasure in being able to inform our readers, that the British Government have determined on the emancipation of the slaves belonging to the Crown in the various conquered colonies. Directions to this effect have already been forwarded to the Governor of Berbice, and in a few months we may joyfully anticipate that our Government, at least, will be purged from the foul stain of slavery.—London World.

The Utica Observer says, that a man in Newport, Herkimer co., N. Y. received a letter, enclosing 'Ten dollars borrowed without leave, six years ago.'

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. The subscriber as Agent for the above, mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Joh Northrup deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on me for settlement within six months from date.—Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.

6m 38.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. McCoy & Co. begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an elegant assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets, &c comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. tf.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For sale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber,
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eeaves Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY

Rochester, June 15, 1831 25tf

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware, Communon setts. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.

Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice. May 5, 1831.

20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ROCHESTER BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for mens and women's Boots and Shoes. Chochineal smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella of different colors some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. JACOB GOULD.

22tf

C. J. HILL,

HAVING taken the Stone Flouring Mills near the east end of the Bridge, and established himself in the Flouring business, has removed his Office to the Brick building (opposite the mills) recently occupied by Messrs Ford, Bissell &co., where he will at all times pay Cash for Wheat.

Rochester 20th Sept. 1831. 3tf

DISSOLUTION.—The firm of Bloss & Harrison is dissolved by mutual consent. All persons owing said firm by note Book account or otherwise, are requested to call and settle with J. B. Bloss, to whom all the accounts are assigned and who will pay all demands against said firm.

J. B. BLOSS,
M. A. F. HARRISON.

The subscriber still continues the business where any call on the Dry Good and Grocery line will be promptly attended to, and Cash thankfully received. J. B. BLOSS.

February 7 1831. tf.

SCOTT'S & HENRY'S Commentary. Persons by uniting may obtain them by immediate application at the Wholesale Price. Inquire of

MITCHELL LODER,

No. 34 Exchange-street, or
Mr. SIBLEY's Auction Store, Buffalo-st. 83tf

Fever & Ague overcome at last.

UPWARDS of Two Hundred cases of Fever and Ague have been cured in this neighborhood within the last year by one prescription.—From an acquaintance with this perplexing disease many have thought that no medicine could reach the seat of the difficulty,—this was the prevailing opinion until Mr. Thomas Andrews, Druggist from the south introduced from thence "Fenwick's Vegetable Specific." The price was so low that the poor to whom health is doubly valuable, might in this respect be on a level with the rich. Being charged at $1 per Bottle, several were induced to make trial of its virtues. Had the medicine even failed in this climate where it is so much needed, yet we must have thanked the Doctor while we could not have blamed the medicine; for it often happens that a cure in one climate may be sure death in another. Fortunately, however, not so with this. The success which had attended it at the south has been fully realized in this vicinity for many miles around. Sometimes a single Bottle is sent for a distance of 30 miles and repeatedly for a different member of the same family.

The subscriber is willing the fact should be known that in three instances out of the great number cured a second bottle was required, and in one case for some cause or other the individual was not cured, and these are the only instances known where one bottle has not restored health. The price will be continued at one dollar per bottle, to bring it within the reach of all, and will hereafter be sold in Rochester at wholesale and retail, by LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,

At the sign of the alligator, No. 11 Carroll-st.

6w36

NEW GOODS.

At No. 46.—Carroll-Street.

W. BARRON WILLIAMS, has just received a well selected stock of fresh SPRING GOODS, which will be sold low for Money. 19tf

Rd. 1831

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

SIR—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Secry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, Sheriff.

Rochester, Sept. 20th, 1831. 7w39.

BY virtue of one Execution issued out of the court of Common Pleas, in and for the county of Monroe and to me directed against the Goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen B. Bartlett I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz. all those certain pieces of land, situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe being—one lot, lying near the great falls of the Genesee River, beginning at the N. W. corner of village lot No. 104—three chains northerly from the S. W. corner of village lot No. 102, on the corner of Atwater and Clyde street and running from thence north, 3° west, along the Easterly line of Clyde Street 2 chains, thence north 52° 30', East two chains and fifty links, thence south 15° east, two chains, thence south 63° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of out lots number five and six, reference being had to the map and field notes of David Hudson, Esq. in the survey of lots numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7 and being the same land that was conveyed to Stephen Bartlett, by W. F. Shearman and wife by deed of June 25th, 1831—which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the Exchange in Main street in East Rochester on Monday the 19th day of Nov. next, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 20th 1831.

For JAS. SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. MCRAKEN, late Under Sheriff.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Pattlock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office in the county of Monroe in liber 8 of Mortgages at page 284 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 16th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division now Monroe, and state of New York viz.—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West fifteen of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz.—East west, and south by the lines of said Drake, and Northerly by aline to be run parallel to the said south line and at far distant therefrom as to include the said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeable to the survey of James Smedley Esq.—excluding all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovel, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

L. ADAMS, Att'y. 23 14w.

IN CHANCERY.

France Williams, Complainant, vs. Peter Brocket and Elizabeth his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Veazie, William Hardwick, George A. Avery, Walter Llewellyn Evan Griffith and Matthew Brown 2d, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester on the 22d day of August, 1831, I shall sell at public Auction to the highest bidder, on the 6th day of October next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in said village of Rochester, in said county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land and lot in the said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Wall or Alley and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot conveyed to the said Peter Brocket by Harmon Bissell, on the twelfth of the month of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, in the Everard Peck purchase of Enos Stone."

ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery.

Rochester, Sept. 28th, 1831.

Postponement.—The sale in the above cause is postponed till the 20th day of the Eagle Tavern in the village of Rochester, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day.—Dated 6th October, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in liber 8 of mortgages, at page 438 executed by Ezekiel Barker to Josiah Bissell Junior, executed, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and sixty four cents, being the whole money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land being and lying in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, with a gore of the No. Seventy two, bounded south by lot nr. 28, east by part of lot No. 7 north by lot No. 30 and west by Clinton Street, containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK, } Executors of
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS, } deceased.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys. 29w44.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the eleventh day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, executed by Moses Adams of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place, bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829, recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 12 of mortgages at page 305, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises owned by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Jonathan Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twenty-ninth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number seventeen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows viz.—North and south by the east north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the [illegible] and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres [illegible] will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY,
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 44.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.

Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3,00. In advance, $2.50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00.

Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

DOCTRINAL.

From the Philadelphian.

WHY ARE YOU NOT CONVERTED!

"The only possible argument that I can or would urge against an immediate attention to religion, is that I have not yet had the feeling that prompted you to attend to it, and which prompts every other christian. You did not attend to a remark made in my last letter, about your not seeking salvation some two or three years ago. You have had the same opportunities always, that you now have. You have hitherto felt much solicitude on the subject, (as I now do) but what is the reason that you were never before sufficiently excited to come to the point? Why it was for this plain reason, that God never before sent his Holy Spirit into your heart, with a determination that he should not return without effecting his holy purposes, and that was of bringing you to a full conviction of your selfishness. By this do not understand me to mean, that God wills our destruction, as well as our salvation; no, I believe that the creature is as much the instrument of his own conversion, as the Creator is the author of it."

The words above quoted were written by an ingenuous young lady of Georgia, to her female correspondent in this city, who affectionately urged upon her immediate repentance for sin, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Should the question be proposed to each unconverted reader of the Philadelphian, Why are you not converted? he would probably give no better account of himself than she has done. True it is, that those who do not attend in earnest to the salvation of their souls do not desire to attend; and not desiring, they do not will to attend. If they had right feelings on the subject, they would from those feelings choose to seek the Lord, while he may be found; and to call upon him, while he is near. He who feels no concern, will pay no attention to the subject of the deliverance of his soul from death; and he who pays no attention to the subject will never know the only true God and Jesus Christ, so as to have everlasting life. If sinners are lost, they will not come to Christ: that is, they do not will, choose, determine, purpose, or resolve now to come to him for life.—They will to pursue the course of moral agency, which ends in the world of everlasting sin and misery. God requires them to turn from sin to holiness, from rebellion to penitence, from hell to heaven; and if they turn they are at the same time turned; which is the same as to say they are converted. If men choose not to turn, or, which is a different thing, do not choose to turn, they are reasonably blamed, and charged with their own destruction. These following statements; I hold to be true, and undeniable.

If sinners should will to attend to the subject of their own salvation from sin and hell, they then could and would attend to it.

There are sufficient reasons offered in the gospel why sinners should will to attend to the things of their everlasting peace.

If sinners should attend, as they ought and might, to the subject of religion, they would then be convinced of their own sin and misery.

If sinners were thus convinced, they might as natural men, from reasonable, natural considerations, desire deliverance from sin and misery.

A sinner thus desiring deliverance from sin and misery, might believe that God is able and willing by Christ Jesus to graft everlasting deliverance from sin and misery.

Having this belief or faith, the sinner might, from the influence of it, in connexion with his desire to be saved from sin and misery, will to call on the name of the Lord, for salvation.

If he should thus will to call on the name of the Lord he would do it; and

"Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

This salvation would not be granted on account of any holiness or moral excellence in the prayer of him who should cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner," but would be a free gift of God, conferred for Christ's sake, on a righteously condemned sinner.

Another concatenation of truths may be thus presented.

God commands all men to repent and be converted. It is the duty of all men to repent and be converted. There is no impossibility of repenting in the case of those whom God commands to repent; for to require an absolute impossibility would be an impeachment of God's justice and goodness.

To repent, therefore, must be a possible duty in the sinner; and to speak of an impossible duty would be the employment of absurd language.

Every possible duty required of him, the sinner ought to perform; and for not performing must be blamed.

Every sinner who hears the gospel and is subject to the teachings and strivings of the Holy Spirit could repent, if he should will to repent.

He ought to will to repent, because such an act of the will is not impossible on his part; but is a reasonable duty.

He who wills to repent, does actually repent.

He who truly repents of sin is converted; and in the moment in which a sinner voluntary turns to God, he is turned by a divine influence, which does not in the least interfere with his own proper, efficient agency.

If a sinner does not come to Christ for salvation, it is because he does not will to come, that he may have life.

If he does not will to come, it is because the inducements to come do not amount in his mind to a motive for thus willing to come.

In other words, if he does not will to come, it is because his feelings are not such as to be followed by a determination to arise, and return to God.

And if his feelings are not such as to induce him to will to go to Christ for everlasting life, it is because his mental views his conceptions, his judgment, his belief, his thoughts, are not such as to occasion right feelings, and among the rest a desire to go to Christ for salvation.

If the sinner's mental views, if his thoughts, his belief, his judgment, are not such as to occasion a desire; and a consequent will to go to Christ, it is because he does not see what is to be seen; because his eyes are closed to the light which shines upon them.

If the eyes of his understanding, however, continue thus darkened, it is because he loves darkness rather than light; and will not come to the light lest his deeds should be reproved, and he should be converted and healed.

If here again it should be asked, why he loves darkness rather than light, we must answer, that it is because he has no just apprehensions of the evil and odiousness of moral darkness, and of the desirableness and excellency of light in the Lord. His want of love must be charged to his want of right views of lovely objects.

Again if you ask, why a man has in his native estate no right apprehensions, no right thoughts of God, and is prone to all such evil intellectual operations as are followed by morally evil feelings; which occasion morally evil volitions; and consequent wicked voluntary conduct; I can only say, that he is a free agent; and on account of Adam's sin has been brought into such a naturally evil condition as renders his free moral agency certain to be sinful, until the Holy Spirit enlightens his mind, brings him to right views, and by right views produces right feelings; and by right views and feelings moves him to holy volitions, and voluntary exertions. From the condition in which God has placed every man since the fall, and from the naturally evil nature which God causes him to inherit from Adam, the mere possession of which is no crime, the whole free agency of man in relation to the moral law is certainly, but not necessarily, contrary to that law. This condition and naturally evil nature constitute our state of trial; which may be called "an estate of sin and misery;" because it is the consequence of Adam's sin, and a state which all certainly but freely, without any necessity of transgressing the law, do actually sin and experience misery.

In this estate we might all be left to sin on, by a free agency, contrary to law, and to be accursed for ever in our sins, but if any one begins a course of holy, moral agency, he begins it by thinking aright; and he thinks aright only when under the gracious illuminating, guiding, and exciting influences of the Holy Spirit. Hence we learn the necessity of prayer and instruction which comprehend all the means of grace. We are to teach men that they may understand, believe, feel, will, and exert themselves in accordance with evangelical duty; and we are to be fervent in prayer, that when men speak the truth, or sinners read it, God may effectually call them by his Holy Spirit.

Without any agency of the Spirit to excite a man to holy mental acts, he may act amiss and may be justly punished according to his criminality; but without the strivings of this same Spirit he would never understand aught, believe, become willing, obey the gospel, and enter into everlasting rest.

Here then we have free agency, accountability, and human efficiency; and here we have also the dependence of sinners on the Holy Ghost for their first turning to God, and every subsequent instance of evangelical obedience, without any collision between the grace of God in saving those who believe, the justice of God in damning those who do not repent, and the free agency of man whether he believes or disbelieves, whether he rebels or sumbits, whether he obeys or disobeys, whether he is saved or lost, for ever los.!

TEMPERANCE.

From the N. Y. Observer.

THE FRUITS OF INFIDELITY AND INTEMPERANCE.

The following account (extracted from the Auburn Free Press) of the downward progress of a young man from respectability to degradation, and from moral and virtuous deportment to the commission of a most horrible crime, may serve to warn our youthful readers to beware of infidelity and intemperance.

In the summer of 1811, there came a young man to reside in my neighborhood, under very favorable circumstances. He was from a distance, and was a stranger; but was introduced under the patronage of a near relative, who was a gentleman of the first standing in society, and extensively popular, and who had been honored with high and responsible offices, both by the government and his immediate fellow-citizens. Thus introduced, the young stranger was welcomed wherever he appeared. But he was by no means destitute of those personal qualities which are calculated to make a stranger welcome in respectable society. He appeared to possess a mind rather above mediocrity; which had been cultivated by more than an ordinary education, and by considerable and various reading. In his deportment he was manly and dignified; in his manners, amiable and friendly; and appeared to possess the kindlier feelings of our nature in rather a higher degree than is usual among the degenerate sons of Adam. Thus introduced and thus accomplished, he was every where received with cordiality. After remaining in the place, in the family, and in the office of his relative, (who was a lawyer of some note,) he engaged as a teacher in a school for some time, where he acquitted himself with credit. After his engagement had expired, he returned to his kinsman's office: but too soon after his return, it was discovered by his friends that during his school engagement he had formed a connection with a circle of tippling gamblers, and a taste for sipping had taken hold of him. His relative found him in the office intoxicated, and reprimanded him (as he considered) harshly. He immediately left the office and family. Soon, however, a reconciliation took place, and he returned, under a promise of amendment, which promise he kept for several months. But the demon of intemperance had ensnared him; he was again caught, and was again discarded by his kinsman; upon which he enlisted as a soldier in the army, and marched to the Niagara frontiers.

During the time he was engaged in his school he had become acquainted with a young woman who was also teaching school in the same vicinity. They were nearly of the same age, both of them of ardent temperament, and rather romantic in their notions; an attachment was formed which they both thought nothing could dissolve. She was of poor but respectable parents; had received a good education; her mind was considerably cultivated by reading, but she knew but little of the deceits and vices of this deceitful world. She was unsuspicious and gay as the lark that caroled over her head; viewed every thing on its brightest side—and confided without reserve when truth was professed. She informed him frankly that she had heard of his fault; he as frankly confessed and promised amendment,—in which promise she confided. They parted with reciprocal promises of fidelity; he left the recruiting station to join his regiment, in December, 1812, and was away to the end of the war, not being discharged until November 1815.

During his absence, she manifested the utmost solicitude of affection to ascertain what his conduct was. There was a recruiting rendezvous for the regiment to which he belonged in my immediate neighborhood. I was acquainted with many of the officers, and had frequent opportunities through them to hear direct from him, and by her request made particular inquiry. The general answer was "Doing very well;" is a non-commissioned officer; possesses our confidence," &c. In the fall of 1814, I met with one officer from that regiment, who appeared to possess better views of what was "DOING WELL," than most of our soldiers possess; who informed me that the object of my inquiry was rather intemperate, not to say a drunkard—but attached to his rations in kind, and what was likely to hasten his march to ruin, he had, after joining the army, procured a deistical work entitled "The Principles of Nature," and after reading that, he had procured all superficial works against religion, written by Paine, Voltaire, and Volney—had read them and nothing else, and was disseminating their sentiments as far as his influence extended. And that as he became confirmed in his sentiments of infidelity, his habits of intemperance and profanity extended their force. I faithfully detailed to my fair friend what I had heard of the object of her love; and advised her to discard him; her friends generally, (and she had many friends,) gave her the same advice.—She hesitated—he returned—acknowledged he had done wrong—promised, now he was discharged from the army, he would reform his life—she believed that her influence over him was such that she could control him—she married him contrary to the advice of her friends.

For two years he was temperate and industrious, and they lived happily. From that time he began to relapse—and for ten years past she has lived a life of toil and wretchedness. They became the common parents of five children, which she has supported by her own labor, and by the assistance of public charity. He became a deist in profession, a sot by habit and an atheist in practice—and at last murdered his wife, in the most savage and brutal manner.

As the individual alluded to, has not, we believe, been tried yet, we suppress the name.

DR. HEWITT IN LONDON.

We have been favored with the perusal of several private letters from this gentleman, by which it appears that he is fully engaged, with his characteristic zeal and success, in the advancement of the temperance cause in England. On his arrival, he found the friends of temperance prepared for a general and thorough effort, and he has been enabled to render them material assistance in the prosecution of their plans. His whole time is occupied in delivering addresses, answering inquiries, and communicating with the committees, who consult him in all their proceedings. At his suggestion; the London Society has changed its title for that of British and Foreign Temperance Society, and as its change of name indicates, will take upon itself the duties and responsibilities of a national society. The committee held three meetings for considering this measure. At the first, all but one opposed it.—At the second, all but three were in favor of it.—At the third meeting, Mr. Hewitt was authorized to state that the chairman, (who is of the Society of Friends,) would give £50 if the measure were adopted, and it was unanimously carried.—The national society was warmly advocated by Mr. Crampton, one of the present ministry. Sir James M'Intosh declared his approbation of the Society, and is ready to plead its cause whenever called upon. One of the Committee has pledged himself to add to the treasury of the new society, twice the sum that any other member of the Committe shall give. The Society are very desirous of securing the services of Mr. Hewitt as their General Agent, and have made him a liberal offer, but his views of duty will hardly permit him to accept.

But is the temperance reformation to be patronized only by the aristocracy of England, while the common people remain unenlightened and vicious! This is the vital question. The lords and ladies may vote it a genteel thing, and a popular thing, but if the temperance reformation is to walk only in its silver slippers, it will prove but a whited sepulchre. Some indeed, affect to believe that when a change of sentiment in the upper classes of society is effected, little farther in the way of reformation can be done; and that, after all, we must be content to suffer from a certain amount of intemperance among the common people. But this is a false and dangerous doctrine; it is a retreat from which experience will soon drive the designing and lukewarm. The following extract from one of Dr. Hewitt's letters to Rev. Dr. Wood, speaks better things.

"Last evening I attended a meeting in Galilee Chapel, Shadwell, the house which Mr. Smith the Seamen's preacher occupies. About 400 men were present, chiefly of the lower orders.—I spoke to them about an hour and then proposed the formation of a society. A mechanic arose and stated objections. A Mr. Roberts replied to him with great effect and extorted thundering applause from the audience. Mr. Roberts told them that the auxiliary society which was formed but last week among the poor weavers in Spitalfields already contained five hundred members! (what shall be said now, about the utter impracticability of reforming the lower orders of Europe! The fact is, that it is not done because it has not been attempted. He also said that he knew that the distillers in London were trembling. He said that a few days ago, he himself turned the Temperance Society into ridicule, but now he deemed it the most wonderful instrument of universal improvement of men of all classes that had, except the gospel, been thought of, &c. He spoke with great energy and freedom. He understands the humor of a London audience of the lower orders, and extorted from them repeated and enthusiastic cheers."—Journal of Humanity.

AN AFRICAN'S ILLUSTRATION OF TEMPERATE DRINKING.

Mr. Editor:—It is probably known that there are Temperance Societies, composed entirely of colored people who hold stated meetings to strengthen each other in the resolutions which they have formed, to abstain entirely from the use of ardent spirits, and to promote the cause as other socities do, by addresses from those who are in the habit of public speaking. They do not meet, however, without having white people present, and their discussions are public. A short time since a number of us met with them. The principal speaker who was the President of the Society, gave an animated address full of original, apt, and striking illustrations. Let the following serve as a specimen.

You say, spirit no hurt you. You drink temperate. Well. 'Spose you do. But your son see his fader drink—he drink too. By and by, your son become drunkard. He fall in the stream. He can no swim. He can not get out hisself. You, his Fader, who drink temperate, see him drowning. You throw a rope. He catch it. You pull. But dat little you drink to do you good, and make you strong, no help you. For when you lean forward to pull your son in de Temperance ship, you fall over yourself.

This was accompanied, as Shakespeare says, "with the action suited to the word," and thus appeared much stronger than can possibly be described on paper—Charleston Obs.

'Without natural Affection.'—It has never fallen to our lot, says the Journal of Humanity, to record a more shocking instance of depravity resulting from intemperate habits than the following, which we have from an authentic source. A man in Derry, N. H. lately hung himself. He was discovered by his own mother, who instead of manifesting any distress, or raising any alarm, deliberately stole from his pocket a bottle of rum, and drank herself dead drunk!

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the S. S. Instructer.

MY DEAR FELLOW LABORER, BE FAITHFUL.

The Sabbath School teacher, who was is in the habit of reflecting upon the solemn thought, that he is forming characters for eternity, will be led often to exclaim, "who is sufficient for these things!"

To such a teacher, when borne down into the dust, by the weight of responsibileness, which he feels resting upon him, how supporting, how cheering to hear a Saviour's voice, saying, "Lo! I am with you always; and my grace is sufficient for you! The faithful teacher, will often need such support as this. For 'he watches for souls as those that must give account."

The importance of Sabbath School teachers being faithful, in watching for the souls of the dear children and youth, under their care; and in frequent conversations with them, magnifies in my estimation, every day. This will not be wondered at, when I come to mention some of the many instances, in which children, to my own knowledge, have complained, "that their teachers were not faithful—did not ask them questions, and converse with them, personally, upon the concerns of their souls;" and when I mention some of the glorious results, which have followed the labors and prayers of such teachers as have been faithful, and untiring in their, efforts.

Some of the facts, which are now to be presented, have been related in the hearing of many teachers, in my public addresses to them—but they are facts, which every teacher, in our State and country, ought to hear, and they will bear repeating to those who have heard them before.

A Superintendent told me, not long since, that a little girl, five or six years old, and a member of his school, was reading a story, in the Sabbath School Instructer, of the child who complained "that her teacher never asked her any questions, and never talked with her class." She read the story through to herself, and then, after sitting a few moments in deep thought, she said to her mother who was in the room, "There, Ma, I do wish my teacher could read this story." Why, what is it?"

After she had told her, the mother inquired again, "Why do you wish your teacher to read that!"

"Because, she never asks any questions, but those in the question book; and never talks with us any."

Some weeks since, I attended the public meetings at A——. There lived in the family where I took lodgings, a girl perhaps twelve or thirteen years old. She came home from one of the morning prayer meetings, where the children had been particularly addressed, and bursting into tears, she said, "I don't think there is enough said to Sabbath School children. My teacher never asked me but one question in the world She only hears me say my lesson, and that is all she does."

That child was anxious about her soul, and her teacher knew nothing of it. Perhaps one short conversation in the Sabbath school, might have been blessed to her salvation; & as a reward of that single effort to do good, that teacher might have had a precious soul to sparkle in her crown of rejoicing forever. What new life and interest it must have given to all her prayers, (Sabbath teachers certainly pray for their scholars) when she retired to weep and plead for the conversion of the dear children in her class, to have known, that one was weeping for sin, and to have seen, with her own eyes, the tears; and to have tried, herself, to direct the mourning child to her blessed Saviour!

O, how can teachers refrain from talking to the dear children, about their souls; and about their kind Saviour, who loved and still loves to bless the little ones.

A teacher, while walking home from the Sabbath school, a few weeks since, in company with a little boy, seven or eight years old, asked him, why he did not become a christian! His answer was most affecting. "I think I should, if I only had a teacher who would talk with me." About a week after this conversation, I saw that little boy. He was in great distress on account of his sins. It was truly melting to see him sit and weep. He now rejoices in his pardoning Saviour.

How much this single question of a faithful teacher, had to do with leading that child to reflect, repent, and seek the Lord, is known to him only, who sees the exact influence of a word, and knows how often it has been blessed to the salvation of a soul.

In recurring to this incident, I cannot help reflecting, how full of interest it would have been, if this little boy's own teacher had propounded the question. Then the answer might have been, "I think I shall become a christian, if you only continue to be faithful."

Many other similar facts, which have fallen under my own observation, might be stated, but it is unnecessary to enlarge. These are stated not with a complaining spirit, but with an earnest desire that all teachers may know the truth —(it is a truth,) that children do expect of them —faithfulness. Teachers, except perhaps in some remote villages, where Sabbath schools have just commenced, can no longer plead ignorance on this point.

Let me say then, that teachers, who would co-operate with Christ, in advancing his cause, and who would be applauded, at last, as "faithful servants," must feel, and act, towards those under their care, "as those that must give account." Thus acting, the complaint will never more be heard, from the children, that their teachers are not faithful; but instead of it, the inquiry may be expected, "What shall we do to be saved?"

ASA BULLARD.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

If you would be happy, you must seek to be made holy.

To go to heaven when you die, you must come to Christ while you live.

Your heart is very bad; so bad that it is unfit to go to heaven as it is; so bad that none but God can make it good.

Oh! give Christ your heart; if you give it to him, he will take you to heaven.

A new heart is the best gift you can receive. A new coat will wear out, a new bonnet may be spoiled, a new dollar may be lost; but a new heart (its worth who can tell!) will never wear out, never spoil, and none can take it away. Oh, pray for pardon for Christ's sake; pray that God will love you; and that, when you die, heaven may be opened to receive you.—The News.

From the S. S. Treasury.

A WHOLE CLASS CONVERTED.

A female teacher, in a letter to the Secretary of the Massachusetts Sabbath School Union says, "I cannot forbear telling you a word about my class. I now have ten scholars, and they are all rejoicing in the hope that they have passed from death unto life. I wish you could see how different they appear to-day, from what they did last Sabbath. Our lesson then was to show the power of faith. At the close of the recitation, it was proposed that the class should select some one or more for whom we should pray. We had hardly come to this agreement, when an individual by said, choose me. Oh choose me, do pray for me. She is very happy to-day."

When the writer of the above was requested to take this class, she declined, saying she was not qualified to teach such a class. When urged to the work, by the scholars and superintendent, she at last took it only on condition that one of the scholars, who was professedly pious, and several sisters in the church, would unite with her in spending a certain hour, every week, in prayer to God, that he would prepare her for this solemn charge, and by his Holy Spirit, made her efforts affectual to the conversion of the whole class.

At first a single individual was selected, for whom they prayed more particularly than for the rest. When she was converted, she united with those who had thus associated together, in praying for another in the class, till she was brought to submission; and then another was chosen, and so through the whole, till, as we have seen, they were obliged to choose one who did not belong to the class.

Oh that every Sabbath school teacher might so labor and pray in faith, that similar blessings might be received by every teacher and every class. God is not partial. The same means being used with the same feelings, he will prove himself as ready to bless one teacher, and to save one class, as another.

Dear Sabbath school teacher, this day of glorious revivals is your harvest time. Yes, it is more. You may now sow and reap at the same time. There never has been a time in New-England, when the clouds of mercy which were passing over us, were so full of blessings for our Sabbath schools; for the youngest children who are thus assembled "to hear of heaven and learn the way." This must be a season of great heart searching among truly pious teachers. For no one can see his class unconcerned or impenitent, without having good reason to believe that his own heart is not right in the sight of God. How is it, beloved teacher, with your class! Are all converted? If not, what is the state of your heart? What testimony does your closet give! Oh, remember the time is short. Soon you and your class will stand before the same judgment bar.

From the S. S. Instructer.

CHILDREN EXPECT A LONG LIFE.

I was conversing with some young persons about the shortness of life and the certainty of death, when one of them said, "I don't know but I shall live a hundred years." So careless are children—they neglect preparation for death with the false hope that they shall live a great while—perhaps "a hundred years." But, dear readers, if any of you are neglecting to seek religion, with the expectation of enjoying numberless years on earth, let me invite you to visit the burial ground, and there examine the grave stones of those who have been called away from the scenes of time. And how many will you find with these words, "Aged one hundred years," inscribed upon them! Not one, perhaps. But you will see scores of little stones, with the names of children engraved upon them who have died very early in life. Then how can you, little ones, expect to live a great while? The next grave that is dug, may receive a child—and who shall that child be? Perhaps a reader of this paper. Beloved children, are you prepared to die? If not, immediately seek for a blessing from God, and ask him to prepare you for death, that when your time is finished here, you may go to dwell with him. Œ.

From the S. S. Instructer.

HOW TO DISPLEASE MY TEACHER.

1. I must never be at school in season.
2. I must never get a perfect lesson.
3. I must be always looking about the school when he is talking to me.
4. I must talk, and laugh, and play, whenever his back is turned.
5. I must carry apples, or nuts, or cake, to eat during the exercises.
6. I must always pout, and fret, when he requests my attention.
7. I must always speak sharply, when he asks me a question that I do not want to answer.
8. I must often ask him to let me go out, and if he says I cannot, ask him again and again.
9. I must crowd the other scholars; and try to take their attention from him by striking them or by throwing things at them.
10. I must refuse to take the books he selects from the libary—until he has brought me all the books once or twice over.
11. I must often tell him that I wish I were in Mr. Such-a-one's-class—for he is a great deal more kind and pleasant to his scholars.

Here are a few of the many ways in which I can displease my teacher;—if I follow them up, I am sure that they will prove effectual.

From the Rel. Intel.

THE INFANT SCHOLAR'S QUESTION.

A teacher one day, while speaking to the little children on the life of Moses, said, "And Moses went up into a high mountain, to the top of Pisgah; and when there, the Lord showed him the land of Canaan, which he had promised to give to Abraham and his seed.—And while Moses was looking at the hand he died." "Please, Sir,', said a little boy, "did Moses go to heaven whan he died!" "I must think," said the teacher, "for I don't remember its being said in the Bible, that Moses went to heaven; but I hope he did; for he loved God, and he was a servant of God; but I don't think it says in the Bible that Moses went to heaven." "O yes it does," replied another fellow. "I don't remember the passage," answered the teacher, "so you" must tell me where it is found." "Why, don't you remember, sir," said the little boy, "that high mountain; and when they were there, his face did shine like the sun and his raiment was white as snow, and there appeared unto them Moses and Elias from heaven; and you know, Sir, that Moses could not came from heaven unless he had gone to heaven." Thus are our little ones led to think—to compare scripture with scripture—to feel—and, what is of great importance, to obey the truth.—I. vs. Child Comp.

REVIVALS.

Litchfield, Conn.—Letter to the editor of the Connecticut Observer:—

"For near two years previous to the month of April last, since I have been in this place, here had been a gentle and silent diffusion of spiritual influence, bringing here and there sinners to the hope of pardon and deliverance. At every successive communion season some have entered into covenant with Christ and his people. About the first of April, in prospect of a three days' meeting, an unusual spirit of prayer was manifest in several members of the church; and as the time for the meeting approached, a sense of personal responsibility, and active dependance upon the grace of God was more widely diffused and more deeply felt. The meeting commenced on Wednesday, the 20th of April, and was very generally attended by the people of the place, and many from abroad. The plain truth of the gospel, faithfully pressed upon the conscience, produced a growing interest and solemnity from day to day, and made on many hearts a deep and abiding impression. At the close of the meeting more than 100 were found making the anxious inquiry—"What shall I do to be saved?" And during the succeeding week numbers found peace and joy in believing. The direct influence of the meeting was felt for about three successive weeks, when, although the meetings were full and solemn, and may sinners anxious, it was manifest that a suspension of the renewing influence of the Spirit of God had taken place. A meeting for fasting, humiliation and prayer, was appointed, and very generally attended by the church, which was signally followed by a return of divine influence. The work revived, and for several weeks was more still deep and powerful, than at any former time. Up to the present period new cases of conviction and hopeful conversion occur, though much less frequent than a few weeeks since.—The subjects have been taken from all classes, and of all ages between ten and seventy years. The number of males so nearly equal to that of females, and from both sexes some of the most influential persons are among the trophies of divine grace. Seventy have united themselves to the congregational, and a number to the episcopal church in this place; and perhaps forty or fifty more are indulging the hope of pardoned sin, who will probably soon enter into public covenant with God. The members of the law school and female seminary in this place have shared in the rich blessing, and some of the most interesting cases of conversion have been among their number. Some of the students in the law school have already changed their profession and are preparing for the ministry.

"Among the most efficient means blessed of God in this work, may be mentioned, the plain and direct preaching of the gospel, the solemnities of the anxious room, and the prudent and private labors of the recent converts. The gospel has been presented, as a proposal from God to sinners for a reconciliation, and the obligation of immediate acceptance enforced. The ability and consequent inexcusableness of the sinner, the unwillingness and consequent dependance upon God's Spirit, have been topics of frequent explanation, and practical application to the heart and conscience: And the duty of direct and unreserved submission to God as a sovereign, just & wholly reasonable in all his purposes and precepts, has been enforced by the weighty motives that divine mercy and authority disclose. To the grace of God would we ascribe all the praise and glory of this precious work of his own right hand.

Your's truly, L. P. HICKOCK.

From the N. Y. Observer.

IN NEW-YORK CITY.

Protracted meeting in the Union Presbyterian Church in New York.

Mr. Editor:—Your notice of the protracted meeting in the Union church of this city, has raised the expectation of the Christian community that a more full account would be given in this week's paper. While I attempt to give such an account, I am conscious that pen and ink can but feebly imprint on the hearts of men, the works of the Spirit of God.

This meeting commenced on the 29th of September with the intention of continuing four days. Nothing of very special interest was apparent in the church, only a little increase of the spirit of prayer, and one or two conversions a few days previous to the meeting.

The meeting was opened with a sermon by Rev. Mr. Foote, of Brookfield, Mass. During the sermon Rev. Mr. Lansing, of Utica, arrived, and the next day Rev. Mr. Patterson, of Philadelphia. Several of our ministerial brethren in the city, preached and assisted in the exercises. Rev. Dr. Palmer, of Charleston, S. C. was with us several days. But the burden of preaching was rolled on brothers Patterson and Lansing.

During the first two days, nothing of very striking interest occurred. The congregation increased constantly, and were manifestly more and more solemnly affected by pungent, unvarnished exhibition and application of truth.

On Saturday morning the church began to feel the presence of the Spirit of God. They solemnly covenanted together to pray as they had not prayed for the salvation of sinners. In the afternoon at the close of the sermon, those who were anxious about the salvation of their souls, were requested to retire to the Lecture room while the church remained to pray in the sanctuary. Between thirty and forty retired. Several had been pricked in their hearts by the sword of the Spirit during the sermon and were in awful distress. In the evening a request was made that all those who were then resolved to submit to God, should come out from the congregation and kneel down before the pulpit.—Between twenty and thirty came. Several of these indulged the hope that they yielded their hearts to God while bowed upon the floor.

The prayer meeting on Sabbath morning prophecied of the scenes of the day. The brethren who prayed were simple hearted enough and honest hearted to believe that, God answer prayer when made aright. They poured out their hearts before God with the humble and confident expectation that God would convict and convert sinners during the day. Their expectations were not cut off. The infinitely blessed God granted the requests of his people offered in the name of Jesus. Many were cut to the heart and numbers indulged hope in the course of the day. When the sermon closed in the evening, all who were then determined to come to Jesus Christ that they might have life, were invited to take seats in front of the pulpit.—More than one hundred came and bowed the knee before God, and the attentive assembly. Several rose from their knees with new views and feelings, praising God and the Lamb.

This ended the four days meeting. Many

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

requests had been made that the meetings might not be discontinued. By an unanimous vote of the church in the afternoon it was resolved to protract the meeting two days longer.

Monday was a day of great interest. Souls were constantly pressing into the kingdom of God. I can only notice what occurred in the evening. The solemn stillness of the crowded sanctuary while the servant of Jesus was pointing sinners forward to their future gathering, evinced the presence of the Holy Ghost. The anxious at the close of the sermon were requested to retire to the Lecture room. Upwards of three hundred retired while the saints remained to pray. The judgment only can disclose the scenes of that evening. Every sinner as he entered the room bowed his head on the seat before him. The silence of the Sepulchre was broken only by the sigh and half suppressed groan of the sinking sinner. Brother L. whispered in my ears, "this is awful, awful, God is here." A separation was then made between them. All who were resolved to submit to God on the spot were called to the front seats. About eighty came. It is supposed that between thirty and fifty indulged the hope that they passed from death unto life, during the twenty or twenty-five minutes they occupied that room.

On Tuesday afternoon the obligation and responsibilities of the church were spread before them. Christians were exhorted to raise the standard of piety and to consecrate themselves with one accord to God. Numbers of professors of religion from various churches in the city, and also from abroad, came out into the aisles of the church and knelt down while the consecrating prayer was made, and each one gave himself away to the Lord in an everlasting covenant. This was a time of peculiar tenderness and of melting of heart. Several hundreds of professors of religion bowing together and weeping under a heavy pressure of obligation and an awful consciousness of neglected duty, presented a scene of solemnity not often witnessed.

After sermon in the evening while the choir were singing the "judgment hymn," between three hundred and four hundred came forward and took the anxious seats. This closed the two protracted days. Many petitions had been made that the meeting might not close. It was put to vote, when the congregation very cheerfully and universally rose and resolved to continue the meeting two days longer.

Time would fail to particularize all that would be interesting. I have been thus particular that all may know what measures have been adopted and blest in these meetings. There has been very little excitement of animal feeling. It has been the object of the ministers to urge sinners to instant submission to God, and to insist upon it, after Apostolic example, that they must repent on the spot. God has evidently and abundantly blest this course and we care not who may oppose it.

The two following days of the protracted meeting were distinguished by frequent and sudden conversions. In several instances persons came to the house of God thoughtless and hardened and were convicted and came forward with the anxious, and went away rejoicing in the Lord Jesus Christ.

When the two days expired it was earnestly desired that another vote might be taken. As soon as the question was put every man and woman and child in the large assembly rose and seemed to vote with all their might that the meeting should be protracted three days.

Passing over many scenes of touching interest, I would only say that on the Sabbath the eleventh day of the meetings, the Lord's supper was administered to a large company of communicants, when twenty-nine were added to the church on profession of their faith, and two by letter.—In the evening between three hundred and four hundred placed themselves among the inquiring, and about one hundred and fifty of that number resolved to give their hearts to God in the anxious room. How many did, the judgment day only can tell.

Thus closed the eleventh day. The congregation then voted to meet every evening until Wednesday.

As to the number of converts no correct estimate can be made. They are from different congregations in the city, and from various parts of the United States. A large number of young men have shared in this work. The whole number of converts is exceedingly small compared with the perishing thousands in our city. "Why should the work cease?"

One thing is worthy of notice, that not a trifling countenance has been observed by one of the ministerial brethren since the meeting begun. When several hundred were in the gallery, and the anxious were made the subjects of prayer in front of the pulpit below, only one head was up in the gallery. All the others were bowed in the attitude of worship.

Our sincere and ardent request is, that our Christian brethren will pray that we may be humbled exceedingly in view of what God has done, and that this work may not cease until Satan is dislodged from our city and this whole population are converted to Jesus Christ.

Yours, H. NORTON.

IN HARPERSFIELD, N. Y.

The following interesting letter, to the editor of the New York Evangelist, is from the Rev. Harper Boice, dated Sept. 25, 1831.

An account of a revival in this place, was published in your paper some weeks since. That account closed with a four days meeting held here the first week in June.

For the encouragement of Zion's friends, I would now inform you that the revival did not pass away with the protracted meeting. The two weeks following, appeared like one continual Sabbath. A deep and awful solemnity seemed to pervade the town. To the concerns of eternity, and the things of religion, all worldly concerns appeared to give way, while sinners daily bowed at Immanuel's feet. The aged and the young, parents and children, and grand children, have here bowed together, pleading for mercy in the anxious meeting, and there too we have seen them rejoice together, come forward and publicly enter into covenant with God and his people. More than twenty family altars have been erected since the commencement of this revival.

Four merchants, subjects of the work, have united with the church, and espoused the cause of temperance; three of whom have ceased to retail ardent spirit. Indeed the whole character of society, so far as this revival extended, is essentially changed. Although the work some weeks since declined in a measure, for the last two weeks, appearances are more favorable; Christians appear more deeply to feel that if the revival stops, the blame must rest on them.—There is more fervency of spirit in prayer, and sinners are troubled and inquiring.

As the fruits of this work of grace, one hundred and twenty seven have united with the Presbyterian church, and a few with the Methodist. A number more are expecting to unite with us soon. Although the revival in this place has been powerful, beyond any thing ever before witnessed by any who have been acquainted with it; yet it has from the beginning been characterized for a solemn stillness; and in the subjects of the work there is, I trust, and I think, an unusual degree of Christian decision. One thing worthy of remark, and which I cannot forbear to notice, is, that as yet, there has not been a single instance of apostacy known, among those who have been numbered as converts in this revival. All appear to hold on their way, while the most of them are truly active.

INFANT SCHOOLS.

The anecdotes related in the following article from the Christian Intelligencer, respecting some of the pupils of an Infant School in the city of New York, are pleasing illustrations of the influence of instruction on the infant mind.—South. Rel. Tel.

I have sent you a few brief memoirs gleaned from the book of an Infant Teacher. By inserting them, you may, perhaps, do more good, than by inserting a learned exposition, or a profound criticism. Yours, &c. W. C. B.

"It is now two years, since I entered the Infant School, No. 1, Canal-street. In the lapse of that time I have taught 209 children. During that time we have had seven deaths.

I have visited the parents of almost all my scholars. They have always been glad to see me; and they have generally expressed their approbation of the School.

A poor English family, of the name of Stanley, whom I visited in the Bowery, testified their gratitude by tears. The mother said, "her two little sons, Thomas and George, from being the most refractory and disobedient children in the world had become mild and tractable; and often reproved their sister, who is the eldest, by saying, "If you are such a wicked girl, neither God nor grandma will love you!" "Do tell me," said Mrs. Stanley, "how you manage to make them so good; so that I can make a good girl of my daughter."

A Mrs. Lamb, who resided in Crosby-street, and sent three children to school, seemed very grateful for the privilege. She said, she had sent her son to the Public School; but he made no proficiency. She heard of the infant School, No. 1, Green-street. One morning, (within a week after he was entered,) as he was in a little bed near his parents; he called out, "Father, do you know how many letters there are in the English Alphabet?" His father quite astonished, asked him, pray Frank, how many do you make! Little Francis instantly replied, "twenty-six:" and then proceeded to give the vowels and the consonants. Frank, now finding that he knew as he thought, more than his parents, said, "Father, this world, do you know, is round like an orange! Now what shape is this world, Father! From this time his father was delighted in conversing with his infant son.

Another little child, the daughter of Mrs. Hannah Remsen, of Wooster-st., told her mother on a Sabbath morning, before she was up, that she wanted to go to Church. Her mother replied "If you are a good girl, when I get up, I will finish your new frock, and you shall go."—"O mother," said little Ellen, "it is very wicked to finish my frock to-day; for it is God's day; and if you do work, you will break the fourth commandment. I would rather not go to church than make God angry with me." The mother added, that since that time, she never had worked on the Lord's day.

A little boy named Josiah Crosby, who resided with his mother in Crosby-street, told her, one day, when he saw her very ill: "Mother, I will pray for you, for God hears little children." His mother said, "you may pray, if you will go into the next room: but I am so sick, you must not stay here." Little Josiah went out, and throwing himself on his knees, and clasping his hands together, was overheard by a woman, who was in an adjoining apartment, to say these words with great earnestness: "Dear good God, will you make the doctor cure my mother: if you will I will never be a bad boy again!"

A little boy, the son of a French baker, in E— street, came to me of a Monday morning, and said, "Miss P. is not Sunday God's day!" I replied, "it is." "Well," said he, "Yeste day, Mother made this cap," (he held up his cloth cap in his little hand.) "I told her it was wicked: and I told her the minister was in the pulpit preaching: and I told her that God was looking at her; but mother would do it. Now was it not very wicked?"

Betty Remsen came to me on Monday morning, and said, "Miss P. will you please to tell my big brother that it is wicked to make a kite on Sunday? Indeed I told him it was very wicked: I told him he would break the commandment: that God was looking at him: but my brother said, he would make it: and he did make it. Now Miss P. will you tell him it was very wicked!"

A small boy named John Zebriskie, said to me, one day, "Miss P. I know where grandma" (meaning Mrs. Bethune) "will go when she dies." "Where will she go!" said I. "She will go to God's house, and sit up in his gallery, with all good people: and if I am a good boy, I shall sit with her: only I shall sit lower down, and she will sit high, high up."

Another time, when I was showing the infants the picture of the Lion, and giving them the natural history of that animal, John Zebriskie said, "A lion wont eat grandma." Not knowing exactly what he alluded to, I asked him how he knew that. "O," said little John, "God, you know, shut the Lion's mouth, so that they could not eat Daniel; and grandma is as good as Daniel, you know." "Yes," cried little Newland, "She is better than Daniel: for he did not make any Infant Schools for poor Children!"

RELIGION IN PRISONS.

The following very interesting article is from Badger's Weekly Messenger. The writer introduces it with some remarks upon the original design of Prisons, which was merely to punish the delinquent—his reformation was not thought of as a practicable object. To show the contrast between the present and former times, and to afford evidence that the power of the gospel may and has had a transforming power upon the depraved characters of the inmates of the State prison he goes on to make the following statements.

The prison at Weathersfield Connecticut, may safely challange competition with any similar institution both for the convenience of its structure, the wisdom of its polity, and the moral results of its discipline. As a proof of the latter assertion, I am permitted to appeal to documents in the handwriting of Rev. George Barrett, Chaplain of the institution, whose deep feeling for the spiritual good of the convicts, prompts the most unwearied efforts, and affectionate instructions.

"When I have remarked their countenances," he writes, "evening after evening, before engaging in their religious services—when I have thought of the dark designs they had cherished, the unhallowed feelings they had indulged, the fearful, sickening crimes they had committed—gloom and sadness has overspread my soul.—Yet gratitude mingles with these melancholy sentiments, at the great improvement which has taken place among them. This is especially the case with regard to the females. A few months ago, before the building for their separate dormitories was completed, and while they were both night and day in the same room, they cherished among them, I could not without emotion behold them submitting to the examination of the guard, who ascertained that each had concealed in his dress no implement of offence or destruction. It was humiliating to see the vigorous and athletic man, hold out his arms with the subdued look of the child. I felt how strong and how salutary might such a lesson prove to the young and tempted, whose principles had not yet acquired firmness to save them from vice, without witnessing the degradation and misery to which it leads.

Each prisoner then placed his hands upon the shoulders of his nearest companion, and all marched with the lock-step towards the chapel.—Seated there, side by side, were seen the man of full strength and him of hoary hairs, the youth of fourteen summers, and the sinner of more than 100, who like a bloodless and withered mummy, past labor, yet sentenced for life, surveyed motionless and passionless, objects to which his dim eye and cold heart, had long been innured.—I could not avoid sending a scrutinizing glance over the mass of faces; to discover if possible, in feature or bearing, some indication of talent, or noble motive, for we know that the whirlwind of passion hath sometimes driven into crime, those whom Nature, and Education and Heaven had he'd called to a higher destiny. But their seemed a total abstinence of those lineaments which betoken the finer traits of intellect, and reveal the pure and sublime promptings of a godlike soul. Sin had been there with its levelling process, effacing mental grandeur, and nobleness, and beauty.

Still every countenance was raised to the Chaplain, while he simplified to their comprehension, a portion of that word which "giveth light to those who sit in darkness," and lifteh up his prayer to the God who "blotteth out transgression." Methought in that prolonged gaze there was hope, that "where sin had abounded, grace might much more abound." At the close of their devotional exercises, they passed with a degree of order and celerity that astonished me, to their several ranges of dormitories. One moment, each prisoner was visible, standing opposite his lonely cell. The next, all had vanished, and the springing of more than one-hundred locks, was their vesper tone.

And the train of thought that this exhibition, so novel, and so distressing, excited, was the consciousness that every one of these degraded beings had once a mother to whose heart his infancy was inexpressibly dear. When she pressed his soft lip to hers, and lulled him to sleep upon her bosom, surely her visions of delight, had no such imagery as this! Yet could we penetrate the secrets of the erring tenants of this abode of discipline, we should probably perceive that some maternal precept still held a place in their memory, perchance had exerted a restraining power amid the career of guilt. One instance, illustrating this theory, is derived from the same source, whence I have been so kindly furnished with the preceeding examples.

An inmate of this institution, a man of fifty years; has been a partaker in almost all the varieties of vice, and a wanderer over the face of the earth. Retribution in many appalling forms, has fallen upon him, disgrace and punishment have been his portion, yet he passed through all with a hardened mind. Nothing, he affirms, in the whole course of his life has ever made him feel serious, but what his mother said to him just before her death. He was at that time a boy 12 years old, and summoned to her chamber, to receive her dying counsel. As he approached her bed, she took his hand, telling him with maternal tenderness that she was soon to leave him, and earnestly beseeching him by every moving consideration to seek his Redeemer, and to take care of his soul, that he might meet her in Heaven. She continued to clasp his hand until her own was cold in death. For nearly half a century afterwards, this man was pressing onward through a course of crime too revolting for description, yet still was never able to drive utterly from his mind the admonitions of his mother, nor think of them amid the obduracy of his unhallowed career, without solemn emotion. Is not this a new point of view from which to contemplate the extent of a mother's influence? The good and the wise, rejoice in expressing their obligations to this sacred source. Bacon could impute much of his intellectual eminence to maternal training; Washington ever acknowledged his indebtedness to her whose Spartan culture, early taught him the rudiments of self-control; Edwards imputed much of his distinguished piety to the prayers of the saint who gave him birth. But here is, as it were, a VOICE from the lower parts of the earth, bearing con-current testimony. Such a disclosure gains weight from its rarity. The illustrious and pious are willing to reveal the power of the principles which have guided them, but how difficult is it to descend into the abyss of wickedness, & extort its suffrage in favor of the precepts which it has violated?

Here is an instance of a man plunging into the vortex of transgression, and striving to dismiss from his mind every thing pure and holy.—Yet by his side has walked; to his inmost soul has clung,—with his conscience has wrestled, the VOICE of a dying mother. It has sometimes softened a heart which was like "a piece of the nether millstone." Who knows but it may be like the rod of Moses, to the flint of Horeb! Who can say, that the tear of penitence may not thence flow, watering the seeds of righteousness, and hope in a Redeemer!

Mother! who bendest with ineffable tenderness, over the babe that Heaven has given thee, knowest thou what shall befall him in this evil world! Redouble thy intercessions, thy instructions: for how canst thou tell that thou mayest not leave in the bosom of thy son—a monitor to save from perdition, to lead him to repentance when thou art motionless in the grave. L. H. S.

Hartford October 1831.

FRANCE.

Extracts from a letter to the Editor of the Connecticut Observer, dated Paris, July 31, 1831.

Three days of the last week were devoted to the celebration of the revolution of last July—The first day funeral services were performed for the dead who fell in battle, resembling very much the funeral rites that we read of in some pagan authors. The next day, there were foot races, and boat races, and horse races, and wrestling and shooting at a mark, and numberless other forms of amusement gotten up by the rulers to please the people. The last day there was a grand military parade—150,000 soldiers in full uniform lined each side of the Boulevards for six miles; and after having been reviewed by the king, they marched in grand procession before his majesty and the high officers of state, standing in the place Vendome, near the collossal monument formed by Bonaparte of the cannon he had taken from conquered nations. All this was indeed sufficiently imposing; but in a serious mind fitted to awaken any other than feelings of joy. The thought which more than any other pressed on my mind while I surveyed the immense multitude and listened to their shouts of vive le roi, was that God was not in all their thoughts and that their rejoicings were only for a moment. This however I must say, that the whole exhibition passed off with far less of excess and disorder than might have been expected. During the three days of the fetes I must have seen well nigh a million of people,—and yet I saw not one person intoxicated, nor one quarrelling and fighting, and very few who were not decently dressed.—This should shame many parts of our country.

The state of religion as you may well suppose, is very low in France. The reported reformation among the Catholics has been greatly exaggerated. It has in fact come to nothing. The men who commenced it did it from secular motives. The great obstacle to the progress of religion in this country is indifference to all religion. This prevails to a dreadful extent among all classes of people. They have seen so much of the folly and absurdity and wickedness of Popery—the only form of religion which many of them have ever seen—that they either disbelieve and despise every form of religion, or care nothing about it. The Protestants as a body are comparatively few and feeble. There are about 300 ministers. I have had a long and most interesting interview with a persecuted minister of Lyons. He is said to be one of the most eloquent preachers in France. He is certainly a most amiable and pious man, but has been deposed by the Consistory for his fidelity.—There are however gleams of light in the midst of this intense darkness. Three new places of Protestant worship have been opened in Paris the past year, and are doing well. The Lord is also blessing the labors of his faithful servants in other parts of the kingdom by revivals of pure religion. Indeed I see evidence every day that these fields are white unto the harvest.

MISSIONARY.

From the N. Y. Observer.

ORDINATION OF MESIONARIES.

On Friday evening of last week, the following young gentlemen were ordained in the Bowery church, by the Third Presbytery of New York, as Evangelists, viz.: Gamaliel C. Beaman, Thos. Brainerd, William Gage, Edmund Garland, John W. Irwin, John Morrill, John U. Parsons, Simeon Salisbury, Elisha Jenney and John J. Owen. The Sermon by the Rev. Dr. Cox, was from Jer. xxiii. 28. "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat! saith the Lord." Ordaining prayer by the Rev. Dr. Woodbridge, and charge to the Evangelists by the Rev. Benjamin H. Rice, of the Second Presbytery. The services were all appropriate and instructive, and performed in a spirit delightfully suited to the occasion, while a crowded audience testified by their fixed and solemn attention, the deep interest which is felt by christians in this city, in the enlargement of the numbers of them that shall publish salvation.

The above named Evangelists, excepting one, are from the last class of graduates from the Theological Seminary at Andover, and the interest of the occasion was no doubt much increased by the fact that all of them (excepting Mr. Owen, who is employed as agent of the Presbyterian Education Society,) had been appointed by the American Home Missionary Society, as missionaries to the western and southern States, and most of them were about to depart on the morrow to the home of their anticipated labors beyond the Alleghany mountains. This consideration especially gave to their ordination and to the several prayer meetings which they attended in the city an interest which we trust will not soon be forgotten by those who formed the acquaintance of our young brethren.

It will also be gratifying to our readers to know that in addition to the above, the following, who are their class-mates from the same Seminary, are now on their way to the west as missionaries of the above society, viz.: Rev. Benj. Laberee, Rev. Daniel C. Blood, Rev. Asaph Boutelle, Rev. Jason Chapin and Rev. Edmund O. Hovey; from the Theological Seminary at Princeton, Rev. Reuben Frame, Rev. George H. Hulin, and Rev. Jeremiah Porter;—and from the Seminary in Bangor, Maine, Mr. Elijah S. Scott;—in all 18, designated to the states of Ohio, Kentuck, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan Territory. This we understand is a larger number than have ever before been sent out by the the American Home Missionary Society at any one time. It speaks well for the Christian enterprise of the Executive Committee of that noble institution; and as they are thus enlarging their pledges to the great and growing west, it is hoped that our citizens and the religious public will remember the claims of this enterprise upon their prayers and their alms the present autumn. May the wilderness and the solitary place be glad for them, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose.

From the Western Recorder.

MALTA.—By a lasty letter from Rev. H. G. O. Dwight, addressed to a sentleman in Utica, under the date of Malta, July 6th, we are gratified to learn, that Messrs. Dwight and Smith reached that place on the second of May last, in fine health, after a wearysome journey of sixteen months through the regions of western Asia. Much of that time the missionaries were more or less afflicted with sickness; yet they were enabled to say, "Goodness and mercy have followed us continually." Mr. D. found his wife in feeble health. For more than a year during his tour, he had not been able to hear from her, "or of the precious gift of God in the birth of a little son, who is now," says the writer, "almost nine months old." The first letters he had received from America since leaving our shores, came to hand on his late arrival at Malta. These facts show something of the sacrifices that Missionaries are called upon to make.—Have not American Christians some special duties of a corresponding character to perform? Must missionaries make all the sacrifices, while those who send them out, and bid them God speed, consult their own entire ease and convenience in contributing to their comfort and support? This solemn question must be answered on another day.

From the Cincinnati Jour.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

After mature deliberation, the Presbytery adopted the following resolution.

"Whereas, the General Assembly at its last session, did pass a resolution, which is as follows:

In view of existing evils resulting from the separate action of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly, and the American Home Missionary Society, the General Assembly recommended to the Synods of Ohi, Cincinnati, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Tennessee, Indiana and Illinois, and the Presbyteries connected with the same, to correspond with each other and endeavor to agree upon some plan of conducting Domestic Missions in the Western States, and report the result of their correspondence to the next General Assembly. It being understood that the brethren in the West be left to their freedom, to form any organization which, in their judgment may best promote the cause of Missions, in these states:—and also that all the Synods and Presbyteries in the Valley of the Mississippi may be embraced in this correspondence, provided they desire it.

Therefore resolved, in obedience to the resolution above named, this Presbytery do approve of a Convention to be held in Cincinnatti, on the 23d day of November next, as the best method of correspondence—and do now proceed to the appointment of delegates in the number, and form as is usual in the appointment of our commissioners to the General Assembly." The yeas and nays being called for, the resolution was adopted by a majority of 2. The following brethren were then appointed delegates to the Convention. John Thomson, James Gallaher, Asa Mahan, ministers.—Robert Coal, Samuel Newell, James Warren, elders.

The Convention was opposed by the minority, on the ground that it was a novel and unheard of measure; anti-Presbyterial in its character; and would be productive of no good. The minority on this occasion, were not aware that so far from a Convention being a novel or unheard of measure in our church, or anti-Presbyterial, that it has been resorted to on several occasions at the express recommendation of the General Assembly. In the Digest: page 118, the reader will find extracts from a Convention as it is there called, composed of committee from the Synod of New-York and Philadelphia, of the Reformed Dutch Church, and the Associate Reformed Synod. This Convention was composed of such men as Witherspoon and Alexander, &c. A Convention of committees was likewise held in 1792, to form a plan of correspondence between the General Assembly and the General Association of Connecticut. Digest, page 292. Another Convention was held in 1798, to agree on a plan of intercourse between the Associate Reformed, the Dutch Reformed and the Presbyterian Churches. Digest, page 311.—The practice of holding Conventions then, is coeval with the existence of our church. The design of the Convention, however, will no doubt, be defeated if time, money and influence can do it. It was a measure for peace; but a party in Philadelphia, in defiance of their plighted faith, have used all their influence to prevent an unbiased expression of feeling by the Western churches.

TRIAL SERMON.

We sometime since mentioned that the application of Mr. Blanchard, (Editor of the Cincinnati Journal), to the Cincinnati Presbytery for license, was strongly opposed by a considerable number of the members of that body, on account of sentiments contained in his trial sermon. The minority of Presbytery appealed to Synod. The heresy contained in his sermon we supposed is embraced in the following extracts in which he gives his views of ORIGINAL SIN, and the effect of the SIN OF ADAM on his posterity.

I shall now proceed to state my views respecting the manner the posterity of Adam are affected in consequence of their connexion with him.

The scriptures define sin to be the transgression of the law. It is the quality of the act of a moral agent. In order to the existence of sin then, there must be an agent, a standard to measure his acts, and an act of the agent not agreeing with the standard. Hence every sin implies the act of an agent. No sin, according to this definition, can properly be called original, because it does not imply the act of an agent, and because it was not a first sin; for those who use the term, admit the sin so called, was not the first sin in the Universe; neither was it the first sin of our race, for Eve, who stood separate, was first in transgression. But it is so called by divines, because situated as Adam was, under a divine constitution, that act was the hinge on which his trial for confirmation of character was made to turn, not only for himself, but it was made to supercede the necessity of trial on the part of all his posterity; the quality of that act determining whether the race, if there should be any, would rise with the series of their voluntary emotions confirmedly holy or unholy. The nature of the species would not be altered—nor the rule of government changed—nor the subject compelled to act wrong—nor could it be punished for any act of others;—but from the moment Adam acted in the specified case, it would be constitutionally certain, what course the race would pursue.

According to the law of Adam's existence, he, and all his posterity, were bound by moral law, to love God undeviatingly to all eternity. A single defection would have forfeited his standing, and closed all comfortable intercourse with God forever; and without some new arrangement, as no period of his existence, could he have hoped for confirmation of character, either for himself, or for any of his posterity. But God was pleased to make a new constitution, and to appoint a special test and a limited period of trial; at the close of which, if his obedience were perfect, it should be received as if he had been tried to all eternity; and he should be confirmed in holiness, as are the "angels of light;" nor should any of the race undergo a future trial. But if on the other hand, he should transgress, at the moment of rebellion, he should be confirmed in sin, as are the "angels who kept not their first estate."—This transaction partook in the first place of the nature of a constitution, as by it the manner of God's treatment of the race was determined; and secondly, it partook of the nature of a law, as the direction was given respecting the action of a moral agent, sanctioned with a proper penalty.—The last position is supported by the first clause of Romans v. 12. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin,"—that is, this one man acted contrary to God's positive law, and therefore incurred the penalty. The other position is supported by the succeeding clause of the same verse, "and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The certainty that all would sin, was not laid in the precept of the law, but was by divine constitution connected with the first transgression of Adam, according to the words of the text—"by the disobedience of one, many were made (i. e. according to the Greek idiom, constituted) sinners;" that is, according to divine constitution, they would certainly sin; and therefore, as agents, be punished for their conduct. They were not to be punished for the conduct of another; nor were they forced to become sinners, "as this would be making God the author of sin," but it was rendered certain, that they would put forth their moral activity from the first moment of their moral action, in hating, and not in loving God; and for that state of heart, would justly deserve eternal death. It is contrary to the rule of God's moral government to punish innocent beings in the sense of personal ill desert, for the sins of another. He says expressly, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son." True, God has declared that he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation; but it is upon those only who hate him. i. e. The children of wicked parents are exposed to follow in their steps—exposed to hate God, and in that way have the bitter consequence of their parents sins visited upon them even to the third and fourth generation. But the doctrine of a literal transfer, it appears to me was nowhere found in the Bible—except perhaps seemingly in the 18th verse of the fifth chapter of Romans; and that as I have already shown because our translators supplied the elypsis from the parenthesis, instead of the 11th and 12th verses, according to the correct rules of sound biblical interpretation. The doctrine of the verse I believe to be this:—"As by the offence of one, sin or the certainty of sinning, came upon all men unto condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the atonement came upon all men unto justification of life; or was sufficient for the justification of all men." Here then, I think we have the clear meaning of the Apostle, and the confirmation of the true doctrine of original sin. Here we may see how the race descending from Adam by ordinary generation, i. e. became the species, "sinned in him and fell with him," i. e. certainly sinned, as connected with him by divine constitution; and by his first transgression was constituted fallen without any special trial of their own; according as is believed to be the true sense of the catechism.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From this part of the subject thus explained, I deduce the following conclusions:

1. 'That Adam, in the garden of Eden, was regarded and treated by God as the head and father of all his race; and that his trial for confirmation of character was a virtual trial of all his race for the same object.

2. 'That by divine constitution such a relationship did exist between Adam and his descendants as that his first act did secure as a result, the bringing of all his posterity into such a state of sin and misery, as that it was rendered morally certain, every one of them, so soon as capable of moral agency, would commence a course of sinful moral action, and that they would righteously suffer all the evils which God actually brings upon them.

3. 'That there is SOMETHING, whether it be called tendency, disposition, principle or depravity in man, which renders it certain as a consequence of Adam's transgression, and their relation to him, that not only the first moral act, but every subsequent one of all his descendants by "ordinary generation," will be sinful until they are renewed or regenerated by the Holy Ghost.

4. 'That this depravity is so complete, entire and universal; that no man ever did, or ever will repent, and receive the Lord Jesus Christ, without being both spiritually persuaded and morally enabled so to do by the Holy Ghost.'

5. That hence I deduce the necessity of the regeneration of infants; because being included in the divine constitution with Adam, they come into existence destitute of holiness, and with the certainty secured that the series of their voluntary emotions, without regeneration, will be unholy, whether put forth in heaven, earth or hell.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, OCT. 27, 1831.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

A great objection often assigned by the impenitent for their disregard of religion is the formality in religious services and the worldly-mindedness of Professors. It is often remarked that the piety exhibited on the Sabbath, and in conference meetings and social circles for prayer, vanishes as you approach the domestic fire-side. There religion is seen in its undress.

One great reason for these prejudices, we are satisfied, may be found in the manner in which family worship is conducted. There is often a want of solemnity—a mingling of religion with worldly concerns—an apparent grudging of the time spent at the family altar—which so far from exciting a reverence for God and a spirit of devotion, creates disgust in the minds of the impenitent and strong suspicions of want of sincerity.

We fear that it is not uncommon to see some of the family engaged in domestic concerns—attending perhaps to a preparation of some article of food—the needle is not laid aside by another, and a third is sent away to attend to some business which is deemed more important than to ask the blessing of God. The family circle is too frequently rather a scene of confusion and disorder than of solemnity and devotion. It is not uncommon to see the children and domestics of a family in all attitudes but that of a reverential bowing of the knee at a throne of grace. Some perhaps are moving about, others exhibit by their continual motions a sense of uneasiness which must distract the attention of those near them and disturb the mind of him who leads the devotional services at the family altar.

We would ask what are the benefits expected to result from family worship when thus conducted? Will the hearts of those who thus negligently and irreverently unite in the external act of worship be likely to receive any favorable impression? Will they be likely to form a very exalted opinion of the piety of the head of the family who permits such departures from decency and good order? Will they be likely to be impressed with a high idea of the transforming power of that religion which has so much of solemnity and reverence in the sanctuary and other public assemblies, when so little of it is seen in the family circle? May not a reason for instances of notorious apostacy in those who have been awakened and expressed a hope in the pardoning mercy of God during a revival, be found in the exhibition of religion which they see at the domestic fire-side and the carelessness and worldly-mindedness with which they see their parents or guardians attend to the domestic duties of religion?

If God is to be approached with reverence in public—if any attention to worldly concerns is wholly incompatible with the worship of the sanctuary or the prayer meeting—we do not see why they are not equally so when we address our Maker, acknowledge our dependence and ask his blessing in our families.

We do believe that this is a subject deserving of much more attention than it receives and one which it becomes every professed follower of Christ to examine with great care and deep solicitude. God we do believe is awfully dishonored and souls are lost through the deleterious influence exerted at the devotions of the family.

TEMPERANCE ALMANAC.

Messrs. Hoyt, Porter & Co. of this village have published a Temperance Almanac for 1832.

We have examined and can bear testimony to the value of this new auxiliary to the Temperance cause. The matter with which it is filled does great credit to the judgment of those who compiled it. It must do good. It contains just such facts, and such articles as we should be glad to see placed in the hands of every family.

The difference in the real utility of such an Almanac and that of those with which we were formerly furnished can hardly be estimated.

There is one particular reason for our placing a high value upon this almanac. Every family whether rich or poor, can and will have an Almanac of some kind, and this will find its way into a multitude of families on which there seems to be no other way to exert an influence in favor of temperance, as they keep themselves aloof from those places where addresses are delivered on the subject, and take none of the Tracts or publications calculated to expose the pernicious and ruinous effect of ardent spirits.

It is a fact that the temperance reformation in this quarter, for the reason above stated, is at a stand. The more respectable part of the community have generally given in their adhesion to the temperance principles, but the rum-seller and the grocery tipplers are more numerous and more bold than a year ago. Drunkards do not study so much to seek concealment. Those who drink a little at the bar, do not betray as much guilt and shame—do not look around with the same inquisitive, guilty, glance to ascertain who sees them, when they call for their dram. We are satisfied that something more must be done, and that quickly, or much of the good that has been effected will be finally lost. Unless a new impetus is given to the measures which are already adopted to redeem our country from the curse of drunkenness, the work may be considered as at a stand. Temperance has become popular with that class who seek for, or value popularity—but the lower class of the community, is but little affected by all that has been done. Those who are in the habit of reading the publications of the day—who have read much on the subject of temperance, have either abandoned the use of spirits altogether, or have become proof against their influence. But there is a very large class of laboring men who are not in the habit of reading, & who are not yet hardened by resisting the convictions of their consciences, that may yet be reclaimed. We hope if nothing more can be done for them at present, that pains may be taken to get the Temperance Almanac into their hands. It contains matter of the right kind to affect them.—It will have an effect. It will open their eyes to the sin and folly of drinking, and will either lead them to abandon it—or, having shut their eyes to the light, they will the sooner reach the front rank—will the sooner be found among the 30,000 who yearly go to the drunkard's grave.

INFIDEL LIBERALITY.

Our neighbors at Hanford's Landing have recently had a fair sample of the liberal and tolerant principles of those who are opposed to orthodoxy.

As the religious society there is small and has not been able to build a church, the meetings of the different denominations, have for years been held at the district School House. At the last annual meeting for the election of Trustees (owing as is said to a previous concert, among the opposers of religion) three Trustees were chosen whose first act was to close the School House against religious meetings. The consequence is that while the School House is unoccupied, those who choose to assemble for worship are obliged to meet at a private house.

It ought to be noticed that one of the Trustees is a professed Universalist. Two of them deal in ardent spirits, and all of them are open opposers of revivals. At least two thirds of the heads of families in the district, for whose benefit and at whose expense the house was built, have expressed, by a petition to the trustees, their disapprobation of this high-handed measure.

We mention this subject merely to show what may be expected where universalists, opposers of revivals, and Rum-sellers, are placed in authority. These are the men who have so much to say about coercion—about the bigotry and intolerance of the supporters of Sabbath Schools, and all those who contribute to promote the various objects of christian benevolence—these are the men who talk about church and state—who find that their rights of conscience are infringed by a concert among professors of religion not to travel, or to patronize stages or boats that travel, on the Sabbath—these are the men whose principles of religious liberty and equal rights, lead them, as trustees of a District School, to shut the school house against their neighbors who wish to assemble there to worship God!!!

"The effects of the principal arts and trades and Professions, and of civic states and Habits of Living on Health and Longevity, by C. Turner Thackrah.

Of this little volume we can only say that its title would lead us to suppose that it might be highly entertaining and useful. It is spoken of by those who have examined it in terms of high commendation.

It is obviously a matter of great importance to parents, when deciding upon a trade or profession for their children, to ascertain as far as practicable what influence it is likely to have upon their health and the prospect there may be of their living to an advanced age.

It is published by H. H. Porter, at the same office of the Journal of Health, and is for sale in this village at the Book Store of SKINNER and PHELPS, one door South of the Rochester Bank.

SPASMODIC CHOLERA PROMOTED BY INTEMPERANCE.

It appears from all the accounts of the Cholera which is now, and has been for years, desolating Asia and the northern countries of Europe, that its ravages were vastly greater among the intemperate than among those who made no use of ardent spirits. One physician states that out of 100 patients which he lost with that disease, at least ninety of them were addicted to habits of intemperate drinking. Diebitsch was a great drinker of Brandy. Could we lay before our readers a mass of testimony which we have in our possession in relation to the connection of the use of spirits with the fatality attending the ravages of the Cholera, our readers would find one of the strongest arguments perhaps, ever produced against the use of spirits. It would seem as if Providence had sent this scourge of drunkards at this time, to aid the cause of temperance—to demonstrate to the world that ardent spirits, instead of being a preventive of disease, just serve to form a channel through which it flows with the most destructive and desolating force.

Let us profit by this new evidence in favor of total abstinence, and shut the cholera out of this country by destroying the principal aliment on which it feeds.

Although this disease attacks the temperate, it seldom proves fatal. Irregularities of any kind, or great fatigue or exposure appear to increase its violence. And if we may place reliance on the accounts received, an entire disuse of alcohol in any shape, together with temperance in eating and proper care in guarding against improper exposure and excesses of every kind, would render the Cholera perfectly mild or entirely guard against its attacks

While the Governments of Europe are at great expense in establishing "sanitary cordons" to guard against this disease, let ours be the simple specific prescribed by the Apostle—"Temperance in all things."

Mr. Wm. M. Thompson and Horace Bushnell, were licensed to preach the gospel by the Cincinnati Presbytery at a recent session of that body. We are told by the Cincinnati Journal that the latter "avowed his opposition to the imprecatory clauses of the Confession of Faith, and declared that he considered it his duty to preach to the members on account of his holding the heretical sentiment that "Christ died for all men."

SYNODICAL CONVENTION.

The members of the Synod of Genesee are now sitting in convention in this village, for the purpose of discussing various subjects relating to the interests of religion. At the late Session of Synod at Brockport this meeting was appointed, and certain questions were assigned to individual members for them to report upon at this convention.

The Convention met on Tuesday in the Session Room of the first Presbyterian church and was organized by the appointment of Rev. Mr. Curry of Lockport as Chairman, and Rev. Messrs. Day of Geneva, and Eaton of Buffalo as Clerks. Rev. Mr. Day read a report on the subject assigned him viz: "What can be done to promote greater union among denominations, or to prevent the evils arising from the divisions of christians into sects"—and concluded with proposing the formation of a "Christian Harmony Society." There was a highly interesting discussion on this subject which continued until the adjournment at evening, when it was committed to Messrs. Penney, Wisner and Eaton.

This we view as one of the most important meetings of an ecclesiastical body that has ever been held in this section of country—and from the excellent spirit which thus far appears to pervade this body, we cannot but expect will be highly beneficial to the interests of religion.

We hope to be able to procure copies of some of the reports for publication. The further proceedings of this body we shall give next week.

☞ROCHESTER INSTITUTE.☜

The examination of the classes will commence on Wednesday the 2d Nov. at 9 o'clock A. M. Public speaking in the afternoon. In the evening Professor Oatman will deliver an introductory Lecture to a course of Chemistry and Natural Science.

The friends of the Institute and Literary gentlemen, are invited to be present. Seats will be reserved in the Chapel for the reception of ladies.

The semi annual report of the institution will be read. The 3rd term will commence on Monday the 15th of November.

The arrangements for study and labor during the recess will be such that applicants need not delay for the ensuing term.

We learn from the last N. York Evangelist, that there is a protracted meeting held in Rev. Mr. Parker's Church, and that appearances were very favorable.

We have received a communication from Tuscarora (Indian) Village which is under consideration and will be attended to.

QUALITY OF OUR PAPER.

We ought to have noticed three or four weeks since the great improvement in the quality of our paper After much trouble, and many disappointments, we have succeeded in obtaining paper of a quality which we are confident, will make some amends to our subscribers for the miserable paper which we have been obliged to use a part of the time the present year.

We now obtain our paper from the Mill of Messrs MARSHALL, FOREMAN & Co. of Seneca Falls, from whom we shall continue to procure it so long as they shall continue to furnish it of as good a quality as that which we have lately received from them.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman.—I read in the Observer of Oct. 20th an article copied from the New Hampshire Observer on the question, "How are believers pardoned." As the article is one of your selection and not an original communication I suppose you are the proper person to apply to for an explanation of such parts as your readers do not understand, I should like an explanation of the following. "Although there is but one ground upon which pardon can be granted yet it may be complete or partial."

"Hence as before observed partial forgiveness is the remission of part of the evil which the sinner deserves."

"But God may forgive the believer the deserved punishment of all his sins in a future state and at the same time exercises his discretionary power to punish in this world in the manner and to the degree infinite wisdom and goodness may think best."

This to me is new doctrine, and what I believe ministers in this part of the country have not yet preached. I have heard them declare the pardon of sin upon the exercise of faith and repentance, but never held up the idea of a partial pardon, i. e. God's forgiving the believer the punishment of his sins in the future world and punishing him in this. Does not this new doctrine set aside in some measure the efficacy of the blood of Christ of which the apostle John affirms; "and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

INQUIRER.

The best answer we can give to "Inquirer" is that the sentiment above quoted did not strike us, on reading before, as it does now.—We then supposed that the language of the writer conveyed the idea that God, when the sinner repents, forgives his sins, but still, being imperfect, chastizes him by the afflictive dispensations of his providence, for his good, the better to prepare him for heaven. This we presume was the intention of the writer, although his language certainly will bear a very different construction.

For the Observer.

Much has been said and much has been done in the cause of Temperance, and yet one important part is greatly neglected or entirely overlooked; I mean that of furnishing the means of making ardent spirits. Men will unite with Temperance Societies and agree by signing constitutions to do all in their power to suppress the evil of Intemperance and to discourage the making &vending of ardent spirits, and yet drag their corn and their apples to the distillery and by so doing encourage the making of the fatal poison. Are these things honest? Do they act in the cause of Temperance from principle? My heart often bleeds when I see my brethren in the church so doing. Do they realize that they are the direct agents in making drunkards; of ruining both the souls and bodies of their fellow mortals. Would to God they did! Would they did realize the inconsistency of their conduct.

C.

The second Quarterly meeting of the Young Men's Temperance Society of this village, was held at the 2d Presbyterian Church on the evening of the 17th of October, pursuant to adjournment.

On suggestion that the President, vice President and Recording Secretary were absent, and on motion of Wm. S. Bishop, Esq. Doct. H. N. Fenn was called to the chair, & A. Wentworth appointed Recording Secretary, pro. tem.

Prayer on the opening of the meeting by the Rev. Mr. Lyons.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The Society then proceeded to elect an Orator for the next meeting, and E. D. Smith, Esq. was duly elected.

The reports of the Ward Committees and of the Curators were heard and accepted.

Mr. Freeman, agreeably to his appointment, delivered an address on the subject of Intemperance.

On motion of E. D. Smith, Esq. and after a spirited and highly interesting discussion the following Resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That we, as members of this Society will severally obtain at least one signature to the Constitution of our Society in each month and report the same to some one of the Curators or to the Society at its monthly meeting; and to accomplish this, we pledge ourselves each to the other and to Cause so long as there shall remain an ordinary possibility of obtaining one name.

Resolved, That these our exertions in the cause of Temperance shall not be remitted so long as a confirmed drunkard, an habitual tippler or a temperate drinker shall remain in our village.

Resolved, That we will pledge ourselves severally to attend all the regular meetings of this Society with uniform punctuality when in our power.

An address from the Young Men's Temperance Society in the city of New-York was read and approved.

On suggestion that one of the Curators had removed from the village, Dr. A. Kelsey was appointed in his place.

Five delegates, viz.: A. S. Alexander, S. Miller, E. D. Smith, Esqrs. John A. Sprague and H. L. Achilles were appointed to attend the annual meeting of the County Society in Jan. next.

Adjourned to the 1st Tuesday in Jan. next.

A. WENTWORTH, Rec. Sec. pro. tem.
H. N. FENN, Pres't. pro. tem.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TMPERANCE. NO. 1.

The efforts now making for the suppression of intemperance, will ultimately prove entirely successful.

Many doubt this, or affect to doubt it. So many doubt, or affect to doubt the authenticity of the scriptures, and the final triumphs of the cross of Christ. But their doubts do not affect the final issue of either the one or the other. The effect produced, is upon the individuals themselves who indulge in such scepticism—it deters them from action and debars them from a participation in the joy and the triumph. But that the success of the Gospel will be complete, the most irrefragible reasons can be adduced; and he who doubts, only proves the depravity and enmity of his heart. And that the cause of temperance will finally succeed maugre all opposition, there are abundant reasons to conclude.

The object at which the temperance movements aim, affords one argument This is not, as some suppose, to reform the drunkard. Were this the object, need might men doubt. Nine-tenths at least of the present race of sots are past hope, and beyond recovery. They will neither fly the vice nor drop the anchor. Motive upon them has lost its effect. To save them is not the object. True, now and then one turns back again to life and hope—breaks his fetters and escapes. Two thousand captives in three years of effort have thus been liberated in the U. S., "but what are these among so many?"

The object of temperance measures is in part prospective. The present race of inebriates is quickly passing away. In ten years not one will probably be left of all the 300,000 who now afflict their friends and their country. This fact is well understood by the advocates for total abstinence from ardent spirit; and acting upon it, they are using every effort to prevent any from entering the ranks, to supply the places of the fallen. For this they are acting upon the young—for this, they are pledging themselves to an entire disuse of that which makes men sots. And this design is patriotic in the highest sense of the word; and as such commends itself to every true friend of his country. Do away the use of ardent spirit and you do away the cause of two-thirds of our pauperism—nine-tenths of our crime; one-third of our maniacs, you save the lives of 30,000 of our citizens, and prevent an untold amount of wretchedness and woe.

And the object of temperance efforts is benevolent. If to bind up the broken-hearted—to carry supplies to the destitute—to restore joy and peace to the miserable—if these are acts of benevolence, then to prevent these is equally benevolent. And these things have been done in more than one instance—in many instances.

Patriotism and benevolence, when they appeal to the hearts of men, and especially of christians, will move their sympathies and call forth their efforts. And never were appeals made more loud, more commanding, and more justly than those made by the friends of temperance measures.—And these are such as will, as must prevail.

CH. YALE,
Agent of the N. Y. State Temp. Soc.

FOREIGN.

From the N. Y. Spectator.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM RUSSIA.

The brig Cronstadt has arrived at Boston from Cronstadt—having left that port on the 25th of August. It is stated in the Boston Daily Advertiser, that on the day when the brig sailed, "information was received from St. Petersburg that the Russian government had notified the French Ambassador that his presence was not necessary, and that his passports were ready to be delivered to him. This information was derived from the deputy of the American Consul at Cronstadt, who considered it authentic, and was confirmed by the Captain of the Guard House at Cronstadt, who signed the passport of the above named brig."—This information may be true; though it is not sufficiently direct to be received with positive certainty. What renders it somewhat probable, is the fact mentioned in our previous foreign advices, that the French and English Ministers at the Russian Court had been instructed by their respective governments to interpose in behalf of the Poles, and that the former was directed to insist upon the cessation of hostilities on the part of Russia. In fulfilling these instructions, the French Minister may have pressed the Russian Ministry so sharply as to have given offence—and hence the tender of his passports. We shall anxiously wait for further advices; for, if the report be true, it is the most decisive movement towards a general war in Europe, than has yet been made since the recent breaking forth of the revolutionary spirit. If the French Minister has been thus dismissed by the Autocrat, neither Perier, nor his master, would be able to retain their fiery countrymen from the onset.

POLISH PATRIOTISM.

The Poles have long been celebrated for their devoted patriotism. Bravery and fidelity in the exercise of official duties, are not uncommon, but to resign the highest post of honor and power and to return to the station of a private citizen—to exhort those who were recently subject to military control to transfer their respect and obedience to a successor and to pass upon that successor a high eulogium, is a manifestation of nobleness of spirit and of true patriotism which will raise a monument to the name of Skryznecki, which will endure when marble records shall have been obliterated by the rust of time.

The following is the article to which we allude. It is followed by the address of Dembenski on assuming the command of the Polish forces.

Warsaw, Aug. 13.

(BY THE WAY OF CRACOW)

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Head-quarters of Bolinow.

"Soldiers!—Called by the choice of the nation and your confidence, to exercise the commander-in-chief over you in the sacred cause of our country, I share at your head in all the glorious privations and dangers to which you have been exposed. Far from all feeling of self love, I never sought the power which was confided to me; I accepted it, and have hitherto exercised it. Though I was sensible that it was accompanied with many and great difficulties, it was not my intention to yield to those difficulties, but I was resolved to be the first to give the example of that preserverance of which we have so much need in our present situation.

A deputation, named by the Diet, found it advantageous for the good of the country to confide the chief command of the army to other hands. While I submit with resignation to this interference, I will address you for the last time, to testify to you the entire esteem with which I am filled for your bravery, your devotedness, and zeal. Your country judges by what you have hitherto done, of what it may expect from you in future. The commander, whom the representatives of the nation have placed over you, is already known to you by his bravery and his resolution, since by overcoming the greatest difficulties he saved your comrades from that destruction which, for a less resolute man, would have been inevitable. Let us surround him with the confidence and affection his merits deserve. Implicit confidence, obedience, the first virtue of a soldier of every rank, will be a powerful support on our side to the new commander; and I, who had the honor to be at your head, may now be allowed to aspire to another, that of fighting in your ranks, and giving you an example of the discipline which I have hitherto required from you, and to which I will with you willingly submit. Soldiers, let us always unite magnanimity and obedience with courage and zeal, and with God's help Poland will still rise from its ruin—Poland forever,

"The Commander in chief of the Armed National Force, "SKRYZNECKI.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Head-quarters, Bolinow, Aug. 12.

"Soldiers!—Called by the will of the Diet from your ranks to your head, I take on me this post full of confidence and hope. The exercise of the chief command is not difficult where all are animated by one feeling—that of sacrificing themselves for the deliverance of the country. Yes, it will certainly find it in your courage, and in the perseverance which is able to conquer every thing. Citizens and Soldiers, I have served among you during this national war; I therefore know the spirit that animates you, and will not exhort you to obedience and order; so much only I will say, that extraordinary efforts are required—only one thought shall direct all our movements, that of renouncing every thing that men prize most highly in order to secure our independence. Whatever these movements may be, the zeal which inspires you in battle must not cool during the preparations for it. If my military life hitherto, and bringing back to their families some thousand of your brethren whom you perhaps already gave up as lost, can give me any title to your confidence, I claim it of you in the name of God and our country. I know that I can only be strong through your strength; I know also the demands of the nation and the army, and will not disappoint your expectations. You shall see me every where partake in your hardships and dangers; but I must also be allowed to hope, that when we go altogether to the combat, you will depend on me as I do on the country and on you. Its deliverance alone guides your steps as well as mine.—Let us keep away every thing that might weaken the moral strength of the army, and free ourselves, and we shall leave to our posterity a free country.

"Commander-in-chief, ad interim., of the Armed National Force,

HENRY DEMBINSKI.

At a meeting of delegates to the Genesee County Temperance Society held at Le Roy on the 25th inst. it was

RESOLVED, That the said meeting be adjourned to the third Tuesday of November next in the Presbyterian meeting house in the village of Middlebury at 12 o'clock at noon. A punctual attendance of the delegates to the annual meeting of said society is respectfully solicited at that time and place. J. B. WILCOX, Sec'ry.
Oct. 25th, 1831.

GENESEE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION ANNUAL MEETING.

To the several County Unions comprising the "GENESEE UNION" and the friends of the cause generally, Greeting—

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of this Union stands adjourned to Wednesday the 16th day of November next, then to convene at the Baptist Church in Rochester at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of choosing officers for the ensuing year—receiving reports from the respective County Unions and any other business connected with the interests of the Union.—Several addresses may be expected on the occasion.

The several County Unions are earnestly requested to forward their reports for the past year on or before the day of the meeting to Mr. Myron Strong of this place recording Sec'y, that due returns may be made to the "American Union," and above all that it may be apparent that the friends of Civil and Religious Liberty in this region where the Divine favor has been so signally manifest during the past year are "bringing forth the fruits of righteousness. On behalf of the Board.

CHAS. J. HILL, Cor. Sec'ry.

 Editors of newspapers within the thirteen Western Counties of N. Y. who are opposed to a union of "Church and State" are requested to give the above notice one insertion.

New Agent for the Observer.—Otis Thatcher.

Letters received since our last.—W. Parsons; G. B. Fitch; S. Russell; E. C. Hyde; N. H. Whitcomb; H. M'Curdy; L. Clark; F. Dole; W. Y. Vincent; S. A. Johnson; A. P. Haskell.

NOTICE.—Those Subscribers for the NEW YORK EVANGELIST the past year, are informed that by leaving their dues at the office of C. J. HILL within a few days, they will save the proprietors the expense of sending an agent to their dwellings.—Those who wish to pay at once for the past and the current year will find their account in so doing.

October 6, 1831. 2w41.

NOTICE.

A special meeting of the Presbytery of Rochester, will be holden at Chili on the 3d of November next at 10 o'clock A. M.

J. PIERSON, Moderator.

MARRIED,

In this village on the 10th inst by N. Draper Esq. Mr. Jasiel Farr, to Miss Mary Bascom, both of Pittsford.—On the 16th by the same, Mr. Samuel C. Higgins, to Miss Mary Godby, of this village.

At Kidzie's Grove, Michigan, on the 6th of Sept. Mr Seeley Finch, of Caledonia, Livingston county, to Miss Eliza Clark, of the former place.

At New-Haven, Conn. on the 4th inst. by the Rev. Dr. Taylor, Mr. John B. Church, of Angelica, N. Y., to Miss Maria Trumbull, daughter of Benjamin Silliman, Esq. of the former place.

DIED,

In this village, on the 3d inst. Mary M. Norris, aged 18 years, daughter of Mr. John Norris of Penfield.

At Wapaghkennetta, about the first inst. Blackhoof, one the Chiefs of the Shawnese tribe of Indians, aged about 114 years. He was well known throughout the western country, as a formidable enemy in war, although the latter part of his warfaring life was devoted to the American cause. He was at St. Clair's, Harmer's, and Crawford's defeats, and perhaps at the time of his death, was the last man living which was in Braddock's defeat.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 00	Hay, ton	$12 to 14
Flour, bbl.	5 a 5 50	Potatoes,	20
Corn,	50	Butter, lb.	12 a 14
Oats,	25	Lard,	8
Beef, fresh	2 50 a 3 00	Cheese,	10
Pork, do.	3 50 a 4 00	Cider, bbl.	1 00
Salt, bbl.	1 50

Rochester price Pot ashes $90 ton—Pearls 105

DUTCH BOULTING CLOTH.

THE subscribers keep constantly on hand a stock of Dutch Bolting Cloths of the different Manufactories, viz: Anchor, Plaat, Harlaem, and Star, which they will sell in all cases at retail, at a small advance from the New York prices. Large Flouring Establishments supplied at New York prices, and they will warrant all cloths sold by them.

Burr Mill Stones.

We are also agents for the sale of Burr Mill Stones, and will sell as low as they can be had, and will warrant as good as can be purchased in the State. THOMAS KEMPSHALL. & Co.

35 State (formerly Carroll) Street.

Oct. 27, 1831. 44

REMOVAL.

A. C. BURR, Jeweller and Watch Maker, has removed from his old stand, on State (formerly Carroll) Street, to the corner of Buffalo and State Streets.

Oct 27, 44

FOR SALE.

LOT No. 54, containing 54 Rods of ground pleasantly situated on Andrews Street, within one hundred rods of the bridge.

ALSO for sale 10 acres of heavily timbered Land 3 1-2 miles east of the village.

ALSO for sale or to rent, Slips Nos. 3 and 107 in the 3d Presbyterian Church in this village.

Enquire of D. BUSH,
Oct. 26, 1831. No. 29, Main-st.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Gray's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

The subscriber having became sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. Mc'Coy & Co. begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an elegant assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Sattinets &c comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a "nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," he is determined to sell! DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. tf.

LAMPS.

THE subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Suspended, Stand & Astral LAMPS, Lamp Globes, and Wick.—Also, Britania Ware. Communion setts. Persons wishing to buy for Churches or private use, will find it to their advantage to call before buying elsewhere.

BENJAMIN SEABURY.

Exchange-st. Rochester. 3m33

DISSOLUTION.—The firm of Bloss & Harrison is dissolved by mutual consent. All persons owing said firm by note Book account or otherwise, are requested to call and settle with J. B. Bloss, to whom all the accounts are assigned, and who will pay all demands against said firm.

J. B. BLOSS,
M. A. F. HARRISON.

The subscriber still continues the business, where any calls in the Dry Good and Grocery line will be promptly attended to, and Cash thankfully received. J. B. BLOSS.

February 7 1831 tf.

New Arrangement in the Hardware Business.

HENRY BUSH and GEORGE BUTLER have formed a connection in business which will be carried on under the firm of Bush & Butler at the old stand of H. Bush, where they are now receiving their spring importation of Hardware, Cutlery, Saddlery, Fancy Goods &c direct from the Manufactories in England together with a general assortment of American goods in their line, which they offer for sale at wholesale & retail on as good terms as any house in America. Their stock being very heavy, and patterns new, we hope to receive a share of public patronage.

Buffalo Street in the Arcade June 1.

"O SING PRAISES!"

THE subscriber takes this method to inform the Christian public, that he has in a good degree recovered his health and voice, and is again ready to engage in leading Psalmody in those societies and churches in this village and vicinity which are anxious to revive this important (tho' too much neglected) part of Divine Worship. All letters addressed to him through the P. O. will meet with prompt attention. Also, private instruction will be given to individuals living in the village who may desire it, on reasonable terms. D. CLARK.

☞ The subscriber wishes to dispose of a superior toned CHURCH ORGAN, comprising 8 stops Price, $800. Piano Fortes taned on short notice D. C.

NOTICE.—The partnership of the subscribers, under the name, firm & style of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent, and all the property and debts due the firm are the property of David Bush, and all settlements to be made with him, and those having debts against the firm, will call on said Bush for settlement.

WM. Mc COY
DAVID BUSH.

Rochester, July 26th, 1831 3t

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the London British Magazine.

STANZAS BY WILLIS GAYLORD CLARK.

"How great are his signs, and how mighty are his wonders! His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation." —DANIEL.

I marked the spring as she passed along,
With her eye of light and her lip of song;
While she stole in peace o'er the green earth's breast,
While the streams sprang out from their icy rest:
The buds bent low to the breeze's sigh,
And their breath went forth in the scented sky;
When the fields looked fresh in their sweet repose,
And the young dews slept on the new-born rose.

I looked upon Summer;—the golden sun
Poured joy over all that he looked upon;—
His glance was cast like a gift abroad;
Like the boundless smile of a perfect God!
The stream shone glad in his magic ray—
The fleecy clouds o'er the green hills lay,
Over rich, dark woodlands their shadows went,
As they floated in light through the firmament.

The scene was changed. It was Autumn hour:
A frost had discolored the summer bower;
The blast wailed sad 'midst the cankered leaves,
The reaper stood musing by gathered sheaves;—
The mellow pomp of the rainbow woods
Was stirred by the sound of the rising floods;
And I knew by the cloud—by the wild winds strain,
That Winter drew near, with his storms again!

I stood by the Ocean; its waters rolled
In their changeful beauty of sapphire and gold;
And Day looked down with its radiant smilee,
Where the blue waves danced round a thousand isles;
The ships went forth on the trackless seas,
Their white wings played in the joyous breeze;
Their prows rushed on 'midst the parted foam,
While the wanderer was wrapt in a dream of Home!

The mountain arose with its lofty brow,
While its shadow lay sleeping in vales below;
The mist, like a garland of glory lay,
Where its proud heights soared in the air away;
The eagle was there on his tireless wing,
And his shriek went up like an offering;
And he seemed in his sunward flight to raise
A chant of thanksgiving—a hymn of praise!

I looked on the arch of the midnight skies,
With its blue and unsearchable mysteries:
The moon, 'midst an eloquent multitude
Of unnumbered stars, her career pursued;
A charm of sleep on the city fell,
All sounds lay hushed in that brooding spell—
By babling brooks were buds at rest,
And the wild-bird dreamed sweet on his downy nest.

I stood where the deepning tempest passed:
The strong trees groaned in the sounding blast;
The murmuring deep with its wrecks rolled on,
The clouds overshadowed the mighty sun;
The low reeds bent by the streamlets side,
And hills to the thunder-peal replied—
The lightning burst forth on its fearful way,
While the Heavens were lit in red array!

And hath MAN the power, with his pride and his skill
To arouse all Nature with storms at will?
Hath he power to color the summer cloud—
To allay the tempest when the hills are bowed?
Can he waken the spring with her festal wreath,
Can the sun grow dim with his lightest breath?
Will he come again, when death's vale is trod?
Who then shall dare murmur "there is no God!"

From the N. Y. Observer.

TOUR IN MISSOURI.

St. Louis, September, 1831.

St. Louis is by far the most important town in all this part of the Valley of the Mississippi. It was founded in 1764. It stands on the western side of the Mississippi, two hundred miles from its junction with the Ohio, twenty miles below the Missouri, and forty below the mouth of the Illinois. The city is growing rapidly in importance. Situated on an elevated bank, it is above the overflow of the river, and must prove a healthy place, especially as the small ponds in its vicinity are becoming drained. Two streets parallel with the river are on the first bank; the rest of the city stands on the second bank, which spreads out in a vast plain to the west. The streets in the old part of the city are rather too narrow for convenience. But it is altogether a place of great business. It is the centre of trade for the states of Missouri and Illinois, and indeed for the vallies of the upper Mississippi and Missouri. The houses that have been built by the American part of the population, which greatly predominates over the French, and is perhaps two thirds of the whole, are principally of birch. The present population is about 7,000. The French population is Catholic. They have a large birch Cathedral, which is far from being, although it has often been represented otherwise, an elegant building. The Methodist and Presbyterian churches are flourishing. Those of the Episcopalians and Baptists are smaller but very respectable. The latter have a church of colored people also.

Sunday schools are flourishing here, and the efforts which are making to establish these excellent institutions, by the American Sunday School Union, are great and successful. On last Sabbath, the 28th ult. a very interesting public meeting was held at the Presbyterian church, to aid the efforts which the society is making to supply the Valley of the Mississippi with Sunday schools. Judge Carr presided, and in his introductory address spoke highly of the object. The Rev. Mr. Baird, General Agent of the American Sunday School Union, Mr. Gamble and Mr. Bates, distinguished lawyers here, Judge Peck of the U. S. Court and the Rev. Mr. Potts addressed the meeting. I have seldom heard as good addresses on this subject as were delivered by the four legal gentlemen on this occasion. About five hundred and twenty dollars were subscribed, in addition to two hundred before contributed by the Presbyterian church.

There are fifteen or twenty steam-boats lying here repairing, for the fall trade, and as many as seven or eight are constantly running to Louisville; several are engaged in the upper trade, and run to Galena, Beardstown, Chariton, &c. or up the Illinois, when it is navigable. Others run to New Orleans; and yet this is the dullest season, excepting two months in the winter, January and February, when the Mississippi is not only low, but often frozen over.

One of the greatest curiosities here, is the American Fur Company's establishment, where thousands of Skins may be seen at once, such as Buffalo, Deer, &c. &c. brought down the Mississippi and Missouri. They employ at present about one thousand men in this branch of the company, as hunters, trappers, &c. Their principal post on the Missouri is at the mouth of the Yellow Stone, 1800 miles above this place. A few weeks ago their steam-boat, the Yellow Stone, returned from a trip up the Missouri, up which she went 1400 miles, (but could not reach the Yellow Stone, as contemplated, on account of the low state of the river,) bringing a great number of Skins, and about 9,000 Buffalo Tongues, dried of course, and in a fine state of preservation! What a sacrifice of that noble animal there must have been, and only, or chiefly for their hides and tongues! This branch of the American Fur Company is managed by Mr. Choteau. The American Fur Company has its head quarters at New-York, as you know, and was founded by John Jacob Astor and others, many years ago. Mackinaw is the centre of the operations for the northern branch; as St. Louis is for the southern.

The influence of the Roman Catholics is great in this state. Besides their schools and churches in what may be called French towns, they have several important seminaries of learning.—They are divided in this state. The influence of the Jesuits prevails in the northern part of the state. They have the chapel and school at St. Charles; the large female school at Florissant, twenty miles north of this city; they have also the college in this city, which has now one hundred and twenty boys and youth attached to it. The president of this institution is a man of talents, it is said, as is also Mr. ——, the superintendent of all the Jesuits in the Valley of the Mississippi, and who resides here. They have also the female seminary of this place. On the other hand, Bishop Rosetti, who is Bishop of this diocese, and resides here, is at the head of the other party, who are opposed to the Jesuits. This party has the Cathedral here, in which the Jesuits are not allowed to preach. They (that is the Bishop's side) have the large female and male school near Perryville in the more southern part of the state. There is a large number of youth receiving an education there. Among them are twenty-five young men preparing to be priests. They talk of erecting another institution of a similar kind, in the same region. The prospect is, I think, that between them, the Jesuits and the anti-Jesuits, they are likely to have the control of education in this state. The Protestants have attempted only two measures of general importance, and which are likely to keep the people from the permanent influence of popish superstition. One of these is the general distribution of the Bible; and the other is the effort which is now making to establish Sunday Schools in every neighborhood. Let this measure succeed, and these institutions be kept up by proper efforts, and error will be counteracted. But will these efforts be continued long enough, and be made thorough? I know that the American Sunday School Union is now doing nobly for this western country. But will they be sustained and enabled to continue their efforts, not two years only, but three or four? Or shall they relax just when they have got nobly at work! This is a question of deep interest to me. What will christians in your city, in Philadelphia, in Boston say to this! It will rest much with them. The west will do nobly—it has done so; it has subscribed from ten to fifteen thousand dollars to promote the establishment of Sunday schools in the west, besides what they have done for depositories and libraries, for themselves immediately.

The Rev. Dr. Nelson got a charter last winter for a college which he is about establishing near Palmyra, in the northern part of the state.

St. Charles on the Missouri, twenty miles from its mouth, and the same distance N. W. from this place, is a considerable town. Franklin, Boonesville, Charitor, and Jefferson city, on the same river, are also considerable places.

But I must close this long letter. I cannot however do so without saying, in a word, that the cause of the blessed Saviour is making decided progress, though not so rapid as is desirable, in this state. I am yours, &c. P.

ARTIFICES OF NEOLOGIANS FOR CORRUPTING CHRISTIANITY.

The following is from an address before the London Continental Society, by the Rev. Mr. Thelwall.

"About the middle of the last century, there began in Germany a systematic attack on all that was dear to the hearts of Christians—not in the shape of open objection, but what was called Exposition. Those, who wished to undermine religion, thought it would be useless to begin by scoffing and ridicule; which, though it might have suited the character of their French neighbors, was ill adapted to that of the Germans. These opponents of Christianity stood in the middle of a people, who, though imperfect in many points, had still a reverence for the Bible, and an attachment to the doctrines and principles of the Reformation.

"The first thing they did was to set the BIBLE against the contents of the Bible. They began by praising the Bible; and by insisting that it was to that, and that alone, that they must look. In this manner, they quietly thrust aside all the books, catechisms, and works of instruction which were founded on the Bible, and which had existed or been published since the Reformation, as if they would uphold the dead letter of the book to adoration, and had forgot the salutary streams which had flowed from that Divine Fountain.—Having thus endeavored to get rid of all those books and works which fitted the mind for the study of the Bible, the next thing was to endeavor to get rid of the Bible itself: for this purpose they first began by objections to particular books which they set forth as not being canonical, or supported by the same authority as others: they then proceeded to particular texts in those books, the authority of which they affected to admit: these they tried to explain in a manner totally different from that in which they had hitherto been understood in the Church of Christ. In this manner they tried to explain away the Trinity—the Incarnation—the Divine Atonement—the doctrine of Justification by Faith; in fact, all that was dear to men as Christians: or, in other words, they endeavored to get rid of Christianity itself piecemeal.

"Another mode by which they endeavored to disseminate their opinions, was by getting into their hands all the SCHOOLS in the country; and, in this, they succeded to a fearful extent.

"But it was not only in Literature, and in the direction of Schools, that they sought to propagate these doctrines: they endeavored also, as much as possible, to get BIBLE SOCIETIES and other religious associations under their direction. We, in England, are in the habit of thinking, that when a man becomes a member of the Bible Society, it is a proof of the sincerity of his wish to circulate the Bible: in Germany, that fact affords no proof at all of the existence of any such disposition; for a friend, who had good opportunities of knowing, told me that he could name a country where a Bible Society had been set up for the purpose of hindering the circulation of the Bible: those who got it up were aware that private individuals were circulating the Bible to a considerable extent, and that they were obtaining large numbers for distribution; in order to relax such efforts, they set up a Bible Society of their own; and, the more effectually to prevent the circulation of that Sacred Volume, they obtained an order of the State to prevent the importation of Bibles by any others than the Bible Society.

"Many other instances could be given of the attempts made by these Neologians to undermine the doctrines of Christians; but these which I have mentioned will be sufficient to show how earnest they are in that impious work."

PROGRESS OF POPERY.

☞ We recommend the following authentic facts collected from 'only one official' Romish Paper; to the serious consideration of all religious intelligent Protestants.

BEAST MARKING.—One hundred and one persons were confirmed in Popery at Blairsville—and 135 were also confirmed in the worship of the Beast at Lepontmen's Hall, Pennsylvania.—To this notice the Popish paper, from which it is extracted adds, "the Valley of the Mississippi [illegible] Popery."

In Augustine's Masshouse, Philadelphia; 160 persons were recently confirmed in idolatry; and 300 new Papists were manufactured in the Masshouse Armstrong county; 83 persons publicly avowed their attachment to the Beast, and were crossed at Laurenceburg: and 74 persons professed to be Babylonians, and received the image of the Dragon on their foreheads, at Freeport, Armstrong co. Pa. last month and 126 persons were confirmed for the service of the Pope and the Devil, in Paddy's Masshouse, at Pittsburg.

MASSHOUSES.—A Masshouse was opened in August at Bellefonte, Centre co.; and another temple of Idols in September at Ereeport, Armstrong county, Pa.

INDIANA.—"I see no way at present to prevent Vincennes from becoming the seat of Satan's empire for the states north of the Ohio. The County Seminary is taught by a Papist. The Nuns have 50 or 60 Protestant girls under their care. In Washington co. is a popish congregation of 3 or 400 people. New Albany is just coming into notice among them, where they are proposing to build a Masshouse; and other towns are now touching by the "feelers" of the Roman Priests; who are making every possible effort to get into notice." SPY.

From the Boston Recorder.

LETTER FROM A PRISONER.

We find in the Connecticut Observer (a letter from Dr. Butler, imprisoned missionary, to his brother in Connecticut. It is dated at Lawrenceville, Sept. 16, (the day on which sentence was pronounced.) He says:

We have got to go to confinement for simply living at home. I will make no comment. Many of the people here are our warm friends. We have not much the appearance of prisoners; shall perhaps have more when we are confined in the penitentiary. Do not weep for me so much as for my family, the church, the Cherokees, the United States, and more than all for Georgia. I have yet had much to support me and do beleive I shall have enough to carry me through the confinement. Our case will be carried to the Supreme Court by a writ of error.

In a P. S., dated Sept. 19, Dr. B. adds, The Sheriff was hindered so that we could not start on Saturday; and we petitioned him to remain here over the Sabbath, which was granted.

We expect now to start in a few moments. All of us are in good health, and mostly in good spirits. A number of petitions are on the way to the Governor for our reprieve; some have a good many names attached to them, and some are from individuals. Judge Clayton has himself requested the Governor to release us. I beleive the petitions are generally on condition that we will remove our families from the charter. Mr. Worcester and myself cannot accept a conditional reprieve.

From the Same.

PUBLIC OPINION.

We copy from our exchange papers a few paragraphs respecting the question between Georgia and the Missionaries. A Georgia paper thinks the actual imprisonment of the missionaries will occasion "considerable excitement." We think so too.

All that the opponents of the Indian bill predicted is being fulfilled. The strong man is trampling on the weak—the sanctuary of the Indian's home is violated—the ministers of the Cross are chained, imprisoned, and beaten by men who boast of the sanction of the general government; In the view of these things we cannot but exclaim with Jefferson "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, and that his vengeance will not sleep forever."—N E.. Review, (Conn.)

Even in this land, it appears that persecution has its instruments, and its prisons, by which the innocent may be arraigned, and in which the devoted missionary of the cross may be immured! Will the legislators of these free States look on such wrongs, and give the sufferers no redress!—Presbyterian, (Pa.)

"It is currently reported, (says the Macon Telegraph of the 24th ult.) in some of the upper counties, that Gov. Gilmer,s Guard have, without the intervention of Judge or jury, lately put to death three Indians, by shooting, for digging gold on the Cherokee land." We must hope, for the sake of humanity, the feelings of our people, and the character of the State, that this cannot be true; but, when we reflect how much all these have lately and frequently been outraged, in the same quarter, and by the same men, we cannot help fearing the worst.—Augusta Chron' (Ga.)

We consider the oath which, by the Constitution of the United States, no State has a right to require from a citizen either of itself or of another State, under any circumstances. If a man take an office, he must take the corresponding oath, but for a State Government to undertake to call upon private citizens to take oaths of allegiance, we hold to be illegal and that it ought to be resisted. But it is a long time since there was a law in Georgia.

For a long time we labored to excite the press and the people to a manful stand against the insolent usurpations and impudent nullifications of Georgia, but the apathy was immoveable. We begin to think that, like the Romans in their degenerate days, the people of this country wish for nothing but panem et circenses, money and pleasure.—Nass. Jour.

We rejoice that amidst the apathy and timidity which so generally prevail, there are men in this land who are determined that the law on this point shall be declared, and who are willing to encounter insult, imprisonment, chains, and death itself in defence of the rights of 12,000 of their fellow-men. Such conduct speaks nobly for the individuals; for the religious denomination to which they belong; and for the country which gave them birth. It requires no prophet to foretel that the names of these men will be repeated in future time in the same breath with the Hampdens of other ages. Their memory will be embalmed while that of their poor proud oppressors "will rot."—New-York Observer.

The high-handed measures of the State authorities in Georgia, with respect to the Cherokees and their gold mines, will some day meet a terrible and just retribution; if not from the frowns and censure of an indignant people, yet sooner or later from Him who will smite the oppressor in his wrath.—Col. Gaz. (Georgetown, D.C.)

We have not room to express our feelings respecting this gross outrage, and the stain which Georgia has indelibly fixed on herself and on the country. At a future day her sons would give untold millions to be permitted to tear out this page of her history. But it is too late—the memory of the persecutors will be embalmed in all their infamy. They will stand beside Nero and Domitian, and be the scorn of the world to the end of time.—Conn. Obs.

Some of our friends here wish us to test the laws. More than half the principal men of this place are our warm friends. Some of the most influential men of the State are mortified at the decision of the court, and feel that the State is greatly disgraced.—Letter from Dr. Butler to the Commissioners, dated at Lawrenceville, Ga.

We do not beleive that there is a case in the history of free Governments, at least within a hundred years, of such gross injustice and oppression—such a total disregard of the rights of property, as well as personal security, as has been exhibited in Georgia for the last three years; And the object is, to plunder a feeble, helpless people of their property, and to banish them from their possessions, and their home. Who ever heard of such felonies as the Legislature of Georgia have enacted! It is a felony, by their act, for a man not to take the oath of allegiance—a mere negative offence, to say the most: and in our view, a direct violation of an express provision of the constitution of the United States—an instrument which Governor Gilmer, and the legislature of Georgia may have the capacity to break, but the protection and preservation of which, fortunately, belongs to another power.—N. Y. Dai. Adv.

'KENTUCKY CHURCH AFFAIRS.'

'STRANGE DOINGS IN OHIO.'

Under the former of these titles, the October number of the Protestant Episcopalian, published at Philadelphia, contains an article on the Journal of the Convention of Kentucky held last June. In this diocese there are but three or four parishes, and eight Episcopal clergymen. Our readers will recollect that at their Convention in June, Rev. B. B. Smith, not long since Editor of the Philadelphia Recorder, and a moderate Churchman, was elected bishop of Kentucky. The writer in the Protestant Episcopalian is very much annoyed by the fourteenth article of the proposed Constitution of that diocese. The amount of the article seems to be that 'whenever the parishes in any district of the State shall desire to have the services of a bishop to themselves exclusively,' they shall have one, if at a district convention a majority is in favor of it, and the bishop of the diocese consent; or in case there is no bishop, if two thirds of the convention are in favor of the measure. The writer with a good deal of spirit and some of it not a little caustic, opposes this proposition. He thinks it would tend 'to make bishops numerous—multitudinous—cheap—or to make the house of bishops a housefull.' He thinks that Kentucky may be designing to imitate the example of 'Asia Minor, a territory not much larger than the island of Great Britain, which once contained almost four hundred bishops.'

Under the title of 'Strange doings in Ohio,' another writer makes some rather severe comments on the resignation of Bishop Chase, which he says is uncanonical, and cannot be admitted by the House of bishops. The Standing Committee of the diocese of Pennsylvania have refused to consider the subject of the election of Rev. Mr. M'Ilvane to be bishop of the diocese of Ohio, on the ground 'that bishop Chase has no right to resign the episcopate.'—Connecticut Observer.

From the Boston Recorder.

HOW A CHRISTIAN PHYSICIAN MAY DO GOOD.

I am of that profession, and am located in a small country village, with a population of less than fifteen hundred souls. There are two other practitioners beside me in the place, which makes the business comparatively small.—I have ever considered the Sabbath as a day sanctified and set apart by God himself, and a day which should be consecrated to his service. I long ago resolved in my own mind, that I would make no calls on that day which were not evidently necessary; and I hope that I have been able to keep that resolution. But, still, duty has obliged me to labor, when God had commanded rest.

About two years since it occurred to me, when thinking of this subject, that although duty obliged me to labor, yet I might still labor entirely for God. Satisfied with this idea, I formed the resolution, that I would keep a book purposely for this business, and in it I would register every call which I might make on the Lord's Day, with the amount of the sum charged. At the end of the year or oftener, I would cast up and settle this account, and pay over the amount into the Lord's treasury. My account as I find it on my books, for the last two years, is something over $50. The greater part of this sum has already been paid over; the balance is ready whenever opportunity offers. RABBATISMOS.

The Editor of the Vermont Chronicle, in speaking of the Circular signed by Dr. Green and others, which we published some weeks since, makes the following reflections.

To our Congregational eyes, all this looks very much like some of the doings of Cæsar's kingdom. We know that political parties have their Central, State and County Committees, who help each other scramble for office; but the introduction of the same machinery into the church strikes us as the commencement of a new era in ecclesiastical management. We would not impeach, for we do not doubt the purity of these men's views; but we are glad they are a minority, and likely to continue so. For however distant it may be from their intentions, such measures as this, if successful and continued, cannot fail to secularize the whole spirit and character of that church, and convert it into a great civil government for regulating the externals of religion among its members. The forms of political management can be used successfully, only in the spirit of political management; and these men, if they go on, will furnish a practical illustration of it.

"At the bank of England," says a paragraph in the Lady's Magazine, for December 1786, 'the sum of 471,000*l* was transferred by Mr. Van Otten, on account of the Landgrave of Hesse, so much being due for Hessian soldiers lost in the American war, at thirty pounds a man.' According to this calculation, the number of Hessians lost in the said war was 14,00.

From the Norfolk Beacon.

Since the late insurrection, a number of families of Free People of color, amounting in all to about 100 individuals, have determined, in consequence of the annoyance they have suffered by the frequent visits and rigid treatment of the Patrols, to emigrate to Liberia, by the first opportunity which may be afforded them. They have, for the purpose of temporary security and protection, entered into a written engagement, had their names registered, and have chosen Mr. Henry Lenow as their Agent.

Special violation of the Sabbath.—The New York Courier and Enquirer in making known its high merits, informs the community, that it takes special pains by its news-boat to collect intelligence on the Sabbath, and that in consequence of this the number of its subscribers has greatly increased!!—Bos. Rec.

New-England Rum, since the introduction of temperance societies, has been converted to a purpose that may enliven the desponding hopes of its venders. It is made to give a liquid spirit gass light very clear and brilliant. It is now redeeming its character, as it has sent many a hapless soul into the dark.—Phil. Sun.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield to Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829, & recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 318, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises, also conveyed by Basham Dunham and wife to B. H. Eb and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot numb'r four teen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided Dated October 6th, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY,
Mortgagee and Assignee.
B. MATHEWS, Att'y.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 3 of mortgages at page 352, executed by Adam Packer to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Gates in the county of Monroe and in lot No. forty three, Township No. one, and distinguished on a map of Carthill (a subdivision of said lot No. 53) as lot number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Bissell jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 408, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit—All that certain piece of parcel of land lying and being in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, in sub division of lot No. Seventy two, bounden south by lot no. 28, east by part of lot No. 71, north by lot No. 30, and west by Clinton Street, containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK, } Executors of
ASHBELL W RILEY, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys

IN CHANCERY.

Franc's Williams, Complainant, vs. Peter Brocket and Elizabeth his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Venzie, William Hardwick, George A. Avery, Walter Lyon Ellen Evan Griffith and Matthew Brown 3d, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester on the 29th day of August, 1831, I shall sell at public Auction, to the highest bidder, on the 14th day of December next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in said village of Rochester, and county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. "One certain house and lot lying situated in said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Walnut Alley, and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot deeded to the said Peter Brocket by Harmon Bissell, on the twelfth or thirteenth of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, on the Everard Peck purchase of Enos Stone."

ASHLEY SAMSON,
Master in Chancery
6w 35

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in liber 6 of Mortgages at page 584 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 16th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided; the said mortgaged premises, to wit.—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division now Monroe, and state of New York viz.—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz.—East west, and south by the lines of said Division, and Northerly, by aline to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Seymour, Esq.—including all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

I. ADAMS, Att'y. 23 24w.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

Sir—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Sec'ry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk, are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, Sheriff.
Rochester, Sept. 20th, 1831. 7w39.

BY virtue of an Execution issued out of the court of Common Pleas, in and for the county of Monroe and to me directed, against the Goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen B. Bartlett I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz. all those certain pieces of land situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe being—one lot lying near the generals of the Genesee River, beginning at the N. W. corner of village lot No 101—three chains northerly from the S. W. corner of village lot No. 102, on the corner of Atwater and Clyde street and running from thence north, 3 ° west, along the Eastern line of Clyde street 2 chains, thence north 87° 30' East two chains and fifty links, thence south 158 west, two chains, thence south 83° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of one lots numbers five and six, reference being had to the map and field notes of David Hudson Esq. in the survey of lots numbers 4 & 5 and 7 and being the same land that was conveyed by Stephen Bartlett, to W. P. Sherman and wife by deed of June 25th 1830—which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the Tavern of Mrs. Brosson in East Rochester on Monday the 14th day of Nov. next, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 29th 1831

For JAS. SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. MCRAKEN, late Under Sheriff.

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice. May 5, 1831.

20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Ish Northrup deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on me for settlement within six months from date.—Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.

6m 38.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO.

And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford, the subscriber as Agent for the above, mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829 LEVI WARD Jr.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firm of E. PECK & Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent.

EVERARD PECK,
DAVID HOYT,
may 6, 1831. SAM'L D. PORTER.

☞ The subscribers having purchased the Stock in Trade of the late firm of E. PECK and Co., will continue the business of Book Selling, Printing, and Book Binding, at the old stand, under the firm of HOYT, PORTER and Co.

DAVID HOYT,
SAM'L D PORTER,
may 6. LUTHER TUCKER.

☞ The subscriber, having connected himself in business with DAVID HOYT and SAMUEL D. PORTER, has removed his Printing Establishment to the old stand of E. PECK and Co., where he will continue the publication of the Daily Advertiser, Rochester Republican, and Genesee Farmer, under the firm of LUTHER TUCKER and Co.

may 6. LUTHER TUCKER.

BOOKS, STATIONARY, &C.

THE subscribers, successors to E. PECK & Co. at the old stand, No 33 Carroll-street, Rochester, have now on hand the most complete stock of Books, in the various departments of Science, Literature and Art, ever offered to the citizens of the "Genesee Country." Among them are comprised most of the works ever required by the Attorney, Physician or Divine, to make up their Library, and all the School Books used in the Common and Classical Schools of the State. Town and Social Libraries furnished on the most liberal terms, and at very low prices. Any work not on hand, furnished if to be found in the eastern cities, on short notice. They have also gone very extensively into the PAPER HANGING trade, and have now on hand a great assortment of Paper Hangings and Borders, of every description, from 38 cents to $1,25 cents per piece. In the variety, beauty and quality of this article, they stand unrivalled. Having a Book Bindery and Printing Office attached to their establishment, they are prepared to do Job Work in either of those branches of business in superior style. Their stock of stationary is very complete, comprising almost all things ever called for in that line. They have now on hand 500 reams super royal, medium, demy and royal Printing Paper, from some of the best manufactories in the state. Printers supplied with News Paper and News and Book Ink, of superior qualities, at low prices. Country Merchants supplied on the most liberal terms. The customers of the late firm of E. PECK & Co. are particularly requested to call. Orders from abroad thankfully received and promptly attended to.

HOYT, PORTER & CO.

H., P. & Co., are agents for the North American Review, American Quarterly do., London Quarterly do., Edinburgh do. Westminster do., Christian Spectator, Biblical Repository, American Journal of Medicine, delivered in Rochester at subscribers price.

HOYT, PORTER & Co.

HAVING now completed their assortment of Books suited to the wants of the public, offer a catalogue of a few of the leading works in their extensive stock, all of which will be sold low Among them are the following

SCHOOL BOOKS:

Geographys.—Hart's Geography & Atlas, Olney's, Woodbridge's, Cumming's, Worcester's, Malte Brun's, Peter Parley's, Cumming's, and Willett's.

Grammars.—Kirkham's, Murray's, Ingersoll's, Brown's, Smith's, Cardell's.

Arithmetics.—Smith's, Daboll's, Willett's, Emerson's, Colburn's, Filer's, Pike's, and Ostrander's.

Spelling Books.—Webster's Elementary, Webster's American, Sears', Cobb's, Marshall's, Mavor's, Murray's.

Reading Books.—Scott's Lessons, Historical Reader, English Reader, Introduction to English Reader, Sequal to English Reader, American First Class Book, Pierpont's Introduction to National Reader, Merriam's American Reader, National Orator, American Speaker, Barber's Elocutorist, Porter's Analysis of Rhetoric, Jack Hazard.

Classical Books.—Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary, Virgil Delphini, Gould's Virgil, Cooper's Virgil, Cæsar Delphini, Cicero Delphini, Justin Delphini, Horace Delphini, Græca Majora, Græca Minora, Davidson's Virgil, Adam's Latin Grammar, Gould's Latin Grammar, Goodrich's Greek Grammar, Valpy's do., Buttman's do., Ovid Delphini, Anthon's Horace, Stewart's Cicero, Dugdale's Horace, Hutchinson's Xenophon, Grove's Greek and English Lexicon, Pickering's do., Boyer's French Dictionary.

Mathematical Books.—Cambridge Mathematics, Hutton's Mathematics, Day's Algebra, Bonny Castle do., Byan's Algebra, Colburn's Algebra, Playfair's Euclid, Simpson's Euclid, Roche's Euclid, Gibson's Surveying, Art without Science by Eaton, Gummere's Surveying, Flint's Surveying, Bowditch on Navigation, &c. &c.

Miscellaneous School Books.—Blair's Rhetoric, Duncan's Logic, Watt's Logic, Hedge's do, Blake's Natural Philosophy, Comstock's do., Conversation on Chemistry, Ryan's astronomy, Wilkin's do., Ferguson's do., Watt's on the mind, Mason on Self Knowledge, Walker's Dictionary, Jameson's Rhetoric.

Histories.—Yale's Outlines of History, Goodrich's History of the United States, Hale's History of the United States, Wheipley's Compend, Tytler's Universal History, Butler's Compend

MISCELLANEOUS, HISTORICAL &c. suitable for Town Libraries.—Rollins' Ancient History, Josephus', Plutarch, Marshall's Life of Washington, Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, History of the Late War, Scott's Napoleon, Life of Charles 12th, Mary Queen of Scotts, Nelson, Byron, Pitkin's History of the United States, Encyclopædia Americana, Buck's Theological Dictionary, Arabian Nights, Spectator, Shakspeare, Waverly Novels, Cooper's Novels, Harper's Family Library, Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Hume's, Smollett and Bissett's England, Ferguson's Rome, Tacitus' Annals of Rome, Goldsmith's Works, Course of Time, all the Modern Novels, Lives, Franklin, Marion William Penn, American Biography, Scott's Poetical Works, Byron's do., Milton's, Pope's, Dryden's, Cowper's, Thompson's, Moore's, Shelly's, do, Morses' Revolution, Life Richard Henry Lee, Library of Entertaining Knowledge, Pike's Expedition, Denham and Clapperton's Travels in Africa, Flint's Recollections of the Mississippi, Mignet's French Revolution, Segur's Russian Campaign, Bain's French Wars, The Unique, &c. &c.

Religious.—Bibles of all descriptions, Watts', Dwight's, Methodist, Baptist, Village, Camp Meeting, Win

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 45.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.

Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3.00. In advance, $2.50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2.00.

Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. II.

THE PRESENT TEMPERANCE EFFORTS MUST SUCCEED.

The means are such as to insure the end.

No coercion is used. No man's natural or moral rights are invaded. No laws are called for—none are enacted. No man is compelled to abstain, who chooses, on the whole, to drink—to use the very means which thousands have used and been ruined. Men are dealt with as reasonable and rational beings. Motives to abstain, drawn from the entire uselessness of ardent spirit as a beverage; from the imminent hazard of the practice of so using it; from facts and from experience; from patriotism and benevolence; yea from Heaven, Earth, and Hell, are brought to bear upon the mind, and if in view of all these, any man chooses to be so irrational, so unreasonable, as to continue in the use of spirituous liquors, there is no coercion. The results of three years exhibition of these motives are manifest, and as the same cause must produce the same effect, so a continued operation of the same motives will continue to enlist new friends and new advocates. In this country, public opinion, once awakened, never slumbers till the object is gained.

And the means in use by the temperance friends ensure the end for another reason. Total abstinence, ensures the person practicing it from ever becoming an inebriate. This is self evident. Now in the U. S. not far from 300,000 persons have given the pledge of total abstinence. Not one of these, if they keep their pledge, will ever become a drunkard. This in the ratio of one drunkard to every forty of our whole population, will lessen the ranks of the intemperate 7,500—i. e. if these 300,000 had never given their pledge, 7,500 of them would, as things have been, have probably become intemperate. But in addition to these 300,000 who are pledged, as many more are convinced of the inutility and the danger of using ardent spirit, tho' not of the propriety and expediency of giving their pledge. These are acting on the principle of total abstinence, and acting in most cases from conviction. Here then we have another 300,000 who will probably escape the snare; and if they continue to act on the principle, will lessen the future ranks of intemperance another 7,500.—Here are 15,000 who would have been drunkards as things have been, had it not been for the temperance efforts.

This is a direct diminishing of the future number of the intemperate; and these same causes are still continuing their operation. Light is diffusing more and more, and every flash carries conviction to some mind, and to more than one—to thousands. Some it is true, object to the means in use, as unjust, unfair, illegal, immoral and dangerous. But of these hereafter.

These means have already been pre-eminently successful.

From the operation of some cause, public opinion has awakened—the constant use of ardent spirit has become unpopular;—the amount manufactured and imported has decreased 53 per ct., and numbers have been reformed who were given up as lost. Some cause has produced these effects; and what cause shall we assign, but the influence of temperance measures? Many of the reformations which have occurred are certainly attributed to this. The writer knew a man, who but for the influence of temperance combinations, would in all probability have slept, long since, in a drunkard's grave. His character, property, happiness, and family, all were ruined. From the kind, affectionate husband, and tender father, he had degenerated into a savage, a brute. His case was regarded as past hope. A temperance society was formed in the place where he dwelt, —some of his former grog-shop companions united—looped their hands and were free. He witnessed the change, sighed for liberty, took the pledge and became alarmingly ill. His physician prescribed a moderate quantity of ardent spirit. "No," said he, "if I must die, I die a sober man." He recovered—has regained his character, his property, his happiness, and his family are blessed He is now a member of a christian church—active, useful, and serving 'his generation' faithfully. More han 100 similar cases have fallen under the notice of the writer; and some who are now shining as lights in the world, were once sots—outcasts.

The means used by Temperance Societies have reclaimed them. CHARLES YALE,

Agent of the N. Y. St. T. S.

For the Observer.

Dear Sir:—If you think the following intelligence, (received from a Presbyterian brother in Millbury, Worcester Co. Mass., dated Oct. 17th 1831) will be conducive of good to christians here, if you think it will occasion them in confidence to lay hold on the promises of God, if you think it will quicken them to the prayer of faith that the chariot wheels of salvation may roll through these streets, and the sovereign grace of God make effectual the preached word to the conviction and conversion of those who are now dead in sin, that the declarative glory of God may be made manifest in their salvation, and that the good work of grace may extend through our country, and world, until the mountain of the Lord's house, shall be established upon the tops of the mountains, and be exalted above the hills and all nations flow unto it, you have leave to insert it in your columns.

Dear Brother:—I hasten to tell you what the Lord in his rich, free, and sovereign mercy, is doing in this town and vicinity. About six weeks since, there began to be a little more feeling than usual upon the subject of religion, in all this region, and there have been protracted meetings in most of our towns, and in every case so far as I have learned, they have been attended with the special outpourings of the Holy Spirit. In our society from fifty to sixty indulge a hope of the new birth, and there are about the same number enquirers. In the other society about the same number, and the work we would hope is but just commenced, many heads of families, are seen at the enquiry room, some aged sinners, some children, but mostly the blooming youth are subjects of the work. Oh what a change in the dear young people in this place.

In the towns of Worcester, Uxbridge, Menden, Sutton, Grafton, Ward, Charlton and Oxford, the Lord is doing wonders, I cannot name numbers they are not known to their own ministers, they cannot stop to count converts.—Time and room will not permit me to be particular, but praised be the name of the Lord, He does not consult ungodly ministers or laymen when or where he may work.

Very truly, your Brother.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

MY JOURNAL SCENES IN PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

I have just returned from an interesting visit to a family, living a little distance from the house of a friend, who is superintendent of a Sabbath school, in the pleasant village of——. While going with me to the house, the superintendent told me that the woman we were going to visit, had recently expressed hope in Christ, and that she was awakened to a sense of her guilt, and need of a Saviour, by the conversation of her little daughter, one day, when she returned from the Sabbath school. He had talked to the scholars about the broad way and the narrow way, of which they had been reciting and conversing with their teachers. He asked them where they thought the narrow way turned out of the broad way—and told them they must try to find out and must ask their parents. After learning this fact, I was anxious to hear the mother tell her own story. We were soon at the house and after the usual salutations, the conversation turned upon the subject of religion, in which Mrs. M. manifested deep interest. I asked her how long she had enjoyed religion, and by what means her mind was drawn to the subject. In reply to my inquiries, she gave, as nearly as I can recollect, the following account.

"I was very much awakened several years ago by the conversation of my minister, who talked with me about bringing up my children, But something told me to put it off, and I was not willing that any body should know that I was anxious. So I concealed my feelings and tried to get rid of them, and finally succeeded, so that I was worse than I had been before. My children wanted to go to Sabbath school, and though I did not much like the school, I let them go, and thought that would be some excuse for neglecting, as I had done, to instruct them at home.—I think I have been more wicked this year, than ever before—more hardened and stupid—more disposed to complain, till one Sabbath, Mary came home from the school, and asked me which was the broad way and the narrow way, and where the narrow way turned out of the broad way. I was not in a very good natured mood, and this question made me feel dreadfully. I could not bear to hear her talk so; nor say a word to her, but she kept teasing me and asking other questions about the lesson. I asked her what she asked such questions for. She said the broad road leads to destruction, and the narrow way leads to life, and the gentleman at the Sabbath school told us we must be careful to find out which is the broad way and which is the narrow way. This made me feel worse yet, but I did not want to have her know it, and I felt a little vexed. Some bad feelings would come up then, and I told Mary I should think the gentleman might tell the children himself, and not send them home with such questions.—But it did not do any good—and I kept thinking how I had neglected to tell my children the right way, and had been leading them in the broad way, because I was always going in it myself. Just as if all would be well. I tried to think of something else that would not make me feel so, but all the time these questions kept coming up, and I could not get away from them day nor night. When I waked up in the night the question would come up, which is the narrow way? And so it was, day after day. It stuck in my heart so that I could hardly eat or sleep. I wanted to tell some body how I felt, but was ashamed to tell, till one day, thinking that I could not put it off any longer, I went and told Mrs.——all about my feelings. She and I had been very intimate, and I was struck to find that she now felt very much as I did. I did not know that there was any thing on her mind, and thought no body ever felt as I did.—She told me not to try to get rid of my feelings, but to seek religion. I afterwards went to an inquiry meeting, and there received some good advice. I thought I would do any thing if I could only have religion, but knew not what to do. I tried to contrive a great many ways to make me better, but all did not answer, I found I could do nothing right, but go and throw myself into the hands of Jesus Christ, and beg for salvation through him. It did not seem as if I could be saved, or could be happy, because I had been so wicked, but I knew I could not be happy any other way, and if I must perish, I would perish begging for mercy through Jesus Christ. When I felt so, and tried to pray for help, it was but a little while before I felt that my load was gone, and that I cold praise God with all my heart.—Now I feel at peace with every body. I think I have happiness that the world cannot give nor take away, and I desire forever to bless God for it."

After she had finished her story, I asked how old her little girl was. She said, "Seven years old." I asked her, if she seemed to think as much about the Sabbath school lesson as she had done. "O, yes," she replied, "Mary is quite a thoughtful child, and she loves to tell me something about the lesson and the school every Sabbath."

The writer of this narrative has three reasons for offering it to the readers of the Instructer. 1. The hope that superintendents and teachers will be encouraged to talk familiarly to their scholars, and use every plain and simple language, in explaining their lessons, so that the scholars can understand them. 2. That the scholars may be led to think more of the lessons they learn, and of the instructions they receive from their teachers and superintendent, and converse with their parents about these things. 3. That parents will feel more desirous to have their children attend the Sabbath school punctually—prepare their lessons well; that they may converse more with them respecting their lessons, and especially that they will explain to them "the broad way and the narrow way," so that children may not make a mistake and take the wrong road, saying at last, "My farther and my mother led me in this broad way." C.

From the New-Hampshire Observer.

EARLY PIETY.

Died in Hanover, 17th inst. ADDISON PINNEO, aged ten years, the eldest son of Deacon O. Penneo. His death was caused by the throat distemper after a sickness of little more than a week. He died in the triumph of youthful piety. He was a member of the flourishing Sabbath school in this parish. He was one, among more than forty who are connected with the school that indulge hopes. The writer of this brief notice, has read many an interesting account of the death of pious children, but never was eye witness of such sweet and lovely piety in a sick and dying child before. It was on the day of the last commencement in Dartmouth College that he gave himself to Jesus. The little children of this district were then considering whether it was best to go to commencement or have a religious meeting in the schoolhouse. But Addison says—"I am decided—I shall go to the religious meeting."—The merciful eye of Jesus followed him there, and the glorious Shepherd of the sheep took this lamb into his bosom; and we believe he has carried him now to the mansion of his Father's house. In a few days after this, he became sick unto death. He wished to see his pastor. I went to his bedside and took his hand—his bodily distress was great—his breathing very laborious—but he said with a smiling countenance, "I am going to see God—and Jesus—whose feet and hands were nailed to the cross—who died for me." He was asked, if he did not wish to live, he answered, "as God would have it to be." He desired prayers, not for himself alone, but for all the family. We kneeled around his bed and prayed, but it was in a great degree, with groanings that could not be uttered. He seemed to be more reconciled than any of us. He saw the family weeping, and said—"Why do you weep? weep not for me." He mentioned the little children in the neighborhood who had hopes, and those who had not. He entreated his little brother seven years old to give himself to Christ —all the rest of the family were rejoicing in hope. But above all, his dying message to the Sabbath scholars, and particularly to his class, was most solemn and affecting. "O, tell them to repent and come to Jesus now, and not put it off." This was Friday night.

He died early Saturday morning. His remains were brought to the house of God on the Sabbath. All the Sabbath school formed in funeral procession. The message of Addison was delivered unto them and his class—and thanks be to God it was not in vain. Two little boys of his class came to meeting on the very next Sabbath with tears of joy and gratitude sparkling in their eyes, for they had remembered all the week the dying words of their little class-mate, and had given themselves to Christ. And now let me say to you, children of the Sabbath school, every where, give your hearts, and your affections and all to God. You know not how soon you may die. O, how rich the blessing to die as Addison Pinneo did, in the bosom of the Saviour.

Encouragement to Pious Mothers.—In the college of ——, there has lately been an extensive revival. Having myself, a praying mother, it occurred to me to inquire of the subjects of the revival, whether their mothers were pious. I did so; and found that scarcely one sinner was brought into the fold of Christ, who was not blessed with a pious, prayerful mother. This is a fact, and oh, that mothers would let it make the proper impression upon their hearts. Are your sons without hope and without God in the world! then pray; and that God who heareth and answereth prayer, will not reject your petition. Have you taught them, in early life, by precept and example, the doctrines of Christ? Then you may hope that the seed which you have early sown, and which you have watered with many tears, will not be suffered by God, to lack of increase. Mothers—pray.—S. S. Herald.

SABBATH SCHOOL IN KENTUCKY.—One 100 and twenty-five Sunday-schools are in successful operation in this State, that were in being six months ago, and all with a library from ten to thirty dollars worth of books. In Caldwell county alone, where there was not one Sunday-school at the commencement of the present year, there are now ten well conducted schools, containing 650 scholars.—Sunday-school Jour.

MAGAZINE DISCONTINUED.—It has been determined by the Board to discontinue the Sunday-School Quarterly Magazine at the close of the current volume.

The number for the present month will be published in a few days; and the fourth and last number may be expected on the thirty-first day of December.

It may be found expedient, to publish annually a collection of documents in the form of Sunday-School Annals, and if so, due notice will be given.—Ib.

ADVANTAGES OF SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—A premium of Fifty dollars is offered for the best approved Tract, not exceeding 12 pages, 18 mo., showing the advantages of Sunday-Schools—Ib.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

INTELLIGENCE.

The first case of special conviction in the revival in Ware, Mass. was a female who attended a Sabbath school. I have no doubt, adds a correspondent of the Christian Watchman, that at least seven eights of those born into the kingdom of Christ during this precious revival, have been connected with the Sabbath school.

In Addison County, Vt. as many as thirty teachers, and three hundred scholars have become hopefully pious during the last year.—Ib.

From Badger's Weekly Messenger

MR. BADGER.—In a late number of the Messenger, you state that the students at Kenyon College, Ohio, are sustaining seventeen Sabbath Schools: and you then inquire significantly, how many by our older institutions, as Harvard or Yale?

In answer to your inquiry, I will state the following facts in relation to Yale College.

1. There are in that institution fifty Sabbath-school teachers employed in the city of New-Haven and its immediate vicinity.

2. About fifty more have solicited of the superintendents the privilege of becoming teachers; and have been refused, on the ground, that when teachers can be found among the youth of the city, they ought to have the preference.

3. There were in the last college year about two hundred professors of religion in Yale College; and from a personal knowledge of nearly all of them, I am confident that if there were the same demand for teachers of Sabbath schools in Connecticut as exists in Ohio, there is scarcely one individual among them who would not cheerfully devote himself to this object.

C. A. G.

Rev. Mr. Babcock of Salem, in a letter to the Editor of the Tract Magazine, writes respecting the revival there—

"All our teachers but one, who were not before professors of religion, are now cherishing hope: and in almost all the classes where the teachers have been faithful, there are now found the subjects of converting grace. Our school consisting of about 300, is now a delightful spectacle—one on which angels, and I trust the Lord of angels too, look down with joyful interest."

REVIVALS.

From the Connecticut Observer.

STATE AND PROSPECTS OF RELIGION IN WINDHAM COUNTY.

It is now about a year since God began to appear for the churches in this county,—in his reviving mercy. During this period, the influence of the Spirit and of truth, has been becoming more extensive and glorious.

In Brooklyn, during the winter and spring, there was universal attention to religion. As the result, about 20 have joined churches during the summer; and more are expected to join soon. The prospect of future good is now brightening.

In Hampton, there was a precious revival during the winter; and about 50 have made a public profession of religion.

In Canterbury, as was reported in one of your late papers, about 50 have joined the church, during the last year; a majority of them within a few months.

Ashford. In two of the three societies, viz, in the 1st Society, and in Eastford, there have of late been protracted meetings, and very precious results. Between thirty and forty in each of these societies, have become hopefully pious; and the cause of Christ is still advancing.

Killingly. In the North Society, the state of religion has for years been very low. During the last year, however, there has been a regular and constant advance of piety.—About thirty, have joined the church, nearly as many more are to make a public profession soon. Several are now anxious inquirers; more than at any former time.

In Westfield Society, there have of late been several hopeful conversions; and the prospect of a general revival is flattering. A protracted meeting is to commence there on the last day in October.

In Plainfield there have been about 30 hopeful conversions during the summer. Divisions are healing, and the prospects of the church and society, brightening.

In Thompson, a protracted meeting was held a few weeks since. The revival has progressed; and the number of the hopeful converts, is considerable.

Windham. In two of the Societies, viz. the 1st, and Wilmantic, protracted meetings have been held, and revivals enjoyed. The number in each Society, of those who have, in the judgment of charity, become pious, is between 30 and 40. Some of the most influential men are among the number. The change in each Society, is very happy.

In Scotland, the other Society of the town, a protracted meeting is to be held this week.

Woodstock. In all the four Congregational churches and Societies, the state of religion has been, and still is, very interesting. At protracted meetings, recently held in North, and West Woodstock, the number of inquirers was very large, probably not less than 150. The kingdom of God has come near to them, and multitudes are pressing into it.

In Abington, a Society of Pomfret, the state of religion has been growing more interesting for several weeks. A protracted meeting was held a few weeks since. Its influence was very powerful. Religion had long languished there but now the change is sudden, and wonderful. Praised be the name of the Lord.

Never, probably did religion flourish so much in this County, within so short a time, as within the last few months; and never perhaps were the prospects of the church brighter in this county, than now. Several of the churches a few months since, were "as sheep without a shepherd;" five of them have within six months, settled pastors with great unanimity. The Monthly Tract distribution is pretty general in the county; and the cause of Temperance prospers. —We trust no church in the county will be left unblessed, in this time of God's general visitation.

Extract of a letter, to the Editor of the Telegraph dated, Schodack Landing, Oct. 17th, 1831.

Dear Sir—Yesterday we enjoyed another pentecost. It was the Sabbath of the Lord, and our communion season. The church was at an early hour crowded to overflowing, and by the solemnity which prevailed, proved it to be none else than the house of God and the gate of heaven. Fifty seven more came out from the world, embraced the promises, obeyed the command, and publicly before angels and men avouched the Lord to be their God, and yielded themselves up, exclusively and everlastingly soul and body to his service. In four months one hundred and thirty have joined themselves to the Lord by a perpetual covenant, that shall not be forgotten; saying Lord I am thine, save me: other gods have had dominion over us, but by thee, will we make mention of thy name. This moral wilderness has become fair as Eden, and fruitful as the garden of the Lord. This prophecy on which so many Pastors and parents have hoped, has been verified here. One shall say I am the Lord's, and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob, and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel. This great and blessed work is still progressing. It entered some weeks since the neighboring Greenbush congregation under the Pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Liddle, and is now spread over the whole of it, forty eight were added to that church last sabbath; and as near as we can judge at least a hundred and fifty inquirers. We are looking for an extensive harvest here. It is the Lord's doing and marvellous in our eyes. The multitude have retired from these solemn meetings and exclaimed we have seen strange things to-day. May the Lord keep them by his power through faith unto salvation—and add to their number many more of such as shall be saved.

HOW RELIGION DISTURBS FAMILIES.

How is it that religion disturbs the families of the irreligious? We can tell how; for, alas, we too well know the usual course of proceeding to be mistaken on this subject.—Here is an individual in such a family; a wife or a child, who becomes anxious for her soul, and is hopefully converted. She is faithful and affectionate, more so than before, and no fault can be found with her, 'except concerning the law of her God;' but she soon finds by sad experience, that all 'who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution.' It is painful to her to think of separating herself from the rest of the family in public worship; but her conscience and the interest of her soul require it, and she asks permission;—but no, she is prohibited. She feels bound by an obligation higher than man can impose, to profess Christ according to her own views, and come to his table; but when this is suggested, she is again prohibited. 'A man must bear rule in his own house and she shall do no such thing.' Feeling that religion is a concern in which she must act and answer for herself, and in which she ought to obey God rather than man, she ventures occasionally to assert her rights, and goes where she can worship God according to the dictates of her own conscience; but when she returns, she is reproached, chided, scolded, and it may be beaten, by the hands of her husband or her father. A friend gives her a religious tract, but this is torn from her, and thrown into the fire. Another loans her a book suited for her instruction and consolation, but this is taken away, and ordered to be sent home. As a last resource, she retires to her chamber, to pour out her soul to God and pray for her persecutor; but the sanctuary of her devotions is burst open, and she is ordered to depart out of it. And having thus disturbed and distracted his whole house, and set it in a flame, the liberal husband or father now sallies forth, to curse protracted meetings and revivals of religion, and to tell how they divide families, and disturb and destroy domestic peace. And, sad to relate, he finds professed ministers of the gospel ready to listen to his complaints, and give an echo to his denunciations from the pulpit and the press. We do not mean to say that all professedly liberal husbands treat their orthodox wives and children after this manner. Far from it. But that this is the way in which not a few (with the exception, perhaps, of personal violence) are treated, and in which disturbance in families is usually created in consequence of revivals of religion, we certainly know. We are ourselves acquainted with instances, in which Unitarians and Universalists—farmers, mechanics, merchants, men who think themselves respectable and would be accounted gentlemen—hold the religious inmates of their house in a state of bondage and of fear. Their wives and daughters have little more freedom on that great subject which, of all others, lies nearest to their hearts, than though they were the tenants of a Turkish harem.

Nor is this treatment, so much to be wondered at; for this is the way, it appears, in which liberal gentlemen are taught by their ministers to treat their families. In the tract on which we are remarking, Mr. Farr exhorts his readers not only to keep away from the protracted meetings themselves, but to keep their families away.—"Keep at home," he says, "and keep those under your authority at home also." 'Don't go to hear this orthodox preaching. You may be convinced by it, and thus be drawn away from your loving Unitarian teachers.' Mr. F. it will be recollected, is of those who have insisted so strenuously, and for so long a time, upon the importance of free inquiry in matters of religion. how often has it been said, 'Be not afraid to hear and think for yourselves; and to examine the subject of religion freely. Prove all things, and then you will be able to distinguish that which is good.' But no sooner do some of the members of Unitarian congregations begin to assert the right to hear and think freely—begin to drop into orthodox meetings and listen candidly to the preaching of the gospel, than their teachers are alarmed, and cry out to warn them of their danger, and exhort them to keep out of the way.—And not only must they keep at home themselves, they must keep their families at home also.—True, your wives and children must answer for themselves, but they are not to be permitted to act for themselves,—unless they shall choose to act as you choose to have them. They are not to be permitted to hear such preaching as they please, but such as you please,—not to have the religion which is most agreeable to them. "Keep those under your authority at home also!" Mr. F. it will be recollected, is a strong advocate of religious liberty, as well as of free inquiry,—and he laments, in the pages before us that our religious liberties are in so much danger from the Calvinists.

Now Calvinists as we are, and sensible as we are of the danger of erroneous teaching on religious subjects, (a feeling of which the principles of the liberalists leave them scarcely susceptible) the advice which we should give to those under our influence in regard to the subject here discussed, would be directly the opposite of that given by Mr. Farr. We would say explicitly to the Evangelical Christian householder, (though we know of no facts which make it necessary to say it) if you have a wife who is conscientiously a Unitarian or a Universalist, and who wishes to worship with either of these denominations; by all means let her go. And not only let her go, but bid her to go; furnish her with a seat; and treat her with the same kindness when she returns as though she had worshipped at your own meeting. The danger of attending such places of worship is indeed great, but the responsibility in this case is hers, not hers, not yours, and forcibly to restrain her would only be to increase the evil.—And if you have children of sufficient age and capacity to form an enlightened opinion on religious subjects, who, after all your instructions, are seriously and conscientiously inclined to attend a different place of worship from yourself, we would give the same advice in respect to them. By no means restrain them. And if this is not Christian liberty, then we will consent to take lessons from those who say to their readers, "Keep at home, and keep those under your authority at home also."—Spirit of the Pilgrims.

DO NOT TOUCH IT.

Sin is like pitch, it will only cling to you if you handle it, but it will defile you if you only touch it. Set your faces against it, in whatever shape it may appear.

I remember hearing a tale on this subject. A poor man who was employed in digging, every now and then left off his labor, and said aloud, as he leaned on his spade, "Oh, Adam, Adam!" It chanced that a rich man for whom he was working, passed by and heard him. The rich man asked him why he so frequently called on Adam? "Oh!" said the poor man, "I cry out Oh, Adam! Adam! and much reason have I to do so, for had not Adam, the father of us all, been so foolish as to eat the forbidden fruit, I should not now be thus obliged to get my bread by the sweat of the brow. Had I been in his place I would have had nothing to do with the forbidden fruit. No! I would not have touched it.

A short time after the rich man sent for the poor man & took him into a room where a sumptuous table was spread over with dainties; he told him to sit down and eat his fill. "Every day," said he, "you may return and do the same, on condition that you will not eat of the dish that is covered over in the middle of the table;—but if you even touch that, you shall return here no more."

The rich man went away, and the poor man man left to himself, began to eat of the dainties, thinking in his own mind, "So long as I can have such fare as this I do not care a fig about the dish in the middle of the table."

When he had satisfied his hunger, and tasted of almost every dish, he looked at the cup in the middle and felt that he should like very well to know what was under it. Not that he had any wish to eat of it, whatever it might be, for he had taken enough already, but he wanted sadly to look at it: if he could only know what it was, he would be satisfied.

From the moment this desire entered into his heart it grew stronger, and stronger and stronger. He remembered however, that he was forbidden to touch the dish, and so he sat looking at the cover in a very discontented spirit.

Whenever a person is about to commit a sin, and begins to reason upon it, instead of going directly away from the temptation, he is pretty sure to find out some way of committing the sin, and justifying or excusing himself. The poor man looked towards the middle of the table until the thought struck him, that though he was forbidden to touch the dish, he had not been forbidden to touch the cover which was placed over it: there could be no harm in doing that; besides, it was impossible that any one could ever know that he had touched it.

One single peep, then, he was determined to have; so he gently lifted up one side of the cover, when to his dismay, out ran a mouse.

In vain he endeavored to catch the little creature, but it was too nimble for him, and hid itself first behind one dish and then behind another.—He tried again and again, to lay hold of the mouse until in the confusion he knocked down a dish upon the floor. The noise of the broken dish brought in the rich man, who dismissed the poor man from his house forever. "Go," said he, "and return again to your labor and never more complain of Adam for eating the forbidden fruit. When you think of Adam, and of the tree in the middle of the garden, think also of the dish in the middle of the table."

I believe that many of us, like the poor man, are apt to think more of the errors of others, than we do of our own; but let us learn from him, not to venture a little way in disobedience, lest we go farther than we intended and meet with our deserved reward. Never mind how trifling sin may appear: it is still SIN, therefore let it alone; do not touch it.—Col. Star.

FROM THE GEORGIA PENITENTIARY.

The Washington Spectator states that the Rev. Mr. Potter, lately saw Messrs Worcester and Butler in the Penitentiary at Milledgeville; and that they were cheerful and happy. This should excite no surprise. Men of a like spirit and character have often suffered imprisonment, and even death in defence of their rights as subjects of Christ's kingdom, without repining. Nay, they have triumphed over the tortures inflicted by their malicious oppressors, and confounded their enemies by rejoicing in the agonies of death.

One of these missionaries is employed in making bedsteads, and the other is turning a large wheel—"grinding like Sampson in his prison house." They are clothed in the coarse uniform, worn by thieves, felons and murderers, with the criminal badges attached. If it be the purpose of the government of Georgia by depriving these faithful ministers of Christ of liberty, confining them to hard labor, in the foul and gloomy precincts of a prison, to destroy or injure their characters—if it is the object of their persecutors, they will be sadly disappointed. The character and worth of Worcester and Butler are too elevated—are too well known, to be impaired by machinations of this kind, though sanctioned with the forms of law. Their names will be remembered with gratitude, will be venerated as patriots and martyrs in defence of the rights of freemen, while the names of their tyrannical opressors will rot, or be recollected with detestation.

It is stated that in Alabama and Tennessee in the immediate vicinity of Georgia, the people are greatly excited, and that probably an army of Citizens, ten thousand strong, might be raised at once, to deliver these men with a force like that used to arrest and imprison them. We hope, however, that justice will be effected in their case without recourse to arms. Their case will, it is hoped, be heard in a few months, before the highest judicial tribunal in our country.

PRESENT RELIEF OF THE CHEROKEES.

The injustice under which the Cherokees suffer, meeting with no effective opposition, has already made such havoc of their rights, that it will require time to restore to them the confidence of perfect security and quiet. Whether indeed that will ever be the case, is a question yet pending before the people, and for the just decision of which the people are responsible. The National and State authorities are but our agents; and we cannot throw off our accountability for what they shall do. Were this accountability felt as it ought to be, we should soon witness such an expression of public opinion, as those in power would feel themselves compelled to obey. But this by the way.

As we observed, the Cherokees have no prospect of present relief, legislative, judicial or executive. Mean-time they are delivered over to their oppressors, the means of improvement in a great measure taken from them, and the ministers of the Gospel who were teaching them the way of life, banished or imprisoned. Can any thing be done for their benefit during the few months that must intervene before any relief can be expected from the national authorities?

A friend suggests the following: Many gentlemen, clergymen and others, who enjoy the confidence of the public, visit the southern States during the winter for their health. Let some of these—no matter if 15 or 20, proper men—visit the Cherokees—learn ther circumstances, wishes, and expectations—afford them such aid as may be in their power, &c. Especially and above all should it be the object of these travellers to preach that GOSPEL which has been iniquitously banished—to preach in public assemblies and from house to house, endeavoring in all possible ways to bring it home in its power to the hearts of that afflicted and distracted people.

The country is elevated and healthy, and the climate delightful. To invalids who are not too weak such interesting duties would be a hundred times more salutary than any employment, or want of employment, that they would be apt to find in a city boarding house.

Many of the more intelligent Cherokees understand the English language well; and it is easy to find interpreters when one wishes to address those acquainted only with their native tongue. The missionaries generally have practiced preaching through an interpreter.

Should the expense of travelling be an objection, we presume there are benevolent individuals who would cheerfully defray it. If thought desirable, it is presumed that the Am. Board, being deprived of the services of their missionaries there, would readily give commissions to a few itinerants.

Finally, should no northern men undertake this work, are there not ministers of the Gospel in the neighboring states who can devote a few weeks to it? Must the Cherokees, now, when they so specially need it, be utterly deprived of religious instruction?—Bost. Rec.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

TEMPERANCE.

CURIOUS TEMPERANCE DOCUMENT.

The following article, cut out of a Pennsylvania paper, printed more than fourteen years ago, has been forwarded us from that state for publication. It has been embodied in a Report of the Cumberland Temperance Society, and appears to have excited considerable attention in that region at an early period.—We follow the typographical arrangement and punctuation of the copy.—Genius Temp.

THE

COLD WATER

System,

cureth Intemperance.

Intemperance

is a disease of the stomach,—— this: the feverish heat, of the stomach naturally points out, and cold water, is; of course the remedy. For; cold counteracts (cures,) heat.

'Tis the remedy of NATURE, herself.

'Tis a law, of GOD; which is superior, and goes before the Laws of Man.

Therefore:

Whenever you, feel an inclination, to drink spirituous liquor, (grog,) drink, cool, fresh WATER, and eat a Cracker or a piece of bread.

This;——is an effectual CURE, and in a very short time, you will make a sober man, out of, the most intemperate one.

For:

on the following principle, sayeth the book, (on the effects of the Cold Water System,) the sure is performed.

PRINCIPLE OF CURE.

1st.

COLD WATER,

put into the stomach is a substitute for spirituous liquor.

2d.

COLD WATER,

quenches the artificial heat, caused by drinking spirituous liquor.

3d.

COLD WATER,

produces a disgust for spirituous liquor, and this very disgust is the object;—the secret:—the object, of cure.

DANIEL L. GREEN.

Reading, State of Pennsylvania.

September the 10th, 1817.

THE DANGER.

It is a solemn consideration, which must have great weight with such as reverence the Bible, that even moderate drinking may forever exclude the influences of the Holy Spirit. Says one distinguished by his writings and his extensive usefulness as a preacher. "If, while under conviction, a person allows himself to sip a little—he is sure to grieve away the Spirit of God." And his testimony, the result of long observation, is in perfect accordance with reason and Scripture. For, (to say nothing of the deadening influence of ardent spirit on the conscience,) unless heaven and hell can work together, God cannot, consistently, send his Spirit to co-operate with that spirit, which Satan employs, more than any other agent, in fitting men for his service and kingdom, for, "what communion hath light with darkness! and what concord hath Christ with Belial!" and how "can two walk together except they be agreed!" If then "ye know these things," and desire salvation, O, beware of "sinning against the Holy Ghost!"—Dickinson's Address to youth.

From the Genius of Tem.

REFORM NEEDED.

A striking illustration of the need of additional effort in the Temperance cause, will be found in the following occurrences, which have taken place within the past week, in the neighboring town of W——B——, in N. J. where unusual success has already crowned the efforts of the friends of Temperance. Two deaths have just taken place there, in consequence of strong drink. On the 19th inst. a stranger was found dead in a cornfield. A jury of inquest was called who gave a verdict of "death by intemperance." No traces of his name or residence have yet been found. The person who first discovered him was also an intemperate man, who, on the very next day applied to a gentleman who had employed him to labor, for a small sum which was due him. "What do you want to do with it," said the gentleman. "That is no business of yours," said the man. "Yes it is," said the gentleman; "you know you often drink to excess." "Well," said the man, "I shall never drink any more. I shall not trouble you again."—When receiving his money, he intimated that he was no longer of any use in the world, and might as well leave it. Little notice was taken of this at the time, but he went immediately to an apothecary and procured some laudanum, pretending it was for his sick child, but swallowed it all himself, and was soon a corpse.—When the poet Pollock described the robber robbed by a robber, and the highwayman in the street, he meant it as a picture of the last degenerate age. But here we have a similar picture—drunkards stumbling over dead drunkards—calling juries over drunkard's to-day, and filling a drunkards grave themselves to-morrow! This, without exaggeration, is the picture, in one of our most favored and moral country towns, in the midst of the Temperance Reformation, and at the dawn of the millennium. "Watchmen! what of the night!"—Reader; do you drink! Drink no more. Boast not of your "resolutions" and "good sense," while you drink. No drinker, according to our informant, ever possessed better "good sense," than the drunkard who has just stumbled over a dead drunkard into his own grave.—Friends of Temperance—Is it true that "the cause is going on very well already!"

PROGRESSING BACKWARDS.

The Portland Reader tells us of a town in the county of Waldo, in which it had been voted, that the Selectmen be authorised to give license for retailing ardent spirits, to be drank in the stores. About twenty shops were in consequence resuscitated and put in operation. No wonder. The "friends of the cause" had doubtless concluded "the work was going on very well," and therefore slackened their efforts, lest there should be a "reaction!"

Intemperance.—Between 5 and 6 o'clock last evening it was discovered that the dwelling house No. 46 Mulberry street, a few doors from Cross street, was on fire. On entering a back room occupied by a female named Curran, it was found that she had lain down on a heap of shavings in a state of intoxication, and that by some means the shavings had caught fire and the flames were surrounding the poor creature, who was severely burnt, yet hopes are entertained that she will recover.—Com. Adv.

A circular letter has been prepared by the State Temperance Society, and signed by Chancellor Walworth and the Executive Committee, which is intended to be presented to every family in the state. It is said to be written with much talent, and is calculated to make a powerful impression. In a single [illegible] names were added to the Temperance list by its influence. Measures have been taken by the Temperance Society of this county, for its immediate distribution, and it is hoped that it may be favorably received.

From the Temperance Advocate.

IS THIS SO?

"SENT BACK FROM ROCHESTER—TEMPERATE ENOUGH WITHOUT IT.

This was endorsed on the wrapper of a paper returned to this office, which was directed to the "Secretary Temperance Society," at Rochester.—Now if this assertion is true we are glad of it: we wish it was so of every other place in the country—in the world. But we have some misgivings on that point—and rather fear, that the person who endorsed such a note on a temperance paper, is not 'temperate enough.'—We might say some severe things, did we know to whom they could be said. If the Secretary of the Temperance Society at Rochester, is the author, it is time his place was filled by some person who does not think the temperance reformation yet completed—or, that the community is 'temperate enough without' the circulation of information on that subject. It may however, be the handy work of some person connected with the post office at that place; who feels a little galled at the decline of the fashion of drinking intoxicating liquors. If this is the case, he did wrong: for a post master has no right to return a paper without special direction; and in that case, not to consider its discontinuance, (by the way we have since received a proper notice from the P. M. to stop this paper)—but if the person who returned it thought so, he doubtless intended to enforce the reason, as he is sworn to do, that it was not taken out. Did the Secretary of the T. S. give such a reason as was returned? We cannot believe it.

Temperate enough! when scores if not hundreds of rum-holes line the streets! When any day, and almost any hour in the day, may be seen in some parts of that village, bipeds, wearing the human face divine,' reeling under the influence of intoxicating potations!—when assault, riot, robbery, theft, violence, domestic discord, pauperism, and suicide, are the frequent visitors of that place! when churches are cursed with drinking members and officers, and those who for the sake of gain (perhaps, counting that 'gain is godliness') are scattering firebrands, arrows and death,' from those engines of destruction—groceries, taverns and distilleries! 'Temperate enough,' with all this accumulation of abominations! 'O, shame! where is thy blush?'

We insert the above from that able and spirited auxiliary in the cause of Temperance, the Temperance Advocate published at Sandy-Hill, that the subject may be enquired into. We feel as if our citizens had a right to know who is authorized to make the endorsement "Temperate enough." The Secretary of our Temperance Society is called upon to explain. We omit the remarks which the case naturally suggests, as there may be some way of explaining this business that we have not thought of.

We certainly have a great curiosity to know who the person is that passes so favorable a verdict in relation to our village. We strongly suspect however that he would judge us "temperate enough" if every man woman and child should occasionally get "genteelly drunk!" Is it not so?—Ed. Obs.

From the Baptist Weekly Messenger.

A correspondent has communicated in substance, the following melancholy occurrence, and requests its publication.

Two men had met at a neighbor's house in ——. One of them held in his hand a pint of spirits, which he was about to drink. He was told by the other he could not drink so much without injury, he replied, he could, and said, pointing to a lad present, about eight years old, that boy can drink it and not hurt him. His mother said he must not drink it. But upon her going from the room, it was given the boy drank the whole. To his father's coming, and reproving him, for what he had done, he said, relying on his reckless adviser, "It will not hurt me Father." He spake no more—it was a fatal draught.

GOOD TESTIMONY.—Dr. Cheyne, the celebrated English Physician, says, that in the cases, of apoplexy with which he has been acquainted in nineteen out of twenty the disease might have been averted, had the subjects been temperate, and that the habitual use of spirits or wine, even in moderate quantities, will lead a man of a certain age and constitution to apoplexy, as certainly as habitual intoxication.

From the Christian Soldier.

RUINOUS EFFECTS OF LOTTERIES.

A poor, but industrious and economical man, in a town in this Commonwealth, was induced by the hope of becoming speedily rich, to purchase a lottery ticket. He drew a prize of $5,000, which raised him from poverty to independence. He immediately exchanged his humble tenement for a valuable farm. After paying for this, he had a small sum at interest, and with prudence might have lived above want or embarrassment. But, like all those whose property comes to them on the "wheel of fortune," without laudable exertion to obtain it, he fancied himself beyond the reach of poverty and vainly supposed that his riches would never fail. Instead of cultivating his farm, and taking care of his business, he spent his time at the tavern, or in idle sport. As might have been expected, his riches 'took to them wings and flew away.' Having lost his property, at last, in a fit of despondency, he cut his throat. His children, meanwhile, had learned to follow the example of their father, and were consequently left in poverty and disgrace. The oldest son is now intemperate, and in all probability, will soon lie in the drunkards grave. Another son is a fit subject for the house of correction.

Who will not sigh over such examples of human folly and guilt! Could this poor man have been satisfied with his humble cot and homely fare, he might perhaps have lived and died in peace. But he was allured with the hope of becoming rich, and as the consequence must lift up his soul in anguish forever; & there is too much reason to fear that he will have to endure the reproaches of his own children for having led them in the paths of destruction. But guilty as is the unfortunate man, his crime is not greater than that of him who held out the fatal allurement. The latter will be held accountable for the blood of souls at the last day! Awful thought!

STAGE ROBBERY.—On Sunday night last, two trunks were taken from the hind boot of the Telegraph Stage, going west, somewhere between Auburn and Waterloo; one belonging to a merchant of Batavia. The trunks we understand, contained, besides clothing and a few articles of merchandise, invoices of goods, re-

[illegible] the individuals to much inconvenience. It is hoped, therefore, as these can be of no use to the [illegible] they may be restored to the owners.

POPERY.

From the Southern Rel. Intelligencer.

SPREAD OF POPERY.

Frequent and large remittances, and several missionary reinforcements from the College de Propaganda at Rome, have been sent into the great field of the west and south within the last four years. The astonishing increase of papal influence in this short time ought to be regarded as a fact of the most alarming nature, by every patriot and Christian. What Roman Catholics aim at, is not freedom of religious worship, but political power. And it is the testimony of all history, that whenever they have become numerous and strong enough, they have imposed what dogmas they pleased upon the people, and enforced them with fire and the rack. The church claims the right to do this as her prerogative; she has done it in every country without exception, as soon as she had gotten the power; and being an infallible church, she will do it here, under the same circumstances. A train of measures seems actually begun to bring about this state of things here. All the open and secret enemies of religion are looking towards the Romanists as their natural allies, and these do in some places receive them with open arms. Her creed is broad enough to receive all. Soon it will be seen that these like kindred drops, will "mingle into one," and then who can set limits to the furious torrent that may overflow the land!

Whether it is the design of heaven to permit popery to overspread this land, none can tell.—But one thing is certain. Papists are on the tiptoe of expectation. Limb after limb has been severed from this body in Europe; they see their cause falling there; their great hope is turned towards this country; and well it may be, for this is the only protestant country on earth where popery has free toleration. They will not neglect so fine a field. Every thing is in their favor. The country is new; it admits and even invites thousands of Romish emigrants, every year. Our land and laws are emphatically free. There are no restrictions upon any creed: And the majority of Protestants of every name, are asleep to the accumulating strength and dangers from this system of impiety, cruelty and imposture. Most of the persevering activity and zeal are on the other side. Hence they are announcing to us in the journals, the annual accessions of many thousands to their ranks.

These remarks are general, but the appeal is confidently made to the reader for their correctness. The activity and success with which they are laboring in the west and extreme south, can be fully understood only by those who have the opportunity of reading their publications. They themselves are very sanguine in their expectations. We give below an extract from a letter, received several months since from a Catholic near Port-Gibson, Mississippi. It is written in the temper, and with the spirit, of a genuine papist. We have some reason to think it was from a priest. The letter enclosed a slip, cut from our paper, stating a fact well known to us, of a bible being taken from a family in Maryland, by a priest and thrown into the fire in the presence of the family.—The following is the extract from the letter:—

"Sir—Inclosed you will not find five dollars—but you will find the Coppy of a ——— Lie—published by you for the purpose of deceiving the Public, if Possible—it wont do—the Church and the Only True one—(it is not Martin Luther's—or John Calvin's of Holy memory) that you attempt to Slander is beyond the Malice of any petty Dr[illegible]—and will be the prevailing Religion of this Country before 20 years. 'Magna est veritas et Prevalebit.'"

NUNNERY AT BROOKLYN.

A young Lady of this city, by the management of the priests has resolved to enter the nunnery at Brooklyn. Who was aware that a regular conventual establishment for the accommodation of Massmen and their sisters, had been organized by the Jesuits at Brooklyn?... and yet on the sixteenth day of October, 1831—Miss ——, herself avowed, that she was about to enter that "cage of unclean and hateful birds."—Protestant.

JESUIT KIDNAPPING.

A woman some time since lost a child—and after every search had been ineffectually made, she endeavored to compose her mind to the melancholy bereavement. By a kind providence, she was temporarily engaged where a Papist of this city was employed, who mentioned, that a child had been taken to the Roman orphan establishment, or as it ought to be denominated, the Massmen's Kidnapping dungeon. The time, description, and other particulars of the statement, so exactly coincided with the circumstances of the lost child, that the Mother and other persons went to that nursery of wickedness, and identified her offspring. The managers refused to deliver the child to its Mother—pretending that they had no proof of her maternal relation; that the child was delivered there by proper authorities; and that they must retain the orphan; with all the cant which the Jesuits and their Sisters can so fluently display. The jurisdiction of a Magistrate and his officer having been resisted—the more authoritative legal process was resorted to for the recovery of the child—and the Papists who govern that base cringing establishment of children, the Prince st. Orphan Asylum, were obliged to appear with the child, who was legally restored to its Mother, after it had disappeared for several months.

To close all controversy upon this subject; we are authorized to state, that the judicial Administrator of the laws, who delivered the child from Papisical fangs, was Judge OAKLEY.

☞ Parents who lose their children, should immediately examine that den of iniquity; *the Prince Street Roman Orphan Asylum.*Ib.

From the Sunday School Journal.

HIGHLY INTERESTING JOURNAL FROM GREEN COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

I had seen enough of Calhoun county to ascertain that very little could be done without furnishing them with books. I took a quantity of such as I thought most suitable for that quarter; and immediately on my return commenced operations again. I have traversed that county in every direction, and visited not a small portion of the inhabitants at their own houses, besides the public meetings that I have held. I have paid more attention to that county, and spent more time there than I shall find it necessary to bestow on any other; for no other has been so much neglected by the christian world as Calhoun county. Altho' no county in Illinois appears on the map to be so accessible as that, yet almost the very reverse is the fact; there are very few places on either river at which a boat can land, and most of the country near the river is either subject to inundation or composed of high and rugged bluffs. One of our agents once visited the county-seat, but no Sunday school was ever in operation previous to my visit. The greater part of Calhoun is high, broken land. Many families are to be found on the small patches of level land, generally with a field of a few acres, often two or three miles from any settlement. The land belongs to the United States, and its inhabitants live principally by means of the rifle. I have sought out these people [illegible] would not, I am sure, think my time misspent, could you follow me to their rude habitations, be concerned with them and their families. I have [illegible] of these hunters while explaining the object of the American Sunday School Union. That you should feel interested in their temporal and eternal welfare, and furnish them with books, and try to have their children taught, and all this only for the sake of doing good, goes directly to their hearts. One example may give you some idea of the people remote from the settlements.

A few miles from the Mississippi river I overtook a boy on horseback, of about twelve years of age. On inquiry, I found that his father lived on government land, two miles from any neighbor, and had a family of ten children, all except the eldest, living at home, and unable to read. I felt deeply interested for the little boy, who had a fine countenance, and whose answers to my questions were so manly; and I went home with him. I told the father, in the midst of his family, what was my business, and explained the objects of your institution. I spoke to him in a tender and affectionate manner of his children, growing up in ignorance—for not one could read. He, as well as his wife, wept, and appeared to feel much for their children. He told me there was no chance of giving them schooling, as no school was near, and he was too poor to pay for the tuition of even one. He could read some, and promised me solemnly that he would teach them, every Sabbath, to the best of his ability.—I engaged with the children to be faithful in study, and use every effort to learn and left them some books; promised to visit them, if spared during the summer, and see their proficiency. Invoking the aid of Omnipotence upon that lonely abode of neglected but immortal beings, I left them, receiving a warm pressure from their hands and a look of gratitude from eyes filled with tears. Subsequently I engaged a family, two miles distant, to join them in a Sabbath-school, and obtained the promise of a man of some education, that he would occasionally visit their school.

I have completed my labors in that county for the present, but expect, if spared, to visit all the schools again. I think it important to afford the means of religious instruction to the insolated inhabitants who live at a distance from a settlement. They are poor, and I have always been obliged to supply them with books. I have now completed the two counties of Green and Calhoun. In every settlement is a Sunday School; and every family in each county have it in their power to obtain the benefits conferred by that institution. I have been thorough and left none to grow up in darkness. There is an exception, if it may be called one, of a small settlement of Deists whom I visited. In that settlement I failed. The principal inhabitant, a Mr. *, a distillery owner, talked to me of priest-craft, and produced his newspaper, "The  ," to prove it. I could not suppress my emotion as I gazed around upon his children, growing up with the belief that a man perishes like the brute. I talked till past midnight, upon the evidences of christianity, and gave them all as solemn and earnest an admonition as I was capable. The eldest son, eighteen years of age, sneered at religion; and, more than once, boasted of his freedom from its shackles. The next day he was taken ill of the prevailing epidemic, and in three days was laid in the grave. He died without hope. Poor, misguided youth, how fearful is the responsibility of your hardened father. Hundreds of such youth in our country, is the precious Sunday School Union, I trust, destined to save. Infidelity is extremely common here, and "The  " is extensively read.

From the N. Y. Observer.

THE SABBATH IN '75.

The following letter, addressed by a Committee of the citizens of Cherry Valley to a more general Committee in the memorable period of the Revolution, is copied from the "Annals of Tryon County." It will show in what light the Sabbath was regarded by "the free born sons of liberty" of that day.

Cherry Valley, June 9th, 1775.

SIRS—We received yours of yesterday relative to the meeting of the Committee on Sunday, which surprised us not a little, inasmuch as it seems not to be on any alarming circumstance; which, if it was we should readily attend, but as that does not appear to us to be the case, we think it is very improper; for unless the Committee sitting, superexceed the duties to be performed in attending the public worship of God, we think it ought to be put off till another day; and therefore we conclude not to give our attendance at this time, unless you adjourn the sitting of the Committee till Monday morning; and in that case, we will give our attendance as early as you please. But otherwise, we do not allow ourselves to be cut short of attending on the public worship; except the case be so necessitous as to exceed sacrifice. We conclude with wishing success to the common cause, and subscribe ourselves the free born sons of liberty.

JOHN MOORE.
SAMUEL CLYDE.
SAMUEL CAMPBELL.

"If you proceed to sit on the Sabbath, please to read this letter to the Committee, which we think will sufficiently assign our reasons for not attending."

EDUCATION SOCIETIES.

The Baptist denomination formed a society in Bristol, England, for the purpose of educating pious young men for the ministry, in 1770. In 1825, they had assisted in the education of 120 young men.

The Theological Seminary at Andover, in Ms. was formed in 1807.

The Benevolent Education Society in Mass., was formed in 1813, embracing the counties of Plymouth, Bristol and Barnstable.

The Massachusetts Baptist Education Society was formed in 1814.

The Baptist Education Society of N. Y. was formed in 1816.

The Protestant Episcopal Education Society was formed at the City of Washington in the district of Columbia, in 1818.

Board of Education of the General Assembly was organized in 1819.

The Baptist Education Society of Conn. was formed in 1820.

The Presbyterian Education Society united with the American Education Society in 1827.

The American Education Society was projected in the summer of 1815 by a few individuals in Boston. The first meeting was holden in July, when a Committee was chosen to prepare a Constitution to be presented at an adjourned meeting in August, at which, about fifty gentlemen attended, when a Constitution was adopted; and in December the Society was organized, and Lieut. Gov. Phillips was chosen President. In March 1816, four beneficiaries were received, and in December following, the Society was incorporated by the Legislature.

During the fourteen first years of the existence of this Society, it assisted in the Education of 872 young men, for the ministry. The Society has appropriated for this purpose, $123,097; average sum to each, $143. Forty-eight thousand one hundred and twenty-nine dollars, are invested in scholarships; $26,143, in a perma- [illegible] for contingent expenses during [illegible] years, including printing, agents and officers, &c., making the whole receipts $216,869.

During the three last years the Beneficiaries have refunded $1,737, and have earned by manual labor, $17,877.

INTERESTING FROM SMYRNA.

Letter from Rev. J. Brewer, to the Editor of the Boston Recorder, dated Smyrna, Aug. 1, 1831.

My last communication was at the beginning of a visitation from that awful scourge, the plague. We ourselves have been absent from the city most of the time, one at Constantinople, and the remainder on a cruize among the Turco-Greek Islands, and have reason to bless the Lord for his merciful preservation. The Lord has been our keeper, and the shade upon our right hand, so that the sun has not smote us by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord has preserved our going out and our coming in. In great mercy too, may this whole people say, his chastisements have been lighter than our sins. For though much distress was experienced by the 30 or 40,000 who fled from the city, and by the 100,000 who remained, yet of the latter not more than 2 or 300 are supposed to have fallen victims to the pestilence. How different was the history of the last great attack in 1814, when 30,000 were computed to have died! As yet we have heard of the death of but two of our pupils, and these from other diseases.

While, however, we bless a gracious Providence for his preservation of us and ours, we are called on to weep over the fate of another mission family, and another great city of the East. Mr. Groves, whose work on Christian Devotedness, and the practical comment of whose life, had endeared him to the public, writes from Bagdad, that Mrs. Groves had died of the plague; also all his Arabic and Armenian masters, and most of the children of his school; and that 12000 houses and two thirds of the population of the city had been swept away by inundation. Most frightful too are the ravages which the cholera is still making in different parts of Russia; nor is Turkey wholly exempt from alarm on account of it. When will the inhabitants of the world learn righteousness at the judgments of God, which are thus abroad in the earth!

Contrasted with the condition of this Eastern world, how thrice blessed is that of the goodly land of our fathers, where the sun goeth down! Instead of storms of wrath, the richest showers of mercy are descending on our villages and towns. How shall we show our gratitude to the Lord for his distinguishing blessings, but by manifesting towards the less favored children of his providence, a lively and operative sympathy! From all the churches of the West, should there not go up to the throne of the Heavenly grace more earnest supplication for the regions of primitive Christianity?

Our missionary company here has been increased by the removal of Rev. Mr. Jetter and his family from Syra. We are much cheered at the prospect of their active co-operation in the department of Greek schools. Already in the neighboring village of Bougli they have opened one for girls, the more indigent of whom are provided with clothing through the generosity of the Frank residents there. Rev. Mr. Lewis is accompanying, by invitation, the Arch-Bishop of Ephesus in the visitation of his diocese, and finds him like his predecessor, friendly to the cause of education. In Greece there is reason to anticipate a speedy overthrow of the mushroom system of tyranny which has grown up within the last three years. Meantime Messrs. King, Robertson, and Hill, find themselves safe under Turkish protection at Athens. Commending our several labors to your prayers, I remain yours truly, JOSIAH BREWER.

From the Boston Recorder.

PICTURE OF THE CHOLERA.

The following is an extract of a letter from Rev. Richard Knill, dated at St. Petersburg, July 20, 1831. It gives a vivid picture of the distress which that awful visitant which is now desolating some parts of Europe often doubtless brings into the bosom of happy families. The alarm at St. Petersburg commenced early in June. Mr. K. and his family had spent a little time at their country residence; but he thought it his duty in such a season of distress and of sudden deaths, to be with his flock. After stating these circumstances, he proceeds:

Friday 19th we returned to town. The disease was going on with its ravages; but nothing particular happened among our friends until Wednesday the 24th, when Mrs. Dixon, one of our earliest friends, was attacked, and was soon thought to be dying. I went to see her, and took, as I thought, my last farewell—but she is now recovered.

25th. My dear little Joseph was seized with convulsions. These are alarming at all times, but were rendered peculiarly so at present.—But this was not enough. God had more in reserve to exercise our faith and patience, and love and resignation. About midnight, Mr. Venning's steward sent us word that he was seized with cholera, and entreated us to come to him. We ran—and after consulting for a few moments what should be done, I hastened for a Doctor, and found one who administered immediate assistance and relief. By the prompt assistance afforded this man his life was preserved. Indeed, in almost every instance where immediate aid could not be procured, the patient died. I remained up all night, lest the malady should take some sudden change. This, together with the circumstances of my dear suffering child, greatly affected me. But I was not permitted to rest; for early on Friday (26th) a note came from Mrs. Chapman, the excellent mistress of our lancasterian school—written with her own hand saying that she was very ill. Our good friends, Mrs. Gillebrand and Mrs. Merriless, immediately went to her, and procured for her all possible assistance—but alas! it was of no avail. This was a dreadful day in St. Petersburg. Among the hundreds of people who were attacked with the cholera, I never heard of one who recovered. A kind and excellent doctor came and wept like a child—every one whom he had visited that day, died under his hands.—Dear Mrs. Chapman left a delightful testimony.—She rejoiced in God her Saviour. On Saturday morning, at four, she expired. Dear Mrs. Gillebrand, took her little orphan daughter to live with them. In the afternoon I performed the funeral service, and together with the members of the School Committee, accompanied the body to the ground expressly appointed for persons who died with the cholera. Here the scene was truly awful. Numerous coffins were resting, some on carts, others on the ground, waiting till graves could be dug for them. We procured two men to dig a grave for our friend, and we saw her committed to the dust, in secure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection to eternal life. Little did I then think that her grave would soon be opened to receive my sweet boys—but so it came to pass.

About ten in the evening I returned from the funeral, and found my wife unwell. This was Saturday night. My next business was to go in search of a doctor, and happily met with one at home. He ordered bathing, bleeding, &c. This kept me up all night. A dear Christian friend watched with us. It was a good preparation for the pulpit, as far as it respected the subject but it exhausted my strength. Our morning service was thinly attended. Some were sick, others were watching, and others were afraid to venture out. My text was, 'Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching.' It was my last text; and I have often thought since, that I should never preach again. Monday passed over pretty peacefully; but on Tuesday, the 30th, my little Joseph was seized with symptoms nearly resembling the Cholera, yet we fondly thought that children were exempt from the malady. The night came on and the child grew worse. It was spent in watching and prayer. The dear little fellow frequently said "I thirst;" and I believe he never repeated it but I thought of the Redeemer and his agonies, and drew comfort from his dying love. At four the following morning, when the child appeared to be dying, I called my wife into an adjoining room, where our other two boys were sleeping, and we kneeled down together, and once more gave up ourselves and our offspring to the Lord, committing in an especial manner the spirit of our Joseph into the Saviour's hands. Ah! dear fathers and mothers, who have been bereaved of your children, you will understand what were our feelings. And now, while we stood in silent waiting, to see the child expire, another wave was preparing to roll over us. A sound from another quarter pierced our hearts—"Johnny is seized." This seemed like a sword in our bones. I hastened to a dear friend, Mr. Ropes, from America, who was now staying with us, and begged him to arise and help us. Two doctors came. My wife, and servants and friends were employed in bathing, rubbing, blistering, &c. this lovely boy, while I was left to watch and weep over the dying child. The Cholera made dreadful havoc on John. He seemed death-seized, and amidst tears, and sighs, and groans, and efforts of no common kind, he sunk into the arms of death before noon. So rapidly did death execute his commission! In the evening our friends conveyed his body to the Cholera burying ground, and placed him in Mrs. Chapman's grave.

My heart sinks at the recital, but I must go on. At this moment; when we needed every assistance, our servant man became alarmed, and requested his wages, that he might go to his family in the interior; and I was actually compelled to dismiss him at the very time when the undertaker was putting my darling John into his coffin. Thus wave after wave rolled in upon us, redoubling all our woe. But this is not all. As soon as the corpse was carried out of the house, my beloved wife who had rallied all her strength, to nurse her lovely children, immediately sunk, and was confined to her bed for several succeeding days. I felt amazed and bewildered, and threw myself on my couch to compose my troubled mind for a few minutes, but another wave was preparing! I had scarcely laid my head on the pillow, when a person came and roused me with "Your kitchen maid is attacked with cholera." "Is it possible," said I, "Is it possible?" I really trembled. If I thought at all about any thing beyond the present moment, "Surely God is going to make a short work of it with us; but we shall not be lost, for He is our God." We ran to the kitchen and found the woman suffering, and gave her powerful medicine. Two doctors were called in, and I rejoice to add, she is now convalescent.

My house was now in complete confusion and distress. One child dead—another in the agonies of death—my wife confined to her bed—and one servant also sick in bed.

The next morning dear Mrs. Merriless took our eldest, and now only child, to reside with them.

On Saturday, about mid-day, our sweet little Joseph expired; and, in the evening, our friends carried him to the grave, where he rests with his dear sister—our first-born. I was now unable to support any longer, both body and spirits were exhausted—I took to my bed also, and was much afraid of cholera, though it was checked at the commencement, and was not permitted to prey upon me. As my dear partner and myself lay bemoaning our afflicted state, and endeavoring to console each other with the consolations of the gospel, we looked around and rejoiced to see our precious sons still spared to us. But as if to complete the scene of our distress, about midnight this faithful servant was also seized. Now the house was turned into a hospital; and we were thrown into the hands of strangers.

Thus in the course of ten days, my happy, healthy family, were shattered in pieces; and we are now attempting to repair the wreck against another storm. When that will come, God only knows.

During this short sickness we have had seven doctors; as we are happy to tell in the first we could meet with. Three silent Sabbaths have been our portion. This has grieved me, but we cannot resist the will of God. I believe that the best relief for a preacher with an afflicted mind is to preach; but the duty of a preacher with an afflicted body is to be quiet; for, by attempting to preach when he is unable, he may injure his usefulness through all his future days. On this plan I have acted. We are now in the country, but I hope to be able to preach next Sunday.

Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and we bless him for his fatherly chastisement. May it make us more than ever the partakers of his holiness; "Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he pruneth it."—He has pruned off two boughs from us at a stroke, but our prayer is that it may render us more fruitful.

MONEY FINDING EXTRAORDINARY.

For several days past a curious scene has presented itself at Tutbury, distant about five miles from Burton-upon-Trent, and noted for the ruins of its castle. A new cut of water-course lately been made, which has affected the height of the water in the regular course of the river (the Dove.) On this account it has been deemed necessary to lower the bed of the river immediately below the bridge. In doing this the laborers discovered, amongst the stones and gravel, a quantity of small pieces of coin which proved to be silver, and of the reign of Edward the First. On farther investigation it appeared as though one of the buttresses of the bridge, in a direct line for forty or fifty yards, from the whole bed of the river, was one entire mass of coin. On Wednesday there were hundreds of laborers and others, up to their middle in water, with shovels and riddles, at work the whole day, exhuming this long concealed treasure. It is not the slightest exaggeration to state that upwards of 200 pieces of silver coin have been brought up at one time in the shovel. On the most moderate possible calculation, more than 20,000 pieces were found on Wednesday. Single parties found upwards of 1,500. The coins, which are evidently of the reign of Edward the First, appeared to have originally been of the value of 4d. There are at least five distinct coinages of the same reign. The coins are in a very good state of preservation. It would appear as though a trench had originally been made, and filled with these pieces.—London C. Advocate.

Fatal Duel.—A letter from Augusta, Ga. states that a duel had just taken place between John F. Lamar, late President of the Macon Bank, and Dr. Woodson, a physician of Macon. The parties agreed to fight at Augusta, but were prevented by the benevolent interference of the Augusta Anti-Duelling Society. The meeting, in consequence, took place at Fort Mitchell. Woodson was killed. The difficulty was of a domestic character.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, NOV. 3., 1831.

An unusual press of business, and necessary absence of the Editor from home for four days since our last paper was issued, must be our apology for the want of the usual quantity of editorial matter, and for other deficiencies in our paper this week.

DIVISIONS IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

It must be matter of deep regret to every soul that feels for the cause of Christ, to see the difficulties which divide and distract it, especially at the South and West. We perceive that in the Presbytery of Cincinnati the lines between High and Low Church are as distinctly drawn as are the lines of any of the political parties in our country.

How must the enemy of souls rejoice at such a state of things. What can be more gratifying to him than to see the church of Christ rent by divisions? Why do those divisions exist, and the bosoms of those who should be brethren, rankle with heart burnings and animosities?

While we lament the existence of such things in a part of the Presbyterian Church, we rejoice, but with trembling, that we are in this section of country in a great measure exempt from them.—We say we rejoice with trembling, lest the Spirit of God should be so grieved by our coldness and our unthankfulness for the great and distinguished blessings we enjoy, that the spirit of party jealousy and animosity should be let loose upon us. But we do hope that there is not a minister of Christ in this part of his vineyard, who dares to take any measure to kindle up the flames of party strife among us. Not one who will not before he takes any step which may have this tendency, go and prayerfully lay it before God and ask his wisdom to direct. Can it be possible that any one dare take upon him the tremendous responsibility of diverting the attention of Christians from their appropriate duties, the cultivation of harmony and brotherly love, and faithfulness in warning sinners, to an unprofitable contest about matters of minor importance—a controversy in which the Devil alone can be the gainer.

SLAVES IN LOUISIANA.

"A petition is circulating at New Orleans among the citizens, praying the Governor to take measures to prevent the farther introduction of slaves into that state."

We have thought it very probable that the late insurrectionary movements among the slaves, would render our Southern brethren chery sighted to discover some practicable expedient to get rid of the curse of slavery, which they appear so sincerely to deplore. We should esteem it much more honorable to our national character, and certainly as better comporting with the principles of humanity and religion, to see signatures obtained to such a petition, than to see our northern troops marching to the South, to acquire laurels in assisting slave holders to rivet more firmly the fetters of slavery.

We deplore the suffering which the blacks have inflicted in the late revolt, but we rejoice to see that God is already overruling it for good. Slave holders may as well look about them at once, and devise some measure to strike at the root of this evil, and avert the awful catastrophe which, sooner or later, must overtake them, if they persist in retaining their fellow men in bondage. If they refuse to do it God will ere long interpose, strike off their fetters, and "let the oppressed go free." We believe that the Millennium will come—and we do not believe that when "love to our neighbor" shall universally prevail that slavery can exist.

AN INCENDIARY:—On Monday evening last, the School House of Mr. D. B. Crane on Buffalo street, in the west part of the village, was discovered to be on fire, but was extinguished before any damage was done—On examination a parcel of shavings was found under the building, on which, to render them still more combustable, a quantity of British oil and Spirits of Terpentine had been poured—That the fire had been communicated by design, therefore was placed beyond a doubt—And a Frenchman who had taken offence at some of the lads belonging to Mr. Crane's school in the course of the day, was arrested on suspicion, by Constable Steel, and after a long examination sufficient evidence to justify his committal was obtained, and on his way to the jail, we understand that he confessed his guilt, and offered to bribe the constable to set him at liberty.—This is the second attempt of the kind, which has been providentially defeated within a few days.

PROVIDENTIAL ESCAPE.

On Tuesday last a boy of 10 or 12 years old (name unknown) was seen to fall into the mill race 6 or 8 rods above Beach & Kempshall's mill. He was drawn by the force of the current through under the Acqueduct towards the water wheel, but was arrested in his course by the rack placed before the wheel, by which he must have inevitably been killed had not one of his hands providentially appeared above the water, which was discovered by a person in the mill, who caught him just at the moment he would have been drawn to the bottom.

The communication of Mr. Willcox Secretary of the Genesee Temperance Society complaining of improper interference on the part of Rev. Mr. Crawford in giving a second notice was sent too late for this paper.

THE POLES.

The last accounts are, that the Russians were within two and a half miles of Warsaw—The situation of the Poles is desperate; and the worst of their case is that there is want of harmony among themselves. The next news we fear will be, that Warsaw has surrendered.

CHEROKEE AFFAIRS.

We have just received the Phoenix of the 7th Oct. What can be the cause of the delay in the arrival of this paper which, at this time, we look for with peculiar interest, we do not know. Indeed we think that we do not receive it oftener than once in three or four weeks. We have two or three times concluded that it was suspended, or that there was some derangement in the mail on the route through the Cherokee country. There is obviously something wrong about it, as it has, until the last two or three months been received regularly.

It appears from the last paper that the Georgia Guard are still prowling [illegible] ready to prey. They have, it appears [illegible] the members of the Cherokee Council, but have not succeeded. The Council were in session at Chattooga, which we suppose is out of the limits assigned as the hunting ground of Governor Gilmer's troops.

It appears from papers received that the Missionaries have been assigned to the hardest labor in the Penitentiary, but are cheerful—like Paul and Silas, when confined by a similar act of despotic power, they can still sing praises to God.

We cannot but hope that the present Governor of Georgia will pursue a policy, with regard to the Indians, more consonant with the principles of common justice than that which has characterized the administration of the petty tyrant who has been thus relieved by the good sense of the people, from the responsibilities of the Chief Magistracy. Governor Gilmer has immortalized his name and embalmed his memory in the execrations of every honest man in the nation, whose mind has not been perverted by misinformation or steeled by prejudice.

FIRE.—On Saturday afternoon, the house of Mr. S. D. Moor, on Main st. quite at the east part of this village, was discovered to be on fire, and before it could be got under, the roof of the back part of the house was nearly destroyed and other damage done the building estimated at $300.—The fire was communicated by a child which had been left in a chamber over the wood house by a joiner, who had been a few minutes before at work there. The child left the room just in time to escape with life; but when the fire was discovered, the room and the one adjoining, were so full of smoke, that no one could enter them, and every article they contained was either burned or nearly ruined.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Having seen in the Philadelphian of October 14. a letter from Rev. N. H. Hall of Lexington Kentucky and a reply to a part of it by Rev. Dr. Ely. I wish to give some information to those gentlemen and some others which may tend to settle a matter which is in dispute among them.

1. Some Presbyterians in the Western part of New-York, have received ministers from corresponding bodies, without requiring their assent to the confession of faith. In the same way it is possible "that nearly, or quite one-half of the members of the western reserve Synod of Ohio, may not have adopted the Confession of Faith of our church!!"

2. Presbyterians in this section of the state are in the habit of appointing Commissioners to the General Assembly who are neither Elders nor Committee men, but private members of the church.

If there is any thing improper or unconstitutional in this, let it be corrected, and let not the question whether this is the fact, be made any longer a subject of dispute. Yours

PETER.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman,—In the Observer of Oct. 20, you have given a short extract from a sermon by Dr. Woods of Andover Seminary. The sermon is from 1 Cor. 13: 7, So then neither is he that planteth any thing—neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. The day after its delivery Dr. Green of Philadelphia, in an address to the students of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, thus speaks of it. "It is with more pleasure than I can easily express, that yesterday I heard in common with yourselves, the scriptural and sound teaching, on this topic, (revivals of religion) of the learned and eminently pious professor from the Andover Seminary, in a sermon, which in all its parts, was one of the most excellent to which I have ever listened."

Now the inquiry which I would make of you, Mr. Editor, is, whether you cannot furnish your readers with the sermon of Dr. Woods by dividing and letting us have it in three or four numbers of your useful paper? A READER.

We will thank any person who has a copy of the above Sermon to oblige us with it.—Ed. Roch. Obs.

MONROE COUNTY S. S. UNION.

In accordance with a notice of the Monroe County Sunday School Union, a numerous meeting of Teachers and friends of Sunday Schools, was held on Sabbath evening Oct. 30th at the first Presbyterian Church in this village, to consult on measures for promoting the interests of Sunday Schools in this county during the winter.

After prayer, and some interesting and important remarks by the President, E. Pomeroy, Esq. stating the objects of the meeting and alluding to the happy results of the volunteer agency appointed last Spring, and the necessity for increased labor to sustain Sunday Schools through the winter, a request was made for any who were willing to volunteer their services for such labor to leave their names with the Secretary, and meet the Board Monday morning at the Session Room of this church. The meeting was also addressed by other gentlemen with much spirit and effect.

The Board met agreeably to the above, and the following appointments were made:

Brighton—S. W. Lee, Wm. S. Bishop, Esq. and Wm. C. McClintock.—Henrietta—H. L. Achilles, J. Sperry, and T. R. Chipman.—Bush—Judge Samson, S. Mathews, Esq. and J. F. Bush.—Mendon—Z. Freeman, H. B. Shearman, Judge Barnard, and Dr. Allen.—Pittsford—Judge Chapin, E. Beach, and S. Holland.—Penfield—F. Starr, Z. Freeman, E. Cook, L. Adams, Esq. Rev. J. Rolurds, and Rev. J. Huestiss.—Perrinton—D. Bush Esq. and Everard Peck.—Greece—S. Tower, T. C. Hill, and Wm. P. Johnson.—Parma—J. H. Thompson, S. W. Skinner, Lemuel Clark, and O. Palmer.—Clarkson—F. Starr, A. C. Burr, Mr. Pond, and J. Woodard.—Sweden—B. Campbell, and Mr. Ingersol, (of Ogden.)—Wheatland—Mr. Bronson, J. Blackmer, and John Mitchel.—Riga—J. C. B. Mount, C. M. Lee, Esq. and F. S. Howe. Chili—C. R. Ward, O. Sage, and J. Colt.—Gates H. Bush, N. Aldrich and J. N. Bear.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That we recommend the immediate formation of town societies in every town where they are not already organized.

E. POMEROY, President.

Z. FREEMAN, Sec'y.

From the N. Y. Observer.

SYNOD OF ALBANY.

Extract from the narrative of the state of Religion within the bounds of the Synod of Albany.

In speaking of the progress of religion in the revivals which have taken place during the past year, the Synod find it difficult to descend to particulars without far exceeding the ordinary limits of their annual narrative; indeed it were a far briefer task to enumerate those churches in which only a common degree of divine influence has been experienced, than those which have enjoyed a plentiful refreshing from the presence of the Lord. In the Presbytery of Champlain, the churches which are reported as having been specially blessed are those of Malone, Moira, Constable, Chateaugay, Port Covington, Beekmantown, Champlain, Keeseville, and Clintonville. Besides these, the churches of Bangor, Westville, Mooers, Plattsburgh, and [illegible] powerful revivals have influence in a greater or less degree, that God has not forgotten to be gracious. In the Presbytery of Troy, God has manifested himself with special power and grace, to the several churches in Troy, to the church in Lansingburg, Waterford, Cambridge, Hebron, Salem, W. Granville, Whitehall, Nassau, Brunswick, Schagticoke, Sand Lake, Chester, Caldwell, and some others. In the Presbytery of Columbia, which includes the counties of Columbia and Greene, the towns in which this work is reported to have been most extensive and powerful are Catskill, New-Lebanon, Green River, Greenville, Lexington, Windham and Hillsdale, though it has existed to a greater or less extent in other places, and especially in the city of Hudson, where there has been, if not the copious shower, the gentle and almost constant dew of divine influence. In the Presbytery of Albany, the several churches in the city of Albany, the church in West Galway, in Mayfield 2d, in Stillwater, and in Westerlo, have been specially revived, and greatly increased; while the church in Kingsboro' and some others have received considerable additions, and may be regarded as on the whole in a prosperous state. From the Presbyteries of Newburyport and Londonderry, there has been no representation, though the Synod are happy to be able to state in general from other sources, that the work of divine grace has extended to them, and that several of the churches within their bounds are at this moment rejoicing in a rich manifestation of God's power and love. It deserves here to be mentioned that there are many churches within the bounds of the Synod which have not been represented, and in respect to the present state of which the Synod have no particular knowledge; though they have reason to believe that some of these might be added to the list of churches on which the Spirit of God has been, or now is, plentifully descending.

Of the character of the revivals which have been reported, one of the most prominent features is that they have been rapid and powerful; and in a greater number of instances have been introduced or sustained through the instrumentality of the protracted meetings. Many instances have occurred in which the moral aspect of whole neighborhoods and considerable communities have been completely changed in a single week; plants of righteousness have been seen shooting up simultaneously to clothe with spiritual luxuriance an extensive region which had before brought forth nothing but briars and thorns, and seemed nigh unto cursing. The good natured and exemplary moralist has suddenly found out the secret that his morality was good for nothing in the concern of his salvation, and has thrown himself at the feet of mercy to be clothed with the righteousness of Christ. The old and hardened transgressor has been waked up on the margin of the pit, and has made a rapid escape from its fearful burnings. The downright skeptic, the confirmed infidel, who has gone to a prayer meeting to cavil, has gone away from it to pray; and the open scoffer has found himself melting down at a throne of mercy, when he had but just left off assaulting that throne with his malignant blasphemies. And what is more lovely than all, childhood almost fresh from the cradle, has struck up its sweet hosannahs to the Lamb that was slain; and has most delightfully evinced how effectual are the teachings of God's Spirit even upon an infant mind; and in its strong and intelligent and holy aspirations, is already antedating the maturity and vigor of spiritual manhood. The Synod would dwell with gratitude not only upon the extent and power of this work, but especially upon its influence in confounding infidelity, in reforming profligacy, and in moulding the character and destines of the rising generation.

REVIVAL PRAYER MEETINGS IN ENGLAND.—At a meeting of the Shropshire Baptist Association, June 29th, it was resolved, "That a meeting be held on the last Monday in every month by all the churches in the Association, for special prayer to God for a revival of religion."—London Baptist Magazine for Sept.

GREAT GOOD EFFECTED BY SMALL MEANS.

The Home Mission Society has frequently accomplished great good by granting even a little aid to feeble churches and congregations. In this way they have been enabled to help themselves, and to gain strength, so as to need no foreign aid. We here insert an interesting illustration of this from the Connecticut Observer.

"Last year an appropriation of 80 dollars was asked for from the Domestic Missionary Society of Connecticut, to enable a feeble church in this state to settle a pastor. They had agreed on their pastor, but did not feel able, in their circumstances at that time, to offer him a salary sufficient for his support, without aid from some other source. The appropriation was voted—the pastor settled—a revival of religion followed—thirty-five have been added to the church, by profession, the last year, and there are as many more who give good evidence that they have been 'born of the Spirit.' In consequence of this additional strength, they have called but for fifty dollars of the appropriation, having raised the remainder among themselves. One of the members of the church writes, 'I think for the future, instead of drawing from your treasury, we shall be humble contributors to its funds.' In return for the fifty dollars, they have raised ten dollars for the Education Society—fourteen dollars and sixteen cents for the Colonization Society—thirty dollars and twenty five cents for the Bible Society—twenty dollars and thirty six cents at Monthly Concert collections—and sixty five dollars for Foreign Missions—in the whole one hundred and thirty nine dollars and seventy seven cents."

REVIVAL IN NEW-YORK CITY.

The meetings were continued in Mr. Parker's new church, in Dey street, as mentioned in our last, throughout the week, prayer meetings at six and seven o'clock, and preaching morning, afternoon, and evening, with a meeting for inquirers at the close of each evening service. The number was generally from fifty to one hundred. In the evenings the house was always crowded. Considerable numbers professed to find peace in surrendering themselves to Christ. The meetings are continued this week for morning prayers, and evening preaching. Mr. Kirk of Albany, has labored abundantly, in connection with the pastor; and the Lord has greatly owned his labors. To him be all the praise, both for qualifying the instrument, and giving effect to his preaching.—N. Y. Evan.

FEEBLE MEANS BLESSED.

The adorable sovereignty of Jehovah is sometimes displayed in blessing the feeblest means in the conversion of sinners, that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of man. A circumstance illustrating this position, we here insert from the Christian Watchman. The truth of it is sustained by satisfactory evidence.—Christian Journal.

A person in a country town not thirty miles from Boston, in conversing with an acquaintance, was asked by the latter why he had not attended to the subject of religion, and examined the evidence for its truth with attention and care. He replied that he intended to do so, as soon as he had got off a vessel, which he had been occupied in building, being a ship builder. As soon as he had made this reply, the question arose in his mind with great force, flashing terror and conviction to his heart. "What if he should be suddenly arrested by death, before the business alluded to should be completed, where would be the safety of his soul!" The thought followed him by day and by night, and he could find no peace. The fact is, he was an unpardoned sinner was in his view, and he was constrained to cry to God for mercy. It pleased God, in a few days, to enlighten his mind in the knowledge of the gospel, and he is now rejoicing in the hope of eternal life, through the merits and mediation of the Lord Jesus. He had long been an esteemed and respected citizen, but till within a few weeks unacquainted with experimental religion. The case appears to be peculiarly marked with the tokens of divine sovereignty.

From a correspondent of the N. Y. Observer.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIANS.

This denomination began in 1810, and had its origin out of the Cumberland Presbytery, which had belonged to the Synod of Kentucky. In 1809, this Presbytery, or rather the Presbytery of Transylvania, out of which the Cumberland Presbytery was formed that year I believe, licensed one or two men to preach the gospel, whose attainments were not such as are required by the discipline of the Presbyterian church. The Cumberland Presbytery licensed several more. The Synod appointed a commission to examine into the affair, which met the Presbytery and claimed the right of re-examining the licentiates not only on the subject of acquirements, but also doctrines; and when this was denied by the Presbytery, they cited the Presbytery to appear before the Synod. After much discussion in the Synod, and censure passed, the Presbytery appealed to the Assembly. At the first Assembly a decision of a mild character was obtained; but the next Assembly affirmed the decision of the Synod of Kentucky. The Cumberland Presbytery, or a part of it rather, then proceeded to organize a body of their own, independent of the Assembly. During twenty years they have increased with astonishing rapidity. They have now twenty Presbyteries, four Synods and a General Assembly. How many ministers and churches they have I cannot ascertain, for they have not published, I believe, any statistics of their church. But their ministers cannot be much short of two hundred, and churches far exceed that number. They have adopted the Methodist plan of having both an itinerant and stationed ministry. They have ten or twelve circuits in Tennessee alone. They are making very laudable efforts to promote education among their candidates for the ministry. They have recently established a college at Princeton, Ky., which is ably instructed, and had last winter more than sixty students, several of whom are preparing for the ministry.—They publish at that place a weekly religious paper, called the religious and Literary Intelligencer. They are very friendly to the great and benevolent operations of the day, and are active in promoting them. They are zealous, ardent, and active in their Master's service; and many of their ministers are very powerful speakers. Their doctrines differ, in several points, from those of the General Assembly—particularly on the subject of predestination and election. In manner of preaching and laboring they greatly resemble our Methodist brethren, and like them, are remarkably successful. The Lord will bless those who preach in earnest, if they preach the great saving doctrines which Presbyterians, Methodists, and Cumberland Presbyterians all hold.

You will rejoice to hear that the Spirit is poured out from on high upon Danville, and the college established there has now upwards of ninety students. May they all be gathered into the kingdom of Christ, and may this good work spread through all this region, and all divisions in the church be healed.

THE METHODIST MISSIONARY.

Among the individuals "pardoned" by Gov. Gilmer on condition that they would remove from the country claimed by Georgia was Mr. Trott. Methodist missionary. The Methodist Herald, of this city, thus alludes to the course of Mr. T.—Boston Recorder.

We learn with some regret, that one of the Missionaries has finally succumbed to the Georgia laws, to prevent going into the Penitentiary. His case, we admit, was a trying one, but it was also a glorious one; and we should much rather have heard that he met his fate with fortitude, than to learn that he had preserved his liberty by a dereliction of principle. But perhaps we are not in possession of circumstances enough to form a correct judgment, and we will say no more at present.

SLAVE INSURRECTIONS.—A public meeting was held at Bethesda, in Richmond County, Georgia, on the 14th inst., in which a preamble and resolutions were agreed to, to the following purport:—That those present, pledged themselves to prosecute with all rigor, all persons disseminating such publications in the state, as Garrison's Liberator, or Walker's pamphlet;—that slaves absent from their master's plantations should be under strict surveillance, and in particular, that the intercourse should be checked, and narrowly watched, between those in the town of Augusta and in the country;—that all collections of colored persons, should be forthwith dispersed; that volunteer patrolls, should be organized, that the legislature should pass a law, to prevent the return of any colored person who may travel north of the Potomac; that no necessity can exist for allowing them to frequent separate churches of their own, and that such as are now open, ought to be closed;—that no night meeting should be allowed, and that they should not be allowed to hire out their own time, or their own horses and drays; that measures should be adopted to remove from the state all such as can read and write, and all free negroes in general; and that they should no longer be employed in printing offices. A committee was appointed to carry into effect the resolutions recommending the Mayor and City Council to prevent night meetings, &c.

A meeting was held in the fourth election district of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, on the 5th inst., to consider the same subject. It was resolved that the late insurrections in Virginia called for the formation of associations, to visit the houses of negroes regularly, and to restrain them from misconduct. The meeting protested against the practice of treating blacks with cruelty, or inflicting superfluous punishment upon them, but recommended a series of precautionary measures to be ridgidly observed. It was also resolved to petition the Legislature to pass a law, prohibiting the maunumission of slaves, unless on condition of their emigration to Liberia. The annexed resolution was likewise adopted:

Resolved, That they be requested to recommend to the members of the State Legislature generally, the propriety and importance of instructing our representatives to Congress, to support a law granting an annual appropriation out of the treasury towards transporting the free colored population to the United States colony in Africa.

MURDER OF MR. LEWIS.—The burning of Mr. Lewis house in Prince George County, and the death of that gentleman, have been already mentioned. The following extract from a letter to the Editor of the Richmond Enquirer, contains further details.

Last Friday evening, Mr. John Henery Lewis was murdered by his negroes, in the night, while he was in bed. They robbed the house of all the most valuable articles and then destroyed it by fire—burning up the body of their master. Mr. Lewis had no family, and was one of the most respectable inhabitants of the county. The neighbor's of Mr. Lewis generally believed for a day or two, that the house had caught fire by accident, but circumstances afterwards arose to cause suspicion, that the whole of this atrocious affair, was the act of Mr. L's Negroes.—They were taken up, and finally made a full confession. Many of the articles were found upon them, and some of the negro fellows, upon examination, had actually on the shirts of their Master, with the initials of his name. They are now lodged in the jail of this county, (five of them) to take their trial. There is no doubt that all of them will be condemned—the evidence is so conclusive against them.

Postage on Newspapers.—It has been proposed in several papers to apply to the Post Master General, to have him recommend to Congress, an alteration in the rates of postage on newspapers, viz.: to let papers to regular subscribers pass free of postage.

While this reform was making, it would, perhaps, be well to raise the postage on every printed article sent in the mails, which was not intended for regular subscribers.

This would be a great relief to the poorer class, and be a benefit to the rising generation, who in country places receive much information and instruction by a regular perusal of newspapers.

It would be in accordance with the spirit of the age, in the administration of an enlightened government, to do all they can to diffuse intelligence among the people, for "intelligence is the life of liberty."

In the present prosperous times, as to revenue to the government, it would be doing a good thing to reduce the tax on intelligence. It was never intended that the Post Office Department should yield a revenue to the Treasury.

We hope that the editors of newspapers generally will express their opinions freely on this subject.—Roch. Dai. Adv.

THE CONFLAGRATION AT CONSTANTINOPLE.—The report of a great fire at Constantinople is fully confirmed; it took place on the 2nd Aug. in Pera, where all the Europeans reside. The destruction extends to nearly 7,000 houses; indeed only eight houses are left, among which is the residence of the English Consul, Mr. Cartwright, and the English merchant, Mr. Hanson. The fire was the work of incendiaries; it broke out in four districts at the same instant. The dates from Constantinople are of the 17th Aug., by the way of Odessa.

NEWSPAPER.—One cent a day, carefully saved from the earnings of one of the poorest class of our citizens, would be more than sufficient to pay the whole expense of the most useful newspaper in the country. Such a measure would insure for his children a treasure of knowledge, which could never be spent by them, however prodigal, and fit them, however poor in vulgar wealth, to become the most useful of all the members of our republican family.

AN EJECTED CURATE.

The Rev. H. B. Bulteel, who now signs himself "the ejected curate of St. Ebbe's," has communicated to the London Times a statement of which the following paragraphs are a part:—Boston Recorder.

"On Tuesday last, August 9, I received a letter from the Bishop of Oxford, stating, that he had withdrawn my license on no other charge than that of preaching the Gospel: his words are as follows: "After your admission of having, in various instances, preached in Dissenting Meeting houses, and in the open air, it becomes my duty to withdraw your license to the curacy of St. Ebbe's;" and the very next day received the official notification of the same, bearing the episcopal arms, seal and signature.

"As the law of England gives bishops a right to turn out curates from within the walls of their church, just at their will and pleasure I could therefore do no other than submit to the episcopal decision; thinking it right, however, before service, last Lord's Day, to protest, in the presence of the churchwarden and officiating minister, then in the vestry, against the arbitrary measure of the bishop; but as there is now a law which invests bishops with the power of gagging their curates outside the church walls, I therefore gave notice that divine service would be performed in my own garden at six o'clock in the evening."

The "World" says that Mr. B. had before this transaction preached to very large audiences in the open air in Devonshire. He had also commenced a course of out-of-door services at Oxford. He must now either be silent, or preach as a dissenter.

$250 PREMIUM.

It is hoped the premium of $250, offered for the best tract on "the manner in which christians should show the spirit of their Master in efforts to promote the conversion of the world," will engage the attention of able evangelical writers. The manuscripts, should each be accompanied with a sealed envelope, containing the name of the writer, and may be addressed until December 1st. to William A. Hallock, 144, Nassau street, N. Y., or committed to Rev. Joel T. Benedict, No. 31 N. Fourth street Philadelphia; or of Mr. A. Russell, No. 5, Cornhill Boston. Committee of award, Rev. T. H. Skinner, D. D. of Philadelphia; Rev. C. B. M'Ilvaine, Brooklyn; Rev William Patton, and Arthur Tappan, Esq. New-York.

The premium tracts On Prayer are to be presented to Mr. Hallock, or Mr. Russell, as above, on or before November 1st.

To the several County Unions comprising the "GENESEE UNION" and the friends of the cause generally, Greeting—

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of this Union stands adjourned to Wednesday the 16th day of November next, then to convene at the Baptist Church in Rochester at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of choosing officers for the ensuing year—receiving reports from the respective County Unions and any other business connected with the interests of the Union. Several addresses may be expected on the occasion.

The several County Unions are earnestly requested to forward their reports for the past year on, or before the day of the meeting, to Mr. Myron Strong of this place recording Sec'y, that due returns may be made to the "American Union," and above all, that it may be apparent, that the friends o Civil and Religious Liberty in this region where the Divine favor has been so signally manifest, during the past year are "bringing forth the fruits of righteousness.

On Behalf of the Board.

CHAS. J. HILL, Cor. Secretary.

Editors of newspapers within the thirteen Western Counties of N. Y. who are opposed to a union of "Church and State," are requested to give the above notice one insertion.

At a meeting of the delegates to the Genesee County Temperance Society, held at Le Roy on the 25th inst. it was

RESOLVED, That the said meeting be adjourned to the third Tuesday of November next in the Presbyterian meeting house in the village of Middlebury at 12 o'clock at noon. A punctual attendance of the delegates to the annual meeting of said society, is respectfully solicited at that time and place. J. B. WILCOX, Sec'ry

October 25th, 1831.

PROCLAMATION,

By ENOS T. THROOP, Governor of the State of New-York.

Being conscious that a periodical public oblation of our hearts to Almighty God is acceptable to him, and a pleasing duty; and that it is highly becoming in nations, recipients of his favors, as well as individuals; I do, in humble reverence, and in conformity to usage, recommend to the people of this state, the observance of Thursday the eighth day of December next, as a day of Prayer and Thanksgiving. Let us, with united hearts, on that day, renew to Him our acknowledgments of gratitude, for those peculiar national institutions by which he Has distinguished us among the nations of the earth, and whereby all our civil, religious and personal rights are secured; and for having established schools among us, and other means of public instruction, whereby our capacity for enjoyment is enlarged, and we are enabled better to understand and defend our civil and social privileges: And among the innumerable favors which we have received from his bountiful providence, during the past year, let us particularly thank Him, for healthful and fruitful seasons, for the growing spirit of laudable enterprize and diversified industry, and for his remarkable interposition in staying the desolating moral pestilence of intemperate drinking.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the privy seal of
L. S. the State, this twentieth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one.

E. T. THROOP.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

☞A meeting at the Rochester Institute of Practical Education of all the Teachers of common and select Schools, of Academies & High Schools in Monroe county, together with the patrons of those institutions, and of all literary gentlemen who regard the uniformity and perfection of our own language important, is to be held on Thursday Nov. 3, at half past 6, P. M.

TRACTS.

To the Superintendents of the Monthly Distribution of Tracts in the county of Allegany.

Whereas a benevolent individual in Rochester, some time since proposed to bear one half of the expense of supplying each month, for three months, every family in the county with a Tract published by the American Tract Society, you are hereby informed that if you will extend the Monthly Distribution of such Tracts over the whole towns in which you reside, or will extend your operations each way for three months until you shall meet other societies, your bills for one half of the expense for that time shall be allowed you by the depositary at Angelica, who is hereby authorized to receive such accounts and to charge them to the Parent Society. WARREN DAY, General Agt. and Superintendent of the Monthly Distribution in the Western District of New York.

Geneva, Oct. 31, 1831.

MARRIED,

In Homer, by Rev. J. Keep, Jacob M. Schermerhorn Esq. of this village, to Miss. Louisa A. Barbour of Homer.

In Phelps, on the 18th inst. Mr. Augustus Banister, to Miss. Mary Vandemark.

In Newport R. I. Mr. Walter Whitcomb, merchant of York, Liv. co. and formerly of this village to Miss Hannah Richmond, of the former place.

In this village on the 27th inst. by the Rev. L. Lyons, Mr. James Conklin of Brighton to Miss Hersula, daughter of Philip Paddock of this village.

DIED.

At Sunderland, on the 10th inst. REV. JAMES TAYLOR, aged 48, pastor of the Congregational Church in that place. At the time of his death, his wife was afflicted with the same malignant fever which terminated his earthly pilgrimage, and died on Saturday evening the 15th inst. By this mysterious dispensation of providence, their family of nine children the oldest under twenty-one, and the youngest two years old, are made orphans; and the Church and Society in Sunderland are called to mourn the loss of one, who for twenty-four years, has been their faithful, successful and much esteemed pastor. Mr. T. possessed, in an eminent degree, those talents, acquirements, and peculiar traits of character, which constitute a useful minister of the gospel. Mrs. Taylor was highly esteemed by all her acquaintance. She was the daughter of the Rev. John Taylor, who was a native of this town, and for several years, pastor of the church in Deerfield.—Westfield Register.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 [illegible]
Flour, bbl.	5 [illegible]
Corn,	20 [illegible]
Oats,	2 [illegible]
Beef, fresh	2 [illegible]
Pork, do.	[illegible]
Salt, bbl.	1 [illegible]

Rochester price Pot ashes $100 ton—Pearls 108

SAXONY SHEEP,
At Auction.

ON Saturday next, Nov. 5th, 1831, at 11 o'clk A. M. I shall sell in front of the Market, Buffalo Street, Rochester,

50 Saxony Ewe Sheep,
30 Bucks,

imported, and from imported stock. They are in good health, and from one of the choicest flocks in New England. Certificates can be produced of the purity of the blood, as also from Manufacturers, of the superior quality of the wool.

An opportunity is now offered by which the farmers of this, and the surrounding counties can supply themselves with the above desirable stock of sheep. They will be sold in lots to suit purchasers, and credit given if desired.

The will be ready for examination from 9 o'clk to 11, on the day of sale.

LEVI W. SIBLEY, Auctr.
For the Observer.

More New Books!!

Willson's Evidences.
Baxter's Call to the unconverted.
Advice to a young Christian.
Pleasantness of a religious life.
Church Member's Guide, by J. A. James
Jay's Lectures.
Payson's Sermons.
Pleasing expositor.
Consistency. By Charlotte Elizabeth.
Payson's Memoirs.
Scougal's Works.
Mental Discipline. By H. F. Burder, 3d. Edition.
Wardlaw's Discourses on Prayer.
Sumner's Expository Lectures, on Matt. & Mark
Paschal's Provincial Letters.
Willson on the Divine Authority and Perpetual Obligation of the Lord's Day.
Wilk's Christian Essays.
Fuller's Holy State.
Boston's Fourfold State.
The Christian Ministry, in 2 vols.
Paley's Works.
Life and Times of Rev. Richard Baxter.
Spring's Essays on Christian Character.
Sprague's Lectures.
Hawe's Lectures to young men.
Linsley's Lectures to the middle aged

Just received and for sale at the New BOOKSTORE of SKINNER & PHELPS, where those who wish to purchase cheap, will do well to call.

☞Store 1 door South of the Bank of Rochester, No. 24, Exchange St. Nov. 2.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

THE TWENTY SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

A correspondent writes to the Editors of the New York Observer, under date of New Haven, Connecticut, Oct. 7, 1831, the following account of this most important American anniversary:—

I have this afternoon attended the closing exercises of the twenty-second annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The meeting was interesting and solemn. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large Assembly in the North church. The occasion, the services, the closing scene, every thing tended to impress the mind with the vast importance of the work in which the Board are engaged.

The meeting of the Board commenced on Wednesday, at 10 o'clock, A. M. and closed to-day, at 5 P. M., occupying nearly three days.—The business meetings during each day have been marked with a degree of christian harmony which I have seldom witnessed in any deliberative assembly. The members seemed to feel the responsibility of their station. The important topics presented before them in the report of the prudential Committee received their strict attention. According to their usual custom, the different parts of the report were referred to separate committees, who reported in favor of accepting the same.

The committee on that part of the report relating to the financial and other concerns of the Board, presented the following statement, which was approved by the Board, viz: "That the Board are called upon gratefully to acknowledge the goodness of God in directing the attention of the churches for several months past to the pecuniary necessities and claims of the missions and missionaries under its care, and that it becomes the Board and its Committee to evince great enterprise and courage in its future plans and efforts, aiming at a constant and rapid extension of the system of means by which it is endeavoring to reclaim the unevangelized portions of the earth to God. The Committee would also recommend to the Board to express their approbation of the course pursued by the Prudential Committee hitherto, in accepting the services of every preacher of the Gospel, who has offered to become a missionary to the heathen, and has produced satisfactory testimonials of his qualifications for that work."

The Hon. Jonas Platt, Rev. Drs. M'Auley and Spring, Professor Goodrich, and Hon. Wm. Reed were appointed a Committee to report on the expediency of memorializing the Government of the United States in behalf of the missionaries among the Cherokees, now imprisoned. This was a subject of much interest to the Board, and one which called forth the deep feelings of their hearts. But little time, however, was occupied in discussing it. The following is the report of the Committee.

"The Committee to whom was referred the consideration of the present state and prospects of the missionary stations among the Indians in the south western part of the United States, would respectfully report the following preamble and resolutions for the adoption of this Board.

"Whereas, this Board, with the consent and approbation of the President of the United States and in conformity to the laws thereof, did establish missionary stations in various parts of the south western territory of this country, and particularly among the Cherokee nation of Indians, then under the acknowledged jurisdiction of the United States as qualified by treaties:

"And whereas the state of Georgia has recently laid claim to an exclusive jurisdiction over the said Cherokee territory, and enacted laws which are represented to the missionaries of this Board by able counsel, to be contrary to the constitution and laws of the United States, and subversive of their rights as citizens of the same;

"And whereas SAMUEL AUSTIN WORCESTER and ELISUR BUTLER, missionaries of this Board, have chosen to consider themselves as being and remaining under the laws and protection of the United States, until the question of jurisdiction shall be definitely decided by the highest legal tribunals thereof; and have therefore declined either to take the oath of allegiance to the state of Georgia and obtain a license from the Governor to reside in said territory or to depart therefrom, and are in consequence now under sentence of imprisonment for the term of four years, in the Penitentiary of said state, therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That as far as the facts of the case are now before this Board, this Board do APPROVE of the conduct of their missionaries under these trying circumstances.

"Resolved, 2. That the Prudential Committee be directed to prepare and publish a concise statement of facts respecting the missions established by this Board among the South Western Tribes of Indians; comprising a notice of the circumstances of those tribes prior to, and at the commencement of our missionary operations among them, with a view of the progress of social, intellectual, moral, and religious improvement among the Indians, and of the aid, sanction, and encouragement originally, and from time to time, extended to these missions by the government of the United States; with estimates of the monies expended in the establishment and progress of these benevolent operations, and all the essential particulars respecting the state and prospect of these tribes, and of the several missions among them, in connexion with a statement of the proceedings of the United States' Government, and of the State of Georgia, affecting the rights of the Indians, and finally interrupting the missions and arresting and imprisoning some of the missionaries.

"Resolved, 3. That the Prudential Committee be, and they are hereby directed to address a respectful memorial to the President of the United States, claiming the protection of the Executive government for the missionaries of the Board among the South Western Indians, and at their discretion, to present a memorial to Congress on the same subject.

"Resolved, 4. That it be recommended to the churches, to make the present condition and trials of these suffering imprisoned missionaries of the Board, the subject of special prayer to Almighty God, and particularly at the monthly concert on the first Monday in December next, that this dark dispensation may be overruled to the extension of the Gospel and the ultimate prosperity of the missionary cause."

A Committee consisting of Rev. Samuel Miller, D. D., Rev. David Porter, D. D., and John Tappan, Esq. were appointed to prepare a minute expressive of the sense of this Board of the character and services of their late Corresponding Secretary. They made the following report, which was accepted and adopted:

"Jeremiah Evarts, Esq., the late beloved and revered Corresponding Secretary of this Board, departed this life on the 10th day of May last, in the city of Charleston, in South Carolina, on his return from a voyage to the island of Cuba, which he had taken for the benefit of his health, long enfeebled by a pulmonary complaint, and by labors of the most unwearied and exhausting kind in the great cause of Christian benevolence.

"This excellent man had for a number of years, devoted all the powers of his active and gracious, and sanctified mind, to the cause of missions among the heathen, with a degree of judgment, zeal, disinterestedness, and indefatigable diligence and perseverance, which has, probably, never been exceeded by any one occupying a similar station, and which commanded the universal confidence of the friends of missions to whom he was known, in every part of the world. His departure, like his life, was marked with that lively faith, and triumphant hope in the grace and truth of the gospel, which were eminently adapted to edify and animate the friends of the Redeemer's kingdom.

"The Board cannot forbear here to record their deep impression of the distinguished talents, the ardent piety, and the peculiar devotedness of their departed brother and fellow laborer; and their grateful recollection of his long, faithful and invaluable services. And, while they bow in humble submission to the sovereign wisdom of God which has removed him from his earthly labors—they desire to cherish a solemn sense of the new call which this bereavement presents to every surviving member of the Board to increasing zeal and diligence in the great work to which he was so eminently devoted in life and in death."

Rev. Drs. McAuley and Richards, as a Committee from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, appeared before the Board for the purpose of conferring with them on the best measures for increasing the energies of the Presbyterian church in the cause of Foreign Missions. Rev. President Day and Rev. Drs. Beecher and Wisner were appointed to confer with them on the subject. This committee agreed in reporting that "the A. B. C. F. M. is suited in every respect for a national institution, and that the three denominations of christians of which it is principally composed, are represented in this Board in a ratio nearly equal to the ratio of the number of communicants in said churches, and that the missionaries have been received from each of these, and the churches formed by them are, and may be of either denomination, and in view of these considerations and of the importance and efficiency of union in this great work, they are of opinion that this Board should, by sending agents and otherwise endeavor to enlist the energies of the Presbyterian Church in this work."

On Wednesday evening a large congregation assembled to hear the annual sermon from Rev. Leonard Woods, D. D.; text Is. lxii. 1, 2. Subject; Hindrances to the spread of the Gospel. This sermon will soon be given to the public.—On Thursday evening the Centre Church was again crowded, to hear extracts from the annual report and addresses on the subject of missions. The services were introduced by singing Bishop Heber's Missionary Hymn, and prayer by Rev. B. B. Rice of New York. Extracts from the Report of the Prudential Committee were then read by Rev. Rufus Anderson, Assistant Secretary of the Board, after which resolutions were offered for the consideration of the meeting, by Rev. Dr. Cornelius and Beecher, and seconded by Rev. Drs. Lansing and McAuley, each of whom addressed the meeting in an impressive and forcible manner. They presented to view the magnitude of the work in which the Board are engaged, the progress already made, the necessity of making greater sacrifices for this cause, the happy effects resulting from this enterprise in our own land as well as among the heathen, and many other considerations suited to awaken a deep interest in the objects of the Board. A collection of a little rising of $300 was taken at the close of the meeting.

I regret that I am not able at this time to give you a full notice of the report, as I think it would greatly interest your readers, and tend to encourage christians to go forward with increasing energy in this work. It is filled with interesting facts which show the progress of the Gospel, and the power of God as displayed among the heathen. Revivals of religion have been enjoyed within the year at many of the stations, both among the Indians in our own country, and at the Sandwich Islands and in India. The church never had more occasion to give thanks to God for the success of missions to the heathen than at this time, and the call for increased energies was never more imperious.

The next annual meeting of the Board is to be held in New-York, on the first Wednesday of October, 1832, and Rev. Dr. McMurray and Spring, and Eleazor Lord, Esq. were appointed a committee to make arrangements for the meeting. The Rev. President Allen was appointed to preach on that occasion, and Rev. Dr. McAuley is his substitute.

Rev. Elias Cornelius, D. D. of New York, was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Board, and member of the Prudential Committee. O. E.

P. S. The following resolution, which was adopted by the Board, I omitted to notice in its proper place:

"Resolved, That the A. B. C. F. M. have regarded with deep interest, and now gratefully acknowledge the aid which the mission at the Sandwich Islands has received from the kindness of ship-owners and ship-masters concerned in the whale fishery, and especially would the Board acknowledge the aid they have received from the officers and crews of those ships which have taken no ardent spirits for use or for sale."

The following summary view of the missions of the Board was prepared from the report for the Religious Intelligencer:

The Board has eighteen distinct missions under its care; four in Asia, three in Europe, ten among Indian tribes of North America, and one in Polynesia. These missions embrace 51 stations, and are composed of 61 preachers, 45 lay assistants, and 126 female helpers, married and single; in all, 232. Fourteen preachers of the gospel have received appointments, with a view to their proceeding into different fields as soon as possible. One of these is, indeed, already on the way to the place of his destination. Eight, with a physician and printer, are expected to embark, during the present month, for the Pacific. One is destined to liberated Greece; another to Palestine; another to the Jews of Turkey; and two to Bombay.

"The number of schools in the several missions is 1,045, containing upwards of 50,000 scholars. There are four printing establishments, with eight presses, from which not far from 1,000,000 of books, and 47,000,000 of pages have been issued in eleven different languages. Thirty three churches have been organized, and contain upward of 1,300 members; and within the period embraced by this report, not less than five of the missions have been visited with copious effusions of the Spirit of God."

MR. AND DR.

A writer in the N. Y. Evangelist says, of one who from principle and in earnest rejected the title of D. D. that "whenever his name appears in the transactions of Synod or the General Assembly, or upon whatever occasion it comes before the public in print, it is Mr. and not Dr."

Now we respectfully ask, if Mr. is not an abbreviation of MASTER! Is it not quite as unscriptural to call any one Master, as to call him Doctor? Were not the Pharisees under condemnation for the use of the latter term, has he not most explicitly told us to "call no man Master?" If it is a sin to call any one Dr. that is, Teacher; is it not a greater sin to address any one as Master? Mr. is as good a translation of Rabbi as Dr. can be in any language. If the spirit of Christ forbids terms of respectful and complimentary address, it must have been no matter of praise in Sarah to have called her husband "lord;" and Paul should have been too much of a Quaker to have said, "Most Noble Festus." In our apprehension, he who founds his doctrine on any man, or pins his faith to his sleeve, and thus exalts him to the place of Christ, as the head of his religion, calls a man Rabbi, or Master in a forbidden sense; but to address any man as Sir, my lord, Master, Mister, or Doctor, is as innocent as to say "Most Excellent Theophilus." Our Quaker friends renounce Mr. but feel at perfect liberty to say, Doctor. A. B. and A. M. and M. D. and L. L. D. and D. D. and S. T. P. we regard as harmless appendages to any name.—Philadelphian.

SOLEMN ADMONITION.

Col. J. H. Lumpkin, in a communication to the Charleston Observer, respecting a temperance meeting in Georgia, says:—"A worthy Christain present from a neighboring Church, rose and gave in his adhesion. He neither made, used, nor sold ardent spirit; but, until now, did not feel it his duty to join a society. At last, the clergyman offered himself for membership, confessing that he could stand out no longer without doing violence to his conscience. He then related a fact which had pained his own soul with much sorrow. An acquaintance of his had been reclaimed from intemperance; but seeing his minister drink this good creature of God, moderately, determined that he would not abandon it altogether, but use it in the same way; saying to his appetite, "Thus far, and no farther shalt thou go." He now lies low in the drunkard's grave—his estate scattered; his wife a widow; his children orphans!!

From the New-York Evangelist.

PRIDE THE DESTROYER OF VIRTUE.

Mr. Editor:—When a person who has for many years been a distinguished member of society, an ornament in the church and a blessing to mankind, pays the last debt of nature, and is gathered to his fathers, it is both customary and proper to record his merits as an example worthy of imitation. On the contrary, the character of those who have lived and died the decided enemies of God; whose deeds of wickedness ought to be held up as beacons to guard the young and thoughtless from the paths of the destroyer; is generally left to be forgotten.—While the former ought to be done, the latter ought not always to be left undone. The subject of the following sketch, affording an instance of the latter class, and having sometime since closed his earthly career, I hope it may be proper and profitable to give a brief narrative of his life.

C. manifested in early life, that he was blessed with a good degree of talent, which, if properly cultivated, might render him useful in society. But he soon discovered a wicked propensity within, to depart from the living God; and yielding to its inclination, he became a friend and doer of that which was entirely offensive in the sight of his Creator, even before he arrived at the age of twenty.

About that time, a revival commenced in S., and C. was one of the first, upon whom the spirit of holiness descended in mighty power. His convictions were pungent, and it was hoped lasting. After a long struggle with sin and the powers of darkness, he hoped that the light of the sun of righteousness had beamed upon his dark and ignorant soul. His evidences of piety were apparently clear and decisive. For a season, he was the first in meetings, in conversation, in activity. And he seemed to evince that he was seeking for a better country, even an heavenly." He continued in this state for some time, but at length, his holy zeal, manifestly declined. His appetite for spiritual food daily decreased, until he returned to the world, "having taken to himself seven other spirits worst than the first."

Another revival took place in S. Now I saw C. but he was quite an altered person. An exalted idea of his attainments in science, and of his superior talents, was deeply rooted in his heart. He considered himself almost equal to Omnipotence, or at least, that he knew quite enough to be his servant. Indeed, I heard him declare, "that if God should see fit to call him to labor in his vineyard, he was well qualified for the work." Building upon this foundation, he fell from all his hopes. Still, even in the last revival, he felt some conviction and uneasiness, yet he hardened himself against it all, and plainly showed that he was sealed over to fearful perdition.

Already the strong man armed, that demon of unrighteousness, intemperance, had laid his iron grasp upon him. And C. yielded to his power, with scarcely one effort of resistance. Soon all his faculties, and every thing he possessed was sacrificed to this almost unconquerable vice.—He became more and more, like an inhabitant of the bottomless pit.

At length the time arrived, when he was to join his kindred spirits in another world. For some time, he had been deprived of his reason to a greater or less degree. One cold winter morning, with no other warmth but that derived from the stimulating influence of liquor, with no other company or comforter than his bottle, he departed as was supposed, to a neighboring village. Nothing more was seen or heard of him till several weeks after, when his mortal part was found rotten in the field, but his immortal spirit—whither had it fled? No doubt to dwell in the lowest depths of despair.

From his example, let young, yea, let all Christians "take heed how they stand, lest they fall." JUVENIS.

From the Baptist Christian Index.

POPULARITY OF METHODIST DOCTRINES.

A series of Nos. under this title are now in course of publication in the Methodist paper called the Christian Advocate. The writer undertakes to show that Calvinist preachers are only successful, in proportion as they symbolize with the Arminian Creed. We quote the following sentence from the writer referred to:

"But since this vain philosophy has been in some measure laid aside, since men are told they can and must do something in order to obtain eternal life; in a word, since our Calvinist brethren appear in Methodist armor, one can chase a thousand and two can put ten thousand to flight. But how could they effect a conquest over a sinner by preaching the peculiarities of Calvinism! Could they persuade him to cease to do evil, by telling him that God had decreed whatever comes to pass? Could they induce him to come to the Saviour, by preaching either a limited atonement or a limited application of an infinite atonement? We are sure that nothing effectual toward pulling down the strong hold of Satan can be done by such preaching. But Methodist doctrines are mighty through God to accomplish this, and have done much toward it already as the world well know."

"What are Methodists are?" Was Edwards an Arminian? Was Whitfield an Arminian? Were all those Presbyterian and Baptist worthies who preached with so much effect in this country before Methodism was known, Arminians? We are glad that such boasting as that contained in the sentence above quoted is not from a Calvinist. If Methodist doctrines choose to court the popular ear, they may do so. "We preach Christ." We hold that the salvation of men depends, not on themselves, but upon the pleasure of God—upon the covenanted mercies of the atonement. We said one day to bishop Heading whom we casually met, "Why cannot Methodists and Baptists agree about the doctrine of Election? The Election which we maintain is merely this,—Salvation by Grace." "That," said the bishop, "is the Election which I too maintain." The truth is this—all good Methodists are Calvinistic in their prayers. It is only when they talk about their Creed that they change their tone.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

It often happens that churches measure their success by the members which come into their communion. If they be favored with repeated additions, and have a register of extended enumeration, all seems well. Prosperity is thought to attend them. But if paucity of numbers and accessions be the leading features of their history, the impression is that their spiritual state is truly bad. Few come up to their solemn feasts. But there is one sort of accessions which is not always accompanied with numerical additions, but which is hardly less important. It is the increase of grace among those whose names are already enrolled on the register of the church. When such are duly actuated by the Spirit of their Master; when they are employed in walking in Christ according to the principles and Spirit in which they received him; when they gain daily conquests over themselves, the world, and the evil temptations with which they are assailed, they are adding to their stores and resources of grace, the most valuable accessions—and such accessions will be speedily followed by all that could be desired in numbers.—Ib.

GENEROUS DONATIONS.—We learn from the African Repository, for September, that Professor Upham, of Bowdoin College, become a subscriber to the funds of the Colonization Society, on the plan of Gerret Smith, that is, has engaged to pay to the Society $100 per annum for ten years.

A donation of $2,000 has been received from a benevolent individual in New-York.

BIBLES AND TRACTS FOR THE COLONY.—A gentleman in Baltimore has made a donation of $200, one half to be expended in Bibles, and the other half in Tracts for the Colony.

BIBLES IN NORTH CAROLINA.—From an individual engaged in supplying North Carolina with Bibles, that great and praise-worthy undertaking is ascertained to be nearly accomplished. More than 30,000 Bibles have already been distributed, and a few thousands more will be required to complete the supply.

From the Observer & Telegraph.

A DEATH BED SCENE.

Y——, Oct. 7, 1831.

Mr. Editor—

If you think the following account of a young man who recently died in this place, will promote the cause of truth, you are at Liberty to insert it in your useful paper.

The individual referred to, came into this place a few months since, from one of the eastern states. He brought with him his industrious habits, which, with his uniform propriety of conduct gained for him the respect of all with whom he became acquainted. He was unusually reserved, and on account of this but little was known of his religious views; until brought upon his sick bed. It was then found that he had embraced the fatal doctrine of Universal salvation. All that could be said seemed not to shake his belief. When his disease became alarming, he was told that it was very doubtful whether he recovered. But he still hoped that he should recover, and clung to this hope even after it was evident to those standing by that he was dying. Soon his eye sight began to fail, when he became convinced that he could not recover. He then for the first time seemed to realize his situation. As eternity opened upon his views, the foundation of his hope was shaken from under him. In tones the most heart-rending he cried out, "O my poor soul! what will become of my soul! O! O! O!"—He attempted to pray, and after uttering a few incoherent expressions, said 'I cannot pray—I cannot express my feelings.' His reason soon left him, and after lingering a few hours, exercised by the most excruciating pains, he died. O why will men build their hopes of heaven on a foundation that will not stand in the day of trial! O why!—when there is a sure foundation—a stone—a tried stone, upon which all may build and have their hopes firm and bright even in the agonies of death. J.

AFFECTING INCIDENT.—A writer in the Richmond Herald, under the date of Charlottesville, Sept. 9th, relates the following interesting anecdote of an occurrence at a recent meeting in that vicinity.

A young lady who has been deaf and dumb, from her birth, exhibited during the three days a deep contrition for sin, weeping bitterly and refusing to be comforted. She pointed at times to heaven, with a frown on her countenance, accompanied with a flood of tears, intimating that she knew that God was angry with her. At length, she suddenly arose, with a sweet smile on her countenance, lifted her eyes towards heaven, and with outstretched arms, made great efforts to praise God. Casting her eye on me, she broke through the crowd, threw her arms around my neck, and distinctly articulated the words "God, love, over and over again. She then went round among her acquaintance, pointing to heaven, and fixed her hand upon her breast in token of what she felt; thus giving us satisfactory evidence of her being a subject of the new birth. During the meeting, which continued for nearly six days she continued to show by evident signs, that she was still in the same happy frame of mind. Kneeling before the penitent, she pointed to them, and to heaven, with a look expressive of the mercy of God. This scene made the most impenitent, and hardened sinners in the congregation look solemn, and confess that it was indeed the work of God.

Restitution.—A letter of which the following is a copy, inclosing three dollars, was found a few days since, deposited in the Post Office in Aurora, directed to H. Hurd, Esq., P. M.

"Here is two dollars, the principal, and one for interest, as near as I am able to get it. About eight years ago, it was obtained fraudulently, and now, Sir, it is restitution or Hell with me.

N. B. It is for a counterfeit bill on Geneva Bank. REFORM.

"H. HURD, Aurora."

It was soon after the four days' meeting in Aurora, that the letter was found.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firm of E. PECK and Co. is this day dissolved by mutual consent

EVERARD PECK,
DAVID HOYT.

may 6, 1831. SAM'L D PORTER.

☞ The subscribers having purchased the Stock in Trade of the late firm of E. PECK and Co., will continue the business of Book Selling, Printing, and Book Binding, at the old stand, under the firm of HOYT, PORTER and Co.

DAVID HOYT,
SAM'L D PORTER,
may 6. LUTHER TUCKER.

☞ The subscriber, having connected himself in business with DAVID HOYT and SAMUEL D. PORTER, has removed his Printing Establishment to the old stand of E. PECK and Co., where he will continue the publication of the Daily Advertiser, Rochester Republican, and Genesee Farmer, under the firm of LUTHER TUCKER and Co.

may 6. LUTHER TUCKER.

BOOKS, STATIONARY, &C.

THE subscribers, successors to E. PECK & Co. at the old stand, No 33 Carroll-street, Rochester, have now on hand the most complete stock of Books, in the various departments of Science, Literature and Art, ever offered to the citizens of the "Genesee Country." Among them are comprised most of the works ever required by the Attorney, Physician or Divine, to make up their Library, and all the School Books used in the Common and Classical Schools of the State. Town and Social Libraries furnished on the most liberal terms, and at very low prices. Any work not on hand furnished if to be found in the eastern cities, on short notice. They have also gone very extensively into the PAPER HANGING trade, and have now on hand a great assortment of Paper Hangings and Borders, of every description, from 30 cents to $1,25 cents per piece. In the variety, beauty and quality of this article, they stand unrivalled. Having a Book Bindery and Printing Office attached to their establishment, they are prepared to do Job Work in either of those branches of business in superior style. Their stock of stationary is very complete, comprising almost all things ever called for in that line. They have now on hand 500 reams super royal, medium, demy and royal Printing Paper, from some of the best manufactories in the state. Printers supplied with News Paper and News and Book Ink, of superior qualities, at low prices. Country Merchants supplied on the most liberal terms. The customers of the late firm of E. PECK & Co are particularly requested to call. Orders from abroad thankfully received and promptly attended to.

HOYT, PORTER & CO.

H., P. & Co., are agents for the North American Review, American Quarterly do., London Quarterly do., Edinburgh do. Westminster do. Christian Spectator, Biblical Repository, American Journal of Medicine, delivered in Rochester at subscription price

HOYT, PORTER & Co.

HAVING now completed their assortment of Books suited to the wants of the public, offer a catalogue of a few of the leading works in their extensive stock, all of which will be sold low. Among them are the following

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Geographys.—Hart's Geography & Atlas, Olney's, Woodbridge's, Cumming's, Worcester's, Malte Brun's, Peter Parley's, Cumming's, and Willett's.

Grammars.—Kirkham's, Murray's, Ingersoll's, Browne's, Smith's, Cardell's.

Arithmetics.—Smith's, Daboll's, Willett's, Emerson's, Colburn's, Filer's, Pikes, and Ostrander's.

Spelling Books.—Webster's Elementary, Webster's American, Sears', Cobb's, Marshall's, Mavor's, Murray's.

Reading Books.—Scott's Lessons, Historical Reader, English Reader, Introduction to English Reader, Sequal to English Reader, American First Class Book, Fierpont's Introduction to National Reader, Merriam's American Reader, National Orator, American Speaker, Barber's Elocutorist, Porter's Analysis of Rhetoric, Jack Halyard.

Classical Books.—Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary, Virgil Delphini, Gould's Virgil, Cooper's Virgil, Cæsar Delphini, Cicero Delphini, Justin Delphini, Horace Delphini, Graca Majora, Graca Minora, Davidson's Virgil, Adams Latin Grammar, Gould's Latin Grammar, Goodrich's Greek Grammar, Valpy's do., Buttman's do., Ovid Delphini, Authon's Horace, Stewart's Cicero, Dugdale's Horace, Hutchinson's Xenophen, Grove's Greek and English Lexicon, Pickering's do., Boyer's French Dictionary.

Mathematical Books.—Cambridge Mathematics, Hutton's Mathematics, Day's Algebra, Bonny Castle do., Byan's Algebra, Colburn's Algebra, Playfair's Euclid, Simpson's Euclid, Roche's Euclid, Gibson's Surveying, Art without Science by Eaton, Gummere's Surveying, Flint's Surveying, Bowditch on Navigation, &c. &c.

Miscellaneous School Books.—Blair's Rhetoric, Duncan's Logic, Watt's Logic, Hedge's do., Blake's Natural Philosophy, Comstock's do., Conversation on Chemistry, Ryan's astronomy, Wilkin's do., Ferguson's do., Watt's on the mind, Mason on Self Knowledge, Walker's Dictionary, Jameson's Rhetoric.

Histories.—Yale's Outlines of History, Goodrich's History of the United States, Hale's History of the United States, Wheipley's Compend, Tytler's Universal History, Butler's Compend

MISCELLANEOUS, HISTORICAL &c. suitable for Town Libraries.—Rollins' Ancient History, Josephus', Plutarch, Marshall's Life of Washington, Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, History of the Late War, Scott's Napoleon, Life of Charles 12th, Mary Queen of Scotts, Nelson, Byron, Pitkin's History of the United States, Encyclopedia Americana, Buck's Theological Dictionary, Arabian Nights, Spectator, Shakspeare, Waverly Novels, Cooper's Novels, Harper's Family Library, Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Hume's, Smollett and Bissett's England, Ferguson's Rome, Tacitus' Annals of Rome, Goldsmith's Works, Course of Time, all the Modern Novels, Lives, Franklin, Marion William Penn, American Biography, Scott's Poetical Works, Byron's do., Milton's, Pope's, Dryden's, Cowper's, Thompson's, Moore's, Shelly's, do, Morses' Revolution, Life Richard Henry Lee, Library of Entertaining Knowledge, Pike's Expedition, Denham and Clapperton's Travels in Africa, Flint's Recollections of the Mississippi, Miguet's French Revolution, Segur's Russian Campaign, Bein's French Wars, The Unique, &c. &c.

Religious.—Bibles of all descriptions, Watts', Dwight's, Methodist, Baptist, Village, Camp Meeting, Wincheil's and Worcester's Hymns, Hymns of Zion, Zion's Songster, and Rochester Selection, Dwight's Theology, Newton's Works, Wesley's Works, Wesley's Sermons, Dwight's Sermons, Davies', do., Saurin's do., Blair's do., Village do., Baxter's Call, Baxter's Saint Rest, Doddridge's Rise and Progress, Daily Bread Dew Drops, Newton on the Prophecies, Paley's Works, Dick's Christian Philosopher, Philosophy of Religion, and Philosophy of Future State, Boston on the covenants and Four Fold State, Wilson's evidence, Scott's Works, Cecil's Works, Jay's Closet Exercises, Common Prayers a complete assortment, Jay's Prayers, Cotterill's Prayers, Family do., Martyn's Memoirs Life Scott, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Huntington, Harriet Newell, Pliny Fisk, Jowett's Christian Researches, Stewart's voyage to the Pacific, Erskine on Errors of Religion, Erskine on the Truths of Religion, Edward's Works, Brown's Dictionary of the Bible, Cruden's Concordance, Brown's do Butterworth's do., Filer's Works, Magee on the Atonement, Scott's Commentary, Henry's do., Gill's do., Clark's do., Pulpit Assistant, Christian Library, Thomas A Kempis, Alexander's Evidences, Pilgrim's Progress, Watson's Theological institute.

Stationary.—Imperial, Royal, and Medium Printing Paper, Royal, Medium, Post, Demi, Letter and Cap Writing Paper, Quills, Fancy, Morocco, Embossed, Gold, and Silk Paper, Penknives, Everpointed Pencils, Pocket Books, Paint and Brushes, Blank Lines, Rice Paper, Bristol Board, Ink Stands, Sand Boxes, Ink, &c. &c.

Blank Books of all descriptions made in superior style. july 19.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield to Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829, recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 81 of mortgages at page 319, and on which there is due at the time of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to L. M. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number fifteen, and lot number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY,
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 84 of mortgages at page 352, executed by Adam Packer to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Gates in the county of Monroe and is lot No. fifty three, Township No. one, and distinguished on a map of Cornhill (a sub division of said lot No. 83) as lot number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA RISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBELL W. RILEY,
EVERARD PECK,
SELAH MATHEWS.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 84 mortgages at page 368, executed by Edward Father to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to L. M. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number fifteen, and lot number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY,
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 84 of mortgages at page 352, executed by Adam Packer to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents,—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Gates in the county of Monroe and is lot No. fifty three, Township No. one, and distinguished on a map of Cornhill (a sub division of said lot No. 83) as lot number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA RISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBELL W. RILEY,
SELAH MATHEWS.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

IN CHANCERY.

Francis Williams, Complainant,
vs.
Peter Brooks and Elizabeth his wife, Jared N. Stebbins, Charles Vernay, William Hall, George Graves, William Evans and Thomas Evans, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a court holden at the Court House in the village of Rochester on the 25th day of August, 1831, I shall offer at public Auction, to the highest bidder, on the 6th day of December next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in the village of Rochester, all the following described premises viz. "One certain house and lot lying situated in said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Walnut Alley, and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot deeded to the said Peter Brooks by Harmon Bissell, on the twentieth of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, in the Everard Peck purchase in Enos Street."

ASHLEY S AMSON,
Master in Chancery.

Rochester, Sept. 25, 1831. 8w35

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty eight, executed by George W. Faddock to Henry Champion and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber 8 of Mortgages at page 384 on the 15th day of September 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 30th day of June, the first publication of this notice, the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars and eight cents,—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the township number thirteen of the fourth range of townships in the county of Monroe, before the late division, now Monroe, and state of New York viz.—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows, viz.—East west, and south by the lines of said lot, and Northerly, by a line to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Smedley Esq.—including all buildings of any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Simeon H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at two o'clock in the afternoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June, 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

I. ADAMS, Att'y. 2t 24w.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } Albany, Sept. 1st
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } 1831.

SIR—I hereby give you notice, that at the next General Election, to be holden on the first Monday in November next, and the two succeeding days, a Senator is to be chosen in the 8th senate district, in the place of Timothy H. Porter, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next.

A. C. FLAGG, Secry of State.

To the Sheriff of the County of Monroe.

N. B. Members of Assembly, Sheriff and Clerk, are also to be chosen at the General Election.

☞ Proprietors of the different public newspapers in this county, will please to publish this notice once in each week, until after the Election, & forward their bills to the undersigned.

J. K. LIVINGSTON, *Sheri

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 43.

REPORT,

AND PROCEEDINGS OF

MONROE COUNTY S. S. UNION.

The Annual meeting of this Society was held agreeably to previous notice. It being the Anniversary of the birth day of the venerable Robert Raikes, the observance of which was recommended by the Am. S. S. Union; more than ordinary interest was felt. At an early hour the Court House was nearly filled. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Penney; after which appropriate remarks were made by the President (E. Pomeroy Esq.) showing some results of the Society's operations, alluding to the interesting circumstances under which we were assembled. The annual Report of the Society was then called for and read by the Secretary (Z. Freeman,) of which the following is a copy.

The Board of Managers of Monroe County Sabbath School Union would respectfully Report,

That at the time of their appointment last fall, the season had so far advanced, it was not thought advisable to make any particular efforts to establish new schools out of the village; but as far as possible assist in sustaining through the winter those already established.

Early last spring an effort was made to extend the influence of S. schools to every district in the county where it was practicable, and volunteer agents were appointed to carry this measure into effect. Although the Board have not the satisfaction to say with regard to every town "it is done" yet so far as they have been able to learn, the result of these labors has been peculiarly gratifying and promises to give an impulse to the cause which shall long be felt and which we pray may never cease till every child in the county shall feel the happy influence of S. S. instruction.

So far as reports have been received the following statistics will show the state of schools in the several towns.

BRIGHTON.—A town society was organized here last season which embraces 9 schools. District No. 2 has 14 teachers and 60 scholars—since September last, there have been 25 hopeful conversions—the school is now in a very flourishing state. District No. 6, has ten teachers and 35 scholars—10 hopeful conversions. District No. 1, has five teachers 15 scholars and four conversions. District No. 9, has four teachers, 15 scholars;—2 conversions. The district at Young Henrietta has seven teachers, 30 scholars, and a Bible Class of 12. School in King's neighborhood has 5 teachers—40 scholars and a Bible Class of 12,—12 conversions. School at Cobb's has 8 teachers, 38 scholars, and a Bible Class of ten, 2 hopeful conversions. School at Carriage in 15 scholars & 3 teachers—prospects somewhat discouraging. There is also a school at the Poor House of 16 scholars and 4 teachers. Making in all an average attendance of 57 teachers—250 children, and 56 conversions. Number of children between 5 & 15, including E. Rochester, according to the returns of the Commissioners of common schools last year, is 1772.

HENRIETTA—Reports six schools—10 male and 32 female teachers, and 204 scholars—14 hopeful conversions—volumes in library not known. A town society was organized last spring and prospects are more encouraging than at any time previous. No. of children between 5 and 16 is 764.

RUSH.—The Baptist school has 8 teachers and 20 scholars, and is quite flourishing. There have been a number of conversions. School at the village in other neighborhoods—six teachers and 15 scholars. There have been one or two other schools established, but have since or altogether declined. There is another school adjoining Avon of 5 teachers & 20 scholars. No. of children between 5 and 16 is 672.

MENDON.—A society was organized here early in April under very encouraging circumstances. Measures were immediately taken to establish schools, and so far as practicable secure the attendance of every child of suitable age in the town. This desirable object has been in part accomplished, and more children have been brought under Sabbath School influence, than in any preceding year. There are 2 schools under the direction of the Presbyterian society at East Mendon established in 1825 one at the village which is continued through the winter, and one two miles north, embracing 2 Superintendents, 2 assistants, 17 teachers and 81 children, with a library of 150 volumes: no. of conversions unknown. The Baptist Soc. has 4 schools, established in 1825, 2 of which had been discontinued through the winter, and 2 not regularly sustained for more than 2 years past. There are 4 Superintendents, 2 assistants, 35 teachers and 174 scholars, with 300 volumes in their libraries——teachers and scholars hopefully converted to the truth.

There is one school in connexion with the Congregational society, embracing 1 Superintendent, 8 teachers and 40 scholars with a library of 80 volumes. The Methodist Episcopal Society of West Mendon has 1 school established in 1826, not connected with this Union, which consists of 54 scholars under the direction of 1 Superintendent and 9 teachers, all of whom are professors of religion, 4 have recently become pious. They have a library valued at $20.

The Presbyterian society have 2 schools, 1 in the village, the other adjoining Rush, both in prosperous circumstances.—There are 95 scholars under the direction of 2 Superintendents and 14 teachers, nearly all of whom are hopefully pious. Their libraries are valued at $30. The Monthly Concert of prayer is observed here with increasing interest by both parents and teachers. It is also observed in East Mendon. The Christians have recently established a school of 4 teachers, and about 20 scholars, under favorable circumstances.

In view of the past year their report says that already do they see that it is not in vain that moral culture has been bestowed upon the children in their S. Schools and the most cheering encouragement is afforded for unceasing efforts in the good cause till the attendance of every child of suitable age is secured. In all they have 11 schools, 464 scholars, 14 Superintendents, and 80 teachers ——— professed religion, and 300 volumes (besides books to the amount of $50 not reported in volumes) in their libraries. No. children between 5 and 15 is 900.

PITTSFORD—Has 3 schools, one at the village connected with the Presbyterian society, embracing 89 scholars 15 teachers and 1 Superintendent—4 teachers and 7 scholars have professed religion. The other 2 schools are in the west part of the town and have 2 Sup'ndts 11 teachers and about 60 scholars: making 3 Superintendants, 26 teachers, and 149 scholars: 11 hopeful conversions. No. of children between 5 and 15—558.

PERRINTON—Reports 5 schools; 1 at Fairport of 35 scholars and 5 teachers; 2 teachers and 3 scholars have recently professed religion. The character of this school is increasingly interesting. District No. 8 has a school of 20 scholars 4 teachers and 75 volumes in the library; 1 teacher has become hopefully pious. District No. 4 has a school recently established of 20 scholars and 5 teachers. School at Elliot's Mills has 25 scholars instructed by 1 superintendant and 4 teachers and is increasingly interesting. The school at Bushnell's Basin has 20 scholars, 1 superintendent and 4 teachers; as yet but little interest excited in its support, although 2 teachers and 3 scholars have become hopeful converts to the truth: in all 5 schools, 120 scholars, 4 superintendents and 22 teachers; 5 teachers and 6 children have professed religion. These schools were established so late in the season that no great results could be expected. Prejudices, however, are gradually wearing away and the prospects for future usefulness very cheering. No. of children between 5 and 15—741.

PENFIELD—Has made no report; but so far as we have been able to collect facts the following are the statistics: 11 schools from 9 only have we information: in these are 340 scholars under the direction of 60 teachers & Superint's: 10 hopeful conversions. The schools have suffered considerably from the prevailing sickness among children, especially in the north part of the town. A new impulse has evidently been given to the cause of S. S. during the year, and it is hoped that it may be increasingly felt till the 1163 children of the town shall be brought under the influence of Sabbath School instruction.

GATES—Has six schools (not including any in the village) embracing 233 scholars and 28 teachers. A number of new schools have been established and some old ones revived.—The general prospects are encouraging. The number of conversions are not known. Including West Rochester there are 1187 Children between five and sixteen.

CHILI—Reports 6 schools, 43 teachers, 132 scholars, and 200 volumes in their libraries—26 teachers and 23 scholars have professed religion during the year. No. children between 5 and 15—668.

WHEATLAND—Reports have been received from 3 schools—one in the Baptist Society of 60 scholars, instructed by 13 teachers, with a library of 100 volumes—7 teachers and 6 children have become hopefully pious. Their report says a deeper interest has been felt and more permanent instruction given this than any previous year. School at Grant's mills has 5 teachers and 32 scholars—1 teacher has professed religion.—Central school reports 8 teachers and 30 scholars—5 hopeful conversions. The school is in a prosperous condition. No. of children between 5 and 15—559.

RIGA—From this town also no official report has been received, but the following statement is believed to be substantially correct: Their town society was reorganized last May, which now has 4 schools under its direction embracing 40 teachers and 135 scholars: most of these are quite flourishing.—5 scholars and 17 teachers are hopeful subjects of grace. No. of children between 5 and 15—524.

OGDEN—Reports 6 schools connected with the Congregational society, embracing 57 teachers, 293 scholars, and 300 volumes in their library—28 teachers and 57 scholars have become hopefully pious. One school in the Baptist society of 75 scholars, and 14 teachers, and 180 volumes in their library. No. of children between 5 and 16—691.

PARMA—Only one school has reported which is at the centre of the town and has 14 teachers and 72 scholars—4 have professed religion. Their library has 64 volumes. This school is continued through the winter. No. of children between 5 and 16—644.

GREECE—Has made no official report. There are 7 schools 5 of which are reported & embrace 159 scholars & 20 teachers. The school at the mouth of the river is in a prosperous state—has 59 scholars and 9 teachers. They have raised between 20 and 30 dollars for a library. No. of children between 5 and 16—635.

SWEDEN.—Three schools have reported. One at Sweden Centre has 65 scholars, 10 teachers and 80 volumes in their library. Five teachers have professed religion; one in the Baptist Society has 30 scholars, 6 teachers and 30 volumes in their library. The Methodist Episcopal school has 6 teachers, 24 scholars and 100 vol. of books—6 teachers and 5 scholars have hopefully embraced the Saviour.

CLARKSON—Reports 7 schools, 75 teachers and 287 children, and 280 volumes in their library—7 teachers have professed religion; two schools are continued through the winter. Their report says, most of these schools are very prosperous and opposition & prejudice are fast decreasing in every part of the town. No. of children between 5 and 16 is 993.

BROCKPORT VILLAGE—Has 3 schools; the one connected with the Methodist Society, has 12 teachers, 75 scholars and a library for teachers and scholars, of 225 volumes—ten hopeful conversions. The Congregational Society has 3 schools containing 145 scholars, 35 teachers and 250 volumes of S. S. books—ten hopeful conversions. The Baptist Society has one school, 12 teachers, 60 scholars and 66 volumes in their library—fifteen professed religion; two of these schools only, are continued through the winter.

ROCHESTER—1st Presbyterian Church has 2 schools, 69 teachers 441 scholars, average attendance 180; and a library of 250 volumes—36 teachers and 26 scholars have professed religion; and about 20 others are indulging hopes in the Saviour. The 2nd Church has 2 schools and an average attendance of 180 scholars and 52 teachers; their report says, that during the year, they have experienced a glorious refreshing from the presence of the Lord—twenty eight teachers (embracing every teacher in school who had not previously professed religion) and 16 scholars have as we trust felt the power of regenerating grace. Our library of more than 200 volumes, has been by a vote of the children, given to destitute schools in the country.—" 3rd Church reports one school, 47 teachers, 307 scholars and a library of 160 volumes—7 teachers and 76 children have hopefully embraced the Saviour. The state of the school is now quite interesting, a number of recent conversions, and a number are anxious. The Secretary of Baptist S. S. Society says, "that with in the last year our schools have increased very considerably in numbers and in mental and spiritual improvement and blessed be the name of our glorious Redeemer, 50 children and 22 teachers at the church, and 15 at the other school are rejoicing in hope of a blissful immortality of the just. The average attendance of scholars has been 232 and 54 teachers—whole number 400 scholars and 68 teachers—225 volumes in the library.

AFRICAN SCHOOL—Has 50 scholars and 15 teachers; one hopeful conversion—the average attendance is about 30; there is a small library connected with the school; all these schools are continued through the winter: making in Rochester 8 schools connected with the Union, embracing 1378 scholars, 259 teachers and 295 cases of hopeful conversion—And in the County, from a review of these statistics, we find 103 schools 955 teachers, 4899 children enjoying Sabbath school instruction; and 619 teachers and scholars who have become hopeful subjects of renewing grace during the past year—Only 24 schools are reported as having been continued thro' the winter.

Besides this number embraced in the Union's Report, we have been favored with the following statements from schools connected with other Unions; viz.; In Rochester, St. Luke's Church reports 3 schools 45 teachers, 230 scholars and 250 volumes in their library. St. Paul's Ch. has 1 school embracing 22 teachers and 150 children, and a library of 200 volumes—three teachers have professed religion. The Methodist Episcopal church has 1 school, 109 scholars 26 teachers, average attendance, 80. Seven teachers and 65 children have professed a hope in Christ. Making the total for Rochester, 18 schools, 356 teachers and Superintendents, 1827 scholars 370 hopeful conversions among teachers and children with 1185 volumes of S. S. books, and 11 schools continued through the winter. And for the County, 111 schools (28 kept up during the winter.) 1076 teachers and Superintendents, 5323 children, and 733 teachers and children who profess to have passed from death unto life.

According to the returns of the Commissioners of common schools last year there are in this county between the ages of 5 and 15, 14131 children, which would leave 8818 destitute of that salutary system of instruction, which in connexion with our common schools, is laying the broad foundation for the perpetuity of our Free Institutions, and which, during the past year has been a savour of eternal life to some hundreds of precious souls.

In reviewing the history of the past year, the Board feel constrained to call upon every Christian and Patriot for devout gratitude to Almighty God, for the distinguished manifestations of divine favor and mercy that have attended the efforts of the active friends of this cause, and ardently desire those who have hitherto been inactive, to co-operate with us in diffusing the blessings of Sabbath school instruction, till every child in the County of Monroe shall be snatched from the grasp of vice, intemperance and consequent misery, and our whole rising population be redeemed from the power of sin, and made alive in the service of God.

The Board would here urge upon teachers and the friends of the cause, the necessity of more vigorous efforts to sustain their schools through the winter. In almost every instance when persevering efforts have been made to continue schools during the winter, they have succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectation, and in many cases, the attendance has been better than in the summer. The Board would also recommend the formation of town societies auxiliary to the county Union in every town where they are not already organized, & would especially require the officers of such associations promptly to forward a full report of all the schools in their town to the Sec'y of this Union, which would prevent the delay and imperfection which necessarily attends this report. It is with satisfaction the Managers have learnt that the M. Concert of prayer for S. S., is regularly observed by some of the friends of the Institution, in several towns, and a collection taken up for Sunday school missions; but they have to regret that its importance is not more deeply and generally felt by those who profess to be the friends of Christ, and believe in the efficacy of prayer. It is earnestly recommended that this concert be established in every town either unitedly, or in the several congregations, as shall best promote the general interest. It is also hoped that the important subject, Temperance, will find a prominent place in the system of instruction. Here "the axe is laid at the root of the tree," and such an influence may be exerted upon the tender mind as will rescue many an unwary youth from the grasp of this destroyer, and be felt for generations yet to come.

ON MOTION of Mr. J. H. Thompson of the 2nd Presbyterian Church, seconded by Rev. Dr. Penney, of the 1st Chh. accompanied by some very appropriate remarks; It was Resolved that the report just read, be accepted and published.

On motion of Mr. O. N. Bush of the 3d Presbyterian Church seconded by Rev. Mr. Clark, of Troy, in a train of interesting and impressive remarks, it was

RESOLVED—That the Divine favor manifested to the Sabbath schools in this county the past year, affords the most cheering encouragement to perseverance, and unceasing effort to advance this glorious work until there shall not be an unconverted child, an unbelieving teacher or an opposing bigot.

On motion of Mr. F. Starr, seconded by Mr. C. J. Hill, it was RESOLVED—That the efforts and success of the Am. S. S. Union demand our gratitude our prayers and more efficient co-operation.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Met agreeable to adjournment. Prayer by Rev. O. C. Comstock.

On motion of Rev. O. C. Comstock of the Baptist Church, seconded by Rev. Mr. Wisner of the 2d Presbyterian Church, it was

RESOLVED—That while a La Fayette has by his pure and generous patriotism called forth the admiration of nations: We are this day called upon to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the man who was permitted first to introduce a system which, with the blessing of God, is designed to convert a world and send a thrill of joy through Heaven.

On motion of J. H. Thompson seconded by Mr. Ingersol of Ogden it was RESOLVED—That this meeting recommend to every town in this County the propriety of giving to every regular Sabbath school scholar a New Testament on their giving a pledge of continuing in the school.

On motion of Mr. Z. Freeman, seconded by Mr. Ingersol, it was

RESOLVED—That the volunteer agency, appointed last spring for town visitation, be re-appointed until the semi-annual meeting of the Board next spring, with instructions to visit their respective towns as often as possible & assist in sustaining through the winter as many schools as shall be found practicable, and that the Board fill any vacancies that may occur in this agency.

Proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. After balloting, the following were found duly elected, viz:

E. POMEROY, Esq.,	Rochester,	President.
C. CHURCH,	Ogden,	V. President.
Z. FREEMAN,	Rochester,	Secretary.
M. STRONG,	do.	Treasurer.

Adjourned without day.

Z. FREEMAN, Secretary.

E. POMEROY, Esq., President.

Opinions of Politicians

RESPECTING SABBATH SCHOOLS.

At the great Sunday School Meeting which took place at the city of Washington last February, which was attended by many of the most distinguished Members of Congress of all political parties, a mass of testimony in favor of this invaluable institution was afforded by the speeches delivered on that occasion which ought forever to shield it from the base insinuations which have been thrown out against it by the enemies of religion.

Among those who addressed the meeting and bore the most unqualified testimony in favor of Sabbath School instruction in forming our national character, in giving stability to our national institutions, and in perpetuating the blessings of our Republican government, were Francis S. Key, Esq. of Georgetown, D. C.—Felix Grundy, of the U. States Senate, from Tennessee—Hon. Wm. Wirt late Att'y General of the U. States—Hon. Mr. Whittlesey, member of Congress from Ohio—Hon. J. H. Crane, member of Congress of the same state—Hon. Nicholas D. Coleman, member of Congress from Kentucky—Hon. Chas. E. Haynes, member of Congress from Georgia—Hon. Mr. Frelinghuysen, of the U. States Senate, from N. Jersey—Mr. Wickliffe, member of Congress from Kentucky—Hon. Danl. Webster of the U. States Senate, from Massachusetts, and Walter Lowrie Esq., Secretary of the Senate of the U. States.

MR. FRELINGHUYSEN said:—

"Mr. Chairman, if farther proof were needed, we might find it in the history of all the profane. Take any convict of your penitentiary, and his brief and sad biography would form an appropriate history for the great majority of his fellows in crime: ask him sir, what it was that brought him to his wretched dwelling place, and he must reply; "I was trained up for it. I early broke away from the restraints of conscience. I had no friend to instruct me, or I despised his counsels.

"No Mother's tender care,
Shielded my infant innocence with prayer."

From a youth, I have defied my maker. I thought it manly to blaspheme his sacred name. I made a mock at sin, entered the broad way of trasgression, and disregarded the beacon lights, that warned me of my danger. Such has been my training, and here I reap its bitter fruits; I ought not to be disappointed. For from such a childhood and youth who could expect other than such a doom! Let us then, Sir, assiduously cultivate these moral influences."

MR. WEBSTER:—

"Most great conceptions were simple. The present age had struck out two or three ideas, on the important subject of education, and the diffusion of religious knowledge, pertaining, in a very high degree, of this character. They were simple; but their application was extensive, direct, and efficacious. Of these, the leading one, perhaps, was the distribution of the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment; an idea, not only full of piety, and duty, and of candor also; but strictly just and philosophical; since the knowledge of the general truth must, of necessity, be communicated, before there can exist a capacity to examine and decide on those different views and inferences, embraced by Christians of various denominations and various opinions.

"The object of Sunday Schools, and of the particular resolution now before the meeting, was as he understood it, of similar large and liberal character. It was to diffuse the elements of knowledge, and to teach the great truths of Revelation. It was to improve, to the highest of all purposes, the leisure of the Sabbath; to render its rest sacred, by thoughts turned towards the Deity, and aspiring to a knowledge of his word and will."

MR. WICKLIFFE:—

"I can well remember, Sir, when to the children of the villages in the west, that day, from which this institution takes its name, was the day of mischief and vice. It is now otherwise in those places in our native state where Sunday schools have become objects of interest and advantage to all. It is gratifying to witness the interesting scenes at one of those schools.—Children, instead of a desire to engage in mischevous idleness are ambitious to appear first and best at the place where practical, moral and religious truths are instilled into their youthful minds, by the gratuitous agency of some moral or pious instructor.

"Sir, it is no objection with me to this institution, that it proposes to make the rising generation acquainted with the principles of the christian religion, and the truths of the Bible. No community thus instructed can be otherwise than free and happy. A people ignorant of these blessings cannot long enjoy civil liberty; they must sooner or later become the slaves of power, and victims of oppression."

MR. HAYNES:—

"If it be true, Sir, that virtue and intelligence are the especial safeguards of republican government, and if it be true that first impressions are last impressions, (and who can doubt it!) how great then the importance of imbuing the minds of our children with the knowledge of the true God, in the revelation of his Son. But, Sir, aside from duty to our own posterity, there is another consideration of peculiar and universal obligation. On this country more than on any other, in the providence of God, has been cast the solemn charge of preserving and perpetuating christian knowledge, and the principles of free government. If our country in its march to liberty and independence, was not guided by the pillar of cloud and of fire, as the chosen people of old, yet, in looking through the events of the Revolutionary contest, its path seems to have been alternately shadowed by the one and enlightened by the other. But I do not intend to go into a general inquiry into the merits of the undertaking, the promotion of which has called us together on this interesting occasion. It is only my purpose to express for its objects, my entire approbation and to ask that the resolution may be adopted."

MR. KEY:—

"To confine myself within proper limits, I must give but a slight sketch of its advantages. It proposes to supply the means of education, of a most useful and important character, to all the children of a great and growing country. It provides teachers and books—teachers, whose only motive and object is to do good—and books that can have no other tendancy.—They are made familiar with the Bible—a book that even infidels have admired, and all admit, is the greatest moral work in the world. They have other books collected in little libraries, in the schools, for their use; written by judicious and pious men suited to their tastes and ages, and calculated to improve their hearts and understandings.

"The whole population of the country included in the resolution of the Union, exceeds four millions—of these, it is estimated that one million are children of a proper age for instruction, and one third of these, it is supposed, are destitute of any means of education. Upwards of three hundred thousand children therefore are to be the immediate recipients of these benefits. Nor is this all—when taught, they will become teachers. A society thus favored, can never be so insensible to their advantages as to lose them, and the blessings of instruction will be handed down from generation to generation."

A CHILD'S NOTION OF INSPIRATION.

Just after entering the school a few Sabbaths since, a little boy about six years of age, came and asked me for the charity box. I inquired what he wanted with it. "I want to put a half-penny into it," said he. To examine his motives and his knowledge of divine things, more particularly, I asked him what good he supposed it would do to put his money into the charity box. "I want to send it to the heathen," he replied. "Do you know" said I "who the heathen are?" "They are folks who haven't got any Bible and live a great way off." "What is the Bible?" "The word of God." "What use would it be to the heathen, if they had it?" "It would tell them how to love God and be good." "Where did the Bible come from?" "From heaven." "Was it written in heaven?" No; the prophets and good men wrote it." If good men wrote it, how then is it the word of God, and come from heaven?" "Why, the Holy Ghost told them how to write it." "Did they see the Holy Ghost, and did he speak to them?" "No; but he made them think it." This was enough. I presented him the charity box, he dropped in his money; a smile of joy glowed upon his countenance; and he returned to his seat, filled with "the luxury of doing good."—American S. S. Visitant.

INFANT SCHOOL FACTS.

"Faith—the evidence of things not seen."—In the course of some brief oral instructions on the history of the flood, the teacher remarked that sea shells had been found on the tops of the highest mountains, which was proof that the land had been entirely covered with water. A little boy instantly said—"God says so—and that is proof enough." It was not in vain that his listening ear had heard the testimony of Moses and Peter as witness for God.

Sick bed Reflections.—A little girl who was sick at home, said to her mother, "I wish there was no sin in the world." Why do you wish that?" asked her mother. The little one replied, because I should not be sick if there was no sin; for sin brought sickness and death into the world."

A young Millenarian.—One of the little boys of an infant school who had heard at home some conversation on the subject of the Millennium, took the first opportunity of saying to his teacher, "What is the Millennium? I heard some one say it would begin in 1836." The teacher converted on the subject, and took occasion to remark on the blessing of peace, and said that would prevail, should there be a general extension of christian spirit in the world. This little boy, eagerly and interestedly inquired, "Will the Poles and Russians fight then, when the Millennium day is come.

Rational Confession, without Philosophy.—A teacher, speaking of the existence of the Deity, remarked—"There are those who say there is no God." The following dialogue then took place between some of the scholars; a little boy said, "he did not care how they could believe that, for if they only looked at themselves they must believe that some body made them." Another replied, "Oh! they might say man made us." "But," said another, "who made the first man? Indeed none but God could make us out of a piece of dirt!"

Grammarians.—A little boy of five years old was sick: he said to his father attending him—"Please, father, place my pillow right." His father attempted to do so, but did not suit him; when our little scholar notwithstanding his sickness, smartly said—"Oh! I want it in a right line." While at school the teacher was speaking of the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, a little boy asked—"Did they go down on an inclined plane?" Doubtless having in mind the natural descent of the shores of a river.

Little Grammarians.—During some exercises on Grammar, the children were desired to compare the word material—one said, "How can that be compared?—if any thing is material can it be more material?" Another said—"If round could be compared, then round as would only be round."—Bolder's Messenger.

SLAVERY.

Our readers can form no conception of the panic which is felt in the Slave States on account of the late insurrection in Virginia. We give the following articles which we copy from the "Liberator," the fearless advocate of emancipation. The Editor of that paper takes the correct ground—that is that all men have an inalienable right to their liberty, therefore to deprive any portion of them of it on account of color, or any other cause which is not in accordance with love to our neighbor, is oppression. Mr. Garrison has repeatedly received threats from the south that if he continued to advocate the cause of African liberty, his life would be in danger, and we acknowledge that we should not be surprised at any time to learn that his life had paid the forfeit of his fearless intrepidity in the cause of oppressed humanity.

The following articles will give our readers some idea of the warfare which is carried on between the Liberator and the Southern papers.

From the Liberator.

A VOICE FROM ROCHESTER.

A large number of the colored citizens of Rochester having convened themselves together, for the important object of taking into consideration the anti-republican principles of the American Colonization Society, the Rev. Mr. Johnson was called to the Chair, and Mr. A. Lawrence was appointed Secretary. The meeting was then briefly addressed by the Secretary, as follows:

Countrymen and Brethren—When viewing the inhumanity and anti-christian principles of the American Colonization Society, in plotting our removal to Africa, (which is unknown to us as our native country,) it seems as though we were called upon publicly to express our feelings on the subject. We do not consider Africa to be our home, any more than the present whites do England, Scotland or Ireland. This is the land our fathers have tilled before us; this is the land that gave us our birthright.

The meeting then Resolved, That we never will remove to Africa: but should any of our brethren wish to emigrate, we would recommend Canada as a country far more congenial to our constitutions;—that we give our most sincere thanks to our friend y advocates Messrs. Garrison & Knapp and Mr. Benjamin Lundy, who are crying unto their fellow men, night and day, to let their countrymen go free; they will be called blessed by many generations yet to come. The Colonization Society say that they cannot treat us as men while we are with them: but if we will go out of their reach, they will beg in their charity. What should we think of such religion as this! Because our skin is a little darker than theirs, they say they cannot think of treating us as men. The scripture says, 'Beware of wolves in sheep's clathing'—and such they seem to be. We earnestly believe, with our generous friend Garrison, that it would not be a hard matter to exceed them in doing right. Our blessed Lord said, that we should do to all men as we would have them do to us. Now what would they think, if we should tell them that they would be better off in N. Holland or in Tartary?

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

Resolved, That we will do all in our power to support the Liberator, printed by Mr. Garrison, and all other works in our behalf.

Resolved, That the foregoing proceedings be published in the Liberator. Signed,

HENRY JOHNSON, Chairman.

A. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

From the Liberator.

"A Citizen of Seaford," in the Delaware National Republican, gives a most ludicrous account of the rumored insurrection in that State. After minutely detailing the particulars of the panic, he reveals the cause of it as follows:

'As soon as it was known that there was little or no cause of all the ado, a messenger was sent out to correct the despatch boy's statement; but the panic was so great, many would not believe, and our town was soon thronged to a considerable degree with armed men, and enquirers after the certain news, from different directions. The negroes who belong to the place, at the request of the whites, had volunteered themselves as artillery men. But hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Five young men took it into their heads on Tuesday, with the consent of their parents, to go a rabbit-hunting. They made some noise in the woods, hallowed to their dogs, and fired off several guns. The women in the neighborhood took fright, the men being chiefly at the election some distance off, and ran screaming towards the river, each supposing murderous deeds had been committed on their neighbors, and all anxious to escape the fearful slaughter. One of the hunters heard something of the alarm, and thinking some negroes had started from the forest and murdered his neighbors, came to Seaford, and, in course of enquiry, the whole matter came out. The magistrate issued and sent for the company of huntsmen, and upon investigation, all parties together, the true causes were ascertained. No charge of bad intention or design is attributed to any one. All seem to be innocent—all satisfied—and now all is tranquil. The people are now better satisfied than before, that the negroes of Delaware are not disposed to insurrection or hostilities; and hat if they were, such are the resolution and intrepidity of the citizens, that present death would necessarily follow such an attempt.'

☞ Information Wanted.—The Hon. Robert Y. Hayne, of Columbia, S. C., (through the mediam of a letter,) wishes to know of the Mayor of Boston who sent a number of the Liberator to him, a few weeks ago? The Mayor of Boston (through the medium of a deputy) wishes to know of Mr. Garrison whether he sent the aforesaid number to the aforesaid individual? Mr. Garrison (through the medium of his paper) wishes to know of the Hon. Robert Y. Hayne of Columbia S. C. and the Mayor of Boston, what authority they have to put such questions?

☞ We have received a letter from Petersburg, Va. containing the figure of a slavite, (cut from the vignette of the Liberator,) with a thread tied about his throat, signifying that somebody is to be hung—probably the author of the letter.—We cannot compassionate his fate. He ought first, however, to be scourged by a slave, for defrauding Uncle Sam of fifty cents.—Liberator.

The extravagances to which our Southern bretiren are proceeding is quite amusing, as well as reprehensible. We are told by a North Carolina paper, that Garrison and Knapp, the two indiscreet Editors of the Liberator printed in Boston, have been indicted by a North Carolina Jury, for sending that paper to the sovereign State of North Carolina, and that the Governor will demand Garrison and Knapp to be delivered up by Gov. Lincoln, for them to "fine, whip and hang," the punishment which North Carolina imposes for circulating the Liberator. The next step will be to pass a law to hang all the Editors north of the Potomac, who do not advocate slavery and free trade, and our Governors will be civilly requested to deliver up the offenders.—Whenever Garrison and Knapp offend against the laws of Massachusetts, they will be punished; and when the Southern Governors will hang all their citizens who send us free blacks, we may hang ours for writing against slavery.—Microcosm.

REAPING IN HEAVEN.

The Rev. Mr. Kirk, of Albany, preaching on the duty of perseverance in well doing, made the following striking illustration:—

A Sunday School teacher in England going to his class, saw a little ragged boy by the way-side, and carried him to his school and endeavored to interest him in religious instruction. The levity of the child's mind, his wandering eyes, and seemingly irreclaimable habits of inattention, render this an apparently hopeless task. Sunday after Sunday, unavailing attempts were made to interest the mind of this body. The words of truth and soberness made no impression, and a season of deep discouragement succeeds in the teacher's mind, in regard to the little fellow, who seems so far removed from the influences that affect most minds. The teacher about to give him up as one on whom all his strength and time is wasted and thrown away, bears his case to the throne of mercy, and there, almost without hope, resolves to persevere a little longer. In a short time, the teacher thinks he discovers a small ray of hope—a little softening on the surface of the boy's heart. Soon the tear starts and rolls down his cheek—and at last the extorted cry breaks from his heaving bosom, "What shall I do to be saved!" The teacher takes him apart and points him away to Jesus. He sees by the eye of faith, as it were, the Holy Ghost coming down in baptismal power upon the soul of this little fellow: renovating him, soul, and spirit, and faculties, and filling him with strange joys, new hopes, and purposes. He leaves the school. The teacher loses sight of his pupil for a season.

By and by a young man finds his way into the heart of China, and commences the translation of the Holy Scriptures into a language spoken by the darkened millions of that vast empire.—His labors attract the attention of the Christian world. What is this teacher's surprise and joy to find that this same man was once the little subject of his discouraged efforts and almost hopeless prayers!

The teacher dies—and in Heaven sees a poor Chinese come home to glory. He asks, with wonder, "How did you find your way here?" The redeemed pagan answers, "one of Morrison's bibles taught me the way of eternal life." Others follow from China. They are the souls saved through the instrumentality of Morrison—and Morrison was the little Sabbath scholar! Oh! now that teacher is reaping his harvest. As years roll away, his harvest comes in more. Oh, what a harvest he is reaping.—Badger's Weekly Messenger.

TRUST IN GOD.—Five natives of one of the South Sea Islands, in a small canoe, in going in the night, from one island to another, were driven utterly beyond their reckoning. For six weeks they were floating, they knew not whither, in a fathomless and pathless ocean. Yet their faith never failed. When asked, if, in their forlorn situation, they did not expect to perish of famine, or be drowned in the ocean, they replied, "Oh, no; for we prayed to God!" When first carried away they had with them a quantity of pine apples, cocoa-nuts, bananas, a little water, and two bamboos (about a gallon and a half) of cocoa-nut oil. On these, by taking only a small portion twice a day, they subsisted five weeks, when the solid food, being all exhausted, and every drop of water long ago spent, they kept life in them by dipping a few fibres of the cocoa-nut husk in to extort the slight nourishment, and moisten their mouths, parched with tormenting thirst. Thus, morning, noon, and night, as long as they were able, they worked at the oars, prayed and sang; they read the Scriptures as the daily bread of their souls, and duly remembered the Sabbaths. It is very affecting to hear one of them say how, amidst the roaring of the sea, they sang till their "voices went away." Yes truly, but it was "into heaven', that their voices went away. Their prayers of faith, and their songs of thanksgiving, were heard before the throne, even when their lips had no longer power to utter them, and they were answered by deliverance. At the end of six weeks they were drifted, by the millions of waves on which they had been borne, to a place near the island of Atui, (one of the Harvey islands,) when some of the natives found them, worn to skeletons with hunger, and strengthless with fatigue, but "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation." By these they were fed and nursed, and as soon as they could bear it, removed to Atui, where they gradually recovered health, and afterwards preached the gospel with such power, that the remaining half of the population, till then unconverted, believed and cast away their idols.—Conn. Obs.

From the Am. Tract Magazine.

AN AGED BAPTIST ELDER,

IN ONE OF OUR NEW SETTLEMENTS.

An agent of the American Tract Society in Chautauque Co., N. Y. states that a meeting was convened at a private house in a town which is very new and poor, when, after laying before them the nature and claim of the Tract cause, an aged Baptist elder arose, and with eyes filled with tears, spoke as follows.

"My dear friends and neighbors, I know and feel that this object is important. I know that these messengers of mercy and salvation have been the means in the hands of God, of the conversion of thousands; and I would rejoice in sending them to every family in this town, that at every fireside they might tell the story of redeeming love. But what can we do! We are poor! What can I do! I am poor! I am in debt! I must be honest before I am liberal. If I have a sixpence in my pocket more than will buy my daily bread, I should give that sixpence to my creditors, who have waited long with me. But while I have been sitting here, hearing of Tracts and the blessing of God upon them, I have been thinking how I could help on this good cause, and not injure my creditors; and I have at length thought of the plan. I will go home to-night and go to bed without my supper, and will do the same to-morrow night; this will enable me to give 25 cents for Tracts. O my friends, let us all do this, and we can send the Gospel to every family in this town; and then we can with confidence lift up our hearts to God for his blessing on the labor of our hands."

After this, says the agent, wa formed a Society; nearly all in the house joined, young and old; about $6 was subscribed; and our aged Baptist elder was unanimously elected President.

From the Am. Pastor's Journal.

A FRAGMENT.

From a Missionary's account of his labors.

Our meeting was in a grove. To this spot came one whom we shall always remember. He was an infidel, who had long neglected public worship, and despised the people and ordinances of God. As he kept a public house, directly opposite the church, it became noted for the gathering together, on the Lord's day, of those who fear not God, nor regard men. He felt bitter against this meeting, and opposed the attendance of his wife.—He remarked in scorn, "I will wait till Sabbath, when they will be red hot, and then I will go and take a welding." Accordingly he made his appearance in the grove, and heard a heart searching discourse from the text, "Behold ye despisers, and wonder and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." It took effect. The Holy Ghost pierced him with the truth. He came, a wounded and distressed sinner, among those who were anxious, crying, 'What shall I do to be saved?' This day was glorious for the letting down of an Almighty arm, for the salvation of lost man. One hundred and fifty came to the anxious seats, in the morning, and two hundred in the afternoon. This convicted infidel was converted the next day; and the day after, he excluded all ardent spirits from his bar.

THE PILGRIMS NOT PERSECUTORS.

None of the persecutions practised on our early brethren are chargeable upon the pilgrims or their government. They are not responsible for the excesses and cruelties practised by adventurers who followed them. At this distant period, those acts are not unfrequently alluded to, as errors of the "Pilgrim Fathers," than which nothing can be farther from the fact. The records of the Plymouth colony are not stained with acts of persecution, during the period of her existence as a separate government. The influence of her more powerful and relentless neighbor, Massachusetts, who eventually swallowed up the Plymouth government, sometimes induced her to arrest some of the Baptists. But when it was ascertained that they were guilty of nothing but worshipping God according to their own peculiar belief, they were generally set at liberty. The Baptist church at Swansea, in Plymouth colony, was fully tolerated by the Pilgrims, whose religious creed was essentially different from that of the persons who came over after them, and settled the Massachussetts colony.—N. E. Bap. Reg.

INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

Extracted from the Fifth Report of the Boston Society for the Moral Instruction of the Poor.

Wherever religion has spread her banners and enrolled her armies, order, discipline and efficiency have characterized her followers. We need not to go to other countries for proof. Our own exhibits it. Let a single instance suffice. A man had been a notorious Sabbath-breaker. He was often met on that day, ragged and barefoot, accompanied with one or two of his children in a similar condition, strolling with a gun or fishing pole to his accustomed employment of the day. His house was the picture of wretchedness. After the lapse of a few years, a gentleman in the town where he lived, noticed on the Sabbath morning a decent waggon proceeding to church with a well dressed family. He thought he knew the driver, who appeared to be the head of the family, and accosted him by name. He did not make out the identity, and inquired if he had not moved into town. "Yes, sir," was the reply, "I have moved from the house of correction." He had been a sabbath breaker and idler. He had become a religious man, and his appearance evinced, while his tongue confessed it. His house was found to exhibit economy and industry. Its windows, which were once stuffed with rags, were now glazed. His children attended the Sabbath school. He was himself respectful, clean, and thriving—at peace in his own mind, and living peaceably with his neighbors. Such are some of the trophies of religion—showing herself, as indeed she is, profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

TRACT SOCIETIES.

The first Tract Society, organized for the purpose of promoting Christian knowledge, was incorporated in England in 1647. In 1823, this society had issued 1,400,711 books, tracts, and other small pamphlets.

The London Religious Tract Society was formed about the year 1797. Mrs. Hannah More and her friends commenced the publication of the Tracts of the Cheap Repository.—Rev. George Burder & Rev. Samuel Greatheed seeing the moral influence of these pamphlets upon Society, and soon put into circulation a great number called Village Tracts. Upon the suggestion of Mr. Burder several friends of religion united with him in forming a religious Tract Society, in which all denominations might unite. The influence and interest of infidels being combined to circulate infidel publications, which had a mighty effect upon the lower class of community, for in less than ten months, 300,000 were distributed. They in 1805 issued a distinct series of Tracts, adapted to counteract the mischievous tendency of those profane and immoral books. In 1814, this evangelical society published a sheet to be put up in colleges, public houses, ships &c. They have published a number for children, a Tract Magazine, Child's companion, &c. In 15 years, they put into circulation 111,862,970 tracts. In 5 years, 60,000 books and tracts, have been printed in Italian, modern Greek, Armenian and other languages, and circulated in the countries around the Mediterranean Sea.

The London Tract and other societies have caused to be circulated immense numbers of Tracts, in Sangapore, Java, Calcutta, Serampore, Benares, Surat, Bombay, Bellery, Madras and Jaffina, besides many places in the Islands of the Pacific, and in Southern and West'n Africa. They have also been circulated in Spanish America, Poland, Saxony, Norway, Denmark, Hamburg, France, Lausane, in England 600,000, and in Ireland 118,000 have been gratuitously distributed.

The first Tract Society in the United States was formed in Boston, in 1803, at the suggestion of Hon. Samuel Philips and professor Tappan. In 1815, this society printed 8225 books, and 30,350 tracts. In 1807, the Connecticut Religious Tract Society was instituted at New-Haven. It published a series of 26 tracts. In 1808, the Vermont Religious Tract Society was formed. In 1810, the Protestant Episcopal Tract Society at New-York was formed, and in 1815, the New-York Religious Tract Society; which has in 12 years, published 1,561,744 tracts—but is now united with the American Tract Society. The Religious Tract Society in Philadelphia was formed in 1815, and merged in the American Sabbath School Union in 1824, when it had published 750,000 tracts. The Religious Tract Society of Baltimore was formed in 1815, and in 9 years distributed 330,000 tracts. The New-York Methodist Tract Society was instituted in 1817. The New-England Tract Society, now the American Tract Society, has received into its treasury from 1814 to 1829, $90,223—expended, $101,662—published 6,472,515 copies, amounting to 20,083,896 pages. In 1825 the N. E. Tract Society at Boston, became Auxiliary to the American Tract Society at New-York. Since this union, the Society has received into its treasury $145,891, and expended $179,754, and put into circulation 128,038,778 pages. There are 630 Auxiliary societies.—Quarterly Journal.

HOTTENTOT DINNER.

The word Hottentot was not long since synonymous with all that is stupid and filthy. What a delightful contrast to the stories we used to hear, have we in the following picture! It is an account, by a French Missionary, of a dinner given by the Hottentots to the Rev. Dr. Philip, Missionary of the London Society, as an expression of gratitude for his exertions in behalf of their liberties.—Bos. Rec.

The School-house alone was large enough to contain all the guests; who, if we include the children, amounted to about 250. At 3 in the afternoon, the bell announced that all was ready; and at this signal, we directed our steps toward the school.

The first thing that struck me, on entering the room, was two long tables, one with eighty dishes, the other with forty, containing different kinds of meat and vegetables, all dressed in the English manner. That which next drew our attention was the clothes of the Hottentots, which were much better made than those of our peasants in France. The cleanliness of those who waited at table, the good quality of the different meats which were served, and the harmless gaiety which the repast inspired, were well calculated to remove the repugnance which is felt in Europe, when we speak of dining with Hottentots. But what struck us more than all, was the promptitude and skillfulness of the boys and girls who waited at table, whether they changed the plates, handed the bread, poured out the beverage, or helped the dishes; they ran, crossed, passed, and repassed one another, and acquitted themselves with as much dexterity as the waiters at the hotels of London or Paris.

You will perhaps think, after all I have told you of this dinner, that we were entirely occupied with our Hottentots in eating and drinking; but you mistake; for at the same time a scene was passing before us which raised our thoughts above material things. We had scarcely begun dinner, when thirty young girls entered, decked in their holiday dress, and placed themselves on a little gallery at the end of the room; they soon began to sing in chorus, English and Dutch hymns. Nothing could be more sweet and melodious than their voices, for the Hottentots are naturally musicians. I have heard children of four or five years old, sing different accompaniments perfectly; and they have, in general, so decided a taste for music, that they will sing a whole day without fatigue. When the young girls had ceased, all the assembly sang a hymn of thanks.

Soon after, the little children of the Infant School entered and ranged themselves in a circle in the midst of the room, and commenced their exercises under the conduct of a little monitor. Arithmetic, the principles of reading, geometry, mechanical arts, &c., all was executed singing: their motions were appropriate to the words, and the most perfect measure and harmony were observed. Constraint is never employed in this school, and the infants never feel that dislike which is generally seen in children when at their lessons. They go to school with joy, and at their own free will; even the youngest, forgetting the bosom of their mothers, cry to go, and join their companions; and their little companions, not contented with what they have done during their lessons, they cheer the village with their songs, and repeat every where what they have learned. Dr. Philip, addressing himself to the parents of the children who were present, said—"Let the fathers who do not love their children visit this school; their hearts will then melt, and they will be constrained to love them. Let the mothers who feel no tenderness for them, and who know not how to make them obey but with the rod, come here, and they will learn that neither the rod nor constraint is necessary." Many shed tears; and this sight, joined to that of the children before us, presented the most interesting and touching scene.

And what has raised these degraded Hottentots to their present condition?—Christian benevolence and christian enterprize. Yes, the men who are represented as having evil desires upon their fellows—as engaging in these missionary enterprizes for the sake of honor. Look at this inviting field—what a harvest of pleasure and honor the country of the Hottentots promised a few years ago. What except the religion of Christ, would move to this; and who but christians, have ever made such sacrifices for the sake of their fellow men?—and what but the christian religion has ever raised the savage from his degraded condition and transformed him from the brute to the civilized man? Where has infidelity achieved conquests like this? Where have the principles of Owen and Fanny Wright entirely changed the moral characters of the lowest grade of human beings, banished crime and introduced the customs of civilized life. Indeed where has infidel philanthropy attempted this?—And yet there are those among us who with facts. What sacrifices has it made to elevate the savage before them, dare to sneer at Missionary efforts and villify the Missionary character. But they belong to the same class who rejected the Saviour when on earth. We ought not to be surprized at this.—Ed. Obs.

From the Conn. Observer.

ASK FOR THE OLD PATHS.

It does seem to us that there is peculiar need for thinking of this injunction at the present day. The doctrines which our forefathers regarded as of so much importance to the success of religion, and to the preservation of truth, have been to some extent neglected in the preaching of later times. Various causes have contributed to this. A desire not to excite controversy among the denominations springing up in the midst of our congregations, has doubtless been one cause. Another has been a desire to unite different parts of the church of Christ in the same benevolent enterprises. To promote this the peculiarities of doctrine which distinguished them have been, to a considerable extent, waved. And we doubt whether something of this effect is not to be ascribed to placing activity so far above truth that the latter has been undervalued. If men would only act, would only urge on benevolent plans, some have seemed to think this is about enough—that regard for abstract doctrine might have done very well for our fathers, who left their native land rather than yield up a particle of their doctrinal belief, but is too old fashioned for the present age of activity. From these causes or from others, it has come to pass that 'the old paths,' are trodden by many of the rising generation almost unwillingly—and it is no great stretch of imagination to suppose that one in whom they place confidence might lead them, without their perceiving the difference, in a direction far aside from 'the old paths.' Error has almost always come into the church of Christ in consequence of a previous keeping back of truth, from whatever cause. The effect of this is to make men uneasy when it is taught, and to disqualify them for detecting error when hat is taught. We do not wish to see the day when abstract discussion shall take entire possession of the pulpit, and banish the life and ardor which it now exhibits. And we should forbode evil were we ever to see the day when doctrinal truth is trowned into forgetfulness. In fact the pulpit will send forth doctrine of some kind. There may be a short transition, when sound doctrine is not taught, but it will ere long be followed by the teachings of error. If for years in succession the preacher does not inculcate the doctrines of the Gospel—if he does not state them distinctly—if he does not support them by strong and cogent reasoning, he may rest assured that in the natural course of things, doctrines—but of a different stamp will be zealously taught from the very desk whence he now excludes the doctrines of grace.

USE OF THE TELESCOPE.

On our arrival at Muscat, we were visited by men of all nations and colours. A good telescope happened to be placed so as to give a complete view of one of the farthest fortifications. I called on an Arab to look through it, and he did so for about a minute, then gazed with the most eager attention at me, and without saying a word, dashed over the ship's side. When the boat that he was in got to a little distance, he exclaimed, "You are magicians, and I now see how you take towns; that thing (pointing to the telescope,) be they ever so far off, brings them as near as you like." We were much amused with his simplicity, but no arguments could prevail on him to return and receive such a lesson on optics as might dispel his delusion.—Sketch. of Persia.

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE.

Several months since a Mr. Eldrige, of this place, lost a gold breast pin, which he found last week in the following singular manner. He was dining from the head of a pig, which had been fatted by the family, and in eating a piece of the tongue which had been placed upon his plate, he discovered the long lost pin, completely imbedded in the flesh., with the exception of the ornamental part, which was probably swallowed by this swinish devourer of fine things.—Barnstable Jour.

A HOPEFUL SON.

Sam Marsh, Soldier in the U. S. army, was lately advertised as a deserter. He found ways and means to visit his parents at Exeter, who were honest people, but in indigent circumstances. He watched his opportunity while his parents were absent, and took $18 in cash, which his mother had been several months collecting, to effect some special purpose—his father's best coat—a silver watch, and other articles—and has not since been heard of.

A most unprincipled son, and who may yet meet his deserts.

This we copy from the 'Herald of Freedom'—and but just above it is a notice that a Universalist clergyman will preach at Danbury Sunday the 30th instant. 'A most unprincipled son, and who may yet meet his deserts.' But on the principle that virtue is its own reward and vice its own punishment, that sin and punishment are inseparable, this 'most unprincipled son' has already met 'his deserts.' 'May meet his deserts!' Can there be any doubt on this point in the minds of those who hold that men are punished as they go along in life, to the full amount of their desert! 'May meet his deserts! Are we not told, that sin and misery are inseparable, and that even if men appear prosperous outwardly while they are great sinners, yet they suffer inwardly from the stings of conscience! Is not then this 'most unprincipled son' meeting 'his deserts', from the stings of conscience!—Who can doubt that he is now suffering intensely from a wounded conscience! Let us have consistency in our sentiments—and if men are really punished to the full amount of their deserts as they go along through life, let us not represent even hypothetically that they may escape punishment here.—Con. Obs.

'HERALD OF FREEDOM.'—This is the title of a newspaper published at Bethel, in Danbury, Conn. We have received the first number. 'Herald of Freedom!' Freedom from what!—O, from priestcraft, from ecclesiastical tyranny, from the restraints of orthodoxy. The Editor promises to contend manfully against 'Bigotry, Superstition, Fanaticism, and Hypocrisy.' A formidable list of formidable foes!—It is time for the 'Church and State party' to be on their guard, for the "Herald of Freedom" is coming among them—that is, if its Editor can find them—and he gives them fair notice, that in him 'they will find an enemy who will not flinch from the task and cry 'Hold enough.' He will, we doubt not, fight bravely when he meets the 'Church and State party,' but the great difficulty we apprehend in this case will be to find the enemy. The Editor would do well as soon as possible to offer a reward to any one who will tell him where this deadly foe is to be found. Some have thought they had discovered marks of his having been here and there, but no one has been fortunate enough to see the very foe himself. The nearest approach to him that we have noticed, was mentioned in the Religious Inquirer some months since, where 'brother Jacob Grosh' and several others are said to have actually discovered a commission given by the Board of Missions of the General Assembly to a missionary. He must be of a sceptical turn of mind who can resist evidence like this!—Con. Obs.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, NOV. 10, 1831.

DO PRESBYTERIANS REALLY BELIEVE THAT THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT HAS NOT BEEN ABROGATED?

This may appear like a strange question to ask at this day, but there is more pertinency in it than many of our readers may suppose.

If the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is of equal authority with that which says, "Thou shalt not kill," how should it happen that obedience to the former is so often viewed as mere matter of expediency. Should the latter be viewed in the same manner, what awful results would follow. Indeed there is a class of persons in our country who make the murder of a fellow being a matter of expediency. The duellist and the Subbath breaker can meet on the same ground, shake hands and talk about the exceptions which they would make to the fourth and sixth commandments. The one finds it expedient to maintain his ideas of honor by exposing his own life, and attempting to take that of his enemy. The Sabbath breaker deems it expedient to continue on board a stage, or Steam or Packet boat, a few hours in the morning of the Lord's day, in order to save the expense of putting up over the Sabbath, or that he may have the pleasure of spending the day with his family, or be prepared to attend to his business on Monday morning. The duellist holds his character dearer than life, and cannot believe that God will condemn him for vindicating it by just civilly killing the man who has dared to traduce it. The pious Sabbath breaker will shudder at such an avowal, will lecture him on the awful criminality of murder—will tell him that God has made no exception in favor of what is termed honorable murder. That the duellist violates the sixth commandment under circumstances of peculiar aggravation. That it is done deliberately—that he often murders his best friend, &c. &c.—But let us hear what the duellist might say in reply. Let us hear him excuse some of our good Presbyterian church members. "You tell me that I am guilty of breaking a commandment of the decalogue when I kill a man in a duel—that it is murder in the sight of God although public opinion, would brand me as a coward and drive me from all honorable society, and consign my name to utter contempt should I refuse to fight, while you, a professor of religion, break another of these commandments which you acknowledge is equally binding, just to save a few shillings of the property which God has given you—or to see your family a few hours sooner—or to get home where you may very piously spend the remainder of the day in worshipping God in his house. Very important reasons these for your disobedience when compared with those that I have urged in vindication of my conduct!!"

We may exclaim when will there be piety enough in the churches to resist the temptations which our public conveyances present for a profanation of the Sabbath. There is a tremendous evil here. It must be checked or our churches are ruined. The religion of Jesus Christ never did flourish where the Sabbath was disregarded.

We might say a great deal on this subject—but———we will lift up our voice like a trumpet—we will not, as the conductor of a religious newspaper, participate in this sin by keeping silence. Names shall be given if this hint does not prove sufficient.

PROTRACTED MEETING IN BRIGHTON.

A protracted meeting commenced on the 1st inst. at the village of Brighton (3 miles east of Rochester) and closed on the 7th.

All that we think proper to say of it at present is that immediately on the opening of the meeting it was manifest that God was there by his spirit.—Deeper feeling among christians, and more wrestling, agonizing prayer, has been witnessed there than we have, perhaps, ever known at a similar meeting. One thing should be especially noticed. The church had for a long time been looking forward with deep anxiety to this meeting, and instead of calculating that a revival would accompany it as matter of course, they had held a prayer meeting every day for a number of weeks with special reference to it. Indeed a revival may be said to have began before the meeting commenced.

The number of conversions, we have not heard. A powerful revival was enjoyed in this society a year ago.

SYNODICAL CONVENTION.

We mentioned week before last that this Convention was in session in this village, and we promised to give in our last some of their proceedings.

The fact was, the convention remained in session until a late hour on Friday evening, and as none of the subjects which had been discussed, were definitely acted upon, and the business was left in an entirely unfinished state, it was thought expedient not to publish any thing at present, especially as the Convention adjourned to meet in this place on the second Tuesday of January next.

We will barely say of this convention that it was the most interesting meeting of an ecclesiastical body that we ever attended. We look forward to the next meeting with much solicitude, and should the members come together at that time with a spirit of prayer, feeling that they are to transact business which must have an important influence upon the church of Christ, we anticipate the happiest results.

We shall be prepared to give the doings of the convention, and our readers may look for matters of high interest. The two questions which occupied most of the time of the convention were "What can be done to promote greater harmony among different denominations and to prevent the evils arising from the divisions of christians into sects"—and "Is regeneration (or evidence of a change of heart) to be considered the only test for the admission of members to the privileges of the church." This is the amount but not the precise language of this question.

We are happy to say that neither of these questions were definitely disposed of, so that the very interesting and highly instructive discussions which they gave rise to, will come up again at the next meeting.

MONROE S. SCHOOL REPORT.

We give place to this entire report which occupies nearly the whole of our first page.

We presume that the friends of Sab. Schools, among whom we class all the readers of the Observer, will require no apology for the length of the article. The fact which the Report abundantly shows, that the system of volunteer agency which was adopted at a meeting held in this village last winter, has in a great measure effected the object designed—that of exciting a deeper interest in this important subject and bringing a larger number of the children of the county under Sabbath School instruction, will alone more than compensate for any deficiency of the usual variety in our columns.

All that has been done, however, ought only to be considered as a beginning, and there must be no relaxation of effort until every child in the county is gathered into these nurseries of the church.

FALL OF WARSAW.

As we feared last week, we are compelled to announce the fall of Warsaw in this paper.

The deep interest felt in the cause of Poland by Americans, indeed by the civilized world, leads us to presume that our readers will be gratified with some of the details of the movements of the two armies, preceding, and subsequent to that disastrous event which has blasted the hopes of a brave, oppressed and patriotic nation.

They are again thrown upon the tender mercies of a barbarous despot. This news it will be seen has excited a great deal of feeling in Paris, and murmurs of dissatisfaction at the policy of the King are not whispered in secret, but have been manifested by acts of no equivocal character.

Serious consequences to France, may be the result. The whole of Europe appears to be in agitation. The year to come will probably develope great events.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. III.

THE PRESENT TEMPERANCE EFFORT MUST SUCCEED.

God has set his seal upon it.

The three past years have been years of decided and successful effort in the temperance cause; and the year now closing, will probably show greater results than any former year.—And who does not know that American Zion has been more greatly blessed during the twelve months past, than many former days? And how large a proportion of these revivals have followed decided temperance efforts? The truth is, and the sooner men learn it the better, the Spirit of the Holy One, and the spirit of devils, has no communion. Facts bear us out in the assertion, that for a christian to engage in making, vending or habitually using ardent spirit, is a sure method of grieving the Holy Ghost, and inducing a fearful apathy of soul. And facts too, warrant us in saying, that an awakened sinner, having recourse to the bottle, will stifle his convictions and endanger his eternal interest.

The writer is aware, that some professed christians use ardent spirit, and while under its influence talk eloquently, fervently, piously. But as said a pious lady to me, not many days since, respecting the deacon of the church, of which she was a member, "It always makes me shudder." A professor lately, while transacting business with a merchant of my acquaintance, suddenly commenced walking the room, exclaiming "poor sinners! What will become of their souls!" He was so much under the influence of ardent spirit, as to be incapable of walking straight.

A deacon at the west, seldom goes out to visit families, warn sinners, or pray with the awakened unless he has first kindled his zeal at the altar of Bacchus.

A certain professor of religion living in * * * * * * * *— is in the habit of frequenting the bar-room during the interval of public worship on the Sabbath and he has been seen to call for and drink his brandy—and water. O away with such rum-drinking, heaven-daring deacons and professors of religion!

But temperance and revivals have gone hand in hand; and the observation of twelve months close connection with the temperance cause has shown me. But in six tenths of the cases of hopeful conversions in the counties I have visited, the subjects were members of the temperance society. And another fact; in most of those cases of hopeful conversion, in which the subjects had not previously united with a T. S., no sooner did they find peace in believing, than they gave the pledge of abstinence. And another fact: in two cases where men who were engaged in vending ardent spirit, and were awakened—expressed a hope, but refused to relinquish the traffic—they are both now without hope, and just verging towards infidelity. And another fact—more than one hundred cases of reformed drunkards being awakened and hopefully converted, have come to my knowledge within six months past. And but few instances of revivals of religion, have fallen under my notice in places where they had not a T. S. and in every such case, a T. S. has been immediately formed.

The only instance of a decided failure in a protracted meeting, which has come to my knowledge, was in a place where they have a rum-drinking and rum-selling Society, called a T. S. but mis-named. And the only place I have seen in which a T. S. could not be formed, was

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

place where there is not a praying soul—no sabbath—no religious meetings—no Sabbath Schools, and nothing that looks like religion.—And revivals have been felt all around that place, yet it has remained as a barren heath in the desert.

CHARLES YALE,
Agent N. Y. S. T. S.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Permit me to ask for information and explanation, in regard to a notice, which appeared in your paper of the 29th October, over the signature of G. Crawford.

The time for the annual meeting of the Genesee County Temperance Society is fixed, by the Constitution, on the last Tuesday of October.—Accordingly the Secretary by authority committed to him by the Board of Managers, gave due notice, which was inserted in your paper, that the meeting would take place at that time.

And besides this, he had sent the same notice to all the papers in the county, and letters to all the auxiliaries, that they might by no means fail of sending delegates to this annual county meeting. But, two or three days previous to the time appointed, out comes this very strange and unauthorized notice, putting off the annual meeting one week later, and appointing it at another place. And what was the effect of this? Why, just what the writer of the notice might have expected. Those who saw it, supposing it to come from proper authority, staid at home. And those who did not, (among whom was the Secretary and a few delegates from different towns,) attended, according to regular notice, and found that the object of the society, in this meeting, was entirely defeated.

The writer of the notice, has very generously offered to perform the Secretary's duty, and requested that reports of auxiliaries may be sent in to him. This is very kind surely. But the offer was not made to the Secretary, but to the public. The reason assigned for this proceeding, is, that the Secretary of the county Temperance Society has left the county." That he now resides in an adjoining county, is most true. But has any one a right to infer from this, that the Secretary, as such, has neglected his duty? If not, then why send forth to the public a notice which implies it?

It may not be improper to ask another question. With what propriety can any individual member, take upon himself the responsibility of altering the time of the annual meeting, directly in the face of the Constitution, and the authority of the Board of Managers? I shall not be understood as questioning the good intentions of the writer of the said notice, but good intentions, sometimes, as in the present case, result in much evil.

There has been all along, a great degree of apathy in the society, and it has had little else than "a name to live." Its moral sensibilities, for some time, seem to have been growing weaker—it has lately exhibited but little life, its pulse beat feebly, and many of those who should have nourished it, have, as in the case of the "man who fell among thieves," "passed by on the other side." The last pang in its dying struggle, seemed already approaching, when, instead of "the good Samaritan," out comes this spurious notice, with its deadly influence, and suddenly claps the extinguisher upon the little life that yet remained. And now you may come and place over it, the inscription "this facet" while, in its winding sheet, it lies mournfully along side of the County Bible Society, the County Sabbath School Union, and the County Union for the Observance of the Sabbath. And the respective officers of these Societies, if, indeed they have any tears to shed, may now come and weep over their remains, and the cause of their dissolution, their own suicidity.

It is but just to say, however, that some of the Auxiliaries are yet alive, and rejoicing in their strength. Among these, the Arcade Temperance Society has taken the lead, and is worthy to be held up as a noble pattern for universal imitation.

Yours, in the cause of Temperance forever.
Mt. Morris, Oct. 27, 1831. J. B. WILCOX.

REVIVALS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

We have frequently conversational news respecting revivals, of which perhaps we ought to make more use. We should do it, but for the hope and expectation of soon receiving more full and satisfactory accounts from persons acquainted with all the circumstances. Intelligence respecting revivals in progress is so manifestly and greatly useful—as has been noticed by attentive and judicious observers from Edwards down to this day—that we are very anxious to publish more of it. Pastors of churches may surely give it such a shape as to answer its good purposes without doing any injury at first.—Nor, need the preparation of a suitable article require much of a pastor's valuable time. A full account of a revival is better given after the writer has had time to study the circumstances of its origin and progress. But the present question relates to revivals in progress. And it is not whether intelligence respecting them shall be published at all—it is and will be published every week in parts of the Union—but whether the articles shall be prepared by men well acquainted with the events and with the religious state of the community in which they occur.

Protracted meetings were held last week in Newton and Lowell, and the week preceding in Haverhill and Marblehead. Appearances, we understand were promising in all, especially in Haverhill and Lowell, where the audiences were crowded and the number apparently anxious on the subject of religion, very great. Similar meetings held lately in Worcester, Leicester, and many other towns in that county, have been followed by most gratifying results.—Bos. Rec.

Stephentown, Oct. 25, 1831.

A four days meeting was held in the Presbyterian congregation under my care, commencing on the 8th of September, which was blest to the hopeful conversion of from twelve to twenty souls.

A pleasant state of things exists at the present time; a few conversions within the last two weeks. Protracted meetings have also been held in the two Baptist congregations in this town, and have also shared in the blessing of God. E. A. BEACH.

OPPOSITION TO REVIVALS.

The following disgraceful scene exhibits the spirit of that kind of toleration which the enemies of religion would always manifest, were they not restrained by public opinion.—We wonder if there was ever a mob collected in Columbia County, or thereabouts to prevent a horse-race!

DISGRACEFUL PROCEEDINGS IN HUDSON.—We learn that a most unaccountable excitement, leading to acts of violence and the disturbance of public worship, has existed in Hudson, in this state for some days past. The facts as far as we have learned them are these:—The Rev. John N. Maffitt, of the N. E. Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been preaching for a few weeks in that city; an awakening has followed his labors, and the number of hopeful conversions, week before last, were estimated at about thirty. Matters proceeded on quietly until Wednesday evening of last week, when a large mob surrounded the church with intentions evidently hostile to the Rev. Mr. Maffitt. His friends, we understand, saved him from violence with much personal hazard. The next day the city was in much commotion, and the authorities expressed their fears that they should not be able to protect the Rev. gentleman from harm. He however persevered and preached in the evening; as the house was surrounded by thousands, the meeting interrupted, and he was attended to his house by a strong guard of gentlemen, who volunteered to protect him from the exasperated and passion-tossed multitude.

We learn however, that the tumult has subsided. It is a fact highly honorable to that city, that the Mayor, the Recorder, and other distinguished individuals exerted themselves to the extent of their power in restoring order.—Badger's Weekly Messenger.

EFFORTS OF CATHOLICS IN FRANCE.

There is a powerful effort made to bring over every Protestant that enters the land to the principles of Romanism. A young lady lately spent some time in France, for the purpose of learning the language, and she has borne her testimony that twenty-four hours never passed, without an effort being made to convert her to the Church of Rome, and several letters have been written to her with the same view. A gentleman searched two large towns in Italy, and could not discover a Bible, and also several towns in France with no better success; at last however, on inquiring for a Bible at a Bookseller's shop, they told him, to his delight, that they had one, and immediately handed him a book, entitled "The Mouth of Mary," giving an account of the various manners in which the Virgin Mary should be worshipped, and the advantages derived from serving her.—Prot.

The following note is from a gentleman recently from the Cherokee country, whose memory is at least as good as Col. Nelson's.

Messrs. Editors,—Col. Charles H. Nelson alleges that his severe treatment of the Missionaries was on account of their instigating the Cherokees to rescue them from his power; and as proof intimated that a gun was fired near Mr. Worcester's for that purpose.

The treatment complained of was endured by the Missionaries in June, and the firing of the gun was in August,—entirely without the knowledge or concern of Mr. Worcester.

Yours respectively.
EARTHEN WARE.

NEW COUNTERFEIT.—A ten dollar U. States bill on the Bank at Philadelphia, was presented at the Branch here yesterday, and detected as a counterfeit. It was the first which had appeared. The vignette Justice, surrounded with stars. The imitation is so accurate, that it is impossible to give any marks by which the Counterfeits can be detected. The ten dollar notes payable at the Branches, are printed from a different plate, the vignette is an eagle.—Journal of Com.

In looking over the New Orleans ship news, in the latest papers, we see that the amount of specie imported on the last three days, was about $200,000. It was brought in sloops and schooners which ply constantly to various ports in Mexico, where specie is the principal article of export.—Ib.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 10—Three affairs of honor have taken place in the city, within the last two days; in two instances, the parties fought with pistols, in the third with swords; three of the persons concerned are said to be badly wounded one of them dangerously.

SINGULAR TREATMENT OF "CRIMINALS."

Messrs. Butler and Worcester have been condemned to an infamous punishment and are now confined with thieves, robbers and murderers. The Judge, in pronouncing sentence upon them, thought it necessary gravely to argue that, in the matter alleged in the indictment, they could not have acted from "any principle of sound religion, or from a rational and discreet desire to serve the cause of piety." Who ever thought before, of proving that a convicted felon could not have been induced to commit his crime by sound religious principle? What Court till now ever attempted to show that "rational and discreet" piety could not have led to the commission of robbery, or theft, or any other crime associated with these by the law?

There is another singular circumstance. When the "Cherokees" arrived at Milledgeville, an officer was instructed to ascertain their views respecting a removal from the disputed territory, if pardoned.—Most of them were found disposed to go, and had been recommended as proper objects of executive "mercy." They were accordingly discharged on their simple promise to remove. Suppose half a dozen horse-thieves, when brought to the doors of the Penitentiary, should be set at liberty together, on a simple promise from each that they would not commit the same crime again? No man ever dreamed of such an absurdity in the administration of justice. But yet more: Two of the convicts; Wheeler and one of the Thompsons we believe, were destitute of recommendations to the Executive clemency, and yet were disposed to comply with the proffered terms. Recourse was had to their fellow convicts for information, and Messrs. Butler & Trott stated that they were respectable, &c. On this they were set at liberty. What a company of 'criminals' these must be! Their testimony to each other's good character is perfectly satisfactory, and their "word as good as a bond." Is such the integrity and trustworthiness of criminals in Georgia?—Bos. Recorder.

FOREIGN.

From the N. Y. Spectator.

EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

DETAILS OF THE STORMING AND CAPTURE OF WARSAW BY THE RUSSIAN TROOPS—TUMULTS IN PARIS—DEFEAT OF THE FRENCH MINISTERS.

The ship Colossus has arrived at Philadelphia, from Liverpool, bringing London papers, of the 20th, and Liverpool of the 23d September, both inclusive. The melancholy intelligence of the fall of Warsaw, is amply confirmed. But it was entered by the victors, over the bodies of the slain, after an obstinate resistance, in which the Poles again covered themselves with glory in their fall. Our extracts which are as ample as our limits this evening will allow, are from the National and Philadelphia Gazettes, United States Gazette, the Chronicle, and Poulson's Daily Advertiser. Among the most interesting of these extracts, is the latest letter of O. P. Q., glowing and burning with indignation at the cold and cowardly policy of Europe, which allowed this gallant and chivalrous people thus again to be sacrificed. Upon these events the Editor of the Morning Chronicle remarks:—

"We have more than once stated that the reduction of Poland would in all probability be the end of the reign of Louis Philip; and we are much mistaken if the aspect of affairs at Paris do not now lead to a change of government. The French are greatly incensed that the Poles, who by their rising enabled them to give consistency to their revolution, and place themselves on a footing of equality with the military powers, have been rather injured than aided by the government of Louis Philip. The papers are, however unjust towards the government. The French and English could not have prevented the military operations of Russia, by any thing short of war, and the Poles must in the long run have been overpowered without a warlike intervention in their favor. We need hardly observe that diplomacy is always unavailing in matters of consequence. It would not surprise us if the indignation of the French should prompt a declaration of war.

It will be seen that O. P. Q. does not consider the conflict as ended in Poland: and several Editors with their correspondents, adopt the same opinion.

Our own impression is different. At the first view of the account that 36,000 of the Polish troops had withdrawn from the capital upon Modin, a slight hope remained that the fire of freedom might again be re-kindled. But by a closer perusal of the accounts, we perceive that these brave men were indeed marching away as prisoners of war, to await the descision of the Imperial conqueror. The sensation in Paris consequent upon these events, has been of a very alarming character. But we hasten to the details.

POLAND

The capitulation of Warsaw, and its entry by the Russian troops, is but too true. The sensation this intelligence has created in Paris, is as we anticipated, most intense, has already given rise to tumults and will, we apprehend, give rise to many more. The Ministry too, have been defeated, on a point which the Minister of Warsaw seems to have considered of great moment, and this defeat occurring at a crisis of peculiar excitement, cannot fail materially to endanger their stability. But the foolish question absorbs all others in the French capital. It is felt there as a national calamity, & in some degree a national disgrace, and so indeed it is;—for had not the heroic Poles thrown themselves in the way, the army of Nicholas would long ere this have reached the bank of the Rhine. The Poles may therefore be considered as having to a certain extent, sacrificed themselves for the French.

"A letter dated Warsaw, Sept. 8, says; Poland is again subject to its lawful sovereign.—On the 5th inst. Field Marshall Count Paskewitsch sent a confidential officer to Warsaw, to demand in the name of his majesty the submission of the city, and to promise on the other hand, amnesty and pardon. With an infatuation which cannot be sufficiently deplored, these words of peace were rejected by the leaders of the insurrection. On the 5th, at day break, the Russian army advanced to storm the city. After a desperate and sanguinary resistance, our brave soldiers with rare intrepidity, made themselves masters of four redoubts which lay upon our line of attack, as well as the first line of intrenchments which surround Warsaw itself, and of which Wola is a perfect fortress. The task, however, was not ended with this; there remained a second line of intrenchments, and a broad moat round the city, defended by bastions.

At 4 o'clock in the morning of the 7th the F. Marshal was preparing to overcome these last obstacles, when Gen. Krukowiecki sent Gen. Prondzynski, to him to announce the intention of the nation to submit to its legitimate King. These sentiments were, however, not confirmed by the Chief of the Government, who soon after came in person to the Marshal. He affirmed that the consent of the Diet was necessary for such a submission. After the most urgent exhortations and representations of the inutility of further defence, and the disasters which it would inevitably bring with it, the General withdrew at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. Hereupon, three hours more were granted to General Krukowiecki, within which time he was to announce to the Marshall his final resolution. As this was not given by one o'clock the Marshal sent word that he should give orders to attack. Half an hour more was requested for consideration, but this also elapsing without satisfactory evidence being given, the Marshal issued orders for the attack. It was terrible, and very successful; flags of truce were sent, but they brought only dilatory answers. The attack was, therefore begun upon the second line of intrenchments, which was carried at the point of the bayonet. The enemy, who in the mean time received reinforcements, vigorously defended the gardens and the ditches towards the Jerusalem barrier, and even made our troops give way for a moment; but the ardor of the latter revived; they quickly scaled the walls of the city, which presented a most formidable line of defence. The prodigies of valor which had a ready distinguished the two days were renewed, and at ten o'clock in the evening the intrenchments, the gardens, ditches, walls—every thing, in short, was in the hands of our brave troops. Mean time, night had set in, and the army required repose.

The lines of intrenchment carried by storm, 6,000 prisoners and nearly 100 pieces of cannon, were the trophies of these two memorable days.

Nothing could now save the city, and the enemy's army. But it, therefore, implored the clemency of the Emperor, and this circumstance, made it the Marshal's duty to restrain the vengeance of the soldiers, which was excited to the utmost by such an obstinate resistance. To-day our troops are in Warsaw. The Polish army and the nation, have submitted to their monarch; the former, in conformity with the Emperor's manifesto, is gone to Plozk, there, to await his orders. In some days we shall be able to give a more detailed account of these important events. The glorious success which we have obtained has been purchased by severe losses. The Field Marshall himself has received a contusion on the left arm and breast. Krukowiecki has resigned his power.

Gen. Malachowski, has announced to the Field Marshal, in two letters signed by his own hand, that he leads the army to Polzk, with the intention of waiting there, for the commands of his Imperial Majesty. We must hope that the Polish army will persevere in the good sentiments, and disregard the perfidious insinuations which may perhaps, have been addressed to it.

The Berlin State Gazette of the 15th Sept., contains a second report, dated Warsaw, Sept. 8, relating with more detail, the circumstances of the attack on the intrenchments of Warsaw. The following quotation is given.—

"On the 2d day, (Sept. 7) Count Paskewitsch received a contusion from a cannon ball, which struck his left arm, in the first quarter of an hour of the combat, and, though no dangerous consequences were apprehended, he was obliged for a while to quit the field, and leave the command to Gen. Toll." After reciting the circumstances of the combat till the Russians had got possession of the ramparts, the report concludes in the following terms. "The Poles retreated to the interior of the city; the Russians occupied the ramparts, and erected batteries for 80 cannon, to chastise the rebellious city, in case it should persevere in its resistance. In the course of the night, Gen Kruckwiecki sent a flag of truce, announcing that the Diet had dissolved itself; and that he as a Dictator, governed alone, though he was not sure of his life.

At day-break, orders were issued to all the troops not to commit any hostilities, as both the Capital and the country, had submitted to his Majesty the Emperor and King, and the army was marching to Plozk, as the Field Marshall had ordered, to await his Majesty's commands. This morning, Gen. Malachoski, caused a report of the Polish army to be delivered to the Field Marshal. The Imperial Guard occupied the city this morning. At the Jerusalem barrier a deputation presented to his Imperial Highness, the keys of the city, bread and salt. A brigade occupied the Tete do Pont of Praga.—The Field Marshall will come this morning, to the Belvidere; His indisposition prevents him from getting on horseback. Gen. Count Witt, is appointed Governor of Warsaw, and Gen. Korff, Commandant. The suburbs on the west side, are almost entirely burnt down. In the city itself, the artillery has done little damage;—its effects would have been felt to-day. The loss of the Russians, could not be inconsiderable: it is estimated at between 4000 and 5000 men, but positive details are still wanting.

* * * * * * * * *

FALL OF WARSAW—IMPRESSION PRODUCED AT PARIS—DEFEAT OF PERIER.

To the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle.

Paris Sept. 17, 1831.

Sir: Warsaw has capitulated! The White Eagle has fallen; dyed in blood of the bravest, the noblest and the best; and the Grand Duke Michael occupies the former palace of the Grand Duke Constantine! Do you tremble as you read these lines! Do you turn pale with rage, and does your heart cease to beat, and your warm life blood, does it chill in your veins!—This is natural, just and patriotic. But your tears will be unavailing; your sighs will not reach the iron heart of the tyrant of Russia and the Despot of the North; and the Poles will refuse the sympathy of all men; for they have received the protection of none. Warsaw has fallen! The Russian army has feasted its rapacity on the treasure of the city—pilaged, sacked, burnt, ravished, destroyed. The father and the husband have fled the city, to associate with their brethren, in order to defend at Modlin the last vestige of national independence, and have left their wives and their little ones to the tender mercies of savage Cossacks, and the fatherly humanity and sympathy of the Russian Despot. They were not merely justified, but commendable for making this sacrifice. They abandoned all for their country: and liberty is now seeking an asylum in the entrenched camp of the Polish army, under the walls of Modlin. Do not imagine that she will demand a shelter in England, or ask for protection in France. Let us hear no more of the wretched trash of England being "the classic land of liberty," and let us reserve all our praises for the Poles: all our regrets for France and England; and all our courage and resolution for the hours of danger and of woe which approach us.

Do not suppose that we shall longer follow your discussion on your Reform Bill, or take an interest in your local discussions; do not suppose that we expect even the immense topic of an Hereditary, or Non-Hereditary Peerage in France to interest the real friends of freedom in Europe or the world. No, no; we have now a subject more pressing than these, interests more important than these, for in the fate of Poland, is involved the fate of liberty, of the existence of free institutions, and of Constitutional Governments, as well as the principle of popular sovereignty. We are not to abandon Poland, because Warsaw has fallen; and though the White Eagle may for a while be crimsoned with the blood of thousands of victims, yet it shall re-appear as the standard of universal freedom, and the butcheries of Warsaw shall be avenged by the independence of more countries than Poland. Warsaw has fallen! Oh how the Metternichs of Europe have rejoiced! how the halls have rung with rapture, and how the goblets have sparkeled with wine! "To triumphs of Despotism!" drinks the Nero of Warsaw who has shed the blood of the brave, the virtuous and free. "To the long life of the Emperor Nicholas," drinks the Courts at Berlin, at Vienna, and at Hague; and the humane, pious, and intellectual Monarchs of Spain, Portugal, Rome and Naples, will embrace the priests, say extra Masses, and offer up Te-Deums for the success of the Russian arms.

* * * * * * * * *

The Rentiers, the Bankers, the Bank and East India Directors, and the pursy, sleepy, gold loving men of London, will hope for other results. They will hope that the Emperor will manifest his "clemency," prove his "forbearance," publish an amnesty! appoint a Polish Viceroy! "grant a Constitution," "retain his sovereignty—!" but "pardon his offending children," and thus restore "peace and order!" They will exclaim "Brave Poles!" Magnanimous heroes!" "wonderful people!" But if you look for their names amongst the holders of the Polish subsidies, you will discover not even one of them, though, after this signal success, they will purchase Russian bonds at a rise of five or ten per cent. But the friends of freedom, of civil and religious liberty all the world over and of the greatest happiness, principle, will not thus feel or thus hope. No, no; the Poles must come to no terms; must listen to no proposals; must carry the war into the enemies country; must keep the Russian forces from obtaining provisions of forage: must proceed to Volhynia, Lithuania, and the Russian provinces, and excite all the empire to revolt and insurrection. They must take the cholera to one province, and the pest to another, and war and famine every where: and compel the Emperor Nicholos to evacuate Poland, or to establish national and representative governments where now no law is known but his will, and where no rights are enjoyed but those held by virtue of Royal decree. The Poles must not, and I believe will not, lay down their arms. They must not, and I believe will not, ever recognise the Emperor of Russia as their sovereign. But the battle must be fought inch by inch with despotism, while a soldier or a sword remains on the field. Hungary may rise, Posen may rise, Prussia may rise, the small German states may rise; the cause of Poland is every where felt to be European, but in France and Great Britian: and though Warsaw has fallen, I am not reduced to despair.

The impression produced by this news at Paris has been marked, decided, profound. It has not been confined to a party; nor to the students—or to the journalist, or the Deputies, or the middling or lower classes. The funds have fallen—even the public funds, cold and cruel as they are; have found this triumph of despotism to be a vast evil; the Theatres are closed; the streets are the scenes of agitation; the residence of Sebastiani has been attacked by the people; some citizens have sought for arms, as in July 1830; the Marseillaise has been sung under the windows of Pozzo di Borgo; the Deputies expressed their regrets, their shame and their disgrace in no measured language, or in no set phrases of terms or oratory; the Journals are full of bitterness and invective, and the most moderate men hang down their heads and mutter, "We are certainly for peace, but not for peace dishonor, disgrace and shame."

At the Palais Royal mobs assemble; the journals are read aloud; bursts of indignation are heard from all parts, and there is but one cry; "Vive la Pologne!" and "a bas les Ministres." The black flag has been hoisted in Rue St. Martin. A gun-smiths shop has been entered, and all the arms seized on the Boulevard Poissonnere, and every where we meet crape hat bands, crape weepers, and we hear the loud and deep curses of those who made the Revolution against those who have thus been ruined. On Monday, M. Manguin, the General Layfayette, and M. Laurence, will bring on the subject for discussion in the Chamber of Deputies. The Minister must be overthrown. M. Perier must be sent back to retirement, obscurity, and even disgrace. The Revolution must march, and if war be necessary to assure the independence of Poland, and the progress of the Revolution of July, then we must make war, and defeat all our enemies, rather than the principle of our Revolution should be overcome either in France, Poland, Italy, Belgium, Spain, or Portugal.

In the Coamber of Deputies, M. Perier has been defeated—both yesterday and on Thursday—signally and triumphantly defeated. You know that the jabberers about politics told you that this man had a majority in the chamber for his system, as well as for himself. I told you no, and each day confirms my statement.—The titles conferred by Napolean during 100 days were of course taken away by the cruel and ignorant Restoration. Those entitled to honors and pensions, have, since the Revolution, applied to re-wear, and re-enjoy them! But M. Perier has refused his assent, and has pleaded the question as one of finance, and not of honor—of pounds, shillings and pence, and not of justice or of national feeling! Yesterday and Thursday Marshal Soult opposed a project for re-inforcing the grades and pensions, but he opposed in vain, and the chamber adopted the measure by a great majority.

The drums beat to arms! The mobs are assembled in the streets! The place Vendome is full of citizens! There is but one cry, "Viva la Pologne!" "Down with the Ministers!"—Patience and you shall see who is right—Casimir Perier, or Your obedient servant.

O. P. Q.

POLISH ENTHUSIASM.

A German Physician at Warsaw gives the following singular instance of the enthusiasm of the Poles in the cause of their unhappy country. He states, that on the day following the last proclamation addressed to the army, having gone to the Hospital, at which it was his duty to attend about thirty soldiers, he was astonished to find the hospital quite empty. The attendants told him that the patients, on hearing of the proclamations, had repaired to the appointed rendezvous. The Physician went in search of his half dead patients, whom he very shortly found, and who upon seeing him declared that they were perfectly cured; at the same time requesting him to interpose in their favor, that they might be restored to their respective corps. Although a great many of these brave fellows were sick with typhus, and the remainder in a very feeble state enthusiasm had so strengthened them for the moment that the physican could scarcely believe his own eyes. The effect, however, did not long continue, and he succeeded in getting his patients back to the hospital, though not without the assistance of some attendants and others on the spot; for the greater part soon became so exhausted that they could not return without assistance.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the delegates to the Genesee County Temperance Society, held at Le Roy on the 25th inst. it was

RESOLVED, That the said meeting be adjourned to the third Tuesday of November next in the Presbyterian meeting house in the village of Middlebury at 12 o'clock at noon. A punctual attendance of the delegates to the annual meeting of said society, is respectfully solicited at that time and place. J. B. WILCOX, Sec'ry.
October 25th, 1831.

For the Observer.

Tuscarora Village Oct. 31st 1831.

Mr. Chipman:—Please insert the following in the Observer. Received the 18th inst. of the Rev. Mr. Halsey, Cambria, Niagara Co., for Missionary Herald; $3,00. Of the Union Female Missionary Society in said town and county, seven yards flannel cloth, one pair socks, $2,37 in cash contributed to the A. B. C. F. Missions to be disposed of at their station among the Tuscarora Indians.

The Spirit of the Lord is still with us, a number are anxious, and a few Christians begin to feel deeply.

The Indians are very busy and active in finishing their Shool-House, this accounts for the fact that I have not as yet sent you their subscriptions for the Observer.—I hope to do it soon.

Yours truly, JOHN ELLIOT.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 07	—mess, b.	$ 12 to 14
Flour, bbl.	5 a 5 50	Potatoes,	25
Corn,	50	Butter, lb.	12 a 14
Oats,	28	Lard,	7 a 8
Beef, fresh	2 50 a 3 00	Eggs, doz.	13
Pork, do.	3 a 3 50	Cider, bbl.	1 00
Salt, bbl.	1,75

Rochester price Pot ashes $100 ton—Pearls 105

MARRIED,

On the 29th ult. by Rev. L. Lyons, Mr. Sullivan Beny, to Miss Errena M. Wells, all of this place.

In Boston on the 25th ult. by the Rev. Mr. Blagden, Alonzo Chapin, M. D. of Rochester, N. Y. to Miss Mary Ann Tenney, daughter of Samuel Tenney, Esq. of Boston. Dr. and Mrs. C. belong to the reinforcement now fitting out by the A. B. C. F. M. to join the missionaries among the Islands of the Pacific.

In Albany, on the 20th inst. by the Rev. Dr. Sprague, Mr. Edgar Jenkins, of N. Orleans, to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Chancellor Walworth.

DIED.

In this village of a Consumption, on Friday the 4th inst. Mr. Salmon Scofield, aged 39 years.

Sabbath School Books.

UNION Questions, 1st, 2d & 3d vols. A full supply of all the publications of the AMERICAN S. S. UNION. Also, A variety of Miscellaneous Books, suitable for Sabbath Schools.

Among the more recently published, will be found the following: British Officer—Helen and her Cousin—Young Freethinker—S. Bacon—Grandfather Gregory—Oberlin—Life and travels of St. Paul—Mrs. Judson—Little Susan—Francke—Child's Expositor—Dick's Future State—Dwight's Vocabulary—Evening Recreation—Mrs. Huntington—Incidents in the Life of Dwight—Letters from Europe (Sprague's)—S. J. Mills—Nathan Dickerman—Pious Shepherd—Pious Sisters—Pleasing Expositor—Temperance Family—Memoirs of Howard, &c. &c.

For sale at the DEPOSITORY, No. 36, State, (formerly Carroll) Street.

Selling off at Cost, for CASH.

WISHING to close up our business at Pittsford, we now offer our

GOODS AT COST.

Our assortment is good, having received a fresh supply from New-York. All who are prepared to pay Cash for Goods, will do well to call, as a similar opportunity may not soon offer.

BEACH & VOORHEES.

Pittsford, Nov. 7, 1831.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by William C. Tillman to Josiah Bissell Junior, and by him assigned to Artemethea Champion, dated the ninth day of April 1827, recorded in Monroe County Clerk's office, in Liber 4 of Mortgages, page 282, and on which is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, Two Thousand One Hundred and forty eight dollars and twenty five cents—NOTICE is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, the mortgaged premises, to wit. "The Water house and lot, so called, situate in Rochester, Monroe County, bounded north by Peckham Barker's lot, south by F. F. Backus' garden, west by Fitzhugh Street, and east by Court Alley, containing one eighth of an acre of land," will be sold at public auction at the Court House, in Rochester, Monroe County, on the first day of May next, at two o'clock in the forenoon. Dated, November 7th, 1831. ARISTARCH CHAMPION.
S. MATHESON, Jr. 45 7w

HOYT, PORTER & Co.

HAVING now completed their assortment of Books suited to the wants of the public, offer a catalogue of a few of the leading works in their extensive stock, all of which will be sold low. Among them are the following.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Geographys.—Hart's Geography & Atlas, Olney's, Woodbridge's, Cumming's, Worcester's, Malte Brun's, Peter Parley's, Cumming's, and Willett's.

Grammars.—Kirkham's, Murray's, Ingersoll's, Brown's, Smith's, Gardell's.

Arithmetics.—Smith's, Dilbell's, Willett's, Emerson's, Colburn's, Filer's, Fitch's, and Ostrander's.

Spelling Books.—Webster's Elementary, Webster's American, Sears', Cobb's, Marshall's, Mavor's, Murray's.

Reading Books.—Scott's Lessons, Historical Reader, English Reader, Introduction to English Reader, Sequal to English Reader, American First Class Book, Porpont's Introduction to National Reader, Merriam's American Reader, National Orator, American Speaker, Barber's Elocutionist, Porter's Analysis of Rhetoric, Jack Halyard.

Histories.—Yale's Outlines of History, Goodrich's History of the United States, Hale's History of the United States, Whelpley's Compend, Tytler's Universal History, Butler's Compend.

Miscellaneous, Historical &c. suitable for Town Libraries.—Rollins' Ancient History, Josephus', Plutarch, Marshall's Life of Washington, Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, History of the Late War, Scott's Napoleon, Life of Charles 12th, Mary Queen of Scotts, Nelson, Pyrac, Pitkin's History of the United States, Encyclopedia Americana, Burk's Theological Dictionary, Arabian Nights, Spectator, Shakspeare, Waverly Novels, Cooper's Novels, Harper's Family Library, Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Hume's, Smollett and Bissett's England, Ferguson's Rome, Tacitus' Annals of Rome, Goldsmith's Works, Cruso of Time, all the Modern Novels, Lives, Franklin, Marion William Penn, American Biography, Scott's Poetical Works, Byron's do., Milton's, Pope's, Dryden's, Cowper's, Thompson's, Moore's, Shelly's, do. Morses' Revolution, Life Richard Henry Lee, Library of Entertaining Knowledge, Pike's Expedition, Denham and Clapperton's Travels in Africa, Flint's Recollections of the Mississippi, Mignet's French Revolution, Segur's Russian Campaign, Bain's French Wars, The Union, &c. &c.

Religious.—Bibles of all descriptions, Watts', Dwight's, Methodist, Baptist, Village, Camp Meeting, Winchell's and Worcester's Hymns, Hymns of Zion, Zion's Songster, and Rochester Selection, Dwight's Theology, Newton's Works, Wesley's Works, Wesley's Sermons, Dwight's Sermons, Davies', do., Saurin's do., Blair's do., Village do., Baxter's Call, Baxter's Saint Rest, Doddridge's Rise and Progress, Daily Bread, Dew Drops, Newton on the Prophecies, Paley's Works, Dick's Christian Philosopher, Philosophy of Religion, and Philosophy of Future State, Boston on the Covenants and Four Fold State, Wilson's evidence, Scott's Works, Cecil's Works, Jay's Closet Exercises, Common Prayers a complete assortment, Jay's Prayers, Cotterill's Prayers, Family do., Martyn's Memoirs Life Scott, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Huntington, Harriet Newell, Pliny Fisk, Jowett's Christian Researches, Stewart's voyage to the Pacific, Erskine on Errors of Religion, Erskine on the Truths of Religion, Edward's Works, Brown's Dictionary of the Bible, Criden's Concordance, Brown's do Butterworth's do., Filer's Works, Magee on the Atonement, Scott's Commentary, Henry's do., Gill's do., Clark's do., Pulpit Assistant, Christian Library, Thomas A Kempis, Alexander's Evidences, Pilgrim's Progress, Watson's Theological Institute.

Stationary.—Imperial, Royal, and Medium Printing Paper, Royal, Medium, Post, Demi, Letter and Cap Writing Paper, Quills, Fancy, Morocco, Embossed, Gold, and Silk Paper, Penknives, Everpointed Pencils, Pocket Books, Paint and Brushes, Blank Lines, Rice Paper Bristol Board, Ink Stands, Sand Boxes, Ink, &c. &c.

Blank Books of all descriptions made in superior style. july 19.

More New Books!!

Willson's Evidences.
Baxter's Call to the unconverted.
Advice to a young Christian.
Pleasantness of a religious life.
Church Member's Guide, by J. A. James.
Jay's Lectures.
Payson's Sermons.
Pleasing expositor.
Consistency. By Charlotte Elizabeth.
Payson's Memoirs.
Scougal's Works.
Mental Discipline. By H. F. Burder, 1st. Edition.
Wardlaw's Discourses on Prayer.
Sumner's Expository Lectures, on Matt. & Mark.
Paschal's Provincial Letters.
Willson on the Divine Authority and Perpetual Obligation of the Lord's Day.
Wilk's Christian Essays.
Fuller's Holy State.
Boston's Fourfold State.
The Christian Ministry, in 2 vols.
Paley's Works.
Life and Times of Rev. Richard Baxter.
Spring's Essays on Christian Character.
Sprague's Lectures.
Hawe's Lectures to young men.
Linsley's Lectures to the middle aged.

Just received and for sale at the NEW BOOKSTORE of SKINNER & PHELPS, where those who wish to purchase cheap, will do well to call.

☞ Store 1 door South of the Bank of Rochester, No. 24, Exchange-St. Nov. 2.

SHINGLES.

500 M. For sale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber;
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

8000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eaves-Troughs. 75000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber. A. W. RILEY.
Rochester, june 15, 1831. 25tf

IN CHANCERY—Joseph Strong vs. Silas Olmsted. } By virtue of a decretal order of the Court of Chancery, made in the above entitled cause, on the 7th day of Sept. 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the twenty third day of December next, at two o'clock in the afternoon of that day at the Eagle Tavern in the village of Rochester, the following described premises, viz: All those certain lots of land situate in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe, in the subdivision of a part of lot number fifty, in township number one short ranges west of the Genesee river, distinguished on a map or plot of Canal track made by Elisha Johnson as lots number two on the corner of Broad and Allen streets, bounded easterly on Allen and Broad streets, westerly by lot three, northerly by lot one, southerly by Allen street. Also, lot four, bounded easterly by lot thirty five, northerly by an alley leading from Broad to Elizabeth street, westerly by Broad street, southerly upon Hill street. Also, lot forty nine bounded easterly by lot fifty, northerly by lot forty eight, southerly on Hill street.—Dated Nov. 8th, 1831. ASHLEY SANDON, Master in Chancery.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

THE RELIGION OF ROME.

Dr. James Johnson, of London, in his "excursions thro' France, Switzerland, Italy," &c. recently published, furnishes the most melancholy testimony to the degraded state of morality and religion in Italy. His description of its morals, as drawn by himself and other travellers of respectability and veracity, we cannot copy into our columns.—"That religion," he says, "cannot offer very formidable checks to immorality or even crime, which hangs up 'PLENARY INDULGENCE' on every chapel door. He who can easily clear the board of his conscience on Sunday, has surely a strong temptation to begin chalking up a fresh score on Monday or Tuesday."

The following are his remarks on the Religion of Italy. We should be much better pleased to throw a veil over the scenes described in the conclusion, but for the reasons stated in a late number of our paper, we feel it a duty to exhibit to our readers a true view of THE FOUNTAIN HEAD OF ROMANISM.—Episcopal Recorder.

RELIGION.

I approach this sacred subject not AS A BIGOT, who condemns every mode of faith that differs, even in shade, from his own; nor as a SCEPTIC, who believes in no religion—but as a philosopher, who wishes rather to estimate the moral influence of different systems of religion on earth, than to weigh their intrinsic merits in the eye of Heaven. The latter task, not less dangerous than difficult, I leave to the province of the divine.—The fundamental objects of every religion I imagine to be these—first, to foster the good and check the evil propensities of man's nature in this world—and, secondly, to procure him immortality and happiness in the next. How far the Catholic system of faith, and worship, as professed and practised on the classic soil of Italy, is calculated to secure the salvation of the soul, I will not venture to judge, for the reason abovementioned. But I deem it not out of my province to form some estimate of its influence over virtue and vice—and of its tendency to good or evil actions in the common affairs of life.

Forsyth, while speaking of certain scenes which took place at Naples during a memorable epoch still fresh in the recollections of the present race, has the following passage.

"They reeled ferociously from party to party, from saint to saint, and were steady to nothing but mischief and the church. Those cannibals, feasting at their fires on human carnage, would kneel down and beat their breasts in the fervor of devotion, whenever the sacring bell went past to the sick; and some of Ruffo's cut throats would never mount their horses without crossing themselves and muttering a prayer."

The perpetual intercession of saints and angels, not to speak of priests and relics of the dead, in pardoning sins and saving souls, must inevitably diminish, if not destroy that awful solemnity which attends, or ought to attend, a direct appeal from man to his Maker.

In respect to the pompous formalities, the gorgeous imagery, the superstitious rites, the solemn mockeries and the sickening delusions of Italian WORSHIP, whatever influence they may have on people immersed in ignorance and trammeled in priestcraft—they can have but one of two effects upon Englishmen—that of turning the Romish religion into ridicule, in strong minds—or that of overpowering and converting minds that are weak! The latter is probably the less deplorable of the two evils. I suspect that the habit of despising religions different from our own, does not always strengthen our veneration for that which we ourselves profess. I speak of those who have travelled through various countries, and who have contemplated the superstitions, as they call them, of the people among whom they have sojourned. Experience, not very limited, has convinced me that the genuine precepts and doctrines of Christianity inculcated in early life at home, have not gained, in general, by intercourse with foreigners, whether Christian or Heathen. * * * * * * *

"The Chapel of the Quirinal on Sunday morning, is at last filled to suffocation. The tribunes on either side are occupied by the elegantes of London and Paris, Petersburgh and Vienna, Cracow or New York. In the central nave the throng is composed of abbots, priors, and dignitaries in grand costume,—the Mamelukes of the Church! Roman generals, all armed for the military service of the altar, the only service they have ever seen—monks, guards, friars, Swiss soldiers, and officers of State! Outside a cordon, drawn round the choir, are placed the foreign gentlemen. The choir, the scene of action, all brilliant and beautiful, is still a void. When the signal is given the crowd divides! and the procession begins!—'Mutes and ushers' form the advantgarde of the pageant, and lead the way.—Then comes, personified forsubtlety! feeble as worm-eaten! helpless as infancy! withered by time, and bent by infirmity; but borne aloft, like some Idol of Pagan worship, on the necks of men, above all human contrast. The Conclave follow, each of its princes robed like an Easter Sultan! His train of scarlet brocade, glittering with gold and silver, supported by crimson velvet, and vestments of point lace, the envy of an empress. The toilette of these Church coquettes is perfect: not a hair displaced, not a point neglected, from the pyramidal mitre to the diamond shoe-buckle. The Pope is at last deposited on his golden throne: his cardinals attendants fold round him his ample cassock, white and pure as the virgin dress of bridal guests! they arrange his dazzling mitre; they blow his nose; they wipe his mouth, and exhibit the representation of Destruction in all the disgusting helplessness of driveling caducity. His Holiness being thus excluded from the touch of profane eyes and hands, the Conservators of Rome, the caryatides of the Church, place themselves meekly at its steps, and the master, who represents the Roman Senate, precisely in the costume and dress rehearsing Bodkin's son, in the 'Marriage de Figaro,' takes his humble station near the Imperial seat, more gorgeous than any the Cæsars ever mounted. Meantime the demi-gods of the Conclave repose their eminences in their stalls on velvet cushions, and their cardatarj (or trainbearers) place themselves at their feet. In the centre, stand or sit, on the steps of the high altar, the bishops, with their supers in lace and tissued vestments. Then the choir raises the high hosannas: the Pope pontificates: & the Temple of Jupiter never witnessed rites so imposing, or so splendid. Golden censers fling their odors on the air! At the elevation of the host, a silence more impressive than even this solemn concord of sweet sounds, succeeds! Tall priests to the ear h; and the military in a ring lower their steel, lay their arms of destruction at the feet of that mystery operated in the memory of the salvation of mankind.

"The ceremony is at last concluded. The procession returns as it entered. The congregation rush after; and the next moment, the antiroom of this religious temple resembles the saloon of the opera. The abbots and priors mingle among the lay crowd, and the cardinals chat with pretty women; sport their red stockings, and ask their opinions of the Pope's Pontification, as a Merveilleux of the Opera at Paris, takes snuff, and demands of his Chere Belle, 'Comment trouvez vous ca Comtesse!' Bows, and courtesies, and recognitions—nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles—fill up the waiting time for carriages; and [illegible] Quirinal to re-congregate at [illegible] vespers, give rencontres, and make parties for the Opera, with which the English—the Sunday loving English—close their Sabbath-day in Italy. For English cant is left on English shores: and the most rigid observers of forms at home, 'being at Rome, do as Rome does!"

Such is the FINISH which modern manners have rendered essential for the youth of our English nobility and gentry! It will produce glorious fruit in the course of time! Let fathers and mothers reflect on this, and be convinced that no sacrifice is too great in procuring for their sons and daughters such an admirable basis on which their religious and moral principles may repose.

From the National Gazette.

JULIA BRACE,

Deaf, Dumb, and Blind Girl, at the Hartford Asylum.

By far the most interesting subject at present in the institution, is the poor deaf, dumb and blind girl, whose situation has been described in so beautiful and affecting a manner by Mrs. Sigourney. A charity box, the proceeds of which are designed exclusively for her support, is placed at the main entrance, where it is certain no stranger can pass, after viewing the utter desolation in which she has been left by nature, without dropping his mite. Her name is Julia Brace, and she is a native of the immediate neighborhood of the asylum. She is the only instance of so great a misfortune, of which any record is extant, except one European boy, by the name of James Mitchell. He was so terrible, that few experiments could be tried for his benefit; but Julia Brace, it is said, has been mild and docile from her childhood; although when I saw her, from some temporary vexation or indisposition, she was evidently somewhat out of temper. She was seated at a table, her needle-work in her lap. "There is nothing disagreeable in her countenance, but her eyes, forever closed, create a deficiency of expression. Her complexion is fair, her smile gentle and sweet, though of rare occurrence: and her person somewhat bent, when sitting, from her habits of fixed attention to her work.—Many strangers have waited a long time to see her thread her needle, which is quite a myste-ious process, and never accomplished without the aid of her tongue."

She was the daughter of exceedingly poor parents, who had several younger children, to whom she was in the habit of showing such offices of kindness as her own afflicted state admitted. Notwithstanding her blindness she early evinced a close observation with regard to articles of dress, performing among those which are presented her as gifts, such as were of the finest texture. When the weather became cold, she would occasionally kneel on the floor of their humble dwelling, to feel whether the other children of the family were furnished with shoes and stockings, while she was without, and would express uneasiness at the contrast.

Seated on her little block, weaving strips of tan bark with pieces of leather and thread, which her father in his process of making of shoes rejected, she amused herself with constructing for her cat- bonnets and vandykes, not wholly discordant with the principles of taste. Notwithstanding her peculiar helplessness, she was occasionally left with the care of the young children, while her mother went out to the occupation of washing. It was on such occasions, that little Julia evinced not only a maternal solicitude, but a skill in domestic legislation, which could not have been expected. On one occasion she discovered that her sister had broken a piece of crockery, and imitating what she supposed would be the discipline of her mother, she gave the offender a blow. But placing her hand upon the eyes of the little girl, and ascertaining that she wept, she immediately took her in her arms, and with the most persevering tenderness, soothed her into good humor and confidence. Her parents were at length relieved from the burden of her maintenance, by some charitable individuals, who paid the expenses of her board with an elderly matron, who kept a school of small children. Here her sagacity was continually on the stretch to comprehend the nature of their employment, and as far as possible imitate them. Observing that a great part of their time was occupied with books, she often held one before her sightless eyes with long patience. She would also spread a newspaper for her favorite kitten, and prolong her finger on its mouth, and perceiving that it did not move like those of the scholars when reading, would shake the animal, to express displeasure at its indolence and obstinacy. These circumstances, though trifling in themselves, revealed a mind active amid all the obstacles which nature had interposed. But her principle solace was in the employment of needle work and knitting, which she had learned at an early age to practice. She would thus sit absorbed for hours, until it became necessary to urge her to that exercise which is requisite to health. Counterpanes beautifully worked by her, of small pieces of calico, were repeatedly disposed of, to aid in the purchase of her wardrobe. And small portions of her work were sent by her benefactors as presents into various parts of the Union, to show of what nearness of execution a blind girl is capable.

It was occasionally the practice of gentlemen who from pity or curiosity visited her to make trial of her sagacity, by giving her their watches and employing her to restore them to their right owner. They would change their position with regard to her, and each strive to take the watch which did not belong to him—but though she might at the same time hold two or three, neither stratagem nor persuasion would induce her to yield either of them, except to the person from whom she received it. There seemed to be a principle in the tenacity with which she adhered to this system to give every one his own, which may probably be resolved into that moral honesty which has ever formed a [illegible] natured in extreme poverty and after her removal from the paternal roof in the constant habit of being in contact with articles of dress or food, which strongly tempted her desires, she has never been known to appropriate to herself, without permission, the most trifling object. In a well educated child this would be no remarkable virtue; but in one who has had the benefit of no moral training to teach her to respect the right of property, and whose perfect blindness must often render it difficult to define the incorruptible firmness of this innate principle is truly laudable. There is also connected with it a delicacy of feeling or scrupulousness of conscience, which renders it necessary in presenting her any gift, to assure her repeatedly by a sign which she understands, that it is for her, ere she will consent to accept it.

Continuing to become an object of increased attention, and her remote situation not being convenient for the access of strangers, application was made for her admission into the asylum, and permission was granted by the directors in the summer of 1833. After her reception into that peaceful refuge, some attempts were made by a benevolent instructor to teach her the alphabet, by means of letters both raised above and inserted beneath a smooth surface. But it was in vain that she punctually repaired to the school room, and daily devoted hour after hour to copying their forms with pins upon a cushion. However accurate her demeanors were, they conveyed no idea to the mind sitting in darkness. It was therefore deemed wiser to confine her attention to those few attainments, which were within her sphere, than to open a warfare with nature in those avenues which she had so decidedly sealed.

It has been observed of persons who are deprived of a particular sense, that additional quickness or vigor is bestowed on those which remain. Thus blind persons are often distinguished by a particular exquisiteness of touch, and the deaf and dumb who gain all their knowledge through the eye, concentrate, as it were, their whole soul in that channel of observation. Julia Brace, whose eye, ear and tongue are alike dead, the capabilities of both touch and smell are exceedingly heightened. Especially the latter seems almost to have acquired the properties of a new sense, and to transcend even the sagacity of a spaniel. Yet keeping in view all the end which these limited faculties have, the power of imparting some of the discoveries and exercises of her intellect are still, in a measure unaccountable.

As the abodes which from her earliest recollection she had inhabited, were circumscribed and humble it was supposed that at her first reception into the asylum she would testify surprise at the comparative spaciousness of the mansion. But she immediately busied herself in quietly exploring the size of the apartments, and the height of the staircases; she even knelt, and smelled to the thresholds, and now, as if by the union of a mysterious geometry with a powerful memory, never makes a false step upon a flight of stairs, or enters a wrong door, or mistakes her seat at the table.

Among her various excellencies, neatness and love of order are conspicuous.—Her simple wardrobe is systematically arranged, and it is impossible to displace a single article in her drawers, without her perceiving and restoring it. When the large baskets of clean linen are weekly brought from the laundress, she selects her own garments without hesitation, however widely they may be dispersed through the mass. If any part of her dress requires mending, she is prompt and skilful in repairing it, and her perseverance in this branch of economy greatly diminishes the expense of her clothing.

Since her residence at the asylum, the donations of charitable visitants have been considerable in amount. These are deposited in a box, with an inscription, and she has been made to understand that the contents are devoted to her benefit. This box she frequently poises on her hand, and expresses pleasure when it testifies an increase of weight; for she has long since ascertained that money is the medium for the supply of her wants, and attaches to it proportionable value.

Though her habits are peculiarly regular and consistent, yet occasionally some action occurs which is is difficult to explain. One morning, during the past summer, while employed with her needle, she found herself incommoded by the warmth of the sun. She arrose, opened the window, closed the blind, and again resumed her work.

At the tea table with the whole family, on her sending a cup to be replenished, one was accidentally returned to her which had been used by another person. This she perceived at the moment of taking it into her hand, and pushed it from her with some slight appearance of disgust; as if her sense of propriety had not been regarded. There was not the slightest difference in the cups, and in this instance she seems endowed with a degree of penetration not possessed by those in the full enjoyment of sight.

Persons most intimately acquainted with her habits assert that she constantly regards the recurrence of the Sabbath, and composes herself to unusual quietness, as if in meditation. Her needlework, from which she will not be debarred on other days, she never attempts to resort to; and this wholy without the influence of those around her.

Julia Brace leads a life of perfect contentment—and in this respect, both an example and reproof to those who in trifling inconveniences indulge in repining, though surrounded by all the gifts of nature and of fortune.

'The genial influences of spring wake [illegible] gladness,—and she gathers the flowers, and even the young blades of grass, and inhales their freshness with a delight bordering on transport.—Sometimes, when apparently in deep tho't, she is observed to burst into laughter, as if her associations of ideas were favorable not only to cheerfulness but to mirth. The society of her female companions at the Asylum is soothing to her feelings; and their habitual kind offices, the guiding of their arm in her walks, or the affectionate pressure of their hand, awaken in her demonstrations of gratitude and friendship.—Not long since, one of the pupils was sick—but it was not supposed that amid the multitude who surrounded her, the blind girl was conscious of the absence of a single individual. A physician was called, and the superintendant of the female department who has acquired great penetration into the idioms of Julia's character, and her modes of communication, made her understand his profession by pressing a finger on her pulse. She immediately arose, and taking his hand, led him with urgent solicitude of friendship to the side of the invalid, and placing his hand upon her pulse displayed an affecting confidence in his powers of healing. As she has herself never been sick since early childhood, it is the more surprising that she should so readily comprehend the efficacy and benevolence of the medical profession. It would be easy to relate other remarkable circumstances respecting her, but it is not desirable that this article should be so far extended as to fatigue the reader.

From the Jour. of Humanity.

KEEPING FAST.

Sometimes a demure Moslemin may be seen looking anxiously round on all sides, to ascertain if he is not watched. The moment he thinks himself unobserved, he turns some of the Christian streets of Pera or Galata, and ascends the infidel hill.* Led on, as it were, by mere listlessness from one turn to another, the gentleman still advances, until perverse chance brings him just opposite a confectioner's or pastry-cook's shop. From sheer absence of mind he indeed steps in, but he buys nothing. Allah forbid he only from pure curiosity examines various eatables laid out on the counter. He handles, he weighs them, he asks their names, their price, and their ingredients. What is this! What do you call that! Where does the other come from! Thus discoursing to while away time, he by little and little reaches the inner extremity of the shop; and finding himself at the entrance of the recess, in which, by mere accident, happens to be set out, as if in readiness for an expected visitor, a choice collation of all that can recruit an exhausted stomach—he enters it from mere thoughtlessness, and without the least intention. Without the least intention also, the pastry cook, the moment he sees his friend slunk into the dainty closet, turns upon him the key of the door, and slips it into his pocket.—Perhaps he even goes out on a message, and half an hour or so elapses ere he remembers his unaccountable forgetfulness. He, however, at last recollects his prisoner, who all the while would have made a furious outcry, but has abstained, lest he should be suspected of having gone in for the purpose of tasting the forbidden fruit. The Greek unlocks the door with every expression of apology and regret; the Turk waves out in high dudgeon, severely rebukes the vender of cakes, and returns home weaker with inanition than ever. But when the pastry-cook looks into his recess to put things in order, he finds, by a wonderful piece of magic, the pies condensed into pastors, and the sugar plumbs transformed into sequins.

* The quarter of the Franks at Constantinople.

From the Monthly (London) Magazine.

DUELLING.

America has lately added to our examples of trans-atlantic gallantry in these matters. A pair of doctors quarrelling for something or for nothing, took out their pistols. They fired and missed during a round or two; but their open determination was death. Accordingly they went on with their shooting, advancing nearer to each other at every round, until the arm of one of them was broke. But this was not the compact. They must go on. The wounded man took the pistol in his left, fired, and broke his antagonist's arm. This of course could not satisfy either of the heroes; at last they both gained their object. They fired together; the challenger received the ball in his heart, and died on the spot. The challenged received the ball in his lungs, and died in three hours. While he was lying on the ground he inquired the result of his last bullet; and on being told that it had done its business, expressed himself "a happy man," and said, now he could die contented.

And this is duelling—the honorable arranger of scruples the delegate washer out of stains, the curer of scandals, and general peace-maker of society. Or is not this unequivocal barbarism, wilful murder! a determination to shed blood without mercy! And yet our law slumbers over such things. The judge pronounces a formal reprobation, about which neither he nor any body else cares a jot. The jury smile, the criminal arranges his curls, and prepares for a new celebrity among the fair. The verdict lets him loose—the mob huzza him. The ladies adore him, the gentlemen extol his heroism; and thus a scoundrel, black with malice and revenge; and dipped in blood from head to heel, a human tiger, is triumphantly sent forth to prey upon mankind.

Threatened disturbance in the South Sea Islands.—Sydney papers received last week, give a long and interesting account of a threatened disturbance in the above islands. It appears that the Queen Pomare, dissatisfied in her habits, and disinclined to walk in the footsteps of her father, had for several weeks visited the more leeward of the South Sea Islands, and had there, with her associates, indulged unhallowed propensities. On her return to Tahite, she evinced a desire to continue the excesses she had indulged in during her absence, and a disposition to set aside the laws of her father, and to govern arbitrarily and despotically. But the chiefs opposed her intentions, called a public meeting in order to defend the laws, and to support the missionaries and their Christian religion. One chief and his party sided with the Queen and her followers; but the more powerful were opposed to her. Ultimately, her majesty, just as disturbances were about to break out on an extensive scale, made promises to govern according to the laws and religion established by her father.—London World.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty-eighth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, executed by Moses A. Ives of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty-eighth day of November 1827, recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 418, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and seventy dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises conveyed by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses A. Ives by deed, bearing even date with said mortgage as mortgage, save being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twenty-fifth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear—And also all that certain undivided half of five acres of land situate in Perinton, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of lot No. 6 in the division of lot No. 6 fifteen, and bounded as follows, viz—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and at such distance as to contain the said quantity of five acres exclusive of the above mentioned [illegible] which will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April A. D. 1832, at two o'clock of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Dated the twenty-fifth day of October, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY.
By M. HOYT & A. GRANGER, Att'ys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty-ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, executed by Edward Parker to Joseph Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and thirty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the said premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, in said division of the Ridge Road Tract, and bounded as follows, viz—Beginning at the south east corner of said lot No. 29, on the north line of Clyde Street, running thence north 2 chains, thence west 10 chains, thence south 2 chains, thence east 10 chains to the place of beginning, containing two acres more or less, which part of said premises has been laid out for a road, reference being had to the said deed of Edward Parker to the said Joseph Bissell, recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber 81 of mortgages at page 418, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and seventy dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the said premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises conveyed by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses A. Ives by deed, bearing even date with said mortgage as mortgage, save being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twenty-fifth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear—And also all that certain undivided half of five acres of land situate in Perinton, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of lot No. 6 in the division of lot No. 6 fifteen, and bounded as follows, viz—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and at such distance as to contain the said quantity of five acres exclusive of the above mentioned [illegible] which will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April A. D. 1832, at two o'clock of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Dated the twenty-fifth day of October, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY.
By M. HOYT & A. GRANGER, Att'ys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty-ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, executed by Edward Parker to Joseph Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and thirty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the said premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe, being lot number twenty nine, in said division of the Ridge Road Tract, and bounded as follows, viz—Beginning at the south east corner of said lot No. 29, on the north line of Clyde Street, running thence north 2 chains, thence west 10 chains, thence south 2 chains, thence east 10 chains to the place of beginning, containing two acres more or less, which part of said premises has been laid out for a road, reference being had to the said deed of Edward Parker to the said Joseph Bissell, recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber 81 of mortgages at page 418, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and seventy dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the said premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises conveyed by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses A. Ives by deed, bearing even date with said mortgage as mortgage, save being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to E. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twenty-fifth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear—And also all that certain undivided half of five acres of land situate in Perinton, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of lot No. 6 in the division of lot No. 6 fifteen, and bounded as follows, viz—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and at such distance as to contain the said quantity of five acres exclusive of the above mentioned [illegible] which will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April A. D. 1832, at two o'clock of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Dated the twenty-fifth day of October, 1831.

LAURA M. ELY.
By M. HOYT & A. GRANGER, Att'ys.

HENRIETTA RISSELL, Executrix of ARNOLD W. RILEY, Executors of EVE and PETER, Executors of ARNOLD RILEY, Jr. deceased.
ELIZA MATHEWS,
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain instrument of mortgage bearing date the twenty-ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Risley, Jr. and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber [illegible] of Mortgages at page [illegible] on the [illegible] day of September 1828 and assigned to the undersigned on the [illegible] day of June the first publication of this notice the sum of [illegible] hundred and twenty-three dollars and [illegible] cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that the said mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe, being [illegible] number [illegible] in said division of the Ridge Road Tract, and bounded as follows, viz—Beginning at the south east corner of said lot No. 29, on the north line of Clyde Street, running thence north 2 chains, thence west 10 chains, thence south 2 chains, thence east 10 chains to the place of beginning, containing two acres more or less, which part of said premises has been laid out for a road, reference being had to the said deed of Edward Parker to the said Joseph Bissell, recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber [illegible] of

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 47.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS—To all Subscribers, after 6 months, pay. In advance, $2 50. Companies of five or more, short payments made when the names are forwarded, $2 00.
To Town Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

From the S. S. Instructer.

THE COMMANDMENTS.

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deut. 6. 7.

THIS, my fellow teachers, is the command of Jehovah to the children of Israel respecting the commandments and ordinances which had been delivered to them from the mount. And considering the precept enforced equally binding on us, as on those to whom it was originally addressed, may we not profitably inquire, Ought we not, as Sabbath school teachers, as parents or guardians, to be diligently and constantly engaged in teaching them? To those who occupy either, or all of these responsible situations, I would suggest the inquiry, In what manner do you teach those over whom you are placed as teachers or guardians, the statutes, the ordinances, and commandments of the Lord? Do we ourselves understand the spirituality of God's holy law? Have we made it our study? Have we often asked God, that we might more and more comprehend, in all their length and breadth, the extent of its requirements? If so, we have not neglected to teach them diligently unto our children. But if, like the unconverted Jew, we seek for justification in the outward observance of a law of words—if by the law we have never been convinced of the knowledge of sin in our own hearts, then have we failed faithfully to teach the same to others.

I do believe that in many families, and in many Sabbath Schools, the study of the Commandments is too much neglected. I say the study. Children may be able to repeat them; and some children may know, that they may worship other than the true God, without bowing to an image fashioned by art or man's device; or they may have learned that he that hateth his brother is a murderer; and that they daily transgress the commandments of Jehovah—yet how very few are there who thus understand them. Is it not rather, a lamentable truth, that there are very many children, who are as ignorant upon this important subject, as if they had been born and educated in a heathen land! And if so, is it not time that a course of instruction should be pursued which will remedy this defect?

Such are some of the considerations which have induced me to attempt the series of Lessons on the Commandments, adapted to the capacities of children, the first of which may be found in the Instructer of to-day. Should the design of the writer be favorably received by the superintendents and teachers in our Sabbath schools, and should the exertion he may be enabled to present, appear to them calculated to advance the great cause in which they are engaged; (and that this may be the case is his most ardent desire and fervent prayer;) he will, in addition to the benefit he himself may receive, have reason to praise God, that in this humble way he may be instrumental in promoting his cause on the earth and in leading many to say with Zion's psalmist—"O! how I love thy law, it is my meditation all the day. How sweet are thy words unto my taste; yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth.—Thro' thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way." Then shall we by true grace, be enabled to teach these statutes diligently unto our children, and they again to theirs.

My dear fellow laborers, if we are faithful in the discharge of this duty, if in the spirit of wisdom and love, we walk after his commandments and teach them to others, we shall not lose the things which we have wrought, but shall receive a full reward; for the divine love shed abroad in our hearts, will quicken, encourage and strengthen us, that the way of God's commandments shall never be grievous.

Pray then that all your efforts may be blessed in advancing the cause of truth; and that God's perfect law, convincing the unconverted of sin, may be the means of saving their souls, by leading them to the Saviour, who alone wrought out for us, by the sacrifice of himself, a perfect righteousness. For he in whom was no sin, was manifested to take away our sin. C. S.

From the S. S. Instructer.

After having addressed the people in P——, Rev. Mr. S —— arose and said—"About a fortnight since, I called at a house near my own, and found that both the parents were unhappy, in hope that they had just found the Saviour. I began to converse with them, when the woman said, 'Do deal faithfully with me, and if you think I am deceived, let me know it.' I then mentioned several things as characteristic of the real Christian. And knowing that they had heretofore neglected the religious instruction of their children, I referred them to the command of God to the Israelites—And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. How do you feel about this subject? She said, 'I never felt so much before, respecting the instruction of my children. I have always neglected it. What will become of them! O, how anxious I feel for them. I have just been talking to them, and so has my husband.'"

"I saw that man," said Mr. S——, "two days after this conversation, and he said, 'Sir, you cannot think how different my children appear: two of them do not seem like the same.'"

What a comment this, upon the importance of parental example and parental faithfulness! But a few days before, these children were perfectly thoughtless about their souls—and to this course of life, they were no doubt encouraged by the example of their parents—but their father and mother began to pray with and for them, and talk to them about the solemn things of a future world, and they are melted into penitence. O, the judgment day! what a time that will be for unfaithful, impenitent parents!

ASA BULLARD.

A PRAYING FATHER.

The following extract from a biographical notice is not without its moral. It refers to the late Mr. Winslow, father of one of the Asiatic missionaries.

It is questionable whether he was ever known to express in any way to his children, a desire that they should become possessed of worldly distinction and wealth; but thousands of times has he earnestly prayed with them, and for them, that they might be saved from those snares, and give their undivided hearts to the great concerns of soul, religion, and eternity. "On a certain occasion," said his pastor, in his funeral sermon, "a child of his, overheard a voice in prayer in a place of retirement, and on listening, perceived it to be the voice of his father in prayer for him. On hearing a father's prayer offered in secret for him, that the Holy Spirit might renew his heart and make him willing to renounce the world and become an instrument of promoting the Redeemer's kingdom in the salvation of the souls of men, he became immediately serious, found no peace till he believed in Christ, and is now a minister of the Gospel."—S. S. Instructer.

From the S. S. Instructer.

NEVER DESPOND.

What if S. and J. do seem indifferent and trifling every Sabbath, when you are trying to do them good! I know it is enough to fill a benevolent heart with grief and pain, to see every effort of kindness and affection, regarded with cold indifference or a trifler's smile. But why be discouraged? Why not redouble your diligence; pray more through the week; and on the next Sabbath go from your closet, yes, go in the strength of the mighty God of Jacob, and speak to them, as though it were your last time! Perhaps their hearts may be softened.

A teacher informed me, not long since, that she had a young lady in her class, who had formerly caused her much unhappiness. She was exceedingly gay and volatile. It seemed almost impossible to confine her thoughts to serious subjects for a moment.

Her teacher was sometimes almost discouraged and ready to give her up, and make no more effort in her behalf. One Sabbath she met the class with these feelings of discouragement, bearing down her soul. She turned to this young lady, and said, "I feel that I have done all I can for your soul; I know not what more to do." It was a melting time. The teacher and whole class wept together; and that gay, thoughtless young lady, when she found that her teacher had become discouraged and was ready to do no more for her soul, immediately became anxious, and is now rejoicing in hope.

Why then should a teacher ever be discouraged or despond! Another effort may be blessed beyond his warmest hopes. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hands: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." ASA BULLARD.

In connection with the above we present to our readers the following fact from the S. S. Herald.

"When I was a Sabbath school teacher," said a minister, "some years since, there was one little ragged boy in the school, whose name was Isaac, and he was a most unruly rebellious boy; so much so, indeed, that the teachers knew not what to do with him, and really thought that they must turn him out of school—however, the teachers resolved to try and bear with him; accordingly they continued to pray with and for him, and repeatedly addressed him personally, and with the other children:—at length a difference was observed in his conduct; indeed it appeared the Lord had touched his heart; he gave evidence of a gracious change, continued many years to prove the reality of his religion, subsequently studied for the Christian ministry, and is now at this time, a pious, useful, and highly respectable pastor of a Baptist church, and I am rejoiced to say, this distinguished individual, once a little rebellious Sabbath scholar is now one of my intimate and beloved friends, and a faithful minister of the everlasting gospel."

From the Am. Pastor's Journal.

PROCRASTINATION.

"Be wise to-day—'tis madness to defer."

Mr. A. was married to a lady of serious turn of mind, who had a conscientious regard for the institutions of religion, and would gladly have availed herself of their instrumentality as the means of grace; but like many other hapless wives, she found the man who had pledged himself to comfort and assist her in her pilgrimage, her most determined opposer. Mr. A. was intemperate, and needs scarcely be added, was an enemy to religion. Her request to be allowed to attend on the preaching of the gospel he steadily refused, until in this way, twelve long years had passed over the matrimonial union.

But the circumstances of the case do not appear unpromising. The omniscient God has ways to reach men, although they may fancy they are escaping out of the way of his mercies; and often labors by means which their fancied security is employing. A protracted meeting—one of the most glorious efforts which are so generally blessed in reaching the hearts of the unconverted—was appointed in the town where A. dwelt. The solicitude of his wife so long repressed, prove unfruitless, and she proposed to attend the meeting, but as on all former occasions when she had made this proposition, so now, she was denied. But the fear of God was upon her, and the fear of a drunken husband, happily for her, had ceased to control her determination.

"I have obeyed you twelve years," said she, "and now it is time for me to seek the salvation of my soul. I will attend the meeting." She went—the truth took effect—she was awakened, and soon after hopefully converted to God.

Soon after this event, a neighbor of Mr. A. told him that "God was doing a great work in that town, and that some hundreds had been convinced of their sin, and had obtained a hope of pardon through the Lord Jesus Christ."—He listened with apparent interest, and after much solicitation, promised that after another week he would attend church,—that himself and family would join the Sabbath school, and begin even thus late in life, to seek salvation.

The next Sabbath came, the superintendent of the Sabbath school, and others, looked with solicitude for A. and his family, but they were not there. They continued anxiously to expect them, till the school closed, but they came not. Soon after, the bell tolled a funeral knell. The inquiry was made, "Whose remains are now to be committed to the silent tomb! Ah!—'Twas that man's who one week ago engaged to begin to-day to seek the salvation of his soul. Yesterday God laid his hand upon him, and in a few hours he died,—died without hope.

Behold the end of the scorner; of him who counts heaven's richest boon too poor for his present acceptance! As if the idle sophism with which we lull the conscience, and gain a temporary respite from its pangs, could also blind the eye of God, or dull his senses of the indignity which is done to his honor by the man who refuses now to listen to his demands. If there be such a thing in the universe as an outrage against right and honor, it is when a vile worm of the earth; a corrupt and miserable sinner, spurns the offer made him in infinite condescension, by the God of heaven, and puts him off with the poor subterfuge, "I will attend to this hereafter." The whole stream of time is strewed with the wrecks of souls lost by this delusion. B.

From the Am. Pastor's Journal.

THE GREAT CONTROVERSY.

A College Anecdote.

[Furnished by a Clergyman.]

F. N. was a member of College with myself. He was a young man of amiable disposition, respectable talents, studious habits, and of blameless morals; but on the subject of religion, he was stupid as a block. He had been reared up under the sound of the gospel, and had a general notion of its doctrines, and professed to be unconscious of any opposition of heart to its requirements. He was simply a stupid neglector of religion, and quieted himself in his neglect by the innocence of his life, and the decent uniformity of his moral habits. Thus going about to establish his own righteousness, he pursued the "even tenor of his way," with scarce an interruption from the reproofs of conscience or the recognizing strivings of the Holy Ghost. And this is not so much to be wondered at, when we reflect that there was but little in the religion of his professedly pious associates to arrest his attention, or to impress him with the conviction that they had many joys to which he was himself a stranger, until a revival of religion, which gloriously prevaded the College, restored to the friends of the Redeemer the joys of his salvation. Then they began to "teach transgressors his ways, and sinners were converted unto him."—The breath of heaven descended like a rushing mighty wind, and it was a time of general heart-searching.

F. N., slow to believe, and hitherto securely entrenched in his morality, at length appeared among the inquirers; he was told of the depth of his depravity, of the sinfulness of his neglect, of his desert of eternal death as the wages of his sin, and of the sovereign right of Jehovah to punish him with everlasting destruction. This last declaration especially, made a lodgment in his soul, and his soul resisted it. He returned to his room and opened his Bible and read, "Therefore, hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." His heart rebelled, and he closed up the book. He opened it again and read, "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son;" and again his heart rose in opposition. These were hard sayings and he would not hear them. These declarations of the divine sovereignty, of the supreme dominion of God, his soul could not endure. It appeared to him unjust that the Almighty should thus deal with his creatures.—He at length determined that he would not possess a Bible that contained such doctrines. He formed, accordingly, the deliberate purpose to cut out from his Bible every leaf which exhibited the doctrine of divine sovereignty! He took out his knife and actually commenced the sacrilegious enterprise. He began with the leaves which he had read, and proceeded with the work laboriously, cutting leaf after leaf, till it became apparent that if he robbed the sacred book of every page containing the hated doctrine, he would have no Bible left! He paused in his hopeless task, and in a fit of anger threw the mutilated volume across the room! Then rising from his seat he walked the floor in agony, till by the mysterious influence of an unseen agency, this ultimate act of rebellion was made the occasion of his surrendering himself into the arms of sovereign mercy. As his eye fell upon the torn book at his feet, his spirit wrestled within him and he said, "Merciful God! what have I done! I have vilely cast away the Bible, with all its revelations of love, simply because it assures me that the KING OF THE WHOLE EARTH WILL DO RIGHT! Truly, this is rebellion! This is controversy between the thing formed and him that formed—between 'man and his maker!'" With such reflections as these, his sins were set in order before him. He saw that he was a rebel, and that in opposing the sovereignty of God, and wishing to expunge it from the Bible, he had cherished a disposition which would blot out one of the most sublime and glorious manifestations of the God-head. In this doctrine, more than in any other, he now seemed to see "the King in the Lord of hosts." Wherefore he loathed and abhorred himself, and repented in dust and ashes. This was the hour of his submission.—Here he yielded the contest, and gave himself away to God.

From that time, sixteen years ago, F. N. has been an exemplary Christian, and, for more than eleven years, a successful preacher of the gospel, rejoicing himself and persuading others to rejoice, that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, and he will do all his pleasure. P. C. S.

From the Gen. of Tem.

MOB AT NEW HAVEN.

Attack on the house of Arthur Tappan, by the Enemies of the Magdalen Report and of African Emancipation.—It is known to our readers that Mr. Arthur Tappan, of this city, is President of the Magdalen Society; that he is also a principal donor to the proposed college for educating colored persons: and that both of these benevolent objects have been virulently assailed by the public press. In this city, meetings were held, at which a President of one of our banks presided, for the purpose of bringing the Magdalen Committee to "punishment." That meeting claimed an authority paramount to the regular courts of justice, and the orator more than hinted at the use of the Roman steel. At New-Haven, a meeting still more extraordinary, as being regularly conducted by the authorities of the city, not only deprecated the location of the college at New-Haven, but denounced the emancipation of the people of color.—That the leading demagogues who have disgraced both this city and New Haven, by their scandalous proceedings, would be upheld by the lawless rabble, whose support they seemed so obsequeously to court, could be doubted by no reflecting person; and some movement of a violent character has been expected. Some time past, a motly assemblage collected before the house of Mr. Tappan, in Beach Street, in this city, and were seemingly consulting the course to be taken. The family were at their summer seat in New-Haven, and probably a knowledge of this fact, transferred the scene of rendezvous to that city. Accordingly, a few nights since, a desparate gang surrounded the house in New-Haven, pelting it with stones, and giving evidence of the high source from whence they had derived their refinement, their ethics, and their warrant, by crying out "Magdalen Report!" "Negro College!" &c. &c. interlarded with such delicate expressions as might be supposed to correspond with the false modesty that is wounded by the Magdalen Report. As a brother of Mr. Tappan had been in New-Haven the day previous, it was probably supposed by the mob that he was in the house, which was not the case. The family we understand, were somewhat alarmed, but were providentially protected by some gentlemen present at the time. It would be easy to add columns of comments, but every reader can draw them for himself.

From the South. Rel. Tel.

ANECDOTE OF MR. EVARTS.

Mr. Evarts, the late Secretary of the Am. Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, was once, on his return from a visit to the Missionary Stations among the Indians, passing up the Mississippi in a steamboat. Just before Saturday night, he told the Captain that it was not his custom to travel on the Sabbath, and requested to be left at some convenient village on the banks of the river. The captain was surprised at a request so unusual, and began to reason with Mr. Evarts, and tell him that it was altogether uncertain when another boat would come along. But Mr. Evarts told him he could not travel on the Sabbath. It was soon rumored among the passengers, who were more surprised than the Captain had been. They looked upon Mr. Evarts as almost beside himself, and tried to dissuade him from his purpose by telling him that he might stay there a whole fortnight before another boat would come along. "No matter for that," was Mr. Evarts laconic reply; "Providence will take care of me. Duty is mine; consequences I must leave with God." Finding his passenger fixed in his purpose, the Captain landed him. On the Sabbath Mr. Evarts conducted a religious meeting in the destitute village at which he stopped; and early Monday morning another steam boat came along, and brought him to the place of his destination almost as soon as if he had continued in the first boat.—Jour. of Human.

ANECDOTE OF DR. WATTS.

As Dr. Watts was standing one day in a coffee house, he observed a gentleman looking very steadfastly at him, and presently heard him say to his friend—'That is Dr. Watts.'—'Is it?' replied the other; 'then he is a very little fellow!' On which Dr. Watts turned to them and said—

"Were I so tall to reach the pole,
And grasp the ocean in my span,
I would be measured by my soul;
The mind's the standard of the man!"

TEMPERANCE.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. IV.

THE PRESENT TEMPERANCE EFFORT MUST SUCCEED.

God has set his seal upon it.

In one instance a temperance society was formed in a town in 1827 or 8. It did not prosper. Professors of religion were the great, probably the sole cause. Divisions rent the church—their Minister was dismissed, and desolation was before them. Less than a year ago, an effort was made to revive the T. cause. It succeeded. Many who had stood aloof, now took hold. A Youth's T. S. was also formed, and a large number united, few, if any of them professors. In a few weeks, a general and powerful work of grace commenced in the town, and by far the largest part of those who had united with the T. S were among the subjects. In another place a T. S was formed last June—a large number united—an interesting revival is now in progress in that town.

Now I do not wish to be understood as saying, that because a T. S. society was formed, the spirit of the Lord was poured out upon that, or any other town; I only wish to show, that there seems to be a marked connection, between temperance and revivals. And this connection has become so well defined, as to be apparent to even casual observers. In some instances the T. effort has preceded a revival—then the former promoted the latter. In some cases revivals have preceded the T. effort—then one has led to the other. Still there has been, and yet is, a close connection.

If God, then, has set his seal to the T. cause, owned it as his, and blessed it as his, those professors of religion who are refusing their evidence, are

1. Neglecting a very important duty.—Many are refusing to encourage a work which God encourages, and neglecting to use one very important means for building up His Kingdom, which he uses. How can they consistently pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and yet not use one of the most prominent means for injuring the kingdom of Satan?

2. They are committing a very great sin. They not only refuse their efforts and their influence to the cause, but throw them into the opposite scale. In this thing are they not honoring God with their lips, but their hearts are far from Him!

3. They are taking the part of Satan against God. It is for the interest of Satan's kingdom, to have the use of ardent spirit continued. It is one of the most prominent means he uses to support his cruel throne, and to people Hell. T. measures are one of the prominent means God uses to promote the interests of his kingdom. These two kingdoms and the means for promoting their interests, are just as opposite as God and Satan are opposite. He who virtually or practically opposes temperance efforts, opposes God, and aids the dark designs of Hell—the blood of souls is upon him. "He that is not for us is against us." But some may ask, "are you sure this is the best way to promote temperance, to form Societies on the principle of total abstinence!" Till a better way is pointed out, I am. When this is done, I am ready to pursue it.

CHAS. YALE,
Agent N. Y. S. T. S.

INFAMOUS.

'I belong to the Temperance Society,' said a New York wholesale grocer one day last week, while at dinner—'but I drink a little brandy now and then,' suiting the action to the word.

'Do you sell liquors, sir?' inquired a person present.

'O, yes! people will have them; they will purchase them somewhere; and as spirits are imported, they must be sold.'

'True sir, but merchants should not import them.

'Merchants will import them, so long as they can find a market. Why, there is the deacon of a church in New York who has imported more St. Croix rum, than any other man!'

'Who may that be, pray!

'B—— De F——. He has been a deacon of a church these many years; and sometimes I think he has'nt much religion—particularly when he asks 4 or 5 cents more for a lot of rum, than I wish to give. [A queer way to measure piety, truly—by the price of rum!] This temperance will not last long: it will be all over in about a year.

It is to be feared, this brandy drinking temperance man's profession may prove true, if churches allow their members and officers to be importers of and dealers in the soul's deadliest poison!—Temp. Adv.

From the New-York Evangelist.

RETURN OF DR. HEWITT.

This beloved brother has again landed safely on his native shores. He arrived from Liverpool, in the Packet ship Bottanna, on Saturday last, in good health. God has opened the way of usefulness and labor, before him, in England, far beyond any of the most sanguine expectations of the friends of temperance. Our countryman seems to have been the honored instrument of conciliating to the temperance cause a large number of enlightened Christian Philanthropists of England. He has also succeeded in inducing them to assume the responsibility of a Temperance Society for the whole world; the London Committee have assumed the title of "British Foreign Temperance Society," and a goes to the most noble "British and Foreign Bible Society."

In looking at the honorable list of their Vice Presidents, it is a gratifying fact, that all of them are pledged members of the society itself, and have actually signed the agreement, binding them to total abstinence. They also agree in understanding the temperance compact, to involve an obligation to the most strict and exemplary circumspection in regard to the use of stimulating drinks, particularly of the brandied wines of commerce.

Professor Stewart's Essay is in high favor there. A bountiful number of the society of Friends is publishing an edition at his own expense, for circulation. The celebrated theologian and biblical scholar Dr. John Pye Smith, pronounces it unanswerable, and avowed at the public meeting at Sheffield, that he had given up the use of wine, in consequence of reading it, and is much better for the change.—He is writing a commendatory preface for it.

There are many friends who will feel interested to know that Dr. Hewitt, has been enabled to meet the bereaving stroke which removed his eldest daughter in his absence, in a composed and Christian manner. Supported by divine grace, and the consciousness that, in leaving his family, he aimed to do his duty, according to what plainly appeared to be the will of God, as much as a man ought to do. In short, we may rest satisfied that our country, our temperance cause, our revivals of religion, have gained honor in the sight of our British brethren, by the visit of our recent delegation.

Dr. Hawes, of Hartford, has returned in good health. Mr. Nettleton remains in England, with encouraging prospects of usefulness.

MISSIONARY.

From the N. Y. Observer.

THE IMPRISONED MISSIONARIES.

A gentleman in New Jersey, in a letter of recent date addressed to the editors of this paper, says: "I yesterday had the pleasure of an interview with a gentleman recently from Alabama, who has resided ten years among the Cherokee Indians in that state. On his way he visited Rev. S. A. Worcester and Dr. Elisur Butler, missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M. in the Penitentiary at Milledgeville, Georgia. He related a few particulars respecting their situation which may be interesting and useful for christians to know, as it will aid them in commending these sufferers and their present associates to the throne of grace.

Mr. Worcester is employed mostly as a mechanic at the bench, and Dr. Butler at the lathe-wheel. They of course adopt the dress of the prison, made of very coarse cotton. The initials of their names are painted in large red letters across their breast and waist. Thus attired, they perform their daily task with quiet consciences in company with felons. Their fare, though coarse, is wholesome, and their health is good. The convicts generally are required to cook for themselves. They mess with one who is permitted to go into town, and who cooks for the three. He is permitted to bring in some articles which they would not receive under other circumstances.

Their habitation is surrounded by a high wall, enclosing about five acres. As the Penitentiary was burnt last spring, the present buildings are temporary. There are three apartments, for ONE HUNDRED PRISONERS. Mr. Worcester has about thirty with him, and Dr. Butler about twenty-seven. The rooms are large, say twenty feet square. Loose plank are laid down for the floor. Each convict has a blanket to lie upon or to cover himself with as he chooses.

After entering the prison, Mr. Worcester requested that the convicts might be assembled for public worship on the Sabbath. The keepers, with one exception, assented, but on account of his objection, the request was not granted. He is permitted, however, and Dr. Butler, likewise, to pray with those in their rooms at night, and preach to them, or in other ways to give them instruction on the Sabbath.

The gentleman on his way to Milledgeville called upon Mrs. Butler, and found her as quiet and happy as could be expected in her trying circumstances. She was engaged as usual in teaching school, and imparting instruction to the Cherokees. She wrote a letter to her husband, which was presented to the keeper of the prison, who is a pious man, of the Methodist church for examination. He declined reading it, and intimated that it was too trying to his feelings. Dr. Butler has left four children. Mrs. Worcester still remains in feeble health.

LA POINT.

We mentioned some time since, the arrival of Mr. Ayer, from this place, to Mackinaw, where, after remaining a short season, he would return with one or two of the missionaries recently sent out by the American Board, to establish a station there, and perhaps in time another station farther west. Mr. Ayer was formerly a resident of Utica; and when he left the place, about 2 years since, was superintendent of the Sabbath school of the Bleecker street church, a station which he filled with great usefulness. He went out, at first, as teacher to the Mackinaw station; but afterwards, as our readers will recollect, left that place for a similar occupation at La Point, five or six hundred miles distant. At this place he was much secluded, and shut out from the intelligence of the day. The letter, of which the following is an extract, was written to a young friend in Whitesborough, soon after his second arrival at Mackinaw, when the scenes of a whole year had burst upon him at once, and when he was about to return to La Point. We hope that the spirit it breathes will infuse itself into the bosom of many a young disciple of Christ.—Wes. Rec.

Your esteemed favor of 25th of May, I received at my arrival here from the Indian country, (near the head of Lake Superior,) where I have been attempting the year past to instruct the perishing heathen in the knowledge of the gospel of Christ.

The news of the work of God in Utica, and the conversion of —— and some others, in establishment of ——, and especially the hopeful conversion of many of the Sabbath school children, attached to the school where I labored with so little success, was a source of the most lively gratitude to God. I wept for joy, and felt that I could say—"Bless the Lord, O, my soul, and all that is within me." My cup of joy has been full to overflowing, since I returned from the moral waste among the heathen, at reading the accounts of the stately steppings of Zion's King in the churches of our Lord. It seems to me, that Jesus is about to take to himself his great power and reign.

Hosts of missionaries will spring out of these revivals, and present themselves before God, and say, "Here am I; send me" to the heathen.—May we not judge from the signs of the times, that the latter day of glory is already dawning on this lost world, and that ere long a "great voice from heaven" will be heard, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord!" How blessed are they who bear an humble part in this glorious cause. Yes, though you and I may be but hewers of wood, yet will we rejoice that we are counted worthy by our Lord of such a place; a place which we would not exchange for the throne of a king. What a privilege to be instrumental in winning souls to Christ! in pointing the ignorant, perishing heathen to our glorious Redeemer, as one able to save souls from hell, and fit them for the society of the glorified above. Does not your heart burn with desire to make known to them Christ crucified! If it does, my dear brother cultivate such a feeling, till like Paul you have continual sorrow for the lost heathen. Don't think that when fitted to enter the field, you will remain among Christians, and build upon another man's foundation. Not under God, without "conferring with flesh and blood," go forth in the field covered with dying heathen. Let the love of Christ constrain you to offer yourself a living sacrifice unto God for them. I rejoice to hear you say, "I am inclined to seek work far from this blessed country."

And now, dear brother, let me tell you of an almost boundless field of moral death, which, until very recently, has been under the almost entire dominion of the prince of darkness. Now He whose right it is to reign, has begun to scatter the darkness by the power of the Holy Spirit; & a cry breaks forth on the right and left, Come over and help us. Within two or three years past, five or six of the Indian traders have become the professed followers of Jesus. These traders feel a very lively interest in the cause of missions, and make very liberal donations to it, and to the bible and tract cause, &c. Most of them live at a distance of from four to six hundred miles from this place, and a considerable distance from each other. One lives about 1500 miles northwest, where he has been the past year very active in doing good to the heathen. Some of the traders are now under serious impression, as are some of their wives. Two Indian women (the wives of traders) have the past year hopefully been born again. One will unite with the church on the morrow, and an Indian youth living with one of the traders. This trader united with the church last year. He was formerly a bigoted Catholic, and was educated for a priest.

Here follow similar additional details, which as they have already been presented to our readers, we omit.

The country inhabited by these Indians, is immense, extending from Mackinaw, along the southern shore of Lake Superior, running down into the interior two or three hundred miles, and from the head of the lake west and northwest, probably one thousand miles. It is inhabited by the Ojibwas, a numerous tribe; many of whom live in Canada, along the northern shore of Lakes Erie, Huron and Superior, extending far into the interior, and far to the west of Lake Superior. Books are now published in their language, and we hope the Bible will soon be translated. Dr. J——, of the U. S. army, now residing at the Sault St. Mary, a gentleman of great research, has made great attainments in the tongue, and is warmly engaged in the subject. The Ojibwas every where manifest a willingness to be taught, and some of the bands express much anxiety to have missions and schools among them.

The American Board have the present season sent out two clergymen, to missionate among these Indians; to acquire a knowledge of the language, and as soon as practicable to locate in the Indian country.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.

Great Fire at Constantinople—Loss sustained by Mr. Goodell, the Mission School, and the Bible Society's Agent—Appearance of the Cholera, &c.

SMYRNA, AUG. 13, 1831.

I wrote you a few days since of the distress which had been caused by the plague among the poor of this place, and of the severer calamities experienced by another city (Bagdad,) whose name is connected with oriental story. It is now my painful duty to speak of these which have befallen the capital of the modern descendants of the Caliphs, CONSTANTINOPLE.—On the 2d of the present month, a fire broke out in Pera, the Frank suburb, which in its progress swept away all but eight buildings in Pera and San Demetrio. All the palaces of the Foreign Ambassadors but the Austrian; the dwellings of the Frank merchants, dragomens, &c., (with the exceptions already named,) and the only shelter of tens of thousands of poor Greeks, Turks and Armenians, are now heaps of burning cinders.

At first the Turks appear to have been rather remiss in their efforts to extinguish the flames, but since the conflagration, the conduct of the government is said to have been most praiseworthy. The Sultan himself has caused more than 100,000 piastres to be distributed among the sufferers, and has given permission to the Turks to rent their houses to the Franks (a privilege not latterly enjoyed.)—Similar acts of generosity are mentioned of him, during his late tour through different parts of his dominions. In how many respects does this Turkish ruler come behind the other princes of Europe?—Should not Christians who believe that "the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord," pray earnestly for his conversion to the faith of the gospel? Should they not learn, too, with simpler hope and faith, to seek the prosperity of Christ's spiritual kingdom? But yesterday it was the almost universal prayer of Christendom, "God speed the sword of the Russians." Now, however, that the Poles are seeking to break away from the yoke which was then equally heavy upon them, who wishes the sceptre of the Czar to be swayed over half the globe?

Among those who have lost nearly every thing by this dreadful fire, is our missionary brother, Rev. Mr. Goodell. He was just quietly settled in Constantinople, and was making arrangements for establishing schools, when this calamity came upon them. The new building, furniture, books, &c. of the school which we had for some time sustained

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

there, and the dwelling of the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent, have also been destroyed.—Mr. Goodell removed at once to Boyukdere, a village on the Bosphorus, where he has comfortable accommodations for the present. On learning of his misfortune our countrymen here have promptly collected more than $150 in money which I shall forward to him by the next post.

Together with the five, the cholera has at length made its appearance; but thus far its progress has not been rapid. Among the now houseless thousands, however, it will it is to be feared, find many victims. We may also expect a visit from it in this quarter, & are preparing our minds for its approach. But like the plague which has so mercifully passed by, it is the servant of the Lord, and will smite only at his bidding.

In the midst of these visitations of providence, pray for us, that the Lord "in wrath would remember mercy." The church of Smyrna which reads with interest what God is doing for your western Zion, hopes also that the year of her redemption may speedily come. In behalf of a portion of her members, Yours truly. JOSIAH BARKER.

From the New-York Evangelist.

THE POWER OF PREJUDICE.

We have hardly ever witnessed a more striking instance of the power of prejudice, in perverting the judgment, and causing persons to see things exactly the reverse of what they are, than in the following estimate of the labors of Mr. Finney. It is a part of an article of nearly three columns, headed, "Rev. Mr. Finney," in the Boston Telegraph, for Oct. 22d. The editor thus gives his opinion, as to the character of his public performances, and the true secret of his success.

"Here, then we conceive lies the true secret of Mr. Finney's influence and popularity. He addresses the feelings, and not unfrequently, the coarser feeling of human nature. This is more or less grateful to a vast multitude of mankind, who will not endure to have the plain truth addressed to the understanding and conscience.—They are gratified with an excitement of passion, and can endure even much truth, if truth is not mad. the prominent object, and its edge is only blunted, so that it will not find its way to the conscience and the heart. Here is the main spring of these operations for the promotion of revivals, which have prevailed so extensively at the West; and it is the main spring of that kind of preaching, which is rapidly preparing the way for the introduction of the same measures, in this section of the country. Mr. Finney preaches some truth important and pungent, intermingled with not a little error, and presented in such a manner, as to drown conviction of sin in selfish inducements to immediate action, and to make immediate action, however selfish, if prompted by love to the soul, to be essence of obedience to the commands of God.—The sinner, indeed, is induced by self love, to embrace the gospel: and for this cause, he continually talks about hell, and makes the criminality of the sinner to consist more in neglecting the salvation of his soul from hell, than in disobedience to the divine law. Such an impression as this, must be an effectual bar to conviction, and must directly conduce to a false love, a false submission, a false repentance, and a false hope."

To any person in the least familiar with Mr. Finney's preaching, it will be strange to be told that he addresses the feelings instead of the understanding. Whereas it is well known that he is an uncommonly argumentative preacher. He does indeed make a tremendous impression on the feelings, but it is always through the medium of the understanding. He is one of the most doctrinal preachers in the world. A Connecticut minister, much accustomed to what is called the intellectual preaching of New England, and peculiarly qualified to judge of such matters, said, after hearing Mr. Finney, "He preaches more divinity in one sermon, than we should in a whole year." So far from his sermons being appeals to popular passions, that another New-England Minister said of him, after hearing him several times at Andover, "I never was so disappointed in my life. His sermons are calculated to arrest and hold hearers of the highest order of intellect."

Mr. Finney's hearers will be little inclined to credit this man's discrimination, when he thinks his preaching deficient of producing conviction of sin. If there is any one point more universal than another, among those who are awakened and convicted under his preaching, it is their deep and overwhelming convictions of sin, their sense of its loathsomeness, and its terrible baseness. The reason why he talks so much about hell with so much effect, is, that he first leads his hearers to feel as if they deserved it. His clear views of God's holy moral government, and righteous law, and free and sincere offer of mercy in the gospel, he transfers to his hearers, and makes them see how utterly they are "without excuse." We cannot conceive it possible that such preaching should tend to the production either of false submission, or a false hope.

From the Christian Mirror.

"THE HOUR OF ATONEMENT"

This is the title of a Sermon, founded on John 12: 27, 28, and forming one in a recently published volume by an English preacher. The extract which we transcribe below, we found in a review of the work in one of our London periodicals. It appears to us eminently instructive and affecting, and as proper a subject for contemplation, as we could possibly introduce to our readers, on the week preceding a communion Sabbath.

According to the reviewer, the view taken of the passage which forms the preacher's text, is conveyed under the threefold division: 1. 'The Redeemer contemplated an important period—this hour. 2. The Redeemer was affected by a powerful emotion—now is my soul troubled. 3. The Redeemer received a remarkable testimony—then came there a voice, &c.' In illustrating the emotion expressed in the words of our Saviour, the preacher thus expounds the source of that ineffable anxiety.

"Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say! The perturbation thus expressed, arose from the vivid prospect of the sufferings before him. We are accustomed justly to expect, when men are concerned in the execution of arduous engagements, to which momentous consequences are attached, and around which difficulty and danger are placed, that there will be some fluttering, some agitation of mind, as they are watching the near approach of the hour of action. Anxiety, in such circumstances, we deem essential to the mental constitution of our nature. The bosom of the Messiah was the seat of human susceptibilities and affections; being, except as to sin, 'made in all things like unto his brethren.' And how much was there, in the work to which he was consecrated, calculated to excite this 'troubling of the soul!' when he meditated on the outrages about to be inflicted on his body, and on the spiritual agonies of which those of the flesh were but the feeblest shadows.—agonies in which he was to bear his Father's curse, and have the immortality of millions committed to him, in that one hour, or never, to redeem and to secure; when he reflected that the whole universe was bending an eager aspect towards him, that the divine plans so complicated and immense, here rested for completion, and would be jarred forever by a failure, and that here the inspirations of prophecies times directed all their hopes, and pointed all their mysteries; when he thought on the intense watchings of the angels, wrapt in solicitude for the issue, and on the efforts of the powers of darkness, leagueing all their might in one struggle, by the event of which they knew their empire would be established or overturned forever;—was there not indeed enough to produce on the sensitive spirit, a deep solemnity and perturbation without parallel and beyond conception! No wonder that for a moment he trembled; no wonder that the soul was darkened; no wonder that the sorrows so tremendous and so responsible created the agitation of apparent hesitancy and reluctance; well might the exclamation arise—Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say!

"Whenever the Son of man surveyed the season of his ignominy, it was always with this emotion. The apostle Paul has stated the fact with affecting emphasis,—that 'in days of his flesh, he offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death.' Behold him in the Garden of Gethsemane! He went thither after his celebration of the Passover; and he began to be sore amazed, and very heavy, and said to his companions, 'My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death.' He withdrew, and kneeled down and prayed,—'O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.' Again and again he pleaded, until an angel came from heaven to strengthen him: 'and being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.' O thou Son of God, how bitter must have been the mighty wrestlings of spirit, with which thou didst prepare to pass the scenes of the judgment-hall and Calvary;—O my soul, remember and this was sorrow endured for thee! Thy welfare was identified with the dread forebodings of 'the hour,' and assisted to give them all their intensity and gloom; for thee was the trembling of the soul; for thee, the sorrow even unto death; for thee, the agony; for thee, the bloody sweat! Canst thou remember it, and yet not be dissolved in tenderness, penitence and love!

"The belief of an approaching atonement appears to us necessary, to account for the agitation exhibited by the Redeemer in prospect of his trying hour. If his death were nothing but an ordinary lot, a mere martyrdom, a simple attestation to the sincerity of his character, and the truth of his claims, it is clear he did not meet his fate with firmness in any wise equal to what we may frequently find in the common annals of the world. Is he not far surpassed by many of his own followers! Have there not been martyrs, whose last moments, amidst excruciating tortures, were much more triumphant and illustrious than the Leader whose name they bore, and for whose cause they died. Do not the records of profane philosophy and patriotism too, furnish us with examples of courage and fortitude that merit far greater admiration and praise! The existence of emotion like that we have seen in the sufferer of Gethsemane and the cross, every one, unwilling to assign to him a station of vast and dishonorable inferiority, will regard as an evidence of something being involved in his agonies peculiar and unparalleled; and the explanation alone adequate and satisfactory, is to be found in cordially receiving the testimony, that 'the Lord laid upon him the iniquity of us all.' On the principle that what he endured was propitiatory, his dignity is preserved inviolate; the emotion is in harmony with the occasion, and the occasion with the emotion; and we are witnesses of a scene fraught with the most potent excitements for the repentance and faith by which we shall be prepared for the salvation and gratitude of eternity."

From the South. Rel. Telegraph.

THE IMPRISONED MISSIONARIES.

Mr. Editor,—I take the liberty of enclosing for publication, the proceedings of the Synod of N. Carolina, in relation to certain missionaries in the State of Georgia.

I agree in opinion with those who think that this subject in all its details and bearings, ought to be kept constantly before the public; for when it is fully understood and believed, the result must be, one general burst of honest indignation through the whole length and breadth of the land.

The stab which has been given to our national reputation is, I apprehend, too serious, afflictive and humiliating to be regarded with cold indifference.

If such oppression and outrage are to be met by the great body of the American people with silence and tame submission, then I confess that I have been mistaken either in my views of the affair alluded to, or in the character of the country which has given me birth. CIVIS.

October 25, 1831.

The Synod of North Carolina in the exercise of a right which they possess in common with their fellow citizens, of freely and fearlessly expressing their views in relation to public measures and events, which affect the honor, the dignity, and christian character of their beloved country, feel it to be a duty which they owe to themselves and to that part of the community which they represent, to notice with expressions of deep regret and unqualified remonstrance, the treatment to which certain christian missionaries of different denominations have, under form of legal process, recently been subjected in the state of Georgia.

Having examined the subject as presented to them through the medium of the press, and presuming that the details which have been given the public are substantially correct, they are constrained to say that in the case alluded to there has been a spectacle exhibited more shameful & shocking than any within their recollection, which has hitherto disgraced the annals of our free institutions.

To the honorable and high-minded authorities of their sister state, they would say, respectfully in the words of the eloquent DESEBE, one of the learned council who defended Louis the XVI, on his last trial,

'Recollect that history will judge your judgment.'

And when the political agitations of the day shall have subsided, and when reason and humanity shall have resumed their ascendency over the baser passions of the human mind, the Synod cannot but believe that the transactions of the summer of 1831 will be remembered only to be associated with the fell deeds of the dark ages, when tyranny and oppression were deemed no crimes, and when the principles of toleration and the rights of conscience were but imperfectly understood and scarcely recognized: Therefore,

Resolved, I. That the unrestrained insults—wanton indignities, and brutal cruelties to which some of the missionaries were subjected after their arrest, by individuals of the Georgia escort, savor more of the lawless barbarities of an Algerine banditti, than of the customary decencies and civilities of an American Guard.

II. That the severity of the sentence which, according to the laws of the State, has consigned to imprisonment and hard labor for the term of four years, some of the missionaries in question can find no apology either in the moral turpitude of their general character, or in the heinousness of the offence which they have committed, but must be ascribed to the violence of party politics and imbittered feeling displaying themselves in the arbitrary enactments of a high-handed dominion.

III. That the following assertion found in a letter, bearing the signature of the Executive of the state, namely,

"The missionaries of the different religious societies stationed among the Indians, had found their situation too lucritive to give them up willingly"—contains an insinuation altogether gratuitous, and unworthy the high station whence it proceeds: and until the contrary is made to appear, must be regarded as ungenerous and unfounded.

IV. That the Synod recommend to their churches and to Christians generally, to unite (especially at the Monthly Concert) in fervent prayer to God, that he would direct and sustain by his Almighty power and grace, the missionaries of the cross of Christ in the State of Georgia, who have been traduced and persecuted for righteousness' sake. That he would pardon the sin of all concerned in the the transactions alluded to, and that he would not lay their sins to the charge of our beloved country.

From the Vermont Chronicle.

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

The following letter, dated St. Quentin, Aug. 17 1831, was addressed to Prof. Hodge, of Princeton, and communicated by him for the N. Y. Observer. Implicit confidence may be placed in the statements of M. Monod.

"MY BELOVED FRIEND AND BROTHER.—How often, I may say daily, your name is in my mouth when I offer thanksgiving to the Lord our God, for the abundant blessing he is pouring on his churches in the United States! but seldom it is given to me to talk with you. I am called upon to-day to break this long silence, to make an appeal through you to American charity in behalf of numerous sufferers, many of them children of God. It has pleased the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ to bless the preaching of his name in this part of our country. A good number of Protestants, and yet more Roman Catholics, I believe, have been converted, and embraced the faith. Almost all of them are poor. Their faith has excited the enmity of many who were once their friends, and has deprived them of many of their former resources. Besides the same Gospel which has been the savor unto life to the poor, has been the savor unto death to the rich, who have withdrawn from our church, and thus diminished the means of helping the poor. Add to this that trade is entirely fallen in our departments, where trade was the life of the whole population, and left them in such a distressed condition, that we have seen for months, hundreds and thousands of workmen, and women with their children, going from village to village and from house to house, to beg for their bread, and you will easily conceive what is the condition of the poor Christians in the north of France. Many have been obliged to beg. Christians have seen their families several days without bread. Many are burdened with debts, and unable to pay them. Many, and even whole families are out of work. Others are so weakened by hunger or bad food, that they could work with difficulty. It is a sad thing indeed, to behold their pale, downcast countenances, to see children of God, members of Christ's body, sitting at the door of a Catholic, with the crowd of beggars, and waiting an hour for a morsel of bread. Had it not been for the help we have received from Christian friends in England and Switzerland, some probably would have starved to death. The faithful pastors too, having lost the favors of their unconverted consistories, have lost with it the usual supply which they received from churches, and are obliged as Moses in the wilderness, to provide food for their flock, instead of being maintained by them. Blessed be the name of the Lord! he awakened a spirit of charity; so that we are generously supplied, though, it seemed little in comparison with our wants, by some of his children. But these means are now entirely exhausted, & the distress continues. Trade is in the same state; no prospect even till now, appears of a change. My heart is grieved daily by these sufferings, by the sight of the brethren who come to me for help, and I can afford none. On this account, I am indeed to write to you, my beloved brother. Perhaps you and some of your friends may be enabled to engage Christians of America to help their distressed brethren of Europe. I know what will be the wish of your heart, and that if you can, you will, because you love him who loved us. This would become a new bond of union between the churches of France and the United States. How glorious, how dear your churches are in our eyes! Pray for our poor France. Our countrymen boast of their liberty, but they are slaves of Satan, the great tyrant, and the hand of the Lord is heavy upon them. There is ground to hope, however, that deliverance is at hand for the people of God. Many persons have become attentive to the gospel, who formerly refused to hear. Numbers in St. Quentin have renounced the Pope and Virgin Mary, and expressed their faith in the true and living Saviour. They rejoice amidst their sufferings, and, as one wrote to me, bless God, because though they have no food, their souls are filled with joy. Pray for us. American brethren we pray for you.—Love us, for we love you.

May the peace of God keep your hearts in Jesus Christ. Yours, B. MONOD.

From the Am. Pastors Journal

THE MARBLE MONUMENT.

[Furnished by a Layman.]

Our readers will recollect that in the Pastor's Journal for the year ending 1829, (vol. 1. page 69, we published an article denominated the "SPIRIT OF MISSIONS," or the "Little Pine on the banks of the Connecticut." It was an account of the conversion of L——S——, in 1815, then a member of Dartmouth College, and now a missionary in Ceylon, together with an interesting communication from him to the writer. The reader will be richly rewarded, if he will turn back to the No. of our "Journal" which contains it, and peruse that article again. "The Little Pine," as we then said, "will be remembered in heaven." L——S——still lives and labors in that far distant island of the sea; with what spirit the following extracts, which we have received of a respected correspondent in New-Hampshire, will show. Our correspondent writes:

"I cannot withhold from you an interesting fact concerning L——S——, and which is thus detailed in a letter from him to my brother B., at A., dated Oct. 12, 1830.—'For all I ever was at Hanover—for all I now am, or expect to be, in this world, I am indebted to a very little turn in Providence, with which you are acquainted. You recollect my brother Oliver, who was drowned in 1807, while a member of the junior class. You may recollect that the members of the United Fraternity erected the white marble monument to his memory. The generosity and kindness of strangers to one so dear to me, so took hold of my mind, that I often wept: and while my hand was hold of the plough, my heart was with those who had loved and buried my dear brother. These feelings however, I kept to myself for about two years.—I at last, began to fit for College, and was eventually introduced at Dartmouth college, just a year before I was fit for such a place. All this was the result of that marble which stands at the head of my brother's grave. All this time, God led me in a way I knew not, and was making use of that very marble to raise up a missionary for India. Happy, happy shall I be, if at last some in India may be able to testify, that I have been as useful to them as that monument has been to me."

"I will give you another beautiful extract from the same letter."

"Let us rejoice that, though on different sides of the world, we are included, if indeed we are the true followers of Christ, in the same Church—are engaged in the same cause—are members of the same body—baptized into the same spirit—have one faith—one hope. He that soweth and he that reapeth, shall rejoice together, and he that goeth out to battle, and he that stayeth by the staff, shall alike be rewarded. With these animating hopes and prospects, let us pray that we may be enabled to stand in our lot, and each build up that part of the wall which is over against his own house."

Such are the feelings with which the Christian remembers every object associated with his conversion to God. The "LITTLE PINE," and the "MARBLE MONUMENT," are objects of unspeakable interest to our distant brother, because they are inseperably connected in his remembrance of the grace of God, by which he is what he is. They shall perish, but the remembrance of them shall live in eternity.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM MR. JUDSON.

The following letter from Burmah, was addressed to Rev. James Grow, of Thompson, Conn. and by him furnished to the Christian Secretary.

RANGOON, March 4, 1831.

Rev. and dear Brother—Your letter of the 17th July last is before me, and your fifty dollars are in the hands of Mr. Jones, at Maulmein, who writes me, that he is ready to pay it to my order. The sentiments expressed in your letter, are cheering and encouraging to my heart. I wish that all Baptist ministers felt so, and would all make such presents, though I should prefer their being made directly to the board. My gratitude however, in both cases, is sincere.

I can spare time to write a few lines only, having a constant press of missionary work on hand, add to which, that the weather is dreadfully oppressive at this season. Poor Boardman has just died under it, and Mrs. Wade is nearly dead.—Brother Wade and I are now the only men in the mission, that can speak and write the language, and we have a population of above ten millions of perishing souls before us. I am persuaded, that the only reason why all the dear friends of Jesus in America do not come forward in support of missions, is mere want of information, (such information as they would obtain, by taking any of the periodical publications. If they could only see and know half what I do, they would give all their property, and their persons too.

The great annual festival is just past, during which multitudes come from the remotest parts of the country, to worship at the great Shway Dagong pagoda in this place, where it is believed that several real hairs of Gaudma are enshrined. During the festival, I have given away nearly 10,000 tracts, giving to men, but those who ask. I presume there have been six thousand applications at the house!—Some come two or three months journey, from the borders of Siam and China,—"Sir, we hear that there is an eternal hell. We are afraid of it.—Dr., give us a writing, that will tell us how to escape it." Others come from the interior of the country, where the name of Jesus Christ is a little known,—"Are you Jesus Christ's man? Give us a writing that tells about Jesus Christ." Brother Bennett works day and night at the press; but he is unable to supply us; for the call is great at Maulmein and Tavoy, as well as here, and the types are very poor, and he has no efficient help. The fact is, that we are very weak, and have to complain, that hitherto we have not been well supported from home. It is most distressing to find, when we are almost worn out, and are sinking, one after another into the grave, that many of our brethren in Christ at home, are just as hard and immoveable as rocks: just as cold and repulsive as the mountains of ice in the polar seas. But whatever they do, we cannot sit still and see the dear Burmans, flesh and blood like ourselves, and like ourselves possessed of immortal souls, that will shine forever in heaven, or burn forever in hell—we cannot see them go down to perdition, without doing our very utmost to save them. And thanks be to God, our labors are not in vain. We have three lovely churches, and about two hundred baptized converts, and some are in glory. A spirit of religious inquiry is extensively spreading throughout the country, and the signs of the times indicate that the great renovation of Burmah is drawing near. O if we had about twenty more, versed in the language, and means to spread schools, and tracts, and Bibles to any extent, how happy I should be. But those rocks and those icy mountains have crushed us down for many years. However, I must not leave my work to write letters. It is seldom that I write a letter home, except my journal, and that I am obliged to do. I took up my pen, merely to acknowledge your kindness, and behold, I have scratched out a long letter, which I hope you will excuse, and believe me, I am in your affectionate Brother in Christ. A. JUDSON.

A CHOICE SPIRIT.—Rev. Mr. Knowls, in his memoirs of Mrs. Judson, states, "that soon after the close of the war with the Burmans, Mr. Judson paid to the mission above $4000 chiefly received by him from the British Government as a compensation for his services as interpreter."

"Besides this, says the Ch. Watchman, he has paid into the Treasury of the Board, about $6000 being all his private property; making a total of $10,000. And every one knows that he has given his person to the work for more than eighteen years, and expects to wear out his life in the service of preaching the gospel to the poor Heathens in Burmah. Let this spirit be compared with the little that is done in the United States. Dr. Scudder of the Ceylon mission, in speaking of the little that has been effected by missionary effort says: Were the whole heathen populat on collected together, and those separated from it to whom the gospel is preached, their numbers would scarcely be missed!—Again he says; Nearly six hundred millions of our fellow men are on the road to eternal woe. These are exclusive of Jews, Roman Catholics, and the Greek Church." Oh, how few are the choice spirits, like Hall, Martin and Judson! Never will the missionary enterprise move forward in glory and power, till it shall receive an impulse from many such spirits as these, filled with the Holy Ghost and with zeal.

From the Christian Soldier.

RUM SELLERS TURNING UNIVERSALISTS.

We understand that two or three rum sellers, in this city, have left an evangelical church and gone over to the universalists. We suppose that they found it difficult to reconcile their business with their profession, and have therefore joined a society where they can deal out poison to their fellow men without restriction.

What a fine shelter for all kinds of wickedness does Universalism afford! Men can not only sell rum without reproach of conscience, but rejoice over the multitudes whom they send through the drunkard's grave, to Heaven! We most heartily wish that all those members of evangelical churches, who persist in this iniquitous traffic, would become Universalists. They would then fight under their appropriate flag, and maintain their character for consistency; while the churches, to which they are now a disgrace, would be rid of one of the worst of hindrances to spiritual prosperity.

It is a remarkable fact, that most of those who abandon a christian profession, and embrace Universalism, do it under the influence of some prevailing sin, and often plunge into a course of vice and dissipation; while those who renounce that sentiment, and embrace the religion of the gospel, become better members of society, and ornaments to the church of Christ.

PRIVATE DEVOTIONS OF ANCIENT CHRISTIANS.—The first Christians attended to the duty of secret worship; prayer and reading the word of God. Valens, deacon of the Church of Jerusalem a venerable old man, had so studied the Scriptures, that he could repeat whole pages together. So also could John, an Egyptian, who had his eyes put out and was condemned to the mines of Palestine. The word of Christ dwelt in him richly. What a consolation must this have been to himself and his fellow sufferers!—Secret worship is, indeed, a most important duty in prosperity & in adversity, to the young as well as to the aged. Satan is peculiarly anxious and artful to make Christians neglect, or perform without much earnestness this duty. Guard, reader, against the enemy. Be instant in prayer,—you stand defenceless, without your girdle, without your sword. How, then, will you be able to stand in the day of battle, when powerful temptations arise? The neglect of secret worship, is the first step of departure from the faith.—Ch. Records.

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, NOV. 17, 1831.

☞The absence of the Editor for the past week must serve as an apology for the want of the usual interest and variety in this paper.

We publish the following article from the Vt. Chronicle as well worthy the consideration of Christians of every denomination.—We give no opinion as to the correctness of the Editor's views.—We rather throw it out at this time as a subject which we should suppose might come before the convention that is to meet here in January next. We think it belongs to the subject assigned to Rev. Mr. Day.—A judicious and temperate discuss on on the principles involved in the question what can be done to promote harmony between different denominations; &c., is of the first importance and plainly involves the matters treated of below.

LETTERS OF DISMISSION.

It sometimes happens, that a member of a church wishes to discontinue his connection with it, and to unite with another church, of a different denomination; and churches and ministers have been much at a loss how to manage such cases. Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, &c. we regard as holding and practicing some errors, and we cannot conscientiously encourage our brethren to adopt those errors, by joining those churches. Those churches feel the same difficulty, when one of their number wishes to leave them and come to us. This prevents giving a letter of dismission and recommendation, as when the proposed transfer is from one church to another of the same order. On the other hand it is a fundamental principle of Congregationalism that every man has a right to judge for himself in this matter, and to be governed by his own convictions of duty. We can neither impede him in the exercise of this right ourselves, nor counte nance others in doing it. How shall these seemingly opposite duties be reconciled?

When a member of a Congregational church wishes to remove to another denomination, let a letter be given of the following import.

"A. B. who is a member of this church in regular standing, informs us that he wishes to be released from his connexion with this church, and to unite with you. We think his present views erroneous, on those points in which you differ from us, [here, if necessary, the points of difference may be specified, and our views of them stated,] and therefore we think that he ought to continue his relation with us, or remove it to some church holding the same views. Yet we cheerfully acknowledge his right to judge for himself, and to be governed by his own convictions of duty; and if, in the exercise of this right, he shall unite with you, we shall, when informed of the fact, consider his connexion with us as dissolved."

We see no reason why other churches may not give similar letters to members who may wish to unite with us. In this way, the church from which the member departs, neither sanctions what is regarded by its members as erroneous, nor exhibits the appearance of unchristianness, or ecclesiastical tyranny.

In all cases, the church with which a person proposes to unite should see to it, that he treats the church which he leaves with becoming tenderness and respect. A want of this will be good ground for his rejection, as destitute of Christian character.

Where the necessary credentials are withholden; the church to which one wishes to unite himself may address to the other a letter like this.

"A. B. has offered himself as a member of this church; and no reason why he should not be admitted is yet known to us. We understand that he has heretofore been connected with you. We earnestly request you, therefore, if you know any thing against his Christian character, on account of which he ought not to be admitted, to inform us of it within days from this date."

If an answer is returned, containing charges against the candidate, they should be investigated, and have their proper influence upon the final decision. If no answer is returned, or no charges made, the way is opened for his admission by profession, in the usual mode. In this way, membership may be removed from one church to another, without any breach of charity, and without any act of the church from which it is removed.

In no case should a person who is under censure or who has any difficulty with the church to which he belongs, or with any of its members, be admitted to another church, without the most satisfactory evidence that he has done all he ought to procure an amicable settlement.

Such is the advice which we have given, whenever we have been consulted on cases of this nature. If any one can give better, we will thank him to forward it.

Niles Register estimates that the various manufactories of Baltimore create a trade of $5 000, 000 per annum—one coach factory employs 80 persons.

For the Observer.

POPERY EXCLUDES THE BIBLE FROM ITS VOTARIES.

Dear Sir—The relation which creatures bear to their Creator, involves obedience to his law.—That this law should be obeyed, it is indispensably necessary that it should be known. I am well aware that there are traces of the law of nature found in man, even in his savage state; but this law although it leaves him inexcusable, cannot exhibit the way of access to an offended God. This important instruction is only contained in the revelation given us in the scriptures of truth. Is it not then, I ask, murder of the most aggravated kind, to exclude millions of the deluded votaries of Antichrist from the knowledge of the word of God; by which means sinners are brought from the kingdom of Satan and darkness, into his marvelous light! yes sir, not murder of the body but murder of their souls.—What wrath! what shadows, clouds and darkness hang over the prospects of Popes, of Councils, and of Priests; who make a trade of trafficking in the souls of men.

That these are facts, a reference to the canons of their own church will plainly shew. See Council of Trent, Sess. 4. decret. de Can Scrip. "That it is not for the common people to read the Scriptures, and if they should, more prejudice than benefit would arise to them from the reading of them."—"That the Holy Scriptures are dark and obscure." Belarmine, de verbi Dei.—Others represent them as a nose of wax without the Pope; having no more authority than Æsop's Fables. Cereseus De Trad. page 41, declares "That it was the devil's invention to permit the common people to read the Bible." Thiereus, de Democrac. ch. 21, declares "That he knew husbandmen possessed of the devil, because they were able to discourse of the Scriptures." These tyrannical injunctions have been rigorously executed. A bookseller in Avignon in France, was put to death for selling French Bibles. The Popish bishop and his myrmidons, led him to the stake, with two Bibles tied round his neck, and he and they were burned to ashes. Vide Bishop Jewel's reply. A woman of Sansay in France, was convicted of keeping a Bible in her house: she was urged by the Jesuits to burn it, but she declared she would sooner burn her body than her Bible; it was burned before her, then she was stringed and dragged by horses through the streets. Let none imagine that these were practised only in days of Auld Lang Syne; or when the dense shades of ignorance more generally prevailed: on this principle Popery still acts, it is the same whether in the 15th or 19th centuries. In Ireland at the present time, (the fact is notorious, that) in the Catholic districts where the Hibernian Bible Society carries the Bible into the common schools; the priests immediately remove them, and threaten to curse them, bell, book and candle-light, if they read them.—I might easily fill up my paper with such details as these, but I proceed to bring these principles and practices to the law and the test more, if they stand not according to these, it is because there is no light in them; every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to it, lest his deeds should be manifested.

Now for the ordeal. God commanded Israel, saying These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thy heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down & when thou risest up,—they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them on the posts of thine house and on thy gates.—This is addressed to all ranks of men. Jose his tells us, that the children of the Jews were so familiar with the law that they could repeat it without the book. God commanded Joshua the chief commander of Israel, saying, "This book of the law, shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, then shalt thou make thy way prosperous." He commands the King to write him a copy of the law, and meditate therein all the days of his life. What Kings and generals, heads of families and children, read, study and understand the word of God! Yes, says God: No says Popery.—If we do it, it will be to your prejudice. Search the Scriptures (saith Jesus Christ,) for they are they which testify of me. No says Popery, searching the Scriptures, turns common men into devils.—They testify of me, saith Jesus. No says Popery, they are dark and mysterious, it is the oral tradition committed to the holy mother church, the key given to Peter, which unlocks their spiritual treasures. Let my word (saith Christ) dwell in you richly. No, says Popery, it must neither dwell in your schools, your houses, nor your hearts. I charge you, (says Paul to the Thess.) that this Epistle be read to all the holy brethren." I charge you, saith the Pope under the penalty of my curse that ye do not read it; I adjure you, says Christ, that it be read to all the holy brethren. I prohibit it, saith the Pope from being read to any. Blessed are they who hear the word of God and keep it, says Christ. Cursed are they who hear it and retain it in their possession, saith Popery. We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto we would do well to take heed, saith Peter. No saith the Pope, you must not take heed to it, for it would be to your prejudice. How wide the contrast between Peter and the Pope, now standing the prescribed relation! Christ commended the Bereans, for they were more noble than those of Thessalonica—because they searched the Scriptures daily, to see whether the things they heard were true, or not. But Popery anathematizes all who question for a moment, what his holiness, and the holy mother church declare to be law and gospel. In this contrast, I have endeavored to pull aside the mask; I have studied plainness so that every man of common sense, in this side of sheer deism, may at once perceive the usurpation and tyranny of Popes and Popery.

Tradition is their only subterfuge: once get the populace to believe that the Scriptures without the ipse dixit of the Pope, have no more authority than Æsop's Fables, and what absurdity cannot they be persuaded to believe! Hear the declaration of Bristow, when teaching his scholars how to grapple with Protestants. "You must (said he) first get the proud heretics out of the weak and slippery castle of Scripture, and bring them into the plain field of traditions; and then the rewards will run—set the Pope on the throne and Christ at his footstool; and you are sure of the victory." Similar to this is the declaration of Canus, who taught his followers "that there is more force in tradition, to confute heretics, than in Scripture." Doleful as this consideration is, the slavish principles of vain traditions and passive obedience have nearly run their round. Yes, yes, America has taught the nation of the world, that man is born free; she hath hoisted the beacon whose rays have already crossed the mountain wave of the Atlantic; disseminating a knowledge of the rights of man through every artery and vein of society; so that, the chains of Popish thraldom, which have so long bound the vassals of Popery in Europe; are parting like the cords and the withs which once bound Samson of old.—But sir, in proportion to the demolition of Popery in Europe, and the shaking of the tripple crown of Antichrist, in the same ratio does it spread in America; thirty or forty years past there was only one Popish bishop in America and now there are nine: like the locusts under Abadon, the advocates of Popery are overspreading the West and almost devouring every green thing.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

Permit me to enquire; is there no remedy for this evil? It is not the persons but the principles I reprobate. As fellow men I lament their condition, that they are given up to strong delusion to believe lies; and this condition is almost hopeless. I am aware that it has been said, that of all human beings little can be effected with them. We cannot get them into our churches, nor the Bible into their houses—this is too true; while the wild Indian of the woods, and the savage of the Pacific Isles, yield submission to the gospel; the Catholic still clings to his images, and the traditions of priestcraft.—Notwithstanding all this, I am apprehensive something might be done; see what is now doing by the Reformation Society lately instituted in England: it is supporting agents, who travel through every city and town of England, Scotland and Ireland, particularly in the Catholic districts; and call on priests to public discussion. In some instances they have accepted the challenge, and been completely foiled, and in others they have prohibited their votaries to attend these public discussions; but cannot restrain them. This is effecting much in Britain; will America, proverbially enterprising, be behind? Surely not. Yours, J. F.

For the Observer.

THE MISSIONARIES IN THE STATE PRISON.

When Peter was apprehended and put in prison by Herod, "prayer was made without ceasing of the church of God for him," and it was not made in vain. God heard the supplications of his people, and sent down a heavenly messenger to take off Peter's chains, and lead him out, and set him at full liberty. Is there not the same encouragement to pray for our abused and persecuted brethren in the State prison of Georgia, that there was to pray for Peter in the prison at Jerusalem? And is not this a matter of sufficient importance, to call forth the united, fervent prayer of the church throughout our land?

I Peter had known that the church prayed for him so importunately, it is likely he would have felt a very deep interest in those prayers. And if our dear brethren, imprisoned in this boasted land of freedom, were to learn that their case was extensively made a subject of special prayer; it could not but be a great consolation to them. Would it not then be suitable that some day soon, say the last day of the present year, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, that God would mercifully, and very signally interpose in behalf of these his suffering servants.

For the Observer.

I will be a Temperance man if it is for my interest. This is the language too frequently used on being presented with a Temperance paper, by many individuals. This temperance principle has been demonstrated to the full extent in this place recently. A Grocery was opened in this village (during the past season kept by a father and son * * * * young man being a member of the Young Men's Temp. Soc. They commenced without ardent spirit and in the report of the Young Men's Society read at a quarterly meeting a few weeks since it was stated that one respectable Grocery was in operation not consecrated to Rum and the destruction of mankind. The next morning however this respectable grocery, commenced the traffic in ardent spirit, the young man giving as a reason 'that they did not receive so much encouragement from the friends of Temperance as they expected, and therefore they must commence selling.' Thus for a few dollars and cents another engine of destruction is put in operation, and for a few dollars and cents all principle is bartered. Let such principles prevail throughout the land, and in a few years ruin will sweep through the land, 'Columbia is fallen.' This is the principle that actuated Benedict Arnold—Dollars and cents—shall it be applauded or despised?

COLD WATER FROM BLOCKPORT.

To the Editor of the Observer.

In your paper of the the 3d inst. we observed an article copied from the Sandy Hill Temperance Advocate, in which it was stated that a paper was returned to that office which had been directed to the 'Secretary of the Temperance Society,' at Rochester on which was an endorsement "SENT BACK FROM ROCHESTER—TEMPERATE ENOUGH WITHOUT IT."

Presuming that a Secretary of the Monroe co. Temperance Society must have been intended, we think proper to state that we are the Secretaries of said Society, and have neither of us any knowledge of the transaction referred to, except what we learn from the foregoing article.—Although much has already been done in this county to promote the cause of Temperance, we are not quite prepared to endorse the sentiment expressed in the memorandum on the paper returned through the post office.

ASHLEY SAMSON,
Cor. Sec'ry Mon. Co. T. S.
EVERARD PECK,
Rochester, Nov. 15. Cor. Sec'ry.

"Strong meat."—A company of Christians being together, one asked what was meant by the strong meat that the apostle said some needed? Why, says one, I suppose it means the doctrines of predestination, and others that cluster around it—another quickly replied, oh no, I think it means a strict church discipline! Well, says a third, I believe it means discharging Christian duties, being really engaged in doing something for the cause of Christ. That may be, said a minister, who was often preaching missionary sermons, and taking up collections, I am apt to think it consists in believers loving Christ and souls, more than money.—Baptist Repository.

AN EXAMPLE TO BE IMITATED.

The Transylvania Presbytery, at its late semi-annual meeting, resolved to support a Missionary in the foreign field. Several Presbyteries in the Eastern States have passed similar resolutions; but we believe this Presbytery has the honor of taking the lead in this good work in the west. Shall not this praise—worthy example awaken other Presbyteries to corresponding efforts!—West. Lum.

A NEW COMER.—We have received the first number of the Hearld of Freedom, published in Bethel, Ct. and devoted to the "democratic principle that all men are born free"—except the church and state men in politics, who are all born fanatics, and to bear the lash of freemen.—N. H. Advertiser.

VIEWS ABROAD.

Every thing concurs to show the extreme interest with which our American revivals are regarded by Christians in Europe. Recent travellers state, that there is nothing which so occupies the attention of British brethren. Doubtless great good would result, if two or three of their most spiritual and intelligent ministers would take the trouble to come over here, and see for themselves, for five or six months, what are the means, process and effects of a revival of religion. —N. Y. Evangelist.

At the last anniversary of the British Home Missionary Society, the Rev. H. Townly thus concluded a very interesting speech.

"I think sir, we stand greatly in need of some New-York Showers. I have been given to understand, that since the beginning of February last, in the city of New-York, it is supposed that about two thousand souls have been savingly converted to God by his blessing on the faithful preaching of the cross of Christ. I cannot hear of such things without giving glory to God, and taking shame to myself, and praying that a similar work may go on here, that similar showers of divine influence may come down, and visit our city and our whole land. We have been told that this kind cometh not out but by prayer and fasting: and if there were more prayer and fasting, we might rend the heavens, and an aperture be opened, through which, showers of blessing would come down."

Missionaries to the Pacific.—We understand that twenty Missionaries of the American Board, viz., eight preachers and their wives, a physician and his wife, and two printers, have received appointments, and are expected to sail from this port, in the ship Averick, about the 15th of next month, for the Pacific. They are destined, we believe, to the Marquesas and Sandwich Islands. —New Bedford Register.

Springfield, Otsego Co.—We have heard from this place, by a clergyman who left on Friday last; at which time a protracted meeting was in session, full of promise. The Lord was evidently present by his Spirit. Several interesting cases of hopeful conversion, had already occurred.—Wes. Rec.

Striking Providences.—When such men as Evarts, Cussman, Bissell, Rice and De Witt, are suddenly removed in the midst of great usefulness, and when missionaries, even in our own land, are condemned and imprisoned for preaching the gospel to the destitute and despised, ought not the churches to lay it to heart? The Lord means something should be learned by such providences. What is it? Is it that we may be more diligent, and work while the day lasts? that we may be more liberal in charitable contributions? that we may pray more earnestly, and with more faith? Is it that we may trust in him alone, and not depend on any arm of flesh?—Wes. Rec.

DOMESTIC.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIVES.

A most distressing occurrence took place yesterday a little before one o'clock, at the Powder Magazine at the extreme Eastern verge of the city. The building lately contained about 140 kegs of powder, which being deemed unsafe, was removed during Tuesday and yesterday morning to the Magazine of Fort Wayne, with the exception of about 150 or 200 lbs. damaged, that was emptied into a half mercerce, the coopering of which, it is thought, elicited a spark and caused the whole to explode. The concussion was felt in all parts of the town, and an immense cloud of white smoke soon explained the cause. The building (brick) was driven to pieces, and fragments thrown in every direction to the distance of two hundred yards, and we lament to say, every person within it (five in number as far as yet ascertained,) instantly killed, and their bodies and limbs thrown to a great distance by this powerful agent. The end of the building was hurled against the Artillery Old Laboratory (brick) about 15 feet distant, which crushed it, and the roof being of wood caught fire and burnt with the other wood work. The latter building contained nothing. The number of persons killed by this awful event is seven, five within and two without the building, as follows:—

Henry W. Stoy, Constable, who was aiding in superintending the removal.

Four coloured coopers, two men and two boys, free, who were engaged in putting the kegs in order.

A white child, about five years old, outside, son of Mr. Johnson, who formerly kept a sailor boarding house on the Bay. The mother, Mrs. J. was also outside near the building, and is much burnt and severely bruised, but may recover.

A black boy, who was playing not far distant; he died in about an hour.

The sight, after the accident, was the most revolting we ever witnessed. The bodies of two and detached parts of the bodies of two more of the coopers, have been found, together with another body, which it is hardly possible to identify as black or white, from the effects of the fire, from whence it was drawn, in the afternoon, but is supposed to be Mr. Stowy's, all the others employed in the work, were before accounted for.

Mrs. Johnson died of her wounds yesterday about 5 o'clock.—Savannah Georgian.

WILKESBARRE, (Penn.,) Nov. 2.—Melancholy occurrence.—We understand a distressing occurrence took place, a few days since, in Plymouth; the particulars were the following:—A man by the name of Heacock procured a keg of powder for the purpose of blasting. Having taken out the head of the cask, he took a small quantity in his hand to ascertain its ignitible qualities: but unhappily in communicating the fire, a spark was conveyed to the cask, and the whole instantly exploded. Mr. Heacock and wife, together with a little girl, were shockingly burned and mutilated, and nearly all the furniture of the house destroyed. The little girl has since died, and the life of Mr. Heacock is despaired of. This adds another awful warning to those who have occasion for the use of powder.

Five vessels have arrived at this port, within a few weeks, belonging to one owner, Joseph Peabody Esq. which have secured to the custom House, duties to the amount of $250,000, being a greater amount of duties than from all the vessels entered at this port in any other month since the adoption of the Constitution.—The greatest amount before secured in a month, $217,000, in October 1807.—Salem (Mass.) Register.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Church Burnt Down.—This morning, between five and six o'clock, St. Mary's (Roman Catholic) Church in Sheriff-street, was discovered to be on fire: when first seen the fire was raging about the Altar. It was but a short time before the entire building was enveloped in flames, and soon destroyed. It was insured for $8,000.

The flames soon communicated to the following buildings on Sheriff street:—

No. 23, a three-story frame building, owned by Mrs. Halsey, and occupied by A. Kennedy, slightly injured.

No. 25, a two-story frame building, owned by Mr. Vandewater, occupied by Timothy and Benjamin Ward and Jacob Sandford—destroyed.

No. 27, A two story frame building, owned and occupied by Elias Noe, destroyed.

Nos. 29, and 31, St. Mary's Church, destroyed.

No. 33. A two story, well finished brick building, owned by Mr. Wood, occupied by Ann and Sarah Kennedy and William Stebbins. All destroyed except the walls: no insurance.

No. 35—A two story brick building, owned by Ira Clark, occupied by Ira Clark, Nathaniel E. Adams, and SarahClark—much injured in the rear.

Two or three stables were burnt down.

The Methodist Episcopal Church took fire, before any serious damage was done.

The entire loss sustained is estimated at upwards of $20 000.—N. Y. Sepectator

A queer 'un, and not so bad. The following advertisement appears in the Broome Republican. If the advertiser is as honest in his dealings as in his professions, he will regain a reputation which he more than intimates has been in rather a shabby way:

"Temperance Tailoring.—John B. M'Intosh informs his former friends, and the public generally, that having returned from Ireland, he has re-commenced the tailoring business, at his dwelling house, at the west end of the bridge. —Having entirely relinquished the use of Irish as well as Yankee whiskey, joined the temperance society, and become temperate in his habits, he assures his friends he will also be temperate in his charges, and take as little cabbage as any other tailor in the village. He will also cut clothes gratis for those who are unable to pay provided they belong to the temperate class of the community."

From the Bellefonte (Ohio) Gazette.

Important Indian News.—We learn, that on Wednesday last, Mr. Gardiner, the Commissioner on the part of the United States, concluded a preliminary agreement in writing, with the Chiefs of the Wyandot tribe of Indians, for a cession of all their lands in Ohio, on terms similar to those of the treaties made with the other Indian tribes in this State during the past summer. The final conclusion of a complete treaty depends solely on the report to be made by an exploring Delegation of the Wyandots now on their way to examine the country designed for them, west of the state of Missouri.

American Education Society.—Quarterly Meeting of the Directors.—The usual meeting was held in Boston, on Wednesday, the 12th day of October. Thirty one new applicants, connected with fifteen different literary institutions, were received on probation, making the whole number received by the American Presbyterian Education Societies this quarter, fifty one. The applicants belong to nine different States.

Collector's Office, Troy, Oct. 21.—Cleared, Boat Observer, Capt. Watson of the Hudson & Erie Line, for Buffalo, with a cargo of 85,016lbs. merchandize, and paying a toll of $403 50; which is $13 84 more than ever before has been paid upon any single cargo upon the Erie canal. —Troy Budget.

Steamboat Lost.—The Steamboat Union, Capt. Haddleston, was lost on her way to St. Louis, on the 15th ult.—Nearly all her cargo was damaged or lost.—Penn. Inq.

Dangerous Institution.—It is said the receipts of the Park Theatre, N. Y. for a fortnight, were $11,000—And that Forrest's four nights of "the Gladiator," produced $4 400.

Where are now the alarmists! Where are the Argus-eyed and trumpet-voiced defenders of the wealth, and safety and freedom of the nation?—Here is a single Theatre, among half a dozen more in a single city, that takes up more money than both the Bible and Foreign Mission Society.—Wash. Spec.

A relicted Statesman.—John Quincy Adams has the life of his father nearly ready for the press. His leisure hours are employed in the preparation of some other works, among which is a poetical version of David's Psalms.

New translation of Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History.—A. H. Malby, of New Haven, will shortly publish "A new and literal translation" of this valuable work, by J. Murdock, D. D. It will be accompanied with copious additional notes, original and selected, and will be comprized in three volumes, 8vo. of about 500 pages each, and furnished to subscribers at $3 per volume.

CAPTURE OF NAT TURNER.—It is with much gratification we inform the public, that the sole contriver & leader of the late insurrection in Southampton Va., concerning whom such a hue and cry has been kept up for months, and so many false reports circulated; the murderer Nat Turner, has at last been taken, and safely lodged in prison.

It appears that on Sunday morning last, Mr. Phipps having his gun, and going over the lands of Mr. Francis, (one of the first victims of the hellish crew) came to a place where a number of pines had been cut down, and perceiving a slight motion among them, cautiously approached, and when within a few yards, discovered the villian who had so long eluded pursuit, endeavored to ensconce himself in a kind of cave, the mouth of which, was concealed with brush. Mr. P. raised his gun into fire; but Nat hailed him, and offered to surrender. Mr. P. ordered him to give up his arms; Nat then threw away an old sword, which it seems was the only weapon he had.—The prisoner as the captor came up, submissively laid himself on the ground, and was thus securely tied—not making the least resistance!

Mr. P. took Nat to his own residence, where he kept him until Monday morning—and having apprised his neighbors of his success, a considerable party accompanied him and his prisoner to Jerusalem, where, after a brief examination, the culprit was committed to jail.

Our informant, (one of our own citizens, who happened to be in the country at the time) awards much praise to the people of Southampton for their forbearance on this occasion. He says that no violence was offered Nat—who seemed indeed, one of the most miserable objects he ever beheld—dejected, emaciated and ragged. The poor wretch, we learn, admits all that has been alleged against him; says that he has not time been five minutes from the scene of his atrocities; and that he has frequently wished to give himself up, but could never summon sufficient resolution.

Mr. Phipps, as the sole captor of Nat, is alone entitled to the several rewards, (amounting in the aggregate, as we understand, to about $1100 —,) ordered by the Commonwealth and different gentlemen, for his apprehension: and we are told that in this instance Fortune has favored a very deserving individual.—to whom, in addition to the pleasure arising from the recollection of the deed, the money derived from it will not be unacceptable.—Petersburg Int.

PAYING OFF THE NATIONAL DEBT.—The secretary of the treasury has given notice to the holders of the 4 1-2 per cent stock, of $5,000, 000, created in pursuance of an act of Congress, passed on the 24th May, 1824, that it will be paid off on the first day of January next. Also, that 5 per cent stock created by law on the 15th of May, 1820, amounting to $999,900,13, which will be paid on the 2nd day of January next, to the proprietors thereof. It is confidently expected that the revenue of 1831 will reach thirty millions of dollars, eight millions more than the estimate.

IGNORANCE OF THE BRITISH PEASANTRY. The Committee of Herefordshire Auxiliary Bible Society lately instituted a canvass of every house throughout one third of that county. The result was, that out of 41,017 individuals visited, only 24,242 were able to read.

Ignorance a Source of Crime.—As the result of an inquiry instituted by the British and Foreign School Society respecting the unhappy individual convicted at the late special commissions for acts of violence and outrage, it appears that, of 138 prisoners tried in Berkshire, 76 could not read: of 50 tried at Lewes, only one could read well, and nearly the whole were deplorably ignorant of even the rudiments of religious knowledge. Results not materially different were obtained by other inquiries.—Christian Mirror.

FOREIGN.

From Correspondent O. P. Q. of Lon. Morn. Chron.

AGITATION AND TURMOIL IN PARIS.

PARIS, Sept. 18, 1831.—Paris is in a state of agitation difficult to describe, and of dissatisfaction which cannot be expressed! The system of Perier and the Renniers now appear before us in all its nakedness, its cruelty, its indifference to the feelings and to the rights of men, and France finds herself on the verge of being deprived of the benefits which were promised to her by the Revolution of July. I have told you it would come to this, and I predicted that the fall of Poland would lead to consequences of a general, serious and important character in France. The agitation which is felt in Paris is general. It is not the agitation merely of grief, or disappointment or surprise, but it is the agitation of a profound sentiment of national indignation and national anger. It is not the agitation of the surface of society, or of the surface of human feelings, prejudices, and anxieties, but it is a deep, profound, settled feeling of agitation, similar to that which a man would feel if he saw the prospect of being deprived by death of all his worldly hopes, the loss of friends, relations, fortune, home, and reputation. Do not deceive yourselves, or let others deceive you, by the hope or the belief that it is the agitation of the moment —that the new Prefect of Police, appointed in this day's Moniteur, will set all to rights; or that arrests, domiciliary visits, the sabres of two regiments of Carabiniers, just arrived in the capital; or the proclamation of our yesterday's Prefect, M. Vivien; or our to-day's Prefect, M. Sauvinet, will re-establish peace, give strength to the Government, and force to the Ministers; and that this public demonstration of opinion will evaporate into mere air, and be forgotten, in a few hours or a few days. No such thing. The agitation is not that of a party, but of all parties; not of Napoleonists alone, or Republicans alone, or patriots alone, or of the fauhourgs, or of the students, or of the Ecole Polytechnique alone. No, no; it is the agitation of all classes, and all opinions and all students, and all schools, and all journals; and every one who is not a placeman or a rentier, exclaims,—"We can go on so no longer." If the Courier Francais, the National, the Constitutionel, the Temps, and the Journal du Commerce, for the moment beg the citizens to wait—to create no disturbances—to attend the result of the debates, which will commence to-morrow in the Chamber of Deputies, and to leave to the representatives of France the duty of overthrowing the present system, without disturbing the very basis of our political existence, it is because they hope and believe the results of this discussion will be to make war for Poland—overthrow the juste-milieu system—to send back to his bank and his iron mills, the commercial Minister of France, M. Casimir Perier, and to convince Louis Philip that France will not be humiliated—and that the questions of peace or war, Belgium, Portugal, Italy and Spain, must indeed be placed on a very different footing. But should these expectations be most unexpectedly disappointed—should the Chamber approve the system of Perier, by any vote such as that which it has not yet come to, and should the President of the Council obstinately refuse to leave the helm of public affairs, and persist in steering the vessel upon rocks or quicksands, then prepare for other language, for other conduct, for other policy, and for other proceedings; and prepare, should it be necessary, for another, and even an immediate revolution! All wise men, all moderate men, all men who desire peace, but with liberty and order, but with national honor and independence, desire most ardently that the Chamber of Deputies may to-morrow or Tuesday adopt such decisions as will lead to an immediate change of Ministry, and an immediate change of system; but should this not be the case, the agitation will increase—the troubles will become yet more general—and violence and combats must decide the rest. Remember what I have often told you. France will not be cajoled out of either the principle or the consequences of the revolution of July 1830.

The tumults in Paris during the whole of yesterday, and which have been resumed to-day with increased violence, were made not by Carlists in the disguise of workmen—and not by priests with blue smock frocks and sham mustachios—and not by the violent portion of the Republican party: but by rich and poor, learned and ignorant, young and old, workmen and shopkeepers, men and women, boys and girls—by, in fine, all classes, ranks, ages, sexes, and opinions. When the Journals of the Minister speak of a few hundred individuals having done this thing—and of a few hundred persons having done that—they deceive only those who did not see Paris, and did not behold the scenes to which their statements refer. Not hundreds, but thousands, not thousands but tens of thousands, you may with safety state, did this and that—and all Paris, from the Barrier du Trone to that of Enfer, and from that of Roule to that of Montmartre—all Paris was in a state of agitation and tumult. In some places orators addressed the multitude, and cried "Vive la Pologne," as on the Place de l'Odeon. In other places, orators exhibited placards, and cried, "Abas les Ministres," as in the Palais Royal. In other places, they compelled M. Perier, and M. Sebastiani to quit their voiture, and take refuge in the Hotel of the Ministers of Justice, as on the Place Vendome. In other places, the people overthrew the omnibuses, to make barricades, in order to prevent the cavalry from charging them, as opposite the Cafe de Paris and on the Boulevard Mountmartre. In other places they entered the Theaters, as in that of Nouveautes, Varieties, and Italiens, and compelled the actors to retire from the stage and discontinue their performances.—Indeed, every where, the Theatres were closed. "Retire, retire!" cried the celebrated Fontan at the Theatre des Nouveautes, "and do not seek to amuse us with your follies, whilst our brethren in Poland are being massacred." In other places, the common people, sought for arms, and entered the shops of fire arm manufacturers, and thus sought to defend themselves from the swords of the Municipal Guards and the trampling of the Cavalry. The drums beat to arms in every direction, but the National Guards were deaf to the sound, and out of a battalion of 2, 500 National Guards, only 103 men made their appearance. The 2,300 who refused to attend, thus showed the nature of their opinions, and how dangerous it is to trifle with national honor and national feeling. In other quarters, the troops of the line refused to bayonet the people, and contenteued themselves with entreating the citizens to retire. In other parts, the "passages," similar to your Burlington Arcade, were encumbered with people who barricaded the entrances, and there sung the Marseilloise till the hour of midnight. In vain did the foot police, entreat protest, and fight their way through the dense masses of people in the environs of the Palais Royal—and every where the cry was heard of "Abas les Ministres." "Cassimeir Perier," "Vive la Pologne," and "Vive la Liberty.

POLISH FRONTIERS SEPT. 17.

According to all accounts, the Polish troops that left Warsaw have taken up a hostile position in the neighborhood of Modlin and Zacrozyn. The appearance of a new paper, The National Gazette, is attributed to some of the members of the Diet, who have accompanied the army. The first number, which has just appeared, contains a proclamation addressed to the Polish Nation, calling upon all capable of bearing arms to continue the struggle. From Augustowo we learn that some days ago a small detachment of Polish insurgents arrived there. The Russian garrison at Augustowo retreated on the first appearance of the insurgents, whose force had been greatly exaggerated; but they soon returned, drove the insurgents out, of whom many were taken and punished with death.—Prussian State Gazette.

PROCLAMATION.

'Head Quarters at Kunow, Sept. 12.

"Poles!—Four days ago a most sanguinary, and obstinately contested battle was fought under the walls of our capital. Before the eyes of your wives, sisters and mothers, under the view of the whole city of Warsaw, the Polish troops have slain more than 20,000 of the enemy, and the entrenchments which were formed by the labor of your fellow citizens have now become the graves of the invaders. To save the town from destruction, to weaken the force of the enemy, our troops have evacuated the capital.

"The cannon, ammunition, and all implements of defence, the Government, the Deputies, all the Magistrates, have withdrawn with the Commander-in-Chief and the army to Modlin. Gen. Krukowiecki is no longer President of the Government.

"In consequence of an armistice hostilities are for a moment suspended; but, my countrymen, let not that moment be for you a period of repose which might divert you from the great object of the deliverance of your native land; employ it rather to redouble your strength in new efforts to establish the existence and independence of Poland.

"Is Warsaw for us all our country? Do its walls and its inhabitants, within so narrow a circuit form the limits of the nation? After so many great sacrifices, after so many dearly achieved victories, which have justly astonished the world, shall our high thoughts, our feelings, our hopes—shall all these be at the last moment of expectation dissatisfied, as if the waters of the Warthe, the Vistula, the Dniester, the Bug and the Dwina, did not present to us the inheritance of our fathers, which, again reconquered, we will convey to our children? Who then would treacherously violate the sacred oath we have sworn, to shed the last drop of our blood in the defence of the last foot of our native land? No! the Pole is too proud to fail in the pledge given in the face of the whole world, or to look forward with a doubt of victory while he still is able to lift an arm! He who can value liberty, who calls himself freeman, will also know how to break the fetters attempted to be imposed upon him.

"Poles! Yet one moment more of endurance and reliance on, and the end of the glorious contest, whose result will be the restoration of our freedom, independence and rights, is at hand. The seals of victory must unquestionably be in favor of the zeal and resolution of our soldiers, and the sacrifices of our citizens. History exhibits no example of a united nation, striving to shake off a great object, hoary decrepid in its honor. Did not our ancestors, ninety years ago, locate their capital, and notwithstanding, was not their nationality and independence secured? Never let us forget that we owe every thing to our country, our common mother. Her existence is ours; we were her chains. Then let us once more renew in our hearts the already sworn oath, that we resolve to be a free people; that we will not lay down the sword of our fathers until we recover liberty and independence. Henceforth let our motto be—'Death or Victory!' and when we shall stand in the order of battle, we will meet the enemy with the cry—'Live the Country!' and thus we will conquer.

ROZISKI."

IGNORANCE AND CRUELTY.

Frontiers of Hungary, Sept. 1.

The dreadful scenes in some counties of Hungary are now put an end to by the interference of the military, and those guilty of them receive the punishment of their crimes. Yet great as is the guilt of these individuals, and great as their punishment may necessarily be, they are to be pitied as having been deluded, though by their own fault. The suspicion that the cholera was caused by poisoning the wells was universal among the peasantry of the counties of Zips and Zemplin, and every one was fully convinced of its truth. The first died in consequence of taking the preservatives—whether by an immoderate use of medicine, or whether they thought they were to take chlorate of lime internally, is not known.

This story, with the sudden and violent breaking out of the cholera in Clukman, lead the peasants to a notion of the poisoning of the wells, which spread like lightning. In the sequel, upon the attack of the estate of Count Czaki, a servant of the chief bailiff was on the point of being murdered, when, to save his life, he offered to disclose something important. He said that he received from his master two pounds of poisonous powder, with orders to throw it into the wells; and, with an axe over his head, took an oath publicly in the church to the truth of his statement. These circumstances, and the fact that the peasants when they forcibly entered the houses of the land-owners every where found chlorate of lime, which they took for the poisonous powder, confirmed their suspicions, and drove the people to madness. In this state of excitement, they committed the most appalling excesses. Thus for instance, when a detachment of thirty soldiers, headed by an ensign, attempted to restore order in Klukman, the peasants, who were ten times their number, fell upon them. The soldiers were released, but the ensign was bound, tortured with scissors and knives, then beheaded, and his head fixed on a pike as a trophy. A civil officer, in company with the military, was drowned, his carriage broken to pieces, and chlorate of lime being found in the carriage, one of the servants was compelled to eat it till he vomited blood, which again confirmed the notion of poison.

On the attack of the house of the lord at Klukman, the Countess saved her life by the most piteous entreaties; but the chief bailiff, in whose house chlorate of lime was unhappily found, was killed, together with his son, a little daughter, a clerk, a maid, and two students who boarded with him. So the bands went from village to village; wherever a nobleman or physician was found, death was his lot, and in a short time it was known that the high constable of the county of Zemplin, several counts, nobles, and parish priests, had been murdered. A clergyman was hanged because he refused to take an oath that he had thrown poison into the wells; the eyes of the Countess were put out, and innocent children cut to pieces. Count Czaki, having first ascertained that his family was safe, fled from his estate at the risk of his life, but was stopped at Kirchtrouf, pelted with stones, and wounded all over, torn from his horse, and only saved by a worthy merchant, who fell on him, crying, "Now I have got the rascal." He drew the Count into a neighboring convent, where his wounds were dressed, and a refuge afforded him. The secretary who accompanied him was struck from his horse with an axe, but saved in a similar manner, and in the evening conveyed with his master to Lentschaw. The stewart of Count Czaki was killed, his chief bailiff bound, thrown on the ground, and half-beaten to death; after which he was dragged to a smithy, and bound to a bench, and the soles of his feet burnt with irons, which peasant women made red hot. The intreaties of the wife and sister of the bailiff seemed only to increase the rage of his tormentors. But enough of these horrible scenes. Those here mentioned (and they are but a few from the counties of Zips and Zemplin) will suffice to give an idea of the rage of a people hitherto kept in a state of ignorance and brutality, as soon as it breaks its fetters for a moment.—Allgemine Zeitung, Sept. 9.

ROYAL FUNERAL.—The body of Radama, King of Madagascar, was deposited in a silver coffin, all made of Spanish dollars twenty thousand of which were employed in the construction. Ten thousand hard dollars were laid in the coffin, for him to lie upon. The whole expense was not less than £60,000

Letters received during the last three weeks.—S Chipman; J. B. Willcox; J. Dickson; L. Clark; H. J. Alvord; L. Barrett; W. H. Reynolds E. Loveland; F. Chipman

MARRIED,

In Cooperstown, on the 11th inst. by Rev. Mr. Smith, Howard Nott, Esq. son of Dr. Nott, President of Union College, to Miss Margaretta M. S. Bowers, daughter of J. M. Bowers, Esq. of Cooperstown.

DIED,

In this village, on Monday morning, Mrs. Amanda Wakelee, wife of Mr. A. Wakelee, aged about 39 years.

At the Rochester House, last week, Col. Wm. Brooks, of Detroit, formerly of Philadelphia, aged about 60 years.

In Auburn, on the 19th ult. the Hon. John W. Hulbert, formerly a member of Congress from Berkshire co. Mass. and a distinguished member of the law profession.

On the 16th inst. in Franklin county, after a protracted illness, Mr. George Madison, son of the late Gov. Madison.

At Vicksburg, Miss. on the 24th ult. Mr. Francis Arnold, son of Thomas Arnold Esq. of Paris, Ky.

On Sabbath last the 6th inst. at Venice, Ohio, the Rev. T. Thomas Pastor of the Presbyterian church in that place.

On the morning of Wednesday the 12th inst. at his own residence in the city of New Brunswick, N. J. the Rev. John De Witt, D. D. Professor of Biblical History, &c. in the Theological School of the Reformed Dutch Church, and one of the Professors in Rutgers College—aged about 42.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	80 @ —	[illegible]	$ 12½@14
Flour, bbl.	5.4 5.5	Potatoes	25
Corn	[illegible]	Butter, lb.	17@18
Oats	[illegible]	Lard	8
Beef, lb.	2.5@3.5	Cheese	12
Pork, do.	[illegible]	Tallow	7@8
Salt, bbl.	1.75

Barley [illegible] $1.00 to — Pearls 6@8

NOTICE.

THE Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers under the firm of Lush & Butler is dissolved by mutual consent; and all persons indebted to the said copartnership are hereby notified to make payment to Henry Buck; and all persons having claims against the said Copartnership to present the same to the said Henry Buck for adjustment and payment.

The business of the late firm will be conducted hereafter by the said Henry Buck, at the old stand.

HENRY BUCK.
GEO. BUTLER.

Nov 3. 47

LAST CALL.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of HALL & PECK are hereby notified that unless payment is made by 1st December, they will be sued.

LEWIS L. PEET.

Nov. 14 1831. 47 3w

NOTICE

IS hereby given that the subscribers will apply to the Legislature of the state of New York, at their next session, to incorporate them and their associates under the style of "The Rochester Institute of Practical Education," to be located in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe.

CHARLES M. LEE,
MOSES CHAPIN,
JAMES SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM WISNER,
JOSEPH PENNEY, &
LUKE LYONS.

Nov. 17. 47 6w

PURSUANT to an order of Mortimer F. Delano, Surrogate of the County of Monroe, notice is hereby given to all the creditors and next of kin of Robert Lee, late of Rochester in said county, deceased, to shew cause before the said Surrogate, at the office in Rochester in said county, on the first day of the next session of the Court of Common Pleas to be holden in and for the county of Monroe, why the account of Henrietta Fissell, executrix, and of everard Peck, Ashbel W. Riley and S. Mathews, executors of the last will and testament of the said deceased, should not be allowed.—Dated September 10, 1831.

HENRIETTA FISSELL, Executrix,
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBEL W. RILEY,
S. MATHEWS, } Executors

1000 ACRES OF ILLINOIS LAND, for Sale or Exchange for Farms. Enquire of E. D. SMITH, or H. B. WILLIAMS.

Rochester, Nov. 15, 1831. 47 4w

1831.

ALLEN, WHEELER & CO.

OF THE

HUDSON & Erie, and Oswego Lines, have their arrangements completed, and are now ready to forward goods from Boston, Philadelphia and New York, to Oswego, Buffalo, or any part of Ohio, Michigan, or Upper Canada.

They have on the New York and Ohio Canals, thirty first rate Boats, all manned, by practical Boatmen, and with frequent relays of Horses, they are able to promise the transportation of property, with the utmost care and expedition.

On the New York Canals, their Boats will leave Albany, Troy, Oswego, Rochester and Buffalo, and the intermediate places, daily. On the Ohio Canal, they will run a regular line between Cleaveland and Newark, or the southern termination of the canal, all rounding Night and Day, except the SABBATH.

Their arrangements with owners of Tow Boats, and Line Sloops on the Hudson River, and owners of Steam boats and Vessels on Lakes Erie and Ontario, will enable them to forward property to any of those waters, without detention. Property shipped on the Hudson River, fully insured.

ALLEN, TIBBITS & Co. Troy.
ALLEN, WHEELER & CO. Rochester.
JOHN C. DAVIES & Co. Newark, viz. Hudson & Erie Line Owners.
ALLEN, TIBBITS & CO. Troy.
JAS. LYON & CO. Oswego. Oswego Line Owners.

The following persons will receive property, and forward according to the direction of the owners.

HILL, FISH & ABBEE, Philapelphia,
T. M. OUTWICK, }
BIGELOW & BAGG, Boston.
W. HURBELL, 29 Counties Slip, N. Y.
E. COOK, 66 on the Dock, Albany.
ALLEN, TIBBITS & Co. Troy.
BUTLER, M'DOUGH & CO. Utica,
JAMES MOORE, jr. Syracuse,
JOHN RICE jr. Weedsport,
J. A. CLARK Montezuma.
J. I. FROWBRIDGE & Co. Oswego.
ALLEN, WHEELER & Co. Rochester,
O. N. BUSH, }
J. CORNWELL. Brockport.
WILLIAM ALLIS. Holley.
N. INGERSOLL & Co. Albion,
E. FOLSOM. Lockport,
E. F. NORTON. Buffalo,
KELLEY & WALWORTH, Clearland, O.
JOHN S. HUDSON, }
JOHN C. DAVIES & Co. Newark.

☞ They also continue to occupy the two Store Houses on Sophia-street, in Rochester, which will enable them to store any kind of property, on the lowest terms. 1oct

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

For the Observer.

Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm.—Matt. viii, 26.

When flashing frenzy racks the brain,
And ceaseless waves of misery roll;
One voice alone, can still the pain.
And hush to peace the troubled soul.

The night lay dark on Galilee,
The wind was loud—the storm drew near;
Successive surges lashed the sea,
Till every heart was chilled with fear.

The sails were rent; nor anchor stayed
The threatened bark; nor beacon shone;
But angry lightnings fiercely played,
And thunders marked each fitful groan.

Who slumbered there? who mid the strife
Of storm and wind, could slumber there?
The curtain dropped—the Lord of Life;
The Babe of Bethlehem slumbered there!

He rose, He spoke—the storm was hushed,
The clouds roll'd back—the sky was clear,
Long hidden stars with brightness blushed,
And sanguine Hope succeeded Fear.

Thus O my God, be thou my stay;
Nor gathering storms, nor hell can harm,
Thy voice shall cheer my dreary way;
And bid me smile amid the storm.

Parma, Nov. 7th. MARGARETTE.

DROWNING.

From Dwight's Travels in New England, we extract the following letter from Rev. William Patten, which gives a singular description of the distressing sensation experienced while drowning.

Hartford, May 14th, 1802.

"SIR.—The event, of which you requested an account from me, took place in the 18th year of my age. In the spring of that year I attempted to pass a river, called the Great or Lower, Amonoosuc, at a fording place, about 40 miles north of Dartmouth College. The stream is remarkably rapid; and had, the preceding night, been swollen by copious showers of rain, and the dissolution of snow on the grounds adjacent. A number of persons with whom I was in company, went over in a boat: but some circumstances induced me and two or three others, to attempt to ford the river. About midway of the passage, my horse was turned upon his side, apparently by the force of the current. Thrown by surprise, and with disadvantage into the water, it was sometime before I could recover a standing. The water then flowed up to my chin. As soon, almost, as I was upon my feet, the current bore me down, and left me struggling for breath. I rose again with the hope of walking to the shore, but in vain. The depth of the water being for a moment more favorable to my hopes, I made several other attempts, in the last of which, lying on the bottom, with my feet against the rocks, I determined to suffer my head to be buoyed up, till the weight of my body should counteract the force of the current, that in this inclined position I might be enabled to gain the shore.

But I was immediately carried from this point, without finding my resistance of the least avail. After this, as I was in deeper water, and my head down the stream, I attempted for the first time to swim. This exercise, to which I was accustomed, was perfectly easy to me. I rested on the surface of the water without any sensible difficulty, greatly refreshed by the air; which I had not freely inspired for fifteen or twenty minutes. I continued to swim without any other object, than to breathe; but had not proceeded far, before my strength suddenly failed; and I sunk without a struggle to the bottom. Of such an entire exhaustion of strength I never before had an idea. I could not have moved a finger, to save the world. Arguing, from the distress of being partially deprived of breath, the agony of the moment, when it should be totally excluded, I anticipated this moment with extreme dread.

When I sunk, this impression was fully on my mind, with a certainty that it could be no longer avoided. After a short time, however, it occurred to me, that it was time to breathe.—With this thought I relaxed that exertion, by which my breathing was suspended; and feeling water entering my nostrils, immediately resumed it; having before experienced the pain of inhaling the water, which was much more distressing than to be without breath. Soon after this, my intellectual faculties very rapidly, but perceptibly, declined. I felt a pain in the small of my back: which, I presume would have been acute, had I been capable of a just sense of it: for I imagined, that a rock, or some other very heavy thing lay on me. Before this, I was like a person, under the influence of an over-powering opiate, and yet feeling every inducement to keep awake: and soon after all consciousness of my situation, and life, ceased.

At the first exercise of returning reason, I supposed myself in bed, in which I had slept the night before; and that the night was gloomy.—The circumstances of the scene, through which I had been carried, occurred in a lively manner to my imagination: but I supposed them a dream. To be certain, I resolved to arouse myself, but in attempting it was conscious of insuperable weakness; and then concluded, that, as I should soon awake, I would try no further exertion.

As soon as I rested in this hope, I heard a noise like a person clapping his hands; and said "you hurt me." With this recovery of my hearing my eyesight was restored. I perceived, that I was surrounded by those with whom I had been in company: some of them were striking my hands; and some were rubbing my stomach. My feelings, at this time, were greatly distressed. There was but a spark of life in a body of disorder and death: but the hope, with which that spark was connected, spread a smile over the ruins; and I was very happy.

My friends informed me, that I was taken from the water after I had disappeared about a quarter of an hour, and laid on the shore; that in bringing me to the shore a small sound was perceived from my throat; but that my breast had not moved with breathing; and that my eyes continued lifeless, till the moment when I spoke.

From the time of my falling into the water till my recovery, nearly an hour must have elapsed. As the struggle was long, so the distress was great. I can give no better description of it, than to say, that my sensations corresponded with the appearance of the dead. My meaning is; that the aspect of a deceased person makes a complicated impression on my mind, very similar to what I then felt; and may be regarded as a very natural symbol of the state of my own feelings. But the prospect, and to me the certainty, of immediately appearing before God, the Judge of all, was inexpressibly more affecting than the pains of dying. What I felt, in both respects, cannot be described, it can be known only by experience. In such a situation, nothing but the power, and the grace of Christ can support the mind: and I determined, when I recovered, to dwell upon his name, if ever I should be called to attend the dying."

ARRIVAL OF DR. HEWITT.

Among the passengers in the ship Britannia, from Liverpool, just arrived in this port, are Rev. Dr. HEWITT, and the Rev. Dr. Howes, of Hartford.

From the N. Y. Observer

REVOLUTION IN COMMERCE

AND TRAVELLING OCCASIONED BY STEAM BOATS.

The introduction of steam boats into the Valley of the Mississippi, has effected a complete revolution in the internal navigation of that region. Merchandize of all kinds is now carried between the extremest points for a very small amount. It is said that goods can be shipped from New York to New Orleans, and then carried by steam-boat, to Cincinnati, for one cent per pound! A single fact will convince any one of the advantages of steam boats in a commercial point of view. Last summer, (a year ago) when the Ohio was too low, for months, for steam boats to run, it was necessary to carry the merchandize descending that river from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati and Louisville, in flat and keel boats. A captain of a steam boat, engaged in that trade has told me that he at one time purchased three boats at six hundred dollars, loaded them with 50 or 60 tons, and when he arrived at Louisville sold the boats for three hundred dollars, and yet after defraying all the other expenses of the trip, including high wages for five or six hands on each boat, made a handsome sum of money. Then freight was a dollar or two per hundred. But when the steam boats commenced running it was carried for 20 or 30 cents per hundred for precisely the same distance.

The facilities for travelling which steam boats furnish in the west, are inconceivable to our Atlantic friends or any one who did not travel here in the "olden time." Then it was a journey, on horseback, of several months to go up from New-Orleans to Pittsburg; now it can be done with ease in three weeks, in almost any steam boat, and allow much time for stopping at the intermediate places! When steam boats first began to run, $125 and even $150 were cheerfully paid for a passage from New-Orleans to Louisville! And when the charges were so diminished as to be only $100, from New-Orleans to Pittsburg, which is 700 miles further, and in all 2200 miles, it was thought truly astonishing. But now one can go from New-Orleans to Pittsburg as a cabin passenger, for from $35 to $45, and fare sumptuously every day! And if he chooses to go as a deck passenger he can do it for perhaps $10 or $12! Consequently astonishing facilities are afforded to families removing to distant parts of the entire valley. The passengers are denominated either "cabin" or "deck" passengers, from the different parts of the boat which they occupy.—Those in the cabin pay a much higher price, and have their table and every thing else furnished. The deck passengers occupy either the upper deck or the one immediately astern of the machinery as I have already mentioned, and find their own provisions and bedding. Their part of the boat is not generally furnished with much particularity, and is indeed rather an uncomfortable place in cold weather.

Although the steam boats of the west are generally designed for carrying freight as well as passengers, yet it is astonishing what a number of persons one of them can carry. Even a boat of 100 tons often carries 50 cabin passengers, as many more, or perhaps twice as many, on deck, and withal 75 or 80 tons of freight! and a boat of 500 tons, such as the Uncle Sam, or the Red Rover, or Belfast, has often carried 100 passengers in the cabin, 500 on deck, and 400 tons of freight, and withal marched up the mighty Mississippi at the rate of six or eight miles an hour! Immense numbers of passengers are carried from one part of the Valley to another by these boats. Those boats which come up from New-Orleans bring, besides merchants and other inhabitants or strangers, who occupy the cabin, hundreds of German, Irish, and other foreign emigrants who landed at that port, and are seeking a home in the interior of the Valley of the Mississippi. On the other hand those which descend from Pittsburg carry hundreds of travellers and emigrants from the east, as well as from foreign lands.

Character of Passengers.

One of these large boats, filled with passengers, is almost a world in miniature. In the cabin you will find ladies and gentlemen of various claims to merit; on the forward part of the boat are the sailors, deck hands, and those sons of Vulcan—the firemen—possessing striking traits of character, and full of noise and song, and too often of whiskey; whilst above, in the deck cabin, there is every thing that can be called human,—all sorts of men and women, of all trades, from all parts of the world, of all possible manners and habits. There is the half-horse and half-alligator Kentucky boatman, swaggering and boasting of his prowess, his rifle, his horse, and his wife. One is sawing away on his wretched old fiddle all day long; another is grinding a knife or razor; here is a party playing cards; and in yonder corner is a dance to the sound of the Jew's harp; whilst a few are trying to demean themselves soberly, by sitting in silence or trying to read a book. But it is almost impossible—the wondrous tale and horrible Indian story is telling; the bottle and the jug are freely circulating, and the boisterous and deafening laugh is incessantly raised, sufficient to banish every vestige of attention, and thought, and sense. A friend of mine, some time ago, went down from Cincinnati to New-Orleans on board the steam-boat ——, which carried fifty cabin passengers, one or two hundred deck passengers; one or two negro drivers with their gangs of negroes; a part of a company of soldiers; a menagerie of wild beasts; a whole circus; and a company of playactors!

When a traveller from the east enters a crowded western steam-boat at Pittsburg or Cincinnati, and takes his passage for New-Orleans, he very soon perceives a manifest contrast between western and eastern manners, and western and eastern steam-boats. He soon discovers that the western people have much more equality in their intercourse; are remarkably sociable, unceremonious, and independent. He will be very likely to consider them too forward and indifferent to the opinions of others. But he will find upon better acquaintance with them, that their apparent rudeness and inactivity of manners soon disappear, and that they are truly courteous respectful and kind to those who display similar traits of character. They are candid and independent, and but little disposed to yield arrogated deference to any, no matter how high a standing in society, birth or wealth may have given them.

Gambling.

During one of the cold and cloudy days of last December, the steam-boat M—— stopped for freight at a port in Kentucky, on her way down the river. Whilst there, a Mr. —— came on board, bringing with him his young, interesting, and beautiful, but dying wife, seeking a southern climate for her declining health. It was with some difficulty that she was brought on board, she was so feeble. The ladies, strangers, in the cabin, received her with deep sympathy, and with her maid servant, ministered unremittingly to her wants. Her husband came but seldom to her cabin, would sit a few minutes by her couch, and then hurry away from her longing and tearful eyes. And where was he spending his time! Where was he who had sworn before God and men to "honor, love and protect her until death should them part!" He was in the gentlemen's cabin gambling, day and night! The boat continued her voyage, and in two or three days arrived at ——, the place of her destination, where the poor lady soon afterwards died at a boarding house. The husband, if husband he could be called, stayed a day or two to see her buried, and then embarked for New Orleans, gambling day and night, all the way!

Take another instance, which was told to me by the captain of the boat on which the case occurred. A few years since, the large steamer M—— set out from New Orleans on an upward voyage, having on board much freight and many passengers. Among them were several merchants who had large amounts in sugar, molasses, coffee, &c. on board. Soon after the boat started they commenced gambling, and continued without intermission until after 10 o'clock at night. The captain then informed them, that it was contrary to the rules of the boat that they should play in the cabin after that hour. They protested, demurred and entreated. But he was inexorable. At length he consented to their going to a small private room; but enjoined it upon them that there must be no fighting. Four of them renewed the game with excited interest. The captain having occasion to be up all night, went, about three o'clock into their room. To his surprise he found them just on the point of fighting. Pistols and dirks were drawn! At his interposition and command, their weapons were put up. The cause of the quarrel was this: One merchant had lost all the money which he had with him, and all his large cargo on board. The loser desired his merchandize to be estimated at the retail price at ——, where he resided, and to which place the boat was bound. But the marble-hearted winner insisted upon the New Orleans price as the basis of the calculation, and which would have left the loser in his debt to a large amount, for which he demanded a due-bill! At the remonstrance of the captain, he ceased to insist upon this, and the bill of lading having been transferred in due form, to the winner, the miserable loser went home without a dollar to pay even his passage, to tell (if he could do it) to his wife and children the story of his folly, and to become a bankrupt! Alas! how many men in this western country and on these rivers, have not only lost their fortunes, but, it is to be feared, ruined their souls also, by gambling.*

*I deem it right to say that many eastern and northern men, when travelling in the Valley of the Mississippi, or on visits to New Orleans and other cities in the Valley, who are of good characters at home, do engage in gambling, to the grief of good men in this region. Even some professors of religion (shall I say it?) have done so! A gentleman in New Orleans mentioned more than one instance of a professor of religion in a city not a hundred miles from New York, who when on a visit to New Orleans not very long since, became much addicted to card playing. Others have attended the theatre! Our southern christians have difficulties enough to encounter with such millstone discouragements. It is a great thing for a Christian to carry his religion with him when he goes abroad, and not think himself at liberty to act inconsistently with his profession, because he is away from home.

TRUE DIGNITY.

The colored people of Wilmington have published through the papers, an address to the citizens of that borough which must raise them high in the moral estimation of mankind. They have come forward humanely, manfully, and even generously, in these disturbed and troublous times, to sooth the irritations and calm the fears of the white population of Delaware. Such a course of conduct will avail more with the great tribunal of Heaven, in gaining the precious boon of national and individual freedom than oceans of murderous bloodshed. The language of one address, with eighteen signatures, is as follows:

The subscribers, having a knowledge of the alarm which prevails in the minds of some of the citizens of this place, on account of various reports which some mischievous person or persons have circulated, in regard to the colored population, beg leave to represent, on behalf of themselves and brethren, that having made inquiry into the subject, they have found said reports to be without the least foundation, and they owe it to themselves further to declare, that, so far from any disposition on the part of the colored people to disturb the peace and good order of the community, they are, on the contrary, fully aware that it consists not less with their interests than their duty to refrain from every act that would excite commotion or disorder, in which the colored people would have every thing to lose and nothing to gain. We have been treated by the citizens of Wilmington and its vicinity with kindness, for which we ought to be grateful, and it is our solemn purpose to pursue such a course of conduct as may merit a continuance of their favor and confidence; should any among us be found so wicked and blinded as to enter into plots and contrivances, inimical to the present harmony, we thus solemnly pledge ourselves to our white friends and neighbors, that we will be among the first to sound the alarm, and unite in effecting their apprehension and suppression.—Badger's Weekly Messenger.

DEGRADING EFFECT OF MATERIALISM.

A pretended freethinker had been repeating a number of absurdities to prove that we have no souls. The company were contented with staring at him, instead of replying. He addressed a lady, and asked her, with an air of triumph, what she thought of his philosophy! "It appears to me, Sir," she replied, "that you have been employing a good deal of talent to prove yourself a beast."—Christ. Mag.

From the Rel. Messen.

THE PROFANE SINNER WILL NEED PRAYER.

On an evening at the close of a protracted meeting lately held in a certain town in Vermont, a pious man felt it his duty to go to his brother and another young man, to warn and pray with them, if they were willing that he should do so.—He went, and made known his feelings. They replied, "we are sorry you have walked half a mile to pray for us. If we want any prayers, we can make them ourselves. We thank you for your trouble, but we want none of your damn'd superstition: you had better go home and go to sleep." He went back a part of the way, called at the house of a pious acquaintance, appeared affected, and requested that a prayer meeting might be held there for those two young men.—One was begun. Meanwhile, the young men could not sleep, but lay still, one supposing the other was asleep, crept softly out of bed, and was dressing himself, when the other asked, "are you sick?" "No," was the answer.—"Where are you going then!" "I am going across the river to be prayed for." They both went, and seeing the light called in, where special prayer was offering up for them—at which those assembled were filled with astonishment, somewhat similar to theirs, when Peter being liberated from prison, found them in prayer for him.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place, bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1829 recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 310, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred sixty seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to R. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot numb'd seven, and town-ship number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, and at a distance as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication at this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and seventy eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece of ground situate in the town of Brighton in the county of Monroe and being the south part of Cornhill (a subdivision of said lot No. 51) as laid out on a certain map or survey of said Cornhill, reference had to said Map on file in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated September 9th, 1831.

HENRIETTA RUSSELL, Executrix.
ASHBEL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Russell Jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 458, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and forty seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to R. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot numb'd seven, and town-ship number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, and at a distance as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication at this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and seventy eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Brighton in the county of Monroe and being the south part of Cornhill (a subdivision of said lot No. 51) as laid out on a certain map or survey of said Cornhill, reference had to said Map on file in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated September 9th, 1831.

HENRIETTA RUSSELL, Executrix.
ASHBEL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Russell Jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 458, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and forty seven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Heath having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Moses Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Graham Dunham and wife to R. H. Ely and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot numb'd seven, and town-ship number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, and at a distance as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication at this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and seventy eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit—All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Brighton in the county of Monroe and being the south part of Cornhill (a subdivision of said lot No. 51) as laid out on a certain map or survey of said Cornhill, reference had to said Map on file in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated September 9th, 1831.

HENRIETTA RUSSELL, Executrix.
ASHBEL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Russell Jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.
V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office,

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 14.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3,00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00.
Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. V.

THE PRESENT TEMPERANCE EFFORT MUST SUCCEED.

Unless it does the full triumphs of the church can never be enjoyed.

From various declarations of Scripture, we know that the time is not far distant, when the church shall enjoy great prosperity—when Christ shall reign a thousand years,—and when the day of millennial glory shall shine with resplendent lustre. Now we intemperance is inconsistent with true religion, and especially the intemperate use of ardent spirit. Moderate drinking is the high road to drunkenness, and is also inconsistent with the pureness, the watchfulness, and the holiness which is required of the Christian.—Men under the influence of ardent spirit, in any degree, are unfitted for the spiritual duties of our holy religion; but in the days of the Church's prosperity, the watchmen of Zion are all to be sober, vigilant, active, godly, and ready for every labor of love, and for every exertion to benefit their fellow creatures. They will not then, for the sake of increasing their worldly wealth, engage in any business, the direct tendency of which, will be to make liars, gamblers, swearers, Sabbath-breakers, thieves, robbers, murderers and suicides. For one, I do not believe that DEACONS, or private christians, will make or sell ardent spirit, (unless simply for useful purposes) in the millennium; nay, I do not believe they will even use it, unless for medicinal, chemical, or mechanical objects. In that day liars, swearers &c. will not be found; but as long as ardent spirit is used, men will be liars, swearers &c.; for it is its very nature to make depravity more depraved. And in the millennium men will not want grog-shops and bar-rooms in which to spend an idle hour in folly and mirth; their time will all be occupied in the service of God. What an exhibition would it be in the millennium, for a DEACON or a member of the church, to open a grog-shop, and gather around him a set of noisy, rum-drinking, filthy swearing sots! What an exhibition at the present day!

John, the revelator tells us, that at the very commencement of the thousand years of glory to the church, he saw a mighty angel come down from heaven, having a great chain and the key of the bottomless pit in his hand. And he laid hold on the Dragon that old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years are fulfilled &c. In this prophecy the makers and venders of ardent spirit may see the final termination of their business; for Satan their employer, will soon be bound and imprisoned, and no more deceive men in regard to the nature and the benefits of ardent spirit. And without his aid, the traffic in ardent spirit cannot be maintained; for man will not use it unless under the influence of deception, and Satan's great employment is to deceive, and has been from the beginning. And recent investigations into the nature and effects of ardent spirit, have brought to light many falsehoods, hitherto received as truths. And the effects of this light are seen in the diminished consumption of the article, and the reformation of thousands who were led astray.

Now if it be true, as the bible says it is, that the millennium shall come; and if it be t ue that it cannot fully come till drunkenness be driven out of the earth, then it is true that the temperance effort must succeed. In that day men are to be holy, and holiness to the Lord inscribed upon all their works. Does ardent spirit make men holy—prayerful, watchful! I trow not.

CHAS. YALE,
Agt. N. Y. S. T. S.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—Like Pharaoh's Butler, I remember my fault this day, and as you and Rev. Mr. Wilcox of Mt. Morris, Secretary of the Genesee County Temperance Society &c., calls for confession and explanation of my misdeeds, I with pleasure confess, and now give Mr. Secretary Wilcox and all whom it may concern, if any there be, all necessary explanation, and needful confession in the case.

In primo.—Let me say that Mr. Secretary, in the true stile of the laws of honor, and as an insulted man, has not said a word on the offence to me privately, but dragged me out at once, before the public to make satisfaction. This is according to the laws of honor; but I thought some on the 18th chap. of Matthew.

In secundo.—I am at a loss whether to plead guilty or not; because the Secretary himself appears to be bewildered in searching out and specifying my offence. He has said about as many things for me as he has against me, so that after reading the "process verbal" that he has drawn up before the public, it seemed to be matter of doubt in his own mind whether I was to blame, and if so, to what degree of enormity. At any rate, he thought he would submit it thro' the columns of the Observer.

In tertio.—Now, Sir, for the expose of this grave and serious affair; and that expose shall be verbatim et literatim, mind and memory permitting, just as it took place.

Some weeks ago, I took it upon me to address a line to my worthy friend, Mr. Secretary Wilcox, reminding him of the approaching anniversary of the Society; suggesting the propriety of having it seasonably in the Rochester Observer; and also requesting him to correspond with the Secretary of the County Sabbath School Union, and have the two objects attended to at the same place, and on the same day. I thought this course would save labor; bring more of the friends of Religion and temperance together; and give an increased interest to our meeting. Instead of doing this, the Secretary, for wise and good reasons, notified the temperance meeting separate from the other; and notifies it on the same day that the Convention met at Rochester. I wanted to attend convention and also the county Societies. Many of my brethren were in the same situation. The only way to accomplish this was by putting the temperance meeting over for one week. I unhappily ventured to change the Secretary's notice: postpone the meeting one week; unite the two societies as above stated; and had the notice of the change out next week. For fear also that the Secretary should be troubled over much by the alteration, I did volunteer to engross the town reports into a connected statement for the Society's meeting. Were he present, I should put the document in his hand; and were he absent, we should, at any rate, have some report. Not an idea had I, all this time, but what the Secretary was abundantly diligent and abundantly competent in the duties of his office. My sole object was to save him unnecessary trouble. Of this, he appears to be sensible. I supposed that the Secretary would not care for the matter of a week; nor seriously care, altho' the Sabbath School meeting should hold on the same day, and place. And indeed, I suppose that the Secretary meant himself to be present at the convention in Rochester; and that this fact not occurring to him at the time of penning the notice, was the occasion of this coincidence, so inconvenient to many. So I ventured to make the alteration. The shortness of time was the cause that I did not have particular diplomatic correspondence with the Secretary at Mount Morris. I had, as it were but an hour to decide and to act. Did time allow, I should, with pleasure, have addressed my first and final note, to the Secretary, ere I dared to make the arrangement I made. I knew he ought to have been consulted: But I foolishly supposed he would concur at once with what was evidently the most suitable, and what would procure the greatest attendance at the county meeting.—Why Mr. Secretary Wilcox should have such an unconquerable antipathy against the County S. S. Society meeting on the same occasion with his, is what I cannot divine. He has undoubtedly good reasons.

Rev. Mr. Wilcox met here on the day of his appointment. One or two delegates, I understood, met with him. He uttered some murmurs on this wicked interference with his prerogative: adjourned the Society to Wyoming; and went home, no doubt meditating, on the injury done him, and meditating the epistle of complaint and accusation which has appeared in your paper.

As to the Sabbath school cause, and temperance cause being "down in Genesee county," as the Secretary more than intimates, and down, dead and buried, with a heavy "Hic jacet," and the Secretary's seal of office appended besides, simply because Mr. Crawford had so wantonly and wickedly adjourned the county meeting one week, it is not so. The Secretary is alarmed above measure. He came into the county in haste. Finding things at Le Roy, not just as the official directed—he wrote "Hic jacet" on the whole benevolence of the county, and fled! Need I tell a diligent and faithful Secretary, and that too concerning a county, where he has until recently served as a minister of the gospel, that there are in this county, ill-favored as we are, several thousand children in a course of Sabbath School instruction; and several thousand true hearted temperance members. The Secretary is over alarmed. We are not all dead and buried yet. We had in Bethany one of the best temperance meetings I ever attended in the county even, altho' we were not so happy as to behold our Secretary. And we adjourned, to meet our Secretary and his appointment at Wyoming to-morrow, for which meeting I am just mounting my carriage.

The whole matter is now before the Secretary and the public. They can judge how much there is in it. Certain it is that I interfered; but it was for what appeared good reasons. It was also such a small affair, that I thought no body would deign to notice it. And now, let me say to my dear brother of Mount Morris, that I am sorry I interfered with his official rights and dignity: I am sorry that either he or I should write a word in a newspaper on such small business; and now I make to him my dutiful threnodies of repentance for the whole, hoping he will forgive, and promising that I will sin no more.

G. CRAWFORD.

For the Observer.

Sir:—A writer over the signature of Austin, in some late numbers of the Observer, makes certain assertions which are deemed incorrect and calculated to injure the Presbyterian church and promote unnecessary divisions. Will you permit a constant reader to notice, in your columns, some of those assertions. And allow me to express a passing regret, that "Austin" should have thrown his remarks before the public, in so crude a state, and so much at random; especially in the present state of the church.

He asserts, in his first letter, that the confession of faith, "says that man has neither natural nor moral ability to repent: the phrase, "natural and moral ability," being marked as a quotation and emphatical. I have not found this expression in the confession; neither have I found the sentiment it contains.

The confession says (Chap. 9. Sect. 3.) "Man by his fall into a state of sin, hath wholly lost all ability of will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation: so as a natural man, being altogether averse from that which is good, and dead in sin, is not able, by his own strength, to convert himself or prepare himself thereunto."

The phrase, "ability of will," plainly means moral ability. "Being averse" is a moral feeling, not a natural faculty. "His own strength" may mean, for aught this language implies, moral strength. This expression, "ability of will," in my opinion, fixes with peculiar felicity and precision, the meaning of the confession wherever it speaks of ability or inability. It is ability of will, or what moderns term moral ability.

That this is the true meaning of the confession is evident from the first section of the same chapter. "God hath indued the will of man with that natural liberty, that it is neither found, nor by any absolute necessity of nature determined to good or evil." The inability of man, according to this, does not consist in an "absolute necessity of nature"—plainly is not what, in distinction from moral, is called natural inability. So in section fourth of the same chapter, "When God converts a sinner—he freeth him from his natural bondage under sin, and by his grace alone, enables him freely to will and to do that which is spiritually good. This language describes, not the giving of a new faculty, but enabling man freely to will and do. By the way I am not interpreting the confession, but only letting it speak for itself; and I am not obnoxious to Austin's delicate charge of "pitiful equivocation."

Inability of will, or moral inability, the confession fully maintains. And if this be not a doctrine of the Bible, what do our Saviour and his Apostles mean, by saying, "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him—except it were given him of my Father." "Without me ye can do nothing."—"They are all under sin—dead in trespasses and sins—without strength." "Our sufficiency is of God." "For it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do." I am not partial to the term "inability;" I never use it in addressing sinners: I would contend for truth not terms.—But it is in frequent use, and it need not be misunderstood.

Austin asserts again in his second letter that "every member that is received into the Presbyterian church is sworn to the confession."—Now there is not a word in the Confession, form of government, or Directory, requiring every member to be sworn to the confession; and if church sessions require this, they go beyond their rules. I never knew it done. It would be absurd to require "babes in Christ" to digest and assent to a whole body of divinity. Neither the rules or usages of the church require it. It is only required of those who apply for admission to the ministry of the church.

Austin also states that the "puritanical calvinists entertain serious doubts" respecting the "soundness" of the confession on the covenant of works. I will not now attempt a vindication of the phraseology of the confession or catechisms—it is somewhat antiquated. But probably it was better understood when written than it is now by superficial observers. But if the Bible does not teach, that Adam was, by divine appointment, in some important sense, the head and representation of his posterity, and that, in consequence of his first transgressions, they are all sinful, sinners, under condemnation, what means such language as this! "In Adam all die:" "By the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation:" "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners:" "By one man's offence death reigned by one:" "Through the offence of one many be dead:" "The judgment was by one to condemnation:" "By one man sin entered into the world." And if sin and condemnation are not, by divine appointment, derived from Adam's first transgression, how comes it to pass that all his posterity are born to sin and suffering? And are not all the puritan, calvinistic, and even hopkinsian divines of eminence until we arrive at New-Haven, substantially agreed on this point? And if so is not the assertion that the "puritanical calvinists entertain serious doubts" on this subject, destitute of foundation?

Austin seems to call loudly for an alteration of the confession. But let us first pause, examine, enquire, pray. B.

From the Boston Recorder.

FROM THE GEORGIA PENITENTIARY.

We are happy to be able to lay before our readers, especially the personal friends of the imprisoned missionaries, the following letter from Dr. Butler to one of the Secretaries of the American Board.

Georgia Penitentiary, Oct. 16th, 1831.

MR. DAVID GREENE,—Dear Sir,—On the 15th of last month, as you have already learned, I was brought to trial, and the next day sentenced to four years imprisonment in this place, at hard labor. I arrived here on the 23d. Since that time my health has generally been as good as I commonly enjoy. I have been able to labor every day, and hope I may continue to be, during my time of service. It would be a great trial to be afflicted with sickness here.

I have formerly been told, there was no need of my going to the penitentiary; that it was easy for me to avoid it, if I would; and some have even told me so since I have been here; others, I have been informed, have said the same. I would by no means compare myself with any of those mentioned below; but you will doubtless understand my meaning. Nehemiah might have gone into the temple, if he would. Shadrach and his companions might have worshipped the image of Babylon, if they would. Daniel might have ceased to pray for a season, if he would. But not to pursue this train of thought farther,—they could not conscientiously comply with these requirements. Others in similar circumstances could not conscientiously comply with requirements. However easy it might appear to others I could not conscientiously comply with requirements which would have kept me from this confinement. And now, dear Sir, I have to say that through the goodness of God, I have yet had enough to support me; I have had even more than I anticipated. And I am led firmly to believe that any man contending for the rights of conscience and the liberty of spreading the gospel, will always find strength given him from above. Whilst in confinement I have many happy hours; some of the happiest of my life. I am also convinced, "that nothing is to be feared where the love of the Father is found; nothing is painful where the love Christ is exhibited; nothing is sorrowful where the Holy Ghost distils its heavenly rejoicings."

Though I am in apparent distress I am not cast down; though I am troubled I am not forsaken; and though my body is imprisoned, my soul is at full liberty.—O this precious liberty of soul! it is of more value than liberty of body, than the society of the nearest and dearest friends; yea, it is of more value than life itself; the enjoyment of rubies and all the riches of the world are not to be compared with it. Here I find communion with God more precious than in any other place; for here it is the source of all my enjoyment.—Being cut off from the various enjoyments o. life, why is it not reasonable that there should be great additional enjoyment in God; even that enjoyment which will fill up the vacuity occasioned by the privations of other enjoyments. I hope I am now and shall ever be thankful for the enjoyments of this place. I have religious books to read. I am confined by night in a building with fifty eight others; we occupy two rooms connected together by a pair of stairs. I have worship every evening, when I read in the Bible, exhort, and sing, before prayer. Sometimes I am occupied for hours in answering questions on religious subjects. There are two or three of our number I have some hopes are really pious; though their fruits must decide their true state. Several have solemnly resolved to renounce their profanity and other acts of wickedness.

It is not too much to say, there is a religious feeling manifested by a number of prisoners. I hope we may be instrumental of good to these unfortunate convicts, I think we have generally their respect and confidence; and their acts of wickedness they studiously endeavor to conceal from us. Here I find the infidel, the universalist, and, strange as it may seem, the self-righteous. One man came to me the other day, after I had had conversation with him, and he had acknowledged his wickedness, and said: "I have one favor to ask of you; I have resolved to plead with God for forgiveness, and pray until I die; and I wish you to pray for me, as vile, wicked and wretched a creature as perhaps ever lived; your prayers may be of great service to me." A few days since my family was well, and the school in operation. Mr. Ross and Mr. Lavender had draw him written to Mrs. Butler that they would supply her with any thing she needed. Mrs. Butler and the family were in good spirits, and things in operation as usual at the station.

Your obed'nt Serv't, ELIZUR BUTLER.

We understand from a gentleman who had seen the missionaries since their imprisonment, that Messrs. Worcester and Butler are confined at night in different rooms, the former with 30 and the latter with 28 companions. They both attend divine worship daily in these rooms, and on the Sabbath preach, or converse on religious subjects—thus endeavoring to perform, as well as they can, the part of prison Missionaries.—They requested that the prisoners might all be assembled together for public worship on the Sabbath; but that privilege was denied on account of opposition from one of the keepers, who could not see why persons so wicked as convicts should be allowed the advantage of religious worship and instruction.—There are about one hundred convicts in the prison, so that the missionaries, according to the present arrangements, have access to not much more than half of them.

In an extract from the Washington Spectator, which we published, their labor was spoken of as the severest in the prison. Such, we understand, is not the fact. The head keeper is a member of the Methodist church, and seems disposed to treat the missionaries with all the kindness and indulgence that the rules will allow.—Mr. Worcester is employed principally as a mechanic at the bench and Dr. Butler at the lathe-wheel. Their food is course but wholesome and sufficient. On the coarse cotton uniform worn by the prisoners, the initials of each one's name, with his term of service, are painted in large letters.—Their lodging rooms are large, with floors of loose plank; and each prisoner has a blanket to be used as a bed or covering.

In these circumstances, the missionaries must remain for some months, at least. Let Christians pray that their endeavors to do good may be successful, that in doing and in suffering, they may act worthily of the missionary name, and that this effort to injure the cause to which their lives are devoted, may tend in the result only to exalt and promote it. We are afraid there is a culpable neglect on this point. In some few instances, it is true, in this city and elsewhere, we know the case of these imprisoned servants of God has been remembered in public prayer. But much oftener, we fear is there occasion to lament an utter forgetfulness of their wrongs, of the difficulties that surround them and the Cherokees, and of the fact that we now stand before the world and before Heaven, as a nation guilty of the most flagrant injustice—selfish, perfidious, and tyrannical. Our rulers must do the people's bidding, or retire from office. The people, therefore, are responsible for the acts of government; and the people must repent or suffer. We cannot rid ourselves of the responsibility—we cannot throw it on a few, or on a party, unless we have done what we could, by laborious effort, and by PRAYER, to avert the evil that is now upon us.

The reader sees from Mr. Butler's letter, how impossible it is to break down and render useless a truly Christian spirit. He that possesses it may be abused and imprisoned, but the great source of his enjoyment no enemy can touch; of the means of growth in knowledge and holiness, he cannot be deprived; nor can he be so shut out from this world as not to do good. Shut him up with others, and they shall feel the influence of his instructions, and his character. Confine him alone, and prohibit all intercourse between him and the world, and so much the more shall the salutary influence of his piety be felt wherever his name is heard. Kill him, and you but extend and perpetuate the memory and the power of his virtues.

From the Boston Recorder.

EVILS OF PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Mr. Editor,—As much has been said of late in several periodicals of the evils of protracted meetings, I enclose you the following letters, omitting the names only, as one instance of their baleful influence in awakening a guilty conscience, and so far deranging the mind of an individual as to induce him to restore what he had taken unlawfully. Instances of this kind are becoming quite frequent, and that too in connection with protracted meetings; and no doubt they who wish to retain a guilty conscience will consider them real evils. Bu. whether they are so or not, let those answer who can heartily join with this individual in say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

Yours respectfully, A. RUSSELL.

New-Hampshire, Oct. 20, 1831.

Mr. A. Russell, Agent Am. Tract Soc.

Dear Sir,—The following letter was dropped into the Post Office in this town, inclosing six dollars and addressed to me. I am entirely ignorant who the writer is, or from whence it came. The sum received I consider as belonging to the Lord, and I devote the same to the spread of his gospel; which you will please divide equally among the following societies and pay over to the treasurers severally: To the American Bible Society,—American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions,—American Education Society,—Amerian Tract Society,—American Home Missionary Society,—and the Massachusetts S. S. Union, for the West. Yours, &c.

Dear Sir,—The Lord Jesus Christ tells me to pay back to you six dollars I took unlawfully from you some time since, in a way you know not.—You need not be curious to know how. I wish you to receive it, feeling that it is your own, and join with me in the words of the Psalmist, as "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, and healest all thine infirmities."

From one who trusts he was brought to a sense of his situation and duty by means of a protracted meeting in ———, and who hopes he shall henceforth "follow on to know the Lord" more and more until mortality shall put on a glorious and happy immortality, thro' the abounding grace of Jesus Christ, my Lord and Saviour.

YORK CONFERENCE, ME.

The Report of the state of Religion in this Conference for the year ending Oct. 5, 1831, occupies about one page of the Mirror. We have room but for the following extracts.

The most prominent means which the King of Zion has employed in building up his cause among us, during the year, is that now so well known under the appellation of "Protracted Meetings." These meetings have been holden by nearly all the churches connected with this Body. And in every instance have they been owned of God. As the religious public may expect some particular information from this Conference respecting these meetings, it may not be unsuitable to offer a few remarks in relation to them. In the accounts given of the churches individually, these means occupy so prominent a place, that a distinct notice of them seems required by the circumstances of the day.

Here, then, first of all, before heaven and earth, we would humbly disclaim any meritorious agency in accomplishing the results witnessed, but avould from our inmost souls give to God the entire glory. Blessed be His Great and Glorious Name, for the inexpressible joy, wherewith we have rejoiced over wanderers returning to their Heavenly Father's house.

The first meetings of this kind in the County of York, were holden in the latter part of March. We had heard of the wonders that God had wrought in distant communities, and watched with anxiety and hope the Eastward-travelling light. It was then that the Apostle's emphatic expressions of desire for salvation of dying sinners could be appreciated and reciprocated from heart to heart. It seemed as though the pleading believer knew in his soul, that he had grasped the hand of his Redeemer and resolved, that no power on earth should induce him to depart unblessed. The ministers, who attended, on those occasions, were overwhelmed with astonishment at the power attendant on the word.—Men of firm nerve and dauntless spirit have been seen dissolved in tears;—the Christian and the sinner;—the one interceding for his "brethren according to the flesh," the other imploring pardon for his own wretched soul.

The only secret of the amazing consequences of such assembling consisted in the Divine blessing on simple exhibition of truth, in answer to earnest prayer. The solicitude, which many had felt, while anticipating such a season, deepened to agony as the meetings advanced, and it has been the case, that the minister, the Christian and the sinner have attempted to offer audible prayer, and being able to utter but a few sentences, were constrained to weep out their inexpressible desires. That deep feeling,—if there was any moral excellence in it,—was of God, not of us. If any truth more than another, was felt on these occasions, it was this: the work is God's; we are nothing.

A degree of preparation on the part of a church about to hold a sacred convocation, has ordinarily been considered important. But in some cases there was no special preparation, and usually the preparation consisted in committing the cause to God without ceasing, till the appointed time arrived. And when that time arrived, there was no diminution of the spirit of prayer.

[Here follows notices of the several churches of revivals, protracted meetings, &c. Revivals are mentioned in Acton, Alfred, Biddeford (2d church,) Buxton, Kennebunk, Kennebunkport, Kitterypoint, Lebanon, Limerick, Livingston, Lyman, Newfield, Parsonsfield, Saco, Sandford, South Berwick, Wells and York. Many interesting particulars are given, some of which however, have before been published.]

There have been added to these churches during the past year by profession, 502 members; by letter, 18; total 520. Removals during the year are, by death, 12; by dismission, 22; by excommunication, 6; total 40. Net increase 474.

The whole number now connected with these churches is 1956. And if but half of these are efficient, ardent Christians, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, they may, in the coming year, revolutionize, morally, not the county, but the State, and bring down from the throne of God a glory that shall extend to its remotest extremeties; blessings, that shall enter every cabin in its deepest wildesness.

PARDON ON REPENTANCE.

The moral energy of the law depends on the relative certainty of the good or evil attendant on obedience or transgression. Uncertain rewards cannot be made as efficacious as those which are certain,—and in proportion as the certainty of punishment declines, and the hope of impunity rises, is the influence of the penalty to deter from transgression impaired,—while the certainty that no rewards or punishment will attend obedience or transgression, would be a perfect abolition of moral government. It may be truly said therefore, that God cannot maintain moral government but by law,—and cannot maintain the moral influence of the law as the means of moral government, without sustaining, in some way, the influence of its rewards and penalties on the hopes and fears of his subjects. But to hold out to all subjects the certainty of pardon for all transgressions, upon the simple condition of repentance, must be in its effects, an entire abolition of the penalty, and an utter prostration of government by law. For it is to render transgression safe, universally, upon a condition, for the performance of which the subject is taught to regard himself competent, without any radical change of character for which he is dependent on the grace of the abused lawgiver,—and which, with a confidence incident to a depraved and deceitful heart, he feels that he certainly shall comply with. It is therefore an utter abolition of the penalty; for the belief certainly of evading the penalty by mere repentance, has practically, the same effect as if the penalty had never been enacted, or had been publicly repealed.

It is not a subject of even momentary doubt, that pardon upon the simple condition of repentance, would break the power of every human government on earth. Let the parent say to the high-minded son, allured by temptation, and driven by passion, 'if you transgress, you shall be disinherited,—nevertheless, I am your father, and you are enabled to repent and doubtless will repent, and if you do, you shall be forgiven.' Let the criminal code go out with the threat, 'The murderer shall surely be put to death, provided, nevertheless, that if he shall repent, he shall not die, and no evil shall betide him.'—Would not such legislation be the consummation of folly and mischief? Whose property would such a law protect? And does God govern the universe upon principles which would fill the earth with anarchy, and turn it into a Hell?—What reason can be given, why pardon, upon condition of repentance merely, should not prostrate the divine government, as, most undeniably, it would annihilate every human government on earth.

Facts confirm this reasoning. Anarchy is always a state of intolerable evil, because a sense of accountability and the fear of punishment has ceased, and the hope of impunity becomes universal. The sale of Papal indulgences, which gave a cheap impunity to sin, dissolved almost the bonds of social order, and shook to their foundation the strong governments of Europe. And when, in France, atheism surpressed, for a time, the moral government of God, blotting out the hope of Heaven, and the fear of Hell, a mortal earthquake shook the kingdom,—her sun was darkened, and her moon turned into blood, and the stars of her heaven fell like autumn leaves, in the great and terrible day of God Almighty. It is impossible then, to reconcile pardon upon the simple condition of repentance, with the unimpaired energy of law. Sinful and selfish beings will not be deterred from sin, without the restraints of fear. Threatnings carry with them the certainty of an easy evasion, contain no restraint, exert no moral power, and are as if they were not.

It is not then, the implacableness of God, nor the conflict of justice, inexorable and bloodthirsty, with mercy, which precludes the possibility of pardon upon condition of repentance; but the laws of mind and of moral government, laws as well known, and as immutable as those of the natural world. The eye cannot see without the reception of vision, nor the ear hear without material vibrations, nor the mind feel without material contact, nor the scales gravitate without weights. And for reasons equally obvious, and equally founded in the nature of things, mind cannot be governed, accountably, without law; rewards and punishment; nor these be made efficacious, where pardon is offered upon conditions which render impunity in sin a moral certainty.—Dr. Beecher.

EXEGETICAL MEANING OF THE WORD GENERATION.

Luke xxi. 32. Verily I say unto you this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled

This text has often been the occasion of perplexity. The prediction of the coming of the Son of man "in the cloud, with power and great glory," and the assertion that this generation should not pass away till all be fulfilled, have appeared to many to locate the judgement day within the limits of the same generation that witnessed the crucifixion. But by reference to 1. Peter ii. 8. we find that saints in general are called 'a generation,' a chosen generation; that they are a distinct class inheriting the same peculiarities in one age as another. We also find it thus noted in the scriptures of truth "they shall be counted to the Lord for a generation;" now, besides those who are thus counted to the Lord there are others who are counted as generations, thus identifying particular bodies or description of men; notes to their existence at a particular point of time, or during the individual life of man; but as they should exist from age to age. Thus the Scribes and Pharisees are "counted for a generation." The wise man in the Proverbs makes mention of four distinct generations, which at one and the same period seem to have existed in the world and to have continued to exist long after the termination of his natural life; nor have we reason to infer that they do not exist now.—Badger's W. Messen.

At a late meeting of the British Methodist Conference, it was unanimously resolved, "that it be recommended to all who now or hereafter may be possessed of the elective franchise, to give their votes and interests to such persons only as shall unite, with other qualifications of a British Senator, a cordial desire and firm determination to promote the entire and early extinction of negro slavery."

SUSPICION OF MURDER.

We reached Havre, on the first of August, after a passage of thirty one days, without any of those severe visitations of Providence, which so often overtake those who go down 'to do business in the great waters.' There was, however, a circumstance in our voyage which gave us for a time some uneasiness, and with the narration of which I will close my present letter.

After we had been a few days at sea, one of the passengers came to me with great secrecy, and told me he was suspicious that measures were in train for taking his life. I was at first astonished and not a little alarmed, as most of the company were strangers to me, and might for aught I knew, have given just occasion for my informant's suspicions. Soon, however, his suspicions were extended to those whom I knew and consequently had the effect to make me suspicious of him. He soon began to communicate his fears to others, until the whole ships company were disturbed by his strange conduct. That the man was drunk, or crazy, or both, became obvious to all, yet no one wished exactly to express their views to him. As his state room was constantly locked, and as he had intimated to some of the passengers that he was well armed, I resolved that I would have at least a plain conversation with him on the subject of temperance. I asked him directly if he was in the practice of using ardent spirit? He was much agitated and after some hesitancy acknowledged that he did use it. How much have you in your state room? After many a hem, he owned that he started with three gallons of French Brandy, and had used in five days two bottles and a half. I then told him plainly that this was the enemy which was robbing him of his peace, and putting our lives in jeopardy, and that he must consent to part with the foe. He offered at once to put the brandy at my disposal, and which was no sooner done than I threw it, bottle after bottle, into the wide ocean, in presence of all on board, drawing as I was able the character of the foul spirit, which was thus cast out. We then persuaded him who had been possessed of the spirit to give up his arms (a brace of pistols, two dirks and a sword cane) to the captain for safe keeping, and from this time forward, all was tranquility and safety to the end of our voyage.

Yours, &c. B.

HAVRE, Aug. 3d, 1831.

From the Christian Guardian.

DEATH BY INTEMPERANCE.—On last Monday or Tuesday week, a man was discovered in the Holland River, just below Hon. Peter Robinsons saw Mill, on Youngh Street. For several days previous, he had been wandering from one Distillery to another, in that neighborhood. The evening before, he had been seen reeling towards the Saw Mill. It appears that he had succeeded in getting to the Saw Mill, and had taken off part of his clothes, when he fell through the timbers into the water below, and was found dead next morning. Such are the fruits of Distilleries and Intemperance.

DEATH BY INTEMPERANCE.—At a raising about four weeks ago, in the fifth or sixth concession of East Guillimsbury, the most of the persons present became quite intoxicated, and in their freaks of intoxication a log was thrown from the building—which struck one John Parks upon the head, and terminated his life about 4o'clock next morning.—The party were so intoxicated, that in conveying the dying man to his house, they got fighting by the way, some determining to ride upon the ox sled which carried the unhappy victim of intemperance, and others trying to keep them off. Parks never spoke after he received the fatal blow.—He has left a helpless family.—a wife and five or six children. Such are the fruits of intemperance.

CONTRAST.—On the same day the above melcholy occurrence took place, one of the same party invited hands to assist him to raise a house the Saturday following, and had provided Whiskey for the occasion. But "a cold water man" (alias a member of a Temperance Society) solicited him to desist from offering any Whiskey for that purpose, and promised as an inducement to get enough of his "cold water" brethren to put up his house on the following Monday, which he actually did, though it rained all day, without any accident or injury to any one. Such are the fruits of Temperance Societies.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

REVIVALS.

REVIVAL IN N. WOODSTOCK, CONN.

To the Editor of the Conn. Observer.

Dear Sir,—With pleasure I communicate the intelligence of a powerful work of divine grace, in North Woodstock.—In the church and society of which I am pastor there had been an increase of solemnity and feeling for a few months past. Some were awakened, and a few became the friends of Christ; but it was not until our protracted meeting of the 19th of Sept. that God's sovereignty was most strikingly displayed. The meeting commenced on Monday afternoon, and continued till Saturday night. More than 100 took the anxious seats, and resolved to do their duty. Out of this number, nearly 100 were from my congregation, nearly 90 of whom, a few days after, were rejoicing in hope. Last Sabbath was a fine season with us. It would have done your heart good to have witnessed it. Few could witness it with a cold heart and a dry eye. 87 were admitted into full communion with the church, from those whose heads were silvered with age, to sober manhood and unbroken youth. Of this number 7 were heads of families and 12 young men. I have never witnessed a revival of so much power and so little of animal excitement. During our protracted meeting, when the helpers warned day and night with tears, there was no noisy burst of enthusiasm, but 'earnest conviction and strong feeling.' Opposition was not only held at bay but silenced. I did not expect to see such scenes as these on earth. We owe these blessings solely to God's pardoning mercy and sovereign grace, and not to any excellence in ourselves. So far as instrumental causes are concerned, the fervent prayer has been blessed. God showed, that he was true to his promises, and that he was willing to answer immediately the supplications of his children if offered in faith.

In the other church in North Woodstock, yet without a pastor, there have been great displays of divine power. A series of religious meetings have been also held there, and the revival has received a fresh impulse. Christians are fervent in their intercessions at a throne of grace, and active in warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come. Last Sabbath 28 were received into the church, embracing all classes of individuals. From 90 to 100, I am informed, are rejoicing in God their Saviour.

I have only to add, that in North Woodstock, new cases of conviction and conversion are occurring every day. In my own church and society I daily meet with striking cases. Some whom I little expected to see, are 'clothed and in their right mind,' and sitting at Jesus' feet.

The revivals still go on with power in West and South Woodstock. We hope and pray that in this ancient and higly favored town, in these visitations of mercy not a soul may be left 'to make his own destruction sure.'

I remain, yours, in the best of bonds,

FOSTER THAYER.

REVIVAL IN BEAUFORT.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in Beaufort—a member of the Episcopal Ch., to a Clergyman in this City, dated Monday Oct. 31st.

I know it will rejoice your heart to hear that there is a most triumphant work of grace in this village. The Rev. Mr. Baker, of Savannah, has been laboring among us night and day, since Monday night last. Both Churches, the Episcopal and Baptist, are united "with one accord and in one plan." There can be no calculating the blessed results of this meeting. Already upwards of 50 have expressed a hope they are converted; and such a crowd kneel in the aisles of the church, of such as have declared that they will give themselves no rest till they have found the pearl of great price, that there is no way of ascertaining their number. For the whole week past, almost every one have attended church three times a day, and prayer meetings in the morning and evening. I have scarce a moment to write. Blessed be God that has given our eyes to see, our ears to hear, and our hearts to feel, such marvellous goodness.—Charleston Obs.

Revival in Mt. Zion Academy, (Geo.).—We learn from a friend recently from that neighborhood, that about fifteen students in that institution have professed a hope in Christ.

* * * * * * *

It is one of the oldest and best regulated Academies in the state, and has exerted and still exerts a very extensive influence. The average number of students having been for nearly 20 years, between 80 and 100. We shall wait with anxiety for a particular account of this work of grace.—Ib.

EVERY CHRISTIAN SHOULD MAKE A PROFESSION OF RELIGION.

This is at once a duty and a privilege. It is a duty not only because Christ has positively commanded it, but because it is essential to letting our light shine as we are commanded to do; to our exerting the greatest amount of good influence. It is utterly impossible that you should approach the scriptural standard of Christian character, so long as you turn your back upon this duty; and we venture to say, that you cannot intelligently and deliberately look at what you are doing and remain at ease. It is, moreover, a most precious privilege; not only because it brings you to the sacramental table where the Savior's banner over this people is love, and introduces you there into the green pastures, but because it brings you more directly under a Christian influence, and furnishes you with greater helps for duties and conflicts. In short, whether you look at it on the score of duty or privilege, of religious enjoyment or of religious improvement, we think you cannot fail to be brought to the same result.

But while it is clearly your duty to come into the sacred enclosure of the church, it is equally your duty to come with deliberation and prayer after having carefully counted the cost; for a Christian profession places you instantly on an eminence; all that you do from the hour of your making it, is judged by a different standard; and your errors may stab the cause till it bleeds to the very quick. Thousands of professors do dishonor the cause, and unless you are upheld by the Almighty grace of God, what better can you expect than that you too will be marked as a backslider or even an apostate!

But perhaps some one will say, "Then I will not run the hazard of joining the church." But stop, my friend, weigh that matter well before you come to such a conclusion. It is not at your option whether to join the church or not. Christ has decided that you must come, and if you do not, you disobey his plain command; and in doing that, how can you expect either to be useful or happy? Yes, there is no alternative left for you unless you will run the hazard of setting at nought his dying injunction, but that you must confess him before the world, and you must live agreeable to your profession. This is the only path which he marks out for you; if you turn to the right or the left, you are on forbidden ground.

But do you ask what security you can have that you shall not dishonor your Master's cause? We answer, every security you need in the Promise of Divine grace. "My grace is sufficient for thee," coming from the throne of heaven, is answer enough for every [illegible] tension that may rise in your breast. Trusting yourself on that grace, we say again, obey the Savior's command and come.—Christian Spectator

OBSERVER.

THURSDAY, NOV. 24, 1831.

REVIVAL AT YORK, LIVINGSTON CO.

A protracted meeting commenced at York Centre on the first of this month, in the Church and society of which Rev. Mr. Whittlesey is pastor, and continued nine days—On account of previous engagements of some of the ministers attending, and the ill health of others, the meeting was adjourned to re-commence on Friday of last week.

There had been during the past summer, more than usual attention to the preaching of the word, and some few hopeful conversions—For six weeks previous to the meeting, prayer meetings had been held with reference to it—that God would prepare the church for the reception of his blessings, to give the truth access to the hearts of the impenitent, and make it effectual to their conversion—We mention this as worthy of especial notice, and as an example for the imitation of every church where a protracted meeting is to be held.

As might have been anticipated under such circumstances, the hopes and expectations of God's people, were not disappointed—a deep solemnity pervaded the assembly, and sinners became anxious, and more than sixty were made the subjects of renewing grace. We look with deep solicitude for the result of the adjourned meeting, and shall expect a particular account of this revival from Mr. Whittlesey, as soon as circumstances shall render it in his opinion, expedient to give it.

A NEW GROUND OF OPPOSITION TO MISSIONS.

A few days since, a lady who is our informant, was on board a Canal Boat a few miles west of this village, and heard a warm dispute between an ignorant professor of religion, and a noisy Universalist. After considerable disputation on the subject of future punishment, the Universalist belched out his anathemas against Missions, when his antagonist readily acknowledged that he agreed with him on that subject—He said that he had, until he started this journey, been friendly to Missionary operations but since he left home he had been convinced that they were all wrong, and he should never give any thing more for their support—He said that just before he left home a minister came into his neighborhood preaching about sending Missionaries to Rome and begging for money to purchase Bibles to give to the inhabitants, but said he, "as I came along I stopped at Rome and I did'nt see but that the people were as good christians as we were in N. Hampshire, and besides this, they lived in great houses and appeared to be better able to buy themselves Bibles than we were to give them." We regret very much that as this conversation took place just as our informant left the boat, she had no opportunity to correct the poor man's geography and let him know that there was a place called Rome in Italy, quite as ancient and as noted as the little village of that name in Oneida county.

Now although we may laugh at the ignorance of this man, and pity his simplicity, are there not multitudes that oppose the benevolent efforts of the day to send the gospel and dispel the darkness of Catholic superstition and Pagan idolatry, who can give no better reason for it than did this man, for his recent conversion from a supporter to an opposer of Missions!

WHY ARE NOT INFIDELS ALARMED AT THE INCREASE OF POPERY.

It is well known to every man of any information, that where the Catholic religion prevails, there is the least of civil liberty—The subserviency of the civil, to the ecclesiastical power, is one of its fundamental principles. Every person that has read history, either civil or ecclesiastical, must recollect the assumption of the power of disposing of crowns by the Pope—absolving subjects from their allegience to their sovereign and in how many instances the bull of the Pope has bro't Kings to bow in abject and humilating submission to his mandates—Now be it remembered that it is a boast of Popery that "it is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." Infallibility cannot err—of course it would be absurd to talk of improvement.

Is it not astonishing then, that some of our Argus-eyed politicians, who are so sharp sighted to discern the dangers which encircle our free institutions, can see even in revivals of religion, so much cause of alarm, especially when promoted by protracted meetings, and yet should see no danger threatening them from the increase of the power and influence of the adherents of the liege subjects of the Pope in this country! Which should we conclude to be at fault, their discernment or their hearts? At Cleaveland Ohio, a protracted meeting called forth the most bitter denunciations; Priestcraft, church and state &c. were sounded by men, who, from their business and standing, ought to know something of the history of the Catholic church, and ought not to be ignorant who laid the foundation of our government. Let them look back to our history, previous to, and during our revolutionary war. Let them look at the Puritans of N. England, whose principles so much alarm our praters about Priests and revivals. We will not attempt to reason on this subject—it would be an insult to the intelligence of every child ten years old, who has had the advantages of a Sabbath school, to tell him that the very denomination of christians which these infidel patriots are representing as dangerous to our liberties, laid the foundation, reared and defended those free institutions under which we live.

But why, with the light of history before their eyes—with facts both ancient and modern, to instruct them—do they see no danger from the astonishing accessions that are made every year to our Catholic population! They cannot but know that the court of Rome is sending over money and shoals of Missionaries, with the avowed intention of acquiring an ascendency in the valley of the Mississippi, by the establishment of schools, and training up our Protestant children in the dogmas of her church.

We ask can any man make any pretensions to common honesty, much less, to common intelligence, when he raises the cry of church and state against any Protestant denomination, while he can unite with, and endeavor to court the favor of the subjects of a foreign Potentate, who from the very nature of their religion owe him allegience, wherever they may be on the face of the Globe!

ORDAINED.—By the Buffalo Presbytery, at Fredonia, on Thursday last, Messrs. D. D. Gregory and J. Parmalee as Evangelists; late Students of Andover Theological Seminary.

TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE.

We have spoken of this paper as Editor in the article in this paper that it is in great danger of being discontinued from want of sufficient patronage to sustain it. The price of it is but $1,50 per annum, and in our opinion, is worth twice that sum to every friend of temperance, and might be worth more than any arithmetic can compute to the enemies of the cold water system. The Advocate has nearly closed the first volume, and the ability with which it has been conducted—the fearless and thorough-going course it has pursued, certainly entitle it to an extensive circulation and an abundant support. In the village of Sandy-Hill where it is published, it has above eighty subscribers, but in the whole County of Washington besides, in which there were last January nearly 5,000 members of Temperance societies, it has less than FORTY—At this, we are astonished, and do not wonder that the editor felt too much for the reputation of the advocates of temperance in that county, to make this fact known until compelled to do so from necessity.

We do not hesitate to recommend this paper to our readers, and to say to the friends of temperance, in this quarter, who feel able to pay the trifling sum of $1,50, that they may have an opportunity of patronizing the Temperance Advocate and thus essentially and effectually aid the good cause, by leaving their names with Mr. A. G. Hall, the printer of the Rochester Observer who will act as agent for it, and forward the names and receive pay free of any expense of postage to them.

'TEMPERATE ENOUGH.'

The article under this head from the Temperance Advocate complaining of the return of that paper from the post office in this place, with the above endorsement, called forth the statement of the Secretary of the Temperance society in this village, which appeared in the Observer last week. Since our last paper was published, we have learned from Dr. Elwood the facts in the case—he says That the Temperance Advocate was not taken out of the office, that some fifteen or twenty numbers had accumulated and they were put into the box of another gentleman at the P. Office, who, it was said, would take them out. That he refused & a cl'k in the office asked him what should be done with them—he replied we are temperate enough!! or something to that effect—the boy obeyed the direction. The Post Master of course, is exempted from any blame in the case.

As it appears that there could have been no intention of disparaging the paper in question, or of throwing contempt upon the Temperance reformation; the matter appears to be of little consequence, and much more has been said about it, when the facts are known, than its importance demanded.

WHAT A SPECTACLE!—A few Sabbaths since, as one of our young men from this village was going out to assist in a Sabbath school, 2 or 3 miles distant, he met a little boy miserably clad, and shivering with cold, carrying a bottle of whiskey in his hand, which he had just got at a tavern, the keeper of which is a professor of religion. The boy had to travel three miles to get whiskey for his father to keep the Sabbath upon! A Christian! yes, one who professes to be a follower of Christ; to make his three cents on a qt. of whiskey, breaks the Sabbath; knowing too, that it is to gratify this depraved appetite of a father who would send a small child half naked and frozen, three miles to purchase a bottle of whiskey. Oh! the root of all evil!

A PREMIUM OFFERED TO PROMOTE INTEMPERANCE.

Our attention has been called to the fact, that our Commissioners of excise receive a fee of twenty five cents each, for every license they grant for selling ardent spirits. This, it is true, is but a trifle and, we might hope, could never operate as an inducement for granting a license, where it would not be granted were there no compensation allowed. But at this day, when the evil of selling spirits is so generally understood and acknowledged—and where almost every measure short of direct legislation has been resorted to, to arrest the evil; when village and town authorities have, in so many instances, with a firmness and independence that does them honor, refused the granting of licenses altogether; would it not have a good effect; would it not be a proper measure for our legislators, to take away this fee entirely? —It appears to us that such a step would, at least, remind the officers of excise that those who make our laws are aware of the injurious effects of licensing tavern keepers and grocers; would show them that they were engaged in a business of questionable utility; that they ought to use their power with great caution. The very fact of taking away the accustomed fee would remind those who have the legal authority to multiply or diminish these rendezvous of the intemperate, at the very time when they ought to reflect upon it, and when it might be of some avail, that there is a change in public sentiment on this subject, and this might lead them to look for, and examine the reasons that have led to it. When this is done, with almost every reflecting man who feels his personal responsibility and who has moral courage sufficient to disregard the mandates of established custom, when they obviously come in competition with the public good a convert is made to the temperance cause.

This appears to us to be one of the ways in which a new impulse might be given to the temperance reformation, and one well worthy the attention of our legislators.

A NEW TEMPERANCE PAPER.—Messs. Goodell and Crandall have commenced the publication of a monthly paper called the Philanthropist, which is under the patronage and direction of the "Young Men's Temp. Society of Buffalo.

This society deserves much credit for the bold and fearless stand which it has taken in the cause of Temperance; and we cannot but expect that much good will be done by the publication of the Philanthropist—We wish them success.

A CHILD'S REASONING.

"Francis," said a mother to a little son of four years, who was crying on account of some trifling hurt, "if you are a good boy and love God and obey him, you will go to heaven, and there will be no sickness or pain there." Wont any body be sick in heaven, mother? "No." Will Doctor S. (he was the family physician) go to heaven? "Yes, if he is a Christian." What will Dr. S. do there if there wont be any sick folks in heaven?

This was the reasoning of an Infant School scholar in this village, of four years old, and tho' the knowledge of maturer years will readily detect its fallacy, we could not but think that there are multitudes who live under the sound of the Gospel to whom heaven would present much more powerful attractions if they could hope there to engage in the business and occupations of earth. Could the farmer take his farm with him—the mechanic his tools—the physician his bags and his lancets, and the surgeon the instruments of his profession, would not the "strait and narrow path" appear much less thorny and difficult and be much more to rise here; the greatest agitation prevailed; the citizens armed themselves, patrols were formed, the magazines guarded; scouts paraded the streets for some nights in succession; the confusion was dreadful. Fortunately for us, the dreaded evil has passed for the present. These things are but signs of the times, fearful and portentous!! Observe how they have spread like a black cloud, over the slaveholding portion of these United States, and then say if we should not hold him our benefactor, who would with the sunshine of liberty dispel the dark and gloomy mists that enshroud this southern atmosphere!

"An atrocious instance of a negro being flogged to death, occurred here in September last: our local papers are, as usual, silent on the subject. A merchant, who suspected one of his slaves of stealing, undertook to extort a confession by whipping him. This unfortunate human [illegible] horribly from lacerations inflicted by means of a HAND-SAW, used by his inhuman owner on the naked carcass of the negro, to beat him with in place of a cowhide or horse-whip: he died in consequence of the torture, and the affair will come up at the next superior court."

DIFFICULTIES AT THE WEST.

It is well known that serious difficulties have existed at the west on the subject of Missions, between the Assembly's Board and the Home Missionary Society. Our friends will be pleased to see that the Synod of Cincinnati has adopted the following resolution. It appears to us to be the only course which they could consistently take; the course pointed out by good sense, & a christian spirit. We do hope that this may prove a preliminary step to the final adjustment of the existing difficulties and that we shall not again be pained by hearing of the divisions, the criminations and re-criminations of the brethren in that section of our Church.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

The committee on the minutes of the last General Assembly, and the communication of the Synod of Ohio on the subject of Home Missions, have had that subject under consideration; and would recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That as the Presbyteries of this Synod are already auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the General Assembly, or to the American Home Missionary Society, allowing to individuals and churches, the privileges of co-operating with either of them, which they may prefer, and as no regulation in the power of the Synod to adopt, can oblige individuals or churches to contribute contrary to their own views; a full and fair experiment of the measure already adopted, ought to be made before any other measure is proposed.

2. That as no effort which this Synod can make would be likely to induce all the ministers and churches to unite either with the Assembly's Board or the A. H. M. Society, so it would be equally fruitless to attempt an amalgamation or united agency of those two institutions, or even the erection of a new Board, to conflict with those already in existence, because a united agency, or a new Board, would be likely to foster old collisions and originate new ones, instead of allaying and removing them.

3. That the stated Clerk of Synod be directed to transmit a copy of the above resolutions to the moderators of the Synods named in the minutes of the General Assembly, and to the next General Assembly.

These resolutions passed without opposition.

DECISION OF THE SYNOD OF CINCINNATI IN THE CASE OF MR. BLANCHARD.

We noticed some time since the difficulty which arose in the Cincinnati Presbytery on the application of Mr. Blanchard, for license to preach the Gospel—That the license was granted, a small majority being in favor of his license—that the minority had appealed to Synod. It was apprehended the same scene which had occurred in the case of Rev. Mr. Barnes of Philadelphia might be there acted over, but it will be seen that the Synod has not sustained the appeal.

The sentiments of Mr. Blanchard which were deemed erroneous, and to which exceptions were taken were contained in his TRIAL SERMON on the doctrine of Original Sin, an extract from which we published some weeks since.

The following is from the Cincinnati Journal:

CINCINNATI SYNOD.

We have only room this week to give the ultimate decision of Synod in the case of Mr. Blanchard. The resolutions given below were, as our readers will perceive, a compromise between the parties. The discussion on this case continued from Saturday till Tuesday evening, when the business was settled by the adoption of the following resolutions.

1st, Resolved, That in the opinion of this Synod, Mr. Blanchard's sermon, which was the ground of complaint is too metaphysical in its character; and that on the doctrine of Original Sin and the Atonement he has such variations from the confession of Faith, as merited the disapprobation of the Presbytery; and while the Synod disapprove such variations, they do not judge them of such importance as to demand the interference of the Synod.

2d, Resolved, That the Synod judges, that there was not sufficient reason for the ordination of Mr. Blanchard without title.

3d, Resolved, That Synod sees no good reason to invalidate the ordination of Mr. Blanchard.

True copy.

WM. GRAHAM, Temp. Cl'k.

Dayton, Nov. 2, 1831.

GREECE.

The very interesting article which we give this week in relation to Greece occupies so much space as to exclude some other articles of importance which we had designed for this paper. But we are sure that our readers, the friends of Greece, the friends of humanity, feel so deep an interest in every thing that relates to this oppressed, brave and patriotic people, that they will approve of our course.

POLAND.

We have no later intelligence from Poland. From the Russian official account of the taking of Warsaw it is settled however that the Polish army was not included in the surrender. Indeed from all that we can gather, we conclude that the reduction of Warsaw is not the subjugation of Poland; that there is still hope in their case.

The Influenza prevails very generally in this village. One half the hands in our office are affected with it; two unable to do any thing. It however appears to be of a milder character than that which prevailed some 6 or 7 years ago.

H. D. D. is received, but the subject is one about which, so much has been written, that it requires no ordinary talents, so to exhibit its evils and the remedy for it, as to secure a reading—We must decline the insertion of this article, but would suggest to the writer that he may do good in the cause which he has so much at heart, and on which he judges so correctly, by the communication of facts that may have come within his knowledge in relation to the subject.

From the Canadian Watchman.

LOST CHILD RESTORED.

An event which occured near Briancon will give some notion of the incidents which embellish the mountain life and field sports in the regions of the Alps.

A peasant, with his wife and three children, had taken up his summer quarters in a chalet, and was depasturing his flocks on one of the mountains of the Alps which overhang the Durance. The oldest boy was an idiot about eight years of age, the second was five years old, and dumb, and the youngest was an infant. It so happened that the infant was left alone one morning in charge of his brothers, and the three had rambled to some distance from the chalet before they were missed. When the mother went in search of the little wanderers; she found the two elder, but could discover no traces of the baby. The idiot boy seemed to be in a transport of joy, while the dumb child displayed every symptom of alarm and terror. In vain did the terrified parent endeavor to collect what had become of the lost infant. The antics of the one and the fright of the other explained nothing. The dumb boy was almost bereft of his senses, while the idiot appeared to have acquired an unusual degree of mirth and expression. He danced about, laughed, and made gesticulations as if he were imitating the action of one who bore up something of which he was fond, and fondled to his heart. This, however, was of some slight comfort to the poor woman; for she imagined that some acquaintance had fallen in with the children, and had taken away the infant. But the day and night wore away, and no tidings of the lost child! On the morrow, when the parents were pursuing their search, an eagle flew over their heads, at the sight of which the idiot renewed his antics, and the dumb boy clung to his father, with shrieks of anguish and affright. The horrible truth then burst upon their minds, that the miserable infant had been carried off in the talons of a bird of prey, and that the half-witted elder brother was delighted at his riddance of an object of whom he was jealous.

On the morning on which the accident happened, an Alpine yager,

"Whose joy was in the wilderness—to breathe
The difficult air of the iced mountain's top," had been watching near an eagle's seat, under the hope of shooting the bird upon her return to her nest. The yager waiting in all the anxious perseverance of a true sportsman, beheld the monster slowly winging her way toward the rock, behind which he was concealed. Imagine his horror, when, upon her near approach, he heard the cries and distinguished the figure of an infant in her fatal grasp. In an instant his resolution was formed—to fire at the bird, at all hazards, the moment she should alight upon the nest, and rather to kill the child, than leave it to be torn to peices by the horrid devourer. With a silent prayer and steady aim, the mountaineer poised his rifle. The ball went directly through the head or heart of the eagle, and in a minute afterward, this gallant hunter of the Alps had the unutterable delight of snatching the child from the nest, and bearing it away in triumph. It was dreadfully wounded in one of its arms and sides, but not mortally; and within twenty four hours after it was first missed, he had the satisfaction of restoring it to its mother's arms.—Gilley's Waldensain Researches.

THE SAVIOR.

At a meeting of the London Religious Tract Society, in May last, the Rev. T. S. Grimshaw related a conversation which he had with one of the Moravian Missionaries to the Esquimaux. "I thought," said Mr. G., I would question this good man upon a point of some curiosity and difficulty respecting his translations. Knowing how imperfect the barbarous language is, and how inadequate to express any abstract idea, I requested him to say how he had rendered the word 'Savior,' in the Bible." He said, "Your question is remarkable, and perhaps the answer may be so too. It is true the Esquimaux have no word to represent the 'Savior,' and I could never find they had any direct notion of such a friend. But I said to them, 'Does it not happen sometimes that when you are out a fishing a storm arises, and some of you are lost and some saved?' They said, 'O yes, very often.' But it also happens that you are in the water, and owe your safety to some brother or friend, who stretches out his hand to help you?' 'Very frequently.' 'Then what do you call that friend?' 'They gave me a word of their language, and I immediately wrote it against the term Savior in Holy Writ, and ever afterwards it was intelligible to them."—Vermont Chronicle.

ANECDOTE.

A pious merchant once sent a present of chocolate, sugar, &c. to his pastor with a note, desiring his acceptance of it as a comment upon Galations vi. 6. Let him that is taught in the word; communicate unto him that teacheth, in all good things. The pastor, who was confined in his house by indisposition, returned his compliments to his friend, thanked him for his excellent Family Expositor, and wished the merchant to give him a practical exposition of Matthew xxv. 36. I was sick and ye visited me.

From the Connecticut Observer.

NO TIME FOR THE FOLLIES OF THE THEATRE.

On the receipt of the news of the fall of Warsaw, there was a great sensation among the people of Paris. Among other instances of the ebullition of feeling they "entered the Theatres in that of Nouveautes, Varieties and Italian, and compelled the actors to retire from the stage and discontinue their performances. Indeed, every where the theatres were closed. "Retire, retire!" cried the celebrated Fontan, at the Theatre des Nouveautes, "and do not seek to amuse us with your follies, whilst our brethren in Poland are being massacred."

This is a noble thought and shows a soul on fire at the sufferings of the unfortunate patriots of Poland. No wonder to such a mind and in such a moment the theatre appeared in all its absurdity. It was no time for men to be amusing others with their folly when the sword was drinking the blood of the patriotic brave. We would not check such sympathy—it is above all praise. But we would extend the same commendation to others. 'Retire, retire,' says the devoted christian to the actors on the stage, 'and do not seek to amuse men with your follies while their own souls are struggling in the pangs of the second death.' And the world who applaud the generous sympathy of the French philanthropist, mock at the sympathy of the christian for the souls of the nearest friends!

The christian, with an expansive and disinterested benevolence, looks over the world. He sees a great moral combat raging. The dead are falling all around him. The Bible points out

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

chains of eternal servitude to sin, as the doom of those who die impenitent. To the stage actor he exclaims, in the burning sympathy of his heart, 'Retire, retire, and do not seek to amuse us by your follies while the adversary is leading souls captive to the dark prisons of endless despair.'

The christian hears the groans of victims crushed beneath the ponderous car of Juggernaut, and of widows consuming on the funeral piles of their husbands, and of children floating down the Ganges, just about to be devoured by the ravenous shark, and of parents exposed to death in old age and in sickness by their own offspring—and he exclaims to the actor, 'Retire, retire, and do not seek to amuse us with your follies while these agonizing shrieks assail our ears'—and the world laugh at the christian's commiseration, and jest at his sympathy, and call him a fanatic for his attempt to relieve these wretched sufferers, and a misanthrope because he will not be amused by the follies of the actor,—yes, and men laugh at him, and jest at him, and call him fanatic and misanthrope, who boast that they are special lovers of humanity, and talk of their sensibilities, and even claim to believe the Gospel to be divine. 'They think it strange that he will not run to the same excess of riot with them.' O the inconsistencies of the human heart!

REVIVALS VS. UNIVERSALISM.—The editor of the Boston Recorder, on a tour in Vermont, writes under date of Sept. 21st:—

"It is no wonder that the Universalists dislike revivals. I have never before heard so much of their power in overthrowing that heresy, as since I left Boston. In some places that I could name, revivals have almost annihilated large universalist societies; and in many instances, in all parts of New Hampshire and Vermont, prominent advocates of universalism have abandoned their error, and become obedient to the truth."

DOMESTIC.

THE GUNPOWDER PLOT.—Before temperance societies came in fashion, a person who had a most resplendant red face was one day rebuking his son for playing with gunpowder. "Gunpowder!" said he "I will set my face against it." "O, father do not for the world," answered his son, "if you do we shall be blown up."

A political convention of young men was held at Locke's Hotel, last week. The members dined at the Hotel, and were together between four and five hours, during which time not a single drop of ardent spirits or wine was called for. A supply of the latter article was at hand, but none was wanted. This is an encouraging indication of the growing ascendency of good habits, and we record it with pleasure.—Jour. of Human.

FAYETTEVILLE SUFFERERS.—The gross amount contributed by the citizens of the United States for the relief of the sufferers by fire at Fayetteville, N. C. is ninety-two thousand dollars. At a meeting of the sufferers, a resolution was passed appointing a committee to make a suitable acknowledgment for the very great liberality and kindness of the contributors.—Ont. Rep.

The Lexington (Ky.) Observer of the 28th ult. states that the Hon. Peter B. Porter, of this state, is lying dangerously ill at the residence of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Brackenridge, about six miles from that town. [The Lexington Reporter of Nov. 2, states that Gen. Porter is considered out of danger.]

PROSPERITY OF CINCINNATI.

This 'New York' of the valley of the Ohio, is growing very rapidly. I saw that a manifest improvement had taken place since I was there last summer. New houses in great numbers are building, and part of streets, which were then thinly built, are now becoming crowded. Improvements are going on in the beautiful towns of Covington and Newport, which lie opposite, on the Kentucky side. The Presbyterians have now six churches here, some of them formed within a comparatively short time. Rev. Dr. Wilson, who is the father of the Presbyterian church here, for a long time labored alone in this city. Now he sees six churches spring up, colonies, as it were, from the mother church. The other denominations are also prosperous. There are several Methodist and Baptist churches; two Episcopal; a Lutheran, German reformed, &c. Many steam-boats are also building this summer. It is a great place for such articles. Indeed, the whole of the upper part of Cincinnati along the river, is made up of steam-boat shops, and of houses occupied by persons engaged directly or indirectly in building steam and other boats.—N. Y. Obs.

From the Jour. of Humanity.

INCREASE OF STUDENTS.

Dartmouth has 60 in its freshman class—Amherst the same number—Bowdoin more than 50—Burlington more than usual; and generally, so far as we have been able to learn, the classes entered this year at the New-England Colleges are uncommonly large. Harvard has but 60, the same number as Dartmouth and Amherst. The University of Virginia has in all about 130 students—about 60 of them, however, in the schools of Medicine and Law.

[The present Junior Class of the Theological Seminary in this place, consists of about seventy five. The average number of students to a class last year was about forty.]

An alarming mortality has taken place among the horses in Massachusetts. The disease which is thus fatal, is described, as commencing with a continual inclination of the head to the right, and a subsequent propensity to turn round on the heels, until the animal falls and dies. It is termed apoplexy. The heads of some of the deceased animals when opened exhibited water, and others blood on the brain. The former cases are called serous, and the latter Sanguineous apoplexy. There is but one remedy which has yet been found effectual in any case, and that is copious bleeding in the first stages of the disorder. Not less than 6 or 8 quarts should be taken from the horse, and this should be done on the first perceiving the symptoms, and before any effusion of blood on the brain.

Asylum from heresy, schism, &c.—The Episcopal Watchman says—We are glad to perceive that our clergy are not unmindful of the present crisis in the religious world, nor of the duty which devolves upon them. We are glad to see them abounding in their labors, and careful to exhibit the Church in which they minister, what she really is, an asylum from the errors of heresy and schism, and from the extravagancies of fanaticism, and "the very pillar and ground of the truth," erected on "the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

Georgia Products.—We are informed that a waggon arrived yesterday from Walton County, laden with cotton, cane brides, chesnuts and gold, all the produce of that county.—Nat. Geo.

ROCHESTER INSTITUTE OF PRACTICAL EDUCATION.

The constitution of this Seminary requires, that instruction be given in all the branches of Natural Science, which are useful in the practical duties of life. The directors of the Institution have elected Prof. OATMAN, Lecturer on Chemistry and the kindred branches. The funds of the Institution not being adequate to his support, Mr Oatman is expected to open a Course of Lectures for a Class, who are not members of the Institute. Chemistry will occupy the present term, and instead of the plan usually pursued, according to which the student sits at a distance, hears the Lecture, and sees the experiment of his Instructor, without the privilege of making the experiments for himself,—he is required to enter the Labratory, and with his own hands to make the preparations and perform the experiments, and before his class deliver a lecture on each subject previously presented by his Instructor. In addition to this, he is required, at intervals, to visit all the workshops and manufacturing establishments, where the principles are practically applied. This course, with reading and attention to style and manner, will not only form the practical chemist, but the ready, extemporaneous speaker.

To the Student, who is qualifying himself for the practice of Medicine, this course will be particularly useful, as a knowledg of practical chemistry is indispensible to the physician.

The Mechanic will have an opportunity by the shortest course, to obtain a thorough knowledge of the science.

The working class will be distributed into divisions, each division occupying different hours in the day and evening, for the convenience of such as have other engagements.

Teachers and Students of the village may join a division which will meet at a time which will be most convenient for them.

Tuition will be $5 for the course.

The course will commence on Thursday Evening the 17th instant. Such individuals as contemplate joining the class, will do well to make known their intention immediately.

In addition to the above mentioned course, Mr. Oatman will give a course of Public Lectures on the same subject, in the Chapel of the Institute, which is a commodious room for a large assembly. To be given one evening of each week, and to be supported by individuals and families, who will purchase tickets of attendance. The avails are to be applied for the benefits of the Institute.

The course to commence on Tuesday evening the 22d instant.

Tickets of admission to be, $2 for a gentleman—$1 for a Lady, and $4 for a family.

Students in the working class may attend this course free of charge.

Rochester, Nov. 17, 1831.

A North Carolina paper says, "A gentleman now a resident of Georgia, but formerly a resident of this State, informs us that he weighed on the 28th ult, a single piece of gold, found nine miles northwest of Clarksville, on the waters of the Soaquee, which weighed seven hundred and fifteen pennyweights! worth $645. He also says that he weighed the proceeds of eleven hands, for two days, employed in Samuel Hughe's mine, which amounted to 1100 dwt. which sold for $1,000!"

The National Gazette states it as a subject of general rejoicing in Philadelphia, as we are sure it will be throughout the country, "that the present condition of Chief Justice Marshall warrants the hope of his speedy convalescence."

STEAM BOATS ON THE WESTERN WATERS.

The Journal of Commerce says that it appears from documents lately published, that from 1811, when the first Western steamboat was launched, to the Spring of 1831, there had been employed on those waters 402 steamboats, of which 220 were in use last year, and 182 not in existence. Of these, 66 were worn out, 37 snagged, 16 burnt, 3 run down by other boats, four or five stove by ice, sand bars, rocks, &c. and 30 destroyed by causes not exactly known. No less than 60 boats, within the writer's knowledge, have been building or contracted for within the present year.

CIRCULAR.

Of the New-York State Temperance Society, to the town and county Societies in the State.

The Executive Committee have, at great labor and expense, procured to be printed and forwarded to every county in the state, their proportion of 350,000 circulars, on the subject of temperance, addressed to the citizens of the state of New-York. The committee have aimed to furnish every county with a sufficient number to supply each family with a copy; and they have no doubt but that the officers of the county societies, to whom they have been sent, will take immediate measures to accomplish this object, and have each town society furnished with its proportion, with as little delay as possible, and that energetic measures will be taken by the officers of all town societies, to complete the distribution, so that in a short time, each family in the state may be supplied. The Executive Committee have already received returns from towns, where the document has been distributed, and the results have been encouraging, particularly in silencing opposition and bringing out a majority of the population, on the side of Temperance. They have also been induced to delay the publication of the third annual report, until the 15th February next, that time may be given for the distribution of the circulars, and to obtain knowledge of the results, through the reports of the town to the county societies, and the county to the state societies, which may be laid before the public in their annual report.

The committee respectfully request that the county societies will take the necessary measures to obtain reports from the town societies and also that the county reports may not be delayed so as to reach Albany later than the 15th February, and as much earlier as convenient.

The Committee have incurred a considerable debt in printing the circulars, and they look to the town and county societies, for remuneration where they feel inclined to grant it. Some of the counties have already remitted for their proportion, for which the committee are obliged.

The executive committee have been convinced from the commencement of their labors, that an intelligent community only required information on the subject of the great reform now in progress, to give it their unanimous support, and have, therefore, made great efforts to disseminate information by circulars, tracts, temperance papers and their annual reports. They have recently forwarded to each town in the state, a number of the Temperance Advocate, printed at Sandy Hill, Washington county. The engagement with the editor has now expired; but the committee know of no method of furnishing information, more economical, than by the circulation of this paper.—The committee therefore give notice to all officers of temperance societies now formed, or that may hereafter be formed in the state during the present year, that a copy of said paper will be continued to each Society if ordered, (cost paid) without expense to the Societies.

REUBEN H. WALWORTH, Pres't.
Edward C. Delavan, Rich'd V. De Witt,
John F. Bacon, Arch'd Campbell,
John T. Norton, Joshua Brkur,
Henry Trowbridge, Ex. Committee.

Albany, November 8, 1831.

RUM! RUM!!!

Our profession is one of distress, and requires an uncommon philosophy, or a brutal insensibility, to sustain the perpetual demand made upon our sympathies; but no part of my practice has been more irritating and perplexing, than patiently to wait upon the mixed disorders which are based upon rum. The weakness of humanity is here in its last state of degradation, and while we anathemetize the destroying cause, we are unable to abandon the victim. A double misery is pressed upon us as men, and the profession is rebuked because of its insufficiency to restore an exhausted constitution! It is hard that day by day and night we are compelled to "alleviate the pain inseparable from existence, and to soothe the sorrows allied to humanity,"—but it is absolute cruelty, when we know that these pains and these sorrows are inflicted by profligate vice. I have labored with unceasing assiduty to fix upon some means by which to counteract the desolating powers of ardent spirits, but can find none.—New York Med. Journal.

FOREIGN.

GREECE.

The blowing up of the frigate Hellas, a Hydra corvette, and a brig, by Admiral Miaulis, is confirmed. The particulars of this extraordinary transaction, with the causes which led to it, are thus detailed in letters from Greece.

Napoli di Romania, Aug. 9.

I told you in my last what progress had been made towards the great object the Greeks had in view, viz. that of convoking the National Assembly as speedily as possible, being determined no longer to submit to the government of Capo d' Istrias. Addresses from all quarters demanding the National Assembly are pouring in daily, and where addresses have not been signed, the reason is, that they are prevented by force by the police, and the measures of rigor adopted by the Government, such as imprisonment and exile. I must now speak of the Russian tragedy, and surely people cannot now doubt what I have so long asserted,—namely, that Capo d' Istrias was, and is, the Russian Governor of this country. Whilst people were occupying themselves about the addresses, it was discovered, through the imprudent speeches of one of the President's commanders of the navy, that an expedition was to be sent against Syra, and the other Archipelago islands that had petitioned for the National Assembly; and that the troops were to be embarked in the large Greek frigate the Hellas, and other Greek ships of war, and escorted by a Russian frigate. They were to proceed to reduce Syra by force, and punish the inhabitants, and thence proceed to other islands, doing the same by them. The troops for this expedition were all ready in the island of Salamis and elsewhere, and provisions were embarking on board the ships of the Government. The news of this attack creating consternation in Syra, (the great commercial entrepot of Greece,) the people demanded protection of the Hydriots; upon which the latter, with the spirit of patriotism for which they are so justly celebrated, determined to paralyse this hostile movement of the President. They consequently sent a detachment of a couple of hundred of men, under the orders of Captain Criezi, to Poros, who during the night, took possession of the Hellas.

The next day old Miaulis arrived with 200 additional men, and hoisted his flag in the frigate, taking under his orders all the vessels in the port of Poros, except one which sailed out of the harbour. There was no intention whatever on the part of the Hydriots to do more than this,—that is, to prevent the expedition being sent against Syra. The town and island of Poros declaring, as was natural, for the cause of their country, received the Hydriots as friends. Immediately on receiving the report of what had happened at Poros, the President sent thither the Russian squadron under the orders of Admiral Ricord. The French Commodore Lalenda being absent at Navarino, and M. Rouen, the French resident, being also at Navarino, the senior French captain in the port of Nauplia refused very properly to accede to the President's invitation to proceed to Poros to reduce the rebels. The English frigate the Madagascar was cruising off Cape Males, looking out for the packet from Malta. In the mean time the Russians had gone to Poros, and on arriving there began to menace the Greeks with canonading them; to which Miaulis replied, that he had no orders to receive from a Russian Admiral,—that he was acting for the rights of his country, without intention of committing hostilities, unless obliged to defend himself. He was then threatened with the vengeance of the three powers; upon which Miaulis replied that he was not in danger of injustice either from the English or the French; that unless the ships of the three powers fired upon him, he would not relinquish his intention of keeping possession of the ships, to prevent their being sent against Syra and the other islands. He refused to go on board the Russian Admiral's ship, stating that he saw no reason why he, as High Admiral of Greece, should obey the orders of a Russian Rear Admiral. In the mean time, the Greek corvette that had left Poros returned, and placed herself near to the Russian frigate, and, to the astonishment of every body, hoisted Russian colors! upon which Miaulis, as quick as lightning sent his boats and boarded her, took her, and brought her over near his own frigate. In the mean time troops were sent by the President, and measures concerted with Admiral Ricord for the attacking the Greek ships. Miaulis and his companions in arms remained in the meantime like lions on board their ships, determined not to be the aggressors in attacking the Russians or the President's troops, but equally determined to defend themselves if attacked.

A Greek brig coming from Syra to Poros with provisions, was attacked by a Russian brig of war, and after a few broadsides without any provocation being given by the Greek brig, except that of wishing to enter the port of Poros (which the Russians have blockaded as they say,) the Greek brig was sunk by the fire of the Russian ships. On witnessing this attrocious affair, a badly armed Greek covette, with a few men on board, went to the defence of the unarmed brig, and engaged the Russian brig of 20 guns, fully manned and equipped, the Greek covette was fired into by the Russian brig first, and lost six men immediately, and she was ultimately (as the President's report states) taken by the Russians. The Russian brig it appears had 37 men killed, and was obliged to be towed round to that part of the harbor where the Russian Admiral was, being crippled in her rigging and hull. The next day a general attack was made on Poros by the President's troops, who were embarked in Russian boats, and provided with ammunition and biscuit by the Russians, and assisted by their soldiers; the attacks on Poros failed completely, the Russians and the President's troops being driven back with a heavy loss of men, and several officers being killed, and about 100 men, and some of the Russian boats with troops in them sunk. The Russian squadron consists of one 50 gun frigate, three first class brigs of war, two schooners and a cutter.

Napoli di Romania, Aug. 16.

To proceed to my narrative of the proceedings at Poros since my last account. Whilst Capod' Istrias, who boasts of being able, at all times to deceive, and outwit our diplomatists here, was holding out to the residents that he had ordered the Russians to cease hostilities, courier after courier had been sent to Admiral Ricord (a man well qualified to serve the views of Capo d' Istrias) to push matters to extremities. In the mean time, 1,200 men of Capod d'Istrias' troops (almost all men enlisted from different countries) had arrived to attack Poros. These men soon got hold of the water on the sides of the main land, and passed over in Russian boats, and assisted by Russian soldiers, they made themselves masters of the water at the monastery also: the Russians in the mean time having erected four batteries, which they worked against the town, and from which, they fired even upon the women and children going to endeavor to get water, (this is a fact.) Poros had not above 500 men to defend it. It was impossible to bring more men into it, owing both to want of water and total want of provisions. The ships were in the same state and the men were obliged to leave them by degrees.

In this state of things, the Russian resident issued a proclamation, in which he stated, that as the Greeks had fired upon the Russians, he would now take measures to have their ships now on trading voyages in the Black Sea taken by Russians. Under these circumstances, the commission of the Islands assembled at Hydra sent orders to Admiral Miaulis to remain entirely on the defensive, and not to attack the Russians, but that if it were impossible to defend himself, rather than give up the ships to the Russians, to blow them up! Glorious and heroic resolution, worthy the sacred cause of their country! During this time, the English and French ships were in the harbor of Nauplia, which port they however left to return to Poros, and arrived there shortly after the tragedy was ended.

Last Saturday the Russian Admiral, observing that the Hellas frigate had not above 100 men on board (the Greek Admiral having sent the other men away, having neither provisions nor water to give them) sent to say, that if Miaulis did not give up the ships, he would attack him in an hour and that the troops would enter Poros at the same time. Miaulis replied, that if the Russian Admiral attacked him, or if the Russians entered the town of Poros, he would blow up the ships, & never would consent to give up the Greek national ships of war to the Russians. Previous to this, and when he was well manned, he had sent to the Russian Admiral to say, that he (Miaulis) would not attack the ships of the Allied powers, but that if the Russian Admiral would hoist Capo d'Istria's flag, he would that moment get under way and attack him; but this the Russian refused to do.

On Saturday, then, at eleven o'clock, the Russians prepared to weigh anchor to attack Admiral Miaulis, who was seen walking his quarter-deck in the greatest apparent tranquility of spirit, not having with him more than five men, the others having been all sent away. Soon after, the Russians and Capo d'Istrias' troops were seen advancing on the town, and the ships approaching; at this moment a tremendous explosion took place, which shook the country round about like an earthquake; it was the blowing up of the Hellas frigate, and the two remaining Greek corvettes! Previous to this frightful event, Miaulis and the Hydriots had sent over vessels of all sorts, and boats to bring away the population of Poros, the whole of which, rather than submit to the Russians and Capo d'Istrias, quitted their country and homes—their houses, however, they left full of their property, which was immediately plundered by the Russians and Capod'Istrias' troops, who, after having plundered every thing in the town, set fire to all the principal houses in it. Poros is now in a silent pile of stone. The adjacent coast is strewed with the timber of the Greek ships, and the bodies of the seaman whose lives have been sacrificed in this atrocious manner! The Russians now menace blockading Hydra and attacking Syra. If the French and English squadrons permit their doing so, then woe to the people of this country, and more heavy will be the curses against England and France than even against Russia for nothing in the world can persuade the Greeks that the Russian operations are not connived at by those two Powers. The cause of Greece's freedom would have been gained beyond a doubt at Poros, had the Russians been prevented interfering; and why they should have been allowed to interfere, I do confess, as much at a loss as the Greeks to comprehend. If the Allience were for the protection of Greece, I should have thought that all must interfere or none; however, we have fatally proved the fallacy of this opinion.

GREECE.

A letter from the Mediterranean, to the editors of the Norfolk Beacon, dated the 20th of Aug. says:—

"About two weeks since, the Hydriots, under Miaulus, rose in opposition to the President, went over to Poros, where the Greek vessels lay, and took possession of them. The Russian squadron lying there made some opposition; but the reply of Miaulis was, "They belong to government, and not to the president; therefore, I shall take charge of them;" which he did. An armistice was entered into for three days, or until they could hear from Capo d'Istra. Before the expiration of that time, Miaulis made arrangements for taking the vessels to Hydra, which the Russians of course opposed. The old Greek immediately blew the Hellas up. The explosion was terrible; many houses and vessels were seriously injured." The Hellas frigate was built in New-York, for the Greeks.

From Berlin, itself we regret to hear that the cholera, of a character the most malignant, was spreading with great rapidity. Sept. 16—New cases of cholera, 35: recoveries, 3: deaths, 27—in all, from the beginning, 308 cases: 35 recoveries: 248 deaths: remain, 120.—Prussian State Gazette.

OBITUARY.

"For me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

This declaration of the Apostle was in a good degree illustrated in the christian character and happy death of Mr. SALMON SCOFIELD, who died in this village on Friday the 2d inst. He united with the 1st Presbyterian Church in Albany, April 1816, and soon after became an inhabitant of this village. When the 3d Presbyterian Church in this place was formed he was chosen one of its Ruling Elders, an office he had previously sustained in the 1st church, to the satisfaction of all its members. As an officer in the Church of Christ he was humble, faithful, and sincerely devoted to the service and interests of his Lord and Master. One great object with him was to promote the spiritual interests of those who had just commenced the Christian life. Whenever circumstances brought them into the same circle of employment with himself, not an hour would pass without making some profitable remarks upon religious subjects. This is an example which all his brethren should imitate. It is the example of Christ who went about doing good, and who allowed no portion of time to pass without special reference to his great work.

It was his constant daily practice to study his bible, and not as a matter of duty merely, which every christian should perform, but as a privilege. To know the mind and will of God, to search into those glorious things into which angels desire to look, was a prominent trait of his christian character. This, together with his frequent and earnest prayers at a throne of grace, prepared him for every duty, temptation and trial. His bible was his constant companion. While at work in his shop it was open before him. At intervals he would read a verse for meditation, and thus while engaged in laboring for the meat that perisheth he would feed his soul on the bread of life. If christians would grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, they must search the scriptures with humility and prayer. They must furnish their minds with every good word and then they will be qualified for every good work.

In the character of a Sabbath School superintendent Mr. Scofield was very much beloved, and in this station he was very much blessed. Bringing to this work a mind well furnished with scripture knowledge and with the spirit of Christ, the school enjoyed a rich blessing; many hopeful conversions among the scholars were the result of his labors, & here let it be remarked he always set apart a portion of his time to prepare himself by prayer and close examination of the scripture lesson, that he might benefit the precious youth belonging to the school. He felt it to be his duty to prepare himself with more than the ordinary reading of the scripture lesson; he must endeavor to know its meaning, its scope and design, and its application to ourselves. He felt it to be important, so to present the truth as to make a lasting impression upon the youthful mind. Much might be written respecting his daily walk and conversation as a man and a christian. Suffice it to say he was endeared to a large circle of friends, and in his death, they and his family and the church of Christ have lost a valuable friend who was devoted to their best good and the glory of his Lord, but their loss is his gain, for blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

A few weeks before his death he seriously examined his whole christian course, and for a time he was in great darkness. He examined the motives by which he had been governed since he professed to be a follower of Christ. He saw his sins and deficiency in duty, he humbled himself before God and gave all into his hands more unreservedly than ever before, both soul and body for time and for eternity. While a christian brother was in prayer, light broke in upon his mind and till his dying moment he would often say how precious is my Saviour, how dear his name is to me. Being asked whether it was his choice to live or die, He replied my choice is that the will of the Lord be done. In the church with which he was connected he felt a deep anxiety, and this would sometimes be manifested with groanings which could "not be uttered." On the morning of the day he died he told his wife he should not live through the day. And being asked is the Lord near, O yes "I keep hold on Jesus." His faith in Christ his love for his blessed Saviour was expressed in feeble accents till he could speak no longer and then calmly he fell asleep in Jesus. Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his.

From the Episcopal Recorder.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.

TUNE—Calvary.

Whence, ah! whence this mortal anguish?
Surely 'tis the couch of death;
Why do all my senses languish?
Why this hard, and labor'd breath?
Pale destroyer! pale destroyer!
Hast thou come to call me home!

Oh! what scenes of Heaven's revealing,
Dawn upon my ravish'd sight;
Ray of glory, softly stealing,
Oh! how dazzling! now how bright!
Mortal vision! mortal vision!
Scarce can bear such growing light.

Distant sounds of sweetest measure!
Come upon my dying ear,
Breathing notes of holy pleasure,
Hark! Oh! hark! they're drawing near;
Heaven's music! Heaven's music!
Millions sing the Saviour's love.

Hark! I hear the angelic choir,
As they bow before the throne,
Singing with seraphic fire,
Thou art worthy! thou alone!
Blessed Jesus! blessed Jesus!
We have conquer'd through thy blood.

But an object far more glorious!
Fills my heart with extacy,
Were none there, but Christ victorious!
Oh! 'twould be sweet Heaven to me;
Farewell sorrow! farewell sorrow!
Jesus calls, I must away.

Tho' I ride the stormy billow,
Tho' I tread the rugged way,
Jesus' breast shall be my pillow,
Jesus' promises my stay.
"I am with thee," "I am with thee,"
I will lead thee safely through.

Farewell life, and all its pleasures,
Farewell sin, vain world begone;
Welcome Christ and heavenly treasures,
Soon I'll sing the victor's song—
Hallelujah! Hallelujah!
Hallelujah! Praise the Lamb!

MARRIED,

In this village by Rev. Luke Lyons, Mr. Albert Wood, to Miss Polly Allen.

After our paper was made up, the Canadian Watchman was put into our hands by the Rev. Mr. Purkis, the Protestant minister at Laprairie, Lower Canada, from which we learn that Mr. P. has labored in that place several years, and has gathered a little church of Protestants in the midst of a Catholic population—that they are poor—unable to build them a place of worship, and that Mr. P. is soliciting assistance from the friends of religion for that purpose. Mr. P.'s object is recommended to the favorable notice of Christians by a number of ministers, among which are Rev. G. W. Perkins of Montreal, and Rev. Wm. Smart, of Brockville. The object must commend itself to American Protestants—to the benevolence of the christian community. Mr. P. will remain a few days in this village.

MENDON TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society will be held on at the Methodist Chapel (Norton's Mills) on Saturday the third day of December next at 11 o'clock A. M. An address may expected from Rev. Mr. Brown of Bloomfield. A general and punctual attendence is requested, particularly of those who are not members. L. RUSSELL, Secretary.

Mendon, Nov. 19, 1831.

The Board of Managers of the Genesee Sabbath School Union are requested to meet at the office of Hastings & Pomeroy on Saturday morning at half past 8 o'clock.

The proceedings of the S. S. meeting came after our paper was made up.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, Tousled	21	$ 1 20@1
Flour,	5 12½	@5
Corn,	50	@
Oats,	25	@
Beef, Fresh	2 50@3 00	@
Pork,	3 50@4 00	@

Rochester price Pot ashes $90 100—Pearls 95

PROPOSALS

For publishing a Religious Periodical Paper, to be entitled the CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, under the Supervision of the Associate Reformed Synod of N. York.

The want of an accredited organ of sound sentiment and of correct intelligence has long been felt by the ministers and members of the ASSOCIATE REFORMED CHURCH, and by many worthy persons in the land, whose religious views and feelings harmonize with theirs. The cheering progress of the cause of God and Truth within the Associate Reformed Church has been such, as, while it augments the necessity and the demand for a periodical publication, justifies the Synod in undertaking it. Accordingly, at its late meeting, the Synod, after mature deliberation, determined on the establishment of a Monthly publication to be entitled "THE CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE," and appointed the Rev. JOHN F. M'LAREN, of Geneva, the Editor.

To solicit the patronage and co-operation of our people, and of the friends of Truth in general, devolves upon the Editor; which he would do by a brief statement of our want of such a paper, and by giving, what comes nearest to an actual examination of the work, a correct and candid view of the character it is designed to bear.

The A. R. Church is almost the only denomination which has not a Religious Paper, under its care consecrated to the interests of Zion within its bounds. And as we have a part to perform in the dissemination of truth, we propose to terminate this unhappy peculiarity and to engage in the circulation of Evangelical doctrines and cheering intelligence.

The CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, while its pages shall be preserved pure from a style and from sentiments unfriendly to true charity, will take its station deliberately and firmly by the standards of the Church which are thoroughly Presbyterian and thoroughly Evangelical. It will be the engrossing purpose of the work, to promote vital godliness—to cherish in effigent piety among its readers, by the exposition and defence of the doctrines of Grace, by the enforcement of christian Duty, and by the illustration of christian Experience.

The following subjects will be among the most prominent in the Magazine:

1. Clear and concise views of Christian Doctrines.
2. Expositions of Difficult Passages of Scripture.
3. Brief Memoirs of eminently useful and pious Characters in different countries.
4. Sketches of the early history of the Reformed Churches.
5. Cases of Conscience solved for the edification of believers.
6. Translations from standard Christian Authors of former times.
7. Notices and short Reviews of New Publications.
8. Summaries of passing Religious and Civil Events.

It is expected that Ministers and members of the A. R. Church, in different parts, will contribute to the pages of the Magazine; and Communications from other quarters will always be courteously received.

TERMS.—The Magazine will contain 32 pages octavo, per number, printed in good style, and on good paper, stitched in a neat printed covrr, making in a year a volume of nearly 400 pages. The price will be $1,50, if paid in advance or before the delivery of the third number; $2,00 if payment is deferred till after the third number. The first number will be published on the first of January next.

Members of Sessions in the A. R. Church, or such persons as they may appoint, are requested to act as Agents for the work, and to return to the editor the names of subscribers by the first of December.

A subscription list for the above paper is left with W. B. Knox, No. 3, Buffalo st. Rochester. It is to be hoped that all persons friendly to the interests of the "Associate Reformed Church" will become subscribers to the Magazine.

3w48.

THE three story stone house, corner of Spring and Sophia sts., is open for the reception of

BOARDERS,

where they will be genteelly and comfortably accommodated.

Rochester, Nov. 24, 1831. 3w48.

NOTICE.

THE Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firm of Bush & Butler, is dissolved by mutual consent; and all persons indebted to the said copartnership are hereby notified to make payment to Henry Bush; and all persons having claims against the said Copartnership, to present the same to the said Henry for adjustment and payment.

The business of the late firm will be conducted hereafter by the said Henry Bush, at the old stand.

HENRY BUSH
GEO BUTLER.

Nov. 3. 47

LAST CALL.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hill & Peet are hereby notified that unless payment is made by 1st December, they will be sued.

LEWIS L. PEET.

Nov. 14, 1831. 47 3w

1000 ACRES OF ILLINOIS LAND, for Sale or Exchange for Farms. Enquire of E. D. SMITH, or H. B. WILLIAMS.

Rochester, Nov. 15, 1831. 47 4w

SHINGLES.

500 M. For sale.

Also, 100 M. feet 1st quality Pine Lumber,
100 do 2d do
200 do 3d do
50 do Lath.

9000 feet Square Timber—Pine—some suitable for Eaves-Troughs. 25000 feet Joist & scantling of Oak and Pine Timber.

A. W. RILEY.

Rochester, June 15, 1831. 35tf

Selling off at Cost, for CASH.

WISHING to close up our business at Pittsford, we now offer our

GOODS AT COST.

Our assortment is good, having received a fresh supply from New-York. All who are prepared to pay Cash for Goods, will do well to call, as a similar opportunity may not soon offer.

BEACH & VOORHEES

Pittsford, Nov. 7, 1831

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the Albany Argus.

THE DYING BOY.

It must be sweet in childhood to give back
The spirit to its Maker, ere the heart
Has grown familiar with the paths of sin,
An' cown—to gather up its bitter fruits.
I knew a boy, whose infant feet has trod
Upon the blossoms of some seven springs,
And when the eighth came round, and called him out
To revel in its light, he turned away,
And sought his chamber, to lie down and die.
'Twas night—he summoned his accustomed friends
And, oh this wise, bestowed his last bequest.

"Mother—I am dying now!
There's a deep suffocation in my breast,
As if some heavy hand my bosom pressed,
And on my brow

I feel the cold sweat stand!
My lips grow dry, and tumultuous, and my breath
Comes feebly up. Oh, tell me, is this death?
Mother, your hand—

Here—lay it on my wrist,
And place the other thus, beneath my head,
And say, sweet mother, say, when I am dead,
Shall I be missed?

Never beside your knee
Shall I kneel down again at night to pray,
Nor with the morning wake, and sing the lay
You taught me.

Oh, at the time of prayer,
When you look round, and see a vacant seat,
You will not wait then for my coming feet—
You'll miss me there"

"Father—I'm going home!
To the good home you spoke of, to that blest land
Where it is one bright summer always, and Storms do not come.

I must be happy then,
From pain and death you say I shall be free,
That sickness never enters there, and we Shall meet again"

"Brother—the little spot
I used to call my garden, where the long hours
We've stayed to watch the budding things and flowers,
Forget it not!

Plant there some box or pine,
Something that lives in winter, and will be
A verdant offering to my memory,
And call it mine!"

"Sister—my young rose-tree,
That all the spring has been my pleasant care,
Just putting forth its leaves so green and fair,
I give to thee.

And when its roses bloom,
I shall be gone away, my short life done;
But will you not bestow a single one
Upon my tomb?"

"Now, mother, sing the tune
You sang last night; I'm weary, and must sleep.
Who was it called my name? Nay, do not weep,
You'll all come soon!"

Morning spread over earth her rosy wings—
And that meek sufferer, cold, and ivory pale,
Lay on his couch asleep. The gentle air
Came through the open window, freighted with
The savory odors of the early spring—
He breathed it not; the laugh of passers by
Jarred, like a discord in some mournful tune,
But worried not his slumbers. He was dead.
VISATOR.

THE PILGRIM AT REST.

Hark! it is the bridegroom's voice;
Welcome, pilgrim, to thy rest:
Now within the gate rejoice,
Safe and seal'd and bought and blest!
Safe—from all the lures of vice,
Sealed—by signs the chosen know,
Bought—by love, and life the price,
Blest—the mighty debt to owe.

Holy pilgrim! what for thee
In a world like this remain?
From thy guarded breast shall flee
Fear and shame and doubt and pain:
Fear—the hope of heaven shall fly,
Shame—from glory's view retire,
Doubt—in certain rapture die,
Pain in endless bliss expire. CRABBE.

From the London Ch. Observer.

VISITS OF CLERGYMEN TO THE SICK.

It is about fifteen years since, that I officiated in a parish in the county of N———. The wife of a respectable and opulent farmer was in the constant habit of attending my ministry. She had often expressed high approbation of the discourses which she heard; but I had not observed in her any decided marks of a spiritual renewal of heart, or any very visible alteration in her life and deportment. At the expiration of one year she became seriously ill, and was consider by her medical attendant to be in imminent danger. In the early stage of her illness she had expressed a strong desire to see me; but this wish, through the council of her medical attendant, was not complied with; and I did not become acquainted with her illness and great danger for nearly a week, or probably more, as she did not reside in my parish. Her anxiety to see me daily increased, and she earnestly entreated her husband not to deny her so great and so much needed a gratification. He felt, as he afterwards told me, the utmost readiness to gratify such a desire, and was deeply distressed in not being allowed to do so; for he regarded her with the tenderest affection. But the directions and commands of the medical attendant were so positive and peremptory, that he durst not even indulge his own feelings, or yield to his wife's earnest entreaty; as he was repeatedly told that my visits would tend to increase her disorder, and the consequences of excitement from such an interview might prove fatal. But, so great was her alarm of mind, and oppressive her sense of guilt from having slighted or abused the means of grace which God had mercifully afforded her, that her state seemed to counteract all the united efforts of skill and medicine, and she evidently was daily becoming worse. Her husband, as he afterwards informed me, had almost daily inquired if he might be allowed to send for me to visit his distressed, and, as he feared, dying wife; but he uniformly received the same reply from the medical gentleman: "If you do not wish the death of your wife, keep Mr. D. at a distance; for if he be permitted to attend her, I will no longer hold myself responsible for the issue, nor would you be giving me or my medicines any chance of success." A pious neighbor, however, sent me word how ill she was, and how distressingly alarmed she felt from the burden of guilt upon her conscience, and how very anxiously she desired to see me. On this information, I hastened to her house, and found her husband at home. He received me civilly, but coldly, and said, that he was sorry I had taken the trouble to come, as he had the most positive directions from her medical friend not to allow me, or any one else to visit her, with a view to converse on the subject of religion; with the assurance from him, that any additional agitation, under her present strongly excited system, would prove mischievous, and perhaps fatal. I said all I could to remove his fears, and repeatedly avowed my full conviction that all the objections of his medical friend to my visiting his afflicted and distressed wife arose solely from his entire ignorance of the nature of true religion and what would be [illegible] reading or prayer, to her now almost overwhelmed soul. He manifested great tenderness of affection for her during our conversation, and evidently labored under a severe struggle in his mind, between a wish to gratify her earnest desire, and the fear lest his compliance with our united request, in opposition to the judgment and direction of the medical gentleman, should prove more injurious than beneficial. I believe that his fear of injury would have prevailed, if the pious neighbor before mentioned, who was in the sick room and heard my voice, had not approached, and said with tears, "I come with a request from your dear wife, that, if you love her, and would wish her either to live or die happy, you would permit Mr. D. to see her." Having said this she wept aloud. The husband now burst into tears, and his affection prevailing over his fears, he said, "If it must be so, go to my wife; and may God bless your endeavors to do her good!" The kind neighbor went before me, to apprise the afflicted suffer of the permission granted to me to visit her, to converse and pray with her. On my entering the room, she made an effort to raise herself from the bed and to stretch out her hands towards me; but her weakness prevented this strong expression of her feelings, and she sunk down again. Tears and broken words expressed at once her gratitude, her state and her wishes. I need not dwell on particulars. After a few minutes she became more calm, and was able to state to me her convictions, her sorrow of heart, and her fears. There was no peculiar difficulty in her case. A sick bed had been the means, under the blessing of the Holy Spirit, of leading her to serious self-examination, and had brought to her remembrance her sins, negligences and ignorance; the means of grace slighted, convictions of guilt stifled, conscience trifled with; so that transgressions, which before had made little impression on her mind, now appeared of a crimson dye, and were felt as an intolerable burden on her conscience.

By the blessing of God I was enabled so to speak, and to apply his word to her state, that the precious promises which it contains were received in faith, and embraced with a willing mind, and found to be the "joy and rejoicing of her heart." The word of instruction being thus blessed by the Spirit of God to her soul, prayer was full of power and holy comfort; and after it was ended, she said, "I am now quite a new person to what I was before. I now feel the love of Christ far exceeding all that I could desire or deserve. I am a wonder to myself. What a mighty and gracious change has Christ wrought in me! God bless you! I am happy and blessed indeed! How cruel it was not to allow you to come to see me in my distress! But it was all owing to their ignorance of the real comfort of the religion of Jesus Christ."—On my return to her husband, I informed him in what a happy state of mind I had left his dear wife. He was now most thankful for the interview, and expressed his hope that I would repeat my visits as often as I had opportunity. He was sent for by his wife, before I had left the house; and on his return to me he said, "that she had sent for him to tell him how kind it was to allow me to come to her, and to assure him that she was now quite happy." He added: "it is indeed truly wonderful to see the difference in so short a time. I am now ashamed and grieved, that I ever for a moment prevented your visiting my house; and more especially as my dear wife has suffered so much distress of mind from my own ignorance, and from my too readily complying with the direction of my medical friend." In the evening her medical attendant called, and found her lying quiet and composed in bed. On feeling her pulse; he turned with a smile of satisfaction, and said to the nurse, "Well, I had my hopes that your mistress would be better from the change of medicine; but I did not expect to find her so much improved since yesterday. She is now so composed, and every symptom is so favorable, that I pronounce her decidedly better, and as now have hope, out of all danger." The nurse only replied, "Mr. D. was here to see her this morning, and she has been better ever since." It may be proper just to add, that she recovered from a lingering illness; and I have great pleasure in saying that her affliction was blessed to her and to her husband, and they both lived for many years, ornaments of the gospel of Christ, and a blessing to many around them.

THE LATE DR. RICE.

The following resolutions were copied from a manuscript found in the pocket book of the late lamented Dr. Rice. They were intended only, as it appears, for his own private use. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to say, in commending them as excellent rules of action to christians, and especially to ministers of the gospel, that they appear altogether worthy of their author. Here are principles of action which correspond with the elevated, uniform and holy standard of character which he exhibited in self denying, vigorous and extended efforts to promote the good of mankind. They accord with the high and holy purposes of his useful life, and they are worthy of his peaceful and triumphant death.

"What I resolve that I will endeavor to do."

1. To "keep my body under," and change my physical constitution;—take food for nourishment, and not for pleasure,—take no more than is necessary, and be indifferent as to the quality; sleep for refreshment and not for indulgence;—harden and subdue my flesh by labor directed to useful purposes;—endeavor to do as much useful labor every day as I can;—dress as cheaply as comports with decency.

2. To use all my property for benevolent purposes; pay every thing I owe as soon as possible; save all that I can by simplicity of living, and by practising self-denial, and give all I can in the exercise of sound discretion to objects of benevolence;—never spare person, property, or reputation, if I can do good; necessary that I should die poor.

3. As to my disposition and conduct towards others;—1st, endeavor to feel kindly to every one; never indulge anger, envy, jealousy, towards any human being.

2. Endeavor to speak as I ought to, and about every one, aiming in all that I say to promote the comfort and happiness of every one that lives.

3. Endeavor to act so as to advance, 1st, the present comfort; 2d, the intellectual improvement; and 3d, the purity and moral good of all my fellow men.

As to my Creator,—to endeavor to fix more deeply in my mind all truth that I possibly can discover respecting him; and to feel, think, and act, in every respect, in correspondence with that truth.

Finally,—when I have done all, to acknowledge that I am nothing, that I deserve nothing, and that my Creator has a right to do with me, as seems good to him.—South. Rel. Tel.

INFIDEL TRACTS, WITH CHRISTIAN TITLE PAGES.

These scurrilous productions, which deserve to be noticed only in cautioning the public against the base deception which is practised to get them into circulation, are now being left about in entries, &c. Those who have no kind of principle, either of religion or of decency, will not, of course, in publishing their works, hesitate to [illegible] been made in the payment of the [illegible] executed by Adams [illegible] dated the 1st day of March, 1827, and recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county, in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 219, and upon which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and eleven dollars and seventy three cents, and the said Winslow Hewit having assigned all his interest in said mortgage to the said Laura M. Ely.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises and will,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises deeded by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Mary Adams by deed, bearing even date with said indenture of mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Isaiah Dunham and wife to H. H. Eddy and Winslow Hewith, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number seventeen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1830. LAURA M. ELY.

S. MATHEWS, Atty. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 10 of mortgages, at page 353, executed by Adam Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit:—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Brighton in the county of Monroe and state of New York, being lot number five and six, reference being had to a map or survey of Cornhill's subdivision of said lot No. forty six, number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1830.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBEL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.

V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 458, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the principal money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises conveyed by Isaiah Dunham and wife to H. H. Eddy and Winslow Hewith, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number seventeen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1830. LAURA M. ELY.

S. MATHEWS, Atty. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the sixteenth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office in Liber 10 of mortgages, at page 353, executed by Adam Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of forty nine dollars and twenty eight cents.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, to wit:—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Brighton in the county of Monroe and state of New York, being lot number five and six, reference being had to a map or survey of Cornhill's subdivision of said lot No. forty six, number eighty eight, reference had to said Map on record in Monroe county, will be sold at public auction, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute, in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1830.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
ASHBELL W. RILEY, } Executors of
EVERARD PECK, } J. Bissell, jr.
SELAH MATHEWS. } deceased.

V. & S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, and recorded in Monroe county Clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 458, executed by Edward Parker to Josiah Bissell Junior, deceased, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice the sum of five hundred and forty seven dollars and thirty four cents, being the principal money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned.—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods being the same premises conveyed by Isaiah Dunham and wife to H. H. Eddy and Winslow Hewith, on the twentieth day of April, 1827, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number seventeen, and township number thirteen, in the fourth range of townships in said town and county and bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east, north and south lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said division, and so far distant as to contain the said quantity of fifty acres excepting the above mentioned thirty four rods, will be sold at public vendue at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April next, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided. Dated October 6th, 1830. LAURA M. ELY.

S. MATHEWS, Atty. Mortgagee and Assignee.

IN CHANCERY.

Franc's Williams, Complainant,
vs.
Peter Ten Eyck and Elizabeth his wife, Jared S. Strobins, Charles V. Ayres, William Hardwick, George V. Ayres, Walter Lansdale Evans [illegible] and Matthew Brown 2d, Defendants.

In pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, made in this cause, at a Court holden at the Court house in the village of Rochester on the 25th day of August 1831, I shall sell at public Auction to the highest bidder on the 14th day of December next at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at the Eagle Tavern, in said village of Rochester, and county of Monroe, the following described premises viz. "One certain house and lot being situated in said village of Rochester, bounded on the north by Walnut Alley, and on the west by Elm Street, being the same house and lot deeded to the said Peter Bracket by Harmon Bissell, on the twelfth of the month of January instant, and being part of lot twenty six, on the Everard Peck purchase of Enos Stone."

ASHLEY SAMSON,
6w38 Master in Chancery

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by George W. Paddock to Henry Champion, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber 8 of Mortgages at page 384 on the 17th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 16th day of June, the first publication of this notice the sum of one hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgaged premises, to wit,—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township number thirteen in the fourth range of townships in the county of Ontario, before the late division now Monroe, and state of New York viz.—fifty acres of land to be taken off from the south end of the North West Division of lot number seventeen in said township, and to be bounded as follows viz.—East and west, and south by the lines of said Division, and Southerly so as to be run parallel to the said south line and so far distant therefrom as to include said quantity of fifty acres of land agreeably to the survey of James Smedley Esq.—including all highways if any there be—will be sold at public auction at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Scovil, in the town of Penfield in said county of Monroe, on the second day of December next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 16th day of June 1831. HENRY CHAMPION.

L. ADAMS, Att'y. 25 24w.

BY virtue of one Execution issued out of the court of Common Pleas, in and for the county of Monroe and to me directed against the Goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Stephen G. Bartlett I have seized and taken the following described pieces of land, viz. all those certain pieces of land, situate in the town of Brighton, county of Monroe being—one lot, lying near the great falls of the Genesee River, beginning at the N. W. corner of village lot No. 101—three chains northerly from the S. W. corner of village lot No. 102, on the corner of Atwater and Clyde Street and running from thence north, 3° west, along the Easterly line of Clyde Street 2 chains, thence north 85° 30' East two chains and fifty links, thence south 15° east, two chains, thence south 65° west, two chains and fifty links to the place of beginning—containing one half acre of land, being part of lot lots number five and six, reference being had to the maps and field notes of David Hudson Esq. in the survey of lots numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7, and being the same land that was conveyed to Stephen Bartlett, by W. P. Sherman and wife by deed of June 23d, 1831—which property I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the tavern of Mrs. Hoosan on East Rochester on Monday the 19th day of November next, at 2 o'clock P. M. Dated Sept. 29th 1831.

For JAS. SEYMOUR, late Sheriff.
W. J. M'CRAREN, late Under Sheriff.

The sale of the above property is postponed to the twenty sixth day of November inst. at two o'clock in the afternoon, at the same place.

Nov. 19, 1831.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by William C. Thomas to Josiah Bissell Junior and by him assigned to Aristarchus Champion, dated the ninth day of April 1827, recorded in Monroe County Clerk's office in Liber 4 of Mortgages, page 252 and on which is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, Two Thousand One Hundred and forty eight dollars and twenty five cents—NOTICE is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, the mortgaged premises, to wit. "The Ware house and lot, so called, situate in Rochester, Monroe County, bounded north by Peckham Parker's lot, south by P. F. Backus' garden, west by Fitzhugh street, and east by Canal Alley, containing one eighth of an acre of land," will be sold at public auction at the Court House, in Rochester, Monroe County, on the first day of May next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. Dated November 10, 1830. ARISTARCHUS CHAMPION.

S. MATHEWS Atty 4-24w

IN CHANCERY—Joseph Strong vs. Silas Dimpsted } By virtue of a decretal order of the Court of Chancery made in the above entitled cause, on the 7th day of September 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the twenty third day of December next, at two o'clock in the afternoon of that day at the Eagle Tavern in the village of Rochester, the following described premises, viz. All those certain lots of land situate in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe, in the subdivision of a part of lot number fifty, in township number one short ranges west of the Genesee river, distinguished on a map or plot of Canal tract made by Elisha Johnson as lots number two in the county of Monroe and Allen streets, bounded easterly on Allen and Bond streets, westerly by lot three, northerly by lot one, southerly by Allen street. Also lot four, bounded easterly by lot thirty five, northerly by an alley leading from Broad to Elizabeth street, westerly by Broad street, southerly upon Hill street. Also lot forty nine bounded easterly by lot fifty, northerly by lot forty, westerly by lot forty eight, southerly on Hill street.

ASHLEY SAMSON
Master in Chancery.

Dated Nov. 8th, 1831.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of Job Northrup deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on us for settlement within six months from date.—Also all persons who are indebted to the said estate, are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Adm'r.
6w 38

NOTICE

IS hereby given that the subscribers will apply to the Legislature of the state of New York, at their next session, to incorporate them and their associates under the style of "The Rochester Institute of Practical Education," to be located in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe.

CHARLES M. LEE,
MOSES CHAPIN,
JAMES SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM WISNER,
JOSEPH PENNEY, &
LUKE LYONS.

Nov. 17. 47 6w

PURSUANT to an order of Mortimer F. Delano, Surrogate of the County of Monroe, Notice is hereby given to all the creditors of Josiah Bissell Jun. late of Rochester in said county, deceased, to exhibit their demands with the vouchers thereof, to Selah Mathews, one of the executors of the last will and testament of the said deceased, at his office in Rochester aforesaid, on or before the twenty fifth day of May next.—Dated November 10, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBEL W RILEY, } Executors.
S. MATHEWS,

REMOVAL.

WILLIAMS & MERRILL, Dealers in Leather, Hides, Oil, &c. would inform their friends and the public that they have removed from their old stand on Mason St. to No. 16 in the Globe Building where they have now on hand a large stock of Leather, Hides, Oil, Curriers Tools, &c. &c. which they expect soon to re-plowsh, and will be happy to wait on their old friends and customers, & as many new ones as shall be pleased to call on them, assuring them that they will sell as cheap as the cheapest.

N. B. The highest price in Cash always paid for Hides and Calf Skins. 3m41.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford. he subscriber as Agent for the above mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.

January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.

Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

New Fall Goods.

W. BARRON WILLIAMS has removed to the Stone Store, No. 38 State (formerly Carroll) Street, two doors above his former stand, and is now opening a new and well assorted stock of Goods, such as

6-4 real French Merino cloths, various colors.
6-4 German do from 9 to 14 shillings,
Merino and common Circassians,
Changeable and plain silks, Levantines, &c.
Drab Levantines, superior quality,
Extra rich Ribbonds,
Bolivar Leghorns, (cheap,)
Elegant worked Edgings and Insertings,
Figured and plain Swiss Mulls, (some fine,)
Long and square Merino Shawls, from $5,50 to 18,00
4-4, 5-4, 6-4 Thibet wool Shawls,
5-4 Cashmere, do
4-4 Gauze Merino H'dk'fs,
White Merino Hose,
Random and Fancy colored worsted do.
Random cotton, do.
Children's red and random worsted do.
do Grecian Boots,
White Bombazette, for Baptismal dresses.
Ladies and Gent's Horse Skin Gloves, white and colored,
Gent's Extra heavy Buck do.
Gent's Hair, Broccoli, Ladies' and common Camlet,
Fringe cloths and Flannels,
Broad cloths, all colors, from $1,75 to 10,00 per yard.
Satinetts, Fustians and Beaverteens,
Rose and Duffel Blankets,
Seed Beads, for safety guards, 19 colors, &c. &c.
Oct 18, 1831. 43 w6

WM. H. WARD & CO. (MARBLE BUILDING Carroll Street,) have just received a full supply of GOODS. Rochester, June 2 1830.

ROCHESTER ROOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Black Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes, Chochineal smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. 22tf JACOB GOULD.

DUTCH BOULTING CLOTH.

THE subscribers keep constantly on hand a stock of Dutch Bolting Cloths of the different Manufactories, viz: Anchor, Plast, Harlaem, and Star, which they will sell in all cases at retail, at a small advance from the New York prices. Large Flouring Establishments supplied at New York prices, and they will warrant all cloths sold by them.

Burr Mill Stones.

We are also agents for the sale of Burr Mill Stones, and will sell as low as they can be had, and will warrant as good as can be purchased in the State. THOMAS KEMESHALL & Co.

35 State (formerly Carroll) Street.

Oct. 27, 1831. 44

ROCHESTER CHEMICAL MANUFACTORY AND NEW DRUGS & MEDICINE ESTABLISHMENT.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the public generally, and Physicians in particular, that he has recently connected with the Rochester Chemical Manufactory a full assortment of carefully selected to which he invites the attention of purchasers both by wholesale and retail.

DRUGS & MEDICINE,

Dealers are desired to take particular notice that all the varieties of approved patent and certified Family Medicines now to use will be furnished at the lowest New York Factory Prices, and that every reasonable inducement will be offered for purchasing at this Western Establishment in addition to saving of transportation, risk of breakage, &c. &c.

All orders for Drugs and Medicine, operative Surgical and Dentist Instruments, Infirmary apparatus, ordinary and extraordinary, executed with promptness and care, by

LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,
At the Sign of the Alligator, No 11, Corner of St.
41 tf

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.

May 5, 1831. 20 M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

NEW BOOK STORE.

THE subscribers would respectfully inform the inhabitants of Rochester and vicinity, that they are now receiving and opening a splendid assortment of BOOKS among which are Queens BIBLES of every description.

Henry's Exposition, Scott's do. Brown's and Cruden's Concordance, Testaments, Theological and Classical Books.

An elegant assortment of PRAYER BOOKS, together with a general assortment of Blank Books, Albums, Slates, Pencils, Wafers, Sealing Wax, Expounded Pencils, Wallets, Ink, Inkstands, &c.

All of which will be sold on the most reasonable terms. ☞ Store one door south of the Bank of Rochester.

The public are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves.

SKINNER & PHELPS.

Rochester, Oct. 26, 1831. 43

NEW BOOKS.

HOLY LIVING AND DYING, with Prayers containing the complete duty of a Christian, By JEREMY TAYLOR, D. D.

Babington on Education, with a preliminary essay, By T. H. GALLAUDET.

The Child's Book on the Soul, particularly designed for elementary instruction in Sunday schools, By T. H. GALLAUDET.

The Christian Lyre, Vol. 2., By JOSHUA LEAVITT.

Just received and for sale at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.

Oct. 27, 1831. 44

JUST received, "THE CATECHISM OF HEALTH," or plain and simple rules for the preservation of the health and vigor of the constitution from infancy to old age, dedicated to youth of both sexes throughout the United States as well as to Parents and Guardians.

For sale at the publisher's prices at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.

One door south of the Bank of Rochester.

ALSO, the Effects of the principal Arts, Trades and Professions, and of the civic states, and habits of living on Health and longevity. For sale as above. Oct. 27. 44

Porter's Health Almanac, FOR 1832,

JUST received and for sale by the gross, dozen or single, at the publisher's prices at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.

One door south of the Bank of Rochester.

Oct. 27. 44

ANNALS OF TRYON COUNTY

By W. W. CAMPBELL, just published and for sale at the NEW BOOK STORE, one door south of the Rochester Bank. SKINNER & PHELPS.

Oct. 17. 43

FOR SALE.

LOT No. 54, containing 54 Rods of ground pleasantly situated on Andrews Street, within one hundred rods of the bridge.

Also for sale 10 acres of heavily timbered Land 3 1-2 miles east of the village.

Also for sale or to rent, Slips Nos. 3 and 107 in the 3d Presbyterian Church in this village.

Enquire of D BUSH,
Oct. 26, 1831. No. 29, Main-st.

The subscriber having become sole owner of the stock in trade of the late Firm of Wm. McCoy & Co., begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has on hand an elegant assortment of Broadcloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, &c. comprising almost every article usually found in the possession of a Draper and Taylor. Also, ready made clothing. Believing that a nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling, he is determined to sell—— DAVID BUSH.

No 29, Main street Rochester July 26. 1f

FANCY DYING.

Neither from Dublin nor London.

H. YOUNG, lately from the city of Glasgow, has taken the stand formerly occupied by Mr. Kincheith, at the west end of Curtiss' Stone Building, Main-St.

H. Y. respectfully informs the citizens of Rochester and its vicinity that he has commenced dying and dressing all qualities of Silk, Crapes, Barages, Bombazine, &c. &c. Likewise woollen, linen and cotton goods—Clouded woollen yarn for Stockings may be or wanted kept on hand. Carpet, or fine worsted yarn, dyed to any pattern.

N. B. Merino Shawls cleaned. Ladies and Gentlemen's wearing apparels cleaned and renovated in the first style—Reward Merit. 38 6m

More New Books!!

Willson's Evidences.
Baxter's Call to the unconverted.
Advice to a young Christian.
Pleasantness of a religious life.
Church Member's Guide, by J. A. James.
Jay's Lectures.
Payson's Sermons.
Pleasing expositor.
Consistency. By Charlotte Elizabeth.
Payson's Memoirs.
Scougal's Works.
Mental Discipline. By H. F. Burder, 3d. Edition.
Wardlaw's Discourses on Prayer.
Sumner's Expository Lectures, on Matt. & Mark
Paschal's Prospectal Letters.
Willson on the Divine Authority and Perpetual Obligation of the Lord's Day.
Wilk's Christian Essays.
Fuller's Holy State.
Boston's Fourfold State.
The Christian Ministry, in 2 vols.
Paley's Works.
Life and Times of Rev. Richard Baxter.
Spring's Essays on Christian Character.
Sprague's Lectures.
Hawe's Lectures to young men.
Lindley's Lectures to the middle aged

Just received and for sale at the NEW BOOKSTORE of SKINNER & PHELPS, where those who wish to purchase cheap, will do well to call.

☞ Store 1 door South of the Bank of Rochester, No. 24 Exchange-St. Nov 2

Sabbath School Books.

UNION Questions, 1st, 2d & 3d vols. A full supply of all the publications of the AMERICAN S. S. UNION. Also, A variety of Miscellaneous Books, suitable for Sabbath Schools.

Among the more recently published will be found the following: British Officer—Helen and her Cousin—Young Forethinker—S. Bacon—Grandfather Gregory—Oberlin—Life and travels of St. Paul—Mrs. Judson—Little Susan—Francke—Child's Expositor—Dick's Future State—Dwight's Vocabulary—Evening Recreation—Mrs. Huntington—Incidents in the Life of Dwight—Letters from Europe (Sprague's)—S. J. Miller—Nathan Dickerman—Pious Shepherd—Pious Sisters—Pleasing Expositor—Temperance Family—Memoirs of Howard, &c. &c.

For sale at the DEPOSITORY, No. 36 State, (formerly Carroll) Street.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 30, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 46.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.

Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $1.00. In advance, $2.50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2.00.

Village Subscribers, $2.50 in advance.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

POPULARITY OF METHODIST DOCTRINES.

The writer in the Advocate, in another of his communications, contrasts Calvinism, and Methodism, in regard to revivals.

"What have our Calvinist brethren alone these many years past, in regard to revivals, where they have preached Calvinism! And what could they do, even now, should they preach the peculiarities of Calvinism as in former days! Our fathers can remember, if we cannot, when, all through the New England states, Calvinism was generally taught. But what effect did it produce!—Has not Infidelity, Socinianism, and Universalism, overrun some large portions of our fair country where Calvinism once prevailed!

But since the vain philosophy has been in some measure laid aside, since men are told they can and must do something in order to obtain eternal life in a word, since our Calvinist brethren appear in Methodist armor, one can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight. But how could they effect a conquest over a sinner by preaching the peculiar ties of Calvinism! Could they persuade him to cease to do evil, by telling him that God had decreed whatever comes to pass! Could they induce him to come to the Saviour, by preaching either a limited atonement, or a limited application of an infinite atonement! We are sure that nothing effectual towards pulling down the strong holds of Satan can be done by such preaching. But Methodist doctrines are mighty, through God, to accomplish this, and have done much towards it already, as the world well knows.

AN INHABITANT OF NEW ENGLAND."

Now the facts are these, that in former years, there were revivals among the Calvinists of New England. Even from the earliest settlements such things were frequent. The last Quarterly Register of the Education Society contains the commencement of an able historical view of American revivals, divided into five periods, the first from 1607 to 1672, the second reaching to 1720, the third to 1760, the fourth to 1800, and the fifth to the present time. The second period, in which the principal Indian wars, and the fourth, including the French and Revolutionary wars, were seasons of great declension. The other three periods were distinguished by revivals, among Calvinists, and under the preaching of the most thorough Calvinistic ministers.

During the first period, we read of revivals under the ministry of Mr. Cotton, at Boston; Messrs. Thompson and Knolles, who were sent by the Massachusetts churches to Virginia, and laid the foundation on which probably Davies afterwards built the dissenting churches there,—Also under Mr. Shepard at Cambridge, and many others. In 1678, just after the close of the first period, the minister Increase Mather thus writes: "Prayer is needful on this account, that conversions are become rare in this age of the world." Showing that for conversions to become rare was a melancholy and observable change, in the state of the churches.

In 1705, Dr. Cotton Mather says of the preceding age, "Many were converted, and willingly declared what God had done for their souls; and there were added to the church daily, of such as should be saved."

"Mr. Prince, in a manuscript sermon, has the following remark concerning Mr. Shepard, of Cambridge. "I was told, when a youth, by elderly people, that he scarce ever preached a sermon, but some or other of his congregation were struck with great distress of soul, and cried out aloud in agony What shall I do to be saved! Though his voice was low, yet so searching was his preaching, and so great a power attending, as an hypocrite could not easily bear it, and it seemed almost irresistible." The same effect was often visible after the preaching of Mr. Mitchell, (his successor.) It is stated, that it was a common question for those who were detained at home, to put to their friends who had attended meeting, Whether any body appeared to be wrought upon today?—Quer. Reg.

In eighteen years, that Mr. Cotton was minister at Boston, he received 640 members into his church.

The ministry of Mr. Stoddard, of Northampton, was chiefly during the second period which does not generally character ize the churches.—And yet President Edwards says of him:

"As he was eminent and renowned for his gifts and grace, so he was blessed from the beginning, with extraordinary success in his ministry, in the conversion of many souls. He had the harvests as he called them. In each of them I have heard my grandfather say, the greater part of the young people in the town seemed to be mainly concerned for their eternal salvation."

If the writer in the Advocate questions whether this was the result of Calvinistic preaching, I wish he would take the trouble to procure and read, Mr. Stoddard's "Safety of appearing in the Righteousness of Christ."

Let us now look a little at the third period of American history; from 1720 to 1750, where, before the name of Methodists was known in this country, we have a series of revivals, which have never been surpassed since, till the blessed year 1831.

The beginning of the first general revival was in 1735, when, after a period of great worldliness and levity among youth, Mr. Edwards began to observe a degree of flexibleness among his young people at Northampton. But it was not till December 1734, that the Spirit of God began to descend in an extraordinary manner. Almost immediately, a concern about religion became universal in all parts of the town, so that there was scarcely a single person in the town, old or young, left unconcerned about the things of the eternal world. In the spring and summer of 1735 the town seemed full of the presence of God.—There were tokens of him in almost every house. The work was remarkable for the swift progress of it. Persons were suddenly and yet greatly changed. In March and April, he says:

"God's work in the conversion of souls was carried on amongst us in so wonderful a manner, that so far as I can judge, it appears to have been at the rate, at least, of four persons in a day; or near thirty in the week, take one with another, for five or six weeks together."

And he hoped that more than 300 souls were wrought savingly to Christ, in the space of half a year. "I hope," says he, "that by far the greater part of persons in this town, above sixteen years of age, are such as have the knowledge of Jesus Christ. By what I have heard, I suppose it is so in some other places; particularly at Sunderland and South Hadley." He received to the church 100 at one time, 80 at another, and 60 at another.

The work soon spread through nearly all the towns in the old county of Hampshire, particularly S. Hadley, Sunderland, Deerfield, Northfield, Old Hadley, Springfield and Westfield. It extended also to many places in Connecticut.—Among the towns mentioned by Mr. Edwards, are Enfield, Suffield, Windsor, East Windsor, Lebanon, Coventry, Durham, Stratford and several others. This shower of the divine blessing reached to the Jerseys, particularly under the ministry of Wm. and Gilbert Tennent, and "a very pious young gentleman, a Dutch minister, whose name, as I remember, was Frelinghouse," (probably Frelinghuysen, grandfather of the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen of the United States Senate.)

Our writer will possibly believe these were Calvinistic revivals. At least, I never heard Edwards, or any of his coadjutors in this work claimed as Arminians. Certainly they did not learn the art of revival preaching from the Methodists. For it was at least three years after this that John Wesley placed himself under the tuition of the Moravians, being as he says, "clearly convinced of unbelief—of the want of that faith whereby alone we can be saved."

That these revivals were not found among those ministers who were known to have Arminian predilections, is perfectly understood by those who are in any measure conversant with facts in the history of our churches. On the other hand, the principal instruments in the revival were those who set themselves with all their might to counteract the progress of Arminian principles in the churches. Mr. Edwards says, in his Narrative of this revival, in speaking of the introductory measures,

"About this time began the great noise, in this part of the country, about ARMINIANISM, which seemed to appear with a very threatening aspect upon the interest of religion here. The friends of vital piety trembled for fear of the issue; but it seemed, contrary to their fear, strangely to be over-ruled for the promoting of religion. Many who looked on themselves as in a Christless condition, seemed to be awakened by it, with fear that God was about to withdraw from the land, and that we should be given up to heterodoxy and corrupt principles; and that then their opportunity for obtaining salvation would be past."

Mr. Edwards took up the subject in the pulpit, and though it occasioned no small stir, particularly among the opposers of sound doctrine, yet he was not to be moved from what he thought his duty. The Arminians of that day were very lax in their sentiments concerning Justification by Faith, many of them adopting the views of Dr. Taylor, of Norwich, of a double justification, which Dr. Adam Clarke has so strongly copied and reasoned in his commentary. Mr. Edwards preached his celebrated sermons on this subject, just before the revival commenced. And he says it was remarkably blessed. For just at that time

"When I was greatly reproached for defending this doctrine in the pulpit, and just upon the point of suffering a very open abuse for it, God's work wonderfully broke forth amongst us, and souls began to flock to Christ, as the Saviour in whose righteousness alone they hope to be justified. So that this was the doctrine on which the work in the beginning was founded, as it evidently was in the whole progress of it."

These revivals then began by a blessing from God upon efforts to counteract Arminianism and to establish Calvinism.

In 1740, the revival returned. It was in this year that Whitefield first visited New England, although the revival was already powerful in many places before he came. The work became very extensive, and continued for three or four years. The chief instruments were Edwards, Wheelock, Bellamy, Pomeroy, Tennent, Whitefield, all zealous Calvinists. Even a Methodist might be supposed to know, that Wesley and Whitefield separated, because the latter insisted upon the hated doctrine of Election. So much for revivals produced by "Calvinists in Methodist armor."

I had intended to give this man a few of those indigestible things called facts in regard to the introduction of Unitarianism into New England. But the length of the article already constrains me to say in brief, that the ministers who were known as Arminians at the time of the great revivals were bitterly opposed to the work of God, and persecuted the instruments with great bitterness. In subsequent times, they as a class and their followers, were known as the advocates of an easy and worldly religion, allowing their children and church members to go to balls, &c.—Their successors and those of the same men who lived up to the time when Unitarianism assumed a distinctive existence, almost without exception proved Unitarians. The congregations where these Arminian ministers labored have generally been the strong holds of Unitarianism. While the towns which were always blessed with a faithful Calvinistic ministry, have generally retained an evangelical character. This is what I call an evangelical character.

PLAIN TRUTH.

From Badger's Weekly Messenger.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

By Rev. Richard Knill, St. Petersburgh.

Not many days ago I received a Sheffield newspaper. In reading it I perceived the names of several persons on whom "remarkable cures" had been performed. These persons with laudable feelings of gratitude to their Physician, and tender sympathy to their suffering fellow creatures, strongly recommended the remedy from which they had derived so much benefit I said to myself, this is noble! It discovers a fine benevolent feeling towards the human family—let it be encouraged! for every thing ought to be made known, which is calculated to promote the public good.

I once labored under a very grievous disease, which nearly proved fatal, and which I have since heard is exceedingly prevalent all over the globe. Whilst in this deplorable condition a circumstance occurred which has been the greatest blessing of my life. I unexpectedly became acquainted with a Physician whose skill is unparalleled. He pitied my misery, gave me a pressing invitation to put myself under his care, and graciously promised that he would cure me without money and without price. Encouraged by his peculiar kindness I accepted his offer. I ventured on his promises and Oh! could I unfold to you what he has done for me; it would fill you with astonishment. His favors have exceeded all my hopes, and surpass all description. To Him I owe my all. Indeed his goodness made such an impression on my mind, that many years ago I felt a strong desire to give publicity to his wonderful character, and for this purpose I travelled over half the globe—and with a hope to extend the knowledge of it still further, I have requested the Editor of the Weekly Messenger to give this paper a place in his pages. Do not throw it down as soon as you have read the first Paragraph and say "I know this, Sir, as well as you." Perhaps you do. Perhaps you do not—therefore I pray you proceed to the end and then ask yourself "what influence has my knowledge on my practice!"

First I will tell you of the disease under which I groaned.

Every language gives it an appropriate title The English name for it is Sin. In some cases this insidious disease, like a consumption, operates secretly, but it is not the less fatal on that account. O no! should any of the friends of the diseased have the courage and fidelity to mention it to them (which is seldom the case) they can hardly be prevailed upon to believe it. They argue against it, or call it by another name, or become angry and affirm "it is not true. It is not true. It is an exaggeration." Professional men are of opinion that this deception, forms one of its most alarming symptoms. It is rarely that such an one recovers—yet, some one of those, who took advice in time and are now quite well have told us, that until some unexpected and overwhelming event made them feel their situation; they had no idea it was so very dangerous. But you know there is no arguing against pain. When a man is in an agony he sends for a Physician; and when men feel that they are sinners, they argue against it no longer. No. Not they also are anxious for a Physician, and eagerly cry "what must I do to be saved!"

There are also cases in which the disease rages horribly. It breaks out in the most fearful manner. Multitudes shudder at the sight, but seem not to be alarmed at the cause. Very great efforts are made to stop its progress, yet still it rages. Every city in Europe groans because of it. Am I mistaken! Let their Prison walls speak. Let their Courts of Justice decide. Let their Penitentiaries bear witness. But evidence is not needed. It walks abroad at noon day.

In most cases there is reason to fear the malady proves fatal, for the wages of sin is death, and if men continue in the service of sin, what can they expect but the wages?

Now let me tell you of the Physician.

He is emphatically called the Son of God—The Lord Jesus Christ—The friend of Sinners—The Saviour of the World. He is every where present—may be applied to at any hour. His ear is open to every call, and his hand is ready to help every applicant.—His remedy is infallible,—heaven's royal seal is stamped upon it.

Hear his own account of himself.

I am come that we might have life, for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life. The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me, and whomsoever cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.

Hence it may be well to enquire, how does it come to pass that that of some proves so fatal, when so able a Physician is at hand? Alas! this fatality arises from the obstinacy of the diseased. The carnal mind is enmity against God. It takes the power that created the world, to make a poor dying sinner submit to God's method of healing. Ah! it is hard work cordially to embrace that saying "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and for this reason the Son of God is despised and rejected of men, and his charge against them is "ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

2. Take the testimony of one on whom a cure was performed in ancient times. This is supposed to be the most desperate case on record, and here you have the man's own opinion of it 20 years after he was healed. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."* Howbeit for this cause I have obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." O! what encouragement to the weary and the heavy laden! This testimony is above all price. It has proved invaluable to many in every age, and no wonder—who can doubt after hearing this, whether God will save mercy on a returning sinner! or whether or no he that believeth shall be saved.

3. Receive the declaration of a living witness.

It is allowed on all hands that the most striking evidence which a man can have is from experience. Now I can testify from most painful experience that I have suffered dreadfully from the malady of sin. I have been stung by that old Serpent. I have been covered with that Leprosy. I have been attacked by that Plague. I have been wounded by the fiery darts of that Foe; and on certain occasions I have been so oppressed with it, that it appeared to me incurable—but Glory be to God a cure is begun.—Wonderful effects have already been produced. The change is almost incredible.—Sometimes the cure appears so amazing that I can scarcely believe it myself, and perhaps no other person would believe it at all, even if I could explain it; but I say a cure is begun, Hallelujah! and from the ease, the comfort, the joy unspeakable I already feel, I begin to anticipate the rapture which I shall enjoy when it is perfected. I do therefore most cordially, and earnestly recommend the Lord Jesus Christ my adorable Physician to you with a full assurance that if you will apply to him he will receive you, and heal you, and save you, and glorify you. Try him. O try him for yourself, and then you will soon add your testimony to mine that he is mighty to save.

Now beloved as you are in the possession of the facts which I wish to communicate to you, let me appeal to your conscience, and ask, what do you think ought to be the feelings, and what the conduct of that man who has groaned beneath the burden of sin, and has experienced the commencement of a cure. Should he keep it secret! no! Should he let his dying fellow men perish without telling them what a Saviour he has found! God forbid. Let compassion to sinners, and love to the Saviour, urge him to make it known to the utmost stretch of his ability.

O let a man only feel the full force of these observations, and what time will he have for other things, none—literally none, until he finds something more valuable than souls, and more important than eternity. Here! here is work sufficient to occupy every moment of the longest life, though that were lengthened to the age of Methusalah. Here! here is scope for his most unbounded exertions, even if he had the power of an Archangel. Look abroad—there are perishing nations which have not heard the name of Jesus. Look at home—there are perishing families, and no one careth for their souls.—There are perishing individuals, perhaps among your own acquaintance, or among your relatives, or it may be under your own roof—and will you let them perish without giving them a friendly and affectionate warning! Of whom are you ashamed! Of Christ! Of whom are you afraid! Of Satan! But alas! who feels these considerations as he ought! Where shall that man be found!

Dear reader, are these things so! then it is time for us to rouse ourselves. The deplorable state of sinners solemnly demands that something be done speedily. How are our neighbors supplied with the Holy Scriptures! Perhaps we have not asked the question. Can they read!—Perhaps we have not enquired. Do they know what they must do to be saved! Perhaps no one has taken the trouble to talk with them on the subject. Is that possible, and can we expect to be clear from their blood! Ah! it is not light we want but love. It is not knowledge we want, but feeling—you and we might profitably part with every thing we possess for the feeling of that holy man who said, "For the love of Christ constraineth us because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

O may we but live to see the day when this experience shall predominate in our churches. Then shall God's way be known upon the earth, and his saving health among all nations. Then shall every benighted land be visited and every sinner exhorted to look unto the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. There is money enough in the churches to support this work, and there are instruments sufficient to accomplish it if only the love of Christ constrained them to the work. Hasten that day, O Lord. Amen.

A CONVALESCENT.

THE INFIDEL SILENCED.

Sir:—I was recently not a little delighted by reading in the "World" paper a paragraph, detailing the good that has been already effected by Dr. Bennett's Lectures against Deism; I find two or three unbelievers have renounced the baneful principles of infidelity in consequence of them, nor does it appear that their champion, Mr. Taylor, has gained the least ground, by all his sophistical questions, over his Christian opponents; for, in another paragraph, annexed to the above, it is stated, that Mr. T. has absolved a match at the Rotunda, Blackfriars, as well as at Silver Street Chapel, where, it appears, he was one evening completely defeated by a Mr. Jarrot, belonging to the City Mission Society, while in the shocking language of the bottle-ring pit, he was breathing out his horrid blasphemies against the blessed Redeemer of a lost world. And as I have lately witnessed a similar contest on a sabbath afternoon between these two gentlemen, the latter being again triumphant, I will give you a brief sketch of it, which I think the public ought to know, as it cannot fail to please.

When I entered the Rotunda, I saw a crowded audience composed of Christians and infidels, with the Rev. Mr. Osgood and this Mr. T. on the platform; they each delivered a short but faithful address to the people; the latter spoken from Hebrews iv. 12: "The word of God is quick and powerful," &c.; at the close of whose warm admonitions the discussion commenced; when Mr. T., among other questions, thus interrogated his opponent.

Quest. Where can you find in the Bible any passage relating to the existence of the soul of man; for Moses has said nothing about it!

Ans. Yes, sir, he has; for, in Gen. ii. 7, it is said, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Q. But after the Devil had visited Eve with his lies, and had caused Adam and his wife to become sinners, did not God say to Adam "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return;"

A. Truly, sir; it is also said in Eccles. xii. 7, "Then shall the dust return unto the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

Q. Can you tell me how that book (the Bible,) which now lies open before you, can become quick and powerful, or can you explain how it has life in it!

A. Yes, sir, I can: "It is the spirit that quickeneth the words that I speak unto you," said the Saviour! "They are spirit and life;" this book will therefore become either a savour of death unto death, or a savour of life unto life to your immortal soul.

Q. Well, sir, and how do you know that you are a child of God?

A. I know it by his having graciously given me his spirit, witnessing with my spirit that I am born of God.

Q. And what has God seen in your face more than in mine that you should be so highly favoured more than me!

A. I will answer you in the language of our blessed Savour. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes."

Q. What, then, you are a baby, are you!

A. Yes, sir; and blessed be God, I have still a desire to "feed on the sincere milk of the word that I may grow thereby."

Q. Now, sir, I wish to know why God does not stretch forth his hand and save me also from going down to hell as well as you!

A. Because, sir, you reject the counsel of God against yourself!

And on his hearing this, the champion of infidelity immediately retired from his conspicuous post, and sat down with a pale face and silent tongue, as quiet as a child, evidently showing that the word of God is quick and powerful, even to the conviction, if not the conversion, of a rebellious and calloused heart; that God might be justified when he speaketh, and be clear when he judgeth; but as to his antagonist, his tongue was as the pen of a ready writer, while he was boldly standing up to defend the gospel against the powers of darkness.

"These weapons of the holy war;
Of what almighty force they are,
To make our stubborn passions bow,
And lay the proudest rebel low!"

That the sword of the spirit may thus be wielded by every minister of Jesus Christ, to the pulling down of the strong holds of sin and Satan, is the earnest prayer of

Sir, yours truly,

A CHRISTIAN.

Evangelical Magazine.

Died suddenly, on Wednesday evening, the 19th inst. Mrs. Martha Coyle, consort of Mr. D. Coyle, of Saville, Perry co., Pa. in the 54th year of her age. The deceased had long been a member in full communion in the Presbyterian church, and had adorned her profession by bringing forth the fruits of faith—by a diligent observance of Christian duty. She had returned home from the church, where she heard her last sermon, about half after eight o'clock in the evening. About nine, the family were called together for devotion; and while engaged in singing the following hymn, the 477th of the General Assembly's Collection:

Through all the downward tracts of time,
God's watchful eye surveys;
O! who so wise to chose our lot,
And regulate our ways!

I cannot doubt his bounteous love,
Unmeasurably kind;
To his unerring, gracious will,
Be every wish resigned.

God when he gives, supremely good,
Nor less when he denies;
E'en crosses from his sovereign hand,
Are blessings in disguise.

In thy fair book of life divine,
My God inscribe my name;
There let it till some humble place,
Beneath my Lord, the Lamb.

While thus engaged, as has been already stated, Mrs. Coyle who, up to this time, had been in good health and spirits, leaned upon the knee of her husband, who was sitting by her side, and expired immediately without a struggle or a groan! How speedy a transition from health on earth, to happiness in glory!—The deceased was the mother of twelve children, who, with the exception of one son that died in the hope of the gospel, are still living. All the surviving children, except a daughter of eight years of age, are in full communion with the church, and appear to be new creatures in Christ Jesus. Three of them are subjects of a revival still in progress in the congregation where they reside. "The seed of the righteous is blessed." The surviving parent is an elder in the church.

From the lips of several members of such a family, what language could the reader expect to hear, but such as the following:—"The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!" O God, what support and consolation does thy grace afford to thy people in the time of affliction!

Reader!—is it not true that "in the midst of life, we are in death!" Art thou then prepared to die! In other words, hast thou been born again! Hast thou fled for refuge to Jesus Christ, and trusted in him with all thy heart!—If not, flee to him without delay! Be ready—O be ready;—for in such an hour as you think not the Son of man cometh."—Presbyterian.

From the Leamington Gazette.

THE "BOHON UPAS TREE."—The article alluded to by the writer of the following note, was published in this, and many other papers, some time in the year 1830. We have many accounts relative to this singular tree, but the following statements, by an intelligent and highly respectable gentleman, who has resided in the island of Java for a number of years, come nearer the truth we believe, than any we have yet seen, and it is with no small degree of pleasure we give them a place in our columns:

Batavia, (Java,) April 15, 1831.

Dear Sir—In the N. Y. Evening Post of Dec. 6, 1830, I observed an article headed the "Bohon Upas Tree," purporting to be facts taken from the journal of a Botanist, sent by the Emperor Napoleon to this country in 1810.

The Bohon Upas grows in almost every forest on the island; but the story from which the Botanist has taken his remarks is all a fable, and such a tree as he describes, possessed of such deadly qualities as to affect the atmosphere for miles in circumference, does not exist. A short time since, when in the country, I sat under the Bohon Upas, from which the natives procured a substance for poisoning their weapons, which is obtained by cutting notches in the tree, and a substance thus procured mixed with the juice of lemons is rubbed on the blade. The botanist observes, the "poison is a gum, which, like camphor, issues from the bark."* Now camphor being of a dry nature, does not exude from the tree or manifest any appearance on the outside.—The natives, from long experience, know whether any is contained within, by striking it with a stick. In that case they cut it down and split it with wedges into small pieces, finding the camphor in the interstices in the state of a concrete chrystalization. Thus you see the comparison is not a good one, and he knew nothing of the Camphor tree.

Some of the Java weapons are so poisonous as to require but a slight incision to deprive one of life in a few moments, but it is necessary to renew the poison every few years, as age destroys in a great measure its strength.

I hope you will give the above publication, that the rising generation may know, that although the Bohon Upas affords poison for the native's weapons, it is not possessed of those deadly qualities so often related, and that vegetation beneath its branches is as flourishing as at any distance from it, and the traveller may rest his weary limbs beneath its shade without the fear of the least injury.

The name in the Javanese language means Bohon, tree; Upas, poison.

Yours truly, F. V. B. M.

* Vide Marsden's history of Sumatra.

PETRIFIED FOREST.

The following remarkable account, in a letter from G. H. Crossman, to Lieut. B. Walker, both of the U. S. army, is taken from the Illinois Magazine.

Jefferson Barracks, May 1, 1830.

Dear Sir,—It affords me much pleasure to comply with your request, with regard to the "Petrified Forest."

You ask for a "memoir" on the subject, but you must be satisfied with the following attempt to give you merely the "facts" as they came within my own observation, without venturing a single speculation beyond the effects produced. I wish rather to leave the subject in abler hands than mine; and if I can aid, in any way, to solve the problem, by a statement of simple facts, (well known, however, to most of the officers attached to the Yellow Stone expedition,) I shall feel more than compensated for any time I shall devote to the subject.

The enclosed specimen was broken off from one of the many large stumps and limbs of trees, found near Yellow Stone River, and brought away by some of the officers attached to the Yellow Stone expedition in 1815.

The most remarkable facts perhaps with regard to these petrifactions, of what was once a forest of thick timber, are their location and abundance. For a distance of twenty or thirty miles, over an open high prairie, upon the west bank of the Missouri river, and near latitude 48, these remains are most abundant.

The typography of this section of the country is hilly and much broken into deep ravines and hollows. On the sides and summits of the hills, at an elevation of several hundred feet (estimated three hundred) above the present level of the river, and an estimated to get (for we have no instruments) of some thousand feet above the level the earth's face is literally covered with stumps, roots, and limbs of petrified trees; presenting the appearance of a "Petrified Forest;" broken and thrown down by some powerful convulsion of nature, and scattered in all directions in indescribable fragments.

Some of the trees appear to have broken off in falling, close to their roots, while others stand at an elevation of some feet above the surface. Many of the stumps are of a large size; I measured one of them, in company of Surgeon Gale of the United States army, and found it to be fifty yards of fifteen feet in circumference.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

From the Sabbath School Instructer.

MY JOURNAL—THE S. SCHOOL.

Do you attend a Sabbath school? said I to a little girl of eight years, as she was sitting in a little chair reading her Testament. Her book dropped down in her lap—her eye clouds assumed a livelier hue, and her dark eyes sparkled with pleasure, as she said, "Yes, sir."—What is your teacher? "Miss ——." Do you love your teacher, or should you like a new one? "I don't want any other teacher, I love Miss —— very much. She tells us about the Lord, and is always very glad to see us." Where do you find your lesson? "In the Testament." Do you like to learn lessons in the Testament, or would you rather have some other book? "I rather read in the Testament." What do you like to read & learn about best, in the Testament? "About Christ." What did Jesus Christ do, that makes you love to learn about him? "A great many things. He cured the sick people, and the blind man, and made dead people come to life again." Whom did he bring to life? "The widows son—and Lazarus too." How long had Lazarus been dead? "Four days." Dr. F—— cured sick people sometimes, by giving them medicine; could Jesus Christ do any more for sick people than doctors can do? "Yes, he could cure such as the doctors could not, and he did not give them any thing." Cannot doctors bring dead people to life? "No, sir." Did you ever see any body that was dead? "Yes, little William ——; he was drowned in the pond." And could'nt they bring him to life again? "No sir." What did they do with him? "They buried him in the ground." "Yes, sir," she replied, and a tear started in her eye and rolled down her little cheek. And shall we never come to life again? "Yes, sir, at the resurrection." We were talking about Lazarus; had he any brothers or sisters when he died? "He had sisters—I don't think he had any brother." Do you remember the names of his sisters? "Martha and Mary." Which do you like best Martha or Mary? "I like Mary best." Why? "She loved Christ more than Martha did." Do you think Martha loved Christ any? "I guess she loved him some, but not so well as Mary did." Why do you think Martha loved Christ? "She loved to have him come to her house." What makes you think Mary loved Christ more than Martha? "She loved to sit and hear him talk. Mary sat at his feet and heard his word." Did Martha like to have her do so? "No—she wanted Christ to tell Mary to help her." Ought not sisters to help each other about their work? After some hesitation she said, "Yes, sir." And did Christ tell Mary to go and help her sister?—"No, sir." What did he say? "Martha, Martha, thou art troubled about many things, but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her." Do you remember any thing else that Jesus Christ has done, besides what you told me? "Yes, sir; he died on the cross for sinners." Who are sinners? "Every body." Are you and I sinners; and did Christ die for us? "Yes, sir." How then ought we to feel towards him? We ought to love him." Do you think you love him?—"Yes sir I think I * * * * * do." What makes you think so? "I love to read about him, and to pray every day that God will help me to love him." Do you think God will hear little children, and men and women when they pray to him? "Yes, sir, Jesus Christ says he will." Do you pray for any body yourself? "Yes, sir, I pray for pa and ma, and little brothers, and my teacher, and then I pray for every body." What do you pray that God will do for you? "Forgive my sins and make me a good girl." Do you think God has forgiven you! The tears again started in her eyes; but after some hesitation she said, "I am afraid not, but I hope he will." Have you always loved to pray to God? No, sir. My ma used to learn me to say the Lord's prayer, but I did not love to say it. I love to say it now and another prayer too." Who learned you the other prayer? "Nobody." Did no one tell you it was right to pray but your ma? "No Sabbath school teacher told us so, and Mr. —— and uncle —— and aunt ——, and our minister. They all pray." When did you begin to say another prayer, beside the Lord's prayer? "Last spring." From persons acquainted with this little girl, I found there had been a remarkable change in her feelings and conduct, and that she manifests an uncommon interest in reading the Bible, and endeavoring to understand what she reads. She is strongly attached to her Sabbath school and teacher, and to religious meetings and conversation. She is supposed to have her seasons of retirement for secret prayer, as constantly as experienced Christians. Similar feelings and conduct are manifested by some other little boys and girls belonging to the same school. This school is not in a city or village, "the growth of many years," but in a town, which a few years ago, was a wilderness. "The wilderness shall bud and blossom as the rose." It is indeed already becoming a fruitful field. C.

*This means that though we ought always to be kind to each other, and ready to do all that we can to help those who are in trouble, or who have a great deal to do, yet religion is more important than everything else.—Editor.

From the same.

While on an agency in Massachusetts last autumn, I had conversation with a pious teacher, upon the importance of Sabbath school teachers making their instructions more practical.

She related several interesting occurrences, respecting a younger sister, who was in a state of impenitency. It seems the teacher had been in the habit of being very faithful with her sister, both in her conversation and in her letters. She felt deeply anxious for her soul, and prompted by this anxiety and a sister's affections, she pressed home upon her, the truths of the gospel, and entreated her to seek an interest in the Saviour.

At length the impenitent sister became wearied by these constant intreaties, and one day requested her older sister to say no more to her upon the subject of religion, as it did her no good, but only increasing her guilt.

*Timothy, 19th chapter, 15th verse.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

In accordance with this request, the pious sister, with great difficulty, concealed the anxious feelings of her heart, and did not speak to her on the concerns of her soul, for six months.

One day when on a visit, after that length of time had passed away, the younger sister said, "M——, what's the matter with you, that you don't talk with me lately, as you used to do."

"Why, the subject which lies nearest my heart, you don't want to hear me converse about, and I don't know what to talk about—if you will introduce some subject which is interesting to you, I will converse."

"I want to have you introduce the subject on which you used to converse—I have not had a word said to me, upon the subject of religion, for six months. My teacher has never said a word to me about my soul, though she is pious. She explains the lesson very well, tells all about the geography, history, &c. but never makes any practical remarks. Now I want to join your class, and I want to have you converse with me faithfully, as you do with the members of your class, and talk to me in private. If you don't admit me to your class, I must leave the school, for I cannot any longer endure to be in a class, where nothing personal or pointed is said to me, upon the subject of religion."

She was admitted to her sister's class, and in a short time, through the grace of God, became hopefully pious, and united with the church.—At the time these incidents were related to me, several others in that class were anxiously inquiring for the way of eternal life.

Facts like this, need only be stated, to produce conviction upon any thinking mind.

ANA BULLARD.

From the Missionary Herald for Decm.

PRAYER FOR THE IMPRISONED MISSIONARIES.

These brethren are again commended to the sympathy and prayers of the friends of Missions. It is for conscience sake that they are in this state of confinement and bond-service. The work which they were doing, and for continuance in which, they were arrested, tried, condemned, stigmatized as malefactors, and ignominiously thrown into a public penitentiary, was not their work peculiar. It was the work of preaching the gospel to the ignorant and destitute—a work which Christ has charged ministers and churches generally to take care to have performed. In the Providence of God, it has fallen to the lot of these brethren to occupy the post of danger, such a post as no one supposed could be found in this age, and especially in this Christian land. They are the representatives and agents of the churches, were doing their work, and are suffering as it were, in their stead. It is no more than right, then, that they should be supported by the sympathy and prayers of their brethren in the ministry, and of all the churches. When one member suffers, all the members suffer with it. Although their situation in prison may not be one of the extremest hardship and suffering, yet surely it is no trifling thing for free citizens and honest men, men of Christian sensibility, to be publicly tried and sentenced as criminals, to have their names entered on the records of the court, and held up before the community as criminals. It is no trifling thing to be torn from their churches and their work as ministers of the gospel, and teachers, to be separated from their wives and children, excluded from all social enjoyments, and religious society, and shut up with felons in a gloomy and loathsome prison, at servile labor, under task-masters for four years. It is for free citizens of this nation, against whom no crime is alleged except that of residing in the Cherokee nation—it is for members of christian churches in good standing, who would be admitted to the Lords table by every church of the same denomination in the United States—it is for ministers of the gospel, of unimpeachable character, that the sympathies and prayers of all the friends of missions are requested. Ministers and churches, should make the case their own.

At their late annual meeting, the Board adopted the following resolution, which was inserted in the last number of this work, viz.

Resolved, that it be recommended to the churches, to make the present condition and trials of the suffering and imprisoned missionaries of the Board, the subject of special prayer to Almighty God, and particularly at the monthly concert on the first Monday in December next, that this dark dispensation may be overruled for the extension of the gospel and the ultimate prosperity of the missionary cause.

It is to be hoped that prayer on this subject has not been suspended till this time, and that it will not cease with this monthly concert, or be limited to similar occasions. There should be public prayer on the Sabbath, and daily prayer in the family, and in the closet, that the Head of the Church will preserve the lives and health of these brethren in bonds; that he will give them strength to bear the hardships that may come upon them; that he will comfort them with his presence and the consolations of his grace; that during this scene of trial, he will enable them to exercise and exhibit the spirit of their divine Master before their keepers and the prisoners; that he will make them useful to the unhappy men by whom they are surrounded; that he will protect and comfort their families in this time of bereavement; that he will give to our rulers and judges wisdom and firmness to pursue the course of justice and humanity; that he will cause a correct public sentiment on this subject to prevail among the people of this nation, and will excite them to great vigilance to discern and resist every invasion of our free institutions, and every violation of the national faith; and that in his overruling Providence he will cause this distressing event to promote the ultimate wellbeing of this nation and the Indians, and the advancement of his own kingdom in the world.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

LIBERIA.

We have received a file of the Liberia Herald from March to August inclusive, from which we gather the following items, in addition to what has been already published.

Governor Mechlin and the Vice Agent made an exploring visit to the Junk district in March. They were treated with the greatest respect by the different kings, who, from their vicinity to the Colony, have found it necessary to give up the slave-trade. This is said to be a better country for agricultural purposes than any now in possession of the Colony.

THE MANDINGOES—a Singular People.—The Mandingoe residents have all been expelled from Bo Poro, and are now compelled to reside at the Half-Towns. Of late, our town has been uncommonly thronged with Mandingoe-men, who are the Jews and pedlars of this country. They are a singular people, strict Mahometans in their belief, and exercise an undue influence in the councils of every government where they can obtain a foothold. They are very zealous for the spread of their religion, and make every effort to convert the head men of every country. Many of them read and write Arabic with great ease, and constantly carry the Koran or parts of it about their persons and though great lovers of money, we have never known one, who would part with it on any terms whatever. In one or two instances, we have seen parts of the Bible, and the books of Common Prayer, given them probably by some American [illegible] carefully folded up within [illegible].

It is a singular fact, and one which we have never seen noticed, that the Mandingoes seldom suffer their sick to die a natural death, but in the last agonies of expiring nature, use some sharp instrument to separate the carotoid artery. All this is done under a religious belief, as the name of God is invoked previously, and during its operation.

SLAVE-TRADE.—A war has been carried on for some time in the vicinity of Grand Cape Mount, occasioned doubtless, by the Slave-trade. This traffic is becoming more bold and alarming. Besides the agency Schooner Messurado, two English vessels have lately been captured on that part of the coast, and all on board murdered except the Kroomen. The Editor of the Herald suggests with abundant reason, that Liberia ought to be frequently visited by small American vessels of war, to promote American commerce, and defend the interests of humanity, against these piratical traffickers in human blood.

OUR SCHOOLS.—We are happy to inform our readers that a free school is now in operation in three of our settlements. The receptive towns are yet without any and must continue to be, unless some of our good friends in the United States will cast a thought upon their unprovided situation, and make an appeal in their behalf. We consider their settlement of New Georgia, a good location for an active missionary. They have worship regularly on the Sabbath, and their frequent calls for a teacher affords a fine opportunity to any benevolent society, which desires a wide field of usefulness. They are natives of this country, from all parts of the interior—making rapid advances in civilization; and those who look anxiously for the civilization of the people of this great continent, can desire no beings in a more fit state to receive Christian teachers and religious instruction. They have many children among them, who are growing up in a state of ignorance, for whom they are deeply solicitous to have a school. And shall this be known in the United States and no sympathy, no relief be afforded, to quench this thirst after knowledge? We cannot think so.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

ENGLAND.

The following letter from the Rev. Dr. Burder, of Hackney, near London, we copy from the Southern Religious Telegraph. It was addressed to the Rev. W. C. Walton, of Alexandria.—It shows the state of the revival question in England, at its date, and will be interesting in several respects. The Rev. Mr. Douglass, who has recently returned from a visit to Great Britain, stated at the Monthly Concert in Richmond, as we learn by the Telegraph, that

Among the thirty millions of Great Britain, not a single revival of religion, as we use the phrase, is known to exist. And of her numerous authorized ministers of the gospel, one half, it is estimated, have never been taught, experimentally, the truths of that gospel, which they presume to preach; and of those considered evangelical, many have no places, and are out of employment.—Let prayer be offered, till the Holy Spirit descend and impart to them the active benevolence of christianity in a measure like that witnessed in the days of the Apostles, and they will have employment. As many as can be spared at home, will go "far hence to the heathen."

Dr. Burder's letter is as follows.

Hackney, June 22d, 1831.

My dear brother—I was very deeply interested in your kind letter of October. Part of it I took the liberty to transcribe for our Evangelical Magazine, having read it at several meetings of ministers, and having found that it impressed the minds of many. I was particularly struck with the correctness and importance of your remarks, respecting the defective and spiritless manner in which prayer meetings are too often conducted. Yesterday I had the pleasure of receiving your letters, which bear the dates of February 7th, and of May 3d, and as I am about to be absent from home for a month, I sit down instantly to reply. I am inexpressibly interested in the accounts you give, and in those which I have received also from Dr. Sprague, of Albany, and Mr. Patton, of New York, of the astonishing and glorious revivals of religion, at this time going forward in your favored country. What hath God wrought!—How I should rejoice if one or two of those ministers, who have been the most useful instruments of producing such effects, were to visit this country. It would be much easier for them than for us to make the attempt to hold meetings, bearing some resemblance to your four days meetings.—At present it would be very difficult for any of us to induce a sufficient number of persons to enter on such an arrangement. In Hackney, three of our churches, and a fourth in the vicinity, unite in a half yearly meeting for special prayer. To-morrow will be the return of the day. We meet in our separate churches in the morning at 7 o'clock, and we assemble all together in the evening. We wish all who have it in their power to spend a considerable part of the day in retired devotion. But my dear brother, we see nothing around us approaching to that state of deep and anxious feeling, or that spiritual ardor and importunity in prayer for the Holy Spirit, which you have the happiness of witnessing. O that a better and brighter day might dawn upon us!

You refer to the admirable Whitfield. I think with you that a good life of this burning and shining light is a disideratum. A friend and neighbor of mine told me some time ago, that he had collected ample materials for this purpose, and was at work upon it. I will take the first opportunity of asking him whether the work is in progress.

I am not aware that your excellent little work, on the Scripture Doctrine of Divine Sovreignty, viewed in connection with man's responsibility, is printed in this country. I will again take it up, and with a view to further consideration and inquiry.

I have now relinquished my office, as one of the tutors in Highbury College, in consequence of finding my pastoral duties quite sufficient to absorb my time and strength, in connection with some little share of agency in the London Missionary Society and some kindred institutions. Our May meetings were, as usual well attended, and the reports of most of the great societies, were upon the whole encouraging. Many of the meetings were held in a new and very splendid room, called Exeter Hall. The dimensions are 130 feet by 70, but it is badly constructed for the voice. May our country be blessed as yours is, with the glorious effusion of influence from above. Be assured that your letters interest me, deeply, especially on the subject of revivals, and that I am, my dear brother, most cordially yours in our Lord.

H. F. BURDER.

From the Cincinnati Journal.

STABBING IN THE DARK;

OR, THE TRUMPET GIVES AN UNCERTAIN SOUND.

A hint for Alarmists generally.

Something like the following is not very uncommon in our papers, and may serve to show what we dislike. As for instance, "Mr. —— at a four days meeting, (or camp meeting, if you please,) made some very injudicious imprudent remarks; and what is worse, they appeared to be well received, and some of the measures adopted that meeting seemed well calculated to do [illegible] speak advisedly." Now we have no itch to know who Mr. —— is, but we should be very glad to know what the remarks were.

The trumpet has given a sound of caution—against what? We heard no certain sound, and of course cannot be certain. "Some very injudicious remarks were made." Very likely.—For Mr. ——, it may be, is not Solomon, and his compeers not much wiser than he. What were the objectionable remarks? "And some very improper measures were taken." Very likely.—But then there are some men who strain at a gnat, and for ought we know, the objector may be one of them. He may be endowed with a wonderful faculty of seeing things large,—especially the faults of others,—and what seems to him very improper, and fraught with unspeakable mischief, may excite very little alarm in the breasts of the more judicious. What were the objectionable measures? Every man who sounds an alarm, ought to designate something alarming, and not raise a hue and cry about, nobody knows what. As the thing is managed at present, the sound is really so uncertain that we do not know whether to be scared or not. In short, any one who seeks his neighbor's good to edification, ought to give the trumpet a certain sound, or stop blowing.—Let him specify, or hold his peace; and not leave us to suspect any thing and every thing; nor leave the world to conclude that there are things said and done at these meetings too bad to publish.

These remarks are respectfully submitted to the editors of religious newspapers and their correspondents.

D. M.

Geneva, Nov. 25th, 1831.

THE WESTERN AGENCY FOR HOME MISSIONS,

TO THE CONGREGATIONS WITHIN THEIR BOUNDS.

Dear Brethren and Friends,—

NEVER before, in our annual letter to the Churches, were we called to address you under circumstances of so great interest and responsibility as at present. Another year has added its testimony in behalf of the HOME MISSIONARY cause. The Lord has wro't great things by our Society, on the field of its labors: the hearts of thousands and ten thousands have been made glad by the voice of mercy it has sent out. Nearly five hundred Missionaries have preached "Jesus and the Resurrection" among our feeble churches: they have stretched their line beyond that of other men's labors, and formed a cordon of light and love along the borders of our land. They are, as a body, devoted, able, faithful men, cheerfully enduring the self-denial and sacrifice incident to their work; and their labors have not been in vain in the Lord. "The wilderness and the solitary place has been made glad for them, and the desert has rejoiced and blossomed as the rose." The results of the year have exceeded our most sanguine expectations: the months of the harvest have come while yet the seed was but newly committed to the ground, so "that he that soweth and he that reapeth have rejoiced together."

Even with the Western Agency, in whose behalf more especially we address you, a measure of success has been granted, that has at once surprised, comforted and encouraged us. More than one-half of the stations occupied by this Board within the Genesee Synod, about forty in all, under the care of nearly thirty Missionaries, have been visited with copious refreshings from on high, adding upwards of twelve hundred souls to the fellowship of the churches; while those brought into the fold of Christ, at the stations embraced by the Synod of Geneva, would make the aggregate increase of communicants, under the labors of our Missionaries, not far from two thousand. One Missionary writes from the Niagara frontier,—"Last winter we knew of but one family altar in our village: since that time, upwards of eighty souls, we trust, have in this congregation been born from above: fifty-six have already been added to the church. Now in wealth and influence of the place are on the Lord's side." Another from the borders of Cattaraugus and Chautauque counties says,—"I never expected to see such a day as this in this wilderness.—The whole face of things seems to be changed for God and truth. The harvest is ripe. Pray for us, and send us men to gather in the harvest." While we are writing you, the intelligence reaches us of revivals at stations heretofore considered quite unpromising, leading us to thank God, and take courage, and to address ourselves with new engagedness to the supply of men and means for the work.

In respect to men, also, the Lord is regarding us with favor. Not only within this Agency, but elsewhere, the Society has more Missionaries in the field than at any previous time. The Corresponding Secretary, in a recent letter, writes: "I have lately visited the Andover and Princeton Seminaries, and engaged from thirteen to sixteen in the former, and from two to five in the latter, to go west of the Alleganies for us this autumn. These, together with what we shall obtain from other sources, will make a larger and better company of Missionaries, than we have sent out in any previous year. Most of them are first rate men." "On Friday evening last, (says the New York Observer of October 15th,) ten young gentlemen, from the last class at Andover, were ordained by the third Presbytery of New York as Evangelists; and the interest of the occasion was no doubt much increased by the fact, that all of them (except one,) had been appointed by the American Home Missionary Society, as Missionaries to the Western States, and that most of them were to depart on the morrow to the home of their anticipated labors beyond the Allegany mountains. It will also be gratifying to our readers to know, that in addition to these, the following (naming 5 from Andover, 3 from Princeton, and 1 from the Bangor Seminary,) are now on their way to the west, as Missionaries of the above Society; in all eighteen, designated to the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan Territory. This we learn is a larger number than have ever before been sent out by the A. H. M. S. at any one time. It speaks well for the christian enterprise of the Executive Committee of that noble institution; and as they are thus enlarging their pledges to the great and growing West, it is hoped that our citizens, and the religious public, will remember the claims of this enterprise on their prayers and their alms the present autumn."

Yet, Brethren and Friends, means are wanting. At no previous time have our pecuniary embarrassments been so great. The treasury of the Society is actually overdrawn, this day, from ten to twelve thousand dollars. The work goes on and increases: God by his Spirit leads the way, and devoted Missionaries are found ready, saying, "Here are we—send us:" and yet the treasury is empty, and the Executive Committee are in advance on their individual responsibility to the above amount—and what shall be done!—Shall the Missionaries be turned back, while so many voices in the West are pleading for them, as the men that shall repel ignorance and sin, and bring up their wide frontier to dignity and virtue and the fear of God? The Committee have done all that can be asked of them. They must be relieved from this burden: they must not be disappointed in thus anticipating the offerings of the friends of this cause. Knowing that the period of the annual effort for Home Missions, within the bounds of each congregation, is come, their attention is turned to the congregations within our bounds, and to this entire portion of Zion, which God has so much blessed. Their letters are on our table, asking relief from the unequal pressure that is on them, while, without temporal reward or consideration, they are doing the business of the Society: and shall the work be stayed? We ask the Ministers of the Gospel—Will they read this in their congregations, and originate efforts for us? We ask the Elders of the churches—the Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—we appeal to the young Converts, who within this year have been espoused to Christ;—we appeal to every one who loves his country or the well being of his race: Look over your temporal and spiritual prosperity—over your farms and flocks, and herds, and merchandize, and wares, and productive employments, and money—and ask yourselves, and answer it to God, shall the work be stayed? If not, then, Men and Brethren, help. Be willing to bear your portion of the expense of this great work. There is no use in dying rich, while the cause of God and of humanity are suffering for want of help. The crisis is on us: millions of souls at present, and tens of millions in future lie in the direct line of our effort now. We appeal, to the sympathies of our common nature, and to the gratitude and benevolence of the gospel hope in you.

We appeal, and confidently too, to our organized auxiliaries, Male, Female, or among the Youth, for their enlarged remittances this year; to the Gentlemen's Subscription; to the public collection on Thanksgiving day, or some Sabbath soon thereafter (that all may have an opportunity to help;) and to the individual benefaction of the man of wealth among you—and desire that the avails of your effort may be forwarded with convenient despatch, as heretofore designated.* And while you labor and pray for the full and triumphant accomplishment of this work of mercy, which lies before us, may the God of providence and of grace reward you seven fold into your own bosoms, for all your self-denial and devotedness in behalf of this cause, and enable you to see the good of Zion all your days—"the righteousness thereof going forth" over the land "as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."

By order, and in behalf of the Board,

MILES P. SQUIER, Cor. Sec. of Western Agency for A. H. M. S.

---

*Receiving Agents, C. J. Hill, Esq. Rochester; N. Pratt, Esq. Buffalo; Rev. T. C. Stillman, Dunkirk; Rev. G. Crawford, Le Roy; T. Hastings, Esq. Geneseo; G. C. Higgins, Bath.

OBSERVER.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 30, 1831.

INFIDELITY ALARMED AT SABBATH SCHOOLS.

We mentioned a few weeks since the shutting of the School house at Hanford's Landing, against S. Schools and all religious meetings. Numerous instances of the same kind have since come to our knowledge. In one instance, where an avowed infidel, an apostate professor of religion, and a Quaker are the trustees, the school house has just been closed against the Sabbath School and it is now held at a private house. It is but justice however to the Quaker to say that he remonstrated against the measure but was overruled by his colleagues.

We have inquired into the character of the Trustees in a number of other cases where this course has been resorted to, to prevent the religious instruction of children on the Sabbath, and we are happy to say that with, perhaps, one exception, they are open opposers of religion, all of them enemies to revivals and, we think, in every instance are the ridiculers of temperance societies.

We have generally supposed, that in this enlightened country, christians would never be openly and systematically persecuted—but the facts above stated show that the same spirit which bound the disciples of Jesus Christ to the stake and lighted the faggot, in former days, still burns in the breasts of the enemies of the gospel & that when christians in this day let their light shine and act as if they were in earnest in obeying the command to preach the gospel to every creature—in short if they will but endeavor to "live godly in Christ Jesus they shall suffer persecution."

It will be found too, that these overt acts of persecution proceed from men who are most boisterous in their professions in favor of liberty of conscience, free inquiry and toleration.

May not Christians make up their minds that, whenever the church shall so awake as to give unequivocal evidence of the dawn of the Millennium, her enemies will be disturbed and will awake also, and will proceed in their acts of persecution just as far as the laws of the land or the intelligence of the age will permit?

Are not the facts above stated strong testimony in favor of Sab. School instruction? The opposers of religion would never throw a straw in their way if they did not perceive that they were aiming a blow at the empire of Satan.

We have been astonished at the number of instances in which Sabbath Schools have been turned out of their accustomed places of meeting, of late—and we know of not a single place where this has been done, which had not previously been visited by a revival.

When we reflect upon these things we shall be led to conclude that as the spirit of the Devil ever has so he ever will, manifest hostility to the children of God. Let us therefore make our calculations that as revivals increase so will persecution—that as the kingdom of Christ advances, that of his great enemy will be disturbed. A great struggle is yet to take place—a great battle is to be fought, but we know who will come off conqueror, "for He shall reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."

DISTILLERIES.

We have just received a long article from a "A Female of E. B——y," who asks the privilege of entering her protest against the conduct of a neighbor who is about commencing the distilling business in that town.

We feel deeply for the writer and would, were it in our opinion advisable, given her protest in our columns. But we do not think it proper to hold up an individual to public scorn for engaging in a business which but a few years since was not deemed incompatible with the christian character and in which, even now, we presume, some professors of religion are engaged. Had our correspondent told us that the person who is about commencing the business of making this drink for drunkards was a professor of religion we might have been disposed to say more than we now feel authorized to say.—But we have no hope that any thing which we could publish would produce any effect upon a man who at this day, will engage in a business so destructive to the peace and happiness of society—he will not read our paper. Let the friends of temperance in Genesee County—let those who pay taxes for building jails—poor houses and supporting their inmates, look to it when a distillery is about commencing operations. They are the persons interested, for every such nuisance is adding to the amount of their taxes, as it will inevitably add to their list of drunkards as it increases the factories for making them, and of course increases the number of paupers—makes fit subjects for their jails and increases the demand for private charity. When will the public learn that the sober part of the community have to pay a part of their earnings to give a few individuals the privilege of making and vending ardent spirits?

"A SUBSCRIBER" communication complaining of us for admitting the article in our last paper from Rev. Mr. Crawford is received. Our correspondent thinks that "no possible state of facts can justify or palliate the language used by Mr. Crawford"—and presumes that had he taken a little more time for reflection, he would not have written as he has done.

The fact is, we regretted extremely that Rev. Mr. Wilcox deemed it necessary to lay the subject of his complaint before the public. We feared it would call forth an answer, and we have learned from experience, that it is much easier to commence than to end a controversy. We did not however feel justified in rejecting his communication as we did not know but there were facts in the case that imperiously called for it, and when we have opened our columns to a correspondent, and permitted him to call in question the acts of another, we neither feel that we have a right to refuse the person thus arraigned, the privilege of replying, nor that we are at liberty to alter or soften his language. We therefore admitted them both without any comment. We are sensible that the christian public generally, have felt pained with this controversy and we do trust that we shall not be called upon in this, as we have been in a number of similar cases, to close our columns in order to put an end to this unpleasant and unprofitable discussion.

"A Subscriber" we think will readily perceive the propriety of our giving no more of his article. It is excluded on the principle stated above. Its publication would perhaps call forth a reply which we could not, in that case, refuse to publish. There is a strong propensity in human nature to have the last word. The editor is much inclined to think that he shall have it in this case. We hope that both the Rev. gentlemen will have so much to do to point inquiring sinners to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," that they will neither have time to think or write more on the subject of their personal grievances.

FANATICISM.

Mr. Porter, a portrait painter who has for a few weeks past been engaged in this village, attended the four days meeting here and was seriously impressed. His intellect is now prostrated, and he has become a perfect fanatic. He went to Boston on Monday last to make spiritual communications to Dr. Beecher. Previous to his departure, he urged that a child recently buried should be dug up, confident that he had been invested with power from God, to re-animate it. Humanity and philanthrophy weep over the multiplied and multiplying instances of mental alienation.—Essex (Mass.) Chron.

We saw the above paragraph some three or four weeks since, and intended then to have made some remarks upon it, presuming as it usually happens in such cases, that the editor who gave it publicity was needlessly alarmed at Mr. Porter's insanity—that it would probably prove to be of the same kind with which those were afflicted who on a certain occasion were charged with being "filled with new wine." Cases of derangement we know do occasionally occur in consequence of the subject of it thinking intensely on the concerns of his soul, but we do know also that in almost every case we have heard of, the derangement was not attributed to the attendance of the person on religious meetings, but to the prohibition of kind and liberal relatives and friends against their attending them. One case we have in our eye where the daughter was absolutely imprisoned in a chamber and a great noise was attempted to be raised about her derangement, and an excitement got up against a revival then in progress in the place, but the facts were too well known—the story would not go—the people would not be so gulled. Let your daughter have her liberty was the cry of an indignant community and we will answer for the restoration of her intellect.

But another thing we have noticed about those editors that are most troubled lest people should become deranged in consequence of their attention to the subject of religion, and who are most ready to publish them when they find any thing to make a story like the above out of—it is that they are among those who are least alarmed at the derangement of people arising from other causes—for instance from intemperance. It is a fact which will not be denied that those most troubled lest people should become fanatics are the most backward in promoting the temperance cause. One of our Physicians in this village informed the editor of this paper that he had during one week, in the course of his practice, been called to three cases of delirium tremens. These cases are occurring daily in all parts of the land, and yet the men who are so much opposed to religious meetings lest they should produce a derangement of intellect, do not blaze them abroad and lend their aid to apply the remedy. They will look on without alarm at a meeting at a tavern or grocery with perfect complacency, although such meetings are daily the cause of the destruction not only of the intellects, but of the bodies, to say nothing of the souls of multitudes.

But fanaticism—religious fanaticism—derangement occasioned by attending religious meetings, alas how dreadful!! How kind to caution the public on this subject. Just see how kind it was to publish the above. The following will explain.

The following contradiction of this story appears in the Haverhill Gazette:

Boston, Nov. 20th, 1831.

DEAR SIR:—I was informed yesterday as I was stepping into the stage at Haverhill, that an article appeared in one of your papers of last week, setting forth, that I had, in consequence of attending the protracted meeting, lately held in that place, become a fanatic, &c.

In as far as regards myself individually, I should have deemed the charge too trifling to merit a moment's consideration, but as it may, if unnoticed, have a tendency to injure the cause of truth, I must request as an act of justice, that you will cause the facts of my case to be made known. That I attended said meeting, I cheerfully admit; that I there became simple enough to believe that it is the duty of man to submit his own will to the will of his Creator, and that I then and there determined, that with God's blessing, I would endeavor to make his will my rule of action, is equally true. If this is "fanaticism" I am proud of being thought worthy of the appellation.

That I have, since my conversion, in consequence of too close application of mind, to the investigation of a subject, which had little more to do with the matter of my conversion than a question of mathematics would have,—had a brain fever, attended with a partial alienation of mind, is also admitted. A few days of rest and quiet, have, however, fully restored me to health in mind and body.

Yours, &c.

JOHN S. PORTER.

THE POPE TREMBLING.

In Bologna, Italy, in the territories of "the Church" the People utterly disregard the authority of the Pope, and scenes of confusion and popular tumults daily disturb the tranquility of the city. Popular orators in true Kentucky style, mount stumps, barrels or any thing else, which can give them a sufficient elevation, and harangue the people, demanding a change in their form of government. Even those slaves of the Pope imagine that infallibility can err, and perfection be improved!! What a pity that some of the subjects of his Catholic Majesty in America, would not visit their brethren in the "Territories of the church" and teach them submission to the authority of the Representative of St. Peter.

It appears too, that his Holiness is much straitened for cash about these days, and is resorting to extraordinary means to maintain the dignity of the Apostolical chair. The Cardinals and Bishops have relinquished a large share of their perquisites and it is expected that the inferior clergy will imitate their example. The sale of Indulgencies probably cannot be as successfully resorted to now, as in the days of Leo Xth.

REVIVALS.

Although revivals are not as general in this part of the Lord's vineyard as formerly, yet the influences of the spirit are not wholly withdrawn.—Some of our churches are permitted to witness a few cases of hopeful conversion, and in some places numbers are joining themselves to the people of God.

In New England and in a number of the southern states, protracted meetings have been very numerous, and they have generally been eminently blessed to the conversion of souls. The state of Religion in our American churches may upon the whole, be considered, at the present time, prosperous. All our exchange papers give us weekly accounts of revivals, but we publish only those that possess peculiar interest.

A FOURTH MURDER OF A WIFE by DRUNKEN HUSBANDS, within about three months, has just occurred in the city of New-York!!!

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

A styptical liquor composed of a number of ingredients, has been formed by a couple of physicians of Paris by which the carotid artery of sheep and other animals which have been separated, and even pieces taken out, have been closed and the blood stopped in a few minutes. A great number of experiments have been made which have established its superiority, to any thing ever before discovered for suppressing hemorrhage.

On the 10th inst. the bridge at the Little Falls gave way while a drove of cattle were passing over and 27 head were precipitated into the river. Mr. A. Mann, and his son late Member of Assembly were on the bridge at the same time in a one horse waggon, & shared the same fate with the cattle. They fell 27 feet, but each sized the horn of an ox and thus kept above water some time, until they laid hold of a piece of timber and were rescued from their perilous situation. The cattle were taken out alive, only two of them having sustained much injury.

The Utica "Christian Journal" and the "Albany Telegraph have united and hereafter the united papers are to be published at Albany, to take the name of the Journal and Telegraph, to be conducted by an Association of Gentlemen. The paper is enlarged and appears in a very handsome new type.

The lad who has sent us a piece of poetry, and informs us that he is an apprentice at a good trade, but aspires to something higher—imagines that he is destined to make a figure in the world and wishes us to publish some of his "choice pieces," is advised "to stick to his last" to become a master of his business—to store his mind with ideas and learn to convey them intelligibly in plain prose, before he attempts to write poetry. We hope that his anticipation of rising to distinction in the world, may be realized. If it should be an honorable distinction, he will thank us, at some future day, for our advice and our refusal to publish his article—he would rather meet a Ghost than such an exhibition of juvenile self-conceit. We say learn your trade boy. Dont be discouraged but do not expose yourself by attempting to get any more poetry published.

THE POLES.

It will be seen by the few extracts that we give to-day that the Polish army has surrendered—that there is not a hope left that they may by some desperate effort, retrieve their losses, drive the Russians from the soil which has been drenched by the blood of so many patriots, and establish their independence. We fear too, that Nicholas will show these subjugated Poles no lenity. If the extract which we publish representing the work of vengeance as having begun by firing into the prison, be true, we may expect a scene of butchery at which humanity must weep. We shall look with deep anxiety for further accounts from this ill-fated country. Whether the other powers of Europe will attempt to interpose their good offices in favor of the Poles and if they do, whether the proud Autocrat in the flush of victory, will be influenced by them, is extremely doubtful.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. VI.

Christians are under solemn obligations to aid in the present temperance effort.

Their profession calls them to it.

By this they have assumed the name of Christ, and dedicated their all to Him. He is assumed as their example—their guide; and as he kept himself pure, so they are to keep themselves pure. They, like Him, are to deny themselves all ungodli-

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ness, and every worldly lust; to live soberly, righteously and godly in the world. From every course of conduct which would injure the cause of Christ, they are to depart; and every lawful movement tending to promote that cause, they are to support cordially and zealously. These engagements they have voluntarily assumed, and no earthly power can absolve them from the obligation.

The honor and peace of the church requires them to aid in the T. cause.

What cause has contributed more to mar the beauty, and disturb the peace of the church, than ardent spirit? Recent investigations have furnished the astounding fact, that of all the ex-communications from the churches in our country, at least seven eights of them are distinctly to be traced to the use of ardent spirit. And as corroborative of this statement, I aver, that in a large number of churches, say 50 and upwards, and of different denominations, of whom I have made the inquiry, the above is the proportion—seven eights of the whole. What an alarming fact; and especially when we consider, that a large proportion of these excommunicated ones, have waxed worse and worse, till a drunkard's grave has closed over them! Once they cried Lord, Lord—sat at the communion table, and were numbered among the children of God! What ruined them, and cast them out? Ardent spirit!

And must this angel of death be any longer nurtured in the bosom of the church; fondled, embraced, and cherished by the professed disciples of our Lord? Must the church be yet longer disgraced, and reproached, because her members will use and make and vend ardent spirit?—Last March a certain man set at the communion table; in April was excommunicated for intemperance, and in June I was called to see him die;—and die too in all the horrors and the agonies of delirium tremens. And may a merciful providence never again cause me to witness such another scene!

The good of their fellow men, requires Christians to aid in the T. effort.

Intemperance is confessedly injurious to the temporal and eternal welfare of men. Moderate drinking leads to intemperance; Christians are bound to seek the good of others, therefore they are under obligation to use every effort to discourage the use of ardent spirit. And no efforts will avail much except accompanied by a pledge of total abstinence. After having traversed nine counties, and had intercourse with between 200 and 300 T. Societies, I am prepared to declare that the greatest discouragements with which nine-tenths of these societies have to struggle, arises from the conduct of professed christians.

Scarcely a town have I visited, but the complaint has been, if such and such professors of religion, would only unite, the T. cause would here find little difficulty. And I do not hesitate to declare it as my decided opinion, opinion too founded form long & close investigation, that it is in the power of christians in America, to give complete triumph to the temperance cause. Let but the church of Christ awake, and ardent spirit is banished. One professor of religion, who refuses to pledge himself to total abstinence, does more to retard the temperance cause, than 500 sots can do with all their opposition. If these remarks are true, what a fearful responsibility rests upon the church of Christ! When will she awake?

CHAS. YALE,
Agt. N. Y. S. T. S.

CAUSTIC.

The Editor of the Christian Index in introducing to his readers the communication of a writer who, like a thousand others appears to place a higher value upon the tithing of mint and cummin than upon the weightier matters of the law, make the following caustic remarks.

We publish the article below with some notes of our own. We know not who the writer is, and therefore cannot be suspected of having any allusions to persons or places. He has chosen to adopt the title of "A Particular Baptist," and thus to indicate something of his character. His particularity seems more prominent than either his judgment or piety; and were we not fearful of being thought somewhat suspicious, we should say, that this Particular Baptist must be dry nurse to some of those tight-laced, over-straight, self-approving churches, which spin divinity into cob-webs, convert souls as they build houses, by the square and compass—and prescribe Rules for taking the dimensions of a passion.

A writer in the (Baptist) Christian Index in answering objections to the practice of calling persons to come forward to be especially prayed for, in time of Revival very justly remarks.

It is never considered extraneous, either to decency or religion, to require special prayer for persons laboring under disease, laid upon beds of affliction. It is not unusual for the case of such to be brought before a whole congregation, and the prayers of the church requested in their behalf. But shall persons affected with corporeal maladies engage the sympathies and prayers of Christians, whilst those under soul-affliction are not to be particularised at the throne of grace? Shall the preservation of natural life be an object of greater importance than the security and peace of the soul? Shall persons under the apprehension of dying feel no hesitation in having their names held up to public notice, whilst those who feel the dread of eternal death must not be allowed the benefit of united and appropriate supplications in their behalf? Does the prayer of faith help to save the sick, and shall it not help to deliver the soul?

To allege that there is no specific rule of Scripture for the justification of the contested practice, is about as reasonable as it would be to urge that there is no such rule to authorise the custom of calling candidates for baptism before the church to make a public declaration of their faith. We never think of calling in question the propriety of the latter, because no separate precept of Scripture commands it; why then should we dispute the propriety of the former?

SUPPLEX.

For the Observer.

MILLER'S ESSAY,

On the warrant, nature, and duties of the office of Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church.

The Rev. Dr. Cox of New York has recently addressed a very humorous letter to Rev. Dr. Miller of Princeton Seminary, in reference to the above essay. The whole letter I had hoped to have seen in your paper, but as it has not appeared, I send you an extract containing some judicious remarks upon the work itself.

"The volume, as a storehouse of important knowledge in church Government in general, and with reference to the organization and administration of ecclesiastical power as connected with the office of the Ruling Elder in particular; as answering many practical questions not elsewhere treated so conveniently, in a pertinent and satisfactory manner; as a book of reference in cases which constantly occur, as a corrective of many existing evils in the churches, and not the least of the ignorance, incertitude, confusion, and error, to say nothing of the practical neglect, omission and positive irregularity, that obtain; as a noble vindication of the incomparable scheme of church government under which it is the singular happiness of Presbyterians to live; and as a pertinent, timely and very useful publication for its purpose, that has long been needed and must have remained otherwise a desideratum for years; [illegible] that it will add new impulse to the cause of Sabbath Schools [illegible] all these grounds, will receive a hearty welcome throughout the bounds of the Union.

The following gentlemen were elected officers of the Union for the year ensuing.

REV. DR. COMSTOCK, President.—REV. ELIAB GOING, of Allegany, E. C. HYDE, of Cattaraugus, REV. ISAAC JONES, of Chautauque, GEORGE PALMER, of Erie, REV. JOSEPH ELLIOTT, of Genesee, JAMES K. LIVINGSTON, of Monroe, FELIX TRACEY, of Livingston, REV. WM. F. CURRY, of Niagara, REV. ELEAZUR SAVAGE, of Orleans, WALTER HUBBELL, of Ontario, REV. DAVID HIGGINS, of Steuben, GEO. BECKWITH, of Wayne, HARRY WELLS, of Yates, Vice Presidents.

MYRON STRONG, of Rochester, Recording Secretary.

ORLANDO HASTINGS, of Rochester, Corresponding Secretary.

LEVI A. WARD, of Rochester, Treasurer & Depositary.

SELAH MATHEWS, FREDERICK STARR, Z. FREEMAN, OREN SAGE, ARISTARCHUS CHAMPION, JOHN H. THOMPSON, and CHARLES J. HILL, Managers.

MANAGERS' REPORT.

In presenting the annual report, the Board at this time are called upon to recal the death of a valuable member, JOSIAH BISSELL JR.; one of the founders—the first President—and the constant, active and liberal friend of this Union, has rested from his labors.

The character of Mr. Bissell when viewed in his connexion with the Sabbath school interests, presents a rare combination of the most enlarged, comprehensive, and enlightened general views, connected with the utmost patience and perseverance in the practical application to its minutest details, as a liberal contributer to its funds; as an active member of this Board; as a teacher and Superintendent of a school. In our public Sunday school meetings, in the circle of friends; at the Monthly Concert; in the teachers prayer meeting; at home and abroad; in all these places, and under all these circumstances, was Josiah Bissell Jr. emphatically the friend of Sabbath schools. Be it ours to cherish the memory of his worth and to emulate his merits.

In presenting this report, your Board would remark, (what would otherwise be too obvious) that owing to a variety of causes, the Genesee Union as such has since its last annual meeting done but little except the labors successfully bestowed in furnishing enlarged supplies of books for the libraries of the schools, yet as individual members of the Union, they have the consolation of having mingled their labors with those of small associations and individuals in carrying forward the grand designs of the Union. They have in common with the other members of the society been permitted to witness the smiles of Heaven on the institution, within the bounds of this Union; and it may perhaps be said in truth, that in no part of our beloved country, has the Church of Jesus Christ gathered so great a harvest from the rising generation—and surely if those who are most faithful and efficient are even constrained to acknowledge themselves unprofitable servants, then, on taking a retrospective view of our official acts, we may this day clothe ourselves with sackcloth & bless the kind and merciful hand which has been extended from the fountain of benevolence in Almighty aid of this heavenly enterprise.

The treasurer's report herewith presented shows a continually increasing demand for books for the libraries of the schools; the amount of sales of books since our last report is $4159.73. The capital for the supply of the depository is $773. Balance now in the treasury $44,58. The only county from which the Board have received a report is the county of Monroe, from which report, it appears that there are in the county, 111 schools, 1076 teachers and Superintendents, 5633 children, and 783 teachers and children who profess to have passed from death unto life, during the past year; 4315 vols. of books, in the library, besides a large number not reported. Your Board are aware that it is expected of them that they not only report of what has been done by them, but that they also suggest whatever in their judgment would promote the objects of the institution. They gladly avail themselves of this favorable opportunity for presenting very briefly a few items by way of recommendation to the friends of this cause.

1. Then, it is of great importance that the Board of Managers in each County Union, hold stated meetings, and ascertain, and provide for, every case of destitution and delinquency, within their bounds, through the agency of efficient, devoted individuals, who may be sent out for this purpose. This plan has been punctually pursued in Monroe county during the past year, and the success attending these self-denying labors, has been equal to the most sanguine expectations of the Board; and those who entered upon these labors of love, can testify how abundantly they have already been rewarded in the revival of their own drooping graces. It is hoped that the Vice Presidents, being the only representatives of the society in the respective counties, will take note that they are the persons upon whom rests the responsibility of moving the County Union by seeing that they act—act promptly—and as promptly make their reports to the corresponding Sec. of this society.

2. It is highly necessary to the success of this cause that each Superintendent and teacher feel their responsibility not only to be vigilant and faithful in regard to their particular school, but to see to it that every other school connected with their Union are doing likewise; and last, but not least, to enlist if possible the sympathy and prayers of every christian within their bounds.

3d. It is indispensably necessary to a true Sunday School spirit—to the attaining of that faith which can have no denial—and consequently to the furtherance of the greatest designs of the institution that the Sunday School Monthly Concert for Prayer, be steadily observed—as also Teachers' weekly prayer meeting.

4th. It is most desirable that every teacher feel it a duty he owes to the rising generation, and to the Church of God to let no day in the year pass without spending a season of retirement for the undivided purpose of reflecting on this great and interesting institution, as the one which there is reason to believe God will make most instrumental in bringing back a revolted world unto himself—and under the influence of this belief, enquire, Lord what wilt thou have me to do?

5th. The Board would also recommend as a measure worthy the immediate attention of the Society the permanent employment of a well qualified General Agent whose duty it shall be to visit the several counties within the bounds of this Union, to awaken a deeper feeling and enlist more active exertion in the cause of Sabbath Schools.

The Board would remark that a prominent difficulty which the active friends of this institution have to contend with is the lack of thorough and prayerful research into its real merits among its nominal friends—too large a proportion of whom give it the same place in their regards that they give an inoffensive, good man—who altho' he does but little harm in the world, nevertheless does about as little good.

They would suggest as a remedy for this,

For the Observer.

"Let this book be read and digested, at least by the more active and prominent members of our more than hundred Presbyteries, and we shall see its good fruits, and feel them throughout the church. The office will be understood, "magnified," had in honor, and commended to the esteem of incumbents and constituents. The office of Deacon also will be properly and practically appreciated—as now deplorably, it is not. Mutilations, omissions, and confusions of the office will cease to degrade our churches; and the benefits of order will begin to be realized among them."

The above work is for sale in your village.—As soon as I learned it was to be had in Rochester I sent for a copy, and I am happy to say that I am highly gratified with the work.

A MINISTER.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—If the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, let us look to their example for instruction. How numerous are the temples consecrated to Bacchus, & how constant in their worship are the devotees of this beastly god. Let christians arise—arise in all the might of "active dependence"—erect an altar of prayer and praise—kindle around it a sacred flame of devotion to go no more out. Let prayer ascend not only morning, evening, noon and seven times a day, but constantly let us lift up holy hands. Around it let all who love our Lord in sincerity pour forth their voluntary offerings.

Will not God hear, answer and forgive, and show mercy, and create in us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit,—that we may teach transgressors his ways—that converts shall be multiplied unto him. And let sinners be brought around the altar at all times a day and learn that the sacrifices acceptable to God are a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and break forth in praise. A broken and contrite heart O God, thou wilt not despise.

B.

For the Observer.

The first of the following extracts is from a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Woods. The anecdote is from "The Pleasing Expositor," a recently published Sabbath School Book. Allow a Layman through the columns of your paper, respectfully to commend the reproofs they contain to certain bishops of our church, who, in his apprehension are in some cases carrying their theological speculations to points that God has not seen fit to reveal to us in His holy word—and in others, forgetting the forbearance, charity and courtesy that are even due to an opponent.

"The course which I have taken the liberty to recommend as so important at the present day, may require of us a more diligent and devoted study of the word of God, than we have been used to. It may require a more constant recurrence to it as the source and standard of our religious sentiments. It may require us to abandon some mental occupations to which we are fondly attached, and some speculative theories, which perhaps our reason has been proud of inventing and defending. And my christian brethren, may not this be the very labor and self denial, which our Lord and Master requires of us—as one of the best means of promoting the spirit of love and union, of converting errorists and infidels, and accomplishing all the objects of pious benevolence?

"At the present day, it is our duty and our privilege to engage in a delightful and glorious work—the work of studying more diligently, and understanding more perfectly the word of God; the work of guiding the young, of instructing the ignorant, of saving the lost, and of extending at home and abroad the reign of our Redeemer. It is a great and blessed work, sufficient to occupy all our time, and all our intellectual and moral powers. We have enough study for our reason to do, without making it the instrument of rash and useless speculation, surely we have sufficient subjects of investigation without those that genders strife, and we have surely sufficient to contend with, without contending with one another.

"And now, brethren and friends, let me say in conclusion, if any of you ever grow weary of the duty which God has assigned you as rational and immortal beings; if you ever grow impatient of the restraints of his holy word, and begin to employ your reason on any subject, which lies beyond your province, and which, however enticing it may be to your curiosity, is foreign to your great work; you will hear from your blessed Lord that cutting rebuke, which he once gave to the inquisitiveness of an apostle; What is that to thee? follow thou me.

Wood's Murray-st. Discourse.

Second of Timothy, 4th chap. 2d verse. Reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine. The natural temper of the late Rev. Andrew Fuller, of Kettering, though neither churlish nor morose, was not distinguished by gentleness, meekness, or affability. He could rarely be faithful without being severe; and in giving reproof, he was often betrayed into intemperate zeal. Once, at a meeting of ministers, he took occasion to correct an erroneous opinion, delivered by one of his brethren: and he laid on his censures so heavily that Dr. Ryland called out vehemently in his own peculiar tone of voice—"Brother Fuller, Brother Fuller! you can never admonish a mistaken friend, but you must take up a sledge-hammer and knock his brains out!"

The Annual Meeting of the Genesee S. S. Union was holden at the Baptist Meeting-house in the village of Rochester, on Wednesday, the 16th inst. The President being absent Ashley Samson was appointed Chairman, and the meeting having been opened with prayer, the Treasurer's Report was read and committed for the purpose of being examined and audited. The Report of the Board of Managers was then presented and read, and the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

1st. Resolved, That the Report of the Board of Managers be accepted, and published in the Rochester Observer, and such other newspapers published within the bounds of the Union, as are friendly to the cause of Sabbath Schools.

2d. Resolved, That the favor God has manifested to Sabbath Schools, here and every where, should excite our gratitude and animate our hopes.

3d. Resolved, That the best interests of our country are so indissolubly connected with the intelligence and piety of the rising generation that every true patriot should exert his influence to extend the blessings of Sabbath Schools thro' our rising republic.

4th. Resolved. That the obstacles to the general establishment of Sabbath Schools within the bounds of this Union can, through the blessings of God, be easily surmounted by united and judicious effort.

5th. Resolved, That the Genesee Sabbath School Union, in reliance upon divine aid, will, within, two years, establish a Sabbath School in every destitute place where it is practicable throughout the Thirteen Western Counties of New-York.

The meeting, though but thinly attended, was one of deep interest, and the hope is cherished that the active and diffusion of intelligence in connexion with the mighty engine is actually doing; every month and every week.

2d. A careful examination of these doings and their effects in our own vicinity; and that this examination be more close and scrutinizing, let it as far as practicable, be connected with Teaching.

Lastly, A fresh perusal of such Scriptures as have special regard to the instruction of children and youth.

The real friends of this institution openly avow that it is a designing institution; yes let not its friends conceal this feature, nor its enemies hope to escape it influence: it has designs, deep as the bottomless Pit; high as Heaven; broad as the Earth in whose bosom sleeps the dust of its immortal Founder.—It designs giving to every ignorant, neglected child the elements of a common school education—a knowledge of the relation he sustains to his parents—his neighbor—his Country—his Country's God.

It designs to bind together the children of the poor and the rich and to enlighten them with religious truth, and to qualify them not only for maintaining good and virtuous lives here, but for eternal life.

It designs doing this before habits of vice shall have rendered the mind callous and closed up the avenues to the tender sensibilities of childhood.

It designs spending and extending this transforming influence, until there shall not be an uneducated or vicious child on the Globe—then shall it come to pass that "the nations and kingdoms of this world are become the nations and kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

AUBURN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Elbridge Nov. 1, 1831.

To the Editor of the Boston Recorder.

By direction of the Synod of Geneva, I forward to you for insertion in your paper, the following article, passed at their late session at Homer. Yours,

TIMOTHY STOW.

The Synod of Geneva within whose bounds the Auburn Theological Seminary is located, feel it to be their duty and pleasure, unanimously to express their continued and increased confidence in the character of the said Institution, its Professors and Guardians; and from its many pledges of importance and usefulness to this section of the country and to the church generally, we do most affectionately and cordially recommend it to the increased patronage of the friends of a pious and regularly educated ministry.

In testimony of their interest and confidence in said Seminary, the Synod have cheerfully contributed at their present session more than three hundred dollars to aid its funds; and given pledges to use all reasonable exertions to raise between one and two thousand dollars more, previous to the first of January next.

TIMOTHY STOW, Stated Clerk.

Homer, Oct. 6th, 1831.

DOMESTIC.

The Editor of the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer, calls the Editor of the Standard a sot, and the Standard makes the amend honorable by publishing to the world that the Editors of the Courier and Enquirer are liars and cowards.

VICINITY OF PHILADELPHIA.—The Editor of the Christian Index mentions large additions to several Baptist Churches in Philadelphia and the vicinity,—concluding his account with the following remarks on the protracted meetings in that region:

We have witnessed much of the excitement in the scenes described above, the chief part of which, has had connexion with meetings of several days' continuance. But truth and justice requires us to state, that, whilst these meetings have been abundantly useful in eliciting and bringing forth dormant impressions of former times from the hearts of those who have attended them, comparatively few cases in which the first religious concern of those who have been gathered in, occurred on such occasions. Most of those whose experiences we have heard, dated their convictions long prior to the meeting.—The meeting was made the means of bringing them to a determination. Before that, they were halting, irresolute, hesitating, backsliding, or in some other manner undecided; but when they came into the scope of that kind of prayer and preaching, which are ordinarily witnessed at protracted meetings, they were no longer able to restrain their impressions. At the same time we would not on any account undervalue the prolonged meetings. Our object is rather to show their great importance, not only in being the means of originating the saving convictions of Religion; but much more, in developing the long smothered feelings of those who may have been previously awakened.

MADISON, OHIO.—Rev. C. Burbank writes as follows to the Editor of the Hudson Observer and Telegraph:

The first Sabbath in the present month, was a day of great interest to the first church in Madison. Fourteen by letter, from eight churches and four states, and 43 by profession, making 57, were added to its number. Nearly four-fifths, embracing many of our most inteligent and interesting young people of both sexes, in the early part of life, between the ages of 15 and 30.—After their admission, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, in the presence of a numerous and solemn assembly. A protracted meeting of deep interest, commencing Friday, and closing Tuesday, was connected with the services of the Sabbath. About 60 attended the inquiry meeting, a few of whom, obtained a hope in Christ.

LOTTERIES.—The N. Y. Daily Sentinel says that the Grand Jury of that city, at their late session, were engaged two days in investigating the subject of the N. Y. Lotteries, and came to the conclusion, that the managers had already drawn more lotteries than the law allowed them, and that the present drawings are illegal.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

GEORGIA.

On Tuesday, Nov. 8th, the farewell Message of Gov. Gilmer was delivered to both branches of the Legislature. Nearly half of it is occupied with the Indian question. His Excellency re-capitulates the history of the year in relation to these matters, taking care not to implicate himself or any of his minions, and concludes by recommending to the Legislature a just and humane policy towards the Cherokees, and especially, that their lands should not be taken from them without their own consent! His language is as follows.

The law which was passed at your last session; for the survey and distribution of the Cherokee lands, was not to be carried into effect until the title of the Cherokees was extinguished by the President, or until further legislation. As the Indian title has not as yet been extinguished, it will be necessary for you to determine whether any, or what further legislation shall be had upon this subject. Permit me most respectfully to express the opinion that the condition upon which that law was to go into operation, ought not to be repealed. If it should, and the Cherokee lands be distributed according to its provisions, the effect would be, to deprive our Indian population entirely of their possessions without their consent and without any equivalent. The character of the State, the interest of the Union, respect for public opinion, and the rights of the Indians, forbid that so gross an act of injustice should be committed.

His Excellency has found it hard to pull against the tide. So he slacks away and glides down the current. But never mind that. We are glad to hear a word of kindness from his lips, whatever may be the motive by which it is prompted.

Worthy of imitation.—A few days since, a gentleman of high respectability, of this city, was called upon by the Rev. Mr. Smith, rector of St. Mary's church, Albany, and presented with $15, which had been surreptitiously taken from him some time since, by a person who had lately repented of the theft. The Reverend gentleman who presented the money, refused to give the name of the person who clandestinely took it.—Schenectady Cabinet.

The manufacturing, vending, and drinking of ardent spirits, an unprofitable business for a country.—There are consumed annually in the United States, 72,000,000 of gallons of ardent spirits, at an average of 63 cents per gallon, amounting to $48,000,000. The diminution of productive labor, and the actual loss to the country consequent upon the drinking of this quantity of spirits, is fairly estimated at $94,000,000.—Admitting one half to be profit on the amount of sales, we have 24,000,000 of profit deducted from 94,000,000 of loss, leaving a balance of 70,000,000 against the trade. Rum, therefore, instead of adding to the national wealth, aside from its immoral influence, is a dead weight upon a country, and absolutely unprofitable and impoverishing.—President Wayland.

SELF-PUNISHMENT.—A woman in Caswell county, N. C. lately cut off part of her tongue with a razor. The reason she assigns is, that her tongue had led her into a great deal of trouble, and that it should trouble her no more.

JACKSONVILLE, OCT. 14.—Fate of Smith.—The following melancholy account is taken from a letter just received in this town, by a brother of the deceased. Mr. Smith was a partner in the firm of Smith, Sublette & Jackson, and has been engaged in carrying on the Fur Trade with the Indians beyond the Rocky Mountains, for some time past. The public are indebted to his enterprize for many valuable facts relating to this almost unknown reg on. The last time his company returned to St. Louis, they had been peculiarly successful, and had pushed their expedition to within fifty miles of the Pacific Ocean.

"Our much lamented brother, Jedediah Smith, was killed by the Cormuck Indians on the Smerone River on the 27th May.—Our teams were about starving for want of water (having none for four days) and brother went in search of some water a due south from the course we were travelling which was S. W. The Spanish traders trafficking with these Indians told us that they saw brother a short time before the Indians attacked him, and told him there was no hope for escape, so he went boldly up to them in hopes that he could effect a conciliation.—The Indians attempted to frighten his horse, so that he would turn from them, which they did, and then fired on him and wounded him in the shoulder; he faced about and killed their chief, upon which they rushed upon him and massacred him. The Indians numbered about twenty.

AUSTIN SMITH.

IRA G. SMITH, Jacksonville."

FOREIGN.

Extract of a private letter from Warsaw, dated the 29th ult;—

"This capital presents the appearance of one vast bivouac—advanced posts and patrols are found at every corner. The Russians have denounced to the Police several thousands of persons who have been zealous in the national cause. Since the 8th inst. the day on which it resumed its functions, the Police has been constantly employed in making arrests; and in the first two days of the Restoration, upwards of 1000 persons of all ages and classes were thrown into prison, and confined with the worst of malefactors. Since that period, 250 men, shut up in one of the courts of the prison, were fired upon for nearly two hours in succession, under pretence of a revolt of the malefactors, though four-fifths were confined on suspicion of political offences. There are now upwards of 1500 incarcerated, and they will esteem themselves fortunate if they are not all sent to Siberia. Poland has indeed sunk into the tomb." Another letter of the same date says, that it appears that there is still an administrative Polish Committee organised at Czenstochau, for the Palatinate of Kalisch.

IMPORTANT FROM CHINA.—By the brig Osprey, Captain Calowin, which arrived at Charleston, on the 13th inst., from St. Helena, in distress, bound to Salem, the following intelligence has been received. The British East India Company's sloop of war Coote, arrived at St. Helena, 16th September, with despatches for England, announcing that the English factories at Canton had been broken up by the Chinese; the servants attached to the factories had their heads taken off; the likeness of King George, torn down and trampled under foot; the trees in the factories torn up, &c.; after the 10 of August, the British ships had all left Macoa.—Jour Com.

Accounts from St. Petersburg, say that the cholera has again appeared with violence at Nishno Novogorod.

Letters received during the last two weeks. Marshall, Foreman, & Co. 2; D. Pratt; Wm. Prince; J. B. Wilcox; E. R. Bascom; C. Locmis; M. Lathrop.

CARD.

The subscriber gratefully acknowledges the sum of $110 from the people of his charge, for the Presbyterian Branch of the American Education Society. The sum of $100, ($30 is from the Sewing Society,) is to constitute him a Life Director of said Society. May the Lord accept the gift and bless the givers.

I do this day remember my fault. I have also received the following tokens of the friendship of my people, and acceptance of my labors among them, which I have never before publicly acknowledged, viz: the sum of $50 to constitute me an honorary member of the A. B. C. F. Missions—$30 to constitute me a Life Member of of the A. H. M. Society—$30 A. S. S. Union—$20 A. Tract Society—$30 A. Bible Society—also $30 from the Sewing Society to constitute Mrs. B. a Life Member of the A. Bible Society. SILAS C. BROWN.

W. Bloomfield, Nov. 24, 1831.

MARRIED,

In Phelps, on the 8th, Mr. Cotton Dickinson, to Miss Mary V. Doty.

In Manchester, on the 20th inst. Mr. Peter Van Dyne, of Phelps, to Miss Mary Redfield.

At Lockport, on the 24th inst. by Rev. Mr. Curry, Mr. Alpha Chapin of this village, to Miss Clarissa Chapin, of the former place.

At Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania, on the 17th inst. by Rev. I. H. Jones, Wm. Allis Esq. Sheriff of Orleans County N. Y., to Miss Maria Jones of the former place.

In West Mendon, on the 7th inst. by Rev. Mr. Sill, Mr. William A. Bristol of Lima, to Miss Salome Patterson of Pittsford.

DIED,

In Phelps, on the 10th inst Mr. Claudius V. Boughton, aged 47 years.

In Utica, on the 12th inst. Mrs. Sophia W. Williams, aged 40, wife of William Williams bookseller.

MENDON TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society will be holden at the Methodist Chapel (Norton's Mills) on Saturday the third day of December next at 11 o'clock A. M. An address may expected from Rev. Mr. Brown of Bloomfield. A general and punctual attendance is requested, particularly of those who are not members. L. RUSSELL, Secretary.

Mendon, Nov. 19, 1831.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 00	Oats, bu.	$ 12½
Flour, bbl.	5 a 5 25	Potatoes,	25
Corn,	44	Butter, lb.	14 a 15
Oats,	31	Lard,	8
Beef, fresh	2 50 a 3 00	Eggs, doz.	18
Pork, do.	3 a 4	Cider, bbl.	1 25
Salt, bbl.	1 75

Rochester price Pot ashes $100 ton—Pearls 105

CLOTHING STORE.

THE Subscriber has received from N. York an addition to his former stock of Goods which he will be happy to make to the order of either old friends or new.

Ready Made Clothing,

constantly on hand. He would barely remark that he does not mean to be excelled in workmanship—neither will be allow himself to be undersold.

DAVID BUSH
No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. All persons indebted to the late firm of Wm. M Coy, & Co. are earnestly requested to make immediate payment otherwise—— D. B.

Nov. 29, 1831.

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber for cash or having unsettled claims on his Docket are requested to call and settle the same without delay. DAVID BUSH.

Nov. 29, 1831. No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. Wanted to hire, cut any quantity of Wood from fifty to five hundred cords. Enquire as above.

PROPOSALS

For publishing a Religious Periodical Paper, to be entitled the CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, under the Supervision of the Associate Reformed Synod of N. York.

The want of an accredited organ of sound sentiment and of correct intelligence has long been felt by the ministers and members of the ASSOCIATE REFORMED CHURCH, and by many worthy persons in the land, whose religious views and feelings have more or less with theirs. The cheering progress of the cause of God and Truth within the Associate Reformed Church has been such, as, while it augments the necessity and the demand for a periodical publication, justifies the Synod in undertaking it. Accordingly, at its late meeting, the Synod, after mature deliberation, determined on the establishment of a Monthly publication to be entitled "THE CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE," and appointed the Rev. JOHN F. M'LAREN, of Geneva, the Editor.

To solicit the patronage and co-operation of our people, and of the friends of Truth in general, devolves upon the Editor; which he would do by a brief statement of our want of such a paper, and by giving, what comes nearest to an actual examination of the work, a correct and candid view of the character it is designed to bear.

The A. R. Church is almost the only denomination which has not a Religious Paper under its care consecrated to the interests of Zion within its bounds. And as we have a part to perform in the dissemination of truth, we propose to terminate this unhappy peculiarity and to engage in the circulation of Evangelical doctrines and cheering intelligence.

The CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, while its pages shall be preserved pure from a style and from sentiments unfriendly to true charity, will take its station deliberately and firmly by the standards of the Church which are thoroughly Presbyterian and thoroughly Evangelical. It will be the engrossing purpose of the work, to promote vital godliness—to cherish intelligent piety among its readers, by the exposition and defence of the doctrines of Grace, by the enforcement of christian Duty, and by the illustration of christian Experience.

The following subjects will be among the most prominent in the Magazine:

1. Clear and concise views of Christian Doctrines.
2. Expositions of Difficult Passages of Scripture.
3. Brief Memoirs of eminently useful and pious Characters in different countries.
4. Sketches of the early history of the Reformed Churches.
5. Cases of Conscience solved for the edification of believers.
6. Translations from standard Christian Authors of former times.
7. Notices and short Reviews of New Publications.
8. Summaries of passing Religious and Civil Events.

It is expected that Ministers and members of the A. R. Church, in different parts, will contribute to the pages of the Magazine; and Communications from other quarters will always be courteously received.

TERMS.—The Magazine will contain 32 pages, octavo, per number, printed in good style, and on good paper, stitched in a neat printed covrr, making in a year a volume of nearly 400 pages. The price will be $1,50, if paid in advance or before the delivery of the third number; $2,00 if payment is deferred till after the third number. The first number will be published on the first of January next.

Members of Sessions in the A. R. Church, or such persons as they may appoint, are requested to act as Agents for the work, and to return to the editor the names of subscribers by the first of December.

Geneva, September 28, 1831.

A subscription list for the above paper is left with W. B. Knox, No. 3, Buffalo st. Rochester. It is to be hoped that all persons friendly to the interests of the "Associate Reformed Church" will become subscribers to the Magazine.

8w48.

THE three story stone house, corner of Spring and Sophia sts., is open for the reception of

BOARDERS,

where they will be genteelly and comfortably accommodated.

Rochester, Nov. 24, 1831. 8w48.

NOTICE.

THE Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firm of Bush & Butler, is dissolved by mutual consent; and all persons indebted to the said copartnership are hereby notified to make payment to Henry Bush; and all persons having claims against the said Copartnership, to present the same to the said Henry for adjustment and payment.

The business of the late firm will be conducted hereafter by the said Henry Bush, at the old stand.

HENRY BUSH
GEO. BUTLER.

Nov. 3, 47

LAST CALL.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hill & Peet are hereby notified that unless payment is made by 1st December, they will be sued.

LEWIS L. PEET.

Nov. 14, 1831. 47 3w

1000 ACRES OF ILLINOIS LAND, for Sale or Exchange for Farms. Enquire of E. D. SMITH, or H. B. WILLIAMS.

Rochester, Nov. 15, 1831 47 4w

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

HERESY HUNTING,

OR THE WAY TO GUARD AGAINST WILD BEASTS.

A story not found in Peters' History of Conn.

In the early days of Western Emigration, two men from one of the older settlements planted themselves at some distance from each other, in the midst of the forest; then, as is well known, much infested with wild beasts. As soon as they had built their log houses and cleared a small opening, and began to realize the fruits of their labor, they found that the wolf, the bear, the wild cat, the fox, were continually plundering them of their calves, pigs, and poultry, and that the most vigorous measures were required to protect their property from the marauders. The courses they took respectively, in regard to the wild beasts, are so characteristic, that I will describe them.

The first one was so impressed with the danger arising from the wild beasts, that it seemed to be the leading subject of his thoughts, and to absorb all other considerations. He was constantly studying new means of defence, and putting them in practice. If any neighbor, or traveller called, the first question was, whether he had any wild beasts where he lived; and the second, what he did to keep them off. There was no form of trap or terror for wild beasts, which he had not provided. Many times a day he took the rounds of his little enclosure, with his gun on his shoulder, to see that there were no wild beasts near. Every night, the bale fire blazed, in all directions, on his borders, to frighten them away. From the necessity of having dry fuel for these fires, he used to provide huge pile of wood, at little distances, for this purpose. In apprehension of what would become of his family, in case he should be taken sick, he erected houses, as magazines for weapons and fuels, to guard against these dreaded animals. Consequently, as is to be supposed, his whole strength and time were occupied in these works, so that he made no enlargement of his "clearing," no improvement in his comforts; and it was even with difficulty that he managed to raise potatoes and corn enough to keep his family from starving. His children grew up in ignorance and imbecility. They were not even taught useful industry. His eldest son was a tall pale-faced boy, his eyes standing out with habitual alarm, who would stay at the corner of the house by the day together, watching and listening; and if but a squirrell or a partridge rustled the leaves, he would raise the most terrific cries, "The wild beasts are coming! The wild beasts are coming!! They will carry us off!! What shall we do!"

He did indeed, at one time, engage a teacher for his children. But the schoolmaster was from the eastward, and not accustomed to such fears. And being a tender-hearted, conscientious man, he could not bear to see a family of children destroyed by their eternal terrors at wild beasts. He therefore took pains to persuade them that their terrors were needless, and that they might go into the woods, to get chesnuts, or hunt squirrels, as well as not. But one of the little boys happening to say, in presence of the father, that he was not afraid of wild beasts, for Mr. ——— the schoolmaster, told him they did not come in the day time, the old gentleman called him to an account, and not obtaining satisfactory promises, the teacher was dismissed, and the boys left to grow up in salutary ignorance of the real nature of the animals they so much dreaded.

It cost this anxious father many sleepless nights in considering how he should protect his family after he was dead. At length he hit upon the expedient of a high wall, about his whole "clearing," so that it never could be enlarged, and no further encroachment could be made upon the forests. After he had accomplished this, with amazing labor, his fears still increased as old age came upon him. He even went so far, as to take into his head the strange conceit, that his domestic animals might eventually degenerate into wild beasts. His dog was much like a wolf, his swine had several teeth like a rhinoceros, and the mammoth had hoofs, as some conjectured, like a horse. He accordingly shut them up, and muzzled them, so that they were of no use to him, and finally died for want of exercise.

Let us now go back, and look at the other settler, who pursued a different course, with regard to the wild beasts. He too, occasionally lost a lamb, or a young calf, or a few fowls. But he used to say he had a good many left, and though he was sorry to part with them, it was of no use to cry about it, and at any rate, it would never do for him to neglect his business and spend all his time in watching over a few pigs and poultry. He would try and learn them to come home early at night, and provide a strong and safe shelter for them and do the best he could. Day by day therefore he continued his labors, and saw his "clearing" enlarging before him. The forest continually resounded with the blows of his axe, the crash of his sturdy oaks, the music of his cheerful songs. Sometimes, by way of relaxation, he would dash into the woods for a few hours, where every shot of his trusty 'rifle' brought to the ground some ravenous wolf, or growling bear, or some other noxious animal,—the noise of his industry, & the light he let in upon the forest frightened them from his borders, so that every year, as his farm and stock increased, the average of his losses diminished; and before many years had elapsed, he had almost forgotten to think about wild beasts.

His children, brought up in sight of such an example, could not fail to partake of their father's energy. His eldest son, before he was ten years old, had brought a fine buck to the ground with his father's rifle. Before he was fifteen he encountered a bear at close hug, and killed him with his knife, and the next year he snapped his fingers at a wild cat, in the woods, and told him he would not waste powder on a cowardly sheep stealer, but if he would show a fair fight, he would whip his weight of such fellows in five minutes.

The second son was sent to one of the eastern states, to college, where he showed the full benefit of having a sound mind in a sound body. He was by unanimous consent, the leader and champion of his classmates in all the sports of the green: and at the close of his college life, he took the valedictory with their equal approbation.

In short, the father, at his death, had the pleasure of leaving a numerous family of sons and daughters, spreading all around him, every one of them in circumstances, and with a character, to act well the part of life, to be useful and honored in their generation, and leave the world the better for their having been in it.

The other father died, for even over anxious papas cannot live forever. And as his children had never been brought up to labor or care, they hung around the old place till debt, necessity and starvation compelled them to wander in quest of a scanty subsistence, among the cultivated population which had gathered around his old neighbor. Here they employed themselves as they could, and learned such arts as they were capable of, like making brooms and baskets and such like. But imbecility and consumption carried them all off at an early age, and the family became extinct.

MORAL.—If you would know who are doing most for the extirpation of heresy, look for those ministers and churches which labor chiefly to promote the conversion of the world, by missions and revivals of religion. BACK WOODS.

THE IMPASSABLE BRIDGE.

In one of my late journeys into the country to preach the gospel of Christ, I met with a Christian brother in humble life, who had been distinguished for his uniform zeal and faithfulness in the cause of Christ. He had encountered many discouragements, from his minister, from some of his professed brethren, as well as from a scoffing world, but had persevered not altogether without success, in his endeavors to arouse his neighbors and those around him, from their slumbers, and bring them to a saving knowledge of the truth. I had a curiosity to know the history of this man's religious experience;—to learn what it was which originally gave him such an impulse, and had born him on in such a uniform course of labor and self-denial in the service of the Redeemer. I took an opportunity to state to him my wishes, and found him not unwilling to gratify me in this matter.

He proceeded with much modesty, and with every appearance of sincerity and truth, to give me substantially the following account.

'I was,' says he 'awakened and I trust, brought to repentance in early life. But being alone in my feelings, and living where I had none to encourage me, and where the church was not altogether in a desirable state, I neglected to profess religion; and (after a season of enjoyment) I relapsed into a state of comparative worldliness. In the state I lived several years, performing some religious duties; and finding comfort in them, but neglecting others, and my heart often reproaching me for my unfaithfulness. At length it pleased God to visit me with protracted sickness. I was not dangerously ill, but my confinement was long and tedious. This trial however, produced no very perceptible change in my feelings. If it should please God to take me away, I hoped I was prepared to die. Or if he should restore me I thought I felt willing to live to his glory. But alas, I had no adequate conception at that time what it is to live to God's glory, or what is implied in such a course of life.

"In this state of mind, I was gradually recovering, with a prospect of soon being able to resume my wonted labors, when, on a certain night I had a remarkable dream or vision. I seemed to myself to be standing on an eminence, with a vast plain, steeply inclined towards a broad, dark river, stretched out before me. A wide bridge was constructed part way over the river, the farther end of which, was obscured in a thick, impenetrable fog or mist which lay along on the opposite side of the stream. To persons on the plain, the bridge seemed to reach quite across the river, and to promise a safe and pleasant passage; but in my situation, I could distinctly perceive that it reached only till it had entered the mist, and terminated just beyond the middle of the flood. I saw but one way of approach to the plain; but there were two ways leading from it,—The one by the bridge already described, and the other on the opposite side of the plain, up a steep and somewhat difficult bank. The way to the plain was thronged with travellers, and the plain itself seemed covered with people of both sexes, and of all ages, ranks, and conditions in life. Every one of this immense multitude was busy, and many among them seemed as though they might be happy. The steep inclination of the plain gave a pleasant and strong downward tendency to those who came upon it, so that at every step the multitude in general were insensibly verging towards the bank of the river. The consequence was, that while only a few attempted to get from the plain by means of the passage on the upper side of it, thousands were crowding to the bridge, and vainly thinking to pass over it in safety. I saw them enter upon it and rush gaily along, flattering themselves that there was no danger, and that soon they should be beyond the deep waters, till presently, they entered the mist, and were hidden from the eyes of those who followed, when they dropped one after another into the stream, and sunk in its dark flood to rise no more. I continued looking at this shocking spectacle, till my heart was full—ready to burst—and in the effort to cry out to the deluded throng who were just entering upon the bridge, or were about to enter, Stop! Stop! Stop! I awoke—and it was a dream.

'But though it was a dream, the impression it made upon my heart was indelible. I have never lost it, and I never shall. The vision, I saw at once, was full of meaning. The plain is the world. The bridge is the broad road spoken of by the Saviour. The path up the bank represents the strait and narrow way which leadeth unto life. And seeing as I constantly do, thousands and thousands of my fellow creatures, jostling down the steep, pressing towards the bridge, crowding upon it, heedlessly thinking it will carry them safely over, and not dreaming of danger, till they make their last plunge, and are gone forever; seeing all this continually passing before my eyes, how can I hold my peace! How can I cease to cry in the eyes of deluded mortals around me,

Stop, poor sinner, stop and think,
Before you further go!

'I am blamed, and have been, for saying and doing so much on the subject of religion. But I blame myself for not doing a great deal more. The vision, though years have now passed away since first I saw it, is still before me. The feelings which I then had, are fresh upon me. And while these remain, I can never cease to warn the wicked of his way, to tell him of the impassable bridge and the devouring flood, and to point him upward to the path of life.'—Spirit of the Pilgrims.

VISIT TO THE CAPTURED MISSION HOUSE.

The Rev. John Thompson, Missionary of the American Board, has addressed to the Editor of the Charleston Observer a letter in answer to the accusations of Gov. Gilmer. We copy one passage, that the friends of Missions may see what use is made of Missionary property by the authorities of Georgia. Threats are made, we understand, that the other stations will be taken possession of in the same way.—Bost. Rec.

Recently I have visited the mission station which I have been compelled to leave for the present on account of the proceedings of Georgia. * I found the mission house occupied by a number of the Guard. A Cherokee family which I had placed there to take care of the furniture and other property at the station, fled at their approach. The doors of a room in which the furniture and other property had been left, and which was carefully nailed and bolted, were opened and the furniture removed to an upper apartment. To this any one had access, for when I arrived the door was not fastened.

The last spring, expecting to board and school fifteen or twenty Cherokee children during the year, I planted a small field of corn. Much of the labor in preparing the ground, and depositing the seed, was performed with my own hands. Some vegetables had been raised, and also a small quantity of potatoes. When I arrived at the station, the corn had been destroyed by the Guard. The place where I left potatoes had been sown with turnip-seed. Their horses were permitted to range at pleasure, not only in the cornfield, but in the garden, and among the fruit trees.

It will not be forgotten that the Mission house was erected, and the improvements on the Mission premises made, under the direction I labor; and for the express purpose of enabling those who had the charge of them to exert their influence to civilize and evangelize the Indians. But enter that mission house now, and instead of those who have been there for the sake of disseminating the mild maxims of the Gospel, you shall behold the soldier in habiliments of war. Instead of the voice of prayer and praise, you shall hear the music of the violin! Instead of a circle of young immortal beings, listening to instruction you shall find their places occupied with the ensigns of death. In view of this appaling picture I would ask, whether buildings erected, with the funds of the benevolent, to furnish means for imparting to the Indians the rudiments of knowledge, the arts of civilized life, and principles of Christianity, shall be forcibly entered by a band of soldiers, and by them converted into camps? Shall the avails of a Missionary's labor, designed to support his family and a few Cherokee children, be seized in open day, and be consumed as rations for troops, and forage for their horses! Shall the apartments of a Mission house secured by nails and bolts, be broken open, and the property within removed and deranged to suit their convenience?

I submit the decision of these inquiries to the friends of liberty, justice and humanity, in our country. If I mistake not, they are novel transactions, and will hereafter be viewed as such, when seen on the page of future history, which records the splendor of American Freedom!

From the Mass. Journal.

INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

It is a singular fact that we republicans are abundantly more exclusive in our feelings in some respects than our monarchical neighbors. In England it is common to see respectable and genteel people open their doors when a black stranger enters the carriage and at hotels, more often than not, a degree of attention is paid to a traveller of the same table. We have heard a well-authenticated anecdote, which illustrates the different state of feeling in two countries on this subject. A wealthy American citizen was residing in London for a season, at which time the famous Mr. Perrez Saunders was there. The London breakfast hour is very late, and prince Saunders happened to call on the American while his family were taking their morning repast. Politeness and native good feeling prompted the lady to ask her guest to take a cup of coffee; but then, the prejudices of society—how could she get over them! True, he was a gentleman in character and dress—for so he had the right to be, and how could it be set at the same table with one? If his character had been as black as hell, the difficulty might have been overcome; however rebuke after rebuke that his skin in the black it was a topic out of the question.

So the lady signed her coffee, and Prince Saunders sat at the window, occasionally speaking in reply to conversation addressed him. At last all retired from the breakfast table; and then the lady, with an air of sudden recollection, said, 'I forgot to ask if you had breakfasted, Mr. Saunders; won't you allow me to give you a cup of coffee?' 'I thank you, madam,' he replied, with a dignified bow, 'I am engaged to breakfast with the Prince Regent this morning.'

ANECDOTE.

The owner of an extensive manufacturing establishment adjacent to our city, has just related to us the following circumstances respecting his laborers.

"A short time since, they employed 11 coopers and found those hardly sufficient for their supply and their work was often carelessly and shabbily done. A few days since the gang were all discharged save one or two, and others employed who drank no rum or whiskey; and now the same amount of work is done by six men, and done better, and in a more orderly shop, and to the entire satisfaction of their employers. So much for temperance mechanics."

"The help of Whiskey."—'Ah, sure you couldn't find it in your heart to be so cruel,' said a man to his neighbor, who was threatning a terrible vengeance on one who had injured him.—'Yes, but I could,' he replied, 'with the help of whiskey.'—Prof. Edgar.

Power of Appetite.—'Ah!' said a little boy to his father, 'don't sell that blanket—it is the last; and you have taken it off my dying mother.' 'I will sell it' he replied with the fierceness of a fiend; 'and I would sell you too, if I could get for you the price of a glass!'—Ib.

Another fire at Constantinople.—Accounts have been received of another dreadful fire at Constantinople at the end of the last month, (August,) no doubt the work of incendiaries. The Royal Arsenal has been set fire to, but the fire was extinguished. The great destruction is at Galata, where the valuable English warehouses are, and it is stated above 1,000 of those valuable buildings have been consumed; the property destroyed is immense. The losses caused by the late conflagration of Pera, have been ascertained to amount to about £6,000,000.

PENNIES.

Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool, recently narrated the following anecdote of a Welsh Preacher:

"When I look at the lists of contributions, I generally find that your large sums are raised for the small contributions of the poor; never let that part of your system be overlooked. In Liverpool we have many Welsh Preachers; and at one of our Missionary meetings, we had a Welsh preacher present. For the sake of these Welsh people, we thought we would get him to say a few words to them; for there is such an expression in their countenances, such animation, such intonations, that though you may not understand one word they say, you cannot help feeling. He stood up and addressed them, and what he said, produced such a powerful effect, that we had the curiosity to ask him what it was that he said to them. "O, I talked to them about the pennies." "The pennies! and what did you say to them about the pennies?" "Why," he said, "I told them, some of you say, we cannot give more than a penney a week, and what good will a penny a do! As I came over the hills in my way to Liverpool, I saw a little rill; and I said, "rill, where are you going?" "O, I am going down to the larger stream!" "Stream where are you gliding!" "O, I am gliding to the large river Mersey." "Mersey, where are you going!" "O, I am going down to Liverpool." "And what will you do at Liverpool?" "O, I shall take the ships out of the docks at Liverpool, and carry them out to sea, and there I shall toss them about like a feather, and carry them away to a distant country: and then, by and by, I shall bring them back again laden with the produce of other lands."—And so I say, "pennies where are you going!" "O we are going to the Missionary Association." "And shillings where are you going!" "O we are going to the Missionary." "And sovereigns where are you going!" "O we are going to the Auxiliary Missionary Society; and when we get there we shall go to London." "And when you get to London, what will you do!" "O we shall take out Missionaries and Bibles, and carry them away to the utmost ends of the earth."

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by Erastus W. Paddock to Henry Churchill, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber of Mortgages at page 281 on the 15th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 15th day of June. The first publication of this notice the amount due thereon and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit:—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Pittsford in the fourth range of township [illegible] in the Phelps and Gorham purchase, bounded and described as follows viz—Beginning at the south east corner of lot number thirteen, before the first division, in the [illegible] of the State of New York viz—Thence north on the line between lots thirteen and fourteen, one hundred and sixty rods to the south east corner of the north west quarter of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence west on the south line of the north west quarter of lot number thirteen aforesaid, one hundred and sixty rods to the west line of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence south on the west line of lot number thirteen aforesaid, one hundred and sixty rods to the south west corner of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence east on the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid, one hundred and sixty rods to the place of beginning, containing one hundred acres of land, be the same more or less, except and reserving a certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Pittsford aforesaid, and being a part of lot number thirteen aforesaid, bounded as follows, viz—Beginning at the south east corner of the above described piece of land, and running thence north on the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the north east corner thereof; thence west on the north line thereof, forty rods; thence south on a line parallel with the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence east on the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid, forty rods to the place of beginning, containing forty acres of land, be the same more or less, which said premises were conveyed to said Erastus W. Paddock by Henry Churchill by deed bearing date the 15th day of November 1828, and recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber of Deeds at page 348, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear. And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Pittsford, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number four, and is one hundred rods square, in the fourth range of townships and is bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east and west lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, so as to contain fifty acres, and bounded on the south by lands of Roger Sherwood, and on the east by lands of Ebenezer Allen, and on the west by lands of Asahel Allen, all in the county of Monroe and state of New York, which will be sold at public sale at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April, 1832, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided dated the first day of May, 1826.

ASHBEL W. RILEY, Mortgagee.
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty-first day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, executed by Ebenezer Allen to Jesse Hyndshaw, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber of Mortgages at page 282 on the 15th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 15th day of June. The first publication of this notice the amount due thereon and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit:—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Pittsford in the fourth range of township [illegible] in the Phelps and Gorham purchase, bounded and described as follows viz—Beginning at the south east corner of the above described piece of land, and running thence north on the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the north east corner thereof; thence west on the north line thereof, forty rods; thence south on a line parallel with the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence east on the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid, forty rods to the place of beginning, containing forty acres of land, be the same more or less, which said premises were conveyed to said Ebenezer Allen by Henry Churchill by deed bearing date the 15th day of November 1828, and recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber of Deeds at page 348, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear. And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Pittsford, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number four, and is one hundred rods square, in the fourth range of townships and is bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east and west lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, so as to contain fifty acres, and bounded on the south by lands of Roger Sherwood, and on the east by lands of Ebenezer Allen, and on the west by lands of Asahel Allen, all in the county of Monroe and state of New York, which will be sold at public sale at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April, 1832, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided dated the first day of May, 1826.

ASHBEL W. RILEY, Mortgagee.
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

[illegible] V. A. S. MATHEWS, Solicitor.

[illegible] Rochester, June 8th 1831. 47tf

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by William C. Thomas to Asahel Hubbell, and assigned to Aristarchus Champion, dated the ninth day of April 1827, recorded in Monroe county Register's office in Liber 4 of Mortgages, page 252, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice Two Thousand One Hundred and forty eight dollars and twenty five cents.—NOTICE is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage the mortgaged premises, viz. "All the Mills, Mill dams and lands and appurtenances in Rochester, Monroe County, bounded as follows, viz. [illegible] Buck's lot, south by E. F. Parsons' [illegible] Brooks' lot, south by Brooks' lot, west by Frederick Starr's, and east by Colvin's lot, containing [illegible] of an acre of land," will be sold at public vendue at the Court House, in Rochester, Monroe County, on the [illegible] of May next, at [illegible] noon of that day. Dated November 10, 1831. ARISTARCHUS CHAMPION.
S. MATHEWS, Att'y 47 2 6w

CHANCERY—Joseph Strong vs. Silas Dimmick } On motion of a Solicitor of the Court of Chancery it is ordered that the above entitled cause [illegible] the 7th day of Sept. 1831, [illegible] appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill of complaint filed in this cause within three months from the date of this order, or in default thereof the said bill will be taken pro confesso. And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the Rochester Republican, a newspaper printed in the city of Rochester, for three successive weeks, or that the complainant cause a notice of the substance of this order to be published in the said newspaper for three successive weeks, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said defendant at least twenty days before the first day of the next term of this court, which will be held at the Capitol in the city of Albany, on the first Tuesday of January next, or in default thereof the said bill will be taken pro confesso.

By the Court, [illegible] Register.
Albany, Sept. 7th, 1831. 6w 38

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by Ebenezer Allen to Jesse Hyndshaw, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the county of Monroe in Liber of Mortgages at page 282 on the 15th day of November 1828, and is claimed to be due thereon on the 15th day of June. The first publication of this notice the amount due thereon and twenty-three dollars and eighty-eight cents.—Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in the said indenture of Mortgage and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgaged premises, to wit:—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Pittsford in the fourth range of township [illegible] in the Phelps and Gorham purchase, bounded and described as follows viz—Beginning at the south east corner of the above described piece of land, and running thence north on the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the north east corner thereof; thence west on the north line thereof, forty rods; thence south on a line parallel with the east line thereof, one hundred and sixty rods to the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid; thence east on the south line of lot number thirteen aforesaid, forty rods to the place of beginning, containing forty acres of land, be the same more or less, which said premises were conveyed to said Ebenezer Allen by Henry Churchill by deed bearing date the 15th day of November 1828, and recorded in the Monroe county clerk's office in Liber of Deeds at page 348, reference being had to said deed will more fully appear. And also all that equal undivided half of fifty acres of land situate in Pittsford, county of Monroe and state of New York being the east part of the south division of lot number four, and is one hundred rods square, in the fourth range of townships and is bounded as follows, viz.—North and south by the east and west lines of said division and west by a line to be run parallel to the west line of said division, so as to contain fifty acres, and bounded on the south by lands of Roger Sherwood, and on the east by lands of Ebenezer Allen, and on the west by lands of Asahel Allen, all in the county of Monroe and state of New York, which will be sold at public sale at the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the second day of April, 1832, at twelve o'clock at noon of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided dated the first day of May, 1826.

ASHBEL W. RILEY, Mortgagee.
S. MATHEWS, Att'y. Mortgagee and Assignee.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by William C. Thomas to Asahel Hubbell, and assigned to Aristarchus Champion, dated the ninth day of April 1827, recorded in Monroe county Register's office in Liber 4 of Mortgages, page 252, and on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice Two Thousand One Hundred and forty eight dollars and twenty five cents.—NOTICE is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage the mortgaged premises, viz. "All the Mills, Mill dams and lands and appurtenances in Rochester, Monroe County, bounded as follows, viz. [illegible] Buck's lot, south by E. F. Parsons' [illegible] Brooks' lot, south by Brooks' lot, west by Frederick Starr's, and east by Colvin's lot, containing [illegible] of an acre of land," will be sold at public vendue at the Court House, in Rochester, Monroe County, on the [illegible] of May next, at [illegible] noon of that day. Dated November 10, 1831. ARISTARCHUS CHAMPION.
S. MATHEWS, Att'y 47 2 6w

CHANCERY—Joseph Strong vs. Silas Dimmick } On motion of a Solicitor of the Court of Chancery it is ordered that the above entitled cause [illegible] the 7th day of Sept. 1831, [illegible] appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill of complaint filed in this cause within three months from the date of this order, or in default thereof the said bill will be taken pro confesso. And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the Rochester Republican, a newspaper printed in the city of Rochester, for three successive weeks, or that the complainant cause a notice of the substance of this order to be published in the said newspaper for three successive weeks, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said defendant at least twenty days before the first day of the next term of this court, which will be held at the Capitol in the city of Albany, on the first Tuesday of January next, or in default thereof the said bill will be taken pro confesso.

By the Court, [illegible] Register.
Albany, Sept. 7th, 1831. 6w 38

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 7, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 50

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.
Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3.00. In advance, $2.50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2.00.
To Daze Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. VII.

Excuses for not uniting with a Temp. Soc.
I belong to a Church which by its discipline is a Temperance Society.

Every Church, if built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, requires its members to be temperate. But few very few require total abstinence. Temperance societies require a pledge of total abstinence, as a condition of membership; and unless the rules of a church do this, that church is not a temperance society, as the words are now used. No church, but that of the Friends, or Quakers, enjoins total abstinence; at least so far as I am acquainted.—And no other church that I know of, makes any mention of ardent spirit in its rules, except the Methodist. In the Discipline of that church, the subject is mentioned it is true, but not in such a way as to bind its members to total abstinence, which is necessary to constitute it a T. society. The following quotations from the Book of Discipline will, I believe, exhibit all that is said in it upon the subject.

"No preacher among us, shall distil or vend spirituous liquors without forfeiting his official standing." 20 Ed. 72 page.

At page 78—same Ed. the members of the class agree to abstain from "Drunkeness—or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of necessity."

Page 87, 20th Ed. those who form themselves into a band society, agree "to taste no spirituous liquor or dram of any kind, unless prescribed by a physician."

The first quotation certainly does not form the church into a T. society. A man who should profess to be a minister of the gospel, and yet make or vend ardent spirit, would look very much like a wolf in sheep's clothing, and ought to forfeit his official standing. But this is not a temperance society and nothing like it. The second quotation is from the rules concerning classes, and is all that a person wishing to join a class is required to promise in regard to the use of ardent spirit. And every church, ever since ardent spirit first came into general use, has expected as much of its members. A church member who should use ardent spirit unnecessarily, ought to forfeit his church standing, and be numbered with the tipplers. Every man is by this rule left to his own judgment as to the necessity of his using it; and past experience proves to us that most of those who have made this promise, thought ardent spirit necessary, as often as members of other churches who had not made the promise. It was by acting upon this very principle—necessity, that so much unnecessary use of ardent spirit, found its way into our churches and our country. And if our T. societies were formed upon this principle, we should hear no objections made to uniting. Every man might unite, and drink on—he only used it in cases of necessity. And according to this rule, no man can be censured, even if he get a little tipsy now and then; for he only uses what is necessary, and when he made the promise, he did not make other men judges of his necessity—he is to be the judge, and not his brethren. But T. societies act entirely upon a different principle. They require total abstinence, except in sickness. 'The giving of this pledge, and not that of necessity, makes a person a member. True, some persons abuse even this pledge, but hypocrites will always do so—they are whited sepulchres. But still the principle of the society remains the same.

When the rule under consideration was formed, ardent spirit was supposed to be necessary in warm weather and in cold weather, in the storm and in the sunshine, in the house and by the way; when laboring and when idle; when sick and when well; before meals and after meals; when in company and when alone; in the morning, at noon and in the evening; it prevented disease, & cured disease; in short it was the universal catholicon—the elixr of life—the general friend. But times have since greatly changed. The elixr—the acqua vitæ is now found to be a deadly poison—a universal destroyer; and for their own safety and the safety of others, men pledge themselves to total abstinence.

CHAS. YALE,
Agt. N. Y. S. T. S.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—The Sermon lately delivered in this village by Rev. Mr Wisner, in which was shown the absurdity (but to my wickedness) of Christians' being engaged in the traffic of ardent spirits, forcibly reminds me of an incident in Massachusetts. A man of my acquaintance aged about thirty, had been for years more or less addicted to intemperance. He commenced life with a fair prospect of enjoying the common share of happiness which falls to the lot of mortals. Situated in the delightful valley of the Housatonoc, he owned one of the most pleasant situations that man could wish. He early settled in life and at this time was the father of four sons. Naturally mild, affable and courteous, he was esteemed and beloved by all that knew him. But he began by sipping a little until the habit was fastened on him and as this habit increased he became hasty, petulant and irritable, and the Demon Discord reigned triumphant, where there should have been nought but peace and love. He was seized with a dangerous disorder which sometime threatened his life. At length he recovered and it is believed formed a solemn resolution to drink no more. And to this resolution he adhered for months.

Business called him to town and on his return passing a store kept by not merely a professor of religion, but a preacher of the gospel, this messenger of grace to guilty men, called to him and expressed a great deal of gratitude and thankfulness that he had recovered from his sickness. Come, says the preacher, "won't you drink something—it will do you good, your blood is thin and low and wants raising." He at first declined. But a little urging induced him to taste, and all his good resolutions vanished into air. They were scattered to the four winds of heaven. The writer of this article was in the family of this individual when this poor fallen man returned to his house. The poor man under the influence of liquor, thought this preacher the best friend he ever had. But who can describe the feelings of his wife. Oh! said she, how could that man offer my husband ardent spirits—how could he for the sake of getting him into the store to trade a little whereby he could gain a few cents dash all my earthly prospects to the ground. Oh! it is murder and that of the most cruel kind, thus to furnish him with the means of destroying his health, his reason and his soul forever. Fondly had I hoped to have passed the rest of my life with the husband of my choice in peace and happiness. O! My sons I had hoped that your father would have assisted me in training your minds to knowledge and virtue. Oh! I could wish that there was some law to punish that man for selling liquor. Oh! could almost bear to see him executed. And thus she continued to rave until she found relief in a flood of tears. This was more than thirty years since, and this husband yet lives—but he is the mere wreck of a man—a walking skeleton—his bloated nose of crimson hue—his cheeks cadaverous and pale—his trembling knees scarce support his tottering frame, which to all human appearance is but a short distance from the grave.

B.

Brighton, Nov. 30, 1831.

For the Observer.

Mr. Chipman:—As your place is in the "Observatory" and as the "Big horn" is always within your reach, I suppose it to be your duty to sound every alarm that reaches your ear, knowing also your readiness to comply with the requests of your correspondents on the subject of Temperance; I feel little or no hesitation in communicating the following ideas with the suggestion that you ought to sound them so loudly that "he that hath an ear, should hear."

I sat last Sabbath and listened to a very interesting discourse at one of the churches in this village on the subject of Temperance, and felt alarmed and mortified, and astonished when I heard the minister make the assertion "That the temperance cause in this community was receding." At first I thought the holy man was mistaken, and cast about in my own mind to see if these things were so. After candidly looking at the subject I found the position was tenable, that the man was correct, and I say again you ought to sound the alarm till it waxes louder and louder.

Do you ask what evidence I have to convince me of the fact, I answer,

1. There is much more ardent spirits sold here now than there was three or six months ago.

2. For the last three months I believe I have seen three swollen, bloated, reeling, loathsome, drunken beings, where I saw one six months or a year ago.

3. Six or nine months since we had a temperance house in our village. But I understand (and it should crimson our cheeks with shame) that the public would not support it.

4. I am informed that one of the overseers of the poor in this town says "there is an average of a death a day in this community by intemperance." That the prevailing Influenza is carrying one of our fellow men to a drunkard's grave, and a drunkard's Hell, every day. I wish you could sound this fact in the ears of the living, and I am persuaded sir the same remark will hold good in other parts of our country.

Six months since I went from this place to Philadelphia, and from thence to New York, thence to Connecticut, thence to this place, in our public conveyances, Canal boats, Steamboats, and Stages, and public houses, and I did not in the whole route witness as much drinking and profane swearing, (they associate together almost invariably) as I did witness at the county seat of a neighboring county where I was providentially detained for about 33 hours a few weeks since. I would avoid personality and yet I can hardly forbear saying that there was a meeting of a temperance Society noticed there at which I was given to understand there were to be addresses &c. I attended a few moments, and from that meeting I repaired to the Hotel, where I put up, and I am satisfied there was in the Bar-room of the Hotel 2 men (and men too of character and intelligence) where there was one man in the temperance meeting.

Add to these the increase of murdered wives by drunken husbands, the 4th of which you published last week and the necessity of awaking again to this subject will appear most urgent.

H. B.

For the Observer.

TRACTS.

That the Monthly Distribution might not be suspended while the canal is closed, I have procured from New York 10,000 each of the following useful Tracts.

No.	18,	Family Worship,	pages 16.
"	119,	Strange Thing,	" 16.
"	177,	Institution and observance of the Sabbath,	" 20.
"	179,	Way to be Saved,	" 16.
"	208,	Worth of a Dollar,	" 4.
"	241,	On the hope of Future Repentance,	" 4.

If the Societies who are receiving Tracts of me will now take their 6 months supply and pay for them, and if the remainder of them could be disposed of to other towns, I could settle with the Parent Society and could labor in the mean time in the five western counties to secure a donation offered by an individual of one half of their supply for 6 months on condition that they will raise the other half.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand Tracts have been ordered for those counties, and the business requires immediate attention. It is hoped that ministers and members of churches will on perceiving the objects to be obtained, see that the Tracts for their place are taken and paid for, so that it may not be necessary for me to call upon them.

The 6 kinds of Tracts are now put up in boxes or bundles for several towns and ready for delivery. A few other Tracts can be obtained at my residence.

WARREN DAY.
Geneva, Nov. 30, 1831.

LOSS OF THE S. BOAT CUMBERLAND.

Mr. Reuben Coffin of this city, arrived here yesterday on board the New-Jersey, from Louisville, to which place he came on board the Farmer, from New-Orleans. Mr. Coffin furnishes us with the following interesting intelligence:—About the beginning of this month, the steamboat Cumberland, bound up the Mississippi, with between three and four hundred emigrants, ran into the bank in a fog, when she let go her anchor; which not holding, she drifted on a reef of rocks, where she broke in two, and her boilers slipped out of their beds overboard; at the same time the steam pipe bursting, the captain's wife and daughter were scalded, but not fatally. Before the boat sunk, she drifted six or eight miles down the river, which afforded an opportunity to the passengers to save themselves, with the exception of "from five to nine," who were drowned. Account varied as to the exact number.—Cin. Daily Ada. Nov. 12

From the Albany Argus.

LEGISLATURE OF NEW-YORK-1832

The following is a full list of the members of the next legislature. The senators given in italic are new members. Those designated in the same manner in the assembly, are members of the present house.

SENATE.

First district—Stephen Allen, Alpheus Sherman, Jonathan S. Conklin, Herman B. Cropsey.

Second district—Samuel Sexford, Nathaniel P. Tallmadge, David M. Wescott, Allen Macdonald.

Third district—Lewis Eaton, William Dietz, Herman I. Quackenboss, John W. Edmonds.

Fourth district—John M'Lean, jr. Isaac Gere, Wm. I. Dodge, Josiah Fisk.

Fifth district—Wm. H. Maynard, Alvin Bronson, Henry A. Foster, Robert Lansing.

Sixth District—John F. Hubbard, Levi Beardsley, Charles W. Lynde, John G. Meddaugh.

Seventh District—Hiram F. Mather, Thomas Armstrong, William H. Seward, John H. Halsey.

Eighth District—Albert H. Tracy, Philo C. Fuller, Trumbull Cary, John Birdsall.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Albany—William Seymour, Philip Lennebecker, Abijah C Distrow.
Allegany—John B. Collins.
Broome—Vincent Whitney.
Cattaraugus—George A. S. Crooker.
Cayuga—George S. Telford, John Sawyer, John Beardsley, George H. Brinkerhoff.
Chautauque—Squire White, Theron Bly.
Chenango—Edmond G. Per Lee, Joseph Julland, Noah Ely.
Clinton—John Walker.
Columbia—Tobias L. Hogeboom, Medad Butler, Leonard W. Ten Broeck.
Cortland—Andrew Dickson, Jonathan L. Wood.
Delaware—James Houghton, James Coulter.
Duchess—Robert Coffin, Michael S. Martin, Israel Shaubolt, Eli Hamlin.
Erie—William Mills, Horace Clark.
Essex—Isaac Vanderwaker.
Franklin—James B. Spencer.
Genesee—Seth M. Gates, Jas. Sprague, 2d, Henry Hawkins.
Greene—Erastus Hamilton, Dum Tuttle.
Herkimer—Wm C. Crai, Daniel Dygert, David Thorp.
Jefferson—Wm. H. Angel, Philip Maxwell, Nathan Strong.
Kings—Geo. S. Downing.
Lewis—Andrew P. Doig.
Madison—Daniel M. Gilbert, John Head, Nehemiah Batchelor.
Livingston—John Young, George W. Patterson.
Monroe—Samuel G. Andrews, Wm. B. Brown, Ira Bellows.
Montgomery—Peter Wood, Silas Phelps, Jacob Van Arnam.
New-York—Charles L. Livingston, Isaac L. Varian, Mordecia Myers, James Morgan, Silas M. Stilwell, Gideon Ostrander, John M'Keon, Judah Hammond, Nathan S. Arnold, Myndert Van Schaick, Philip E. Milledoler.
Niagara.—Henry Norton.
Oneida—David Moulton, Daniel Twichell, Rutger B. Miller, Lemuel Hough, Nathaniel Fitch.
Onondaga—Elisha Litchfield, Miles W. Bennett, Elijah W. Curtis, Ichabod Ross.
Ontario—Francis Granger, Robert C. Nicholas, Jonathan Mason.
Orange—Isaac R. Van Duzer, Charles Winfield, John Barker.
Orleans—Wm. J. Babbitt.
Oswego—Avery Skinner.
Otsego—Samuel Colwell, Amasa Thompson, Wm. Kirby, Gilbert Cone.
Putnam—Reuben D. Barnum.
Queens—John A. King.
Rensselaer—John C. Kemble, Nicholas M. Masters. Hosea Bennett, Henry J. Genet.
Richmond—Mr. Mersereau.
Rockland—Mr. Blauvelt.
Saratoga—Oran G. Otis, James Brisban, jr. Ebenezer Couch.
Schenectady—Abraham Dorn.
Scholarie—Alexander Crookshank, Jedediah Miller.
Seneca—Erastus Woodworth, Reuben D. Dodge.
St. Lawrence—William Allen, Edwin Dodge.
Steuben—Edward Howell, John McBurney.
Suffolk—John M. Williamson, Samuel L'Hommedieu.
Sullivan—Hiram Bennett.
Tioga—Joel Talmadge, jr., Nathaniel Smith.
Tompkins—John L. Speed jr., Horace Mack, John Ellis.
Ulster—Leonard Hardenburgh, Heman Landon.
Warren—Allen R. Anderson.
Westchester—John W. Frost, Thomas Smith, Israel H. Watson.
Wayne—James Humeston, Ambrose Salisbury.
Washington—Isaac W. Bishop, John Mc Donald, James Stevenson.
Yates—Aaron Remer.

From the Jour. of Commerce.

Some one was asking not long ago what the word Rum was derived from, and got for an answer, that it was only the first syllable of M-U-R-der transposed. This derivation is proved by facts within the knowledge of every one in this city. Within two months, three men have murdered their wives under the influence of this infernal spirit; a fourth is now in prison charged with the same offence; and numerous assaults tending the same way have been committed. It thus appears that there is a wonderful affinity between, rum and murder.

By the late census the population of Scotland is 2,365,700, being an increase since 1821 of 272,244.

The project of dividing Virginia seems to be seriously agitated in the Western section of the State. A writer in the Rockbridge Intelligencer avers that there is not a single advantage derived from the connexion between the Eastern and Western sections, and thinks it is only necessary for the western division to ask a separation, in order to obtain the consent of the State, and of the General Government.—Jour. Com.

From the Episcopal Recordsf.

DUTY OF RESTITUTION.

Among the money collected from a congregation in one of our southern churches, a short time since, there was found a note (enclosing $2 70) to the following effect:—"About twelve years since I covetously withheld two dollars from a colored woman; (the praise of nice dealing prompted me to this sin.) She is dead, and having left no heirs, I can think of no better way to make restitution than by bestowing it, with interest, to the African Colonization Society."

We have, during the present year, heard of many instances of restitution similar to this, but where there is one such, there is no doubt a hundred in which the duty is neglected. And where an individual is reaping the fruits of sin, and adhering with a firm grasp to possessions which without sin he could not have obtained, he evinces a willingness to tread the same path over again, if his present situation of ease and enjoyment could be reached in no other way. In such a case there is no repentance, and no reconciliation with God. The individual is hoarding up forbidden treasure, which will eat as a canker through all his enjoyments. It will prove, like the gold of Achan, an "accursed thing;" corroding and destroying all the blessings of life, and will at last array against its unhappy possessor, the wrath of an offended God.

The offence acknowledged in this instance, is, we fear, one of common occurrence. Look at the developements which have been made with respect to the wages of the poor in this city by a philanthropic individual, and we need no further evidence there are still "those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from him right." (Mal. iii. 5.) It is, in a greater or less degree, the same case, in most, if not all, of our cities and towns. We cannot enter into details at present,* but it is certain that multitudes of poor women, with large families dependent on them for support, are obliged to labor from early dawn, and entrench upon the hours of rest, for a poor pittance, scarcely sufficient to obtain the indispensable necessaries of life. And if sickness come, famine and cold press along with it into their wretched dwellings, and often bring their inmates to the verge of the grave before their situation is known to the visiters of "the widow and fatherless in their distress."—They can lay up nothing for an evil day, and when it comes, it is perpetuated by the indigence and suffering upon which it is engrafted. This is no imaginary picture. We could bring forth from the sad records of the last inclement winter, many scenes of suffering in real life, which language could scarcely exaggerate. And much do we fear, that such scenes will be every year renewed, until justice, as well as charity, shall prevail with those who have it in their power to regulate the wages of the poor.

*We have heard of twelve and a half cents being paid for a day's work, and believe that the average price is not much above this sum. On this point, we shall make some particular statements hereafter.

From the New-York Observer.

INTERESTING ORDINATION SCENE.

A gentleman at New Preston, Conn. in a letter to the Editors of this paper says: "On the 16th inst. the Rev. Robert B. Canfield, was ordained Pastor of the church and society in this place. His father, by marriage, the Rev. Mr. Perkins, of Amherst, Mass. delivered the sermon, a solid and impressive performance, and the venerable Dr. Perkins of West-Hartford, made the ordaining prayer. That three generations were thus concerned in the ceremonies, you will readily imagine, gave them a lively interest. It was indeed a new scene. Few could have been entirely unmoved when that veteran in Christ lifted his hand to consecrate one of his third generation to the service of God. He is now, as I understand, in his eighty fourth year, and in the sixty second of his ministry at West-Hartford. He still preaches regularly on the Sabbath, and very frequently in the evening, in different parts of his parish. Not a single person who was a member of his church at the time of his settlement is now living. The old leaves are all fallen from their trunk; it is still putting forth, however, a new and fresher foliage."

CHANCELLOR KENT'S OPINION OF JUDGE CLAYTON'S DECISION.

About a year since as our readers will remember, the Legislature of Georgia passed a law forbidding the digging of gold in the Cherokee country by all persons, Cherokees as well as others. Under this law a Cherokee was lately arrested and brought before Judge Clayton for trial. Judge C. with an honesty and independence which do him credit, ordered the prisoner to be released, on the ground that the law is unconstitutional, being plainly an infringement of the rights of the Indians. This decision gave great offence to Governor Gilmer and his friends, and as they have the majority in the Legislature, they have chosen to manifest their displeasure by refusing to re-elect Judge C. to office. In vindication of himself and of his decision Judge C. has published in the Milledgeville Journal the following letter from Chancellor Kent. It is to be hoped that when the Georgians find men so eminently learned as Chancellor Kent, and so much disposed to judge them favorably, pronouncing their conduct towards the Indians "hurtful to the credit of free and popular governments, and the moral character of our country, and in direct violation of the constitutional authority of the U. States" they will be induced to reconsider what they have done, and erase the offensive acts from their statute book.—N. Y. Obs.

Milledgeville, Nov. 12th, 1831.

Messrs. Editors,—You will confer a favor by publishing the following letter of Chancellor Kent. In making this request, I have only to remark, that the sole consideration for making it is, to submit the testimony of one, in favor of my legal reputation whose character as a jurist will entitle his evidence to great weight. He is justly considered the Blackstone of America, and his character as a lawyer stands as high in Europe as it does in his own country. He has never been engaged in either party or political strifes and his whole life has been devoted to legal research. This publication is asked under not the slightest temper of complaint for my late removal from office, for I hope I shall have it in my power, at a more convenient season, to lay before my fellow citizens, such a statement of the whole matter, as will show there is no necessity, on my part, for either ill-will or reproach.

Yours, &c. A. S. CLAYTON.

New-York, Oct. 13th, 1831.

Dear Sir,—I was favored yesterday with your letter of the 3d inst. together with the Southern Recorder of Sept. 29th, containing your opinion in the case of the State of Georgia vs. Canatoo.

That opinion has been read by me with great care and and attention, and agreeably to your request, I subjoin the conclusions to which my own mind has arrived, in answer to the two material points in the case.

I. It appears to me that upon the whole, the statute applies to the case. I can only judge from the extracts from it contained in your opinion. The statute asserts that the mines alluded to, are of right the property of Georgia, and it authorizes the Governor to take possession of those mines, and to employ force to protect them from all further trespass. I presume such forcible possession has been taken, and that the offence alledged against the Cherokee Indian arose subsequently. But the statute is so exceptionable, in reference to the rights of the Cherokees to their lands, (and which include the mines therein, as well as the trees and herbage and stones thereon,) under the existing treaties with them, and in reference to the constitution and constitutional authority of the United States, that I agree with you, that such a statute should receive an interpretation, if possible, favorable to the constitutional and treaty rights. If such a statute does not apply in very terms, to the very case of a Cherokee Indian digging in the mines, the benign intendment would be that the Legislature did not intend it, because such an intention would contravene the clear rights of the Cherokees, to the undisturbed use and enjoyment of the lands within their territory, secured to them by treaty.

2. But the better way is not to rest upon any such construction, but to go at once, as you have done, to the great and grave question, which assumes the stature to have intended to deprive the Cherokees without their consent and without purchase, of the use and enjoyment, in parts at least, of their lands secured to them by national treaties, and which calls into discussion the constitutional validity of the Statute.

On this point I am entirely with you, and in my opinion your argument is sound& conclusive, and you have examined the subject with candor and accuracy, and with the freedom of judgment which your station and character dictate.

I am most entirely persuaded, that the Cherokee title to the sole use and undisturbed enjoyment of their mines, is as entire and perfect as to any part of their lands, or as to any use of them whatever. The occupancy in perpetuity to them and their posterity, belongs to them of right, and the State of Georgia has no other right in respect to the Indian property in their lands, than the right of pre emption by fair purchase.

No other interest in the lands, as property, belongs to the State, and to take possession of the mines by force, is substituting violence for law and the obligations of treaty contract. It appears to be altogether without any foundation, to apply the common law doctrine of waste to the case, and I cannot but think that the Legislature of Georgia would not have passed the statue, if they had duly considered that the Indian lands, have never been claimed, or the occupancy of them, in the most free and absolute manner by the Indians, questioned, either by the royal Governments before the American Revolution, or by the Union, or by any State since, except in open wars, or except the claim was founded upon fair purchase from the Indians themselves. The proceeding of Georgia in this case is an anomaly, and I think it hurts the credit of free and popular governments, and the moral character of our country, and is in direct violation of the constitution of the United States, as manifested by treaties and by statute. I cannot think that the high spirited, free and noble race of men, who compose the citizens of Georgia, would be willing on re-consideration to do any such thing.

Yours, &c. JAMES KENT.

HON. A. S. CLAYTON.

MISSIONARY.

LETTERS FROM GREECE.

We have been favored with the following extracts of letters from Rev. J. J. Robertson, Episcopal missionary in Greece, to his friends in this city. It will be seen that in connexion with his associates, he is giving instruction to no less than 230 children in the city of Demosthenes and Pericles. From these and other means of diffusing information among that interesting people, the most auspicious results may be expected. Americans, for obvious reasons, have some peculiar facilities in gaining the confidence of the Greeks, and consequently of rendering themselves useful in any efforts undertaken for their benefit. The Episcopal missionaries in that country are men of the right spirit, and are followed, we trust, by the best wishes of the friends of learning and religion of every name. Mr. King, who is under the patronage of a different Society in this country, has also established himself at Athens, and is laboring with great zeal for the same general object, that of diffusing instruction, both literary and religious, among the Athenians and other portions of the Greek population.—Journ. Com.

ATHENS, May 21st, 1831.

I seize the opportunity of the arrival of three American gentlemen here, on their way to France, to write you a few lines. Their names are Allen, Oakley, and Ferguson; the two former of Duchess county, N. York; the latter from Natches, Mississippi. They have passed but a day or two here, to take a glance at the splendid remains of antiquity, on their return from a tour in Syria and Egypt.

We left our families in Tinos the 25th of April, upon our present excursion. Our object is to make arrangements for the removal of our whole establishment here as a permanent station. We are now in treaty for a piece of land, and are seeking a house for the temporary accommodation of our families. We have not far indeed to look, as there are not more than half a dozen at all tenantable for a respectable family, and these no respectable family would occupy in our own country. The whole city, in fact, is one heap of ruins; and the few thousand Greeks who have returned to claim their former possessions, are dwelling in wretched hovels, hastily put together. We have already a promising school under way, directed by ourselves and taught by a worthy Priest, and hope soon to commence another. Our printing presses arrived at Tinos in excellent order, together with Mr. Bingham, our Printer, whom we had left behind us at Malta. They are beautiful pieces of workmanship, and attract great curiosity.

Since we have been in Athens we have been favored with the company of another fellow-countryman, Mr. Richmond, whose brother is Rector of the Episcopal Church at Bloomingdale.

We hope you will not feel any anxiety in regard to us because we are about to take up our dwelling place amid these ruins. As desolate as it is, Athens is not without its attractions. I speak not now of its associations and monuments, which will hereafter draw multitudes of strangers to visit it. Its site is one of the finest I have ever seen. No where does nature present herself arrayed in greater charms. Mountain and plain, wood and water, diversify the prospect. The extensive and beautiful olive grove, of which a large part yet remains, is every where filled with rich and fertile gardens. And a fine, transparent atmosphere, almost constantly purified by cooling breezes, renders the situation one of the healthiest in Greece. We feel the mercy of our Heavenly Father in bringing us to so goodly a land,—and we doubt not that that protection which we have hitherto enjoyed, will still continue to be extended over us.

Athens we last fixed upon as the probable future location of our Mission, even before we left the United States. Its advantages are very great; particularly for the establishment of a press. There will probably, within five years, be a population here of twenty or thirty thousand souls; and there are numerous villages within a moderate distance. The constant passing of travellers will afford frequent opportunities for the distribution of our publications,—while the fixed inhabitants will afford an abundance of pupils for our schools.

There are a few respectable families here at present, and three European Consuls; those of Austria, Russia and Holland. We find them very friendly, and ready to serve us where they have the power. The Russian Consul estimates the present number of Greeks at 6000, and the Turks 300. The principal military Turkish officer we are well acquainted with, and sometimes hold long conversations with him in his orange garden, where, as at his house, we are always made welcome. He asked me a few days since, whether we had the Koran in English. I told him we had. He was much surprised, and wished to know whether I had read it. I told him yes. In what then, said he, consists the leading difference between the Koran and the Gospel. In the Koran, I answered, I found many excellent moral sentiments, but there was one thing in the Gospel, which it did not contain,—that "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." After meditating for some time, he replied, 'That does not bore through my head;' meaning that he did not understand it. He seemed to be very much in the same perplexity with Nicodemus of old.—When we took leave, he said, it is very right that you should try to persuade me of the truth of your sentiments, and that I should shew you the reasonableness of mine; but, if we cannot agree, we can at least love one another. He seems often overwhelmed with astonishment at the accounts we give him of the U. States.—Sometimes, when he hears of our political liberty, the equality of our citizens, the maintenance of good order without soldiers, he lifts up his hands and exclaims, "a miracle!"

ATHENS, Aug. 24, 1831.

An American Man-of-war, I am told, sails this night from the Piræus to Smyrna, and I hasten to write you a few lines. This suffering country, thro' the tyranny of its ruler, is filled with distractions. Civil war has brought the sound of the cannon within hearing of our port. The land is filled with spies—government troops every where commit depredations—letters with difficulty find a safe passage,—and to add to the troubles, the breaking out of the plague at Smyrna and Constantinople has caused an entire non-intercouse with this region, so that for months we have not received a word from our friends in America. With all these things to try our faith and patience, we are not unhappy, for we have found the means of being useful. The press, which is perfectly chained in liberated Greece, is free in Athens, which is still in possession of the Turks tho' the mass of the inhabitants are Greeks. We have published a religious tract of 28 pages, dedicated to the principal Bishop, and are now printing an Arithmetic and some other school Books. We have also two schools; that for boys has a hundred pupils and is daily increasing; that for girls, one hundred and thirty. The latter is wholly under the direction and tuition of our wives, for hitherto we have been unable to procure a female teacher. It has been rather wearisome, tho' a very interesting work, this hot season, (the thermometer for two months past has ranged from 85 to 90 degrees,) but the ladies will not yield. They are in school 7 hours a day, and most of their time at home is employed in fitting work and arranging lessons. We are on all sides surrounded with heaps of ruins—poverty and wretchedness abound; but there is very little beggary. As to living, we have had no meat but bad mutton, all summer. There has been, however, a good supply, of vegetables, such as cucumbers, gourds, onions, beets, beans, and tomatos. We had, in the season, a few plums and cherries, and there is now an abundance of figs, grapes, and melons. The bread is not good,—but it may be eaten—and milk is abundant and excellent, tho' afforded us by the sheep. On Sundays we have our own religious services, besides meeting early in the morning to instruct our pupils in the gospel.

We are living in a strange land. Sometimes half a dozen armed Turks come strolling in from idle curiosity, but the sight is now so familiar, that even the children approach them without fear. They all listen with eyes and ears open, when I tell them the wonders of the new world. Some of them think that it is in another planet, and they cannot conceive how we have come here. At times we have had long theological discussions. A few days since in walking out, Mr. Hill found a Turkish soldier on guard reading the New Testament.

From the Connecticut Observer.

Those who have regarded with pleasure, the judicious and persevering efforts of the Ladies of New-Haven, for the support of three missionaries for Greece,—may be interested in perusing the following letter, from a young lady under their patronage, and a resident in the family of Rev. Mr., and Mrs. Brewer.—

Extract of a Letter from Miss Reynolds to a Lady in Hartford

SMYRNA, Sept. 5, 1831.

"We have at present, three schools in Smyrna:—one, containing 50 girls, from the most respectable families; an other, 140, from the lower classes,—and a third, 70 being a mixture of both classes. All these are making progress in their studies, in neatness of appearance, kindness, and gentleness of manners, and a knowledge of that blessed Book, which "maketh wise unto salvation." One girl of 15, who began but a year and a half since, is now Teacher of a School of 50 girls in the village of Banjah, 3 1-2 miles from town,—and is doing uncommonly well. She is an orphan; her name is Marietza. Another girl of good understanding, and great sweetness of temper is an assistant in one of our schools in town. Our English school is one of great promise, to Smyrna, as it brings under religious instruction almost all the children of the Frank residents. We have English, French, Dutch, Swedish, Swiss, Greek, American,—Scotch, and Smymiote children, all paying for

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

their tuition, and all receiving their education in the English language. When we reflect that these children are soon to be the Fathers, Mothers, Consuls and Consulesses of Smyrna, being familiar with the spoken language of the country, having at the same time wealth in their possession, if by the blessing of God their hearts may be sanctified and they inclined to aid in spreading the gospel in this region, what an amount of good may we hope will be the result.

Mr. and Mrs. Brewer and myself have consulted with regard to the probable expenses of establishing an Infant School here to accommodate one hundred pupils. If a master is supplied, it would require from $150 to 200, per annum; though a smaller school, under the care of a mistress, would of course, cost a less sum.—Such a school, is extremely desirable here.—Would not the ladies of Hartford be able, or disposed to do something of the kind for us? I wish one might be established under their special patronage and direction. Could I in person visit the enlightened and happy mothers and daughters of your favored City, I would give them a glowing description of the degradation of the female character, in these once Christian lands. Oh! could they but see it with their own eyes,—for "what strikes the eye, lives longest on the mind. I must now close my letter without saying half that I wish to say to one so much interested as yourself in the cause in which I am engaged, and the classic soil around me. I should delight to give you the particulars of a visit to the Plains of Troy, on my way to Constantinople, and the many interesting things I saw in that city, whither I went, during the prevalence of the plague. Far removed as we are from the christian friends of my native land, it is consoling to feel that we are remembered in their prayers. Ours though a laborious, is a pleasant task, and we are cheered by the hope of meeting those whom we love in a world where is no separation." MARY REYNOLDS.

To Mrs. L. H. S*****

LETTER FROM MALTA.

We are kindly permitted to publish the following extract of a letter from Rev. Daniel Temple, missionary of the American Board, to Rev. R. S. Storrs, of Braintree. It is dated at Malta, Aug. 5.—Boston Recorder.

In writing to you, my pen moves heavily when I have no good news to tell you concerning the progress of that precious cause, which it is our heart's desire to advance. We find much very much, in this island that is discouraging. The strong man armed keeps his house here still and and his goods are in peace; when a stronger than he will come and spoil his house and take away his armor wherein he has always trusted, we know not. Popery has rolled an enormous stone to the mouth of all the wells of salvation in these countries, and no angel has yet descended from heaven to roll it away and sit upon it with a countenance so terrible as to frighten the guards till they become as dead men.

All has sunk into a dead calm here. The people, for the most part, seem willing to die in ignorance without ever taking the trouble to make any inquiry after the truth. The Pope's influence over the moral sensibilities of all his children in general is like the touch of a torpedo to the animal system. The march of revolution, however, is daily diminishing his influence, and with other causes which are constantly and powerfully operating, will probably cast him out of his throne at last and out of the earth as Lucifer was cast out of heaven. But as the effects are visible in the forest long after the fire has passed through it, so it must be here for a season when the blasting spirit of popery shall cease to be breathed in these countries. The mystery of iniquity began to work before the Apostles were gathered to their rest in heaven, and it has wrought most powerfully in these parts of the world ever since. Death has rode in triumph on his pale horse, and hell has followed after, and so it still continues to be.

My heart sometimes sinks within me as I become better acquainted with the actual state of things in all these countries. There is scarcely a bright spot in them all. O Lord, can these dry bones live! Surely he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow. We do not, however, and we must not sorrow as those that have no hope. With God all things are possible. With our countrymen conscience is something, for the Bible has given it tone and substance, but here it is a shadow that appears or disappears as occasion demands. Conscience is here like weights and measures in a country where there is no standard.

We had exulted in the freedom of Greece, but Turkey enjoys greater freedom than she. It is too obviously the policy of the present Greek Government to oppose indirectly all our efforts for the melioration of that country. We have abundant evidence of this. But—why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing! God has set his king upon his holy hill of Zion, and he will not fail nor be discouraged till he has set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law! This prospect should raise us above all discouragement. It has this effect on me when I am able to behold it as a morning without clouds. But it does not always rise before me in this manner.

The heat is now very excessive here, 3 or 4 degrees higher than I have ever known it to be before.

From the N. Y. Spectator.

EMBARKATION OF MISSIONARIES.

Solemn religious services have been held within the last week, at Boston and New-Bedford, preparatory to the departure of reinforcements of Missionaries to foreign stations. Eight Missionaries with their wives, a physician and his wife, and a printer, making nineteen persons in all, were to embark at New Bedford, on Tuesday or Wednesday of the present week. The following are the names of the missionaries:—Rev. Messrs. William P. Alexander, Richard Armstrong, Cochran Forbes, Harvey R. Hitchcock, Lorenzo Lyons, John S. Emerson, Ephraim Spaulding, and David B. Lyman, Dr. Alonzo Chapin, and Mr. Edmund H. Rogers. The following is a list of the states from which they have come:—One from Kentucky; three from Pennsylvania; four from New York; one from New Jersey; one from Connecticut; five from Massachusetts; two from New Hampshire, and two from Vermont. Of the Missionaries three are from the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J.; three from Andover, and two from Auburn. This is the largest number that has ever sailed from this country at one time; they are all young men.

A meeting was held at the church of Dr. Holmes, on Friday night of last week, at which their final instructions were given. They are to take passage in the Averick, Capt. Swain, now at anchor in the harbor, and the superior excellence of the vessel and urbanity of her commander, no less than the distinguished liberality of her owners, give promise of the happiest fulfilment of the wishes of thousands for their safety and comfort. It is twelve years since the first Missionaries took their departure for the Sandwich Islands. Reinforcements have been sent three times, viz: in 1822, 1827, and 1830. What a mighty moral revolution has been effected in that interesting group of Islands! When the present company shall have arrived, there will be 22 Missionaries, and their wives; two physicians; two printers [illegible] making in all 57 persons connected with the Foreign Missionary Society. When Mr. Bingham, the first Missionary, went forth, the natives had no written language. Of course there was not a native who could read. Now there are 50,000 learners at the 900 schools which have been established, and which are taught by 900 native teachers. Probably 70,000 or 80,000 have at various times attended the schools. Several thousand have learned to write, and some have made considerable progress in the knowledge of arithmetic. Sabbath schools exist at the several stations. A select school for females, for instruction in reading, writing, needle-work and Scripture lessons, has been established. Within the last ten years, twenty-two distinct books have been printed in the native language, averaging 37 small pages, and amounting to 387,000 copies and 10,287,000 pages. Besides this 3,345,000 pages in the Hawaiian language have been printed in the United States, (viz. a large edition of the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and John) which swells the amount of printing, within that period, for the use of the islanders, to 18,632,800 pages.

The chiefs have erected many buildings to serve the purposes of churches. The religious assemblies in many places are very large. The church at Lahaina is of stone, two stories high, 98 feet long and 62 broad, and having galleries. It will seat 3,000 people after the native manner, and is the most substantial and noble structure in Polynesia. The others are thatched. That at Honolulu is 196 feet long, 63 broad, and admits 4,500 people. Thus, by the exertions, and the donations of the people of the United States, has a nation of Pagans become a nation of Christians. How much more true glory have this little band of unpretending missionaries acquired, than belongs to the vanquishers and exterminators of nations, from the Alexander of Macedon to Napoleon!

DOCTRINAL.

From the Philadelphian.

"THE STANDARD" AND ORIGINAL SIN.

Some one who employs the signature of S. has published in the Standard the following smart piece.

THE FAITH OF OUR FATHERS.

"The corruption of man's original nature was commonly called Original Sin in the days of our fathers." So says Dr. Ely in his Philadelphian, and so certify his imitators here. "Undeniable Truth" of course. But let us hear what the Confession of Faith, says upon the subject.

"The sinfulness of that estate wherein man fell, consists in Adam's first sin, the want of that righteousness wherein he was created, and the corruption of his nature, whereby he is utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil and that continually, which is commonly called original sin, and from which do proceed all actual transgressions," page 172.

Here is undeniable evidence, that in the days of our fathers Original Sin was something more than the corruption of man's whole nature.

When Dr. Ely and his copyists speak of "our fathers," they must mean their Congregational Sires and the orthodoxy they claim can be no other than that of the Saybrook Platform. The Confession of Faith, sustains no new light views of the present day."

I should like to know from which of my publications the first extract above written, was quoted. I have said, and I repeat it, that in the days of our fathers, meaning in the days of the Westminster Divines, the corruption of man's whole nature was commonly called original sin. This is the assertion of the Larger and Shorter Catechism; from the former of which S. has paraded his extract to prove that my statement is false. I have not said, so far as I recollect, that "the corruption of man's ORIGINAL nature was commonly called original sin." This would imply that Adam's corruption of his nature, which was man's original nature, was commonly called original sin. Those who pretend to quote from the writings of their brethren proper matter for accusation should quote accurately, and not by guess.

Our Catechisms do not ask, what is original sin? Neither do they answer that question directly; but incidentally they say of every man that "the corruption of his whole nature is commonly called original sin." The Larger Catechism omits the word "whole;" and subjoins this explanation, that it is this "corruption of his nature, whereby he is utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil, and that continually;" yet still it says, that this "corruption of his nature" "is commonly called original sin." This is the thing which I have affirmed; and if any copy me in this they adhere to our excellent standards, about which some boast much, and appear to understand but little. In the answers of the Larger and Shorter Catechisms to the question, wherein consists the sinfulness of that estate whereinto man fell? I see no "undeniable evidence that in the days of our fathers, original sin was something more than the corruption of man's whole nature." These answers tell us that the sinfulness of that estate whereinto, and not wherein man fell, consists in four things; 1st, "in the guilt of Adam's first sin;" not as our sage reproves S. has it, "in Adam's first sin:" 2dly, "in the want of that righteousness wherein he was created;" 3dly, in "the corruption of his nature"—"which is commonly called original sin;" and 4thly, in "all actual transgressions which proceed from" the corruption of his nature; which corruption is commonly called original sin. S. has referred to the page of the constitution from which he professes to quote, but he has really not quoted the words of that, or of any other page. I turn him to the eighteenth answer in the Shorter Catechism, which every well educated Presbyterian boy knows to be in the following words:—"the sinfulness of that estate, whereinto man fell, consists in the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of his whole nature, which is commonly called original sin; together with all actual transgressions which proceed from it." If these words were intended to answer the question, what is original sin? they would then very absurdly teach, that original sin is the guilt of Adam's first sin, together with all actual sin. Our fathers were good grammarians, and had they intended to include the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of man's whole nature, together with all actual sins which proceed from that corruption, in original sin, they would have said "which ARE commonly called original sin." They were not however so absurd as our modern paragons of orthodoxy who can make sin and guilt of sin to mean the same thing; and all sin to be original sin.

In the 6th chapter of the Confession the "corrupted nature" of man is called "his original corruption," and is said "both itself, and all the motions thereof" to be truly and properly sin;—the former original and the latter actual sin; but alas! some native Presbyterians have a sort of patent right to an exclusive interpretation of the standards of our Church; and we must not presume to understand them for ourselves.

Freely do I confess that I have descended from a Congregational Sire, who was convinced of the [illegible] of that work. As for myself I have been a member of the Presbyteries of New York and Philadelphia long enough to have been born and to have become of age in them. Having adopted the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church agreeably to the prescribed order, I claim the Presbyterian fathers as my fathers, just as any believing gentile may say, "I believe in the God of Abraham, and therefore am I one of Abraham's seed." If, however, the Presbyterian fathers possessed the illiberal, bigotted, and antichristian spirit, which dwells in some of their descendants, the sooner I am alienated from them the better. Nye, Burrows, Goodwin, Simson, Bridge, and at least five others of the Westminster Divines were Independent Congregationalists. Let me claim these then as my sires. The Saybrook Platform agrees with our confession on the subject of original sin: but some of the fathers of our Presbyterian Fathers employed different language from the Westminster Divines. The Confession of Faith used by the English Church at Geneva, and adopted by the Church of Scotland in the beginning of the Reformation, thought it sufficient to say, "through our father Adam's transgression we were become children of perdition." The Confession of the Protestants of Scotland authorized in August 1560, says, "man and woman did both fall," by eating of the forbidden tree; "by which transgression, commonly called original sin, was the image of God utterly defaced in man, and he and his posterity of nature became enemies to God." Here original sin is represented as being the act of Adam and Eve: which goes a little beyond the doctrine of Dr. Emmons, that original sin is the first sin of the first man Adam; and so called because it has become the original occasion of all our sinning.

In 1591, the form of Examination before the Communion of the Kirk of Scotland asks, "what things come to us by that fall? Answ. Original sin, and natural corruption." Here original sin is distinguished from natural corruption, and excludes it: but the Larger Catechism, approved July 2, 1648, and the Shorter, approved July 28th of the same year, teach the doctrine that "this corruption is original sin." When we have the Church of Scotland of 1550 against the Church of Scotland of 1648, who shall decide what is orthodoxy, if we adopt any other test than the infallible word of God? If we confine ourselves to the plain, and obvious, common sense meaning of the bible, we shall soon cease to dispute about original sin; and shall neither blame God for causing us to inherit that which is innate in our constitution, nor think it a crime in ourselves to be begotten, conceived and born.

POPERY.

From the Protestant.

CATHOLIC TELEGRAPH.

This is the title of the new Jesuit publication, issued at Cincinnati:—and from it we select the following memoranda

CINCINNATI ATHNEUM.—A Monastery for youth, thus named is established at Cincinnati—The Tariff of prices includes Board, Tuition, &c. $150 per annum; music, $50; drawing and painting, $25; Italian and German Languages, $25; the College course, $50; Bed and Bedding, $9; and stationary, $5. "The President claims the right of examining and regulating the correspondence of pupils, except between them and parents."

MICHIGAN.—The idolatrous festival of Corpus Christi was celebrated at L'Arbre Croche, amid "canticles, and clouds of incense."—At St. Joseph, the Baptist Missionary has been obliged to retire, through the artifices of the Jesuits. Three hundred persons were confirmed in Popery in this district at seven meetings.

OHIO.—At Canton, Popery is rapidly increasing. Three new Mass houses are erected within twenty miles of Canton: one near Norwalk; a fifth at Tiffin—and in many other quarters, priests are to be located, and mass houses immediately erected. Thirty six persons received the mark of the Beast in Brown County—and at Joseph's in Perry County, seventy publicly acknowledged the authority of the dragon and the Beast. The writer adds—"Thus does the prospect brighten," become dark—"over this part of the Mississippi valley.

CINCINNATI.—The rapid progress of Popery, within the short space of a few years, not only in the city, but throughout the diocese is remarkable. Great numbers have been added by conversions, which are very frequent, especially in Cincinnati. A few years ago, it was with no small difficulty, the Catholics succeeded in obtaining a spot of ground for the erection of a chapel. Within twenty years, more than the same number of catholic congregations have been formed in this diocese; a cathedral completed; a college edifice opened; and the clergy greatly increased."

MISSIONS.—Of the last report of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, the Catholic Telegraph thus announces. "On that great day when all these reports will be examined before that dreadful tribunal from whose decision there will be no appeal, and when the Devil will come with a writ of Habeas Corpus et animam, and serve it upon these poor wretches: The Lord help them!"

FIGURE AND MOTTO.—The Catholic Telegraph bears for its motto—"in necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas, in omnibus charitas," unity in things essential, liberty in doubtful matters, in all, charity. A greater burlesque upon Popery could not be selected, which is directly inimical to all unity, liberty and charity except for itself. The cut represents Rome as the Mother of Harlots, with a baby idol in her right hand; a cross in her left, leaning on a globe; with a mashouse behind her, and underneath her feet, a label inscribed; the valley of the Mississippi!" These arrogant emblems, require no illustration.

He casteth out Devils by Beelzebub, the Prince of the Devils.—The conduct of those who first uttered this sentiment is often in effect, reiterated by controversialists, to disparage the labors of their opponents; The following from the Protestant, will fully verify the truth of the assertion.

The Protestant has often been calumniated as the best friend the Papists have, to make converts to Babylonish idolatry. We also perceive that the Liberator is honored among some of the "Negro-Pedlars," as awaking a deep interest on their behalf, by the resistless pungency with which that estimable champion of "the rights of man," avows and maintains the truth of God, upon the topics of Man-stealing, and its essentially connected turpitude and crimes.

We have just encountered a third Jesuitical claim of the same extraordinary class. A volume was lately published by Rev. Joel Parker of this city, upon the dangerous and soul-destroying errors of modern Universalism. We thought it was a caustic and soul-harrowing development of the operation of that unholy system, which nurtures impiety, delusion and iniquity, and which administers so strong an opiate, that it is to be feared its infatuated disciples die "with a lie in their right hand;" only to awake to the reality, when sound knowledge and [illegible] arrive to late. But the Universalists pretend to acknowledge Mr. Parker as their able coadjutor, and warmly recommend his volume as a certain and effectual instrument to insure additional proselytes to Universalism.

This is truly to exemplify the ancient practice of Satan; who, wishing to destroy the effects and testimony of the Redeemer's Mission, inspired his servants to declare, that the holy Jesus was in alliance with Beelzebub. Thus the Universalists claim Mr. Parker as their assistant—and the negro thieves declare that Mr. Garrison involuntarily abets their atrocities—and the Papists affirm that the Protestant makes verts captives to their abom nations; expressly to counteract "the force of truth," and to neutralize the antidotes to their multiplied poisons.

This contradictory talk of these various tribes of sinners, is just as good sense as it is to maintain that the administration of healthful medicines will aggravate disease, or that the acquisition of profound knowledge, will render a man an Ignoramus.

To prove their consistency, all Universalists should distribute Mr. Parker's volume, and every slaveholder should disseminate the Liberator; and we earnestly recommend to all Papists, that they instantly subscribe for the Protestant.—Till they thus manifest their profession in their deeds; we shall hold them to be as deceitful as they are irreligious; and as far from the truth as men can be, who believe "strong delusions; observe lying vanities; forsake their own mercy; and take pleasure in unrighteousness."—The Protestant.

Popish Criminals.—The Pope of Rome has lately issued a bull of grace—by which he institutes an asylum for all the Italian murderers at Ostia, and other towns, about thirty miles from Rome, that the population of that unhealthy district may be increased. It must be delightful travelling through that country, where every person you meet is authorized to kill you from the Pope himself! This is Popery in the nineteenth century in Italy, its source, and the residence of its head, the Beast.—Protestant.

Patent Jesuits.—The Catholic Miscellany thus boldly falsifies: Popery "has done more to store the minds of American youth with useful knowledge, and sound republican principles, than all the Tract societies, the Bible societies, and Sunday school Union societies, put together." There is an old saying; that when a man thinks it worth while to utter a lie, it is as well to tell a thumper at once; the Charleston Jesuits seem instinctively to understand the practice of falsifying; for among all the Legends of those faithful friends of Lucifer, the Monks of past ages, no one is less true than this above audacious specimen of modern laxity.—Ib.

From the Christian Herald.

THE CATHOLIC TELEGRAPH.

The publication of which has just commenced at Cincinnati, and intended, we presume to ingratiate in all parts of the western country, presents in the first number, the following motives for adhering to Popery:

"The Roman Catholic faith, is the faith of nearly ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY MILLIONS of the present generation. This immense multitude is composed of "all nations and tribes, people and tongues." They are dissimilar in their manners and habits; they are often influenced by opposite and conflicting interests; but on the subject of their faith, their union resembles the harmony of the Heavenly bodies, whose light is not the less, though clouds and vapors sometimes interpose to obscure the vision of mortals. To every unprejudiced mind, it must appear inconsistent to reject the united testimony of so many millions, to favor the opinions of a comparative few, who differ as widely from each other as they do from the great body from which they have seceded."

We know not the means employed by the Telegraph, of computation, but the best and latest geographers have computed the Catholic world at about 116,000,000 souls. If the Greek church is included, the number is more, than made out; but it does not adhere to the Pope.

From the above remarks, Protestants will know how to consider Romanism in this country. Not as a modified and reformed system of religion, as some had hoped; but the same in principle, with all European, and Asiatic belief in relics, unmeaning and idolatrous ceremonies, sycophancy to the Pope &c. This is a legitimate conclusion, since it is said, "the Roman Catholic faith is the faith of nearly one hundred and seventy millions, of all nations, and tribes, and people, and tongues." It is said above, "on the subject of their faith, their union resembles the harmony of the heavenly bodies." The quarrels between the Jesuits and the Jansenists; between the Franciscans and Dominicans; the conflicts between Pope and Pope; the schisms of the Augustans; the great and long controversy between the churches, now termed the Greek and Latin, which were originally one, with numerous other schisms about faith and practice, bear a near resemblance to "the harmony of the heavenly bodies." If the writer adopts the theory of the formation of the solar system of M. Buffon, and if he refers to the harmony that existed when a comet fell upon that great body, the sun, and struck off as many pieces, as make the bodies that revolve around the sun, we have no objections to admit the declaration about harmony.

The light of the Roman Catholic faith is like the light of the heavenly bodies, "through clouds and vapors" of Protestant institutions, or by the doctrine of free toleration, and of liberty. Let us look where it is little interrupted by the Bible itself, and we see its fructifying effects. Look at Spain, Portugal, Italy, and the countries of South America. There are specimens of the influence of the Roman Catholic faith, where, at least, no Protestant "clouds and vapors" interrupt the "revelation of mortals." If (says the Saviour,) your light be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

Again it is said, "it must appear inconsistent to reject the united testimony of so many millions to favor the opinions of a comparative few."

If numbers is to be the test of truth, then the Mohammedans have nearly equal claims with the Romanists. If this principle is to be adopted the kingdom of Satan, we fear is right, and that of Christ is wrong. "Broad is the way, and many there be, that go therein."

Some of the Romanists, we trust, are in the straight and narrow way, though carrying many incumbrances—some are building on Christ much "wood, hay and stubble," which will be burned; and as afraid to them, we advise that they never imitate the example of the Catholic Telegraph—make a comparison between Protestants and Catholics necessary, by first commencing it; for assuredly, it will terminate in disgrace to the latter.

If these remarks extended to matter found in the second number of the Telegraph, it would be shown that the great increase in former years, and in some places now, of Romanists, is not to be attributed to the excellency of their principles; but to their adaptation to human nature, and to the paganry and show, attending their ceremonies, exhibited on their vestments, vessels and buildings, to the captivation of the multitude. But enough is said for the present,—sufficient to illustrate the sad truth, in the case of the persons noticed, that man is weak and depraved.

OBSERVER.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 7, 1831.

NEW MEASURES MAY BE EXPECTED BEFORE THE MILLENNIUM.

We are looking forward to the glorious era in the history of the church of Christ designated as the Millennium. This event we expect is to be brought about by means—by the exhibition of the same essential truths by which sinners are and always have been converted. It is evident, when the number of genuine conversions to christianity, at the most favored period, is compared with the increase of population, that something more must be done than ever has been done—or how is the whole world to become the followers of Christ? We are neither to look for a new revelation, for any new principles of action, for any new motives, or for any other, or more direct agency of the Holy Spirit than he has ever used in changing the heart. How then will the Millennium be ushered in? The answer which we should give is, an extraordinary use of the ordinary means. New modes of exhibiting the truth. Men become every day wiser in the business of life. Facilities for the manufacture of articles of the first importance and of the most common use, are daily multiplying.—Facilities for travelling are increasing also, which, as it has been said, are in a fair way to annihilate time and space. Yet in all this there is no new matter, or any new principle discovered, but only new modes of applying them. It has been always the standing reproach of the children of light that they were not as wise as the children of this world. But who knows that this reproach is not to be taken away, even in our day? That christians may not discover new methods of presenting the truths of the bible—of wielding the sword of the Spirit—new methods of bringing sinners within the sound of the gospel—of fixing their attention—of persuading and alarming them? Who knows that in the art of gaining access to the hearts of the impenitent, God may not greatly increase the wisdom of his children? for he has told them to ask wisdom of him and he will give it. May not christians be more constant and importunate in asking for wisdom, in warning exhorting and instructing sinners? This will not be asking for a new law or new gospel, or any other than the old way of salvation, so that God will still have all the glory. Now God's children are required to be as wise as serpents—and in what is this to be exhibited more conspicuously than in persuading men to become reconciled to Christ?

May we not then rationally expect that there will be some great improvement—some new measures discovered by which God's truth may be brought to bear more directly and powerfully upon the hearts of sinners? Shall the men of this world be constantly making some new use of old principles by which their wealth, their comforts, their knowledge and power are greatly increased and no new discoveries made in the application of those great moral principles—the doctrines of Scripture—by which God is to subdue the world to himself? We ought to "grow in grace and in knowledge" daily, and this too that God may be glorified. And how can he be more eminently glorified than by the conversion of sinners through the instrumentality of his people—by their increase in that knowledge which he has commanded them to ask of him, and which he has promised to give?

If then we may expect new discoveries in the application of moral truth, as well as in the application of the principles of natural science, ought we not to look rather with a favorable eye than with jealously, upon any new measure which God appears to bless to the conversion of souls?—Ought we not to be willing to give them, at least, a fair trial, instead of endeavoring to excite prejudices against them.

But it is nothing strange that prejudices should exist against new measures in religion any more than it is that almost every new discovery in the mode of doing worldly business—any discovery in mechanics should almost invariably for a time, be ridiculed and opposed, until its utility has stopped the mouths of gainsayers.

We say then let new measures be sought out and put in practice—measures not contrary to the letter or spirit of the word of God—until the means for bringing back this revolted world to its allegiance to Christ, shall be as much increased and improved as those have been by which our worldly comforts are obtained, and by which the intercourse between the different parts of this extensive empire, and between this and other countries, has been so greatly facilitated.

We often have opportunities for contrasting the conduct of the man of the world with that of the professed follower of Christ. We have seen the man engaged in any branch of merchandize, looking with anxiety for every event that may by any remote possibility affect his business. In order to obtain early and correct information, he takes a paper which promises to furnish it. The lottery dealer and the purchaser of tickets are watching with intense anxiety the result of the "Drawing," and that they may have the earliest knowledge of the "favors or frowns of Fortune," they take a paper that publishes lottery notices and schemes—& when the time arrives for the drawing their eyes fly involuntarily to that department of the paper where they expect to learn the fate of their adventure. Every man engaged in business, the success of which is dependent upon the various contingencies of the market, will be careful to provide himself with a paper which shall give him the earliest information in relation to it. The politician would be ashamed to be behind the intelligence of the day, and he too not only takes a paper, but frequently half a dozen. His whole energies are engaged in furthering his party objects—he takes a political paper and looks with intense interest at every movement that may promote or prevent his success. It is not necessary to urge him to take the paper—he could not be persuaded to do without it—his money goes freely. Now of all this we do not complain—such conduct is consistent. They are sincere in the pursuit of their various objects.—But how often do we see the professing christian who prays perhaps daily "Thy kingdom come"—who talks much about the Millennium and imagines that it is not far distant—believes that this is to be the most important era in the future history of the church, and yet does not feel sufficient anxiety to know what are the signs of the times, to take a religious publication that might inform him what the Lord is doing. We have sometimes been very much inclined to doubt the sincerity of such prayers. "Thy kingdom come!" How do such persons ascertain whether their prayers are answered? We very much question whether they ever bestow a thought upon the subject. What petition God for a blessing and never inquire whether he has granted it? Where is the deep solicitude manifested by the man of business to learn the result of his speculation, or of the politician to know the issue of a contested election?——The christian cannot afford to take a paper to learn what great events are transpiring in the kingdom of Christ, but mark, it is not uncommon for him, at the same time, to take a party news paper, and sometimes two or three. This shows conclusively how anxious he is that the Kingdom of Christ should come! Pay for a paper to learn who is elected to represent him in the legislature, but cannot afford to pay for one to learn who is elected to eternal life. Is it to be wondered at that the men of the world are so ready to brand as hypocrites, those professors of religion whose parsimony and worldly-mindedness form the most striking traits in their characters?

And above all, is it surprizing that a religious paper which finds in the region in which it is to look for support, a large number of this class of professors, should barely be able to EXIST!!

HIGH AND LOW CHURCH.

The Presbyterian and other papers that have taken ground in favor of what is termed High Church Presbyterianism, are laboring to show that the doctrines and measures of the Low Church are tending not merely towards Universalism but Unitarianism. We have never seen any thing in Presbyterian papers which we have more sincerely deprecated, than the course thus taken to throw suspicion upon those men who are laboring with the most indefatigable zeal and with unparalleled success, in winning souls to Christ. How strange does the charge sound that those ministers of the gospel who hold the most conspicuous relations in New England churches, are favoring Unitarianism! What was the proportion of Orthodox compared with the Unitarian Churches, ten or fifteen years ago in Massachusetts? and how do they compare in point of numbers now? And who are the men, and what has been the kind of preaching which, under God, has been the means of producing such an immense increase in the orthodox churches, and proportional decrease in those of the rationalistic Doct. Beecher favoring Unitarianism! Surely the Unitarians do not manifest much gratitude for his labors! They must be very blind or very ungrateful. Are the High church party, by their labors to bring those men and those doctrines, into disrepute, which have produced, and are producing results which are acknowledged, even by themselves, to be the fruits of the spirit, advancing the cause of truth and aiding in the great work of redeeming souls from sin and death? Surely they are incurring a tremendous responsibility. In these remarks we do not intend to approve or condemn all the acts or doctrines of either party, or the means resorted to, and the spirit manifested which we condemn. There is a something in the opposition which looks to us like recklessness—like burning down the house because it may be filthy, instead of applying the soap and broom to cleanse it.

We perceive that the Presbyterian finds an evidence of a tendency to Unitarianism in the Low church, because in an exposition of a particular passage of scripture, the Unitarian paper of Boston, coincides with that of some writer belonging to N. Haven. Suppose the Presbyterian should be charged with favoring High Church Episcopalianism—the same kind of proof could be brought in abundance. The Episcopal Watchman and the Churchman quote the Presbyterian with marks of approbation—and the former too, is so high as to condemn in strong terms the exposures of Popish doctrines in Presbyterian papers, and manifest great sympathy for the poor persecuted Papists. We presume that the Presbyterian and its contributors, perfectly understand the value of this kind of testimony. It may excite pre judices but cannot establish the truth, or prove the incorrectness of a doctrine.

We do not feel inclined to engage in the controversy which is now agitating the Presbyterian Church, but we do feel at liberty, and disposed, to speak freely of the manner in which it is conducted.

We are sorry to see that the minority—the High Church party—are talking about division—saying as a writer in the Presbyterian does, "we have long been of opinion that a division must take place"—but we had rather hear them not only talk about division, but see them bring it about, than labor to cast suspicion upon the soundness in doctrine, of the most successful servants of God of the present day. What must be the effect of such language upon the opposers of religion? Better is a wall higher than the Andes should be raised between the two parties, than that they should by their continued wrangling, confirm the infidel in his hostility to religion, drive the wavering into the toils of the adversary, and lead the inquiring to conclude that the difference between those who profess to serve God, and those who serve him not, consists merely in profession—that the religion of Christ possesses no transforming power, no purifying efficacy.

STATISTICS OF SLAVERY.

From the Jour. of Commerce we are presented with a few facts on the subject of Slavery worthy of consideration.

In Virginia, the two Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Florida and Arkansas—10 states and two Territories—there is a slave population of 2,003,837, and the increase of slaves in the states in the last 10 years has been rising of 60,000—and it appears that the ratio of increase is greater among the blacks than among the whites. How long before the measures now in operation will rid our country of the slave population at the rate of about half million addition to our number every ten years!

It is rumored that the President will recommend an increase in the standing army of 15,000 to be stationed in the slave states, to keep down the slaves and protect the inhabitants. That the slaveholders cannot defend themselves against those whom they hold in bondage, much longer, is certain, and if slavery must continue we do not see in what way the whites are to be protected except by the employment of the military force of the nation. How would our northern republicans like the employment! What laurels might be won in such a field!

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

THE TRACT CAUSE.

The article on our third page should have appeared two weeks since, but was overlooked. It is one of deep interest and will be read by all who appreciate the usefulness of Tracts in diffusing the light of truth and life into the dark corners of our land, and we flatter ourselves that it will not only be read but will lead to action.

Five persons were reported to have been lost from the Steam Boat Cumberland, on the Mississippi, but it is now ascertained that there were but 3 lost and those were children.

The Corvette United States, built in N. York by Henry Eckford, and sold at Constantinople, has been sent there, and on its arrival, the Cholera prevailing, Mr. Morton chief officer and three of the crew fell victims to it.

Another Murder of a wife by a Drunken Husband, took place at Cumberland, Ten.) recently. On the trial the plea of insanity was set up, but did not avail.

Such facts show what has so often been asserted to be true, that females suffer more from the effects of intemperance than males. Let them act then with decision and efficiency in favor of the temperance cause.

Louis Philippe occupies the Thuilleries which has now been the residence of eleven different rulers of France within the last 40 years.

A Turtle weighing 1462 lbs. was driven ashore on East River, just above Hell Gate, in the late gale—was taken and sold to the Proprietors of the American Museum N. York, for $500.

Our readers will have noticed that the commencement of the Sabbath School Union Report (published in the last Observer) was printed incorrectly—the punctuation being such as to make it un-english. We reprint the two first paragraphs.

In presenting their Annual Report, the Board at this time are called upon to record the death of a valuable member, Josiah Bissell Jr., one of the founders—the first President—and the constant, active, and liberal friend of this Union has retired from his labors.

The character of Mr. Bissell when viewed in his connexion with the Sabbath School interests, presents a rare combination of the most enlarged, comprehensive, and enlightened general views, connected with the utmost patience and perseverance in their practical application to its minutest details. As a liberal contributor to its funds; an active member of this Board; as a superintendent and teacher in our public Sabbath School meetings; at the Monthly Concert; in the Teacher's prayer meeting; in the circle of friends; at home and abroad—in all these places, and under all these circumstances was Josiah Bissell Jr. emphatically the friend of Sabbath Schools.

Be it ours to cherish the memory of his worth and to emulate his merits.

For the Rochester Observer.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY. NO. 3.

THE SOCIETY'S PECUNIARY MEANS.

Having in previous articles shown the excellent and evangelical character of the Society's Five Hundred and Seventy Eight Distinct publications; their adaptation to be useful; and the signal divine blessing which has attended them, I now proceed to show to what extent the Society is provided with Pecuniary Means.—I do this in the hope that it will gain the attention of the friends of Zion, and excite them to those efforts and supplications to God which the existing claims of the Society so urgently demand.

The Society has no permanent funds; and a complete inventory of all it possesses may be given with a few words: it has, rent free, the building in which its operations are conducted; the stock of publications in its General Depository, which is no larger than is absolutely necessary to meet the demands of the country; and its stereotype plates and other materials used in transacting its concerns. It is the design of the Society to sell its publications at cost; so that its dependence for the means of extending its operations is solely on the donations of the benevolent.

Pressing Pecuniary Deficiency.

In the half year, from May 1, to Nov. 1, there was paid in cash, for paper, printing, and the other expenses of the Society. - -	$37,310 04
The total receipts, during the same period, exclusive of loans, were only - - - - -	$19,683 25
Leaving a deficiency, which was paid by monies loaned at the banks on the individual responsibility of members of the Committee of -	$7,626 79
It is worthy of remark, that the whole amount of donations made by all the Society's Branches and Auxiliaries, from May 1, to Nov. 1, is but - - - - - -	$315 65
There is due, while I now write, on bills presented and allowed at the last meeting of the Committee, beyond the whole amount in the treasury - - - -	$1,411 69
There is due, on notes given by members of the Committee for paper and money loaned, which must be paid within one month -	$5,800 12
There is due on notes, to be paid within six months, the further sum of - - - - - -	$10,586 20
Total due on bills and notes, which must be paid within six months, in addition to all the Society's current expenses - - - - -	$17,798 01

With whatever emotions these deficiencies may be regarded by the Christian community in general, they are, to the conductors of the Society, a serious reality. The obligations given by members of the Committee are strictly mercantile in their character, and must be met on the day of payment, however deficient may be the Society's means; and though temporary loans may be made, while members of the Committee are willing individually to assume them, the day of redemption soon arrives, and they add nothing to the Society's substantial means. They cannot be permanently resorted to. Aid must be offered by the contributions of the benevolent, or the Society's labors and consequent usefulness must be abridged.

How this deficiency has been occasioned.

The simple fact is, that, while the conductors of the Society have been persevering in their labors, with economy, and, as they hope, with some good degree of fidelity, the contributions received for the last eighteen months have been far less than in preceding years, and, for much of that period, as appears above, essentially less than the amount expended.

Shall then the Society restrict and limit its endeavors! or, will the friends of God and man throw themselves into the breach, and say, "go on: here is the pecuniary means; and the blessing of God be with you." This is the only alternative.

Shall the Society cease to issue its publications! when the voice of all its Auxiliaries, and of the Christian community calls for them; and Tracts and other publications are presented for adoption, which, like the Pilgrim's Progress, and the Call to the Unconverted, now in hand, promise to be the means of Salvation to many souls.

Shall it curtail the stock in its General Depository! which now with great difficulty can be kept so replenished, as not continually to disappoint the orders of Auxiliaries and friends, especially those desiring Tracts for monthly Distribution.

Shall it diminish the amount of Agency in the Tract House! when two of its principal Agents there, have already been threatened with the termination of their earthly services, under the pressure of the accumulating responsibilities and labors of watching over its general interests, superintending its publications and agencies, conducting its correspondence, and managing its pecuniary transactions, and the minute concerns of its General Depository.

Shall it call back its Travelling Agents from their labors to bless the distant and destitute portions of our lands! one of these, Rev. Cyrus W. Allen, is laboring to extend the blessings of the Society over the whole of Missouri and Illinois. Another, Mr. Moses H. Wilder, is laboring in a similar manner for Indiana. Mr. Wm. Yonge and Mr. Lucius C. Rouse are thus laboring in Ohio; Mr. Owen C. Thompson in Michigan Territory; Rev. Warren Day in the Western District of New York; Rev. Thomas Cochran in the North Eastern part of the same state and Vermont; Rev. Thaddeus B. Hurlbut in Virginia; and Mr. Alexander Bagley in North Carolina. The collective labors of all these Agents involve a heavy draft on the Society's Treasury; but from what portion of the fields they are occupying shall they be recalled! Who, on the other hand, shall account to God that no more is doing by this Society for other destitute portions of our extended country!

Shall it withhold grants for Tracts from the destitute of our country! while millions of our population are crowding their way beyond the stated means of grace, and present a claim on this Society, which the cold heart of infidelity and misanthropy alone can have courage to resist.

Shall it deny a short credit to Auxiliaries and individuals in destitute places! when, by waiting on them till a part or all the publications they receive can be sold, they will pay for them; and otherwise they must be supplied by grant, or the Society's publications be utterly denied them.

Shall it refuse to furnish Tracts to American Missionaries toiling among the Heathen! when they entreat our aid, and tell us there is no means of benefiting the heathen which promises more usefulness at an equal expense: and when the Society, solemnly and publicly resolved, at its last anniversary, that "they will endeavor, by the Divine blessing, to supply Evangelical American Missionaries in Foreign countries with as many approved Tracts, or the means of procuring them as shall, in the opinion of the Executive Committee, be needed in the prosecution of their labors.

The voice of Providence and of Christians is "Go on."

In what respect, then, shall the Society diminish its operations? "Diminish!" Shall we talk of diminishing the operations of Benevolence, in this day of blessing to Zion, when the church is called and encouraged to redoubled efforts, prayers, and confidence in her King, that her "labor shall not be in vain the Lord!" "In what respect diminish!" I seem to hear one universal answer from the wise and good, "In no respect: Go on, and the God of heaven prosper you!"

"Go on." I doubt not, is the voice of all the Society's Branches and Auxiliaries. And yet, shall it be told, that the whole amount of donations, made to the Parent Institution by Branches and Auxiliaries from May 1, to Nov. 1, is only $315 65! Will not, then, the officers of every Auxiliary revive their operations; make immediate collections; pay promptly, if any thing is due the Parent Society; and make at least a small donation to aid its extended concerns.

"Go on." I doubt not, is the voice of the Evangelical Ministers of the Gospel in our country, almost without exception. Will they not then, lay this object before their people, and remember it in their public prayers?

"Go on," say those Christians, who have more than a competency of this world's goods, and who pray God to direct them how to use what they possess most effectually for his glory. Will they not, then, constitute themselves Directors or Members for Life; or perpetuate some acceptable Tract, or some spiritual, awakening Occasional volume!

"Go on," say, with unequalled promptness and sympathy for the welfare of this cause, the pious Females of our land. Will they not, then, make themselves, or their Pastors, or the wives of their Pastors, or other individuals to whom such a token of respect will be proper, Directors or Members for Life!

"Go on," we believe is the voice even of many an ardent youth in our flourishing Schools, Academies, Colleges and Seminaries. Will they not, then, thus constitute their Instructors Directors or Members for Life!

"Go on," reply the thousands who have little of this world's goods to impart, but who feel that the cause of Christ is the only object for which they are bound to live. Will they not, then, send promptly forward to the Society's aid that little which they can afford, and pray God to bless it, and to open the hearts of others; guide the conductors of the Society in duty, especially in selecting and preparing its publications; make his children active in diffusing them, and give them efficacy in bringing sinners to the Cross of the Redeemer.

Would every one, not merely take into consideration what he should do, but do it according to his own estimate of the measure of duty, the wants of this Institution would be supplied, and it might go on without hindrance, achieving new conquests under the blessing of the Holy Spirit, and causing great joy in Heaven over multitudes bro't to repentance.

H.

☞Note—$20 constitutes a Life Member; an addition of $30, or $50 at one time, a Life Director:—$4, a page, including the cover, perpetuates a 12mo. Tract; $3 a page, a bound volume 12mo. Donors may specify any particular objects of the Society to which they would contribute.—Remittances should be addressed to Mr. Wm. A. Hallock, Corresponding Secretary of the American Tract Society, 144 Nassau-Street, New-York.

"FREELY GIVE."

Do you inquire, How shall we exercise this duty? My friends take noble and expanded views of this virtue. Thank God, who allows you the divine privilege of exerting it in so many divers, yet exalted ways. Look at the domes and spires of the multiplied and multiplying religious and humane Institutions, rising and spreading as blessings over the land. To each of these, so far as you have power, lend a prompt and cheering hand. Go, speed the flight of the Missionary Angel to the isles of the sea abroad: and come, lead the little child to the Sabbath School at home. Point the wandering Indian to the cabin of Education in the wilderness; and send the unshackled negro to the shores of his native land, with the Bible in one hand and the desolate mantle of your kindred neighbor, and give wings to some warning Tract, that it may fly to and fro, like Noah's dove, over the waste places of the earth. Reclaim the blushing Magdalen to a virtuous shelter; and conduct the ci-devant Vagrant to an industrious home. In short in any and every way, designated by Providence, delight to be the Almoner of the bounty of God.—Knight's Sermons.

VILLAGE MISSION.

The following admirable article in relation to missions as a corrective of city vices, is from the Boston Recorder and as we think it as appropriate to the same subject here as in Boston we have headed it Village Mission and our readers here can if they choose, substitute Village for City and Rochester for Boston—at any rate we hope that our citizens will imagine that it is addressed to them—that it concerns them—and will be profited by perusing it.

A HINT ON CITY VICES.

You say you cannot listen to all these calls for charity from every direction—these benevolent measures multiply faster than your means. But can you do without them! Take, for example, the present exertions for the moral and religious instruction of the poor and for the suppression of vice in this city. Though little, in comparison with the greatness and importance of the object, is known respecting these efforts, they are exerting an influence which is felt in every street and lane; and they can be carried on at far less expense than they can be dispensed with. After all that is said and done we pay far more indirectly for the support of vice than we do directly for the support of virtue. This, however, was not the point to which I wished for a moment to invite attention. There is much needed in addition to all that is done.

It is well known that vice loves concealment. When searched out and exposed, like those animals which love darkness, she will disappear, at least for the time; and when all her haunts are discovered and visited by those who feel an interest in the well-being of society, and who carry with them the spirit of the gospel, she will no longer be able to exist;—such light is death to her.

But this cannot be done in a moment, nor without very great and systematic exertion.—Could all the friends of virture but unite and co-operate in this work we should speedily see a mighty revolution. The missionaries may do something, but they cannot do all. The friends of humanity and religion must assist them, not simply by giving them a maintainance, nor by taking them by the hand and inquiring for their welfare and success; but by hearty co-operation and personal exertion. Vice in this city has as many forms as the Hydra had heads;—and to destroy them will require the efforts of all who love the cause of goodness.

The inquiry has sometimes risen in my mind, why do not the philanthropists of Boston, those who give evidence in other respects, of being benevolent, feel on the subject of city vices!—They must know that these vices exist. But do they indeed know that they exist to such an alarming extent! Yes; they must know what is so obvious. Thus I have reasoned with myself. But I am convinced after all that the citizens of Boston have only some general information on this great subject; they have no particular, well authenticated facts; and such from the nature of the case they cannot have till they are willing to look for them.

They must become in some sense Howards themselves, and be willing to try at least to do something to stay the progress of vice and sin, and to benefit those around them. I have heard persons say in relation to neighbors for whose benefit they had made, as they frankly acknowledged, no effort,—'There is very little prospect of doing such persons good.' Very little prospect! Suppose the Apostles had said so in relation to the world lying in wickedness!

But it may be said that this business belongs to those who are employed to attend to it, and not to those who have other engrossing duties. True—God does not require us to do more than we can. But are we not all God's stewards! and can we not all do more than we have done, to check the progress of vice and benefit our fellow-men! Let this question come home to the consciences of those who call themselves philanthropists and Christians, and let them not rest till they have settled it in the fear of God.

Elbridge, 30th. Nov. 1831.

Mr. Chipman:—You will confer a favor on the Synod of Geneva, by publishing the following resolutions, passed at their late session at Homer. Yours, TIMOTHY STOW.

Resolved, That in view of the present state of the church and the world, far more vigorous and systematic efforts must be made before the millennium can be introduced; and whereas the means of securing the fulfilment of the predictions of God respecting the spread of the Gospel and the universal reign of Christ are clearly defined in the scriptures—

Resolved, That every minister and professed christian is, at this time, especially bound to cherish and cultivate a spirit of more devoted piety, and to feel continually, that he is created, redeemed, and continued in the church, for the express purpose of a ding directly and efficiently in the great work of converting the world to Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That in securing this great object, and in the exercise of the spirit of piety which the gospel enjoins, greater sacrifices and self-denial are demanded, than have appeared in the church since the days of the primitive christians.

Resolved, That it is one great and increasingly important duty, for every christian to seek out and aid in supporting young men of piety and talents in preparation for the gospel ministry, and to encourage such young men to pursue a thorough and systematic course in preparation for the sacred office.

Resolved, That it is the duty and privilege of the church to furnish all requisite aid to such young men of piety and talents as are unable to support themselves, yet are willing to consecrate themselves to the gospel ministry, and that such are the facilities for securing a thorough education, and such its importance that no young man should be encouraged to enter the ministry without pursuing a regular and thorough course of study.

Resolved, That in obedience to the injunction and spirit of the gospel, it is important, that unity of design and feeling and unity of effort be pursued in the churches in carrying forward the benevolent efforts, which are required to convert the world; and it is the duty of every christian to increase as far as possible his pecuniary contributions to circulate the sacred Scriptures; to sustain and send forth ministers and missionaries throughout the destitute settlements of our own country and the world."

DESCRIPTION OF A LABORER NEEDED IN THE WEST—FROM A MISS. REPORT.

Now, dear Brethren of the Committee, I desire to speak freely with regard to the kind of men we want; for I think I ought to know, having been brought up in the west, and having labored among the people for years. While I write, I have before me the desolate mantle of your kindred neighbor, and give wings to some warning Tract, that it may fly to and fro, like Noah's dove, over the waste places of the earth. Reclaim the blushing Magdalen to a virtuous shelter; and conduct the ci-devant Vagrant to an industrious home. In short in any and every way, designated by Providence, delight to be the Almoner of the bounty of God.—Knight's Sermons.

VILLAGE MISSION.

The following admirable article in relation to missions as a corrective of city vices, is from the Boston Recorder and as we think it as appropriate to the same subject here as in Boston we have headed it Village Mission and our readers here can if they choose, substitute Village for City and Rochester for Boston—at any rate we hope that our citizens will imagine that it is addressed to them—that it concerns them—and will be profited by perusing it.

A HINT ON CITY VICES.

You say you cannot listen to all these calls for charity from every direction—these benevolent measures multiply faster than your means. But can you do without them! Take, for example, the present exertions for the moral and religious instruction of the poor and for the suppression of vice in this city. Though little, in comparison with the greatness and importance of the object, is known respecting these efforts, they are exerting an influence which is felt in every street and lane; and they can be carried on at far less expense than they can be dispensed with. After all that is said and done we pay far more indirectly for the support of vice than we do directly for the support of virtue. This, however, was not the point to which I wished for a moment to invite attention. There is much needed in addition to all that is done.

It is well known that vice loves concealment. When searched out and exposed, like those animals which love darkness, she will disappear, at least for the time; and when all her haunts are discovered and visited by those who feel an interest in the well-being of society, and who carry with them the spirit of the gospel, she will no longer be able to exist;—such light is death to her.

But this cannot be done in a moment, nor without very great and systematic exertion.—Could all the friends of virture but unite and co-operate in this work we should speedily see a mighty revolution. The missionaries may do something, but they cannot do all. The friends of humanity and religion must assist them, not simply by giving them a maintainance, nor by taking them by the hand and inquiring for their welfare and success; but by hearty co-operation and personal exertion. Vice in this city has as many forms as the Hydra had heads;—and to destroy them will require the efforts of all who love the cause of goodness.

The inquiry has sometimes risen in my mind, why do not the philanthropists of Boston, those who give evidence in other respects, of being benevolent, feel on the subject of city vices!—They must know that these vices exist. But do they indeed know that they exist to such an alarming extent! Yes; they must know what is so obvious. Thus I have reasoned with myself. But I am convinced after all that the citizens of Boston have only some general information on this great subject; they have no particular, well authenticated facts; and such from the nature of the case they cannot have till they are willing to look for them.

They must become in some sense Howards themselves, and be willing to try at least to do something to stay the progress of vice and sin, and to benefit those around them. I have heard persons say in relation to neighbors for whose benefit they had made, as they frankly acknowledged, no effort,—'There is very little prospect of doing such persons good.' Very little prospect! Suppose the Apostles had said so in relation to the world lying in wickedness!

But it may be said that this business belongs to those who are employed to attend to it, and not to those who have other engrossing duties. True—God does not require us to do more than we can. But are we not all God's stewards! and can we not all do more than we have done, to check the progress of vice and benefit our fellow-men! Let this question come home to the consciences of those who call themselves philanthropists and Christians, and let them not rest till they have settled it in the fear of God.

Elbridge, 30th. Nov. 1831.

Mr. Chipman:—You will confer a favor on the Synod of Geneva, by publishing the following resolutions, passed at their late session at Homer. Yours, TIMOTHY STOW.

Resolved, That in view of the present state of the church and the world, far more vigorous and systematic efforts must be made before the millennium can be introduced; and whereas the means of securing the fulfilment of the predictions of God respecting the spread of the Gospel and the universal reign of Christ are clearly defined in the scriptures—

Resolved, That every minister and professed christian is, at this time, especially bound to cherish and cultivate a spirit of more devoted piety, and to feel continually, that he is created, redeemed, and continued in the church, for the express purpose of a ding directly and efficiently in the great work of converting the world to Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That in securing this great object, and in the exercise of the spirit of piety which the gospel enjoins, greater sacrifices and self-denial are demanded, than have appeared in the church since the days of the primitive christians.

Resolved, That it is one great and increasingly important duty, for every christian to seek out and aid in supporting young men of piety and talents in preparation for the gospel ministry, and to encourage such young men to pursue a thorough and systematic course in preparation for the sacred office.

Resolved, That it is the duty and privilege of the church to furnish all requisite aid to such young men of piety and talents as are unable to support themselves, yet are willing to consecrate themselves to the gospel ministry, and that such are the facilities for securing a thorough education, and such its importance that no young man should be encouraged to enter the ministry without pursuing a regular and thorough course of study.

Resolved, That in obedience to the injunction and spirit of the gospel, it is important, that unity of design and feeling and unity of effort be pursued in the churches in carrying forward the benevolent efforts, which are required to convert the world; and it is the duty of every christian to increase as far as possible his pecuniary contributions to circulate the sacred Scriptures; to sustain and send forth ministers and missionaries throughout the destitute settlements of our own country and the world."

DESCRIPTION OF A LABORER NEEDED IN THE WEST—FROM A MISS. REPORT.

Now, dear Brethren of the Committee, I desire to speak freely with regard to the kind of men we want; for I think I ought to know, having been brought up in the west, and having labored among the people for years. While I write, I have before me the desolate mantle of your kindred neighbor, and give wings to some warning Tract, that it may fly to and fro, like Noah's dove, over the waste places of the earth. Reclaim the blushing Magdalen to a virtuous shelter; and conduct the ci-devant Vagrant to an industrious home. In short in any and every way, designated by Providence, delight to be the Almoner of the bounty of God.—Knight's Sermons.

VILLAGE MISSION.

The following admirable article in relation to missions as a corrective of city vices, is from the Boston Recorder and as we think it as appropriate to the same subject here as in Boston we have headed it Village Mission and our readers here can if they choose, substitute Village for City and Rochester for Boston—at any rate we hope that our citizens will imagine that it is addressed to them—that it concerns them—and will be profited by perusing it.

A HINT ON CITY VICES.

You say you cannot listen to all these calls for charity from every direction—these benevolent measures multiply faster than your means. But can you do without them! Take, for example, the present exertions for the moral and religious instruction of the poor and for the suppression of vice in this city. Though little, in comparison with the greatness and importance of the object, is known respecting these efforts, they are exerting an influence which is felt in every street and lane; and they can be carried on at far less expense than they can be dispensed with. After all that is said and done we pay far more indirectly for the support of vice than we do directly for the support of virtue. This, however, was not the point to which I wished for a moment to invite attention. There is much needed in addition to all that is done.

It is well known that vice loves concealment. When searched out and exposed, like those animals which love darkness, she will disappear, at least for the time; and when all her haunts are discovered and visited by those who feel an interest in the well-being of society, and who carry with them the spirit of the gospel, she will no longer be able to exist;—such light is death to her.

But this cannot be done in a moment, nor without very great and systematic exertion.—Could all the friends of virture but unite and co-operate in this work we should speedily see a mighty revolution. The missionaries may do something, but they cannot do all. The friends of humanity and religion must assist them, not simply by giving them a maintainance, nor by taking them by the hand and inquiring for their welfare and success; but by hearty co-operation and personal exertion. Vice in this city has as many forms as the Hydra had heads;—and to destroy them will require the efforts of all who love the cause of goodness.

The inquiry has sometimes risen in my mind, why do not the philanthropists of Boston, those who give evidence in other respects, of being benevolent, feel on the subject of city vices!—They must know that these vices exist. But do they indeed know that they exist to such an alarming extent! Yes; they must know what is so obvious. Thus I have reasoned with myself. But I am convinced after all that the citizens of Boston have only some general information on this great subject; they have no particular, well authenticated facts; and such from the nature of the case they cannot have till they are willing to look for them.

They must become in some sense Howards themselves, and be willing to try at least to do something to stay the progress of vice and sin, and to benefit those around them. I have heard persons say in relation to neighbors for whose benefit they had made, as they frankly acknowledged, no effort,—'There is very little prospect of doing such persons good.' Very little prospect! Suppose the Apostles had said so in relation to the world lying in wickedness!

But it may be said that this business belongs to those who are employed to attend to it, and not to those who have other engrossing duties. True—God does not require us to do more than we can. But are we not all God's stewards! and can we not all do more than we have done, to check the progress of vice and benefit our fellow-men! Let this question come home to the consciences of those who call themselves philanthropists and Christians, and let them not rest till they have settled it in the fear of God.

Elbridge, 30th. Nov. 1831.

Mr. Chipman:—You will confer a favor on the Synod of Geneva, by publishing the following resolutions, passed at their late session at Homer. Yours, TIMOTHY STOW.

Resolved, That in view of the present state of the church and the world, far more vigorous and systematic efforts must be made before the millennium can be introduced; and whereas the means of securing the fulfilment of the predictions of God respecting the spread of the Gospel and the universal reign of Christ are clearly defined in the scriptures—

Resolved, That every minister and professed christian is, at this time, especially bound to cherish and cultivate a spirit of more devoted piety, and to feel continually, that he is created, redeemed, and continued in the church, for the express purpose of a ding directly and efficiently in the great work of converting the world to Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That in securing this great object, and in the exercise of the spirit of piety which the gospel enjoins, greater sacrifices and self-denial are demanded, than have appeared in the church since the days of the primitive christians.

Resolved, That it is one great and increasingly important duty, for every christian to seek out and aid in supporting young men of piety and talents in preparation for the gospel ministry, and to encourage such young men to pursue a thorough and systematic course in preparation for the sacred office.

Resolved, That it is the duty and privilege of the church to furnish all requisite aid to such young men of piety and talents as are unable to support themselves, yet are willing to consecrate themselves to the gospel ministry, and that such are the facilities for securing a thorough education, and such its importance that no young man should be encouraged to enter the ministry without pursuing a regular and thorough course of study.

Resolved, That in obedience to the injunction and spirit of the gospel, it is important, that unity of design and feeling and unity of effort be pursued in the churches in carrying forward the benevolent efforts, which are required to convert the world; and it is the duty of every christian to increase as far as possible his pecuniary contributions to circulate the sacred Scriptures; to sustain and send forth ministers and missionaries throughout the destitute settlements of our own country and the world."

DESCRIPTION OF A LABORER NEEDED IN THE WEST—FROM A MISS. REPORT.

Now, dear Brethren of the Committee, I desire to speak freely with regard to the kind of

---

Let every one who regards selling rum as a Christian duty, make it a subject of habitual secret prayer. Every morning, let him pray for grace to be faithful and successful in selling rum. Whenever he fills a customer's jug, let him lift up his heart to God in prayer that a blessing may attend it. And at night, let him give thanks for the quantity he has been the happy instrument of diffusing, and pray that it may be a means of great good to the purchasers and their families.

A DISGRACE.

In the village of S——, in this county, there is but one merchant who sells the drunkard's drink. Who would you suppose that to be, reader? Some person who had never read his bible! one to whose ears the gospel had never been sounded! one who had not learned that 'peace and good-will' had been proclaimed to earth, that he should deal in discord and death! Would you think him to be an infidel—a hater of God and man? He is none of these:—but —— a professor of religion! And what do you think causes him to continue the traffic? He has "a great many good customers from Vermont, whose custom he is fearful of losing if he does not do it!" Besides, "He is altogether in favor of temperance," and would by no means continue to sell the poison—if he could make as much money without. Who would, pray? We don't know of a single being, good or bad, white or black, sober or drunk, who sells rum for any thing but —— to make money. Precisely what Judas betrayed his master for!—Temp. Advocate.

ANOTHER.

In W——e, Vt. there has been of late considerable done in the temperance cause. The clergyman favored it, and gave his name as a member. This so offended some of the leading members of his church, that they refused to take the sacrament at his hands on the next Sabbath, and are about to dismiss him! Mark!—Those members either sell or drink ardent spirits.—One of them keeps tavern. He, however, is inclined to give it up: but his wife—(a "marble-hearted fiend")—will continue it—aye, and drink a little, too! She, ("sweet creature") would not suffer a young woman living in the family, to marry because the man belonged to the temperance society! "O, shame! where is thy blush!" —Ib.

ORDINATION.

On Monday evening, the 14th inst. Rev. William G. Schauffler was ordained in Park-street meeting house, by a council called for that purpose, as a Missionary to the Jews. The audience was large, and the exercises in a high degree appropriate and impressive.

Professor Stewart's text, was Romans xi. 25, 3d. His chief object was to exhibit some of the more prominent scriptural grounds of encouragement to missionary effort among the Jews.

Mr. Schauffler is a native of Germany, but resided for several years at Odessa, South Russia, his family having been among the German Colonists, who emigrated to the region of the Black Sea some years ago. He came to this country above five years since; completed the regular study at Andover in 1830, and has spent the last year there as Aboot Resident. He leaves Boston this week for New-york, where he will immediately take passage for Havre, with the intention of spending a few months in Paris, in the prosecution of studies for which that capital affords greater facilities than any other place. He will then proceed on his mission, directing his course first, probably, to Constantinople.—Although supported by the Jews' Society, he is under the direction of the A. B. C. F. M. He has been naturalized, having resided in this country the requisite time, and goes out as a citizen of the United States.

Duel and Steam Boat Explosion.—The Cincinnati Commercial Advertiser of the 11th ult., contains a paragraph stating that on the 8th, two gentlemen of Louisville, with their friends crossed over in the steam ferry boat to the Indiana shore, to settle a difference between them by duel. The boat was crowded with passengers who went over to witness the scene. After the duel, in which one of the parties was slightly wounded in the head, all hands embarked on board the boat, to return to Louisville, when both boilers bursted, and four persons were instantly killed, viz: Mr. Logue of Louisville, Mr. Crew, of Jeffersonville Springs, the engineer and a fireman; one person since dead, and several others wounded, one of whom is not expected to recover.—From the number of hats and shoes found, it is feared there were more deaths than are here reported.

Flour and Wheat.—The arrivals of flour this year are said to be 100,000 bbls from the West and as many from the south, less than last year,—besides 700,000 bushels less of wheat. In fact the business this year has been a small matter in comparison with the last. In both years, all which came was readily sold, proving that our market, even in the present state of restriction throughout the world, is capable of enlargement to almost any extent, and yet that the world, if necessary, can do without us. They reason against the whole current of facts, who insist that we always export just as much as foreign nations will buy of us, and that if we produced a larger quantity, it must perish on our hands, or be sent abroad to the ruin of prices every where. It would be just as true and liberal to say, that the ocean is exactly full, and if another stream were turned in, it would immediately overflow its banks and drown the world again.—Jour. Com.

From the N. Y. Spectator.

Poland.—Before the close of the revolutionary struggle, the Polish cause seems to have been stained by treachery and cowardice. The Russian bulletins giving an account of the operations at Warsaw, asserts positively, that the army was included in the capitulation. According to the London Morning Herald, the corps of Rybinski, one of those who marched out of Warsaw, is said to have revolted—to have murdered its commander—and to have turned out a mere troop of brigands. Besides disunion, treachery is thought to have had a share in the base surrender of the capital—or if not treachery, downright cowardice. The Russian bulletins, which these papers contain at great length, admit that when Krukowiecki saw the squadrons advancing for the last time, he was seized with "a panic terror" which deprived him of all self-possession, and he immediately struck his colors. The following is the begging letter which this caitiff miscreant addressed to the Emperor:—

"Sire,—Being at this moment commissioned to address your Imperial, and Royal Majesty in the name of the whole Polish nation, I apply through his Excellency the Field Marshal Count Paskewitch of Erivan, to your paternal heart, while we submit without any conditions, to your Majesty our King, the Polish nation knows that you alone are able to cause the past to be forgotten, and to heal the deep wounds that have been inflicted on my country.

(signed) count KRUCKOWICKI.

Warsaw, Sept. 7, 1831, 6o'clock in eve.

The Russian bulletins admit a loss in the taking of Warsaw of only 1000 killed, and 1500 wounded, which goes to strengthen the impression that the Poles had been sold.

MARRIED.

In this village on the 23d ult. by the Rev. Mr. Penney Mr. Frederick Starr to Miss Lucy Ann Hills, all of this place.

In Buffalo, by Rev. Mr. Eaton, Mr. Wm. Davis, to Miss Julia Stanley.

In New York, Mr. H. D. Ward, one of the Editors of the N. Y. Whig, to Miss Ally P. M'Glashan, of that city.

In Buffalo, on the 27th ult. by Rev. Mr. Stone Mr. Levi Sater, of St. Thomas, U. C. to Miss Julia Kress, of the former place.

In Buffalo, on the 29th ult. by the Rev. Mr. Tucker, Mr. Oliver G. Steele, to Miss Sarah Hull.

In Sardinia, on the 29th ult. by S. Penney, Esq., Mr. Samuel B. Conner, to Miss Lodania Dake.

DIED.

On the 1st inst. at the house of Mr. William Atkinson, in this village, Thomas Wells Hills, of Auburn, in the 7th year of his age.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	$1 00 —
Flour, bbl.	5 12½
Corn	32
Oats
Beef, fresh	2 50
Pork, do.
Salt, bbl.	1 12½

Rochester price Current.

CLOTHING STORE.

THE Subscriber has received from N. York an addition to his former stock of Goods, which he will be happy to make to the order of his friends and customers.

Ready Made Clothing,

constantly on hand. He would hereby remark that he does not mean to be excelled in workmanship—neither will he allow himself to be undersold.

DAVID BISSELL.

No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. All persons indebted to the late firm of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. are earnestly requested to make immediate payment otherwise—— D. B.

Nov. 29, 1831.

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber for costs or having unsettled claims on his Docket are requested to call and settle the same without delay. DAVID BISSELL.

Nov. 29, 1831. No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. Wanted to hire, out any quantity of Wood from fifty to five hundred cords. Enquire as above.

LAST CALL.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hill & Peet are hereby notified that unless payment is made by 1st December, they will be sued. LEWIS L. PEET

Nov. 14, 1831. 47-3w

1000 ACRES OF ILLINOIS LAND, for Sale or Exchange for Farms. Enquire of E. D. SMITH, or H. B. WILLIAMS.

Rochester, Nov. 15, 1831.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the sum of money secured by one Indenture of mortgage bearing date the eleventh day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty two, executed by David Hooper and Savannah his wife to Daniel Penfield, which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Henry Hamilton, and is recorded in the Office of the Clerk of Monroe County in Liber 31 of Mortgages page 631, on which said indenture of mortgage there is claimed to be due and payable at the time of the first publication of this notice, the sum of three hundred and sixty dollars and twenty nine cents. NOTICE is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute in such case made and provided the premises described in said mortgage as follows, viz. All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Penfield in the county of Monroe and state of New York being a part of lot number forty three in township number three in the fifth range of townships in the county of Ontario and state of New York, and bounded as follows, viz.—North, east and west on the lines of said division and south on a line of land parallel to the north line of said lot forty three and distant therefrom one hundred and forty rods, and containing one hundred and twenty acres of land be the same more or less, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Stowell in the town of Penfield in the county of Monroe, on the 7th day of May next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 7th day of November 1831.

L. ADAMS, Ass. HENRY HAMILTON.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of certain sum of money secured by a Indenture of Mortgage bearing date the first day of September in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty executed by David H. Burt and Susannah his wife to Daniel Penfield, which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Henry Hamilton and is recorded in the Office of the Clerk of Monroe County in Liber 31 of Mortgages page 631, on which said indenture of mortgage there is claimed to be due and payable at the time of the first publication of this notice, the sum of three hundred and sixty dollars and twenty nine cents. —Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of a power contained in said mortgage and by force of the statute in such case made and provided the premises described in said mortgage as follows, viz.—All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Penfield in the county of Monroe and state of New York being a part of lot number forty three in township number three in the fifth range of townships in the county of Ontario and state of New York, and bounded as follows, viz.—North, east and west on the lines of said division and south on a line of land parallel to the north line of said lot forty three and distant therefrom one hundred and forty rods, and containing one hundred and twenty acres of land be the same more or less, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder at the house now occupied by Samuel H. Stowell in the town of Penfield in the county of Monroe, on the 7th day of May next at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day. Dated the 7th day of November 1831.

L. ADAMS, Ass. HENRY HAMILTON.

IN CHANCERY.

Philip Church vs. John C. Williams, Francis M. Jenkins, Simeon P. Alcott and William Ayres.

In pursuance of a decretal order of this Court made in the above cause and bearing date the 27th day of November, 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder at the Eagle Tavern, in the village of Rochester & county of Monroe on the 21st day of January next, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following described premises, viz. All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in the town of Gates, county of Monroe and state of New York, and on lot number fifty three, in township number one, and distinguished as follows on a map of Cornhill and subdivision of said lot as village lot number thirty three on the west side of Main street leading from Rochester to Canandaigua.

ASHER SAMPSON,
Master in Chancery.

Dated December 7, 1831.

Millenery & Mantuam

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the Atlantic Souvenir for 1832.

THE AFRICAN'S DREAM.

BY MISS E. H. CHANDLER.

Why did ye wake me from my sleep? it was a dream of bliss!
And ye have torn me from that land, to pine again in this.
Methought, beneath yon whispering tree, that I was laid to rest,
The turf with all its withering flowers, upon my cold heart pressed.

My chains, these hateful chains, were gone—Oh! would that I might die—
So from my swelling pulse, I could for ever cast them by!
And on, away o'er land and sea, my joyful spirit passed,
Till 'neath my own banana-tree I lighted down at last.

My cabin door, with all its flowers, was still profusely gay,
As when I lightly sported there, in childhood's careless day;
But trees, that then were sapling twigs, with broad and shadowing bough,
Around the well known threshhold spread a freshening coolness now.

The birds, whose notes I used to hear, were shouting on the earth,
As if to greet me back again with their wild songs of mirth;
My own bright stream was at my feet, and how I laughed to lave
My burning lip, and cheek, and brow, in that delicious wave!

My boy, my first born babe, had died amid his early hours,
And there we laid him to his sleep, among these clustering flowers;
Yet lo! without my cottage door he sported in his glee,
With her whose grave is far from his, beneath yon linden tree.

I sprang to snatch them to my soul, when, breathing out my name,
To grasp my hand and press my lips, a crowd of loved ones came!
Wife, parents, children, kinsmen, friends! the dear and lost ones all,
With blessed words of welcome came, to greet me from my thrall.

Forms, long unseen, were by my side; and, thrilling on my ear,
Came cadences, from gentle tones, unheard for many a year;
And on my cheek fond lips were pressed with true affection's kiss—
And so ye waked me for my tears—but 'twas a dream of bliss!

THE INDIAN'S APPEAL TO WHITE MEN.

I dwell with the tempest, I'm rock'd by the storm;
No pillow of luxury come I to crave,
Sole lord of the brute in whose furs I am warm,
Yet, pity the Red Man, ye sons of the wave.

Ere the wide-spreading ocean now rolling so blue,
Your ancestors bore from afar to our shore,
These forest comprised all of pleasure we knew,
Then pity the Red Man, thus happy no more.

Enamour'd of freedom where cities arise,
No bonds of confinement these limbs shall annoy,
Yet there lies in your hands a superlative prize,
Oh! pity the Red Man and bid him enjoy.

You have laws which the beauty of order afford,
Which the savage ferocious compel to be tame,
You speak,—and the passions are still at his word,
Then pity the Red Man,—and teach him the same.

What is that which excites the ineffable sigh,
When the wretched their burdens of sorrow reveal,
And expresses communion of joy by the eye!
Declare to the Red Man, that he too may feel.

You drink at the fountain of mental delights,
Where streams intellectual deliciously roll,
And while the rich banquet so sweetly invites,
Ah! pity the Red Man, he too has a soul.

The comforts which civilized manners impart,
And the Arts and the Sciences blossom to give,
Shine full on your breasts, and ennoble the heart,
Then pity the Red Man, and teach him to live.

But, chief—the blest name to Christians so dear,
Your passport to mansions of glory on high,
That name which supports you in death without fear,
Make known to the Red Man, and teach him to die.

THE ROSE OF THE DESERT.

The sun o'er the mountain rose beaming and bright
In the sky of the orient—a fountain of light;
Nature smiled in its splendor so cheerful and gay,
And all things rejoiced in the coming of day.

I pass'd through the desert where the rose bloomed so fair—
It had oped its bright leaves to the sweet scented air;
A dew-drop still hung, like a crystalline gem,
Which fell like a tear as it shook on its stem.

I return'd, but, alas! it was fading away;
The north wind had been, with his breath of decay;
It scattered its leaves near the spot where it grew,
Which were wafted away by the wind as it blew.

So virtue's fair form, unbefriended and poor,
Is oft seen to rise in some cottage obscure;
In the pride of her beauty, she blooms for a while,
And lists to the false one's soft tale with a smile.

But ah! the rude spoiler, the blighter she fell, comes,
Then leaves her to weep in affliction's dark hour:
Grief preys in her bosom, where joy ne'er must rise,
Till heart-broken with sorrow, forsaken, she dies.

Sheffield Iris.

From the Utica Sent. & Gazette.

DEATH AND THE MAIDEN.

"Come, maiden, come out from the youthful throng,
With thy laughing eye, and thy voice of song;
Come down from thy father's ancient halls,
From thy happy home and its cherish'd walls;
Thine eye is bright, and thy cheek is fair,
But the cold earth-worm shall revel there,
For I come with my damp, destroying breath,
To bear thee down to the shades of death."

Oh, stay, grim death, till the summer flies,
Till the lily fades, and the violet dies,
For I cannot leave these blooming bowers,
Oh, no, I must wither with the flowers.
Oh, stay till the summer roses fade!
Oh, stay till the birds forsake the shade,
Then bear me down to the silent tomb,
'Tis meet to die when the world is gloom.

Come, maiden, come, for the flowers are dead,
And the music of the groves has fled,
And the vines that cluster'd round thy bower,
Have sunk 'neath autumn's withering power;
Come, for the summer's bloom is past,
And the stormy spirit is coming fast,
And the raven croaks in the hollow tree,
Then haste, maiden, haste, and follow me.

Oh, nay, there is one that loves me well;
And I cannot go with thee to dwell;
He waits for the winter evening hour,
To lead me to the bridal bower,
Oh, take me not when my heart is glad,
But stay till his coldness makes me sad;
Stay, stay till his love hath ceased to be,
Not soon, I ween, wilt thou come for me.

Come, oh come, for thy joys are o'er,
And thy early hopes are thine no more;
The rose that bloom'd on thy cheek is fled,
And where is the light thine eye once shed?
He that once lov'd thee, his heart is cold,
He loves thee not, as in days of old,
He hath caused the bitter tears to flow,
Then come with me to the shades below.

O, call me not, though my heart is woe,
I love my child, and I cannot go;
The little flower that God hath given,
Oh, let me fit its soul for heaven,
For none would guide in a world like this,
Its infant soul to a land of bliss;
And its soul in guilt would be beguil'd,
No, I cannot go, for I love my child,

Come! lone one, come, for thy widow'd heart
Hath none belov'd from whom to part,
The child that heaven in pity gave,
I have lain it low in the silent grave,
And those you lov'd in the days gone by,
Beneath the "clods of the valley lie:"
There is none on earth to weep for thee,
Then, lone one, come and follow me.

They laid my child in the dark cold grave,
Where the mournful yews and cypress wave,
And I strew'd wild roses round its tomb;
Oh, let me live till those roses bloom;
For daily I sit me down and weep,
Where the loving and the lov'd once sleep,
And when I have seen those roses bloom,
I will go with thee to my long lost home.

I come, I come, and my arm is strong,
Follow me down to the sleeping throng;
The flowers you strew'd round the lov'd one's clay,
Have budded and blossom'd, and wither'd away,
Then cross with me death's stormy main,
The end is bliss, but the journey pain;
My arrow is sure, and strong my bow,
So haste with me to the shades below.

Whitesborough. F. M. B

OCCASIONS OF ENMITY AGAINST CHRISTIANITY.

FROM RICHARD CECIL.

The cause of enmity against real christianity is in the heart. The angel Gabriel might exhibit the truth, but the heart would rise in enmity. To suppose that there is any way of preaching the cross so as not to offend the world, is to know nothing of the subject.

There are many occasions, however, of calling forth this enmity. Any man, who should bleed me, would put me to pain; but he would greatly aggravate my pain, if he rudely tore my skin. Occasions may render the reception of that truth morally impossible which, under the most favorable circumstances, is received with difficulty.

Ignorance in ministers, is an occasion of exciting enmity against christianity. A man may betray ignorance on almost every subject except the way of salvation; but if others see him to be a fool off his own ground, they will think him a fool on that ground. It is a great error to rail against human learning, so as to imply an undervaluing of knowledge. A man may have little of what is called learning, but he must have knowledge. Bunyan was such a man.

Relig ous profession was, at first, a conflict—a sacrifice: now it is become a trade. The world sees this spirit pervade many men: and it is a great occasion of enmity. Men of learning and character have confirmed this impression: they have brought out this mischief, and exhibited it to the world. Let any man look into Warburton's "Doctrine of Grace," and he may sit down and wonder that God should suffer such occasions of enmity to arise.

Fanatical times furnish another occason. The days of Cromwell, for instance. The great enemy of godliness will never want instruments to make the best of such subjects of ridicule. As long as such a book as Butler's Hudibras is in the world, it will supply occasions of enmity against real religion.

An unholy, insolent professor of religion occasions enmity. He scorns and insults mankind. His spirit is such as to give them occasion of contemning the truth which he professes. The world will allow some men to call it to account: they will feel a weight of character in a holy and just man.

Eccentricity, in religious men, is another occasion of enmity. Ask an eccentric man a question, he will stare you in your face, and look very spiritual. I knew one of these men who called out to a farmer as he was passing, "Farmer! what do you know of Jesus Christ?"—Much spiritual pride lurks under this conduct. There is want of breeding and good sense. The world is led to form wrong associations by such characters: "Religion makes a man a fool or mad: therefore I will not become religious."

Injudicious preaching increases the offence of the cross. Strange interpretations of scripture—ludicrous comparisons—silly stories—talking without thinking—these are occasions of enmity.

The loose and indiscreet conduct of professing christians, particularly of ministers, is another occasion. The world looks at ministers out of the pulpit, to know what they mean when in it.

An ostentatious spirit in a professor of religion does great injury—the giving out that he is some great one. Even a child will often detect this spirit, when we think no one discovers it.

The manner of conducting the devotional part of public service is sometimes offensive. It is as much as to say, "we mean nothing by this service. Have patience and you shall hear me!"

Slighting the offence of irregularity has done much harm. It was a wise reply of a Spanish minister to his king: "Omit this affair, it is but a ceremony!"—"A ceremony! Why the King is a ceremony!"

Good men have given occasion of offence by maintaining suspicious connections. There is a wide difference between my not harassing and exposing a doubtful character, and my indorsing and authenticating him.

Contempt of men's prejudices of education will offend. It was not thus with St. Paul: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

A want of the spirit of the cross in its professors increases the offence of the cross—that humility, patience, and love to souls, which animated Christ when he offered himself on the cross for the sins of the world.

These are some of the stumbling-blocks in the way of the world. And wo unto the world, says our Lord, because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come, but wo unto him by whom the offence cometh! Every man, who is zealous for the diffusion of true religion, should keep his eye on all occasions of offence, since religion, of itself and in its own native beauty, has to encounter the natural enmity of the degenerate heart.

TRACT HAND BILLS.

The brief relation which follows is given in the 32d Annual Report of the Religious Tract Society in London for circulating religious publications, 1831. It was told by a clergyman in Yorkshire, England, and it proves at the same time, the value of Tracts and of Sunday Schools, and shows how they co-operate in doing good. The clergyman thus observes:

"I was called some weeks ago to visit a sick old man, who had regularly attended public worship, and I found him in a pious, happy state of mind. At the close of every visit, I left a hand bill with him; for which he always expressed great thankfulness. It came out, however, a few days ago, that my old friend was eighty years of age, and that he could not read a single word! I was surprised; and I therefore asked him, 'My dear friend, what could you do with them?' How is it that you told me so often, that they were so very good for you?" He replied, "O sir, there were no Sunday Schools when I was a lad; I was sadly let down all my life because I could not read. But, thank God, I could hear, and had a pretty good memory. I sent my children to school, and my grandchildren to Sunday Schools. The son of my granddaughter now reads the hand bills to me. If you turn that board, sir, you will see every one of them nailed to it. I thus keep them all clean and neat. This lad, when he comes home at night, reads them to me; and a glorious library, sir, I find my board to be. Every new bill adds to my store, and I bless the Lord for them all." I promised to fill the old man's board, which I shall do when I get the 12000 hand bills, which the society has promised to me. I have also prevailed upon a barber to put up the hand bills in his shop some time ago; and when a customer waits, he is directed to read them. In many instances, good has been done, and the man's custom has greatly increased. He is a good distributor of hand-bills for me, for many who like the tracts on his walls, beg copies of them to take home with them. He is very often clamorous for a fresh supply.

CLOSE PREACHING.

Some time in the summer of 1805, Bishop McKendree, then presiding elder of the district, was preaching near Maysville, (or Limestone, as it is usually called,) the landing place for most of the emigrants to the upper part of the state of Kentucky. His subject naturally led him to enlarge on extortion. It was here that the emigrants were frequently exposed to impositions of various kinds from want of a knowledge of the prices of different commodities; with his usual ingenuity he pressed the subject very closely. "Yes," said he, "it frequently happens that some take the advantage of the poor emigrant too, that has removed to your fine country to become your neighbor and fellow citizen; you sell him your corn or other produce at a double price, and for the corn, when it is only worth fifty cents a bushel, you ask a dollar; ah! and receive it too of the poor man who has to grapple with misfortunes to support his family!" An aged gentleman sitting near the door was discovered to become more and more uneasy; his hoary locks gave him a venerable cast, but the emotions of his mind were such as to operate upon the muscular movements of his features. As the subject was pressed, his agitation increased; he could stand it no longer; but rising from his seat, thus addressed the preacher, "If I did sell my corn for a dollar a bushel, I gave them six months to pay it in." "Sit down, my friend," calmly replied the Bishop, "sit down, sir, if you please; we are not in the habit of making personal reflections!"—[Rel. Rem.]

GENERAL WASHINGTON WAS A GOOD BOY.

The Marquis de Lafayette repaired to Fredericksburg, previous to his departure for Europe, in the fall of 1784, to pay his parting respects to the mother of Washington.

Conducted by one of her grandsons, he approached the house, when the young gentleman observed, "There sir, is my grandmother." Lafayette beheld, working in the garden, clad in domestic-made clothes, and her gray head covered by a plain straw hat, the Mother of this hero! The Lady saluted him kindly, observing—"Ah, Marquis! you see an old woman—but come, I can make you welcome to my poor dwelling, without the parade of changing my dress."

Much as Lafayette had heard and seen of the matron before, at this interesting interview he was charmed and struck with wonder. When he considered her great age, the transcendent elevation of her son, who, surpassing all rivals in the race of glory, 'bore the palm alone,' and at the same time discovered no change in her plain, yet dignified life and manners, he became assured that the Roman matron could flourish in the modern day.

The Marquis spoke of the happy effects of the revolution, and the goodly prospect which opened upon independent America, stated his speedy departure for his native land, and paid the tribute of his heart, his love and admiration of her illustrious son. To the encomiums which he had lavished upon his hero and paternal chief, the matron replied in these words: "I am not surprised at what George has done, for he was always a very good boy."—Ladies Mag.

From the Christian Index.

A PRACTICAL WAY OF SETTLING CONTROVERSY.—A gentleman and lady, one evening toa late hour, amused, and perhaps instructed, a select religious circle, by taking different sides in popular controversy. The gentleman was on the side of Calvinism, and the lady assumed conscientiously the Arminian side. After much being said on both sides, the gentleman, whether intentionally or not, it is not said, kept his strong argument till they were parting to go to rest.—"Ma'am," said he, "I suppose before you go to bed you address the Divine Being." "Surely," said she. "Then," said he, "you will have the goodness to tell Him, that you sought him before he sought you." "No!" said she with vehemence, "I won't!"

Those who are taught by the truth and Spirit of God have the same creed at the throne of grace.

MENTOR.

A Centurion in a Romish army was missed from his place in the ranks during a very hot action. The battle raged, and the contest was hard and long, but still the officer did not appear at the head of his band! After the conflict was over, his general sent for him to inquire why he was not in his place duing the engagement. His reply was "that he was in the camp keeping guard." His Commander, however, considered this excuse insufficient, and in ordering him for punishment, remarked, "I do not love those whose diligence is excessive." Keeping guard in the camp at a proper time, and under proper instructions, would have been the Centurion's duty. But it was highly blame-worthy in him to constrain one duty to give place to another. I have thought, Mr. Editor, that some of your christian readers might be benefitted by this concise narrative. At present the armies of the Lord are mustered and have taken the field against the god of this world. There has been a going forth out of the Camp, to carry in triumph the doctrine of the Cross. Many noble lives have been devoted to this work, and not little treasure has been expended. Every one on the Lord's side has a duty to perform, and our great Captain will not thank us for remaining behind to guard the Camp when we should be out in the open field exerting ourselves in deeds of generous heroism.—Ib. VINDEX.

RELIGIOUS REFUGE.—The Pope of Rome has lately published an edict which has made him extremely unpopular. It institutes an asylum for assassins at Ostia, and some other unhealthy towns, about ten leagues from Rome, though, it is to be feared, at the imminent risk of travellers near them.—Badger's W. Messenger.

A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil: but the fool rageth and is confident.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage executed by Moses Adams of Penfield in Monroe county to Laura M. Ely, and Winslow Heath, of the same place bearing date the twenty eighth day of November 1828 & recorded in the Clerk's office of Monroe county in Liber 8 of mortgages at page 458, executed by Edward Carter to Josiah Bissell Junior, conveyance on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and forty seven dollars and seventy three cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being fourteen rods in front on the south side of lot No. seventy two, bounded south by lot no. 23, east by part of lot No. 71, north by lot No. 20 and west by Clinton Street containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBEL W RILEY, } Executors of
S. MATHEWS, } Josiah Bissell jr. deceased
V. A. S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date the twenty ninth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty seven, and recorded in Monroe county clerk's office, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 458, executed by Edward Carter to Josiah Bissell Junior, conveyance on which there is due at the date of the first publication of this notice, the sum of one hundred and forty seven dollars and seventy four cents, being the purchase money of the mortgaged premises herein after mentioned—Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises to wit,—All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the town of Brighton, in the county of Monroe, being fourteen rods in front on the south side of lot No. seventy two, bounded south by lot no. 23, east by part of lot No. 71, north by lot No. 20 and west by Clinton Street containing four acres and eighty hundredths of an acre of land more or less, will be sold at public auction in the Arcade Hall in the village of Rochester in said county on the second day of April next at twelve o'clock at noon of that day. Dated October 6th, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix.
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBEL W RILEY, } Executors of
S. MATHEWS, } Josiah Bissell jr. deceased
V. A. S. MATHEWS, Attorneys.

IN CHANCERY—Joseph Strong vs. Silas Unsported } by virtue of a decretal order of the Court of Chancery made in the above entitled cause on the 7th day of Sept. 1831, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the twenty third day of December next, at ten o'clock in the afternoon of said day at the Eagle Tavern in the village of Rochester, the following described premises, viz. All those certain lots of land situate in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe, in the subdivision of a part of lot number thirty in township number one short ranges west of the Genesee river, and known on a map or plot of town lots made by Elisha Ely some time since, number two on the east side of Allen street, bounded north on Allen and Bread streets, westerly by lot three, number six on same, southerly by Alling street. Also lot four, bounded easterly by lot three, northerly by an alley leading from Bread to Exchange street, westerly by Broad street, south by Alling street. Also, lot forty nine bounded easterly by lot forty nine, westerly by lot forty eight, southerly on Hill street.

Dated Nov 9th, 1831. ASHLEY SAMSON
Master in Chancery

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby notified that if they have any demands or claims against the estate of John Nichols deceased, late of the town of Brighton, they are hereby requested to call on the subscribers and settle the same within six months from this date.—And all persons who are indebted to the said estate are requested to call and settle the same without delay. BENJAMIN COWLES, Admr's.
6w 38.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that the subscribers will apply to the Legislature of the state of New York, at their next session, to incorporate them and their associates under the style of "The Rochester Institute of Practical Education," to be located in the village of Rochester and County of Monroe.

CHARLES M. LEE,
MOSES CHAPIN,
JAMES SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM WISNER,
JOSEPH PENNEY, &
LUKE LYONS.

Nov. 17. 47 6w

PURSUANT to an order of Mortimer F. Delano, Surrogate of the County of Monroe, Notice is hereby given to all the creditors of Josiah Bissell Jun. late of Rochester in said county, deceased, to exhibit their demands with the vouchers thereof, to Josiah Bissell one of the executors of the last will and testament of the said deceased, at his office in Rochester aforesaid, on or before the twenty fifth day of May next.—Dated November 10, 1831.

HENRIETTA BISSELL, Executrix,
EVERARD PECK,
ASHBEL W RILEY, } Executors.
S. MATHEWS,

ROCHESTER BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE subscriber has received his Spring Stock consisting in part of 800 sides oak and red Sole Leather, 400 waxed and grained Upper do. 40 dozen Calf Skins, Buck Morocco, for men's and women's Boots and Shoes. Checkered smooth Bronze, grained do. yellow, light and dark blue, and purple Morocco, 600 yards Prunella of different colors, some super super black, better than ever before offered in this market. Shoe Thread Linings, Bindings, Webbings, Laces, silk and cotton Ferreting, Ribbons, &c. together with a complete assortment of Findings. The above, with the usual assortment of Boots and Shoes, of all descriptions, made and making, are offered at wholesale or retail, to the public, who, with former customers, are requested to call and be suited at the old and well known stand, NO. 18 Carroll street, Rochester. 22tf JACOB GOULD.

REMOVAL.

WILLIAMS & MERRILL, Dealers in Leather, Hides, Oil, &c. would inform their friends and the public that they have removed from their old stand on Mason St. to No. 16 in the Globe Building where they have now on hand a large stock of Leather, Hides Oil Curriers Tools, &c. &c. which they expect soon to replenish, and will be happy to wait on their old friends and customers, & as many new ones as shall be pleased to call on them, assuring them that they will sell as cheap as the cheapest.

N. B. The highest price in Cash always paid for Hides and Calf Skins. 3m41.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO. And Ætna Fire Insurance Company, Hartford, the subscriber as Agent for the above mentioned Companies will Issue Policies of Insurance on Property in this vicinity, upon application at his office in Carroll Street.
January 9, 1829. LEVI WARD Jr.

THRESHING MACHINES.

THE subscribers have established a Threshing Machine Manufactory, in Rochester, on Water Street, next door North of Mr Grave's Tannery, on the East side of the River, where they are manufacturing Machines of several kinds of the most approved Patents. We would suggest that great improvements have been recently made in said Machines, and we feel confident in recommending the Machines we are now building, to Farmers; believing that they are not surpassed by any other Machine used for that purpose; and their construction is cheap and durable.

JOSEPH HALL,
GIDEON CANDY.
Rochester, June 8th 1831. 24tf

DUTCH BOULTING CLOTH.

THE subscribers keep constantly on hand a stock of Dutch Bolting Cloths of the different Manufactories, viz: Anchor, Plant, Harlaem, and Star, which they will sell to all cases at retail, at a small advance from the New York prices. Large Flouring Establishments supplied at New York prices, and they will warrant all cloths sold by them.

Burr Mill Stones.

We are also agents for the sale of Burr Mill Stones, and will sell as low as they can be had, and will warrant as good as can be purchased in the State. THOMAS KEMPSHALL, & Co.
35 State (formerly Carroll) Street.
Oct. 27. 1831. 44

ROCHESTER CHEMICAL MANUFACTORY AND NEW DRUGS & MEDICINE ESTABLISHMENT.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the public generally, and Physicians in particular, that he has recently connected with the Rochester Chemical Manufactory a full assortment of carefully selected to which he invites the attention of purchasers both by wholesale and retail.

DRUGS & MEDICINE,

Dealers are desired to take particular notice that all the varieties of approved patent and certified Family Medicine now in use will be furnished at the lowest New York Factory Prices, and that every reasonable inducement will be offered for purchasing at this Western Establishment in addition to saving of transportation, risk of breakage, &c. &c.

All orders for Drugs and Medicine, operative Surgical and Dental Instruments, Infirmary sporting, ordinary and extraordinary, executed with promptness and care, by

LEVI BURNELL, Druggist,
At the Sign of the Alligator, No. 11, Carroll St.
41tf

SURROGATE'S NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Surrogate of Monroe County, will attend at his office in Pittsford, for the transaction of business, on Monday of each week, as required by the Revised Statutes; and generally on all other days except Wednesdays; and on Wednesday of each week he will attend during the day at Rochester, in the office of the Hon. Samuel L. Selden, in the Arcade, for the transaction of business, until further notice.
May 5, 1831. M. F. DELANO, Surrogate.

Porter's Health Almanac, FOR 1832.

JUST received and for sale by the gross, dozen or single, at the publisher's prices at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.
One door south of the Bank of Rochester.
Oct. 27. 44

NEW BOOK STORE.

THE subscribers would respectfully inform the inhabitants of Rochester and vicinity that they are now receiving and opening a splendid assortment of BOOKS among which are Quarto BIBLES of every description.

Henry's Exposition, Scott's do. Brown's and Cruden's Concordance, Testaments, Theological and Classical Books.

An elegant assortment of PRAYER BOOKS, together with a general assortment of Blank Books, Albums Slates, Pencils, Wafers, Sealing Wax, Expositor of Pencils, Wallets, Ink Handstands, &c.

All of which will be sold on the most reasonable terms. Store one door south of the Bank of Rochester.

The public are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves.

SKINNER & PHELPS.
Rochester, Oct. 20, 1831. 43

NEW BOOKS.

HOLY LIVING AND DYING, with Prayers containing the complete duty of a Christian, By JEREMY TAYLOR, D. D.

Babington on Education, with a preliminary essay, By T. H. GALLAUDET.

The Child's Book on the Soul particularly designed for elementary instruction in Sunday schools. By T. H GALLAUDET.

The Christian Lyre, Vol. 2., By JOSEPH LEAVITT. Just received and for sale at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.
Oct. 27, 1831. 44

JUST received, "THE CATECHISM OF HEALTH," or plain and simple rules for the preservation of the health and vigor of the constitution from infancy to old age, dedicated to youth of both sexes throughout the United States as well as to Parents and Guardians.

For sale at the publisher's prices at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS.
One door south of the Bank of Rochester.

ALSO, the Effects of the principal Arts Trades and Professions, and of the civic states, and habits of living on Health and longevity. For sale as above. Oct. 27. 44

Sabbath School Books.

UNION Questions, 1st, 2d & 3d vols. A full supply of all the publications of the AMERICAN S. S. UNION. Also, A variety of Miscellaneous Books, suitable for Sabbath Schools.

Among the more recently published will be found the Following: British Officer—Helen and her Cousin—Young Freethinker—S. Bacon—Grandfather Gregory—Oberlin—Life and travels of St. Paul—Mrs. Judson—Little Susan—Francke—Child's Expositor—Dick's Future State—Dwight's Vocabulary—Evening Recreation—Mrs. Huntington—Incidents in the Life of Dwight—Letters from Europe (Sprague's)—S. J. Mills—Nathan Dickerman—Pious Shepherd—Pious Sisters—Pleasing Expositor—Temperance Family—Memoirs of Howard, &c. &c.

For sale at the DEPOSITORY, No. 36, State, (formerly Carroll) Street.

WM. H. WARD & Co. (WARDLE BUILDING Carroll Street,) have just received a full supply of GOODS. Rochester, June 2, 1831.

ANNALS OF TRYON COUNTY By W. W. CAMPBELL, just published and for sale at the NEW BOOK STORE, one door south of the Rochester Bank. SKINNER & PHELPS.
Oct. 17. 43

FANCY DYING.

Neither from Dublin nor London.

H. YOUNG, lately from the city of Glasgow, has taken the stand formerly occupied by Mr. Kinchella, at the west end of Curtiss' Block Building, Main-St.

H. Y. respectfully informs the citizens of Rochester and its vicinity that he has commenced dying and dressing all qualities of Silk Crapes, Bombazine, &c. &c. Likewise will dye linen and cotton goods—Clouded woolen yarn Stockings any color wanted kept on hand Carpet, or fine worsted yarn, dyed to any pattern.

N. B. Merino Shawls cleaned Ladies and Gentlemen's wearing apparel cleaned and dressed in the first style—Reward Meri. 38 6m

More New Books!!

Willson's Evidences.
Baxter's Call to the unconverted.
Advice to a young Christian.
Pleasantness of a religious life.
Church Member's Guide, by J. A. James
Jay's Lectures.
Payson's Sermons.
Pleasing expositor.
Consistency. By Charlotte Elizabeth.
Payson's Memoirs
Scougal's Works.
Mental Discipline. By H. F. Burder, M. Edition.
Wardlaw's Discourses on Prayer.
Sumner's Expository Lectures, on Matt. & Mark
Paschal's Provincial Letters.
Willson on the Divine Authority and Perpetual Obligation of the Lord's Day.
Wilk's Christian Essays.
Fuller's Holy State.
Boston's Fourfold State.
The Christian Ministry, in 2 vols.
Paley's Works.
Life and Times of Rev. Richard Baxter.
Spring's Essays on Christian Character.
Spratt's Lectures.
Fawcett's Lectures to young men.
Lindsley's Lectures to the middle aged
Just received and for sale at the New Bookstore of SKINNER & PHELPS, where those who wish to purchase cheap, will do well to call.

☞ Store 1 door South of the Bank of Rochester.
No. 24, Exchange-St. Nov 1

PROPOSALS

For publishing a Religious Periodical Paper, to be entitled the CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, under the Supervision of the Associate Reformed Synod of N. York.

The want of an accession of vigor of sentiment and of correct intelligence has long been felt by the ministers and members of the ASSOCIATE REFORMED CHURCH, and by many who by principle and education, whose religious views and feelings harmonize with theirs. The cheering progress of the cause of God and Truth within the Associate Reformed Church has been such, as, while it augments the necessity and the demand for a periodical publication, justifies the Synod in undertaking it accordingly, at its late meeting, the Synod, after mature deliberation, determined to the establishment of a Monthly publication, to be entitled "THE CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE," and appointed the Rev. JOHN F. M'LAREN, of Geneva the Editor.

To solicit the patronage and co-operation of the people, and of the friends of Truth in general, to themselves upon the Editor; which he would do by a brief statement of our want of such a paper, and by giving, what comes nearest to an actual examination of the work, a correct and candid view of the character it is designed to bear.

The A. R. Church is almost the only denomination which has not a Religious Paper under its care consecrated to the interests of Zion within its bounds. And as we have a part to perform in the dissensions of truth, we propose to remove this unhappy peculiarity and to engage in the circulation of Evangelical doctrines and Christian intelligence.

The CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE, while its pages shall be preserved pure from a party spirit and from sentiments unfriendly to true charity, will take its station in liberality and firmly by the standards of the Church which are thoroughly Presbyterian and thoroughly Evangelical. It will be the engrossing purpose of the work, to promote vital godliness—to clothe in elegant piety among its readers, by the exposition and defence of the doctrines of Grace, by the enforcement of christian Duty, and by the illustration of christian Experience.

The following subjects will be among the most prominent in the Magazine:

1. Clear and concise views of Christian Doctrines.
2. Expositions of Difficult Passages of Scripture.
3. Brief Memoirs of eminently useful and pious Characters from foreign countries.
4. Sketches of the early history of the Reformed Churches.
5. Cases of Conscience solved by the Standard of Believers.
6. Translations from standard Christian Authors of former times.
7. Notices and short Reviews of New Publications.
8. Summaries of passing Religious and Civil Events.

It is expected that Ministers and members of the A. R. Church, in different parts, will contribute to the pages of the Magazine, and Communications from other quarters will always be cordially received.

TERMS.—The Magazine will contain 32 pages, octavo, per number, printed in good style, and on good paper, stitched in a neat printed cover, making in a year a volume of nearly 400 pages. The price will be $1,50, if paid in advance or before the delivery of the third number; $2,00 if payment is deferred till after the third number. The first number will be published on the first of January next.

Members of Sessions in the A. R. Church, or such persons as they may appoint, are requested to act as Agents for the work, and to return to the editor the names of subscribers by the first of December.

Geneva, September 28, 1831.

A subscription list for the above paper is left with W. B. Kness, No. 3, Buffalo st. Rochester, where it is to be hoped that all persons friendly to the interests of the "Associate Reformed Church" will become subscribers to the Magazine 3w8

THE three story stone house, corner of Spring and Sophia sts., is open for the reception of

BOARDERS,

where they will be genteelly and comfortably accomodated.
Rochester, Nov. 24, 1831. 3w48

NOTICE.

THE Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firm of Bush & Butler, is dissolved by mutual consent; and all persons indebted to the said copartnership are hereby notified to make payment to Henry Bush, and all persons having claims against the said Copartnership, to present the same to the said Henry for adjustment and payment.

The business of the late firm will be conducted hereafter by the said Henry Bush, at the old stand.

HENRY BUSH
GEO. BUTLER.
Nov. 8. 47

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 14, 1831. VOL. V. NO. 51.

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.

Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—If paid in advance, $1 50
If paid within 6 months, 1 75
If not paid within 6 months, 2 00
Communications free of post-age, when they relate to the business of the office, and all the orders for the paper, must be addressed to the Publishers.
Volumes commence with the year.
Subscribers who wish their papers discontinued at the end of the year, must give notice thereof before the commencement of the new volume, otherwise they will be considered as desiring a continuance.
Postage on newspapers, 52 50 per annum in advance.

For the Observer

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. VIII.

Excuses for not uniting with a Temp. Soc.
I object to a Church which by its discipline is a Temperance Society.

This is not true; for we have seen that the practice of total abstinence is not the discipline of any church, but the principle of T. Societies. And we know by every day's observation and observation, as well as the testimony of 50 or 60 years past, that the word necessity, as used in this request, is not to be considered as synonymous with an impossibility. Paul says that he was a debtor to the Greeks, and to the barbarians, and gives them to understand, by his conduct, that the majority so regarded it, when I (who is being supposed) The weakness of such excuses is evident evidence of the mental imbecility of the objector, and all the ordinary remedies which are proposed for other weaknesses of the mind are applicable to this. Let the objector read and reflect on the subject, and he will soon see that the Methodist Church is not a temperance society. But another feature of this excuse remains. It clearly marks the difference between them and the Methodist church, as claiming to have adopted temperance measures. Temperance Societies inhibit all their members from making or vending ardent spirits—the Discipline only inhibits Ministers—all others may do it, and read—there is no rule to the contrary.

Now admitting, for the sake of argument, that necessity, or total abstinence, every one may with perfect propriety, refuse himself the power which he wishes others from using himself—that Minister—the wine needs it. But who is it more for a member to drink, than for a professed christian? Intemperance, I hope. If the people is so situated that the members of the church are forbidden to use it, it is clearly, in all necessary kindness, to make and vend, that others may be prevented! Is it doing to others as we would be done by, and as it is doing our neighbor as ourselves? And that those who have joined the class, do invite and vend, I hold myself responsible to prove; nor I can even point to, at least, one, who is a first leader who is known and sells rum—and to another who for years has done it. Tom, members of other churches do the same; and God will judge them all; but I am only showing that the "Discourse," does not form a temperance society for the reasons and the requirements of the one are diverse entirely from the other.

But perhaps some may think I am evading the rule mentioned in the third quotation—uniting to band societies. I am not, but merely to show that even this rule, binding as it is, does not form a T. Society even of those who adopt it. Those who form themselves into a band society, are to use no ardent spirits liquor, or drink of the kind, unless prescribed for a physician." Now this looks fair on paper, but what is it in practice?

Note some things—

1. A band is composed of three or four brethren or sisters, (all brethren, or all sisters) who agree to meet at others as they please, for prayer and mutual conference—to read the scriptures, and perform certain other duties of piety.

2. This association is limited to no time; it may continue one hour, one day or one year—nay during life, if they please.

3. If a member violates the rules, all the disciple is to be inflicted is, to be expelled from the band, not from the church.

4. No member of the band is inhibited from making or vending ardent spirit; but may go direct from his distillery or his grocery to the meeting of the band; he has violated none of its rules.

5. Band societies, at this day, and especially in the country, are very uncommon. In the village of Rochester, I am told, there are a few; but these are the only ones I have been able to find, even by the most diligent search. Thus if the whole church were on band, yet the three hundred thousand part of the members of that communion are bound by it as bodies to none who are not members of the band.

It cannot be this rule then which forms the church into a T. Society; for all those who come under its operation are at perfect liberty to violate one of the very principles upon which such a society is founded. Indeed this rule looks much less like a temperance Soc. than the former one; for it bears only on such as please to adopt it, and even then only for as long a time as they choose. Besides, if the rules of the class rule a T. S. the rules of the band can do no more; and this band-rule explains the class-rule, and fixes its meaning. The members of the class are members of the band; and if or to be ardent spirits, total abstinence, unless a medicine, why is the band societies require abstinence unless for the same reason? The members were bound before. Wine had then arrived. Thus we have examined three rules and found no T. Society—one, and only one more remains, and that shall be the subject of the next No.

CHAS. YALE,
Act. V. Y. S. T. S.

A Monthly Distributer in New York city says, in his report, dated April 4th, 1831, "As I was distributing last month in Washington street, I was asked by an elderly man, if I did not recollect giving him 'Trust but verify'—The Dairyman's Daughter. He mentioned that at the time he asked me for it it was more for sport than a desire to read it. 'But,' said he, 'my friend, the few words you said, hoping I would read it prayerfully, and that it might prove a blessing to me, I could not shake off. I read it, and was struck with deep conviction, was led to cry and go to church, which I had neglected, and in a few weeks I found peace to my soul. Yes, I have found a Saviour, and I am happy to inform you that that Trust has not only been blessed to me, but to all my family. My wife and three children. I have since been connected to God by those few pieces of God's truth, and likewise six other persons in my neighborhood." I do not know, says the Distributer, when I have seen a more humble and pious man than he seemed to be.

On Wednesday last, a daughter of Mr. Wm B. Goodrich, of this village, in her 4th year, was so severely burnt, by her clothes taking fire, as to cause her death the day following.—Buffalo paper.

ADDRESS.

Of MORTIMER M. JACKSON, before the "New-York Young Men's Society for the promotion of Temperance," delivered at its anniversary meeting, held at the City Hotel on Tuesday evening.

MR. PRESIDENT—Since our last anniversary meeting, the cause of Temperance, has been repeatedly introduced to the consideration of our fellow-citizens. From the press, from the pulpit, and from popular assemblies, in language bold and eloquent, its importance has been urged, and its truths have been proclaimed.

All the aids of learning and of eloquence of patriotism and of piety, have been exerted in a far-reaching Christian of modern reformations. Talent still continues to exercise the talents of the benevolent, the virtuous, and the wise, we have the most cheering evidence by the presence of this assembly.

As an humble advocate of this Society, Sir, I must ask the indulgence of this audience, while on this occasion, I attempt again to explain its objects, to illustrate its importance, and to enforce its claims.

First, let us enquire what is the object of this anniversary? It is merely to recount the past achievements of this Society? again to relate the familiar history of the day? and—for a moment to arrest, by sentimental oratory, and rhetorical pathos the tear of but transient sympathy of human nature? Or is it rather for the purpose of imparting new courage to the established friends of Temperance,—of stimulating them to more peculiar exertions,—of strengthening them by a reunion of sentiments,—and of uniting the friends of virtue, freedom, and humanity, in one common, determined effort for the destruction of so dire a curse as this?

It is for this purpose. It is not only to diffuse information, but to consummate action, not only to show the existence and the extent of an alarming vice, but to adopt effectual measures for its reformation.—This vice, Sir, is INTEMPERANCE. A vice which is a curse to humanity, a foe to liberty, a foe to God:—a vice which extends to almost every community, which tarnishes the glory of almost every state,—a vice which annually costs the nation millions of dollars, which takes the bread from the widow, and the inheritance from the orphan, which fills our poor houses, our prisons, our penitentiaries, our lunatic asylums, our hospitals, our graves, and our hells.

Go to the Alms House:—ask what has reduced so many of our men, designed by nature for useful and praiseworthy purposes, to become dependent upon public bounty? the answer will be, INTEMPERANCE.

Go to the Debtors' Jail:—ask why so many are confined for insolvency in a land where industry is so abundantly rewarded? the answer will be, INTEMPERANCE.

Go to the Police Office:—ask the cause of so many cases of assault and battery; of brutal violence; of savage cruelty; of inhuman murder? the answer will be, INTEMPERANCE.

Go to the Bridewell and the Penitentiary:—ask what led to the crimes for which so many are suffering the rigors of imprisonment? the answer will be, INTEMPERANCE.

Go to the children of Dwyer, and of Ransom:—ask what instigated their fathers inhumanly to butcher the mothers who had kindly nurtured their infancy—who had watched with maternal solicitude over their maturer years? the answer will be, INTEMPERANCE.

How shall this vice be arrested. By removing the cause from which it is chiefly produced.—the use of ardent spirits.

We know that it is contended by some, that the moderate use of them ought not to be prevented; that the evils which we aim to remove, and which they affect to deplore, arose merely from the excessive use. That, sir, as I shall attempt to show, is a dangerous error. It has been incontrovertibly proved, by some of the ablest medical and scientific men in our country, that even the moderate use is neither beneficial nor safe. It has also been proved, by fair and satisfactory experiment, that without their use man can better endure the winter's cold and the summer's heat,—can better support the various hardships to which he is exposed. The moderate use of ardent spirit, then, while it produces no good, but rather injury, subjects him who uses them, always to an unnecessary, frequently to an imminent exposure. But this is not all. The moderate use, ultimately and imperceptibly leads to excess. It is the preliminary process to habitual intemperance.—Show me the confirmed drunkard that was not once a moderate drinker! Show me the man that was born a drunkard! Show me the man that ever designed to be a drunkard? He lives not on earth. He, therefore, who admits that intemperance is an evil, and that ardent spirits chiefly produce it, must as a consequence admit, that nothing but TOTAL ABSTINENCE can effectually remove it. Here sir, is the solution of the problem.

Let the words TOTAL ABSTINENCE, then, be inscribed on every Temperance banner—let them be the rallying words of every friend and every champion of the cause.

Connected with this subject, Mr. President, there is another topic, to which, with your permission, I will briefly advert. It is the formation of Temperance Societies.

It is not to be concealed, that there are those among our fellow-citizens, who, while they acknowledge the importance of the undertaking in which we are engaged; while they are sensible of the extent and the magnitude of the evils which we have united to suppress; while they admit the influence of Societies in accelerating the progress of the Temperance Reformation; while they lavish upon our endeavors expressions of approbation and encouragement,—still are unwilling to unite with the Society,—unwilling to make any exertions to suppress intemperance,—unwilling publicly to array themselves in opposition to an enemy, which is detrimental to the peace of their families, to the welfare of society, and to the liberties of their country. Why this inconsistency—why this deplorable indifference? Let charity exercise her office in answering the question. What, sir, is the object of a Temperance Society?—it is to produce, concert and co-operate among the friends of temperance; to operate on the public mind by united moral and intellectual influences; and to achieve, thro' the agency of an enlightened public opinion, a triumph, for which we may look in vain, either to legislative enactments or to judicial decrees. We see the powerful influence of associated action in every department of society. We see it in the advancement of literature and science; we see it in the successful progress of various benevolent and philanthropic systems; we see it in the exercise of a thousand influences which purify, and refine, and renovate society. It lies at the very foundation of free institutions. Can as much be accomplished by individual exertion as by the associated efforts of a large number? Can the cause of temperance be better promoted, than by the voluntary association of various individuals, all harmoniously co-operating—guiding each other by their counsels, and aiding each other by their labors?

Can the friends of Temperance regard these Societies with indifference, when they look at the facts they have collected? at the knowledge they have diffused? at the influence they have exerted? We know they cannot.

It was sir, under the influence of sentiments like these, that several of they gentlemen of this city about two years ago, united in forming the Society in the "N. Y. Young Men's Society for the promotion of Temperance." In inviting public attention; and the able addresses delivered on that occasion, are doubtless, still fresh in the recollection of many who are present this evening. At that time, the Temperance Reform had but just begun to excite the public mind. But few young men were acquainted with its character, but few appreciated its importance, and but few enlisted in its behalf. It is not so now. TRUTH and REASON, have been gradually and silently exerting their kindred influences upon society, until at length public opinion is decidedly in favor of our cause.

The glory of successfully completing this undertaking, is reserved for young men.—And in behalf of a Reformation so honorable in its origin, so beneficial in its progress, and so glorious in its prospective issue, we are proud, on this occasion to appeal to the young men of the city of New-York. It is for them to exercise an influence which shall be felt to the remotest borders of our land. We do not at present, so much need essays and speeches, and sermons; as ACTION; vigorous united, effective action.

Young Men's Temperance Societies are now formed, in almost every city, town and village in the nation. The youthful champions of the cause in distant states, among the valleys and mountains of the rising West, are looking with deep solitude, to the example of the young men of this metropolis.

Here they look for an encouraging voice and a helping hand. Let them not look in vain. The cause in which we are engaged, is the cause of our country. Let us, then, go forward, faithfully and fearlessly, in the prosecution of our undertaking.

Let no difficulties discourage us; lukewarmness dishearten us; theological disputation divide us.

While we contemplate with pride, sir, the future achievements of this Society, what may we not anticipate from the effective energies of thousands of Societies, all acting in unison, and exerting their mighty influence to drive Intemperance from our land?

May we not hope, that under the auspices of such exertions, the time is not far distant when the voice of licentious revelry shall no longer disturb the midnight slumbers of the virtuous and the peaceful; when the lawless and the profanity of the drunkard shall no longer contaminate the morals and vitiate the principles of the young.

May we not hope that the time is not far distant, when the brave and hardy sons of the ocean shall no longer be ship-wrecked on the quicksands of intemperance; when those who preside in our councils shall no longer partake of the maddening cup; when those who wield the nation's energies—the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, and the laborer, shall calmly banish the liquid poison from their fields, their workshops and their dwellings.

Sacrilege.—Some evil minded person or persons broke into the Baptist Meeting house in this village on the night of Saturday last, and broke open the door of the closet which contains the sacramental vessels, and other things belonging to the Society, and after drinking, as is supposed, some wine which was there deposited, took a two gallon glass bottle nearly full of lamp oil, ascended into the pulpit and threw it on the floor with sufficient force to scatter the fragments of that bottle in all directions, and to spatter the oil upon the pews, &c. The damage done to the house was considerable. Although measures have been taken to ferret out the wretches who were guilty of this unholy crime, they have not yet been discovered.—Newport (N. H.) Spectator.

REVIVALS.

From the Boston Recorder.

REVIVAL IN JEFFERSON COUNTY, N. Y.

Jefferson Co. N. Y. Nov. 1st, 1831.

MR. EDITOR,—In addressing you and through the medium of your excellent journal the Christian community at large, it is my object to give a plain and simple history, so far as knowledge of facts shall enable me, of the displays of divine power and goodness with which of late our county has been so highly favored. Detached and imperfect accounts of this work of the Lord in particular churches have already gone abroad; but viewing as I do the unusual attention to eternal things which has been manifested in several of our churches as produced by one general outpouring of God's Spirit, I deem it proper that this account should be a general one of the revival in Jefferson County—and that hereby the riches of God's grace may be magnified—his name honored—the hearts of the Lord's people encouraged, is my most humble and most earnest prayer.

For some time previous to any remarkable excitement there was evident in some of our churches an increased attention to duty things; a deeper and more ruling spirit of piety seemed to pervade the bosom of Christ's professed followers, and a marked reverence for the ordinances of the sanctuary was observed. Many had presentiments of great things about to be performed. The devout Christian especially exercised strong faith in Him who is not slack concerning his promises.

At a period so propitious—when circumstances seemed to warrant and even demand extraordinary effort, a protracted meeting was commenced in the village of Adams. Deep interest for the result was felt by all who sincerely loved the Redeemer's cause and desired its advancement. Many were the prayers which were put up we trust in faith in different parts of the county, to the Great Head of the Church, that he would crown the meeting with the presence of his Spirit.—This was in the month of March last. Public services commenced on Tuesday and were closed on the Sabbath following.—During the three first days, the course was such as is commonly adopted in meetings of a similar nature; but on the morning of Friday so deep and powerful were the feelings of the assembly that it was deemed expedient to deviate somewhat from the usual method. God had indeed met with his people, and so sensibly was his presence realized, so awfully momentous appeared the responsibilities of the hour, that it was with the greatest difficulty they could refrain from giving vent aloud to the emotions that swayed their bosoms.—Every head was bowed, and every pious heart flowed out to God in deep and fervent supplication. The ear of the Almighty was not deaf to their prayer. The waters of life flowed freely. Inquiry meetings were continued for several days after the public meetings were suspended. It is impossible to state precisely the number of those who were hopefully converted. Many who came in from a distance went away rejoicing in the hope of a glorious immortality. Probably more than a hundred were here the subjects of renewing grace.

Immediately after the meeting at Adams, another commenced at Rodman, five miles distant, which continued thirteen days without intermission. Public exercises were had three times a day, and the usual course was pursued. At this place it is supposed that nearly two hundred gave evidence of a saving change. During the three first days but little was effected, and the aspect of things was dull and cheerless—but on Thursday the prospect was brightened. The cloud of mercy burst suddenly upon the people, and in the short space of twenty-four hours rising of thirty souls expressed a hope of having passed from death unto life.—From this time the work progressed steadily forward until the close of the meeting. The population of this village is small; but so general was the work that of the few scarcely an adult was left uncovered.

On the day following the close of this meeting (the 25th of April,) a meeting of the converts was held at the village of Adams, which was addressed by Rev. J. Barchard. Of more than four hundred who had obtained hope since the work commenced in this latter place, three hundred were present. This was a scene of exceeding interest: and when all arose and sang a favorite hymn, we seemed in imagination to catch the faint echoings of the song in the upper sanctuary.—This, I trust, was a day of happiness to many, which will never be forgotten. It was a blessed antepast of that bliss which is reserved for the redeemed alone.

On the 21 of May a meeting commenced at Evan's Mills, about ten miles distant from Watertown: of which Mr. Barchard, who had conducted the two already noticed, was requested to take the direction. Public exercises were continued uninterruptedly for nine days, during which time, through the blessing of God, a number hundred and twenty-five persons were hopefully converted. On the 17th of the same month a meeting commenced at Brownville, which continued ten days, and resulted in the hopeful conversion of more than one hundred and fifty souls.

Immediately upon leaving Brownville, Mr. Barchard returned to his own people at Belleville to conduct a union meeting between the Baptist and Presbyterian brethren of that place. In this meeting sectional and party feeling was wholly laid aside, and those of different names met and labored upon the common footing of Christians and servants of the most High. All were determined to prove God as he had commanded them, and "bring all their tithes into the store house." They asked for a large portion of the Spirit, and measured their desires rather by the power and goodness of God, than by their own weakness and ill deserts. Their supplications were heard and answered. The moving of the Spirit was like the sweep of an overwhelming flood, bearing away with resistless energy every obstacle that opposed its progress. The mouth of the gainsayer was stopped, and the enemies of the cross, confounded and abashed, looked on in mute astonishment. The powers of darkness seemed to have loosened their grasp upon their victims and haughty and rebellious men bowed in submission before the offended Majesty of Heaven. For two or three days a rising of an hundred each day expressed hope of having been born again. To give an idea of the power of the work, it is sufficient to state, that at one time, during a season of prayer in the inquiry room which lasted about 15 minutes, thirty-seven persons expressed a hope of having passed from death unto life, all of whom, so far as I have been able to learn, still exhibit in their lives evidence of the reality of the change. The village of Belleville itself is small, there being not more than 50 houses; but the people in great numbers, came in from the surrounding country. It is impossible to ascertain the exact number of those who obtained hope during the meeting. Individuals who were enabled from actual observation to form tolerably correct estimates, suppose the number to be not less than six or seven hundred. The lowest estimate I have heard would place it between five and six hundred. This meeting which continued twelve days, closed on the Sabbath, and on the Tuesday following another commenced at Champion, which lasted seven days, during which about 150 persons obtained hope of eternal life.

From this place Mr. Barchard went to Wendville, a small settlement three miles from Belleville, of about 30 families. The meeting commenced on Friday and continued till Tuesday of the next week. The inquiry room was open until Tuesday, at which about 70 gave evidence of a saving change. The subjects of this work were in few exceptions persons of adult age. Many in the middle age of life, and several who had numbered four-score and ten.

The general characteristics of this work have been deep conviction of sin followed by an early surrender of the heart to God. Among its subjects were persons of every class and every age. Men of the highest standing have not been ashamed to profess themselves disciples of the meek and lowly, and of the many who since the commencement of these meetings have obtained hope in Christ, there are but very few who do not stand fast in the faith and give satisfactory evidence of a change of heart.

The means made use of have been the prayer of faith, and the preaching of the word in a plain and practical manner, pressing home upon the sinner's conscience his guilt before God and the duty of immediate repentance.

With but few exceptions there was nothing in the meetings to offend the most fastidious taste. That the enemy of truth should assail the measures used for his defeat is perfectly consistent with divine truth and universal experience. But a Christian professor should not think it incredible that God should convert a hundred in a day; for I am convinced, from what I have seen and heard, that the same amount of moral power which was brought to bear upon the audience at Belleville and which under God resulted in the conversion of an hundred a day, if exerted upon a number proportionably large might be the means of bringing thousands of souls into the kingdom in a space of time equally short. The church of God must cease to measure themselves by themselves, and take the word of God as a rule of duty and ground of expectation, before we shall see these great displays of divine grace in the conversion of sinners which the Bible teaches us to expect. W.

From the Philadelphian.

ST. GEORGES, Del.—The protracted meeting of which we lately gave notice, was commenced in this place on Monday evening, the 14th inst. by a sermon from the Editor. On Tuesday the congregation met in the church when the Rev. Mr Adair, of Wilmington, preached once, and the writer twice. At the close of the last service in the Church this day, the Pastor and communicants solemnly resolved, by raising up in the congregation, their determination to be more zealous, faithful, and prayerful than ever before, in seeking without delay to promote a revival, and win souls for Christ. In the evening, Mr. How, the Pastor, preached in one School-house, and the writer in another. On Wednesday morning the writer preached in the Church twice, and was obliged to leave the scene of delightful labor at 1 o'clock, P. M.

The Rev. Messrs. Gilbert and Adair continued the services until Friday. M. Hugh Hamill, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Philadelphia then came to the aid of Mr How, and continued until after the Sabbath. Twenty-three persons on the Sabbath united with the church for the first time in celebrating the Lord's supper. On Monday fourteen other persons made a credible profession of having been born again. Some of the most respectable men of the State of Delaware, are among the new converts. Nothing like this manifestation of the power of divine grace has been experienced in this church since the late venerable Dr. John Rodgers was its Pastor, and Whitefield preached in the pulpit of his young convert. The Church is full of hope that the triumphs of the Redeemer in that place will still be multiplied.

KENSINGTON, PA.—Last Monday evening the Editor had the pleasure of preaching the gospel to a numerous and attentive audience, under the pastoral care of the Rev. George Chandler. An unusual attention to religion exists there at the present time; not less than thirty persons appear to be savingly awakened; and we anticipate a joyous harvest of converted souls.—Ib.

PENCADER, DEL.—At Pencadr Church, which was very small, consisting only of 21 members, the Pastor, the Rev. Samuel Bell, a short time since had the pleasure of receiving to the communion seventeen new converts; and among them some of the most influential men of the place.—Ib.

From Bridges's Weekly Messenger.

BY THE REV. RICHARD KNILL.

THE EAR RING.

Every man who cordially embraces the Lord Jesus Christ as his Prophet, Priest, and King, becomes an auxiliary to the bible and missionary operations. This is invariably the case, whether the man be rich or poor. If he be rich he will pour of his abundance into the treasury, and if he be poor he will cast in two mites, and if perchance he have no mites to contribute, he will bow his knees before the throne of grace, and cry, "Father, glorify thy Son. Give him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." I have seen many lovely proofs of this, but have seldom known one more cheering than the following:

A gentleman resident on the shores of Caspian, who once cared nothing about Christ or his cause, has, within a few years, become a warm hearted disciple. Knowing his character, I wrote to him to assist me in the distribution of the holy scriptures. To my request he joyfully acceded, but he did not think it sufficient to contribute towards it himself, he tried to enlist others also in the good work. He mentioned it in particular to a young lady of his acquaintance, who had just before received a present of one hundred rubles to purchase a pair of ear rings. Fired with a hope of promoting the eternal happiness of her fellow creatures she determined to surrender her ear rings to the cause of God, and sent the nine hundred rubles to me. Perhaps this was the first time that ever her attachment to the Saviour led her to a sacrifice, and it must be unspeakably gratifying to her mind, when reviewing this transaction, to feel that she could part with her ornaments for her adorable Redeemer.

It is possible some may think, that to make so

From the same

BY THE REV. RICHARD KNILL.

THE CHATEFUL SCHOLAR.

In some parts of Christendom there are charitable women attached to the churches who, on the part of deaconesses, or servants of the church. They devote their whole time to visiting, praying, reading the sick, relieving the distressed, and, sometimes, in instructing the young. In a very remote district there were three of these deaconesses attached to the 31st parish, and, among other acts of kindness which they performed, they taught 6 of poor children to read. And one of them is the "good scholar" mentioned at the head of this article. He made great proficiency in his lessons; and when he got on as far as the 1st epistle to Timothy. He called on me one day for a New Testament. We asked him what he was going to do with so many books. He then told us where he came from, and concluded his history by observing, "I am doing very well in my shop, and I owe every thing I possess to the good women who gave me instruction. I know that they never saw a New Testament; I am sure that nothing will afford them more pleasure than to have a copy, as a token of my gratitude for their kindness to a poor village boy."

Many a village boy has arisen to eminence in his business, and perhaps to the possession of wealth also, entirely owing to the advantages he enjoyed when a boy at some village day or Sunday school. Perhaps some, in reading this account, may recollect, that one part of it is just a counterpart of their own history. Well, then; imitate the other part, and I pledge myself N. S. Testaments are at your poor old neighbors.

MISSIONARY.

From the Boston Recorder.

SANDWICH ISLAND MISSION.

New Bedford, Nov. 21, 1831.

I will occupy a few moments of time which I now have, in giving you some further account of the missionaries and their movements: as they seem to be the principal objects of interest just now, especially in the circle where I move. They and their friends, as well as the gentlemen connected with the Board who are superintending their embarkation, are very kindly received and hospitably entertained, free of expense, as I understand, by the good people of the place. The public mind here becomes very deeply in favor of missions. This favorable feeling, is not confined to members of the church. Many merchants and others, not professedly religious men, manifest much good will towards the missions. Not a few of them make liberal contributions, and some of them are generously entertaining one or more of the missionaries while detained here. This kind feeling is not limited to the denominations to which the missionaries belong. Some of the Quakers manifest a good degree of it. In more than one instance a Unitarian has made a handsome donation, expressing his full conviction that the missionaries were doing a humane and philanthropic work. When the reinforcement was here last fall, both the Methodist and Baptist ministers here requested them to preach in their pulpits on the Sabbath, and appeared highly gratified with the aid received. The Methodist minister, Rev. Mr. Webb, requested the same favor yesterday, which was granted.

Yesterday, being the Sabbath, the missionary brethren were dispersed through the neighboring towns, in compliance with the request of the ministers. Mr. Alexander preached at Taunton; Mr. Emerson at Fall River; Mr. Forbes for Mr. Bigelow and Mr. Spaulding for Mr. Cobb, of Rochester; Mr. Hitchcock at Dartmouth, Mr. Lyons at North Bedford; and Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Lyman for Rev. Mr. Holmes of this place, and Rev. Mr. Gould of Fairhaven; Mr. Thompson, who expects, as I have learned, to embark next spring for the Mediterranean mission under the direction of the Board, preached for Mr. Gould on Saturday evening, and for Mr. Webb half on the Sabbath. In most of the places where the missionaries preached, collections were taken up in aid of the Sandwich Island mission. At Fairhaven it amounted to $50, at Fall River $30, at Mr. Bigelow's $10, at Mr. Cobb's $12, at Dartmouth, $ —, and at Taunton about $50. These sums, as well as that collected here on Friday evening, are all in addition to the ordinary annual donations from these towns, which had before been made, and show the interest which the community feel in the cause of missions. The change in this respect has been great within a few years.

I find the whole mass on family hustle employed this morning in arranging and packing the remainder of their goods, and putting them in readiness for going on board whenever the ship shall be ready to take them. Seeing as I have done for the last week, that large quantities of boxes and packages are going to the ship, marked with the names of the missionaries, I have felt much curiosity to learn what amount of articles are to be shipped, and what is to be the cost of this reinforcement. Some of your readers may have the same curiosity; and I suppose it will do no harm for the whole community to know. It is their concern, and there should be no secret about it. The cost will, however, at first though, appear to them unnecessarily large. But when they shall look at it particularly, they will probably think it very small; at least very reasonable. The money is all expended under the direction of Mr. Hill, the Treasurer, who is now here giving the most careful attention to the business. I am informed that the whole expense of this reinforcement, up to the time of their arrival at the Islands, will amount to about $7,000. The principal items, as nearly as I can learn, are these:—1. The outfit of the several families, including their traveling expenses while making their preparations, and coming to the place of their embarkation, we suppose about $400 for each family and mounting, for 10 families and one single man, to about $4,000. This item includes household furniture of all kinds necessary for housekeeping, clothing for a long voyage, and for two or three years after their arrival, and books, together with all the necessary things, of all sorts, which will come 10,000 miles from a market, and situated where few of these articles can be purchased except at an exhorbitant price, and likely to need. 2. The price of the passage, amount to $100 for each person,—or $1,000 for the whole. 3. The provisions and stores for the voyage, which in this

MISSIONARY.

From the Boston Recorder.

SANDWICH ISLAND MISSION.

New Bedford, Nov. 21, 1831.

I will occupy a few moments of time which I now have, in giving you some further account of the missionaries and their movements: as they seem to be the principal objects of interest just now, especially in the circle where I move. They and their friends, as well as the gentlemen connected with the Board who are superintending their embarkation, are very kindly received and hospitably entertained, free of expense, as I understand, by the good people of the place. The public mind here becomes very deeply in favor of missions. This favorable feeling, is not confined to members of the church. Many merchants and others, not professedly religious men, manifest much good will towards the missions. Not a few of them make liberal contributions, and some of them are generously entertaining one or more of the missionaries while detained here. This kind feeling is not limited to the denominations to which the missionaries belong. Some of the Quakers manifest a good degree of it. In more than one instance a Unitarian has made a handsome donation, expressing his full conviction that the missionaries were doing a humane and philanthropic work. When the reinforcement was here last fall, both the Methodist and Baptist ministers here requested them to preach in their pulpits on the Sabbath, and appeared highly gratified with the aid received. The Methodist minister, Rev. Mr. Webb, requested the same favor yesterday, which was granted.

Yesterday, being the Sabbath, the missionary brethren were dispersed through the neighboring towns, in compliance with the request of the ministers. Mr. Alexander preached at Taunton; Mr. Emerson at Fall River; Mr. Forbes for Mr. Bigelow and Mr. Spaulding for Mr. Cobb, of Rochester; Mr. Hitchcock at Dartmouth, Mr. Lyons at North Bedford; and Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Lyman for Rev. Mr. Holmes of this place, and Rev. Mr. Gould of Fairhaven; Mr. Thompson, who expects, as I have learned, to embark next spring for the Mediterranean mission under the direction of the Board, preached for Mr. Gould on Saturday evening, and for Mr. Webb half on the Sabbath. In most of the places where the missionaries preached, collections were taken up in aid of the Sandwich Island mission. At Fairhaven it amounted to $50, at Fall River $30, at Mr. Bigelow's $10, at Mr. Cobb's $12, at Dartmouth, $ —, and at Taunton about $50. These sums, as well as that collected here on Friday evening, are all in addition to the ordinary annual donations from these towns, which had before been made, and show the interest which the community feel in the cause of missions. The change in this respect has been great within a few years.

I find the whole mass on family hustle employed this morning in arranging and packing the remainder of their goods, and putting them in readiness for going on board whenever the ship shall be ready to take them. Seeing as I have done for the last week, that large quantities of boxes and packages are going to the ship, marked with the names of the missionaries, I have felt much curiosity to learn what amount of articles are to be shipped, and what is to be the cost of this reinforcement. Some of your readers may have the same curiosity; and I suppose it will do no harm for the whole community to know. It is their concern, and there should be no secret about it. The cost will, however, at first though, appear to them unnecessarily large. But when they shall look at it particularly, they will probably think it very small; at least very reasonable. The money is all expended under the direction of Mr. Hill, the Treasurer, who is now here giving the most careful attention to the business. I am informed that the whole expense of this reinforcement, up to the time of their arrival at the Islands, will amount to about $7,000. The principal items, as nearly as I can learn, are these:—1. The outfit of the several families, including their traveling expenses while making their preparations, and coming to the place of their embarkation, we suppose about $400 for each family and mounting, for 10 families and one single man, to about $4,000. This item includes household furniture of all kinds necessary for housekeeping, clothing for a long voyage, and for two or three years after their arrival, and books, together with all the necessary things, of all sorts, which will come 10,000 miles from a market, and situated where few of these articles can be purchased except at an exhorbitant price, and likely to need. 2. The price of the passage, amount to $100 for each person,—or $1,000 for the whole. 3. The provisions and stores for the voyage, which in this case, as they have done in several instances before, the Board defrays the expense of; and which, of the proper kind, and put up in a suitable manner for sea, and sufficient in quantity for nineteen persons during a voyage of five or six months, amount to about 1,000. These three sums make the $7,000.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

In addition to the articles belonging to this reinforcement, the Board are sending supplies for the mission families now at the Islands, the cost of which exceeds $2000; consisting of salt provisions, bread stuffs, clothing, paper, a printing press, &c.; the freight on which, including that on the goods of the reinforcement, amounts, at $18 a ton, to about $900. All the provisions of this kind, used by the missionaries at the Islands, are sent from this country. So that the expense of this expedition to the Board will not vary far from $10,000

Nov. 22.—Last evening Mr. Ephraim Spaulding, late of the Andover Theological Seminary, and one of the missionaries, was ordained here. His sickness had prevented his earlier ordination. Rev. Mr. Holmes' Meetinghouse, where the services were performed, was well filled; and among the hearers, were the owners and the captain of the ship in which the missionaries are to sail. Rev. Mr. Baird, Agent of the American Sunday School Union, made the introductory prayer; Rev. Mr. Maltby, of Taunton, preached the sermon, from Acts 26: 16, 17, and 18; Rev. Mr. Robbins, of Metapoisett, made the consecrating prayer. Rev. Dr. Fay gave the charge; Rev. Mr. Clark, of Buckland, gave the right hand offellowship; and Rev. Timothy Davis, offered the concluding prayer. All the performances, as well as the music by the choir, were highly respectable, and the occasion was obviously one of deep interest to the audience.

Nov. 25.—Our friends, the missionaries; have not left us yet, though I understand every thing is ready, and they are to go on board at a minutes warning, whenever the ship is prepared to receive them. The delay gives them opportunity to mingle freely with their Christian brethren and sisters here, which they are doing I believe, to the mutual satisfaction of themselves and the people by whom they are very hospitably entertained. On Monday afternoon, the females of the Mission family met a portion of the female members of Rev. Mr. Holmes' church, for the purpose of prayer and religious conversation. Yesterday afternoon, another similar meeting was held. The Missionary brethren attended a religious meeting on Tuesday evening, at which, the address and prayers were principally made by them. Last evening a prayer meeting was held according to previous appointment, and numerously attended.—It was appointed with special reference to the departure of the missionaries, which, as I wrote you last Saturday, was expected to take place yesterday; but some of the many difficulties, which may prevent for a day or two the sailing of a ship bound on a three-years' cruise, and which cannot be obviated or foreseen, have kept the Averick here till this time, so that those, who, it was expected, would have before this, have taken leave of their friends and native land forever, and have commenced their long and perilous voyage, were again with us to mingle their prayers once more with ours, and to animate us with their exhortations, to be faithful to Christ and his cause. A similar meeting is to be held this evening, at which the missionaries will doubtless be present, as is it now too late to embark to-day. These are interesting and profitable occasions. The persons who come together, expect to have no intercourse with each other till they meet in the judgment of the great day.

I have repeatedly been on board the Averick since she has been taking in her freight. She is a fine ship of about 380 tons burthen, has made but one voyage, and that in the whaling business. She is now going on the same business, after having landed the missionaries at the Islands: She carries no cargo, except provisions and water, with the goods of the passengers, and supplies for the mission. The accommodation for the passengers are good, and and as ample as could be expected. They have the exclusive use of the cabin, the cap'ain and officers occupy a room built forward of it. In the cabin are four wide berths and one state-room, which will conviently accommodate ten persons. Around each of the berths, curtains are drawn in such a manner as to render the occupants almost as much retired, as they would be in a state-room. In the room forward of the cabin, occupied by the officers, are four large state-rooms allotted to the missionaries, which accommodates eight more. Mr. Rogers, the printer, also has a berth in this room. The deck of the ship is large and clear, and will afford a good area for walking and exercise. Captain Swan is a young man of good character, amiable in his deportment, and thoroughly acquainted with the sea, though he has never commanded a vessel before. He assures the missionaries that he will do all in his power to render their situation comfortable. He gives his full consent to their having daily religious worship in the cabin, and public worship on the Sabbath there, or on deck when the weather and the working of the ship will permit. He says, also, that he is entirely willing that his officers and hands should attend when not necessarily engaged in the labors of the ship; and that the missionaries should distribute tracts among the hands, or converse with them, or use any other means to give them religious instruction, which shall not interfere with the performance of their duties and the maintenance of due subordination. This is all the liberty that any passenger can ask or desire.

Saturday, Nov. 26th.—At 8 o'clock this morning, the missionaries and numerous friends of Missions, amounting to two or three hundred, assembled on Taber's wharf, the place of appointment for embarkation. The band, who were at this moment to leave forever the land of their friends and their nativity, with all its privileges and endearments, manifested the greatest composure and even cheerfulness as they stepped from the wharf to the vessel. One of the females remarked pleasantly to a friend that stood by, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." After they had taken their stand on the deck, the parting hymn, ("Blest be the tie that binds, &c.") was sung, in which numerous voices united. To the missionaries, and doubtless to many others, it had a meaning which they had never attached to it before. This was a real parting—the most important that the Christian can ever know. It was the forsaking of ministers, and churches and kindred, & native land; almost all that is dear in this world, forever. After the hymn, a prayer was offered by Mr. Green, when the sloop on board which they were and which was to convey them to the ship lying in the stream two or three miles below, immediately left the wharf. They were soon on board the ship which is to be their home for the five or six next months; and about 10 o'clock the anchor was weighed, and they proceeded to sea with a fair wind. At three o'clock P. M. the pilot left the ship off the western point of the Elizabeth Islands, then making good progress. May the prayers of their friends, and the friends of missions attend them; and may the God of grace be their protector and comforter!

At the time of the embarkation, the most perfect order and silence prevailed among those who were assembled. Those at work on the wharf and on the vessels near by, suspended their labors and listened to the singing and prayer. Rev. Mr. Holmes and a number of other christian friends, gentleman and ladies, manifested the interest which they felt by accompanying the missionaries down the harbor to the ship.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Message from the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, at the commencement of the first Session of the 22d Congress.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate, and House of Representatives:

The representation of the people has been renewed for the twenty second time since the constitution they formed has been in force.—For near half a century, the chief magistrates, who have been successively chosen, have made their annual communications of the state of the nation to its representatives. Generally, these communications have been of the most gratifying nature, testifying an advance in all the improvements of social, and all the securities of political life. But frequently, and justly, as you have been called on to be grateful for the bounties of Providence, at few periods have they been more abundantly or extensively bestowed than at the present; rarely, if ever, have we had greater reason to congratulate each other on the continued and increasing prosperity of our beloved country.

Agriculture, the first and most important occupation of man, has compensated the labors of the husbandman with plentiful crops of all the varied products of our extensive country. Manufactories have been established in which the funds of the capitalist find a profitable investment, and which give employment and subsistence to a numerous and increasing body of industrious and dexterous mechanics. The laborer is rewarded by high wages, in the construction of works of internal improvement; which are extending with unprecidented rapidity. Science is steadily penetrating the recesses of nature and disclosing her secrets, while the ingenuity of free minds is subjecting the elements to the power of man, and making each new conquest auxiliary to his comfort. By our mails, whose speed is regularly increased, and whose routes are every year extended, the communication of public intelligence and private business is rendered frequent and safe—the intercourse between distant cities, which it formerly required weeks to accomplish, is now effected in a few days; and in the construction of rail-roads, and the application of steam power, we have a reasonable prospect that the extreme parts of our country will be so much approximated, and those most insolated by the obstacles of nature, rendered so accessible as to remove an apprehension sometimes entertained that the great extent of the Union would endanger its permanent existence.

If, from the satisfactory view of our agriculture, manufactures, and internal improvements, we turn to the state of our navigation and trade with foreign nations and between the States, we shall scarcely find less cause for gratulation. A beneficent Providence has provided, for their exercise and encouragement, an extensive coast, indented by capacious bays, noble rivers, inland seas, with a country productive of every material for ship building and every commodity for gainful commerce, and filled with a population, active, intelligent well informed, and fearless of danger. These advantages are not neglected; and an impulse has lately been given to commercial enterprise, which fills our ship yards with new constructions, encourages all the arts and branches of industry connected with them, crowds the wharves of our cities with vessels and covers the most distant seas with our canvass.

Let us be greatful for these blessings to the beneficent Being who has conferred them, and who suffers us to indulge a reasonable hope of their continuance and extension, while we neglect not the means by which they may be preserved. If we may dare to judge of His future designs, by the manner in which his past favors have been bestowed, he has made our national prosperity to depend on the preservation of our liberties; our national force on our federal union, and our individual happiness on the maintenance of our State rights and wise institutions. If we are prosperous at home, and respected abroad, it is because we are free, united, industrious, and obedient to the laws. While we continue so, we shall, by the blessing of Heaven, go on in the happy career we have begun, and which has brought us, in the short period of our political existence, from a population of three to thirteen millions; from thirteen separate colonies to twenty-four United States; from weakness to strength: from a rank scarcely marked in the scale of nations to a high place in their respect.

This last advantage is one that has resulted in a great degree, from the principles which have guided our intercourse with foreign powers, since we have assumed an equal station among them: and hence the annual account which the Executive renders to the country, of the manner in which that branch of his duties has been fulfilled, proves instructive and salutary.

The pacific and wise policy of our Government kept us in a state of neutrality during the wars that have at different periods since our political existence been carried on by other powers: but this policy, while it gave activity and extent to our commerce, exposed it in the same proportion to injuries from the belligerent nations. Hence have arisen claims for indemnity of those injuries. England, France, Spain, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Naples, and lately Portugal, had all in a greater or less degree, infringed our neutral rights. Demands for reparation were made upon all. They had in all, and continue to have in some cases, a leading influence on the nature of our relation with the powers on whom they were made.

Of the claims upon England it is unnecessary to speak, further than to say, that the state of things to which their prosecution and denial gave rise has been succeeded by arrangements productive of mutual good feeling and amicable relations between the two countries, which it is hoped will not be interrupted. One of these arrangements is that relating to the colonial trade, which was communicated to Congress at the last session; and although the short period during which it has been in force will not enable me to form an accurate judgment of its operation, there is every reason to believe that it will prove highly beneficial. The trade thereby authorized has employed, to the 30th Sept. last, upwards 30,000 tons of American, and 15,000 tons of foreign shipping in the outward voyages; and, in the inward, nearly an equal amount of American, and 20,000 only of foreign tonnage. Advantages, too, have resulted to our agricultural interests from the state of the trade between Canada and our Territories and States bordering on the St. Lawrence and the Lakes, which may prove more than equivalent to the sacrifices of the monopolies and restrictions heretofore in favor the trade of the northern colonies with the West Indies.

After our transition from the state of colonies to that of an independent nation, many points were found necessary to be settled between us and Great Britain. Among them was the demarkation of boundaries, not described with sufficient precision in the treaty of peace.—Some of the lines that divide the state and territories of the United States from the British provinces, have been definitively fixed. That, however, which separates us from the provinces of Canada and New-Brunswick to the north and the east, was still in dispute when I came into office. But I found arrangements made for its settlement, over which I had no control. The commissioners who had been appointed under the provisions of the treaty of Ghent, having been unable to agree, a convention was made with Great Britain by my immediate predecessor in office, with the advice and consent of the senate, by which it was agreed "that the points of difference which have arisen in the settlement of the boundary line between the American and British dominions, as described in the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, shall be referred as therein provided, to some friendly sovereign or state, who shall be invited to investigate, and make a decision upon such points of difference:" and the king of the Netherlands having by the late president and his Britantic majesty, been designated as such friendly sovereign, it became my duty to carry, with good faith, the agreement so made into full effect. To this end I caused all the measures to be taken which were necessary to a full exposition of our case to the sovereign arbiter, and nominated as minister plenipotentiary to his court, a distinguished citizen of the state most interested in the question, and who had been one of the agents previously employed for settling the controversy. On the 10th day of January last, his majesty the king of Netherlands delivered to the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain, his written opinion on the case referred to him. The papers in relation to the subject will be communicated, by a special message, to the proper branch of the government, with the perfect confidence that its wisdom will adopt such measures as will secure an amicable settlement of the controversy, without infringing any constitutional right of the states immediately interested.

It affords me satisfaction to inform you that suggestions, made by my direction, to the Charge d'Affairs of his Britannic Majesty, to this Government, have had their desired effect in producing the release of certain American citizens, who were imprisoned for setting up the authority of the state of Maine, at a place in the disputed Territory under the actual jurisdiction of his Britannic Majesty.—From this, and the assurance I have received of the desire of the local authorities to avoid any cause of collision, I have the best hopes that a good understanding will be kept up until it is confirmed by the final disposition of the subject.

The amicable relations which now subsist between the United States and Great Britain, the increasing intercourse between their citizens, and the rapid obliteration of unfriendly prejudices to which former events naturally gave rise—concurred to present this as a fit period for renewing our endeavors to provide against the recurrences of causes of irritation, which, in the event of war between Great Britain and any other power, would inevitably endanger our peace. Animated by the sincerest desire to avoid such a state of things, and peacefully to secure under all possible circumstances, the rights and honor of the country, I have given such instructions to the Minister lately sent to the Court of London, as will evince that desire; and if met by a correspondent disposition, which we cannot doubt, will put an end to causes of collision, which, without advantage to either, tend to estrange from each other, two nations who have every motive to preserve, not only peace, but an intercourse of the most amicable nature.

In my message at the opening of the last session of congress, I expressed a confident hope that the justice of our claims upon France urged as they were with perseverance and signal ability by our Minister there, would finally be acknowleged. The hope has been realized. A treaty has been signed which will immediately be laid before the Senate for its approbation; and which, containing stipulations that require legislative acts, must have the concurrence of both houses before it can be carried into effect. By it the French government engage to pay a sum which, if not quite equal to that which may be found due to our citizens, will yet, it is believed, under all circumstances, be deemed satisfactory by those interested. The offer of a gross sum, instead of the satisfaction of each individual claim, was accepted, because the only alternatives were a rigorous exaction of the whole amount stated to be due on each claim, which might in some instances be exaggerated by design, in others overrated through error, and which therefore it would have been both ungracious and unjust to have insisted on, or a settlement by a mixed commission, to which the French negotiators were very averse, and which experience in other cases had shown to be dilatory and often wholly inadequate to the end. A comparatively small sum is stipulated on our part to go to the extinction of all claims by French citizens on our government; and a reduction of duties on our Cotton and their Wines has been agreed on, as a consideration for the renunciation of an important claim for commercial privileges, under the construction they gave to the treaty for the cession of Louisiana.

Should this treaty receive the proper sanction, a source of irritation will be stopped, that has for so many years, in some degree alienated from each other two nations, who from interest, as well as the remembrance of early associations, ought to cherish the most friendly relations—an encouragement will be given for perseverance in the demands of justice, by this new proof, that, if steadily pursued, they will be listened to—and admonition will be offered by those powers, if any, which may be inclined to evade them, that they will never be abandoned. Above all, a just confidence will be inspired in our fellow-citizens, that their government will exert all the powers with which they have invested it, in support of their just claims upon foreign nations; at the same time that the frank acknowledgment and provision for the payment of those which were addressed to our equity, although unsupported by legal proof, affords a practical illustration of our submission to the divine rule of doing to others what we desire they should do unto us.

Sweden and Denmark having made compensation for the irregularities committed by their vessels, or in their ports, to the perfect satisfaction of the parties concerned; and having renewed the Treaties of Commerce entered into with them, our political and commercial relations with those powers continue to be on the most friendly footing.

With Spain, our differences up to the 22d February, 1819, were settled by the Treaty of Washington of that date: but at a subsequent period, our commerce with the states formerly colonies of Spain, on the continent of America, was annoyed and frequently interrupted by her public and private armed ships. They captured many of our vessels prosecuting a lawful commerce, and sold them and their cargoes; and at one time, to our demands for restoration and indemnity, opposed the allegation that they were taken in the violation of a blockade of all the ports of those states. This blockade was declaratory only, and the inadequacy of the force to maintain it, was so manifest, that this allegation was varied to a charge of trade in contraband articles of war. This, in its turn, was also found untenable; and the minister whom I sent with instructions to press for the reparation that was due to our injured fellow citizens, has transmitted an answer to his demand, by which the captures are declared to have been legal, and are justified, because the independence of the States of America never having been acknowledged by Spain, she had a right to prohibit trade with them under her old colonial laws. This ground of defence was contradictory, not only to those which had been formerly alleged, but to the uniform practice and established laws of nations; and had been abandoned by Spain herself in the convention which granted indemnity to British subjects for captures, made at the same time, and under the same circumstances, and for the same allegations with those of which we complain. I however indulge the hope that further reflection will lead to other views, and feel confident that when His Catholic Majesty shall be convinced of the justness of the claim, his desire to preserve friendly relations between the two countries, which it is my earnest endeavor to maintain, will induce him to accede to our demand. I have therefore despatched a special messenger, with instructions to our minister to bring the case once more to his consideration; to the end that if, which I cannot bring myself to believe, the same decision, that cannot but be deemed an unfriendly denial of justice, should be persisted in, the matter may, before your adjournment, be laid before you, the constitutional judges of what is proper to be done when negotiation for redress of injury fails.

The conclusion of a treaty for indemnity with France, seemed to present a favorable oppertunity to renew our claims of a similar nature on other powers; and particularly in the case of those upon Naples, more especially as in the course of former negotiations with that power, our failure to induce France to render us justice, was used as an argument against us. The desires of the merchants who were the principal sufferers, have therefore been acceded to, and a mission has been instituted for the special purpose of obtaining for them a reparation already too long delayed. This measure having been resolved on, it was put in execution without waiting for the meeting of Congress, because the state of Europe created an apprehension of events that might have rendered our application ineffectual.

Our demands upon the governments of the Two Sicilies are of a peculiar nature: The injuries on which they are founded are not denied, nor are the atrocity and perfidy under which those injuries were perpetrated, attempted to be extenuated. The sole ground on which indemnity has been refused is the alleged illegality of the tenure by which the monarch who made the seizure held his crown.—This defence, always unfounded in any principle of the law of nations—now universally abandoned even by those powers upon whom the responsibility for acts of past rulers bore the most heavily, will unquestionably be given up by His Sicilian Majesty, whose counsels will receive an impulse from that high sense of honor and regard to justice which are said to characterize him; and I feel the fullest confidence that the talents of the citizen commissioned for that purpose will place before him the just claims of our injured citizens in such a light as will enable me, before your adjournment to announce that they have been adjusted and secured. Precise instructions, to the effect of bringing the negotiation to a speedy issue, have been given and will be observed.

In the late blockade of Terceira, some of the Portuguese fleet captured several of our vessels and committed other excesses for which reparation was demanded; and I was on the point of despatching an armed force, to prevent any recurrence of a similar violence and protect our citizens in the prosecution of their lawful commerce, when official assurances, on which I relied, made the sailing of the ships unnecessary. Since that period frequent promises have been made that full indemnity shall be given for the injuries inflicted and the losses sustained. In the performance, there has been some, perhaps unavoidable, delay; but I have the fullest confidence that my earnest desire that this business may at once be closed, which our minister has been instructed strongly to express, will very soon be gratified. I have the better ground for this hope, from the evidence of a friendly disposition which that Government has shewn by an actual reduction in the duty on rice, the produce of our Southern States, authorizing the anticipation that this important article of our export will soon be admitted on the same footing with that produced by the most favored nation.

With other powers of Europe, we have fortunately had no cause of discussion for the redress of injuries. With the Empire of Russia our political connexion is of the most friendly, and our commercial of the most liberal kind. We enjoy the advantages of navigation and trade, given to the most favored nations; but it has not yet suited their policy, or perhaps has not been found convenient from other considerations, to give stability and reciprocity to those privileges, by a commercial treaty. The ill health of the minister last year charged with making a proposition for that arrangement, did not permit him to remain at St. Petersburgh; and the attention of that government, during the whole of the period since his departure, having been occupied by the war in which it was engaged, we have been assured that nothing could have been effected by his presence. A Minister will soon be nominated, as well to effect this important object, as to keep up the relations of amity and good understanding of which we have received so many assurances and proofs from his Imperial Majesty and the Emperor his predecessor.

The Treaty with Austria is opening to us an important trade with the hereditary dominions of the Emperor, the value of which has hitherto been little known, and of course not sufficiently appreciated. While our commerce finds an entrance into the South of Germany by means of this Treaty, those we have formed with the Hanseatic Towns and Prussia, and others now in negotiation, will open that vast country to the enterprising spirit of our merchants, on the North; a country abounding in all the materials for a mutually beneficial commerce, filled with enlightened and industrious inhabitants, holding an important place in the politics of Europe, and to which we owe so many valuable citizens. The ratification of the Treaty with the Porte was sent to be exchanged by the gentleman appointed our Charge d'Affairs to that Court. Some difficulties occurred on his arrival, but at the date of the last official despatch, he supposed they had been obviated, and that there was every prospect of the exchange being speedily effected.

This finishes the connected view I have thought it proper to give of our political and commercial relations in Europe. Every effort in my power will be continued to strengthen and extend them by treaties founded on principles of the most perfect reciprocity of interest, neither asking nor conceding any exclusive advantage, but liberating as far as lies in my power, the activity and industry of our fellow citizens from the shackles which foreign restrictions may impose.

To China and the East Indies, our commerce continues in its usual extent and with increased facilities, which the credit and capital of our merchants affords, by substituting bills for payments in specie. A daring outrage having been committed in those seas by the plunder of one of our merchantmen engaged in the pepper trade at a port in Sumatra, and the piratical perpetrators belonging to tribes in such a state of society, that the usual course of proceeding between civilized nations could not be pursued, I forthwith despatched a Frigate with orders to require immediate satisfaction for the injury and indemnity to the sufferers.

Few changes have taken place in our connexions with the independent States of America since my last communication to Congress. The ratification of a Commercial Treaty with the United Republics of Mexico has been for some time under deliberation in their Congress, but was still undecided at the date of our last despatches. The unhappy civil commotions that have prevailed there, were undoubtedly the cause of the delay: but as the Government is now said to be tranquilized, we may hope soon to receive the ratification of the Treaty and an arrangement for the demarkation of the boundaries between us. In the mean time an important trade has been opened with mutual benefit, from St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, by caravans, to the interior provinces of Mexico. This commerce is protected in its progress through the Indian countries by the troops of the United States, which have been permitted to escort the caravans beyond our boundaries to the settled part of the Mexican Territory.

From Central America I have received assurances of the most friendly kind, and a gratifying application for our good offices to remove a supposed indisposition towards that Government in a neighboring State: this application was immediately and successfully complied with. They gave us also the pleasing intelligence that differences which had prevailed in their internal affairs had been peacably adjusted. Our treaty with the Republic continues to be faithfully observed and promises a great and beneficial commerce between the two countries: a commerce of the greatest importance, if the magnificent project of a ship canal through the dominions of that State, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, now in a serious contemplation, shall be executed.

I have great satisfaction in communicating the success which has attended the exertions of our Minister in Colombia to procure a considerable reduction in the duties on flour in that Republic. Indemnity, also, has been stipulated for injuries received by our merchants from illegal seizures, and renewed assurances are given that the Treaty between the two countries shall be faithfully observed.

Chili and Peru seem to be still threatened with civil commotions; and until they shall be settled disorders may naturally be apprehended requiring the constant presence of a naval force in the Pacific Ocean, to protect our fisheries, and guard our commerce.

The disturbances that took place in the empire of Brazil, previously to, and immediately consequent upon the abdication of the late Emperor, necessarily suspended any effectual application for the redress of some past injuries suffered by our citizens from that Government, while they have been the cause of others, in which all foreigners seem to have participated. Instructions have been given to our Ministers there, to press for indemnity due for losses occasioned by these irregularities; and to take care that our fellow citizens shall enjoy all the privileges stipulated in their favor by the treaty lately made by the two powers, all which the good intelligence that prevails between our Ministers at Rio Janeiro and the Regency gives us the best reason to expect.

I should have placed Buenos Ayres in the list of South American powers in respect to which nothing of importance affecting us was to be communicated, but for occurrences which have lately taken place at the Falkland Islands in which the name of that republic has been used to cover with a show of authority, acts injurious to our commerce, and to the property and liberty of our fellow-citizens. In the course of the present year one of our vessels engaged in the pursuit of a trade which we have always enjoyed, without molestation, has been captured by a band, acting, as they pretend, under the authority of the Government of Buenos Ayres. I have therefore given orders for the despatch of an armed vessel to join our squadron in those seas, and aid in affording all lawful protection to our trade which shall be necessary; and shall, without delay, send a Minister to inquire into the nature of the circumstances, and also of the claim if any, that is set up by that Government to those Islands. In the meantime I submit the case to the consideration of Congress, to the end that they may clothe the Executive with such authority and means as they may deem necessary for providing a force adequate to the complete protection of our fellow-citizens fishing and trading in those seas.

This rapid sketch of our foreign relations it is hoped, will show citizens may be of some use in as much of your legislation as may bear on that important subject; while it affords to the country at large a source of high congratulation in the contemplation of our political and commercial connexion with the rest of the world. At peace with all, having subjects of future difference with few, and those susceptible of easy adjustment—extending our commerce gradually on all sides, and on none by any but the most liberal & mutual beneficial means, we may by the blessing of Providence, hope for all that national prosperity which can be derived from an intercourse with foreign nations guided by those eternal principles of justice and reciprocal good will, which are binding as well upon States, as the individuals of whom they are composed.

I have great satisfaction in making this statement of our affairs, because the course of our national policy enables me to do it without any indiscreet exposure of what in other governments is usually concealed from the people. Having none but a straight forward open course to pursue, guided by a single principle that will bear the strongest light; we have happily no political combinations to form, no alliances to entangle us, no complicated interests to consult; and in subjecting all we have done to the consideration of our citizens, and to the inspection of the world, we give no advantage to other nations and lay ourselves open to no injury.

It may not be improper to add that to preserve this state of things and give confidence to the world in the integrity of our designs, all our consular and diplomatic agents are strictly enjoined to examine well every cause of complaint preferred by our fellow citizens; and, while they urge with proper earnestness those that are well founded, to countenance none that are unreasonable or unjust, and to enjoin on our merchants and navigators the strictest obedience to the laws of the countries to which they resort, and a course of conduct in their dealings that may support the character of our nation and render us respected abroad.

Connected with this subject, I must recommend a revisal of our consular laws. Defects and omissions have been discovered in their operation that ought to be remedied and supplied. For your further information on this subject I have directed a report to be made by the Secretary of State, which I shall hereafter submit to your consideration.

The internal peace and security of our confederated States, is the next principle object of the General Government. Time and experience have proved that the abode of the native Indian within their limits is dangerous to their peace and injurious to himself. In accordance with my recommendation at a former Session of Congress, an appropriation of half a million of dollars was made to aid the voluntary removal of the various tribes beyond the limits of the States. At the last Session, I had the happiness to announce that the Chickasaws and Choctaws had accepted the generous offer of the Government and agreed to move beyond the Mississippi river, by which the whole of the State of Mississippi and the western part of Alabama will be freed from Indian occupancy and opened to a civilized population. The Treaties with these tribes are in a course of execution, and their removal, it is hoped, will be completed in the course of 1832.

At the request of the authorities of Georgia, the registration of the Cherokee Indians for emigration has been resumed, and it is confidently expected, that one half, if not two thirds of that tribe will follow the wise example of their more westerly brethren. Those who prefer remaining at their present homes will hereafter be governed by the laws of Georgia, as all her citizens are, and cease to be the objects of peculiar care, on the part of the General Government.

During the present year, the attention of the Government has been particularly directed to those tribes in the powerful and growning state of Ohio, where considerable tracts of the finest lands were still occupied by the aboriginal proprietors. Treaties, either absolute, or conditional, have been made, extinguishing the whole Indian title to the reservations of that State: and the time is not distant, it is hoped, when Ohio will be no longer embarrassed with the Indian population. The same measure will be extended to Indiana, as soon as there is reason to anticipate success.

It is confidently believed that perseverance for a few years in the present policy of the Government will extinguish the Indian title to all lands lying within the States composing our federal Union, and remove beyond their limits every Indian who was not willing to submit to their laws. Thus will all conflicting claims to jurisdiction between the States and the Indian tribes be put to rest. It is pleasing to reflect that results so beneficial, not only to the states immediately concerned, but to the harmony of the Union, will have been accomplished by measures equally advantageous to the Indians. What the native savages become when surrounded by a dense population, and by mixing with the whites, may be seen in the miserable remnants of a few eastern tribes, deprived of political and civil rights, forbidden to make contracts, and subject to guardians, dragging out a wretched existence, without excitement, without hope, and almost without thought.

But the removal of the Indians beyond the limits and jurisdiction of the States, does not place them beyond the reach of philanthropic aid and christian instruction. On the contrary, those whom philanthropy or religion may induce to live among them in their new abode, will be more free in the exercise of their benevolent functions, than if they had remained within the limits of the States, embarrassed by their internal regulations. Now, subject to no control but the superintending agency of the General Government, exercised with the wise view of preserving peace, they may proceed unmolested in the interesting experiment of gradually advancing a community of American Indians from barbarism to the habits and enjoyments of civilized life.

Among the happiest effects of the improved relations of our republic, has been an increase of trade, producing a corresponding increase of revenue, beyond the most sanguine anticipations of the Treasury Department.

The state of the public finances will be fully shown by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the report which he will presently lay before you. I will here however congratulate you upon their prosperous condition. The revenue received in the present year will not fall short of twenty-seven millions seven hundred thousand dollars; and the expenditures for all objects, other than the public debt, will not exceed fourteen millions seven hundred thousand. The payment on the account of the principal and interest of the debt, during the year will exceed thirteen millions and a half of dollars; a greater sum than has been applied to that object, out of the revenue, in any year since the enlargement of the sinking fund, except the two years following immediately thereafter. The amount which will have been applied to the public debt from the 4th of March, 1829, to the first of January next, which is less than three years since the administration has been placed in my hands, will exceed forty millions of dollars.

From the large importations of the present year, it may be safely estimated that the revenue which will be received into the treasury from that source during the next year, with the aid of that received from the public lands, will considerably exceed the amounts of the receipts of the present year, and it is believed that with the means which the Government will have at its disposal, from various sources, which will be fully stated by the proper Department, the whole of the public debt may be extinguished, either by redemption or purchase, within the four years of my administration. We shall then exhibit the rare example of a great nation, abounding in all the means of happiness and security, altogether free from debt.

The confidence with which the extinguishment of the public debt may be anticipated, presents an opportunity for carrying into effect more fully the policy in relation to import duties, which has been recommended in my former messages. A modification of the Tariff, which shall produce a reduction of our revenue to the wants of the Government, and adjustment of the duties on imports with a view to equal justice in relation to all our national interests, and to the construction of foreign policy, so far as it may be injurious to those interests, is deemed to be one of the principal objects which demand the consideration of the present Congress.—Justice to the interests of the merchant as well as the manufacturer, requires that material reductions in import duties be prospective; and unless the present Congress shall dispose of the subject, the proposed reductions cannot properly be made to take effect at the period when the necessity for the revenue arising from the present rates shall cease. It is therefore desirable, that arrangements be adopted at your present session, to relieve the people from unnecessary taxation, after the extinguishment of the public debt. In the exercise of that spirit of concession and conciliation which has distinguished the friends of our Union in all great emergencies, it is believed that this object may be effected without injury to any national interest.

In my annual message of December, 1829, I had the honor to recommend the adoption of a more liberal policy than that which then prevailed towards unfortunate debtors to the Government; and I deem it my duty again to invite your attention to this subject.

Actuated by similar views, Congress at their last session passed an act for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States; but the provisions of that law have not been deemed such as were adequate to that relief to this unfortunate class of our fellow citizens, which may be safely extended to them. The points in which the law appears to be defective will be particularly communicated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I take pleasure in recommending such an extension of its provisions as will enfetter the enterprise of a valuable portion of our citizens, and restore to them the means of usefulness to themselves and the community. While deliberating on this subject, I would also recommend to your consideration the propriety of so modifying the laws for enforcing the payment of debts due either to the public or to individuals suing in the courts of the United States as to restrict the imprisonment of the persons in cases of fraudulent concealment of property. The personal liberty of the citizen seems too sacred to be held, as in many cases it now is, at the will of the creditor to whom he is willing to surrender all the means he has of discharging his debt.

The Reports from the Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments, and from the Postmaster General, which accompany this message, present satisfactory views of the operations of the Departments respectively under their charges, and suggest improvements which are worthy of, and to which I invite the serious attention of Congress. Certain defects and omissions having been discovered in the operation of the laws respecting Patents, they are pointed out in the accompanying report of the Secretary of State.

I have heretofore recommended amendments of the Federal Constitution giving the election of President and Vice-President to the people, and limiting the services of the former to a single term. So important do I consider these changes in our fundamental law, that I cannot, in accordance with my sense of duty, omit to press them upon the consideration of a new Congress. For my views more at large, as well in relation to these points as well as the disqualification of members of Congress to receive an office from a President in whose election they had an official agency, which I proposed as a substitute, I refer you to my former messages.

Our system of public accounts is extremely complicated, and, it is believed may be much improved. Much of the present machinery, and a considerable portion of the expenditure of public money may be dispensed with, while greater facilities can be afforded to the liquidation of claims upon the government, and an examination into their justice and legality, quite as efficient as the present, secured. With a view to a general reform in the system, I recommend the subject to the attention of Congress.

I deem it my duty again to call your attention to the condition of the district of Columbia. It was doubtless wise in the framers of our constitution to place the people of this district under the jurisdiction of the general government; but, to accomplish the objects they had in view, it is not necessary that this people should be deprived of all the privileges of self-government. Independently of the difficulty of inducing the Representatives of distant States to turn their attention to projects of laws which are not of the highest interest to their constituents, they are not individually, nor in Congress collectively, well qualified to legislate over the local concerns of this district. Consequently, its interests are much neglected, and the people are almost afraid to present their grievances, lest a body, in which they are not represented, and which feels little sympathy in their local relations, should in its attempt to make laws for them, do more harm than good. Governed by the laws of the states whence they were severed, the two shores of the Potomac within the ten miles square, have different penal codes, not the present codes of Virginia and Maryland, but such as existed in those states at the time of the cession to the United States. As Congress will not form a new code, and as the people of the district cannot make one for themselves, they are virtually under two governments. Is it not just to allow them at least a delegate in congress, if not a local legislature, to make laws for the district, subject to the approval or rejection of congress? I earnestly recommend the extension to them of every political right which their interests require, and which may be compatible with the constitution.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

The extension of the Judiciary system of the United States, is deemed to be one of the duties of Government. One fourth of the states in the Union do not participate in the benefits of a Circuit court. To the States of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, admitted into the Union since the present Judicial system was organized, only a District court has been allowed. If this be sufficient, then the Circuit courts already existing in eighteen states, ought to be abolished. If it be not sufficient, the defect ought to be remedied, and these states placed on the same footing with the other members of the Union. It was on this condition, and on this footing, that they entered the Union—and they may demand Circuit courts as a matter, not of concession, but of right. I trust that Congress will not adjourn, leaving this anomaly in our system.

Entertaining the opinions heretofore expressed in relation to the Bank of the United States, as at present organized, I felt it my duty, in my former Message, frankly to disclose them, in order that the attention of the Legislature and the people should be seriously directed to that important subject, and that it might be considered and finally disposed of in a manner best calculated to promote the ends of the constitution and subserve the public interests. Having thus conscientiously discharged a constitutional duty, I deem it proper, on this occasion, without a more particular reference to the views of the subject then expressed, to leave it for the present to the investigation of an enlightened people and their representatives.

In conclusion, permit me to invoke that Power which superintends all governments, to infuse into our deliberations, at this important crisis of our history, a spirit of mutual forbearance and conciliation. In that spirit was our union formed, and in that spirit must it be preserved.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Washington, December 6, 1831.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

At 12 o'clock, this day, the House was called to order by the Clerk, Matthew St. Clair Clarke, and the roll of Members being called by states, there were 200 Members who answered to their names.

A quorum being present, the House then proceeded to ballot for a speaker.

Messrs. Davis of Massachusetts, Crawford of Pennsylvania, and M'Coy of Virginia, were appointed Tellers; and on counting the votes on the 1st ballot, there appeared, to—

ANDREW STEVENSON, of Virginia,	95
JOEL R. SUTHERLAND, of Pennsylvania,	54
CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky,	15
JOHN W. TAYLOR, of New-York,	15
LEWIS CONDICT, of New Jersey,	4
Scattering,	6
Whole number of votes,	189
Necessary to a choice,	95

Andrew Stevenson was accordingly declared by the Clerk to be duly elected, and was then conducted to the Chair by the Hon. Thomas Newton, of Virginia—being the oldest member present.

MONROE COUNTY GRAND JURY AND THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

PRESENTMENT.

The Grand Jury of the County of Monroe respectfully present, that selected as we are from various sections of the county, and representing as we may be presumed to do, in some measure, the views and sentiments of our fellow-citizens; and having in common with them a deep personal interest in whatever relates to our common prosperity, have thought proper to submit our views on a subject which has recently excited considerable interest. We mean the subject of intemperance. Had we known nothing of this subject before, facts, which have been disclosed during our deliberations as a Grand Jury, are abundantly sufficient to satisfy us that this vice is the prolific cause of a very great proportion [and as we believe at least nine-tenths] of all the crimes which are perpetrated.

In almost every case which has come before us, we have been able to trace the commission of the crime to this cause.

All can estimate as well as ourselves the necessary expense and consequent taxation, incident to the trial, conviction and punishment of criminals. But what is this compared to the poverty, the disgrace, and the suffering of families consequent on a course of ignominy and crime? We have considered it as coming within the scope and spirit of our official duty, to inquire whether any fault attaches to all or any of those whom the law has clothed with authority. While we would cautiously refrain from imputing unmerited censure, we feel constrained to present, as a great public evil, and we think it not too much to say, a public nuisance, the practice of licensing the sale of ardent spirits to be drank in petty groceries. In the village of Rochester, as we are credibly informed, there are more than fifty of these licensed grog-shops. Many of them are the habitual resort of the idle, the dissipated, and the depraved; the schools of vice and the nurseries of crime; and all this under the sanction of law. We believe the retailing of ardent spirits to be drank in these petty groceries, does not in any manner contribute to the comfort or convenience of any portion of our citizens. Indeed, the only plausible argument which we have heard urged in favor of the practice is, that the tax imposed for licenses is a mode of raising a small revenue to the village. But to say nothing of the manifest absurdity of that system of policy, which seeks to raise a revenue and increase the public resources, by manufacturing paupers and multiplying criminals; is it either just or equitable, we ask, towards the other parts of the county? The expense of all the crime and a portion of the pauperism produced by these licensed grog shops, is raised by a tax on the whole county; while the revenue is appropriated for the exclusive benefit of the village.

We humbly submit that the law itself which authorises the granting of these licenses, savours strongly of an odious monopoly. The boards of excise in the towns have no power to grant similar licenses. But if establishments of this kind are necessary in villages and cities, where taverns are usually abundant, are they not equally so in the country where they are less frequent? If grog shops are public blessings, why not allow all to participate in their benefits? Believing however as we do, that they are necessary no where, but pernicious wherever they are, having a certain tendency to impose burthensome and unequal taxation, to produce idleness, poverty, domestic misery, and crime, we respectfully recommend to the citizens of this county, to petition the legislature to repeal all such laws as give to the trustees or other officers of any village, within the limits of said county, the power to grant any licenses for the retail of ardent spirits, other than such as the boards of excise in the several towns, are by law authorised to grant.

In connexion we would most cheerfully see collectively bear testimony in favor of [illegible] reformation, which is now so rapidly [illegible] in our land. We firmly believe, that on its eventual success depends in a great measure, the perpetuity of our free institutions, and the prosperity and happiness of our beloved country.

By order of the Grand Jury.

A. M. SCHERMERHORN, Foreman.
ABIAL RANDALL,
OLIVER STRONG,
N. T. ROCHESTER,
BENJAMIN SEABURY,
JOSEPH G. HANFORD,
ELIAS SMITH,
THEODORE BACKUS,
J. J. MACK,
JOEL PALMER,
HALL COLBY,
ARETAS ADAMS,
SQUIRE GOFF,
JOHN LINES,
JOHN PETERS.

Rochester, December 7, 1831.

OBSERVER.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 14, 1831.

WELL WORTHY THE CONSIDERATION OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE VILLAGE OF ROCHESTER, AND OF ALL OTHER VILLAGES.

The Presentment of the Grand Jury of this county, which we publish this week, does credit to the gentlemen whose names are attached to it, and to the county of Monroe. It is a document of no ordinary importance. Its recommendations have a direct bearing not only on the moral, but on the temporal interests and prosperity of the country.

We have often called the attention of our readers to the heavy tax which the licences to sell ardent spirits impose upon the inhabitants—the many being taxed for the benefit of the few.—We hope, when this subject is laid before the people by a Grand Jury of this county that it will receive that consideration which the important interests it involves so imperiously demand.

The Editor of the Daily Advertiser recommends to those who own buildings, occupied as grog shops, to close their doors against such occupants. This reminds us of a fact which we learned when at Buffalo some time since. A wealthy gentleman (his name we would give, if we could so arrange the alphabet as to spell it,) who has a large property in building lots in that flourishing village, sold a number of them last summer, but in every deed inserted a clause to prevent the owner or occupant from erecting any building upon them to be used as a grocery or tavern in which ardent spirit should be sold.—The Young Men's Temp. Society, with a liberality that does them much credit, passed a vote of thanks & ordered a medal to be presented him with a suitable device, as a testimony of their high approbation of his conduct.

Such examples as this must have a powerful influence in promoting the cause of temperance. They show to the community the estimate in which the use of ardent spirit is held by men of property and who have an interest at stake which is enhanced or diminished by whatever affects the interest of the society in which they reside and of which they constitute a part.

It is a matter worthy of consideration whether any one can innocently permit his property to be used for any purpose by another, for which he could not conscientiously use it himself.

Our Trustees have once or twice, called upon the inhabitants of this village for an expression of their opinion as to the propriety of withholding these grog shop licences altogether. We hope they may have such an expression that it cannot be doubted or misunderstood.

CATHOLIC LIBERTY OF THE PRESS!!

We did not expect so speedy a developement of the disposition of Catholics to muzzle the press and silence those papers that dare to speak out fearlessly and warn the people against the dangers to be apprehended from the spread of the principles of Popish intolerance in this country.

The following we should think might open the eyes of Protestants—of every man who either knows or cares any thing about our republican institutions.

The Catholic Miscellany published at Charleston, S. C. says:

The Intendant of Georgetown, South Carolina, has presented to the Grand Jury two copies of the Protestant. The Grand Jury have laid the same before the Legislature of South Carolina, by whom they leave it to be determined, whether there exists, by application to Congress or otherwise, any mode of redressing an evil of such alarming magnitude."

It seems from this, that Catholics at the south, do not hold the Protestant in such high estimation as an auxiliary to the cause of Popery as some of them pretend to do in N. York.

We have no doubt that the same spirit that would prevent the publication of the Protestant, would prevent the publication of every paper, that dared to expose the demoralizing and soul destroying principles of Popery, were there power to do it. Apply to congress to muzzle the free American Press! We have laws which Americans deem a sufficient safeguard to check its incentiousness—but it seems that the subjects of the Pope in America must have something more. And mark! They will have, whenever and wherever, they shall gain such an ascendancy as to have the power of making laws to suit their own purposes!

CATHOLIC SUPERSTITION.

The editor of the Charleston (S.C) Observer says that Bishop England (Catholic) of that city pretends he is in possession of a piece of the Holy Cross. The editor well remarks that if all the timber that has been sold by catholics as parts of the cross were collected it would make timber sufficient for the construction of a navy. We did not suppose that any respectable catholic in America could be so credulous. The trade which has been driven by Papists in relics for centuries, and by which the ignorant of their own communion have been imposed upon, & the more cunning have made money, is so well understood by Americans, that we did not imagine any one would attempt to make them swallow such stuff. But the editor of the Observer says that even if the article could be proved to be genuine why should it be held in religious veneration? and adds "as well might religious veneration be paid to the individual who betrayed, and to the council who condemned and the hands that executed our blessed Saviour."

The favor of L. shall appear in our next.

A New-Orleans paper says that THREE duels have taken p ace in that city in two days!!—Three of the combatants were wounded—one severely. No part of the United States is exempt from the guilt of fashionable murder. All parts of our country are stained with the blood of the murderous duellist, but of late years the tide of public opinion and an improved state of public morals have so strongly set in against this savage custom that the resort to private combat, to settle private, personal difficulties, has become much less frequent except in those parts of the country where the Catholic religion prevails, and where, it of course forms the standard of moral obligation. It will be recollected that there are not Protestants enough in New-Orleans to build a church without foreign aid. It will be well for those who would inform themselves as to the influence of the Catholic religion to keep an eye on these things. In Italy, Spain, and in S. America, we all know that the dirk and stiletto are the common arbiters in all personal disputes, and that too, not in open and equal combat.—Assassinations are matters of so frequent occurrence as to excite little attention; and the assassin is seldom discovered. The same principles will lead to the same results in this as in any other country. It is the boast of the Catholic religion that it is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

TO POST-MASTERS.

We repeatedly have papers returned by Post-Masters, saying that the paper is not taken out of the office—sometimes requesting us to discontinue, &c. &c.

We particularly request that the name of the town or Post-Office may be written on the paper, as wear otherwise compelled to look through perhaps all the names on our books to ascertain who the individual is that refuses to take the paper.

A WORD TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

At this volume is near its close, and as the New Year approaches, our creditors will call for pay. We take this time to remind those who are in arrears, that we do hope they will not delay in making remittances. A few days delay at this time is very important to us. We want our pay on or before the first of January.

We just remind them also that a New-Year's present of a new subscriber would be a very acceptable accompaniment to their remittances of cash.

The proceedings of the Genesee co. Temp. Society are necessarily excluded this week. We will endeavor to give them in full or an abstract, in our next.

THE IMPRISONED MISSIONARIES.

A letter from Mr. Worcester to one of the Secretaries of the Am. Board published in the Bost. Recorder, speaks of their situation as being as comfortable as could be expected. Their spirits are unbroken and their confidence in God, and the goodness of the cause in which they suffer, is undiminished. Dr. Butler and himself had separated their lodgings at the request of the prisoners, for the sake of having evening worship in two rooms. He says:

"On the Sabbath we are in the same rooms as at night. By permission of the keepers, I preach in the morning in my own room, and in the afternoon in the other, so that most of the prisoners who are disposed have opportunity to hear. The number usually present in both rooms taken together, is between 60 and 70. Dr. Butler also holds a meeting in the forenoon in the room where he lodges. Pray that these efforts may be followed with the Divine blessing."

* * * * *

Spirit of Georgia.—The Augusta (Ga.) Courier, contains a communication from Gov. Lumpkin to the Legislature of Ga, stating that a citation had been served upon him, signed by the Hon. H. Baldwin one of the Judges of the Sup. Court of the U. States, citing the State of Georgia to appear before the U. S. Court, to show cause why the judgements for the imprisonment of the Missionaries should not be set aside. The Governor considers this as an infringement upon the sovereignty of Georgia—that such a power is not delegated by the U. S. Constitution; that "such an attempt whenever made, will challenge the most determined resistance, and if persevered in, will inevitably eventuate in the annihilation of our beloved Union."—He closes by saying,

"In exercising the duties of that department of the Government which devolves on me, I will disregard all unconstitutional requisitions, of whatever character or origin they may be, and to the best of my abilities, I will protect and defend the rights of the state, and use the means afforded me to maintain its Laws and Constitution."

FIRE.

On Tuesday Morning about 1 o'clock, the alarm of fire was sounded which was found to proceed from a cluster of wooden buildings on State Street, a little north of the Mansion House. Before the fire was subdued 9 buildings were destroyed. They were owned by Ebenezer Ely, D. C. West, Thomas Kempshall and Ira West, principally insured. The occupants were W. & N. Jewell, carriage makers whose loss is estimated at from 2 to 300 dollars—Mr. D. C. West, painter and glazier lost his books, papers and paints—loss about $400, several sleighs were burned in the shop. T. McAuley grocer—no insurance—loss several hundred dollars.—The fire was arrested by pulling down part of Castle Garden which probably saved the Mansion House. The five Fire companies were on the ground and were very efficient while they could obtain a sopply of water, the failure of which at a critical juncture was the occasion of the loss of one of the buildings. It is matter of astonishment that the stables and other buildings directly in the rear of those burned should have been saved.

The most extraordinary circumstance about this fire was that one of the buildings was nearly consumed before the alarm was given, and then as we understand the cry of fire must have disturbed the slumbers of our vigilant watchmen in that section of the village.

U. STATES SENATOR.—Mr. G. Waggaman, Nat. Republican, has been elected by one majority as U. States Senator from Louisiana.

[illegible]'S MESSAGE.

[illegible] of this important document necessarily excludes much other matter. We are not disposed to comment, except upon that part of it in which the removal of the Cherokees is recommended, on the ground that it will improve their moral condition to separate them from the contaminating influence of a surrounding white population, and prevent their dwindling away like the eastern tribes which are referred to. In the first place the fact is that the Cherokees have increased in numbers since the introduction of the christian religion among them. That they have increased in wealth and have made rapid advances in all the arts of civilized life will not be denied. If they remove will they be preserved from the contaminating influence of the whites? Those who have removed to the west of the Mississippi, have been followed by the most abandoned white speculators, and whiskey has been furnished them in such abundance, that there is already much more intemperance than before their removal. As to the withdrawing of the protection of the United States and turning them over to the tender mercies of Georgia, we have only to remind our readers of certain treaty stipulations, guaranteeing the protection of the U. States, and also the solemn assurance of our present Chief Magistrate to the same effect when first inducted into office. Let our readers examine with attention the brief and imperfect sketch which we give below, of the Message of the President of the Cherokee council.

THE CHEROKEES.

In the last Cherokee Phœnix is published at length the Message of John Ross to the General Council of the Cherokee Nation. It is an able document and a fair and lucid expose of the unrighteous acts of oppression under which that people have groaned for three or four years past. We should be glad to give it entire but a press of other matter will compel us to limit ourselves to a few of the leading facts embraced in the Message.

After assigning the reason for the meeting of the Council at Chattooga instead of New Echota, the proper place of meeting—which they were compelled to do, or render themselves liable to four years imprisonment in the Georgia Penitentiary—he goes on to say that the President of the U. States at an early day after his induction into office gave assurance to the Cherokees, that so far as they had rights they should be protected in them, "and that an interference to the extent of affording protection, and the occupancy of their soil was what was demanded of the U. States and would not be withheld and "that the intruders would be removed." In pursuance of these promises a detachment of United States Troops was ordered into the nation—but lot instead of removing intruders and protecting the Cherokees in the "occupancy of their soil," it was soon found that the Troops were to be employed in furthering the views of Georgia to prevent the Cherokees from digging Gold on their own land—and finally, at the request of the Governor of Georgia, they were withdrawn from the territory and were succeeded by the Georgia Guard. What kind of protection they have afforded, their indefatigable industry and zeal, in apprehending our Missionaries, and dragging them chained like felons, through the country, sufficiently shows. Mr. Ross says:

The numerous subsisting treaties between the U. States and this nation were negotiated, entered into, and constitutionally ratified, on the part of the States by the competent authorities thereof; and they compose a part of "the supreme law of the land," and "the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, any thing in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."—In reference to this clause of the Federal Constitution I may well borrow an expression of one of the most eminent Judges of Georgia, "can language be plainer or can words be stronger." Such was the language of an Honorable Judge in delivering an opinion from the bench in that state some years ago, in favor of some individuals who claimed title to land reserved to them by the treaty of 1819, between the United States and this nation, and against the title claimed under a grant from Georgia by certain citizens thereof.

The judicial power extends to all cases in law, and equity, arising under the constitution, the laws of the U. States, and treaties made under their authority; and no state can enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation, or pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts;—and Congress alone possess the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states and with the Indian tribes. Here then, in the face of all these constitutional provisions, all the treaties made with the Cherokee Nation, and the laws enacted by Congress in the spirit of those treaties for our protection, the present administration of the General Government, has tolerated Ga. in the recklessness of her own glory and reputation, to march across the line of her constitutional boundary to pass laws repugnant to those treaties and laws of the Union, for the express object of perplexing and distressing our citizens by intolerable oppression, that we may be forced to surrender our lands for her benefit. Georgia has surveyed our country into districts—she has placed numerous intruders upon our soil, and in time of profound peace has levied troops, and still continues to keep them in service. These troops without civil precepts have arrested our citizens at the point of the bayonet, marched them over the country with chains around their necks and without trials have imprisoned them in jail at their military station!

After adverting to the imprisonment of the Missionaries he goes on to speak of the application which was made to the Sup. Court of the U. States for an injunction against the state of Georgia. The government of the state of Georgia so managed as to prevent bringing the differences between them and the Cherokees before the U. States court. The only resort therefore for the Cherokees was to apply for an injunction and as the result was unfavorable to the Cherokees and is by many understood as justifying the claims of Georgia, we will give the statement of Mr. Ross in relation to this subject, which will be recognized by all who have examined the case, as perfectly correct.

Finding, however, that the Courts of Georgia were disposed to prevent as far as possible any case from going up to the supreme court of the United States, our counsel advised the propriety of trying the original jurisdiction of the court by applying, in the character of a foreign state for an injunction to restrain Georgia, her officers, citizens, &c. from enforcing her laws within our territorial limits. Copies of the Bill for an injunction, and notices of the intended motion were accordingly served upon the Governor and Attorney General of that state. On the 5th of March last, the motion was made by John Scargeant Esq. who also delivered an able speech in favor of the application. Wm. Wirt, Esq. concluded with equal ability and force of argument on the same side. No counsel appeared on the part of Georgia but some of her representatives in Congress and other friends attended the Court and anxiously awaited the decision. The Court denied the injunction on the ground that the Cherokee Nation was not a foreign state, in the sense of the Constitution. A majority, however, decided that the Cherokees are a distinct political society, separate from others, capable of managing its own affairs and governing itself, and that the acts of the United States Government plainly recognize the Cherokee Nation as a "state," and the courts are bound by those acts. The Honorable Judges Thompson and Story dissented from the majority—in a part of their opinion, and gave a very able and luminous opinion in favor of the jurisdiction of the Court and awarding the injunction. There can be no doubt that a majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court hold the law of Georgia extending jurisdiction within our limits to be unconstitutional, and whenever a case between proper parties can be brought before them, they will so decide. The authorities of Georgia seem convinced of this fact. The Courts of that state have endeavored to manage the cases brot before them, under their laws, in such a manner as to avoid presenting a case for the adjudication of the Supreme Court of the United States on this important question. And when a writ of error was obtained from the Chief Justice in the case of the State of Georgia vs. George Tassel, the Legislature and Executive authorities interposed by ordering the execution of the unfortunate party.

He next speaks of the delegation which was sent to Washington to confer with the President in relation to their difficulties. He says that the President refused to pay over to the delegation any part of the annuity to defray the expenses of the Mission, but ordered the agent to distribute it among the individuals of the nation. Against this measure thousands of the Cherokees protested, but in vain. The uniform—the invariable practice of paying over the amount of the annuity to the Treasurer of the Cherokee Nation was departed from and agents sent through the country, soliciting the people to receive each his share; amounting to about 40 cts. per head! In some cases this was represented and received as a donation from their great Father, as an evidence of his love to his red children. A few women and children only could be induced to receive it. The agents have been sent for the purpose of conversing individually with the cherokees to induce them to emigrate, but with little success. "It is said their fears and credulity are to be operated upon—how far this may be true time will develope—at all events, by the admission of Governor Gilmer, the people are not afraid of their chiefs, nor under the influence of white men." The President of the council says that with regard to our relationship with the U. States, there is no subject easier understood.

The expediency of removing our Nation west of the Mississippi has also been urged, upon the incompatibility of permitting an independent Government to grow up within the limits of the United States. A correct understanding of our Treaties, with the United States will show the absurdity of this argument and remove all fears of the possibility of any evil ever arising to any one of the States from our present location. A weak defenceless community as we are, forming an alliance with, and placed under the protection of, and residing in the heart of so powerful a Nation as the United States, and having surrendered a portion of our sovereignty, as a security for our protection, and our intercourse being confined exclusively with our protector, must necessarily produce that identity of interest and bond of friendship so natural to the ties of such an alliance.—Something has also been said on the score of the public defence. It is true our population at present is small, but it is increasing as rapidly as could be expected. And have not the Cherokees at all times been ready to meet the common foe of the United states? Did they not sufficiently prove to the world their disposition on this subject during the last war? Did they not meet and fight the enemy as became warriors? Let the gallant commander, who now administers the affairs of the United states Government answer.

He closes with recommending that provision be made for the payment of loans which he has made of individuals also nation, then consequence of the withholding of their annuity—a law for settlement of difficulties by arbitration.

THE CHOLERA ADVANCING.—In three days 34 new cases of cholera occurred at Hambugh, (Germany.) Great apprehensions were entertained of its soon reaching England.

The Cholera has broken out in Smyrna, and was at the time of the account, confined to the Jewish population.

POLAND.

All accounts from Warsaw confirm the complete destruction of the Polish army. Generals in multitudes are daily coming in, and giving in their adhesion to Russia and—and soldiers are following their example. General Skrzynecki and prince Czartoryski left Warsaw before the entrance of the Russians and their retreat has not been discovered. There is a report that 30,000 Poles had taken up an imposing position near Plosk, and intend yet to attempt resistance, but little credit is attached to it.

GREECE.

Capo d'Istrias has become so unpopular since the late events at Poros, a detailed account of which we gave two weeks since, that he has resolved to resign and leave the country.

ITALY.

Some parts of the Papal Territories are in a state of virtual separation from the Roman See. The revolters have a force of 40,000 men. The Treasury of the Pope is completely exhausted, and the convents have been drained to the last farthing. The misery of the lower classes in Rome and its vicinity is extreme.

England.—Mobs and burnings are the order the day, on account of the rejection of the Reform Bill in the House of Lords—We intended to have given a number of extracts from English papers, but they are excluded for want of room. The Marquis of Londonderry was attacked by the populace, pelted with stones, and rescued by the Military—The seat of the Duke of New-Castle, one of the most ancient and elegant seats in England, was plundered and burned.

So serious are the apprehensions for the result, that many of the people are quitting London for Paris—that a number of the anti-Reform Peers—some of them who with their ancestors have ever been the most decided opposers to America; have become large purchasers in American stock.

The Parliament was to reassemble the first week in Dec. and another Bill was in a state of preparation & the friends of the measure were determined to force its passage.

Riots have taken place in Ireland in consequence of the Orangemen assembling & lighting bonfires by way of rejoicing at the rejection of the Reform Bill—The Maidstone Cavalry disbanded themselves by way of showing their disapprobation of the Anti-Reform sentiments of their commander, to whom they say in an address that they cannot consent to serve under a Colonel who opposed the measure in the House of Commons, and a Lord Lieutenant who is in the majority in the House of Lords."

REPORT

Of monies received for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions:

1831:
Sept.	13.	From Congregational Church, Royalton, Niagara Co.	13 [illegible]
	14.	From " " Ogden,	13 [illegible]
	19.	" Pr. Ch. E Avon, Liv. Co.	10 [illegible]
	23.	" " " Sweden,	11 [illegible]
	29.	" " " Attica; Gen. Co.	5 [illegible]
Oct.	5.	First Pr. Ch. Rochester;	21 [illegible]
	5.	Cong. Ch. Ogden;	9 [illegible]
	5.	Second Pr. Ch. Rochester;	51 [illegible]
	10.	Mrs. Agness Miller, donation,	1 [illegible]
	8.	Pr. Ch. Brockport;	40 [illegible]
	25.	" " Sweden,	3 [illegible]
Nov.	8.	Second Pr. Ch. Rochester;	61 [illegible]
	11.	" " North Penfield,	9 [illegible]
	15.	Cong. Ch. Sweden,	3 [illegible]
Dec.	1.	Byron Female Miss. Society,	25 [illegible]
	2.	Cong Ch. Ogden,	15 [illegible]
	6.	Second Pr. Ch. Rochester, M. C.	50 [illegible]
	7.	First " " " Nov. and Dec.	130 [illegible]
	8.	Livonia; by Rev. J. Stow, M. C.	21 [illegible]
		Sunday School Children;	10 [illegible]
		Female Mite Society	10 75
		J. Pierson, Sweden, 25th Oct. payment for Missionary Herald,	1 50
	9.	Third Pr. Ch. Rochester; for Oct. [illegible] November;	78 [illegible]
		Ladies of 3d Pr. Ch. Rochester, to constitute their pastor, Rev. Luke Lyons an honorary member,	50 00
			8662 [illegible]

EBEN. ELY.

December 9th, 1831.

Letters received during the last two weeks.—E. C. Hyde; H. Prindel; N. Adams; P. Sm[illegible]; J. Richmond, 2; L. G. Merrill; C. S[illegible]; J. Kelly; B. Coy; D. Hall; W. Seaver; J. Moffill; W. Y. Vincent; A. Bradner; F. Chipman; O. Babbit.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION SOCIETY.

Communications to this Society may be made to the Rev. C. Eddy, Auburn, or to Mr. Levi A. Ward, No. 36, state st. Rochester.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Monroe county Temperance Society, will be held in the 1st Presbyterian church, in Rochester, on Tuesday the 3d day of January next, at 10 o'clock, A. M. The report of the executive committee will be presented, and an address may be expected from Ashley Samson, Esq. The friends of the cause in the several towns are earnestly requested to attend.

It is desirable that the reports of the several town societies should be furnished to the subscriber as early as the 15th December, instant, or as soon after as practicable, that they may be embraced in the report of the County Society. These reports should state the number and increase of members, and as many interesting particulars as can be collected illustrating the progress of Temperance in the county during the past year. EVERARD PECK.

Rochester, Dec. 6

Apology.—A part of the outside form of our paper was worked of this week in the night, by apprentices without the knowledge or direction of the printer, and the consequence is that it is hardly legible. We had almost determined not to send them, but conclude that our subscribers would rather have them, even in this state, than not to have them at all. We shall endeavor to guard against the recurrence of such accidents in future.

ROCHESTER MARKET.

Wheat, bushel	80 87½	mess, bl.	$ 12 [illegible]
Flour, bbl.	5 25	Potatoes,	22
Corn,	44	Butter, lb.	14 a 15
Oats,		Lard,	15
Beef, fresh	2 50 3 00	Eggs, doz.	15
Pork, do.	3a 3½	Shoulder, bbl.	1 [illegible]
Salt, bbl.	1,75

Rochester price Pot ashes $90 ton—Pearls 88

MARRIED,

On the 13th inst. by Rev. Luke Lyons, Mr Harvey C. Fenn, to Miss Mary Ann Goulson; both of this village.

A BOY about 15 years old who wishes to learn the Watch repairing business will hear of a good place by applying to E. Cook. Good qualifications and recommendations will be required.

Dec. 14, 1831.

Millenery & Mantuamaking.

MISS MARY W. LEE has taken the shop lately occupied by Misses Fitch, No 33, Main st. Having received the latest patterns from New York and Philadelphia she is prepared to execute work in her line in a fashionable style.

Dec. 7, 1831.

Pure Juice of the Grape.

THE subscribers have now on hand a large assortment of PURE WINES, of various kinds. They intend keeping them constantly on hand, and respectfully invite the attention of the public to the substitution of these for the mixed Wines now in general use, viz:

Maderia, south side, } In bottles
Sicily Medaira, Port, } and on dft.
Vidonia, Alhama, Marsala, } of sup. qu'ty:
French Madeira, } and at various
Dry and Sweet Malaga, } prices.

In regard to the assertion, that they are pure juice of the grape, free from all admixture of distilled spirits whatever, we have two certificates, one from the importer, the other the Wine itself.

Adjoining the Rochester House, Exchange St.

WILLSON & EDGELL.

N. B. Buck Wheat Flour constantly on hand.

Dec. 7, 1831.

CLOTHING STORE.

THE Subscriber has received from N. York an addition to his former stock of Goods; which he will be happy to make to the order of either old friends or new.

Ready Made Clothing,

constantly on hand. He would barely remark that he does not mean to be excelled in workmanship—neither will he allow himself to be undersold.

DAVID BUSH.

No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. All persons indebted to the late firm of Wm. M'Coy, & Co. are earnestly requested to make immediate payment otherwise—— D. B.

Nov. 29, 1831.

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber for costs or having unsettled claims on his Docket are requested to call and settle the same without delay.

DAVID BUSH.

Nov. 29, 1831. No. 29, Main Street.

P. S. Wanted to hire, cut any quantity of Wood from fifty to five hundred cords. Enquire as above.

NEW BOOKS.

HOLY LIVING AND DYING, with Prayers containing the complete duty of a Christian; By JEREMY TAYLOR, D. D.

Babington on Education, with a preliminary essay, By T. H. GALLAUDET.

The Child's Book on the Soul, particularly designed for elementary instruction in Sunday schools. By T. H. GALLAUDET.

The Christian Lyre, Vol. 2., By JOSHUA LEAVITT.

Just received and for sale at the New Book Store of SKINNER & PHELPS

Oct. 27, 1831

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

From the Connecticut Observer.

'HISTORICAL RECOLLECTIONS.'

A correspondent of the Episcopal Watchman is giving some 'Historical Recollections' of the Episcopal Church in Maine. Among other things he says—

'While the State was under Massachusetts, no efforts were spared to confirm the people to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Puritans. In 1669, notwithstanding the town of Falmouth supported an Episcopal clergyman, the General Court ordered Falmouth and Scarborough "to supply themselves with an able, orthodox preacher to be their minister," before the 20th of Sept. next, under penalty of £50 per annum during their being destitute." And one of the offences of Rev. Robert Jordan, as mentioned by the Act passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts, in October, 1630, was, that he "in July last, after the exercises were ended on the Lord's-day, in the house of Mrs. Macworth, in the town of Falmouth, did then and there baptize three children of Nathaniel Willis, to the offence of the government of this Commonwealth." Among the complaints, also, which were made to the King's Commissioners, in 1665, against Massachusetts, the following are noticed: "They will not admit any, who is not a member of the church, to communion, nor their children to baptism." "They did imprison and barbarously use Mr. Jordan for baptizing children, as himself complained, in his petition to the Commissioners." Many other examples might be given of this unchristian and unnatural temper; but the fact is well established on the page of history; and this furious bigotry and stupid intolerance will ever remain a foul blot on the character and name of the "Pilgrim Fathers," and their descendants.'

The first charge against the 'Pilgrim Fathers' by this writer is that when Falmouth had an Episcopal clergyman, it was compelled under a penalty of £50 to unite with another town in the support of an orthodox clergyman. This charge possibly does not come home to the "Pilgrim Fathers" as a body—for Plymouth, the land of "Pilgrims," had nothing to do with this transaction. No more had the "Pilgrim Fathers" of Connecticut. But waiving this. The offence is, we suppose, that Episcopalians were compelled to pay for the support of a Congregational minister, when they had a clergyman of their own sentiments. But dissenters in England were not only thus but are now, compelled to a similar course. In all the Episcopal colonies in this country, other denominations were taxed for the support of Episcopal ministers. And in at least one of the Colonies, if no more, even Presbyterian ministers were compelled to pay taxes for the support of Episcopal ministers. This they were compelled to do in New-York city, not in 1689, but in the middle of the last century. The laws taxing other denominations for the support of Episcopal clergymen, were not altered until the revolution in New-York and Virginia.

Another charge against the 'Fathers' which shows their 'furious bigotry and stupid intolerance,' and will ever remain a foul blot on their character and name,' is the imprisonment and ill-treatment of an Episcopal clergyman 'for baptizing children.' We are not their apologists for this act, if they were guilty of it—we only wish to show that 'ANTIQUUS' need not confine his charge of 'furious bigotry and stupid intolerance' to them. The crime charged against the 'Pilgrim Fathers' took place in 1630. Forty-seven years after this, that is, in the year 1707, when liberal principles must have gained ground, two Presbyterian clergymen ventured to present themselves in New-York, of which, at that time, not one of the intolerant 'Pilgrim Fathers," but my Lord Cornbury, a staunch Episcopalian, was Governor. One of these ministers dared to preach a single sermon there, and to baptize a single child. And what was the result? They were pursued to Long Island, brought back to the city, and thrown into jail, where they lay in prison two months—and when the man who had preached was acquitted by the jury, he could not get discharged from his recognizance, until they had extorted from him between two and three hundred dollars. As late as 1768, 1771, 1772, and even on the brink of the revolution, in 1774, dissenters were imprisoned for preaching in the good Episcopal Colony of Virginia. Do these things also show 'furious bigotry and stupid intolerance?' If 'ANTIQUUS' desires to keep alive such 'Historical Recollections,' we would refer him to Miller's Life of Rogers,—Smith's History of the Baptists, vol. 2d. Chap. 7—History of the Dutch Reformed Church, an article by Dr. Mason, in the Christian Magazine—Williamson's History of North Carolina, especially Vol. 2, pages 115, 258—Mather's Magnalia, Vol. 2. Chap. 4th, Book 7th—and Massachusetts' Historical Collections, Vols. 1 and 2 of the 2d Series. We do not wish to act on the offensive, or we should adduce some of the facts to be found in these works. What we have written is to show that it does not become any to judge harshly or hastily of the 'Pilgrim Fathers' for their treatment of other denominations. It is necessary to see what others around them were doing before we can get a fair view of their character.

From the Same.

BY THE RICHARD KNILL.

SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED BY A LADY.

Few things are more gratifying to a man of letters, than to see a learned, ingenious, and well established criticism on a difficult, or controverted text. It has long appeared to me, that some of the plainest passages in the bible are the most difficult to be illustrated, because they are diametrically opposed to our preconceived notions, and our selfish feelings. This fact is proved from daily observation, therefore I believe the reader will agree with me, that the following note contains an admirable illustration of a well known verse. It was written by a pious lady to a pious friend.

"This morning I was reading the words of our Saviour: 'He that hath 2 coats, let him give to him that hath none.' In meditating on this verse I thought of you. I recollected that I say you lately with an article which ought to be renewed. I have two of the kind, and in accordance with the words just quoted I send one of them to you."

Now, if only this simple passage were read, meditated upon, and prayed over, and put into practice by every lady who reads these lines, how many wardrobes, and chests of drawers, and boxes, would be examined! How many moths would be deprived of their prey! How many worthy sisters would be warmed and clothed! What gratitude would it call forth from the hearts of the recipients, to their benefactresses, and what unmingled pleasures would it afford to those who had both the ability and the disposition to add to the comfort of their neighbors; and if we pursue the subject a step further, and change the gender, and, instead of ladies, say gentlemen, then how many garments may the latter space which are of little or no use to themselves, but which would be of most essential service to others. Conscience! faithful monitor, do thine office.

From the Same.

BY THE REV. RICHARD KNILL.

THE INFLUENCE OF EXAMPLE.

One day last year a glazier was mending my window, and my children were standing by looking at him. While he was at work, one of the little fellow, just two years old, pulled the man by the apron, and said to him, Brother, can you read?" At first the man took no notice of the child, but finding him continue his prattle, he said, "Does the child speak to me?" "Yes." "What does he want?" "Listen to him." The boy then repeated the question, "Brother, can you read?" "Yes," replied the man. "Have you a New Testament?" "No." As soon as the child found that the man had not a testament he walked to the room where they are kept, and having obtained one carried it immediately to the glazier. His nurse seeing what was done, remarked, "You have not done this properly, you ought to have found a verse for the man to read." "Yes, yes," said he, and in turning over the leaves he accidentally pointed to that beautiful passage "When thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

These questions the child frequently heard addressed to people who came to our house, but we had no idea of adopting the same plan without solicitation. O what a tremendous responsibility do these dear little immortals attach to the parental character! Are children capable, at so early an age, of copying the examples around them? Then we who are parents ought to be exceedingly cautious both of what we say and what we do in their presence.

WHEN WILL THE WORLD BE SAVED?

Extract from the speech of the Rev. J. C. Brigham, Secretary of the American Bible Society, delivered at the Sunday school Jubilee Meeting in Exeter Hall, London, Sept. 14, 1831.—N. Y. Evangelist.

It has been my lot during the last eight or ten years of my life, to mingle with people of different nations. I have been through every part of Spanish America; during the last few months I have been on the continent of Europe, and at almost every step of my journey the question occurred to my mind—When are all these multitudes to be converted to God? I found temples enough, cathedrals enough, priests enough—such as they were: I found schools enough, but I had reason on almost every occasion to fear that it was the mere form of godliness without the power. In travelling eighteen or twenty thousand miles in Spanish America, scarcely an individual could be found who gave evidence of having passed from death unto life; and I fear, that in journeying over the south of Europe, you will meet with a similar occurrence. Perpetually did the question recur to my mind—Who are to convey to this half christianized people the blessing of salvation—who are to give them the bible—who are to establish Sunday schools among them? Amid all this I have been led to reflect, that if ever these people are to be converted to God, it must be through the instrumentality of Christians, and those who are their descendants. I wish it were in my power to impress it upon all your minds, that the great work of converting these gentiles devolves, in a great measure, upon the two nations to which we have the honor and the felicity to belong. It is not sufficient for this to be felt in a national capacity, it should be an inquiry brought home to every breast—What can I do towards sanctifying those around me!—What can I do towards spreading these blessings abroad? I would hope that the period is not far distant when we shall be able to send forth many more heralds of salvation, and to establish Sunday schools as numerously in the distant parts of the world as in the Valley of Mississippi.—They must go from England and America; they must spring out of those Sabbath schools—in all probability from the Sabbath schools under your care. O! feel your responsibility, and let no time be lost.

WHAT DO THESE THINGS MEAN?

It is hardly possible that Revivals of Religion, so powerful and so extensive, as those of which we have recently heard of in our own, as well as in other States, can exist, without producing some attention to the subject in the minds of multitudes who know nothing of their operation but from their report. The deep and varied emotions with which they are witnessed, are the channels through which they exert an extensive influence, either in their favor or against them. While all are constrained to admit the existence of the facts, a difference of opinion obtains in relation to the cause by which they are produced. The experimental Christian refers it to the Spirit of God—and finds in the Gospel—in the Acts of the Apostles—in the history of the Church—in the economy of grace, and in the testimony of his own heart, abundant evidences that nothing but Divine power could effect the change.—Ch. Observer.

From the Western Luminary.

DISGRACEFUL SCENES.

Our streets have lately exhibited scenes which we consider disgraceful, and altogether inconsistent with our character as a civilized and christian community. We allude to the barbarities connected with the merciless traffic in human flesh, which is continually carried on, by beings in human shape, in our midst;—to the heathenish commerce in the blood, and sinews of human beings, which should excite the virtuous indignation and raise the christian sympathies, of every individual who possesses a single spark of humanity. And for what is this monstrous traffic carried on? For what are the strongest and most endearing ties of nature sundered—parents torn from their offspring—children from the fond embraces of their parents—husbands from their wives—and brothers and sisters forced to bid a final adieu?—For gold—sordid gold.—for the sake of heaping up that unrighteous mammon, which, thus obtained, "will eat our souls as doth a canker." We hold these who thus sell their fellow creatures, to the unfeeling negro trader, equally guilty with himself. Nay, they are more guilty. For did they not sell, of course the inhuman traffic could not be carried on. We have not unfrequently heard of the boastings of these men who gain their wealth by thus buying up their fellow-creatures, and driving them to a foreign market, to be sold like cattle, that their droves were partly made up from the plantations, and even the dwellings of professors of religion! Alas! alas! that the love of gain should ever steel our hearts to the agonizing sufferings of our fellow-creatures, and close their avenues to every generous impulse! Alas! that sin should ever so blind the judgment and harden the heart of any follower of the Redeemer, as to induce him to contribute towards the perpetuation of a traffic so monstrous, that the morality of a heathen might well view it with horror!

CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

The Boston Recorder contains an account of Professor Stuart's sermon, at the recent ordination of Mr. Schauffler, as a missionary to the Jews. The text was Rom. xi 25—31, and the object of the discourse to exhibit the scriptural grounds of hope for the conversion of the Jews. This will take place when the "fulness of the Gentiles" shall be gathered in. By "fulness" the preacher understood a very great number, implying a very general prevalence of the gospel. He thought the present revivals of religion looked so promising, that it was proper to be using means for the conversion of the Jews. The [illegible] should be [illegible] of [illegible] Evangelist.

The gospel must be preached to the Jews.—They will not seek for instruction. It must be sent to them. There is now among them a listening ear. Rabbinical superstitions are losing their power. There is every encouragement and impulse to effort. Are not the Jews descendants of patriarchs, prophets, and holy men? Is not the world more indebted to them than to any other people? Nor can there be found elsewhere more native talent and energy of character.—The gospel should be sent to them by Gentiles rather than Jews. This, the feelings of the Jews require; and it is in accordance with what the apostle intimates in the text. The proposed mission rests therefore on rational and scriptural grounds.

Finally, some visionary expectations and plans entertained by men engaged in efforts for the benefit of the Jews, must be abandoned. The return of the Jews to Palestine must not be expected. The scriptures nowhere teach it. If the texts relied on to prove it are to be literally interpreted, then it is certain that the whole ceremonial law is to be revived—that all the Jews are to be literally kings and priests—that the Gentiles shall be literally hewers of wood and drawers of water for them. The doctrine of the literal return of the Jews can be supported and supported only by adopting the identical principles of interpretation that led the Jews in our Savior's time to expect in their Messiah a temporal prince and deliverer. Again, the plan of gaining converted Jews in separate communities must be abandoned. The middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile is broken down in Christ; and no good but much evil will result from and attempt to rebuild it. It is irrational and anti-scriptural.

HINDOO CHRISTIANS DISINHERITED.—A pamphlet has been published in Calcutta, entitled, "Observations on the Hindoo and Mohammedan Laws of inheritance, as affecting converts to Christianity in India." By these laws, as now administered, those who embrace Christianity forfeit all claim to property which would otherwise descend to them—a fact which prevents thousands from examining the claims of the gospel upon their attention. The hope is expressed that efficient measures will be taken to draw the attention of the British Legislature to the subject, previous to the renewal of the East India Charter; and that subjects of the English Government will soon cease to suffer the loss of all things for professing the name of Christ.—Chr. Mir.

CRITICISM.—In a late article we used the following language: "If the churches continue to exact of their ministers so much 'protracted' exercise of lungs, that may kill them faster than the Education Society can raise up new ones." The Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal and Zion's Herald speaks of this remark, as though we excluded divine agency in the calling of ministers, and recommends to our notice the words of the Lord; "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into his harvest;"—and adds, "If the Lord is to do his servants away, let us look to Him to supply their place."—We say so too, believing as firmly as any one, that no man should take this honor unto himself, unless called of God; but we really do not think it implious to speak of human agency, sometimes without introducing in formal manner, that of the Deity; and especially in a case like the above, it being the known object of the Education Society to afford means of literary and scientific improvement to none but such as are hopefully pious, and hopefully called by God to preach the gospel. Now if it is wrong to educate such, ought not the Wesleyan Seminary, University, and every similar institution to be abandoned!—Chr. Mir.

MADAGASCAR.—The Rev. J. J. Freeman, who formerly labored as a missionary in Madagascar, writes from Cape Town in Africa, that very ample, satisfactory, and encouraging communications had reached him from that island, containing very urgent invitations to return. The present government is well disposed towards missionary labors. The queen has written him a very kind and obliging letter, sealed with her own seal, stating that she has given directions to the officers on the coast to afford him every possible facility on his arrival there, and on his way up to the capital. The principal officers of the government, and the teachers in the schools, have written with the same friendship. All this is regarded as an interposition of Providence, worthy of admiration.—Ib.

POLAND.

On the subject of Poland, the Liverpool Times of the 25th Oct., says:—

"The suppression of the Poles, by the capture of Warsaw, and the subsequent dispersion of the army, have been the subject of two official accounts, one issued by the Russian authorities, the other emanating from the patriots. The only fact to be learned from either is, that the cause of Poland for the present is lost. Of the treachery of a part of the Polish leaders, there is no longer any doubt. Krukowicki, who took command of the town, after the infamous massacre of the prisoners by the mob, seems to have acted a conspicuous part in the sacrifice of his country." These two official accounts, are contained in our papers before us, but as Poland is blotted from the map of nations, and as they relate to the causes, which led to her downfall, we deem it now unnecessary to exclude articles of more general interest, to give place to these accounts.

The French Government has taken a great step towards a free trade: it has introduced a new Corn Law, abolishing prohibitions and permitting importation and exportation at a reduced scale of duties. Attempts to defeat the voice of the Chamber of Deputies against the hereditary peerage, have been made in vain. Under date of Oct. 20th, we find the following paragraph. "It is affirmed that the ordinance for creating 60 new peers, who are forthwith to enter the Chamber will receive the Royal signature in the course of to-day."

The Cholera Morbus has appeared in Hamburg; a letter from that city dated Oct. 20, says since the 11th 32 new cases have occurred, making in all 55, namely 31 have died, 2 have recovered, and 22 remain ill. Another letter of the same date says "the victims have been amongst the lowest classes, owing to the want of proper diet. At the breaking out of this calamity the consternation was very great, since which it has greatly subsided, and every hope is given, that it will not rage to a great extent.—Business has again been resumed; the exchange, theaters, and coffee houses, are all open for public resort, and we are all in good spirits, and hope soon to give you some good news."

At Altona (a Danish town, two miles from Hamburg) several cases have appeared, but every precaution had been taken to prevent the disease spreading.

Judge Marshall has arrived at Richmond, Va. and immediately took his seat on the bench; having fully recovered from the effects of the late operation

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by an Indenture of mortgage bearing date the eleventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and [illegible], executed by David Hebard and Susannah his wife to Daniel Penfield which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Henry Hebard, and is recorded in the office of the Clerk of Monroe county in Liber [illegible] of mortgages, page [illegible], on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of [illegible] dollars and [illegible] cents, and no suit or proceeding having been had at law or otherwise for the recovery of the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land containing thirty four rods square, being the same premises conveyed by the said Laura and Winslow to the said Mary Ann Hebard, bearing even date with said mortgage, and being the same premises also conveyed by Reuben Dunham and wife to H. H. Eggleston and Winslow Heath, on the twentieth day of April, 1827 reference being had to said deed will more fully appear.—Also all that certain piece or parcel of land containing [illegible] acres of land situate in Penfield, county of Monroe and state of New York being the south division of lot number [illegible] in township number [illegible] in the fourth range of towns reckoning from the Pennsylvania line, and number [illegible] in the fourth range reckoning from the Genesee river, and bounded as follows viz.—North and south by the east and west lines of said division and west by a line running parallel to the west line of said division and at a distance from the same of [illegible] rods, containing the above mentioned thirty acres of land, be the same more or less, which will be sold at public vendue at the Apollo House in the village of Rochester in the county of Monroe on the twenty-first day of April next, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, pursuant to a power contained in said mortgage.

Dated January 21, 1832.

HENRY HEBARD.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the seventeenth day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty seven, executed by Asher Parker to Josiah Powell, [illegible] and which there is due at the date of this notice the sum of [illegible] dollars and [illegible] cents, and no suit or proceeding having been had at law or otherwise for the recovery of the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Gates, county of Monroe and state of New York, and [illegible] number fifty three, in township number [illegible] and distinguished as follows on a map of Caroline and subdivisions of said lot as [illegible] number fifty three, on the west side of Main street leading from Rochester to Canandaigua.

ASHER PARKER
Mortgagor.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain Indenture of mortgage bearing date the fifteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and [illegible], executed by David Hebard and Susannah his wife to Daniel Penfield which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Henry Hebard, and is recorded in the office of the Clerk of Monroe county in Liber [illegible] of mortgages, page [illegible], on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of [illegible] dollars and [illegible] cents, and no suit or proceeding having been had at law or otherwise for the recovery of the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Gates, county of Monroe and state of New York, and [illegible] number fifty three, in township number [illegible] and distinguished as follows on a map of Caroline and subdivisions of said lot as [illegible] number fifty three, on the west side of Main street leading from Rochester to Canandaigua.

ASHER PARKER
Mortgagor.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain sum of money secured by an Indenture of mortgage bearing date the eleventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and [illegible], executed by David Hebard and Susannah his wife to Daniel Penfield which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Henry Hebard, and is recorded in the office of the Clerk of Monroe county in Liber [illegible] of mortgages, page [illegible], on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of [illegible] dollars and [illegible] cents, and no suit or proceeding having been had at law or otherwise for the recovery of the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Gates, county of Monroe and state of New York, and [illegible] number fifty three, in township number [illegible] and distinguished as follows on a map of Caroline and subdivisions of said lot as [illegible] number fifty three, on the west side of Main street leading from Rochester to Canandaigua.

ASHER PARKER
Mortgagor.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured to be paid by a certain mortgage executed by Asher Parker to Josiah Powell [illegible] and which there is due at the date of this notice the sum of [illegible] dollars and [illegible] cents, and no suit or proceeding having been had at law or otherwise for the recovery of the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, Notice is hereby given that the mortgaged premises, viz. All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the town of Gates, county of Monroe and state of New York, and [illegible] number fifty three, in township number [illegible] and distinguished as follows on a map of Caroline and subdivisions of said lot as [illegible] number fifty three, on the west side of Main street leading from Rochester to Canandaigua.

ASHER PARKER
Mortgagor.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage executed by [illegible] and recorded in the office of the Clerk of Monroe county in Liber [illegible] of mortgages, page [illegible], on which there is claimed to be

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

ROCHESTER OBSERVER.

SAMUEL CHIPMAN, EDITOR. | WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 21, 1831. | VOL. V. NO. 52

ROCHESTER, MONROE Co. N.Y.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

TYLER & CHIPMAN, PROPRIETORS.

ALBERT G. HALL, PRINTER.

Office in the Globe building, No. 14, Main-Street.

TERMS.—To Mail Subscribers, after 6 months, $3,00. In advance, $2,50. Companies of five or more, where payment is made when the names are forwarded, $2,00. Village Subscribers, $2 50 in advance.

For the Observer.

ANECDOTES AND REFLECTIONS ON TEMPERANCE. NO. IX.

Excuses for not uniting with a Temp. Soc.

I belong to a Church which by its discipline is a Temperance Society.

The rule to which, at the close of No. 8, I referred is in these words: "If any member of our church retail or give spirituous liquors, and any thing disorderly be transacted under his roof on this account, the preacher who has the oversight of the circuit shall proceed against him as in case of other immoralities; and the person so accused shall be cleared, censured, suspended, or excluded according to his conduct as on other charges of immorality." p. 94—Ed. 20.

What are the provisions of this rule? Simply that if a member of the Methodist connection keeps a tavern, store or grog-shop, and he suffers his customers to do any thing disorderly on his premises, he shall be subject to discipline. Our civil law does the same: nay it goes farther: imposes a penalty, and forfeits his license. If this rule then forms a T. S. of the church, the laws of this state, make all our tavern keepers, grocers, and venders of ardent spirit, good and worthy members of T. S.; and the temperance effort, instead of having commenced three or four years ago, commenced before the war of the revolution; nay with the first settlement of America. But it will not be pretended that this rule makes the church a T. S., and there is no need of spending time upon it. I have now gone through with all I can find in the Discipline touching spirituous liquors; and what I have said, has been, I trust, in the spirit of candor, and from a sincere desire to disabuse the public, and especially my Methodist brethren in this thing. It is a fact, and one too which has caused me much pain, that as a denomination, Methodists in the western part of this state do not come up to the work, so generally as the Baptists and Presbyterians. True, there are many, VERY MANY, honorable exceptions, but still great numbers hold back, and say "Our Church is a T. S. by its discipline." Whether it is or not, the preceding quotations and remarks will show, and "let him that readeth understand."

But if it is a T. S., I confess my utter inability to find it, any more than I can find it in a church which says nothing in its rules about the use of ardent spirit. In my next No. I shall make a few further remarks upon this business, and then pass to other excuses.

CHAS. YALE.
Agt. N. Y. S. T. S.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

POPULARITY OF METHODIST DOCTRINES.

The editor of the Advocate does not state things as they are, when he says of us, concerning the doctrines of unconditional election and predestination,

"If we accuse them of holding and propagating these odious doctrines, they charge us in turn with misrepresentation. If, on the other hand, we congratulate them on their emancipation from the dogmas of Calvinistic reprobation, they beg to be excused from sharing in our exultation, and even accuse with an arrogance which needs chastising, occasionally, with a little plain truth."

The editor is assured that no Calvinist ever denied the charge of holding to predestination. All which we have done is, we have not been willing to allow that Methodists understand our doctrines better than we do ourselves. And when Methodist preachers draw a caricature, or a raw head and bloody bones, and call it predestination, we have not been ready to belie our own consciousness, and admit that we believed it, when we knew in our own hearts that we did not believe any such thing. We believe election and predestination, as we state it ourselves. But it does not follow, that we believe it as stated by the bitter opposers of those blessed doctrines.

I take the liberty to add a word, which perhaps will explain this recent jubilation about the popularity of Methodist doctrines. Heretofore, it has been the usual course of Methodist preachers, to collect garbled extracts of ancient Calvinistic writings, and by the help of some Arminian inferences from Calvinistic principles, with a little party coloring, make up a system, sufficiently revolting indeed, and after calling it Calvinism, proceed with great chivalry to knock it down, and pull it all to pieces. They have always had the means of knowing, if truth were the object of their search, that New England Calvinists have ever believed in the doctrine of general atonement, and the consequent free and sincere offer of eternal life to each and every sinner in the world. But instead of admitting this, they have gone on quoting garbled passages which seemed to contradict this, and have insisted on it, and endeavored to make the people believe, that they knew what Calvinism was, better than Calvinists did. But at length, by the aid of revivals, and of the press, this thing is beginning to be so well understood, that it will not go down. It will not do to charge us with holding the extremes of ultra Calvinism. And now the tune is "Popularity of Methodist Doctrines!" I do not wonder the editor of the Advocate is waked up, when "Plain Truth," proves, as he thinks he has, that in whatever points moderate Calvinists agree with Methodists in our preaching, we only teach the doctrines, which Edwards, Bellamy, Tennent, Davies, and their illustrious compeers taught in this country, accompanied with powerful revivals, twenty years before a Methodist preacher ever landed on our shores.

It is to be borne in mind, that we act only on the defensive, in bringing forward these facts. The Advocate has kept up these attacks upon the New England Calvinists, week after week, for months. The object cannot be mistaken. The powerful revivals now going on among them, and the power and discrimination with which many of them are preaching the gospel, cut off all hope of subverting the institutions of our fathers, unless some way can be devised to cast upon them some odium which will destroy public confidence in their moral and religious integrity. One more experiment is therefore to be tried, to insure the ascendency of Methodism in New England. But it will surely fail. God has a favor to the churches planted by our fathers. He has not forgotten them, in times of past declension, and we are sure he will not, in the present times of revival.

The best course for our Methodist brethren, is to mind their own work. Whatever there was of bitterness and prejudice against Methodists, when they were regarded as unbidden intruders among us, we, at least the younger part of us, are now convinced that God sent them, for wise and good purposes, and that he wishes them to have a permanent and useful existence in New England. We are therefore satisfied to have them preach, and pray, and labor, and we will do the same, and God will bless us both, in proportion as we serve him, with intelligent and humble zeal. But it does not look well, for either party to get out of temper, because revivals prevail more with the other. These pieces about the popularity of Methodist Doctrines, and the duplicity of Calvinistic preachers, do not help on revivals, and will not produce revivals among Methodists. Keep preaching, brethren, and use the means for revivals, in the spirit of revival, and it will help you out of the difficulty.

PLAIN TRUTH.

JOHN WESLEY'S SENTIMENS ON PREDESTINATION.

We do not know how far our Methodist brethren consider themselves as Wesleyans, in respect to doctrine. Nor do we certainly know how far Wesley was consistent with himself in his doctrinal statements. We recently met with a passage in Moore's Life of Wesley, vol. 1. p. 411, which seems worth copying, as showing a remarkable coincidence between John Wesley and the moderate Calvinists of the present day, on the doctrine of predestination. It is a part of the account which is given concerning the separation which took place in 1741, between Wesley and Whitefield.—Evangelist.

FROM THE LIFE OF WESLEY.

From this time, their mutual regard and friendly intercourse suffered no interruption, till Mr. Whitefield's death, who says in his last will written with his own hand about six months before he died, "I leave a mourning-ring to my honored and dear friends, and disinterested fellow-laborers, the Rev. Messrs. John and Charles Wesley, in token of my indissoluble union with them, in heart and christian affection, notwithstanding our difference in judgment about some particular points of doctrine." When the news of Mr. Whitefield's death reached London, Mr. Keen, one of his executors, recollecting he had often said to him, "If you should die abroad, whom shall we get to preach your funeral sermon? Must it be your old friend Rev. Mr. John Wesley?" And having constantly received for answer, "He is the man," Mr. Keen accordingly waited on Mr. Wesley, and engaged him to preach it; which he did, and bore ample testimony to the undissembled piety, the ardent zeal, and the extensive usefulness, of his much loved and honored friend.

I cannot give so complete an idea of the earnest desire of Mr. Wesley to continue his christian union with Mr. Whitefield, as by inserting in his own words, the concessions which he made for the accomplishment of so desirable an end.

"Having found for some time," says he, "a strong desire to unite with Mr. Whitefield as far as possible, to cut off needless dispute, I wrote down my sentiments, as plain as I could, in the following terms:

There are three points in debate, (1) unconditional election; (2) irresistible grace; (3) final perseverance.

"With regard to the first, unconditional election, I believe, that God, before the foundation of the world, did unconditionally elect certain persons to do certain works, as Paul to preach the gospel. That he has unconditionally elected some nations to receive peculiar privileges, the Jewish nation in particular. That he has unconditionally elected some nations to hear the gospel, as England and Scotland now, and many others in past ages. That he has unconditionally elected some persons to many peculiar advantages, both with regard to temporal and spiritual things. And I do not deny, (though I cannot prove it so,) that he has unconditionally elected some persons thus eminently styled "the elect," to eternal glory.

"But I cannot believe that all those who are not thus elected to glory, must perish everlastingly, or that there is one soul on earth who has not, nor ever had a possibility of escaping eternal damnation.

"With regard to the second, irresistible grace, I believe that the grace which brings faith, and thereby salvation into the soul, is irresistible at that moment. That most believers may remember some time when God did irresistibly convince them of sin. That most believers do, at some other times, find God irresistibly acting upon their souls.

"Yet I believe that the grace of God, both before and after these moments, may be, and hath been, resisted. And that in general, it does not act irresistibly, but we may comply therewith, or may not. And I do not deny, that in those eminently styled, 'the elect,' (if such there be,) the grace of God is so far irresistible, that they cannot but believe, and be finally saved.

"But I cannot believe that all those must be damned, in whom it does not thus irresistibly work. Or that there is one soul on earth, who has not, and never had any other grace, than such as does, in fact, increase his damnation, and was designed of God so to do.

"With regard to the third, final perseverance, I believe, that there is a state attainable in this life, from which a man cannot finally fall. That he has attained this who is, according to St. Paul's account, 'a new creature,' that is, who can say, 'Old things are passed away, all things in me are become new.' And I do not deny, that all those eminently styled 'the elect,' will infallibly persevere to the end."

Mr. Wesley told me, at the time he wrote this, he believed, (with Macarius, a writer of the fourth century,) that all who are perfected in love, 1 John, iv. were thus elect. But he afterwards doubted of this. I believe all that can be safely held on the doctrine of the divine predestination, is contained in these propositions; so rare a talent had Mr. Wesley of speaking much in a few words.

1. In regard to the unconditional election of particular individuals then, Mr. Wesley does not deny it, and therefore does not see it to be an error. We hold it. He and we agree, that this election of some does not hinder others from coming to Christ, or take from any the possibility of escaping eternal damnation. We simply hold that all who are saved are among "the elect," and consequently we hold that all who are not "elect," will perish everlastingly, not because they "must," but because they freely choose the path that leads to death.

2. Respecting irresistible grace, Mr. Wesley goes farther than many moderate Calvinists. Dr. Dwight expressly declines using the term irresistible, and so do most of them.

3. On final perseverance, we agree with him, only applying what he says, to all true believers. "None shall pluck them out of my father's hands." Perhaps some of us would hesitate about using the term "cannot," so absolutely as Mr. Wesley uses it. At any rate, there is no objection to be made against election, special grace, and perseverance, as held by moderate Calvinists, which does not lie with force against Mr. Wesley's. We hold up this precious document therefore, as a perfect shield, to take all the fiery darts of argument, ridicule, declamation or ribaldry, which may be hurled at moderate Calvinists, on these much agitated doctrines.

One remark more. We have long thought that Mr. Wesley's opposition to Calvinism, grew out of the extreme mode of stating these doctrines, which prevailed at that day in England. If either Whitefield or Wesley could have been under the tuition of Jonathan Edwards, it is not likely they ever would have contended, nor would Methodism have grown into a sect. And we do honestly believe, that if prejudice could be out of the way, the whole sentiments of moderate Calvinists on all subjects connected with predestination, could be stated so clearly, that a candid Methodist would say, That is just what I believe, and just what the bible requires every man to believe.

From the Western Recorder.

PRAYER OF FAITH.

MR. EDITOR—In your number for October 4th an article is copied "from the Western Luminary," on the question, "Why have we not a revival?" One of the reasons given by the writer, in answer to this question, is, "Christians do not believe what God has said in reference to prayer." The following passage is quoted, and explained to mean, that the particular objects asked in prayer will be received, if asked aright.—"All things whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, believing, ye shall receive." This passage is not quoted correctly. In Matthew xxi, 22, to which I presume the writer refers, it is said, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

To the idea, that the identical object asked of God in christian faith, will infallibly be granted, I have some objections. I know this view is adopted by some, who are undoubtedly good men, and active in the cause of Christ; but I believe it often proves an injury to the cause of revivals, rather than a benefit, by grieving the Spirit of God, (which is the effect of all error,) and forcing men from the field that do not adopt it, who might otherwise be very useful. To my knowledge, it has led some to a presumptive course of action, which has resulted in any thing, rather than a revival, and that, too, where they were not opposed.

My first objection to this doctrine is, that it does not rest upon a firm scripture base. The passage above quoted alludes to the faith of miracles. Christ had cursed a fig-tree, which withered away; and the disciples expressed astonishment. He then informed them that they too, should do miracles in his name, and exhorted them to exercise that faith which was necessary to their doing so, which was simply to believe that the power of God would be exercised to confirm their testimony of him and his doctrines. They had only to ask, as Christ did at the grave of Lazarus, for the sake of those who stood by, and a tree should wither, a mountain should be removed, or any other miraculous thing be done, which the circumstances rendered necessary.—There are many other passages importing the same thing; as Mark xi, 24—"Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall recive them." Here Mark is narrating the same thing that is mentioned by Matthew, which we have noticed. John xiv, 13.—"Whatsoever ye shall ask, in my name, that will I do." Verse 12. "He that believeth on me, the works that I do he shall do also, & greater works than these shall he do." Now this verse clearly proves, that the faith of miracles is alluded to, which the apostles & disciples wrought more abundantly than the Saviour himself. There are other passages which need not be mentioned. It appears to me that some men err, by applying to ordinary Christians what was spoken to inspired men, where it was promised that any thing asked believingly, in confirmation of their testimony, should be done. But this was not christian faith, for Judas was as fully authorized to work miracles as any one of the twelve, when first sent out. (See Matt. x.) The spirit of prophecy required the same kind of faith; and Balaam prophesied as correctly as Elijah or Isaiah. There are, indeed, many promises to Christians who exercise faith in prayer; some of which are specific; others are general. But upon a general promise, we cannot claim a specific object, unless the promise is unlimited; and that it is unlimited, is the opinion, I believe, of those who differ from me on the subject of the prayer of faith.

This raises another objection, viz: If this doctrine be true, the will of the creature is sovereign, and not that of the Creator. If every thing which I will and ask, is certainly to be done, is not my will, in a certain sense, sovereign! Upon this supposition, has not God put the control of things out of his own hands; and may not Christians ask riches, or honors, as well as spiritual blessings, and be sure to receive them! They are only to be confident that the very thing they ask will be granted, and they have it. But how was it with Paul, when he prayed for the removal of the thorn? Had he no sufficient faith! His prayer was answered; but not as he desired. This should teach us to pray in submission, as to the way in which our prayers should be answered. A blessing is promised, if we ask aright; but it may not always be just what we desired. It may not be best for us to have our will. It may be said that we should have no will when we pray; for the Spirit wills and prays in us; so that it is not we that pray, but the Holy Ghost. This sentiment, which certainly has been advanced, appears to me to be dangerous. If it be true, the agency of man is lost, and he is a mere machine. We must look to the Christian praying, as an oracle, and consider every word as inspiration. Thus to carry out the sentiment to its consequences, must surely startle its advocate. The agency of the Spirit in prayer is absolutely necessary; but it is exercised in connection with our own agency; so that the prayer is ours, and we are accountable for it, as really as for any other action.—To admit the contrary, would be to admit that it is not our duty to pray at all; for surely it is not our duty to pray but in faith; and to pray in faith, according to this doctrine, is to become the simple, unaccountable organ made use of by the Spirit.

But there is still another objection to the idea, that in the prayer of faith, we have certain knowledge of the attainment of the specific object, when that object is not expressly promised in the word of God; which is, that it implies the infallibility of our judgment in the case. We have certain feelings in prayer for an object not expressly revealed in the bible; we pronounce them the product of the immediate agency of the Spirit, and hence infer that the object asked, cannot be withheld. But is there no danger of misjudging of our exercises? If there is, then there must be uncertainty as to the attainment of the object. Now it is the very nature of sin to obscure the understanding; and all men, even Christians, have sin remaining in them. Of course, there is a degree of darkness upon the mind, which renders it liable to err. We may and must form an opinion from our exercises, in connection with the general promises of the word of God, whether it is the will of God to grant us the specific object desired; and this opinion may lead us to a strong expectation, but cannot lead to an infallible certainty.—The object is not expressly promised in the bible; and there is a degree of uncertainty as to the nature of our exercises, by reason of our darkness of mind. Where, then, is the ground of assurance? In prayer, my mind is led to intercede for the conversion of a particular man. This exercise is repeated as often as I pray. I think it is the Spirit of God, and very properly begin to hope that God has designs of mercy towards that man. I am urged by uncommon feelings, to converse with that man upon the concerns of his soul. I see him weep. I hear him begging Christians to pray for him. I am still led to pray for him in particular; and find others have long had the same exercises.—Evidences of various kinds may multiply, till I firmly expect his conversion. But may I not err in judging of these evidences? Is it infallibly sure that my exercises are the product of the Holy Spirit? Or if they are, is it certain that God has no other design to answer by them? In short, is it not going far enough to say, we are sure of all specific blessings promised, if we ask aright; and that we are sure of a blessing, when we ask that which is not expressly promised, if we ask aright though it be not the very thing asked? We are sure that when Zion (the church) travails, she will bring forth her children. Souls will be converted, though we may not know beforehand what souls in particular.

S.

From the Monthly Magazine

USE OF THE DOCTRINE OF GOD'S PURPOSES.

1. The doctrine of divine purposes is of use in proving the existence of the Supreme Being. The argument from what are called the works of nature to prove the existence of a God, is founded chiefly on the evidence which they exhibit of design or plan. A traveller, crossing a desert heath, picks up a watch; and though he never saw one before, he infers conclusively from the evidence it furnishes of design, that it must have had an intelligent designer. So when we look upward to the world above us, or abroad upon this world, or turn our attention to the structure of our own bodies, or of our own minds, we discover so much evidence of design, of a general and universal plan, that we cannot but admit the fact of an intelligent and universal Planner, whom we call God. This is substantially the argument of Paley, and it is conclusive. But suppose the Creator had formed no plan in eternity, and no evidence of plan was discoverable in his works; how could his creatures ever have arrived at the conclusion of his existence! How could they have escaped the direful necessity of living and dying in cold, blank atheism! It is evident from this consideration, that the doctrine of divine purposes is fundamental to religion, as it lies at the foundation of all the evidence we have, or can have from nature, that there is a God.

2. The doctrine of divine purposes is of use, to give us just and exalted ideas of God. This doctrine represents God, not only as existing before all creatures, but as exalted to an infinite height & uncontrollable sovereignty. "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." In eternity he formed his plan,—a plan extending through all space and time, to all beings & worlds,—a plan needing no alteration or amendment, the accomplishment of which has been carried forward thus far with an unfaltering hand, and can never fail. In view of a doctrine such as this, all intelligent creatures must see, that God can be under no apprehensions from the greatest of his enemies—that he is never defeated or disappointed, surprised or grieved—that he is bringing light out of darkness, & good out of evil, and sees all things infallibly taking place, according to the counsel of his eternal will; Surely such a doctrine must be glorious to the Supreme Being, and on this account is precious to all who love him. With the humbled monarch of Babylon, they will "praise and honor him who liveth forever and ever, and whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, who doeth according to his will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou!"

3. The doctrine of God's purposes, especially his purpose respecting the final salvation of his people, is fitted deeply to humble them, and to give them a trying sense of obligation to his distinguishing mercy. It teaches them that their salvation is not of themselves, but that from beginning to end, from eternity to eternity, from the foundation to the top stone, it is all grace. "He hath chosen us," says the apostle, "before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love, having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace." And again, "Being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, that we should be to the praise of his glory." How does it become the people of God, in view of representations such as these, to inquire, "Who hath made us to differ! And what have we that we have not received!" And while they are humbled in view of their own unworthiness, they must be penetrated with a sense of obligation to him "who hath saved them, and called with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began."

4. The eternal purposes of God furnish strong ground of support, comfort, and confidence to his people, under all their trials. In the belief of this doctrine, they can regard no "affliction as coming forth of the dust, or troubles as springing out of the ground." Nor can they trace the stream of their sorrows to any disappointment, mistake, or wrong, on the part of the Supreme Disposer.—The ills they meet with, of whatever nature, they are led to consider as integral parts of a boundless and perfect plan; as necessary links in that endless chain, which stretches from eternity to eternity, and which is leading onward, through scenes of present mystery and darkness, to the most glorious results. And with such impressions, how can the people of God repine! How can they but submit and rejoice!

The friends of Christ are often tried, not only with their own personal sorrows, but with those of a public nature. The cause of the Redeemer seems declining, while that of his enemies prevails and triumphs. Error and sin and misery abound. Roots of bitterness are springing up, and divisions and contentions are multiplied. Often, in such circumstances, the christian feels that he should have no support, were it not for his belief in the universal and unchangeable purposes of God. But resting on these, he is not dismayed; nor are his spiritual consolations, perhaps, at all diminished. For high above the impending clouds and darkness which thicken around him, and shut out the sun, he sees God upon the throne. Infinite wisdom and goodness, clothed with omnipotence, reign, and nothing takes place but in accordance with the counsels of the Eternal Mind. Confiding thus in the stability and perfection of God's government, and in the assured fulfilment of all his purposes, the christian has consolations under trials which no enemy can interrupt or destroy. For though the earth be removed out of its place, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, the ground on which he stands is not moved.—The foundations of his peace remain unshaken forever.

And as the purposes of God afford support to his people under present trials, so they inspire confidence in regard to what is to come. For come what will, they know that their heavenly father will keep the throne, and will reign in wisdom and holiness forever. They know that his eternal purposes will be fulfilled, his cause promoted, the greatest good accomplished, and his name glorified. And seeing in this view what is to be the assured and glorious issue of the present system of things—"the winding up of the grand drama of this world's history," how can they but rejoice and be happy!

From the Volunteer.

A TIME OF REFRESHING.

A time of special revivals has ever been to me a period of deep solemnity. The Lord has come near to his people to turn them from their backslidings, to awaken them from their guilty slumbers, and to lift upon them the light of his countenance. It is a season of joy and gratulation; but God is present, manifesting his glory, and it becomes his people to stand in awe and sin not. The solemnities of eternity are presented to sinners in dreadful majesty and glory, so that the thoughtless are arrested, and the wicked tremble. The convicted and anxious are settling their everlasting destinies in rapid succession, and the apparently penitent are inquiring with unspeakable solicitude, whether they have indeed a right to the promises, and have begun their songs of praise and victory which will never end. The cares and vanities of the world, appear to all classes in their real character, as visions of a moment; and all minds are fixed on the momentous question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul; or what shall he give in exchange for his soul?" It is a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord upon his thirsty heritage; a season of ingathering of souls to the Redeemer, for an eternal harvest; a sealing time for hundreds for heaven or for hell.—

No reasoning is required to prove, that such a season demands peculiar watchfulness, both in ministers, and all the people of God. Ministers are under infinite obligation to take special heed to their doctrine, their spirit, their conversation, their measures for promoting the work, and their manner of life among all classes of their hearers. They who are set as lights to the world by a solemn profession, are bound to let their lights shine with peculiar brightness and glory, to stand between the dead and the living, and to be co-workers with God and his ministers in extending and perpetuating the work of grace and power. Why is it that such seasons are generally of short continuance?—Why is the Spirit grieved away, so that he cannot continue his mighty works? Why is the Blessed Redeemer "like a way-faring man, who tarries but a night," when we cannot doubt he is willing to make his perpetual abode with his people, and turn their households, and all around them, to the obedience of faith! An awful responsibility must rest somewhere! It is my present purpose to inquire where; and particularly, what conduct in ministers and professors of religion has a tendency to terminate revivals, even when the heavens are still teeming with blessings ready to descend in copious showers.

One hindrance to the work of God, is the vain-glorious spirit of professors of religion.—When they "glory in men," however able, and devoted, they may be as laborers in the vineyard, the glory of their master is obscured, and he withdraws the tokens of his presence. He "will not give his glory to another," nor permit his people to do it, without vindicating his own honor, and pouring contempt upon the idols they have set up. It is indeed surprising, that a revival should ever be imputed to the power or eloquence of man; a work, in which, above all others, the utter inefficiency of the instrument is displayed, and the interference of an Almighty Agent, is manifest as the light of the sun; a work in which even infidels have been constrained to acknowledge that the mightiest preachers are but "earthen vessels," and that "the excellency of the power is of God and not of men." But such is the amazing idolatry of the human heart, that even the children of light can scarcely receive a blessing through human instrumentality, without adoring the instrument, and forgetting the glorious Agent and Supreme Giver of every perfect gift. The same propensity appears, in the reliance which is placed upon the instrument for further success, while praying souls do not take hold by importunate prayer of the promises of God. When able and popular preachers are obtained, high expectations are raised, and the blessing seems secure beyond a doubt; when they fail, christians think that nothing can be done, although the word is faithfully and feelingly dispensed, and God is ready to make it the power of God, unto salvation at their humble request. Thus in regard to all the various measures employed for the purpose of promoting the conversion of sinners, men hope or despond according to their views of their inherent power & adaptation, while they forget that "it is God that worketh all, in all." Their feelings of course, fluctuate continually, and the real utility of means is not experienced, and the potency of faith in God is not proved.—Painful experience does not convince and effectually reclaim. God withholds his blessings from the feeble instrumentality because it is despised, and from the mighty, because it is gloried in; and when his people will not be corrected and return, and give glory to his name, he takes away his spirit, and leaves them like the shorn prophet, to impotence and disgrace.

Animosities and divisions among Christians, are another hindrance to the progress of revivals. These sometimes arise from their idolatrous confidence in men; and often from other causes. One begins to say, I am of Paul; another, I am of Apollos; another, I am of Cephas; and the result soon is, that none can say without self-condemnation, I am of Christ. So they often disagree about the measure to be pursued; when, if they maintain the simplicity of Christ, the duty of every man would be plain and simple, and perfect unanimity would be maintained. Whatever may be the cause of division, God will not long dwell with the contentious. He is a God of peace, and his people must be at peace among themselves, or he will depart from their solemn assemblies and leave them to their wranglings. Differences of sentiment might exist, even on practical subjects, and his church could maintain "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Where it is otherwise, the effect is disastrous upon inquiring souls, and the God of love must withdraw the special influences of his Spirit, till his people put away "the leaven of malice and wickedness."

I have sometimes marked, with great regret, the influence upon a revival of a fondness for show and display. One would almost conclude, that some professors believe the kingdom of God comes with outward observation and noise; when every thing is rather calculated to turn every man's thoughts inward upon the chambers of his own soul, and forward to the scenes of eternal judgment. There is a strong propensity in many persons, to announce the awakening of individuals, to speak of the number of the anxious and the converted, to talk much of the meeting, the laborers, the extent of the awakening and its prospects. This course turns off attention from individual concerns, and often both saints and sinners forget their own responsibilities, in giving a vacant and useless attention to the externals of a work at large. When sinners forget themselves, and christians forget their duty, the Spirit also turns away.

Levity of mind, exhibited by ministers and christians at such a time, is most incongruous with the solemnities of passing scenes, and incompatible with that ardent sympathy for souls which the occasion requires. Formerly it was very rare; within a few years past, I am afraid it is not uncommon. I have witnessed foolish talking and jesting," even among the ministers of Christ, and when they were convened to relate what God had wrought by their labors, which to my own feelings were "as vinegar upon nitre." It was as distressing as would have been a joke at a funeral, or light conversation upon the Sabbath. I have also seen it followed by a decline of a spirit of prayer, and the return of a guilty indifference to the salvation of souls;—results which appear to me inevitable, where such conduct is indulged without deep repentance and reformation. I would not have the people of God "bow down their heads like bulrushes" when "the salvation of God has come out of Zion." But I would have them place eternal scenes before them, and watch and agonize for souls, as they that must give account, feeling assured that every thing depends on their walking closely with God when he is near and waiting to be gracious. The same remarks apply to a sarcastic mode of preaching, and to an unfeeling manner of dealing with opposers. This is unbecoming in a "messenger of God to guilty men," who is himself but a ransomed and pardoned sinner, called into light and liberty, by sovereign grace. O that we might mingle with our fidelity "the meekness and gentleness of Christ," "in meekness instructing them that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."

If the present remarkable season of refreshing should not long continue, where will the responsibility lie! Will not their be great guilt upon the churches, now rejoicing in pentecostal blessings! Will not even ministers of the word have occasion in some instances to lament that their labors are again powerless, because they have themselve grieved away the Agent who alone could make them mighty through God to pulling down strong holds! PETER.

From the Connecticut Observer.

For more than a score of years, I have been in the habit of moralising on objects around me—of asking the question—what is like!—

"And making every thing a lesson to the heart."

In company, not long since, a young lady handed me a picture of Bonaparte's tomb, in the solitary island of St. Helena. It is, indeed, worth preserving, said I, and affords a lesson of wisdom to the whole human family. It calls up many an awful thought, and fearful recollection. After looking at it a few moments, I returned it: and what did you see Sir!—The degraded fate of aspiring ambition—the end of all royal pride!

"A Tyrant doom'd to everlasting fame."

And let me add—it reminded me of the reception which such men meet in the shades below. The mighty multitude of the great on earth "were moved at his coming." With one voice they cried, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O! Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground who didst weaken the nations! Is this the man that made the earth to tremble! That did shake Kingdoms! That made the world as a wilderness! Art thou become weak as we! Is thy pomp brought down to the grave! All the kings of the nations, even all of them lie in glory, every one in his own house. But thou art cast out like an abominable branch. Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thine own people."—(Isaiah 14.) I have often thought of the reception of monarchs among the dead.—How they meet each other and the millions they have slain; and how they have spent their ages of unrestrained malignity. From the haughty Assyrian of the ancients—to Koulichan and Bajazet of the middle ages, to the Emperor of France.

THE BANKER AND HIS BIBLE.

The writer of this was once the guest of a banker in the west of England. His host had long been celebrated as a heavenly minded and benevolent character. One evening as he came down from his closet, with peace and benignity beaming on his countenance, he said to me, "Do you want any thing." I answered, "No; I have every thing I need." "But I am not satisfied with that answer," he rejoined, "and will tell you why. I have just been reading the Third Epistle of John, where the apostle particularly commends his beloved Gaius for his hospitality to the servants of Christ, who for their Master's sake had 'gone forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles,' and the apostle says that our privilege who stay at home is 'to receive such, and to bring them on their journey after a godly sort, that we might be

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Newspapers Collection

fellow-helpers of the truth.' Now I wish to have this privilege; I wish to be an imitator of Gaius; I wish to help you; therefore you must receive from me this five pound note, you will find many ways to employ it." Oh, how Christians would astonish the world if they were to read their Bibles as this banker did his! The application—ah, the application, of the text is the difficult, but profitable, part of it!—Blessed be God that some opulent disciples bring their principles under the influence of the Bible!

A few years after this occurred, when some good old missionaries were passing through the town in which I reside, a sermon was preached on this subject and the above anecdote introduced, and the effect was much to the comfort of those laborers who had borne the heat and burden of the day.

Perhaps these lines may furnish another banker with a good idea, and another preacher with a hint that may be useful on a similar occasion.—Evan. Mag.

REVIVALS.

We heard it stated the other day, from the pulpit, that according to a late estimate, by one who had the means of information, it was supposed, that since the commencement of the present year, revivals of religion had prevailed in about two thousand different places in the United States; and that probably One Hundred Thousand were indulging the hope that they have been called out of nature's darkness, into God's marvellous light—and that during this year, between 300 and 400 young men in our Seminaries of learning, were among the number.—Rel. Intelligence.

REVIVALS.

The Charleston Observer of Nov. 12th gives pleasing accounts of revivals of religion in Walteboro', and Beaufort, S. C. in each of which places protracted meetings were eminently blessed to the conversion of sinners. In the former place 22 persons express a confidence that their sins have been pardoned, and as many more are deeply anxious. In the latter place seven persons are thought to have experienced a saving change in their moral exercises. Thus the Spirit of the Lord goes on, conquering, and to conquer.—Philadelphian.

REVIVAL IN ST. GEORGES, DEL.

St. Georges, Del. Nov. 28th, 1831.

Rev. E. S. Ely, D. D.

Dear Brother,—Agreeably to promise, I now send you an account of the protracted meeting in my church, which commenced on the 15th inst, and in which your labors amongst us were not without some seals. It is an interesting fact, that on the Sabbath preceeding the meeting, four or five persons were deeply convicted of sin, and from that time until the second Monday following, the time when our meetings actually closed, we had the knowledge of new cases of conviction on each succeeding day. I feel very confident if the same means had been used for one week longer, the same result would have followed. Our meetings became increasingly interesting and solemn to the very last. On Saturday, the session examined twenty one persons, the largest number of whom were males & a majority of these heads of families, all of whom were, on the Sabbath, received into full communion of the church, together with three from other churches.

It is pleasing to see those who are high in power and in the confidence of the people brought to sit and weep for their sins at the feet of Jesus. Among those admitted into the church, were a former State Senator, and one of our present Senators in the Congress of the United States. Thus it has pleased God in answer to the prayers of his people, "to teach our senators wisdom." Let this fact encourage christians to pray more fervently for their Rulers, that God would teach them both in their colective and private capacity, "the wisdom which is from above, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, and without partiality."

Yours, in the bonds of the Gospel,

JAMES C. HOW.

REVIVAL IN NEWARK, DEL.

We have great pleasure in stating that the good work of grace has been progressing in the congregation under the pastoral care of the Rev. Andrew K. Russel, since we published his letter on this subject: and that on the last Sabbath of November last, he Baptized seventeen persons, and received thirty four to the full communion of the church. These, in addition to thirty seven before reported, make seventy one additions to the number of communicants, as the fruits of the revival, since the middle of October last.—Phil.

From the Home Missionary.

From Rev. B. B. Gray, Sheridan, N. Y.

The protracted meeting commenced on Thursday. On the evening of the following Lord's day, some that had taken the "anxious seats," seemed to be overwhelmed with a sense of their sins, and consequent danger of eternal death. It was an hour of deep anxiety. At the close of divine service, there were heard some new voices pleading with sinners, to ground the weapons of rebellion, and immediately to close in with the offers of mercy; so earnestly, so repeatedly made. Solemnity now pervaded the assembly. The interest had by this time become so general, it was thought best to continue the meeting. On Monday morning we appointed a meeting for inquirers, when about sixty came forward with the question on their lips, "men and brethren, what shall we do?" And a number, it is to be hoped, submitted to the terms of the gospel, and received that joy and peace in believing, which we trust the world will never take from them. The work from that time became more and more interesting, until the morning of the fourteenth day, when we concluded it was best to bring the meeting to a close; which was done by a sermon at 5 o'clock in the morning. A request was made that those who should feel themselves savingly benefited during the progress of the meeting, would hand in their names; a catalogue of which, amounting to about eighty, has been received; many of these persons, however, were from neighbouring towns. About twenty have been examined, with the view of a public profession of their faith; sixteen were recevied into fellowship of the church at our communion, last Sabbath.—Home Missionary.

WESTERN AGENCY, NEW-YORK.

...gent of the A. H. M. S. in the western ...-York, writes under date of the 1st ... "I gathered one condensed fact, ... part of New ... the Genesee Synod, viz: that ... of November: ... thirty missionaries, of ... at the meeting of ... that Synod, and the ... under the ministry of ... have been added ... the A. H. M. S. within ... ndred souls, ... Presbytery of Angelica, there ... of grace, ... to the churches about twelve ... western ... within the synodical year. The shower ... rn ... which for months has been refreshing the ... counties, is now returning on our south ... frontier, and resting on Steuben and the valley ... of the Chemung."—Ib.

TOUR TO THE UPPER LAKES.

Rev. D. W. Lathrop, Agent of the A. H. M. ..., having performed a tour, for exploring the wants of some destitute parts of the country, now comprised in the Michigan territory, and communicated a report of his labours; we make a few extracts below, which will doubtless be interesting to our readers, & particularly to ministers of the gospel, who are turning their attention to the new states.

There are two places, both of which it would be important to occupy as early as next spring, viz.: "Prairie du Chien," and "Fort Winnebago," both in Michigan. The former as you are doubtless aware, is at the confluence of the Ouiscon-sin and Mississippi. It is an important post, and promises to become more so—present population about eight hundred, including the garrison of Fort Crawford—one half, or nearly so, however, are French. General Street, at this place, "Indian Agent," would take a lively interest in the establishment of a Presbyterian minister, and I am assured that one of the right stamp, would directly obtain his support from the settlement, including the officers of the garrison.

The qualifications necessary for a missionary at this station, are of a high order, and for either station, an acquaintance with the French language, would be a valuable acquisition.

Fort Winnebago, in Iowa county, is at present principally important as a military post; but from its relative position, both to the lead-mine district, and to the "portage" between the Ouiscon-sin and Fox rivers, the principal route of communication between the lakes and the Mississippi river, will command attention, and increase in population with the adjacent country. Here too, I am assured, that a suitable man would immediately obtain a large part of his support from the garrison, and be very cordially received. Respecting "the Sauk," I have formerly written you and hope the man is on his way." You will readily appreciate the importance of occupying these out posts as early as practicable, and you cannot too constantly bear in mind, that they require the very first rate men.

At Mackinac I received a very cordial welcome, from a peculiarly interesting though small circle of intelligent friends, who warmly esteem the A. H. M. S. and rejoice in your benevolent efforts. The Presbyterian church in Mackinac, is connected with the mission church of the A. B. C. F. M. and under the pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Ferry, the successful and devoted superintendent of that mission. Aside from the mission family, the church is very small; its members, however, appear generally devoted to the cause of the Saviour.

The whole population of the borough of Mackinac, and its environs, is about eight hundred; of these one hundred and forty are in the garrison; about one hundred and fifty American citizens, out of the garrison, and the rest, except the mission family, are French, and connected with the Roman church.

For the Observer.

Geneva Dec. 13th, 1831.

Mr. Editor:—The following report just received illustrates the nature of the Home Missionary work—the claims of this sacred charity on the enlarged patronage of Christians, and the sentiments of gratitude which inspire the hearts of those who have been blessed by its timely ministrations.———As ever, yours,

M. P. SQUIER.

Cor. Sec. H. M. S.

Castleton Oct. 31st 1831.

Dear Sir.—The 3d year of my labors among this people, in the service of the A. H. M. Society has closed. Since my last report, nothing worthy of special notice occurred, until about the middle of July, when the spirit of prayer began to revive. The first week in Aug. a day of fasting and prayer was observed, which proved a season of refreshing to the church; and most of the members were found cherishing a strong desire and confident expectation of another revival. Soon after this, it was found that about twenty of the members of the church, had not yet enlisted in the temperance cause. This subject was pressed upon their attention, and nearly all were brought cheerfully to enroll their names on the list of the temperance society, which now consists of 167 members. Toward the last of Aug. just as they were entering upon an effort to raise my salary for another year, an appeal was made to the congregation on the subject of Foreign Missions. About sixty dollars were subscribed, in aid of the American Board, and a society was organized for this object, consisting of 65 members. This I regarded as an omen for good.—And it was manifestly blessed as a stimulus to increased effort in sustaining the institutions of the gospel at home. So that when the time came for the effort, some increased their subscriptions; a few were added to the list; and the congregation was highly gratified to find themselves able to sustain their minister without further aid from the Missionary Society. And we cherish the hope of being able this year to commence the work of refunding the amount of what we have received, and of uniting our feeble effort in aid of the Home Missionary cause, until all the waste places are repaired, and our whole land is redeemed from the curse.

It will doubtless, be gratifying to hear that our expectations in regard to another revival, have not been disappointed. On Thursday the 13th inst. a protracted meeting was commenced in our church, which was continued in the usual form for seven days. The special presence of the Holy Ghost was manifested in the agonizing spirit of prayer among christians, and the conviction and hopeful conversion of sinners. So great had been the excitement, and so intense the applications to the means of grace, that it was judged expedient at the close of the seventh day, to discontinue a part of the exercises, lest the people should become exhausted. During the three following days, a meeting for prayer was held in the morning, and a prayer meeting and inquiry meeting at 6 o'clock, and preaching at 7 in the evening. On the Sabbath, the 11th day of the meeting, three sermons were delivered, and the usual exercises attended, without the least apparent diminution of solemnity and interest. On the following week the exercises were continued every evening for prayer and exhortation, and inquiry, and three sermons were delivered.

Yesterday was our stated communion. The Sanctuary was filled, and it was a season of deep and awful solemnity, and of great melting of heart under the word preached, and the exhibition of a crucified Saviour. Twenty-six were added to our communion.

During this interesting season, many have been brought under deep anxiety of mind and a goodly number have hopefully submitted to Christ; (several, from neighboring congregations.) But the final results are not ascertained: nor can they be fully known, until they are developed in the judgment of the great day.

As I am no longer to be continued on the list of your Missionaries, I would now briefly state, for the encouragement of the friends of the Home Missionary cause, that this church was organized about 3 1-2 years ago consisting of 10 members, set off from the church at Geneva. ...step would not have been taken, but from ... This ... ject of aid from your Society. It has ... the pro... ...me into being and grown up thus ... therefore c... ...ing of God, under your fostering ... far, by the bles...

...inent Cherokee, Moses Beanstick, the same who was once treated in the most barbarous manner in the jail of Carroll County, was also arrested not long since, and considerably injured by receiving a severe blow on the forehead with a musket, just because a certain white emigrant, whose name is not worthy to be repeated here, thought proper to report him as threatning his life. The object appears to be to awe every man into silence, and to "induce" as many as possible to enroll "peaceably," by treating them in the manner above related.

We do not here make any reflection on the conduct of the enrolling agents—We believe they are honorable men, and wish to do what is right and to satisfy their consciences. It is due to the honor of the Government that they see that no Cherokee is compelled to enroll under such circumstances. If any wish to emigrate, let them emigrate, to use the words of Secretary Cass, "uninfluenced by others."

PARALLEL IN SERVICE.

The present Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Hon. Perez Morton, has now been 21 years in his present office, and is 81 years old. He graduated at Harvard in 1771; he has held various offices under the government of Massachusetts, and last week prosecuted the criminal business in Boston, with promptness. His oration over Gen. Warren, in 1775 was popular and eloquent. We know of but one parallel to his activity in advanced life.

Simeon De Witt, Esq. Surveyor General of this state, has now, uninterruptedly, held the office of Surveyor General, for some forty-seven years; he also served six years as an officer of the Revolutionary army. Mr. De Witt, must be nearly the age of Mr Morton, and has "seen more service."

...have been admitted to the communion—30 on certificate from other churches, and 103 on examination from the world. Of this number, 10 have been dismissed to other churches, and two have gone, we trust to join the church triumphant.

Our whole number now in communion is 130, and of these, 112 have been received within nine months past. This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes. May we ever be humbled at his feet and give him all the glory.

We earnestly solicit an interest in the prayers of all those who love Zion, for the continued influence of the Holy Spirit, and the progress of this blessed work, until the family altar shall be erected in every dwelling, and the Saviour enthroned in every heart—and every tongue be employed to plead his cause and speak the wonders of his love.

In behalf of this church and congregation, I am authorized to return sincere thanks to the A. H. M. S. through you dear Sir, as their honored agent, for the aid of their pecuniary assistance and prayers, which they have kindly offered for us.—May the Lord continue to increase and prosper their benevolent efforts, even a thousand fold, until the darkness and miseries of sin shall vanish away, before the light of truth, and the rising glories of the millennium day.—Very respectfully your affectionate friend,

STEPHEN PORTER.

Rev. M. P. Squier, Sec. of the W. Agency of the A. H. M. Society.

CHEROKEES.

The following is an extract from an article in the Cherokee Phœnix reviewing the Message of the present Governour of Georgia—every person in the least acquainted with the Indian character will readily perceive that Mr. Boudinot has at least enough of the blood of the Red Man to give him a good share of Indian shrewdness.

"The imprisoned missionaries and their friends are noticed in such a way as we supposed they would be by Gov. Gilmer—In fact it only repeats what he has said heretofore. He is, however, greatly mistaken if he supposes that the "sectarian zeal," which has been excited for these missionaries, has passed away—It cannot pass away while there is a spark of virtue and true liberty in the American community. The memory of the late transactions cannot die away—It will live in history, to the honor & praise of Worcester and Butler, and to the disgrace of those who have perverted their power to purposes of private malice and self-interest.

"And what wrong has Georgia done to its Indian people?" So asks his excellency, yet in another part of his message he recommends the legislature to expel a certain class of Cherokees out of their country. The State takes one step after another—It has driven away white men, and the Governour now recommends to drive away a portion of the Cherokees—it is probable a year hence the "aboriginal" part of the tribe will come under a similar proscription. All this time Georgia cries out, "what wrong has been done to the Indians!" When it shall have taken away the last inch of earth from them, it will still say, "They are in the peaceable possession of their occupant rights. When it shall have filled the country with intruders, and removed such men as Worcester and Butler, it will still sing, "Intruders have been removed from among them by severe penal laws." Such is the spirit of despotism.

We are rather disappointed in the views expressed by Gov. Gilmer on the law passed last session for the survey ad distribution of the Cherokee lands.—We were prepared to see a recommendation from him to take immediate possession of those lands, because public opinion in Ga. was said to be prepared for such a step. But he seems to deprecate the idea of the state committing so gross an act of injustice.—It has been said that the new Governour has given a pledge to his constituents that he will place them in possession of the Cherokee Country. It may be so or it may not. So far as we can ascertain the feelings of our citizens upon this point, they appear to be perfectly indifferent. If the Governour and people of Georgia are prepared to go so far, if they will take the lands without any regard to "the character of the State," "the interest of the Union," without any respect for the public opinion and the rights of the Indians, the sooner they do it the better.

Governour Gilmer thinks it is highly necessary that the efforts of the President to induce the Cherokees to emigrate, should be supported by the authorities of Georgia. The nature of that support is fully exemplified at this time. It consists in denouncing and treating with savage cruelty those who disapprove of and speak against emigration, and defending and protecting those who have enrolled, however unprincipled and impudent they may be. It was only the other day a citizen of Pine-log was arrested by the Georgia Guard, for having a personal difference with an emigrant, a most trifling fellow too, and for speaking his mind to one of the interpreters of the Government agents. We understand he is still in confinement at Hightower, formerly occupied as a Mission station. We understand also that his persecutors are attempting to work upon his fears, by telling him that he must either remove out of the Georgia charter, emigrate to Arkansas or be sent to the Penitentiary for the term of four years.

Another Cherokee, Moses Beanstick, the same who was once treated in the most barbarous manner in the jail of Carroll County, was also arrested not long since, and considerably injured by receiving a severe blow on the forehead with a musket, just because a certain white emigrant, whose name is not worthy to be repeated here, thought proper to report him as threatning his life. The object appears to be to awe every man into silence, and to "induce" as many as possible to enroll "peaceably," by treating them in the manner above related.

We do not here make any reflection on the conduct of the enrolling agents—We believe they are honorable men, and wish to do what is right and to satisfy their consciences. It is due to the honor of the Government that they see that no Cherokee is compelled to enroll under such circumstances. If any wish to emigrate, let them emigrate, to use the words of Secretary Cass, "uninfluenced by others."

PARALLEL IN SERVICE.

The present Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Hon. Perez Morton, has now been 21 years in his present office, and is 81 years old. He graduated at Harvard in 1771; he has held various offices under the government of Massachusetts, and last week prosecuted the criminal business in Boston, with promptness. His oration over Gen. Warren, in 1775 was popular and eloquent. We know of but one parallel to his activity in advanced life.

Simeon De Witt, Esq. Surveyor General of this state, has now, uninterruptedly, held the office of Surveyor General, for some forty-seven years; he also served six years as an officer of the Revolutionary army. Mr. De Witt, must be nearly the age of Mr Morton, and has "seen more service."

...General is now in good health, (as we learn) and perfectly competent to the duties of his station.

There are but few of the 75 veterans who remain able to execute the duties of arduous and responsible offices at this day.—Roch. Daily Advertiser.

OBITUARY.

DIED,

At Liberty, Clay Co. Missouri, on the 16th of Oct. Mrs. Lucy Goodale, aged 26, wife of Rev. Joel Goodale, Missionary of the A. H. M. S. Mrs. Goodale was the daughter of Dea. Aaron Childs of Niagara Falls, N. Y. She became a hopeful subject of renewing grace, in the 17th year of her age, and united with the Presbyterian Church in Lockport, then under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Kent. Her religion was of that kind that lives and acts.—Her attachment to Christ and his cause, was firm and ardent, exhibiting itself in her daily walk and conversation. As a child, she was dutiful and affectionate; as a friend, constant; and a Christian, consistent. Her name will long be fondly cherished, not only by those, who, by her death, have felt the sundering of one of natures strongest ties, but also by a large circle of friends, to whom her excellencies had endeared her. She was married to Mr. Goodale, August 31st, 1830, and the same day took leave of her aged parents, her brothers, sister, and friends; bid adieu to all the endearments of home, and started for the Valley of the Mississippi. Soon after her arrival at Liberty, she collected a school, principally of young ladies, whom she instructed daily (in addition to attending to her domestic concerns,) until within about four weeks of her confinement. Her death was occasioned by an inflamation on the brain. She left a promising son, ten days old, who survived her sixteen days, when the Lord reached forth his hand and took him home.

The following are extracts from a letter written by Mrs Goodale (a few days previous to her death,) to her sister in Lockport, who a little before had buried a very dear child. As it is the last effort of her pen, and contains almost her dying words, it will be read with interest by her friends.

Liberty, Sept. 23, 1831.

My Dear Affectionate Sister—Your letter containing the intelligence of the sickness and death of your dear Edwin has just come to hand. It will be needless for me to assure you of my tenderest sympathy, and how deeply my own feelings are affected by this sudden and unexpected stroke, as you will know my heart rejoices when you rejoice, and weeps when you are called to weep. Besides your little ones were always peculiarly dear to me, and your statements have awakened the tenderest emotions of my soul. But my dear Sister, let us beware that we do not murmur. Our Heavenly Father hath done it. He orders all things wisely, and for our best good. We must not conclude because he has removed your dear child, that he has become your enemy. O! no, it is all done in infinite kindness, to lessen our attachment to earthly objects, to lead us to reflect upon our own frailty, and to teach us that this world is not designed as a place of rest, but as a state of trial. I am fully convinced, that afflictions are absolutely necessary for us, and if we are the children of God will work for our good. I trust dear sister, that such will be the result of this dispensation. May it be sanctified not only to the parents and children, but to all the relatives.

This letter, my Sister, will be filled at intervals, as I am unable to write but little at a time. Perhaps another hand will be employed to finish it.

Sept. 29, 1831.

My dearly beloved Sister—Notwithstanding I feel very much indisposed to-day, yet the consideration that this may be the only opportunity which I shall soon (if ever,) have, of holding communion with you this side the eternal world, induces me to resume my pen. * * * * * *

* * * * * * *

Think not dear Sister, that I regret the sacrifice which I have been called to make. With the invisible world in prospect, the cause in which I have professedly engaged, absorbs every earthly consideration, and renders the fleeting enjoyments of sense unworthy to hold a place in comparison. The advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom ought to be the only desire of our hearts. And if it may be promoted by our feeble efforts, what are all the sacrifices we can make? Perhaps the immediate result of my husbands labors, might have been more apparent in some more cultivated soil; still I have reason to believe that the light of eternity will disclose, that consequences more remote, will have a bearing in the destruction of the kingdom of darkness. Yes, I trust the seed which has been scattered, will yet take deep root, and bear much fruit, to the honor and praise of Sovereign Grace.

The following are extracts from a letter written to the parents of the deceased, by her husband, dated Liberty, Clay Co. Missouri. Oct. 20, 1831.

My dear, dear parents,—What a changing world this is in which we live! How transient is human life, and human happiness, and human hopes! How easily and suddenly are all our earthly prospects blasted! But what a source of consolation it is, to know that all events from the greatest to the least, are ordered and brought to pass under the superintendence of an all-wise and beneficent providence. I hope my dear parents that your hearts are fixed, trusting in God, and that you are perfectly resigned to his holy will and providence. The Lord has done great things for your family, and I trust that you have again and again submitted them into the hands of that God who has richly blessed them with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. You have I trust made an eternal surrender of all your children for time and eternity, to him whose they are by creation, preservation and redemption. If so, then you are willing to give them up whenever he sees fit to take them to himself. Oh yes, and rejoice when they leave this troublesome world, and are landed safe on Canaan's happy shore. My dear wife is now rejoicing with fulness of joy, in the bosom of her Saviour. Do not let it grieve your hearts when I tell you that Lucy is freed from all pain and sorrow, and every evil incident to human life, and gone to her Saviour and your Saviour, to her God and your God.

Mr. Goodale here mentions the birth of a son on Friday the 7th ult. The mother appeared to be doing well until the Tuesday following, when she was violently attacked with fever, and was deranged. He then details the means that were used and the various changes that took place, with the minuteness which must be gratifying to the afflicted parents, but which we omit, and give only a few extracts, commencing with the Sabbath morning following.

Sabbath morning and during the day she became more and more rational though not perfectly so, but she gradually sunk away till five minutes past ten in the evening when she breathed her last, & yielded up her soul into the hands of her Saviour. Saturday night and Sabbath day she was sensible that she had but little while to live. She often requested me to take good care of the little child. She said she could not live, but she did not possess her reason enough to be conversed with. When she was dying I took her hands and I tried to talk some more with her, but she took no notice. A minute or two before her departure, she turned her head and cast a look on all around her, then turned them up, and with a smile on her countenance, she gave us a token that she discovered what she had never seen before. She died very easy. I do not think that any one knew what was the real cause of her death. * * * * * There was no derangement in her system as is often the case with persons in her situation. Every thing was done for her that could be done. I never saw people more kind and attentive in New-York to any one that was sick, than they were to my wife. * * * Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, our nearest neighbor did as much for us, and were as attentive and kind as you would have done or could have done if you had lived en as near us. Mrs. Robertson will take care of all my wife's things till I can take them or send them to you.

OBSERVER.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 21, 1831.

WESTERN CONVENTION.

It is well known to many of our readers, that difficulties of a serious nature agitate the Presbyterian Church, with reference to the proper manner of conducting missionary operations—one party contending that they should be under the exclusive control of the General Assembly, and the other being willing to unite with, and give a proper share in the directions of their affairs, and the appropriation of their funds to our brethren of the Congregational Church, and to others who agree with us in essentials—the former being in favor of the Assembly's Board of Missions, and the latter of the Home Missionary Society. These difficulties having assumed a very serious aspect, especially in the Valley of the Mississippi, a Convention of Delegates from the various Synods in that region, was recommended by the General Assembly, which met, in pursuance of such recommendation, at Cincinnati on the 25th November, and continued in session eight days. A considerable number of Synods did not send Delegates—others had given their delegates positive instructions to vote in favor of the Assembly's Board. The votes on most of the motions stood for Home Miss. Society 28, Assembly's Board 41. A compromise was proposed by forming a new Board, independent of both the Assembly's Board and Home Miss. Society—but this was rejected. No measure for conciliation was favorably received by the majority. As a last resort the following resolution was proposed and rejected, 42 to 27.

"Resolved, That this Convention, notwithstanding the preference avowed for the Assembly's Board of Missions, unite with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in feelings of regard and affection for the American H. Missionary Society, and rejoice in the hope that by the aid of that Society, many of the destitute churches in the Valley of the Mississippi, will be supplied with the stated preaching of the Gospel and many souls converted to God."

CAMBRIDGE STUDENTS AND ANN ROYAL.

We have lately seen in some paper (we do not recollect what one) a letter or address of a number of the students of Harvard University, to Miss Ann Royal, of a very complimentary character—pulogizing her talents and her infidelity and recommending her to the confidence of the community and society. It is such a miserable piece of composition—so ridiculous a farrago that we were in doubt whether it was an extract of some Caledonian jeu de mots from the pen of some editor of a comic publication, and therefore the strongest letters could not express our disgust at it, or whether it was a mere burlesque. It seems that Miss Royal publishes the latest herself, and is high in favor with the students, and of course is able to do these young men, and the Institution that can furnish such rare specimens of gentlemanly and scholarly accomplishments as these letters, a due share of favors and commendation is owing. If these young fellows could educate the talents and genius of Miss Royal, as they profess, we should advise them to publish the Letters addressed to her, in the first number of some Periodical that Christians can read without a blush. She would doubtless make a great noise in the world. Pope Joan.

CONGRESS.

We have received from the Hon F. Whittlesey, our Member of Congress, a pamphlet containing the President's Message, together with the reports of the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and that of the Post Master General.

The Secretary of War speaks of desertion as an increasing evil—and attributes it to the want of power to inflict adequate punishment. Corporal punishment being abolished, confinement in a guard house, is the only resort, and as those thus confined, are exempt from labor to which they would otherwise be subject, it is questionable whether their comforts are much diminished.—The yearly increase of desertion for the last 6 years is—

In	1826,	635
"	1827,	858
"	1828,	820
"	1829,	1,115
"	1830,	1,251
"	1831, probably	1,450

The loss to the government has increased in the same ratio. In 1826 it was $54,393, and will probably be in 1831, $118,321. He recommends that the pay of the non-commissioned officers should be increased as one of the means of preventing desertion. By increase of pay, men of respectability, of correct habits and greater intelligence, would be induced to enlist as non-commissioned officers. It would operate as a stimulus to the soldier to conduct well with a hope of promotion. The non-commissioned officers exert a very great influence over the private soldiers, and from their familiar intercourse, they might, if they were men of influence, do much to prevent desertions. But the most important part of this report, in our estimation, relates to the destructive influence of ardent spirits.

The report says, "A very large proportion of all the crimes committed in the army, may be traced to habits of intemperance." "This vice is in fact the prevalent one of the soldiery. I am satisfied that ardent spirits ought not to form a component part of the ration."

He says that in 1830, 72,537 galls. of whiskey were issued in rations, at an expense of $22,132. Some former Secretary of War has said, that most of the desertions from the army were occasioned by the use of ardent spirits. We will suppose that only one half—take the last year—were from this cause; add it to the $22,132 which the whiskey ration for the last year cost, and you will have the sum of $81,291 loss to the public treasury, for that which could not, if used in the most temperate manner, have really benefitted the soldier, but might have been, in some cases, a real injury. We shall be prepared after this exhibit, for the recommendation of the Secretary, that whiskey should form no part of the ration. The soldier is now at liberty to accept of one cent in lieu of the whiskey ration, but this he supposes is selling it greatly below its value, which he places at about five cents—thus he imagines he sustains a great loss. The sum saved by withholding this part of the ration, it is proposed to expend in tea, coffee and sugar as a substitute. The wisdom of the recommendation, cannot be questioned—and there can be as little question of its promoting greatly, the good order, the health and moral character of our army.

Another recommendation of Secretary Cass will ensure to it the cordial approbation of every good citizen. He says that while the American soldier is well paid, fed and clothed, and ample provision made for his support in case of disability, no provision is made for his mental or religious improvement. This is rendered peculiarly necessary by the frontier position of a great part of the army; some of whom are on the very confines, and others beyond the limits of civilization. He recommends the measure as a matter of expediency, because, he adds, "When moral and religious principles are practically acknowledged, their sanctions will add validity to the obligations voluntarily assumed by the soldiers, and his duties will be performed with more fidelity and alacrity. Discipline and subordination will be promoted, punishments diminished and all the details of the service will feel the spirit of improvement." He then proposes the appointment of chaplains at some of our military posts.

He speaks highly of the Military Academy at West Point, and says that of 560 officers now in service, 491 were educated there. But we can barely glance at a few of the leading subjects embraced in the report, and those only which have a bearing on the morals of the army, and of the community. We should think it a very able document, and one which would be highly interesting to the statesman.

There is one feature of the report, which, although it is what we anticipated, we sincerely regret.

In regard to our Indian relations, Secretary Cass reiterates the opinions of the President, and advizes their removal. We expect that this will be reviewed and we can avail ourselves of the labors of some one more competent than we are to do the subject justice. We will only remark that a great deal is said in the report as to the incompatibility of the Indians residing within the jurisdiction of a state, and still governing themselves by their own laws—that it is expedient for them to remove, because they cannot remain where they are without being encroached upon, and disturbed by the whites.

We acknowledge that we do not see what right this gives us to force them to abandon their homes, their lands and the graves of their fathers. We do not see why the same plea of expediency might not give the more sober and thrifty farmer a right to say to his indolent or improvident neighbor, "I can make better use of your farm than you do, you must therefore remove and give me possession at my own price, and on my own terms." We cannot possibly understand how the government of the U. States obtained the right of extending their jurisdiction over the Indians, except by treaties, or in what way they could obtain the right of soil except by purchase. If treaties are relied on, what will be done with the guaranties which those instruments contain to protect the Indians in the quiet and peaceable possession of their lands which they have not sold? What is to be done with treaty stipulations for the protection of the United States, which has also so often been reiterated by different Presidents? We believe that common sense can easily understand this business, although its perceptions may be obscured by the mists and fogs thrown around it by the special pleading of the distinguished talents that are enlisted, be self interest and partizan jealousy, in these unholy acts of injustice and oppression.

FIRE IN ROCHESTER.

On Saturday evening last, just at sunset, during one of the heaviest gales of wind that we have experienced in years, the dreadful cry of fire was sounded through the village. On reaching the spot we found that the fire had commenced in a wing of the Clinton House, used for a kitchen. It extended from the main building west, and was nearly consumed before the fire companies could reach the ground. Directly south of, and parallel with this building, and but a few feet distant, was another wing three stories high, and probably fifty feet in length, extending within four or five rods of the first Presbyterian church. The flames which were driven by the fury of the wind against this building had caught in the eaves, before the engines could be brought to act with any degree of efficiency. Here however, there was a long and doubtful contest. Some of the engines were brought to bear upon the roof, and the hose of another being brought through the main body of the house, poured its torrents upon the inside for a time, but the flames still increased, and all efforts were now directed to prevent the fire from communicating with the front building. In this, when, to human appearance, nothing but a direct interposition of Almighty power could save the whole range of stores on the west side of Exchange Street, as far south as the canal, the progress of the fire was arrested after a contest of four hours. The main body of the Clinton House has suffered but trifling damage, but the occupant Mr. Smith, must have suffered very severely from the hasty removal, and consequent destruction of his furniture. The building was owned by Messrs. F. Whittlesey, and I. Moore, and was insured. Such was the power of the five engines, and such the skill, energy and efficiency with which they were directed, that a part of the timbers of the three story building to the plates, are still standing, though in a falling position and covered with icicles from top to bottom.

Our Fire engines have never perhaps been used to greater advantage—have never been instrumental in saving a greater amount of property, or were ever managed with greater skill, energy or perseverance, and they certainly were never before called to act under more appalling circumstances.—Had the fire broken out in a situation remote from the river or canal, there was no human power that could have arrested its progress, until every thing combustible in the direction of the wind, had been consumed.

The promptness, the good order and untiring zeal of the five Engine companies, deserves the grateful thanks of every citizen, and the reflection that, under God, they have been instrumental in rendering such an essential service to their fellow citizens must afford them an abundant reward.

Further Particulars respecting the Fire.—The Daily Advertizer observes:

It is a little remarkable that so few persons were frozen, considering how much they were exposed, several of them being so completely covered with ice as not to be recognised by their friends. One individual, on arriving at home, had the curiosity to weigh his over-coat, and found it weighed fifty pounds.

"It is said that very little ardent spirits was made use of by the firemen; most of them prefering the coffee furnished by the liberality of the ladies to any thing more stimulating."

In addition we might observe that we have never witnessed as great alacrity on the part of the citizens of this village, in hastening to the assistance of the fire companies, nor have we ever seen them so indefatigable in their exertions when on the ground.

One thing we observed as defective in the fire department, which was the want of a guard to