THE "OLD THIRTEENTH"

A HISTORY OF THE REGIMENT'S ACTION IN THE CIVIL WAR.

DETAILS FURNISHED REGARDING THE BATTLES OF THE COMMAND
—GALLANTRY OF THE OFFICERS AND MEN—
SOME NOTABLE CASES OF BRAVERY.

Authentic records are hard to get years after the event has transpired. The compiler is always impressed with the indifference or carelessness of persons with reference to the preservation of historic records or of evidence having important bearing on such records.

The following account of the service and history of the "Old Thirteenth" Regiment, New York Volunteers was prepared by the regimental adjutant Job C. Hedges as the official report of Colonel Elisha G. Marshall, the commander of the regiment, to the Adjutant General of the State.

Almost by accident a copy of the account recently fell into my hands. Appreciating its value and interest to the descendants and friends of those men who were first in Rochester and vicinity to respond to Lincoln's call for troops in April 1861, I have had the record re-printed. The names recorded herein are not given as a complete and accurate list of the men who served in the different companies of this regiment. For the most part they represent the companies before the numerous promotions, transfers and additions were made. The Company C list, however, has been revised in accordance with complete records of that company in the possession of the family of Captain Henry Lomb.

Only about 30 of the men who fought in the valorous "Old Thirteenth" are left. It is due to them and to those who have passed on as well as to their descendants, that this record of their valor and sacrifice be preserved.

If this brief account contributes even in small measure to the cause of patriotism and to the honor of those who have sacrificed for our common country I shall indeed be grateful.

THEODORE CAZEAU,

Commander Lomb Camp S. O. V.

July, 1925.

Adjutant General, State of New York.

SIR: I have the honor to state, agreeable to instructions received from his excellency Governor Seymour, dated February 28, 1863, as follows:

The organization of the Thirteenth regiment, New York State volunteers, was completed at Elmira the latter part of May, 1861 and having been mustered into the service of the United States on the 14th day of May for three months, on the 30th of that month, agreeable to orders, started for Washington via Baltimore, Colonel Isaac Quinby commanding, being the first troops, in conjunction with the Twelfth New York volunteers, that passed through Baltimore, after the attack on the Massachusetts Sixth. Arriving in Washington at midnight May 31st and the following morning it encamped on Meridian Hill near the city. Two days after, June 3d, it crossed the Potomac into Virginia, pitching tents near Fort Corcoran, then in course of construction. The regiment immediately entered upon picket duty besides furnishing fatigue details on what is now known as Fort Bennett. July 16th, in light marching order, with the Seventy-ninth and Sixty-ninth New York militia and Second Wisconsin, under Colonel W. T. Sherman commanding brigade, it joined in the advance on Manassas. On the 18th of July at the battle of Blackburn's Ford, the regiment was for the first time in position under a heavy fire from the enemy's artillery, fortunately suffered no loss. The Sunday following (July 21st) crossed Bull Run creek, about 10 a. m. (at this time the rations were exhausted), and immediately engaged the enemy in a heavy force until 5 p. m. when the whole line fell back on the fortifications near Washington. The strength of the regiment in the first battle of Bull Run, was 600, loss 12 killed, 26 wounded, 27 missing. On the 14th of August the time expired (three months) for which the regiment had been sworn into the service of the United States. Immediate discharge and return home was expected, and expectation appeared to be made certain, by the arrival, at this particular juncture of orders to that effect from the war department. Disappointment followed, and it was severe. The men could hardly believe that Governor Morgan had turned them over, as it was termed, for the two years to the general government, yet such was the fact. Dissatisfaction followed in which it might be said all joined. It was so deep and general that the most serious consequences were apprehended. Thirty were sent to the Dry Tortugas rather than stay, as they said, for a term for which they had not engaged.

Previous to this, August 4th, Colonel Quinby's resignation had been accepted, on the 29th of the same month, Col. John Pickell of Frostburg, Maryland, assumed command. On or about the 1st of October, 1861, the regiment was detailed on special guard duty at the aqueduct and ferries opposite Georgetown, and relieved on the 8th of March, 1862. March 10th, under General Fitz John Porter commanding division, the troops joined in the second advance on Manassas, arriving at Fairfax Court House about 5 p. m., the same day, after a severe march. Lieutenant Colonel Stephan was in command, Colonel Pickell having been honorably discharged in orders from the war department.

After a delay of five days at Fairfax Court House, the direction was changed, and on the 21st the regiment embarked with the Army of the Potomac at Alexandria for Fortress Monroe. March 24th it arrived on the peninsula near Hampton village, and proceeded thence to New Market, at which place it encamped till April 4th, in the meantime furnishing regular picket details.

April 5th it arrived in front of Yorktown, and the Thirteenth was immediately ordered to the front—a portion of the regiment supporting the batteries engaged, and three companies were deployed as skirmishers. At this time, in the face of the enemy and in hearing of his guns, Captain H. B. Williams, then commanding company H, left his company and returned to Fortress Monroe. He sent in his resignation, and a few days thereafter was discharged the service, by command of General Heintzleman. The second night after the arrival before Yorktown, the entire regiment was ordered on picket, the deployments effected under cover of darkness, and in a cold and severe storm. Then followed the siege of Yorktown. The Thirteenth took its position in camp on the extreme right near Warmesley Creek. It was whilst before Yorktown that Colonel Marshall assumed command of the Regiment. During the thirty days of the siege, we furnished over twenty details for pickets and several for fatigue. The duty was performed cheerfully and it is safe to affirm, that the reputation of the Thirteenth for intelligent and prompt execution of orders was second to none. Frequently engaged in light skirmishes with the enemy and almost continually under fire—the camp itself being within easy range of the enemy's guns—they gradually acquired that coolness and deliberation under fire which thoroughly prepared them for the severe and arduous trials they have since encountered. One hundred and fifty men and officers of the Thirteenth were on picket the morning of the evacuation of Yorktown and were among the first to enter the enemy's works. The last approach before Yorktown was dug within fifty yards of the enemy's outposts by a detail of 200 men and officers of the Thirteenth under direction of Captain Hyland, since promoted to be major. The importance of this duty and the high compliment thus paid the regiment will be appreciated when it is known that the detail was made direct by General Fitz John Porter, superintendent of the siege.

May 9th found the Thirteenth at West Point on the York river, having embarked at Yorktown the day previous. From here the regiment within a few days passed successively through Cumberland, White House and Tunstall's station—reaching a point—May 19th—several miles beyond the place last mentioned and within eighteen miles of Richmond. Whilst here, May 21st, the Thirteenth was detached for special duty by command of General Fitz John Porter, the main army moving forward upon the Chickahominy.

The important and delicate military nature of this duty, and the high compliment again paid the regiment, will be seen from the following extracts from my letter of instructions received the next day:

COLD HARBOR, VA., MAY 22, 1862

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH PROVISIONAL ARMY CORPS, CAMP AT

Colonel Marshall, Commanding New York Volunteers:

COLONEL—The commanding general directs you, in compliance with orders from general headquarters, to move to-morrow morning with your regiment to Old Church, on the road to Hanover. * * * Colonel Rush, commanding Pennsylvania lancers, and Colonel Tyler, commanding Connecticut volunteers, with their regiments, will comprise the force to be gathered there.

The object of your command is to secure the army from attacks in rear or flank by parties of the enemy passing down this branch of the river, and to patrol the country between the turnpike and river, and for this purpose the commanding general relies on your vigilance, and that of the officers and men under you. You will keep him informed of everything about you and communicate often with him; you will obtain all information of the enemy possible, at Newcastle and Hanover, and what force if any, is beyond the river. You are authorized to employ guides. * * *

To your rear at Passby's Mill will be General Cook's command, and on your left General Stoneman, whom you are directed to communicate with.

Agreeable to above, the regiment moved forward the next day and occupied Old Church. Shortly after our arrival, patrols of the Thirteenth discovered the presence of Mrs. General Lee at the farm of Edmund Riffin.

In course of compliance with instructions, the reconnoissance was on the 26th pushed to Hanover, and having discovered the enemy in heavy force under General Blanch—we immediately returned—on our way destroying the communications to the country beyond the Chickahominy. The battle of Hanover Court house was fought the next day, the 27th. On this day, after a tedious march of seventeen miles, the Thirteenth being in advance of the detached brigade, and meeting General Fitz John Porter, I asked him for orders and was directed to take position on the left of Griffin's battery. Complying with these orders, we met the enemy, and with Griffin's battery, drove them from half to three-quarters of a mile—this command alone taking ninety-one prisoners, eighty-four stand of arms, fifty-five sets of accouterments, and three chests of medical stores, with a loss of only seven wounded, one mortally. Night coming on, we bivouacked beyond the field of battle, fully one mile in front of our army. The entire command behaved in the most excellent manner. I would make especial mention of Lieutenant Montgomery, of Rochester, then quartermaster of the regiment, now assistant adjutant general on General Quinby's staff, who, volunteering his services, displayed the most signal gallantry.

The 29th we returned to Old Church and thence on the 31st joined the army on the Chickahominy. Here we camped near Gaines House. Turns of picket and fatigue followed until the 26th of June, when at the battle of Mechanicsville, the Thirteenth occupied a position on the extreme right, our skirmishers deployed on the Ashland road, being three companies under Captain George Hyland, and engaged the skirmishers of the enemy on Jackson's advance, were exposed to a severe fire of canister and musketry, and so remained until withdrawn at midnight, joining the balance of the regiment with a loss of two taken prisoners. Later in the day, the regiment, with the exception of these three companies, was moved to the support of the batteries toward the center, coming under a severe artillery fire.

The next day we were early in position at Gaines Mills. Twice, the enemy advancing in heavy columns, were splendidly repulsed by the well-directed and murderous fire of the Thirteenth. The approach was so near, the force of the enemy so large, and they were so well supported by their artillery, that only the most determined and desperate resistance could be effectual. They advanced the third time, and now, not only in column and supported by artillery as before, but with additional fire from three battalions in deployment, the Thirteenth saw at once the desperate nature of the position, and cheerfully stood their ground. The struggle was severe, the enemy advanced with difficulty, men never fought better than did the Thirteenth, and not until the enemy had reached the rough breastworks in front of our line, our ammunition exhausted and the line to the right and left of us broken, I gave the order to fall back on the reserves, not, however, until we had captured a stand of colors from the Seventh Tennessee battalion, and for which I would make especial mention of the gallantry of Sergeant John Marks, afterwards promoted to be a second lieutenant for his conduct on this day.

In this engagement, Second Lieutenant Albert S. Lema fell mortally wounded, whilst bravely directing the fire of his men; Second Lieutenant Henry J. Wynkoop, an excellent officer was severely wounded; Lieutenant James A. Wilson slightly, and Lieutenant Elijah M. Cooley taken prisoner. Loss of enlisted men, 97 killed, wounded and taken prisoners. Strength of regiment in battle of Gaines Mills, about 400.

I must here speak of the coolness and gallantry during this engagement of Major Frank A. Schoeffel, since promoted to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain George Hyland, Captain Jerry A. Sullivan, and Captain Charles Savage, and of the bravery and efficiency of Adjutant Job C. Hedges. From the battle of Chickahominy, or Gaines Mills, followed the marches to the James river, arriving at Scotches Neck the afternoon of the 30th of June, and an hour after our arrival, ordered out as reserve in the battle of Turkey Bend, the prelude to Malvern. Standing to our arms all night on Malvern Hill, at dawn we fell back; taking our position in the afternoon to the support of the batteries, in position on the immediate heights. Three hours later moving to the extreme left of the line, the command although worn with marching and want of sleep, manifested the utmost cheerfulness. On taking position to the left, came under a hot musketry fire from the enemy. At this point, left in a dangerous and important position without orders, Major F. A. Schoeffel displayed a coolness and judgment under trying circumstances, deserving the highest commendation: Adjutant Job C. Hedges was at once sent to the immediate front in the face of a terrible fire, to discover the senior officer in command for instructions, and found Colonel McQuade, of the Fourteenth New York volunteers. A few minutes later, the regiment moved to the right and center, to support the batteries against a desperate charge from the enemy. Of the conduct of Adjutant Job C. Hedges at this time I cannot speak too highly—fearlessly advancing under a destructive fire, he executed his directions with a cheerfulness and promptitude that fully entitles him to this especial mention.

I must also speak of the excellent conduct in this engagement of Captain Jerry A. Sullivan, Captain Albert G. Cooper, Captain Charles C. Brown and Lieutenant Henry Lomb, since promoted to be captain.

July 2d we reached Harrison's Landing. Too much cannot be said in compliment of the officers and men of the Thirteenth for their behavior during the entire seven days, exhibiting a courage, devotion and cheerfulness in endurance that has never been excelled. Where all did so well, it is sometimes invidious to make comparisons. Yet I cannot avoid, besides those of whom I have already spoken, making particular mention, for meritorious conduct, of First Sergeant Duane D. Stillwell, "B" company; Sergeant Isaac Spears, "E" company; Sergeant Himrod Underhill, "E" company; Sergeant Stephen Osborne, "A" company; Sergeant Thomas Jordan, "E" company; Sergeant Alexander Derville, "A" company; Corporal John Wenzel, "A" company; Corporal William Myer, "D" company; Private George B. Stanley, "B" company; Private Ranney, "G" company; Private Fred Lane, "A" company. The Thirteenth remained at Harrison's Landing, nothing in particular transpiring, except being shelled by the enemy on the night of July 31st, in which one man, Private Bemish, company E, was mortally wounded—until August 14th when the Army of the Potomac started to the relief of the army of Virginia, the Thirteenth embarking at Newport News with General Porter, disembarking at Aquia Creek, and proceeding thence by forced marches to Falmouth, Crittenden Mills and Kelley's Ford, at which last place we picketed on the 26th—on the day following (after burning our baggage,) moved to Warrenton junction, and thence at 3 a. m. on the 28th moved on Bristow station. The morning of the 29th, reached Manassas junction, and passing towards Gainsville the Thirteenth deployed, and engaged the skirmishers of the enemy until dark, remaining on picket that night.

August 30th we moved to Bull Run, and, worn with fatigue and hunger, engaged the enemy. Remaining at first under cover of timber, and then with the Eighteenth Massachusetts and First Michigan charging across the open fields in the face of a heavy fire of musketry, shells and canister from three sides, reached a point within thirty yards of the enemy. Reinforcements starting from the timber to our assistance were unable to stand the fire and fell back; if the Thirteenth had before this fought bravely, they now fought with desperation, but in vain; our men fell rapidly, killed and wounded. Here Captain George W. Hasler, Captain Charles Savage and Lieutenant William Goetting were killed. They were brave and fearless officers, and fell in the noble discharge of their duty.

Major Hyland, although early in the engagement, receiving a severe wound from a piece of shell, fracturing two ribs, continued rendering most valuable assistance, displaying the greatest energy and gallantry. Lieutenant Mark J. Bunnell, a brave and efficient officer, Captain Henry Geck, and Lieutenant John M. Kirk were wounded, the former very severely. For meritorious conduct at the battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862, I would mention Captains Sullivan, Cooley and Brown, First Sergeant Duane Stillwell, "B" company; Sergeant John King, "D" company; Corporal Edward F. Hamilton, "A" company; Private Fred A. Lane, "A" company, and Private Peter Downs, "D" company.

The night of the 30th we fell back on Centerville, and thence—September 2d—to the fortifications near Washington. September 12th we started on the Maryland campaign, crossing the Potomac at Georgetown, and marching through Rockville, Frederick and Keedysville, joined the main army before Sharpsburg September 16th. During the battle of Antietam on the next day—the 17th—the Thirteenth were held in the reserve under General Porter. At nightfall on the 18th were deployed as pickets in front of General Burnside's position—the next morning advancing as skirmishers through Shepardstown, taking some prisoners from the rear guard of the enemy.

September 20th.—The regiment with the brigade crossing the Potomac at Shepardstown, was suddenly met by an overwhelming force of the enemy, a retreat was ordered and the river recrossed under a sharp fire from the enemy on the bluffs. Loss of the regiment, eighteen wounded and prisoners.

From this time until the 30th of October the Thirteenth remained in camp near Sharpsburg, on which date passing over the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, passed successively through Snickers Gap, Middleburgh, White Plains, New Baltimore, Warrenton, Warrenton Junction, Elktown, Hartwood, arriving opposite Fredericksburgh November 19th, and remained in camp until December 11th, nothing of particular interest transpiring except the usual picket duty and a reconnoissance in force to Hartwood church about the 1st of December. Early on the morning of December 11th, the regiment left their camp—not however crossing the Rappahannock until a little past noon on the 13th. Coming under fire immediately on reaching Fredericksburgh bank of the river, we were advanced through the north end of the town, across the open ground beyond the railroad, taking our position to the extreme front, our line facing the stone wall and rifle pits occupied by the enemy, and within close range of their artillery on the immediate heights beyond and to the right and left.

The men were obliged, from the exposure of the position, to fire lying down, thus taking advantage of a slight rise of ground running parallel to the front of our line. The fire of the enemy was very severe, both from artillery and musketry, especially during our advance to position. The Thirteenth were engaged receiving and returning fire until nightfall, and remaining in their position that night and the day following, and were only relieved about 10 o'clock p. m. Our loss was quite severe, out of 298 officers and men five were killed, sixty-three wounded, and seventeen taken prisoners.

Colonel Marshall was very severely wounded during the afternoon of the 13th whilst temporarily assisting in bringing forward a brigade under direct orders from General Griffin, commanding division.

Captain Willard Abbott, Adjutant Job C. Hedges, First Lieutenant James Hutchinson, Second Lieutenant John M. Richardson were also wounded whilst in the discharge of their duty.

For gallant and meritorious conduct in this engagement I must mention Lieutenant-Colonel Frank A. Schoeffel, who, in the discharge of his duties whilst commanding the regiment, exhibited a coolness and courage that entitled him to most favorable consideration.

Adjutant Job C. Hedges although suffering from a painful wound, continued with his regiment, and also rendered very efficient aid to General Barnes commanding the brigade, until taken to the rear by order of Lieutenant-Colonel Schoeffel, too weak to walk without assistance. Captain Willard Abbott, also maimed in the gallant discharge of his duty, notwithstanding a painful wound.

Captain Albert G. Cooper, Captain Charles C. Brown, Lieutenant John Weed, Lieutenant Henry Lomb, and Lieutenant Edward Martin proved themselves at Fredericksburgh as they had on other fields—brave and efficient officers.

It is proper here to acknowledge the valuable services of Surgeon David Little, not only at Fredericksburgh, but in every engagement in which the regiment has participated. His kindness and skill will not soon be forgotten by those whose wounds have required his care and attention. In discharge of the onerous and important duties of his position, Dr. Little has displayed the utmost energy and efficiency.

Assistant Surgeon Isaac V. Mullen is entitled to honorable mention for the very efficient performance of his duties at Fredericksburgh. He is a brave and excellent officer.

On being relieved on the night of the 14th the Thirteenth returned to the streets of the town, where they lay until about 6 o'clock, on the afternoon of the 15th they then moved to the upper part of the town and stood as support to the picket during the evacuation by the remainder of the troops and at 3 o'clock in the morning of the 16th the regiment with the brigade crossed the river, but was immediately ordered back to the Fredericksburgh side where they remained until daylight acting as rear guards, whilst the pickets were withdrawn—re-crossing the river about 6 o'clock that morning, immediately returned to same camp occupied before the movement on Fredericksburgh.

December 30th we joined in a reconnoissance, crossing the Rappahannock at Richard's ford, moved up the river about seven miles, capturing a few cavalry pickets on the route, recrossing the river at Ellis's or Barnett's Ford to the north side, the 31st, encamped for the night, and returned to camp near Potomac creek the next day.

January 20, 1863, we joined in the second advance on Fredericksburgh. Proceeding about three miles, we encamped for the night. Next day we advanced about two miles further where we remained mud-bound until the 24th, employed making corduroy road for the return of the artillery and transportation. The 24th returned to present camp near Potomac Creek. I cannot close this communication without referring to the merits and gallantry of those officers and men of the Thirteenth regiment who early responding to the call of the country have so generously given their lives to its honor and maintenance. They have fallen bravely, and their example will not soon be forgotten by those who were the witnesses of their valor and suffering. The service rendered the country by this command has not been slight. The Thirteenth New York Volunteers will not be forgotten as long as Manassas, Yorktown, Hanover, Mechanicsville, the banks of the Chickahominy, Turkey Bend, Malvern, Bull Run, Antietam, Sharpsburg, Shepards town, and Fredericksburg are numbered as fields whereon brave men fought nobly and died willingly for the protection of our national honor and unity.

I am very respectfully your obt. servt.,

(Signed)

E. G. MARSHALL,

Colonel 13th N. Y. V.

It was the writer's privilege to visit several of the battlefields of the civil war as aide and secretary to Captain Henry Lomb whose custom it was to make frequent journeys to scenes of the old battlefields and camps in which he was a participant. On these journeys he was often accompanied by comrades of the "Old Thirteenth" to whom he was a genial and generous host and a delightful companion.

The accompanying pictures were taken by me on the Bull Run battlefields. The monuments shown in the pictures are made of stones gathered on the battlefields. The group of veterans from left to right are Lieutenant James Hutchinson, Captain Henry Lomb, Colonel E. P. Searles, William Foster and George Burdick, all of whom participated in the battle, some fifty years before.
