JUNE 3, 1859.

THE POPULARIFIED FROM THE BAY.

MR. EDITOR:—Since I wrote you, your letter on Faneuil Hall and the prisoner of honor, has rather increased the interest we have felt in the case, and has served to reawaken the sentiment of humanity towards the slave and the slave mother, sitting in her lonely cell awaiting her fate. With the idea of doing something for the slave, there is hope for us all. In the slavery question, we close our armies and our navies, and the battle is on. In the personal concerns, not only in the families of the slave mother, but in the families of all the free negroes, and in the families of all the white people, there is a deeper anxiety and a greater feeling of moral responsibility. The struggle is not over, and the battle is not yet won. The struggle is not over, and the battle is not yet won.

FRANKFORT, May 30, 1859.

THE SLAVE RESCUE CASES.

Why do the papers in the North, and newspapers in the South, support each other in the rescue cases? Is it because they are all on the side of the law? Is it because they are all trying to do the right thing? Is it because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public? Is it because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures? Is it because they are all trying to make money by exciting the public opinion? Is it because they are all trying to divert the public attention from their own mistakes and failures? Is it because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public by exciting the public opinion? Is it because they are all trying to make money by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures?

In the rescue cases, the papers in the North support each other, because they are all on the side of the law. The papers in the South support each other, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by exciting the public opinion. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to divert the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by covering up their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures.

The papers in the North support each other, because they are all on the side of the law. The papers in the South support each other, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by exciting the public opinion. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to divert the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures.

In the rescue cases, the papers in the North support each other, because they are all on the side of the law. The papers in the South support each other, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by exciting the public opinion. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to divert the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to win the sympathy of the public by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to make money by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures. The papers in the North support the papers in the South, because they are all trying to cover up their own mistakes and failures by diverting the public attention from their own mistakes and failures.