FEEDERICK DOUGLASS' PAPER

JUNE 3, 1856

THE GREAT BEAUTY OF SO LONG TWO CENTURIES AND A HALF FOUND AT LAST.

From the New York Tribune.

It has been the invariable custom on this memorable day to tell the story of the world's ravages, the world's poverty, and the world's humiliations. It has been the invariable custom on this day to tell the story of the world's triumphs, the world's riches, and the world's glory. It has been the invariable custom on this day to tell the story of the world's miseries, the world's wrongs, and the world's disasters.

But now, at last, there is a new story to be told. It is the story of the world's possibilities, the world's promise, and the world's hope.

For the world has discovered that it is possible to do great things, to make great reforms, to effect great changes. The world has discovered that it is possible to do good, to help others, to serve humanity.

The world has discovered that it is possible to be just, to be fair, to be honest. The world has discovered that it is possible to be good, to be kind, to be charitable.

The world has discovered that it is possible to be great, to be powerful, to be mighty. The world has discovered that it is possible to be brave, to be free, to be independent.

The world has discovered that it is possible to be happy, to be healthy, to be comfortable. The world has discovered that it is possible to be joyous, to be delighted, to be glad.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be different. It will be a story of possibilities, of promise, of hope. It will be a story of goodness, of righteousness, of humanity.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be a story of beauty, of greatness, of glory. It will be a story of the world's achievement, of the world's triumph, of the world's glory.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be a story of the world's gratitude, of the world's appreciation, of the world's thankfulness.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be a story of the world's progress, of the world's improvement, of the world's advancement.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be a story of the world's future, of the world's promise, of the world's hope.

And so, from henceforth, the world's story will be a story of the world's beauty, of the world's greatness, of the world's glory.