They are divided into three categories: (1) those that are raised for their leafage, (2) those that are raised for their fruit, and (3) those that are raised for their seed. The latter are the most important, as they form the basis of the agricultural economy of the country. The potato is a good example of a crop that is raised for its leafage. It is a hardy plant, and can be grown in most parts of the world. It is also a good source of food, as it contains a high proportion of protein and carbohydrates. The potato is also a good source of fiber, which is important for digestive health.

The gathering of fruits, particularly those of the apple, pear, and plum, is an operation that requires careful planning and execution. The selection of the proper time for gathering is crucial to ensure the best quality and quantity of the fruit. The process involves identifying the stage of ripeness of the fruit, which can be assessed by its color, texture, and firmness.

When gathering fruits, it is important to use the correct tools and techniques to avoid damaging the fruit. This involves using the proper size of hand pruners or scissors to gently cut the fruit from the stem. It is also important to avoid bruising the fruit by handling it carefully.

After gathering, the fruit should be sorted and graded to ensure that only the best quality fruit is selected for sale or storage. This involves inspecting the fruit for any damage or imperfections that may affect its quality.

Once sorted, the fruit should be stored in a cool, dry place to prevent spoilage. This involves using proper storage techniques, such as keeping the fruit at a consistent temperature and humidity level.

The process of gathering fruits is not only a means of obtaining fresh fruit but also a way to support local farmers and the local economy. By gathering and selling fruits, farmers can earn additional income and contribute to the prosperity of the local community.

In conclusion, gathering fruits is a complex process that requires careful planning, execution, and maintenance. By following the proper guidelines and techniques, farmers can ensure the best quality and quantity of fruit, while also supporting local economies and the environment.

There is a difference of opinion among professional men in villages and cities from Canada to California as to what constitutes a market. It is generally understood that the government believes that it cannot enter into an engagement with such men as it is to the advantage of commerce. It is the duty of the government to secure the confidence and support of those who are engaged in the commerce of the country.

We allow prices to be given up to the public, and these have been so high as to be profitable for the principal agents. The government will not consider a change in this respect.

It is generally understood that the government holds a very favorable position in the market, and the business assumes a more active character.
