FALL PLANTING.

Without entering into the various arguments which have been adduced for and against the practice of fall planting, we are inclined to consider it the best plan, in many respects. In the first place, it is necessary to admit that the weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring. The weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring. The weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring. The weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring. The weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring. The weather is more favorable to doing the work than during the spring.

Of one of these trees, which was planted in the fall, we gave our readers a description in the paper of last year, and it is to be hoped that the planters will make use of it to the best advantage. The following is a description of the tree in question:

The tree is a species of elm, which has been very highly and unjustly neglected for many years. It is a tree of hardy growth, and the foliage is of a dark green color. The wood is very hard and heavy, and the tree is very durable. It is also very beautiful in form, and the branches are very graceful. It is a tree of great value, and the planters are advised to make use of it in their gardens.

A PAPER AND HIS BLOOD.

I have known in my life a good many friends of noble birth, whose wives were remarkably clever, and who were even more remarkable for being so. One of these friends had a son, who, at the age of fourteen, was considered to be a prodigy. His father was a great lover of books, and the son had inherited this love from him. The boy was very fond of reading, and he was always to be found with a book in his hand. He was also a very good scholar, and he had a great deal of knowledge about books.

A VARIETY OF XP.

In the latter part of the season, the following experiment was made: A number of plants were set out, consisting of the following varieties:

1. The Chickasaw plum of SHAW grows at a prodigious rate, and promises to make a good shade. It is easily propagated.

2. The weeping poplar was pointed out, Mr. P. saying that it was a splendid tree, and that it was a great advantage in every respect to plant evergreens among these silver maple groves or belts. In one or two years, it will be seen growing in disrepute in his nursery, and will be used as a Nation less selfish and more patriotic, and as a Nation less selfish and more patriotic, and as a Nation for the reasons stated in the last number of our paper, we would urge on our readers to subscribe to the "New York Journal of Commerce". The price of that paper is only five cents per number, and we believe that no paper can be found which will answer the purpose so well as the "Journal of Commerce". We have always found it to be the best means of obtaining news from abroad, and we believe that no paper can be found which will answer the purpose so well as the "Journal of Commerce".
