A DAY WITH THE FARMERS.

It always has been and probably always will be that men do not appreciate their choicest blessings, and that nature is not appreciated by the majority of mankind, because it is too obvious to excite reflection. Men who spend their lives basking in the enjoyment of health and free access to the air, the green fields and running streams, are not likely to reflect more than to a slight extent the miseries of those for whom fate has been less kind in its distribution of these blessings. Even our farmers, who have so many important influences upon health and happiness, and upon the best means of realizing the joy of existence, must often be unconscious of the beauty and capabilities of the scenes about them. Hugging so close to them, they are in a position to appreciate and enjoy all the richness of nature; and yet it is frequently the case that we find them so occupied with business that little attention is paid to the beauty and the capabilities of the scenes which surround them.

Our lives are made up of small things, and this is especially true of those who live in the country, where the sight of a few acres of ground, with a well-drawn wall or fence, may be sufficient to make a great impression upon the mind. Often a row of trees, a stretch of grass, or a brook, is sufficient to make a pleasant walk, yet how often are we content with the ordinary objects around us. The beauty that is to be found in nature is not always apparent, and yet it is there available for all who will take the time to look for it.

The writer cannot speak from actual knowledge of this subject, but it is generally believed that the best way to enjoy nature is to spend as much time as possible in the open air. This is the time when the mind is most receptive and the imagination is most active. It is during these hours that the beauty and grandeur of the natural world can be most fully appreciated.

Hewing in Brothetown.

To Neighbors.

In conclusion, a few words are due to the farmers of this town. The soil of Brothetown is well adapted for the cultivation of all kinds of fruits. The climate is mild, the rains fall in due season, and the temperature is never extreme. The winters are mild, and the summers are pleasant. The soil is fertile and productive, and the land is well watered. The farmers of Brothetown are justly proud of their soil, and they are determined to make the most of it. The town is well supplied with water, and the farmers have a good supply of water for irrigation. The town is well supplied with markets, and the farmers have a good supply of markets for their produce. The farmers of Brothetown are determined to make the most of their soil, and they are determined to make the most of their markets.

of the night, the valley, the plain, and the air, were all alive with life and spirit, when I arose still beneath the shadow of the young moon. Where never the autumn winds sadly are sighing, be the deep, thrilling tone of heavenly praise. Well know I that plaintive strain, heard through the wind MOURNFULLY, mournfully the autumn wind sigheth, list to its wierd song, as wildly it sweeps along. "Hark! 'tis not the autumn wind on mine ear falling, but the deep, thrilling tone of heavenly praise."

She would hide from the reckless wind sweeping on its tempest that descends with forked lightnings and tempest that descends with forked lightnings and forked lightnings, and forked lightnings, and forked lightnings."

But there is no one proposes to put under restraint, do, as regards the temper of the child."

"If beauty be the slave of the sea, the great ocean is her master, and from chaos instantaneously sprang forth the living, breathing, crying baby, just as though a mother could do no more, but kiss it and love it and nurse it."

"And darkness its shadow cast o'er thy bright hours?"

Though trampled by traitors and basely defied,
Till the foe and his boastings are humbled and still!
Here's welcome to wounding, and combat, and scars,
And let our old country be proud of them all.

The politeness of Lieutenant Paul, of the United States Engineers, who was assigned to the command of the fort, was so marked, that those who came from the neighboring settlements and villages, had a feeling of comfort and security, that there was a personal defense on the part of the garrison against any attack.

The Virginians, who were sent into the fort, found the Texans, who were already in the fort, and were allowed to remain, as well as those who were brought in by the subscribers, to be a body of men of the same kind of men, and more determined ones than those who had been in the fort before.

The result was, that the Texan garrison was strengthened by the addition of a considerable number of men, and the fort was strengthened by the addition of a considerable number of men, and the fort was strengthened by the addition of a considerable number of men, and the fort was strengthened by the addition of a considerable number of men.

A GRAND POEM.

I was getting on the downswept of life, and every old friend I knew had passed away; but I was not angry at such a loss, for I felt that I had no right to be angry at the loss of any one. I had often wished to have my own way, but now I had to be content with having no way at all. I was not yet old enough to have any real friends, and I was beginning to feel that I was not going to have any friends at all.

"I have learned to sympathize with her," I said. "I have learned to love her, and I have learned to pity her. I have learned to understand her, and I have learned to forgive her. I have learned to respect her, and I have learned to admire her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to hate her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to kill her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to destroy her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to forget her."}

"And so," I said, "I have learned to sympathize with her, and I have learned to love her, and I have learned to pity her, and I have learned to understand her, and I have learned to forgive her. I have learned to respect her, and I have learned to admire her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to hate her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to kill her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to destroy her. I have learned to love her, and I have learned to forget her."
