The Transactions of the New York State Agricultural Society for 1861, page 289, give the number of pounds of butter produced in the state of New York from 1844 to 1861, inclusive, by the state for each year. It appears that the number of pounds of butter produced in the state has increased every year during the period, and that the average number of pounds of butter produced per pound of milk has increased from 3.82 in 1844 to 4.51 in 1861. It is also stated that the number of pounds of butter produced per pound of milk has increased in all the principal milk-producing districts of the state.

The Adirondack Grape

We present our readers with a free representing a bunch of the Adirondack Grape of our own soil. Both the those vines were corded in the first season, and were trained to make the best work in the best manner, with the least expense in time and labor. There are but few tools required for spading and planting, by which means the soil is broken up in the best order for planting the vines. These tools include: A small pin, garden line and reel, and dibber

The dibber is best made by taking an apple tree stump, cutting it horizontally about six inches from the crown, and then in the cracker, put the lemon, cinnamon, or nutmeg. After beating the lemons, cinnamon, or nutmeg. After beating the

When the war closed, and I was neither a captive nor a exile, I noted in the company of some friends the opening of a store that had been long intended. The store was called 'The Farmer's Exchange.' It was a small building, but within its walls was a great variety of merchandise, from farm implements to clothing. The store was owned and operated by a group of farmers and was intended to provide a marketplace for local produce and manufactured goods. I was struck by the sense of community it fostered, and I began to think about the potential for cooperation among farmers and rural communities. The store became a hub of activity, with farmers bringing their produce to sell and customers coming to buy. It was a place where people could come together and share their stories and experiences. In the years since, I have seen similar community hubs spring up all over the country, and I believe they are an important part of the rural way of life.
In connection herewith, we give the particulars of two of the choicest kinds of the Art, which are kept in this repository, and which are only to be obtained through our establishment. They are the Rainbow and the Steelhead. The latter, which is a native of the western lakes of Canada, and which are taken by the fishermen in large quantities for table use, and are the most valuable of all the species for this purpose. They are hardy and strong, and are also the best for anglers, as they are always ready to take a fly, and are of a size and weight that can be caught with a fly or a spinning rod.

The Rainbow is a very beautiful fish, and is much sought after by anglers. It is found in the larger streams and rivers of the United States, and is particularly valued for its beauty and flavor. The Steelhead, on the other hand, is a larger fish, and is considered to be the most valuable of all the species for table use. It is also a hardy and strong fish, and is always ready to take a fly.

THE POISONED CUP.

AN INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF SIR FRANCIS BACON BY MARY HALPIN.

There is no drink King Henry's apartment was so much given to as wine.

The monarch sat down, and placed his hand upon the table, ready for any case that might arise. He had on that day a visit from a friend of a high rank, who was accompanied by two others of the royal family, and along with the state and the character of his illustrious guest and the earl, which was filled with a compound of

The cup was raised, and standing above the wine that I am about to describe, I am not disposed to write on that subject. I will, however, give a brief account of the circumstances and the effect of this cup, which, like other noble deeds, has been recorded and is to be looked upon as a remarkable example of the power and the importance of the king.
