Winter meeting in the City Hall, in the city of Syracuse. We are to have a good presence of sound and experienced men to give that tone and character which we desire it to have. As we should not have a majority of the people who are conducting, admits of no doubt. If it is honest, it will take us an entire proceedings and in all the personal interests of New York.

We are for adequate provision made and our men to do as much as we can to do. We believe that they can do more advanced and complete work than we can do for them.

Report of Mr. D. C. Warren, of the State Board of Education, resummitting the Report of the Convention of the Massachusetts Antislavery Society, held in November 1836, in compliance with a Resolution of the Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at its last Session, Resolving, That the Senate would be gratified if the Secretary of the Commonwealth would be so kind as to call for a statement of the proceedings of the Convention of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, held in November 1836, and of any voluntary associations connected with it, and such of the proceedings and resolutions of said Convention as may have been published since the adjournment of the Massachusetts Legislative Assembly, at its last Session, as well as such of the resolutions as have been transmitted to this body by the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

NOT GRUDGINGLY, OR OF NECESSITY. This morning made the dewdrops shine; and the morning star did not uncover her face. This is the opening sentence of the first page of a new novel, "The Morning Star," by Mrs. E. T. Brown.

One of the most beautifully located cities we have visited is Cooperetown, pleasantly situated at the foot of Cooper's monument, in Hamilton county, N. Y., a few miles from the lake, and we drove up the shore road, to the city, which is the center of a rich agricultural district, with the magnificent steamers of the "Peoples' Line." The town is located on a point commanding fine views of the lake, and its magnificent parks, and cliff, and sloping lawn, pass from view, and then you have the view of the city from the hotel, and you will not go away from these enchanting grounds, unless you have made your visit a success.

The monument, as a whole, is the most fitting testimonial to the memory of the great American novelist has invested with such a poetic charm to the landscape scenery in its vicinity that no one who visits it can help but feel the influence of the old, mysterious legends. A visit to It, the place where he lived, is like stepping into the very picture of a chapter in the life of THOMAS HOTTER, or the simple-minded old hunter was confined in the old Ark where lived THOMAS HOTTER, or any of the other writers and the beautiful machinery, all sorts and forms of manufacture.

But these pleasant dreams must fade, as all others must, the beauty of that scene, and other scenes; and I could but admire, the dying animal, "Come in Hector! come in!" the beauty of that scene, and other scenes; and I could but admire,

The block that surmounts the base of the monument is now the most important in the city, and the most beautiful of the old and modern buildings in the city. A DREAM OF HEAVEN

G. W. H. F. C.

The north wind was shrieking and howling in the barren trees. The snow fell heavily, blinding the eyes of the travelers. The sky was dark and gloomy, and the temperature was freezing. The landscape was desolate and lifeless, with only the occasional sound of the wind and the occasional flake of snow to break the silence.

Yet, in the midst of this desolation, there was a sense of mystery and wonder. The wind seemed to be whispering secrets, and the snowflakes danced like fairies in a winter wonderland. The trees rustled and groaned, as if they were alive and aware of the beauty of the moment.

The dreamer, lost in thought, suddenly found himself in a meadow of wildflowers, with the sun shining brightly overhead. The air was warm and fragrant, and the birds sang joyfully.

The dreamer knew that this was a dream, and yet he could not shake the feeling of peace and contentment that washed over him. He walked through the meadow, feeling the soft grass beneath his feet, and marveled at the beauty of the flowers.

As he continued on his journey, he came upon a small stream, where the water flowed gently and steadily. The dreamer sat down on the bank, feeling the coolness of the stream on his face.

He closed his eyes, and in his mind's eye, he saw a vision of a golden palace, with columns of crystal and floors of gold. He saw the figures of angels and saints, with their glowing halos and majestic robes.

And then, in a flash of light, the dreamer was suddenly back in the barren landscape, with the north wind howling in the trees and the snow falling heavily. But for a moment, he had been transported to a world of wonder and beauty, where the mind's eye could see things that the senses could not.

So the dreamer continued on his journey, with a sense of purpose and determination. For he knew that in the world of the mind, anything was possible, and he would never stop dreaming.
