THOMAS SMITH.

Ireland, Dec. 22, 1833. He was a descendant of famous old house of York, England, his mother being, prior to her marriage Lady Elizabeth York. His father was a captain in the English army. In 1848 the family came to America, moving subsequently to Rochester when this city was little more than a village. Mr. Smith received his education in the public schools of Rochester and at the old Eastman business college, and learned the black-

At the outbreak of the Civil War,
Mr. Smith volunteered in the old Union Grays, but he soon left this organization, enlisting in the navy where he hoped to see more action.
He took part in many of the naval

Death Claims Veteran Vaudeville Star and Member of Famous Marco Team, Who Learned Stage Art Here

Herald Jan. 15, 1925

Almost unnoticed, James McLaughlin died Sunday in St. Mary's Hospital. Had the name of James Marco of the Marco Twins, long famous in vaudeville, been used, wires to all parts of the country would have been burning with the news of his death. Yet, James McLaughlin and James Marco were one and the same person.

James McLaughlin was born in this city and received his early knowledge of acrobatics in the old sawdust pile under the Smith Street bridge. Cass Stahley, another Rochester boy of the well known team of Hall and Stahley, who entertained as the "Twentieth Century Burglars," and the "Musical Blacksmiths" over the Keith loop, recalled the days of the old sawdust pile which was to give to vaudeville such entertainers as McLaughlin, Jack Ashby and Dick Kelly.

As sure as daylight every morning, this group of young men visited the spot, where hidden from view they were able to practice their stunts and attain perfection which later was to entertain audiences throughout this country and in Europe.

Engaged for New York.
While in Europe, McLaughlin was engaged by Oscar Hammerstein to appear in his theater in New York City. McLaughlin and his partner recrossed the Atlantic, but just before they were to make their debut, McLaughlin and his partner had an argument with Hammerstein and the latter refused to let them open there. Every evening through the period of their concert, McLaughlin and his partner recrossed the Atlantic entrance but were refused admittance to the theater. The team carried the case into court and recovered the salaries for the whole term of the contract without having given a single performance. To win the suit, it was necessary for McLaughlin to appear at the door of the theater every night, makeup in hand, ready to go on if the door were opened to them.

McLaughlin was instrumental in getting Edward Fay into Rochester. He met Mr. Fay in Providence and told him of the opportunity here. Mr. Fay accompanied McLaughlin here and the result was the opening of Fay's Theater.

In his theatrical life, McLaughlin cultivated a warm friendship with Alexander Pantages, well known vaudeville producer in the west and annually toured his theaters.

When the news of McLaughlin's illness reached the National Vaudeville Artists in New York City, they immediately wired Harry Mitchell, manager of Keith Temple Theater here, to see that McLaughlin was not neglected.

The funeral will take place tomorrow morning from St. Patrick's Cathedral. Manager Mitchell has been asked to represent the vaudeville artists at the services.

The hearers, all boyhood friends of the dead man, will be Richard Stahley, Thomas Capithorn, Frank Spiegel, John Wals, Frank Meyer and Cass Stahley.

He was a member of the Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus; Rochester Lodge of Elks; the Rochester Athletic Club and the Flower City Sportsmen's Club.

On Feb. 4, of last year Dr. O'Connell was invited to serve as the judge on Irish setters at the Westminster Dog Show at the Madison Square Gardens in New York city.

About three years ago Dr. O'Connell took up trap shooting and became so expert in a short time that last June he won the state handicap shoot of the New York State Trap Shooting Association. Always among the leaders in the weekly shoots of the Rochester clubs he was high gun at the New Year's day meet of his club at the Scottsville road traps, finishing with a score of 45 out of 50. He also occupied a high position among the trap shots of the state. Funeral arrangements have not yet been announced.

4. GEORGE MEADE, FORMER STATE SENATOR, DIES

Succumbs Suddenly to Heart Disease after Evening Spent at Club.

D. & C.
RANKED HIGH IN BAR

Jan. 17, 1920
As Deputy Attorney General

Four Terms He Appeared in Important Cases.

George L. Meade, former state senator, four times a deputy attorney general of New York state and well known in political and legal circles of the city, died yesterday at his home, No. 200 Birr street. The day before he had attended to his work as a member of the law firm of Webster, Meade & Straus. In the evening he visited with friends at the Rochester Club. Heart disease ended his career at 6 o'clock yesterday morning.

Mr. Meade handled many important cases for the state during his tenures of office under Attorney-Generals Woodbury, Lewis, Newton and Sherman. He represented the state in trials of cases before the Court of Claims and his record was such that, after the last election, he was again tendered a deputyship. He declined because of the demands made upon him by his private practice.

In Assembly Two Years.

Born at Clyde on April 25, 1869, the son of Emily Millius and Montgomery W. Meade, he was graduated from the Clyde High School and then from Lebanon College at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1892. In December, 1894, he married Adelaide J. Ostrander, of this city.

He went to New York and began the study of law with the then well known firm of Briggs, Beckley & Bissell. He was admitted to the bar in 1895. In 1903 he became a member of the firm with which he was connected at the time of his death.

He always was an active political figure. He served as supervisor of the Sixth ward from 1903 to 1905. From 1906 to 1908 he represented the Third district in the Assembly and was elected to the Senate from the Forty-sixth district in 1909, serving two terms. In the Senate he was chairman of the joint legislative commission which investigated the direct primary law throughout the United States and he was largely responsible for the enactment of the legislation by which the former State Industrial School was converted into the present Edgerton Park.

On April 22, 1915, he entered upon his first terms as deputy attorney-general in the Court of Claims, an office in which he won distinction. Former State Senator George R. Argetsinger, who was in Albany when Mr. Meade was there, said yesterday:

"I knew him to be an honest, hard-working and competent fellow and I am shocked to hear of his death. I have considered him, as have many others, one of the best deputy attorney generals who ever held the office. He was especially efficient in the Court of Claims and his work was such that there was no question at any time but that he could return to the office if he would."

Long in Politics

"I can scarcely comprehend it," James L. Hotchkiss, Republican county leader, declared when informed of Mr. Meade's death last night. "He was a great friend of mine and I am deeply shocked. He was always a capable, intelligent and active man in office and his death is a great loss. This fall I had asked him if he did not want to be reappointed to the Court of Claims work, but he had decided not to, he said, because of his private practice."

Although Mr. Meade was not in Albany when Postmaster John B. Mullan was there, the two men had always been good friends and Mr. Mullan was affected by the feeling of sadness that Mr. Meade's sudden death caused to all who knew him.

"His passing," Mr. Mullan said, "is a distinct loss to the community. He was a man of genial and pleasant personality and he was a faithful and capable public official when called upon to serve. His loss will be felt deeply."

Appeared in Imported Cases.

When he was deputy attorney general, Mr. Meade, among other noteworthy cases, represented the state in the famous Rockaway Pacific Corporation case, involving $1,000,000. In this case he was opposed by Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes. The case was settled during the war when the state ceded to the Federal government land which was desired by the government for defense purposes.

He also represented the state in the claim of the West Shore Railroad Company for $320,000 as a result of damages to structures of the railroad over the Montezuma marsh by construction of the Barge canal.

Mr. Meade was a member of the Rochester Bar Association, the New York State Bar Association, the Rochester Club, Yonondu Lodge, F. and A. M., Central Lodge of Odd Fellows, and of the First Methodist Church.

Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters, Mrs. Paul Titus and Miss Dorothy Meade; a son, Gordon Meade, and a grandchild, all of this city, and three brothers, James H., William and Millius, all of Clyde.

GOVERNOR AND CAPITAL MOURN MEADE'S DEATH

D. & C. Jan. 17
Tributes Come from Smith,

Lowman and Others Who Worked with Him.

LEGAL ABILITY PRAISED

High Ideals as Legislator and Deputy Attorney General Cited.

Albany, Jan. 11.—(Special Dispatch to the Democrat and Chronicle)—Both Governor Alfred E. Smith and Lieutenant-Governor Seymour Lowman expressed deep regret here to-night upon learning of the death of former State Senator George L. Meade, of Rochester.

"The news of the passing of Senator Meade comes to me with a great deal of regret," said Governor Smith. "I served with him in the Assembly and recognized in him an able, careful and conscientious representative. He was a man possessed of many worthy attributes."

Proved Able Attorney.

Lieutenant-Governor Lowman, who was a member of the Assembly when Senator Meade was in the upper house, said:

"The ability of Senator Meade, manifested in both the Senate and Assembly, was demonstrated again when he became a deputy attorney general. In this latter capacity he had much to do with the adjustment of claims growing out of the construction of the Barge canal. He proved himself as able an attorney as he had been a legislator. I am grieved indeed to learn that he has passed away."

Alexander MacDonald, state conservation commissioner, who was a member of the Assembly when Mr. Meade was a senator, said:

"Few men were better qualified as legislator than Senator Meade. I know and respected his ability and admired him greatly as a man of sterling qualities."

Fred M. Hammond, clerk of the Assembly, served in the lower branch of the legislature with Mr. Meade. Mr. Hammond said:

Drafted Important Laws.

"The passing of Senator Meade has removed a man after whose example future legislators may well pattern. Thorough, untiring and clear-sighted, he introduced legislation which in his time and since have been wide-sweeping in their scope. It was he, who jointly with Assemblyman Jesse W. Phillips, introduced the well known Meade-Phillips direct primary measure. I am sorry indeed that he has passed away. I know him well and held him high as man and lawmaker."

Supreme Court Justice Ellis J. Staley, of Albany, who was an assemblyman with Senator Meade, paid this tribute:

"Senator Meade was a serious-minded man who ever maintained a serious conception of his duty as a legislator and an earnest desire to perform that duty. As a member of the Judiciary Committee he was actuated by a high sense of the importance of his position. He stood out as a man who performed his legislative tasks from the standpoint of principle rather than from that of expediency. I learn with sincere regret that he passed away."

Bore High Ideals.

Walter Moses, of Livingston county, assistant clerk of the Assembly, said:

"I remember him as a man with marked attributes and an unswerving ideal as regards his legislative duties. He was able and high-minded, tactful and gifted and a warm admirer and friend of United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, who resides in my home county."

Former Senator Charles Walton praised Senator Meade for his legal attainments and legislative career. Senator Walton said that he knew him best as a deputy attorney general, a post in which he demonstrated his wide knowledge of the law.

D. & C. George L. Meade. Jan. 13-1920

The career of former Senator George L. Meade, whose sudden death has come with a shock to his many friends in Rochester and elsewhere, was typical of the careers that lie open before Americans of ability and spirit. He determined at the outset of his legal career to take an interest in public affairs and his service as supervisor from the Sixth ward began almost coincidentally with his practice at the bar. But it was apparent from the first, and it became more apparent as his career developed, that his political interests did not submerge his interest in his profession. He rose steadily in politics, but he also extended his legal knowledge and practice, so that when opportunity came to win a desirable post in the public service he had the knowledge and ability to fill it with distinction and with advantage to the public.

It is the usual thing for young attorneys to be interested in public affairs and it is quite the usual thing for political leaders to be attracted to them and to make their rise easy and pleasant. It is not unusual, however, for young lawyers who are given political opportunities to become so dazed by the limelight of public favor as to forget proper attention to the study of their exacting profession and so to lack the ability to fill higher political posts acceptably.

Here was a man of the right type; one who was interested in public affairs and willing to serve the public. The limelight did not daze him; he went steadily forward in the study and practice of the law. When he was appointed deputy attorney-general he served with such ability and effect that it could be said that the state was as fortunate to be able to command his services as he was to win the appointment.

Such careers as Senator Meade's should have the direct effect of encouraging more of our young lawyers to take a serious interest in public affairs. They also should inspire them, in the pursuit of such interest and in the enjoyment of any public preferment they may attain, to continue their steady devotion to the study of their profession.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR MRS. HORACE C. BREWSTER

A service in memory of the late Mrs. Horace C. Brewster will be held at First Unitarian Church tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Mrs. William C. Gannett will speak of the life and spirit of Mrs. Brewster. A prayer service will be conducted by Dr. Doan, minister of the church.

George L. Meade. Jan. 13-1920

Removal from this life of George L. Meade, former State Senator and later Deputy Attorney General, draws attention to the conscientious service he gave his state and city in the years of his public career. His part in the removal of the old Western House of Refuge and the founding of the State Industrial and Agricultural School at Industry will stand for all time as his greatest contribution to the welfare of Rochester and of the boys and girls formerly confined in the gray old prison that has since become Edgerton Park. As a Supervisor also, he was active in promoting the best interests of his ward and city.

Faithful public service is too often passed over and forgotten in the stress of conflicting interests and movements. The reward of official service is not seldom unmerited censure from an unreflective and impulsive citizenry. The services of such a man as George L. Meade on behalf of his city and state, therefore, deserve the grateful remembrance of his fellow citizens.

Miss Amelia L. Leahy, twenty years ago a widely known teacher in the Rochester school system, died suddenly Friday morning at her home, No. 32 Chardon street. The funeral will be conducted tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock from the home and at 10 o'clock from Immaculate Conception Church. Burial will be made in Holy Sepulchre cemetery.

In her twenty-five years at No. 4 School, now Genesee School, Jefferson avenue and Penn streets, Miss Leahy so endeared herself to her pupils that hundreds of them have kept in close touch with her since leaving school. Colonel Samuel C. Pierce, G. A. R. veteran, was principal of No. 24 School during Miss Leahy's service there.

She retired from teaching twenty years ago to devote herself to a sick mother and an invalid sister, who have since died. One brother, William M. Leahy, survives her.

Miss Leahy was graduated from Brockport Normal School and took up her duties at No. 4 School not long after. Of her service there Colonel Pierce said yesterday:

"She won for herself a reputation as one of the best teachers in Rochester because of her ability to handle all kinds of work. She taught every grade during her quarter century at No. 4 School, and her personality was such that hosts of her former pupils visited her at her home years afterward."

WM. J. BUSBY, 91, WAS DEAN OF PRINTERS

J. U. Jan. 19
Served 67 Years in Composing Room of Union and Advertiser, Retiring in 1918 When Newspapers Were Merged.

1920
William J. Busby is dead.

The dean of Rochester newspaper compositors and one of the oldest printers in the United States has "passed on" to his reward. His legion of friends in the newspaper fraternity never knew his age, but, tracing his long service and checking his conversation pertaining to events of "the old days," it is figured that he was 91 years of age.

"Bill" Busby began his apprenticeship in the days before present-day printers were born. He was doing his best work when the older of the present-day printers were learning the case.

In the early '50's "Bill" Busby was a compositor, and later foreman of the composing room, on the Rochester American, one of the newspapers absorbed by the Democrat and Chronicle. In 1857 he was given employment by the Union and Advertiser and remained continuously with that newspaper until its merger with the Evening Times in 1918. He then retired.

Many events of national and international importance "broke" while "Bill" Busby was working at his case. He was associated with many men who gained prominence in the newspaper world, including William Purcell, Isaac Butts and Anton Stager.

Maintaining a characteristic of the old school of printers, Mr. Busby bore the earmarks of the well-dressed, cultured individual. All his life he wore custom-made boots and plain white laundered shirts of the type associated with the Prince Albert coat. In late years he visited a downtown barber shop twice each week at the same hours and days each week.

Of a kindly disposition, Mr. Busby made a host of friends and was especially popular with the youngsters in the printing profession. Modest and retiring, he seldom discussed the personal affairs of his life.

Several weeks ago he suffered a general breakdown incident to old age and was taken to the Homeopathic Hospital, where he gradually weakened until the end came yesterday. For years preceding his death he made his home at 47 Delavan street. The body was removed to 137 Chestnut street pending funeral arrangements.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION

On the Death of Benjamin D. Haight, Adopted by the Clearing House.

At a meeting of the Rochester Clearing House Association, the following resolution on the death of Benjamin David Haight was adopted and upon a rising vote, was unanimously adopted and ordered to be read on the minutes of the association, and that a copy of the resolution be sent to Mrs. Haight:

The Rochester Clearing House Association, representing the banking institutions of Rochester, expresses its profound sorrow at the death of Benjamin David Haight, president of the National Bank of Rochester, which occurred January 17, 1924, at Rochester, New York. Benjamin David Haight was born May 5, 1875, at New Berlin, Monroe County, New York. He was educated at the high school of his village and in the year 1900 graduated from the Albany Law School with a degree of LL.B. After completing his schooling he was admitted to the Bar and upon the practice of his profession at New Berlin, which he followed for a period of four years. During this time he acted as village attorney and was prominent in all civic affairs in that community.

In 1907 he entered the New York State Banking Department as bank examiner. He subsequently became Deputy Superintendent of Banks, holding that position until 1913, with headquarters in New York City. For two years he was the chief examiner of the State Banking Department in charge of the Rochester district. He was promoted to that position, when in 1914 he was tendered and accepted the presidency of the National Bank of Rochester to which duties he has since devoted his exclusive and attention as executive of the institution.

From has a man in so short a period of time, as an executive officer of a bank, won such universal respect and approval. Familiar with banking law and banking practice, thoroughly imbued with the knowledge of what constitutes sound and sound banking, he brought to the National Bank of Rochester a commanding leadership. Imbued with the ideal that the mission of a bank is one of service to the community, he was instrumental in developing a policy of helpfulness and service which became the slogan of himself and his associates. With an unflinching courtesy, an outstanding integrity and an integrity never questioned, he set about his work under new circumstances in a manner that inspired and won general confidence. Careful, patient, tireless, he gave himself unsparingly to the welfare and development of the new institution. Its success reflects his capacity as a leader and a banker.

The bankers of Rochester have lost a valued and outstanding member of their profession, his associates have lost an unassuming, modest and lovable friend, and the city of Rochester has lost a citizen of an exceptionally high type.

LAST TRIBUTE TO B. D. HAIGHT, BANKER, TO-DAY

To Have Brief Rites at Home for National Bank Head, Stricken at Dance.

ASSOCIATES BEARERS

Funeral Will Be at Boyhood Home; Mourned in Banking Circles of State.

Brief prayer services for Benjamin David Haight, 49 years old, president of the National Bank of Rochester and widely known throughout state banking circles, who died suddenly at 12:15 yesterday morning, will take place at 9:30 o'clock this morning from the home, No. 32 Windemere road. Funeral services and burial will take place at New Berlin, where Mr. Haight was born. Members of the Board of Directors of the National Bank of Rochester will act as bearers.

Stricken with a heart attack at a dinner and dance given by the directors of the bank to employees at the Rochester Club, Mr. Haight died as he sat talking with his wife. He appeared in excellent health, had presided at the dinner and had spoken briefly on the progress of the bank and the spirit of co-operation. Mr. Haight introduced several of the speakers and seemed to enjoy the evening, eating heartily and dancing several dances. Shortly before midnight, he sat down beside his wife. He talked with her for several minutes. At 12:05 o'clock he was seen to slump down in his chair. Dr. William Perrin, who was in the club, was called, but Mr. Haight had expired.

Held State Bank Post

Born in New Berlin, N. Y., July 5, 1875, son of the late Henry L. Haight, founder and machinist. Mr. Haight received his early education in the New Berlin High School. He received the degree of L. L. B. from Albany Law School, being graduated in 1902. After his graduation he returned to New Berlin where he entered law in which he was successfully engaged for four years.

In 1907 Mr. Haight entered the New York State Banking Department as a bank examiner. Later he became deputy superintendent of banks, a position which he held until 1918, with headquarters in New York City. In 1912 he became examiner of the State Banking Department in charge of the Rochester district, and on May 17, 1924 he was elected president of the National Bank of Rochester.

For nearly seven years Mr. Haight had made his home at No. 32 Windemere road. Since his election as president of the National Bank of Rochester, Mr. Haight had demonstrated to Rochester bankers a thorough knowledge of the fundamental principles of constructive banking and his wide range of knowledge on financial subjects, combined with a pleasing personality, made him an ideal executive.

Directors Voice Grief.
Directors of the National Bank of Rochester voiced their grief at the death of Mr. Haight in the following resolution adopted at a meeting of the board yesterday:

"Our beloved president and friend, Benjamin D. Haight, is gone. But yesterday, in the fullness of his vigor, he was directing the business of the bank. Last evening he was happy among his friends and associates, radiating a spirit of friendliness and goodwill. To-day he has passed beyond the scene of our labors.

"On May 19, 1924, when the National Bank of Rochester came into existence, he became its first president. In this early days, with calm courteous confidence, he stood as a rock in the face of trial. His wise judgment has helped to carry us on along the road of prosperity and progress.

"We grieve at our great loss, but we have as a monument to his memory this bank, which was built by his courage, his wisdom, his industry, his unflinching fidelity. We have also the memory of a friend, kind and generous.

"We extend to Mrs. Haight our sincerest sympathy in her bereavement.

"We direct that this memorial be spread upon the minutes of the Board of Directors."

Mr. Haight was a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and a member of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Mary Matteson Haight and a sister, Mr. Fred M. Brooks, of New Berlin.

H. Benjamin David Haight

Death laid a heavy hand on the financial community of this city when it terminated with tragic suddenness the career of Benjamin David Haight, president of the National Bank of Rochester. Although he had been at the head of the State Street Institution only since last May, Mr. Haight had long been known to the business world of Rochester and Western New York by reason of his faithful and efficient service as a member of the State Banking Department.

When Mr. Haight was installed as president of the National Bank of Rochester, he faced a difficult situation, requiring a high type of executive ability. The results he attained would seem to have demonstrated his fitness for the responsibilities of his office. Few men could have done as well; possibly none better.

In the suddenness of his taking off is a sharp reminder of the penalty that Nature exacts from the modern business world, which demands the utmost of strength and endurance from its leaders and its workers, as it does of its machines, ignoring the fact that flesh and blood are not iron and steel.

Although the world has long since learned that no loss is irreparable, it is no exaggeration to say that the death of President Haight will be keenly in banking circles of Rochester. Yet there is reassurance in the fact that in his brief office, he laid a broad foundation on which others may build an enduring structure.

Professor W. C. Morey, Long At University Of Rochester, Passes Away

Times Union
Civil War Veteran, Authority on International Law and Professor Emeritus of History at University Rochester, Dies in His 82nd Year at His Home in Oxford Street, 1920

William Carey Morey, A. B., M. A., Ph.D., D. C. L., Civil War Veteran, writer of works on historical subjects and international law, and Watson Professor of History and Political Science at the University of Rochester from 1883 to 1920, died this morning at his home at 24 Oxford street, aged 82 years. He is survived by his wife, Margaret Parkhurst Morey. The funeral will take place Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the home. Burial will be made in Coldwater, Mich.

Professor Morey was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The Rev. George E. Norton, rector, will officiate at the services at the home.

Professor Morey was for many years regarded as America's foremost authority on Roman law and was widely known for his textbooks on history and articles on political science and international law. At the time of his death he was a member of the American Society of International Law, the American Historical Society, the American Political and Social Science Association and the National Geographic Society. At other times he had been a member in the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the American Social Science Association and the American Institute of Civics. He was always active in the civic and intellectual life of Rochester and was one of the organizers of the Reynolds Library, serving as a director and as one of its trustees. He belonged to Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, the Genesee Valley Club and the Rochester Chess Club.

Professor Morey was born in North Attleboro, Mass., May 23, 1838. He was the son of Reuben Morey and Abby C. Bogman, and a direct descendant of Roger Morey who came from England to America with Roger Williams. In his early youth he moved to Wyoming, N. Y., with his parents and in Middlebury Academy in that town he prepared for college. In 1861 he entered the University of Rochester, which at that time had just completed the first of its present buildings, Anderson Hall. Before the end of his freshman year the Civil War broke out and in September, 1862, he enlisted in the 130th New York Volunteers, an organization raised in Wyoming, Livingston and Allegany counties and mobilized at Portage.

Won His Promotion.

During the winter 1862-1863 his regiment was stationed at Suffolk, Va., and during the following July served under General Keyes in the peninsula campaign after which it became a unit of the mounted service, absorbing the First New York Dragoons and being known on the roster as the Nineteenth New York Cavalry. Morey was a second Lieutenant in this organization. He was later promoted to first lieutenant and then to a captaincy, for distinguished service.

Subsequently William Morey served under General Phil Sheridan in the wilderness campaign, the Trevilian raid, the Shenandoah valley campaign, the James river raid, and the last Petersburg campaign. Mr. Morey was present at Lee's surrender and at the end of the war he received brevet commissions as major and lieutenant-colonel.

In 1865 Mr. Morey returned to the University of Rochester, where he won the Davis senior oration prize and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He graduated in 1867 with the highest standing credited to a student of the university up to that time. Later, while professor of English literature in Kalamazoo College his alma mater gave him the degree of M. A. In 1881 Franklin College awarded him his Ph. D.; in 1903 Denison University gave him the degree of doctor of civil law and he was similarly honored by the University of Rochester in 1908.

Wrote Many Books.

In the year of his graduation he was appointed professor of Latin in the University of Rochester and the following year he was called to Kalamazoo College as professor of history. In 1872 he was recalled to the U. of R. where he was made professor of Latin and history. In 1883 he became professor of history and political science. His first book, "Outlines of Roman Law," appeared in 1884 and was the first authoritative American textbook on the subject. In 1890 his "Outlines of Roman History" was published. This was followed in 1902 by "The Government of New York," in 1903 by "Outlines of Greek History," and in 1906 by "Outlines of Ancient History." His last book, "Ancient Peoples," appeared in 1915. He also wrote many pamphlets and frequent articles for journals of history and political science.

During the munitions controversy between the German and Austrian governments and the United States in 1916, he contributed an article on "The Sale of Munitions of War" to the American Journal of International Law. This article was regarded as one of the most able expositions of the American viewpoint in that controversy.

Professor Morey married Margaret P. Parkhurst, daughter of General John G. Packhurst of Coldwater, Mich., on Aug. 4, 1896.

Tribute from Pres. Rhees.

Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the University, this morning paid the following tribute to Prof. Morey:

"The death of Professor Morey marks the passing of one of our country's greatest teachers. After graduating from the University of Rochester in 1868 he spent one year as a student in the Rochester Theological Seminary, and from 1869 to the time of his retirement from active service in 1920 he was continuously engaged in college teaching, for two years at Kalamazoo College and since 1872 in the University of Rochester.

"Beginning his service in Rochester as Professor of Latin to which subject in 1877 he added History, he was made professor of history and political science in 1883 and continued that work for 37 years.

He was pre-eminently a teacher of political science, using the study of history as a means of philosophic consideration of the causes which had operated in the development of the modern state. This philosophical emphasis was manifested further in his introduction into his program of instruction courses of study in the Roman Law, Constitutional Law and in the National Law. He was profoundly interested in and devoted to the Constitution of the United States, and his teaching was directed to the development of an intelligent understanding of that fundamental law and its significance for the political life of our country, having spent three years in military service in the war for the Union from which he was discharged with the brevet rank of Lieut.-Colonel in 1865. He manifested throughout his life a profound interest in all the issues of that struggle, and also in the military strategies which were revealed in the various stages of the war.

Was Keen Analyst.

"As a teacher he was characterized by the use of a kindly analytical method which exacted of his students close and intelligent thinking and accurate clearness of statement. Always exacting in his intellectual demands upon his students, he so impressed them by his personality and inspired them by his intellectual power that he won from all a degree of admiration and affection rarely equalled in the relation of teacher and students. Hundreds who have sat under his instruction came to look upon him as the most significant influence in the development of their intellectual lives and cherished the memory of the years they sat under his instruction as a priceless treasure among their spiritual and intellectual possessions.

"As an author he published a number of important volumes, two of which were of outstanding significance; first, his Outlines of Roman Law, published in 1884, and his Outlines of Roman History published in 1900. The Outlines of Roman Law made that system of ancient jurisprudence available for students in our colleges and law schools as it had not previously been. His History of Rome was a work of such historic significance that it was not only an important contribution to the literature of school text books for which it was written but became a manual highly appreciated by advanced students of Roman history. All of his books were characterized by the clear analysis and philosophic grasp which marked his teaching.

"The University of Rochester has cherished him as one of the brightest stars in its galaxy of great teachers. His passing emphasizes the loss to Rochester which has come in the death of such teachers and citizens as Martin B. Anderson, A. C. Kendrick, Samuel A. Lattimore, Henry F. Burton and the others who throughout the first half century of the institution's life gave it character and distinction. His colleagues in the faculty of the University have honored and admired him, have rejoiced in the privilege of association with him in the work of the institution, have sympathized with his growing weakness in his latest years, and have joined with his students in rendering to him the tribute of equal admiration and affection. Rarely has any life won so large a measure of recognition and regard."

Tribute by Prof. Packard.

Professor Lawrence B. Packard, who succeeded Professor Morey in the Watson Professorship of History at the time of the latter's retirement, and who oddly enough announced only yesterday afternoon that he has accepted a chair in history at Amherst, expressed deep regret this morning at Professor Morey's passing.

"It would be difficult," he said, "to imagine a deeper impression made by an instructor on the men of his classes than that made by Professor Morey on the men of the University of Rochester during the years of his instruction. He commanded not only the loyalty of his students but their profound respect.

"He was extraordinarily successful as a teacher of logical thinking and developed in the minds of students a knowledge of their own limitations and need for straight thinking. It is characteristic that what is perhaps his most notable contribution as a scholar should be a pioneer work in English, 'Outlines of Human Law,' a subject which gave full scope to his analytical and logical mind.

"It is with a very deep sense of loss and regret that my departure from the University of Rochester occurs at this particular time, for I have felt that I have shared with Professor Morey the confidence and very generous support of the president and trustees during my term of service."

The passing of Dr. Morey, who for more than half a century was the dean of the University's teaching staff, brought to the faculty and affectionate tribute yesterday from Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the University. His teaching, Dr. Rhees said, was a character and distinction to the University during the first half-century of its life.

The death of Professor Morey marks the passing of one of the country's great teachers," the president said.

Pre-eminently a Teacher.

After graduating from the University of Rochester in 1868 Dr. Morey spent one year as a student in the Rochester Theological Seminary, and from 1869 to the time of his retirement from active service in 1920 he was continuously engaged in college teaching; for two years at Kalamazoo College and since 1872 in the University of Rochester.

Beginning his service in Rochester as professor of Latin, to which subject in 1877 he added history, he was made professor of history and political science in 1884 and continued that work for thirty-seven years. He was pre-eminently a teacher of political science, using the study of history as a means of philosophical consideration of the causes which had operated in the development of the modern state. This philosophical emphasis was manifested further in his introduction into his program of instruction of study in the Roman law, constitutional law and international law.

Morey was profoundly interested in the Constitution of the United States, and his teaching was directed to the development of an intelligent understanding of that fundamental law and its significance for the political life of the country. Having spent three years of military service in the Civil war from 1862 to 1865, he was discharged with the bravest of the brave. Throughout his life a profound interest in all the issues of that struggle, and in the military strategies which were developed in the various stages of the war.

Won Admiration of Students.

As a teacher he was characterized by the use of a keenly analytical method which required of his students close and independent thinking and accurate clear statement. Always exacting in intellectual demands upon his students, he so impressed them by his personality and inspired them by his intellectual power that he won from all a deep admiration and affection rarely met in the relation of teacher and student. His students were not under instruction came to look upon him as the most significant influence in the development of their intellectual lives and cherished the memory of the years under his instruction as a priceless treasure among their spiritual and intellectual possessions.

As an author Dr. Morey published a number of important volumes, two of which were of outstanding significance; first, his "Outlines of Roman Law" published in 1884, and his "Outlines of Roman History" published in 1900. The "Outlines of Roman Law" made that system of ancient jurisprudence available for students in our colleges and law schools as it had not previously been. His "Outlines of Roman History" was a work of such historic significance that it was not only an important contribution to the literature of school text books for which it was written but became a manual highly appreciated by advanced students of Roman history. All of his books were characterized by the clear analysis and philosophical grasp which marked his teaching.

Loss to Rochester.

The University of Rochester cherished him as one of the brightest stars in its galaxy of great teachers. His passing emphasizes the loss to Rochester which has come in the death of such teachers as Martin B. Anderson, A. C. Kendrick, Samuel A. Lattimore, Henry F. Burton and others who throughout the first half century of the institution's life gave it character and distinction. His colleagues in the faculty of the University have honored him and admired him, have rejoiced in the privilege of association with him in the work of the institution, have sympathized with his growing weakness in his latest years, and have joined with his students in rendering to him the tribute of equal admiration and affection. Rarely has any life won so large a measure of recognition and regard.

Dr. Lawrence B. Packard, who succeeded Dr. Morey as Watson professor of history when the latter retired from active teaching in 1920, declared that it would be difficult to imagine a deeper impression made by an instructor on the men of his class than that made by Professor Morey of the University of Rochester during the years of his instruction.

Pioneer Work in Law.

"He commanded not only the loyalty of his students but their profound respect," Dr. Packard said. "He was extraordinarily successful as a teacher of logical thinking, and developed in the minds of students a knowledge of their own limitations and need for straight thinking. It is characteristic that what is perhaps his most notable contribution as a scholar should be a pioneer work in English, 'Outlines of Roman Law,' a subject which gave full scope to his analytical and logical mind."

Dr. Morey's teaching during his last few years at the university was confined to courses in Roman law, constitutional and international law. Even in his largest classes he insisted that the student, rather than the professor, should do a major share of the lecturing. He fol-

T. U. A Editorial Jan. 27 A Great Teacher Passes. 1920

The death of Professor William Carey Morey removes from the social and intellectual life of Rochester one of its leading figures and from scholastic circles in the United States an educator of recognized influence and eminence.

Professor Morey had many engaging qualities and many claims for distinction but his place in the life of Rochester and in the intellectual life of the United States rests securely on his ability as a teacher. He was a profound and capable student of history and political science as applied to local, national and international fields, but he had what few students of equal erudition and capacity had, the capacity to convey his knowledge in such simple, human terms as could be understood by an average intelligence. To this quality must be ascribed the remarkable and widespread success of his text-books on Roman law, New York state history, ancient history; and to this quality and to his unerring judgment of human nature must be credited the enormous popularity of his classes, with two generations of students at the University of Rochester. The college yells were given as often in his honor as in honor of any athletic hero or in honor of "Prexy," and always he was referred to by that title of affectionate adulation which all his students knew him—"Uncle Bill."

It was a solemn and saddening coincidence that many that the same issue of the newspaper which chronicled Professor Morey's death should announce the resignation from the faculty of his successor, Professor Packard, who both in capacity as a teacher of similar subjects and in his hold on the student body was coming into his own as Professor Morey's successor. Indeed, it had been a matter for much congratulation to the University and to Dr. Rhees, its president, in the last few years that under Professors Packard and Perkins there had been no letup in the high standards of the department of history and political science that had been raised and maintained for so many years by Professor Morey. Professor Perkins remains, but the absence of his colleague will be keenly felt.

Professor Morey was one of the great figures in the University in what in time may be called the first epoch of its development. It has been said many times, but it cannot be said too often, that the new epoch on which the University is entering in all probability would not have been possible; certainly not justified, if the type of Professor Morey's type had not carried over into the first epoch along on such high standards, and if their standards had not been maintained and developed under such leaders as Dr. Rhees and Professor Morey's successors.

T. U. William Carey Morey Editorial

Respect is due the college instructor who knows his subject and teaches it conscientiously and thoroughly.

If he is in addition an original investigator and scholar, adding to the sum total of human knowledge and presenting his information in a manner that makes it available for others, his contribution is still more enduring.

Professor William Carey Morey was for many years an active member of the faculty of the University of Rochester. It was a dull and careless student who failed to learn something in his classes regarding the subjects which he presented with such clearness, backed by a wealth of knowledge.

Author of a textbook upon Roman law which was widely used in the universities and colleges of the country, as well as of other authoritative textbooks and monographs on international law and political science, Dr. Morey exercised a wide influence upon the teaching of these subjects.

The greatest teacher is he who can not only impart knowledge and skillfully direct study but can also inspire and stimulate his students to think for themselves. That is the highest and most valuable form of intellectual training, since it yields fruit long after the specific knowledge acquired in the classroom has become dim.

This rare ability was possessed by Professor Morey. He urged his students to think, often turning aside from the set routine to present an interesting topic and arouse a stimulating discussion, which he controlled and guided through his wealth of information and capacity for clear and searching analysis. Many of his students have testified to this exceptional quality of Dr. Morey as an instructor.

William Carey Morey always did his full part. He served in the Civil War with conspicuous zeal, attaining the rank of captain and the brevet of lieutenant-colonel in the Union army.

He was an active force in the intellectual life of the city, a citizen of whom Rochester was justly proud and whose loss will be widely felt.

Cutler, Prof. Charles W. Dodge, George Eastman, Dr. Ralph R. Fitch, Prof. George M. Forbes, Prof. Charles Hoening, Maurice H. McMath, Francis B. Mitchell, Dr. Edward W. The active bearers will be Prof. Ryland M. Kendrick, Prof. Henry E. Lawrence, Prof. Laurence B. Packard, Prof. Dexter Perkins, Daniel M. Beach and Howard Converse.

The following minutes have been adopted by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees of the University:

In the death of William Carey Morey, Emeritus Professor of History and Political Science, the University of Rochester has lost one of the teachers who gave great distinction to its service in the cause of education. Having joined our college faculty in 1869 as tutor in Latin, he was called to Kalamazoo College in 1870 as professor of history and English literature. In 1872 he returned to Rochester and continued active service as a member of our faculty until his retirement in 1920—as professor of Latin from 1872 to 1877, as professor of Latin and history from 1877 to 1883, and as professor of history and political science from 1883 until his retirement in 1920. His familiarity with ancient literature and history formed the basis for the distinctive features of his work in political science. It was while he was still professor of Latin that he published his "Outlines of Roman Law," and he was a pioneer in introducing the study of that subject into the curriculum of an American college.

His mind had a markedly legal character. Close analysis and exact statement were chief traits of his teaching and his demand for them from his students constituted one of the most important factors of his excellence as a teacher. Another element in his equipment for his work was his service for three years in the war for the Union, 1862 to 1865, in which he attained the rank of brevet lieutenant-colonel in the cavalry. Throughout his life he retained a keen interest in that critical period of American history, studying particularly the underlying causes and the military strategy which led the war to its final issue. A natural consequence of that experience was a high appreciation of the Constitution of the United States and interest in the development of Constitutional law. His teaching had far more to do with principles and political philosophy than with history as a narrative of events, and this interest led him to study and to teach political science as exhibited in the various forms of the modern state and in the rise and development of international law. He published many books and articles in his chosen field, all revealing the philosophical grasp which characterized his teaching for his students.

But it was the personality revealed by his clear thinking and inspiring teaching which chiefly made him the power he was in all his relations with his students, his associates in the faculty, and his fellow citizens. Quiet, dignified, thoughtful and peculiarly friendly, he bound men to him by ties of equal respect and affection. Few teachers have made themselves so large a part of the lives of hundreds of students as did Professor Morey.

His is one of the great names of the University of Rochester, and of the noble army of American teachers.

Resolutions were adopted by the faculty of the University as follows: Professor William Carey Morey, of the class of 1868, who died January 21, 1924, was the last survivor of that group of eminent teachers who came to the University of Rochester shortly after the Civil War. Himself a soldier and a patriot, he based his philosophy of history and government on broader foundations than did many of his generation. Through the study and teaching of Latin literature he was led into the field of Roman law, in which he became an acknowledged authority. In the endeavor to apply the principles of human justice, between men and between nations, to the development of judicial and legislative codes, it was his task to study the relation of the ideal to the possible. As scholar and as teacher he was judicial, keen, analytical, thorough, exacting in his intellectual standards. Abhorring loose thinking and shallow speaking, he trained his student to admire, if not always to practise, restraint and precision of style.

In the faculty he was, from his appointment in 1872 until his retirement in 1920, a leader. To his younger colleagues he remains a symbol of that solid worth of character and of mind, that open-mindedness tempered by a just conservatism, upon which the honorable history of this college has been built up during half a century.

To his widow the members of the faculty desire to convey their warm sympathy. To the young man of today this life has fitly spoken of that translation of the lessons of war into the fabric of peace and of justice for which he stood in his militant youth and in his deliberate and tolerant age.

The faculty committee was composed of Dr. Rush Rhees, President of the University; Charles Hoening, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Donald B. Gilchrist, Secretary of the Faculty.

Mrs. H. Emily Wells, Artist, Dies,
Long Prominent in Her Field Here
D. & C. Jan. 76-1920

MRS. H. EMILY WELLS

From a photograph taken when she was at the height of her artistic career.

Mrs. H. Emily Wells, for years one of this city's leading artists, died early yesterday morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison A. Baldrige, No. 12 Lamberston park, where she had made her home for some time. She leaves a brother, Sidney Perkins, and three nephews, Professor Samuel Hayes, of Mount Holyoke College; Professor Joseph Hayes, of New York, and Harold Hayes, Rochester.

While the greater number of persons who knew Mrs. Wells will remember her as an artist, her attainments were many. She was familiar with French, Spanish and Italian and was a pianist and Shakespearean student. She tutored young pupils in Latin and mathematics.

Mrs. Wells contributed almost constantly to some branch of art with her brush since she came to Rochester more than twenty-five years ago. Her pictures were seen at exhibitions of the Rochester Art Club. Three times her pictures hung in this city won prizes. Two of these were views of landscapes bordering the Genesee river, exhibited at the Memorial Art Gallery. One was a view of the west end of Court street bridge, where the Cluett-Peabody factory stands with its statue of Mercury. Another was a view looking north from the Clarissa street bridge.

Mrs. Wells painted miniature and large portraits. Her ability to restore old pictures was exceptional. For years she did all of this work for the Brodhead gallery in East avenue. Some persons have said that the finest picture she ever painted was her last, a head of the first child done for Rev. Arthur F. Florack, of St. Peter and Paul's Church.

Mrs. Wells was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jeancks W. Perkins, late of this city. They lived in Ohio, where she was born, before coming to Rochester. Later they moved to Oswego, where Mrs. Wells received her early education and was graduated from the Oswego Normal School. She studied painting under Henry W. Ranger, a celebrated artist, in Syracuse, at the same time continuing the study of music and languages. After coming to Rochester, she joined the Rochester Art Club and later was made an honorary member.

Though advanced in years, Mrs. Wells showed great ability in her art in the last period of her life. Both of the prizes awarded her were won within the last eight or ten years. In her last illness the same mental vigor that had been so marked a characteristic did not forsake her. Only last week her friends who called on her found her mind as alert as ever. The late George W. Herdle, director of the Memorial Art Gallery, and Harvey Ellis, a well-known painter, were among her friends. George H. Brodhead was a long time friend, who yesterday paid her a warm tribute.

During the Spanish-American and World wars, she found time to do a great deal of patriotic work. In the late war she sacrificed her time and money to a degree that some of her friends thought unreasonable, but she put the same devotion into helping the soldiers and sailors that she had given to her works of art.

Caroline Crafts Little of 188 Brunswick street, widow of William Seelye Little, died at her home shortly after midnight this morning at the age of 80. Although Mrs. Little had been in delicate health for several years, her death came almost without warning and was a severe shock to her friends and family.

Mrs. Little had taken an active part in the social and club life of Rochester since coming to this city 60 years ago as the bride of William

MRS. WILLIAM S. LITTLE.

S. Little. She was born in Laurens and moved to Cherry Valley at the age of 6, where she lived until her marriage. The historic significance of the surroundings of Cherry Valley inspired in her a keen interest in the revival of the traditions of the past, which led her to found the Irondequoit Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of which she has always been one of the most prominent members.

Always a central figure in the local organization, Mrs. Little also played an important part in the national affairs of the D. A. R. For many years she was regent of Irondequoit Chapter, giving up this position to take the state regency and resuming it for a number of years more after the expiration of the state term.

In addition Mrs. Little was one of the moving spirits in the organization of the local branch of the Colonial Dames of America and was for many years the chairman of the chapter.

Throughout her life in Rochester she has been a member of the Third Presbyterian Church, where she was closely identified with the missionary work of the church and the Presbytery. For some years she was president of the Presbyterian Society.

Mrs. Little is survived by four daughters all of this city: Mrs. Merwin T. Daly, Mrs. George Wilson, Miss Julia Little and Miss Louise U. Little. She is also survived by two grandchildren.

The Rev. Dr. Paul Moore Strayer, pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, expects to be able to conduct the funeral service which will be held at the home on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Twenty-five Years in Business.

Mr. Goetzman, a life long resident of Rochester, twenty-five years ago took over the sash and blind factories of the F. B. Miles Company and organized the firm of Chapman & Goetzman at the Water street address. About seven years ago his partner died and he had carried on the business under his own name until the time of his death. He was a graduate of the old Collegiate Institute in Central avenue.

Known widely in Rochester through his business, church and social connections, Mr. Goetzman's death brought sorrow to a large circle of friends. He was an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and had been an officer in the Church of the Reformation for the past eighteen years. He had been ill at the General Hospital for the past few weeks, but his death yesterday was unexpected.

He leaves his wife, Elizabeth Kohl Goetzman; a son, Walter Goetzman; a brother, Edward L. Goetzman, and two sisters, Mrs. Charles Reuter and Miss Amelia Goetzman.

DR. MOREY PRAISED AS LASTING FIGURE AT U. OF R. SERVICE

D. & C. Feb. 8
Faculty and Alumni Tribute Given Late Professor at Memorial Meeting.

Qualities which gave to the late Dr. William Carey Morey his commanding position in the enduring traditions of the University of Rochester were reviewed by those who perhaps knew him best at a special memorial service in Catherine Strong Hall yesterday afternoon, with the members of the University faculty in attendance. Extremely simple, the services revealed the esteem in which Dr. Morey was held and the strength of his impression upon the University, his colleagues and the students.

Dr. Rush Rhees, presiding, spoke briefly of the faculty members who before their deaths, had attained permanent niches in the history of the University. He listed Dr. Morey among the strongest of factors which have determined the growth and success of the university.

Speaking for the faculty from memories gathered during thirty-eight years' association with Dr. Morey on the faculty, Dr. George M. Forbes, head of the department of philosophy, stressed the late professor's devotion to his subject as the means through which all of his aims for the students were to be realized.

Superintendent Herbert S. Weet, who was University registrar for a time, represented the alumni and the Board of Trustees. He described Dr. Morey as "free from everything savoring of the pedant or the moralist," and as a man of clear judgment, who never strove for effect in his justified classroom use of wit or sarcasm. Dr. Morey was a teacher who suspended judgment until the facts were in, he said, and his great belief service was the molding of citizens.

Concluding the service, Professor Lawrence B. Packard recalled his own coming to the University twelve years ago, inexperienced and young, to teach history in Dr. Morey's department. To the late professor's tolerance and absolute freedom from the imposing of restrictions, he laid the success he later attained in the department. Dr. Packard lauded particularly the virile impression which Dr. Morey left with everyone with whom he came into contact. This quality he pointed out, enabled him to command the respect of the student body to an unprecedented degree. Added to this, Dr. Packard said, he was straightforward, never hedged and was possessed of a fearless conviction that was as impartial as is humanly possible.

During this administration he was circulation manager of the Democrat and Chronicle.

Due to his untiring labor, complete record books were ready for the Appellate Division when it had its birth. These books were done on Mr. Fulton's own time and without remuneration because the state legislature had neglected to provide funds for the purpose. Mr. Scudder was born in Maryland, Otsego county, N. Y., October 7, 1831. For several years he maintained this business and then left it to become a salesman for Studebaker and Cunningham products, an occupation in which he was active for more than 40 years. In the old days he covered territory extending from Maine to Florida and made most of his trips with a horse and buggy. He was also agent for the Phoenix Life Insurance Company for a few years.

At about the age of 72 years Mr. Scudder retired from active business but maintained a furniture repair shop in Ilion, where he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. F. E. Qualfe, until the time of her death in 1924, when he moved to Rochester. He was known as a fearless fighter and a man of great integrity and honesty. TRIBUTE PAID TO WORK OF TEACHER

J. U. Feb. 19
Loss in Death of Mrs. B. L.

Stetson Voiced by Pastor.

Tribute to Mrs. Benjamin L. Stetson, who died last Monday, for her service as a teacher in the public schools from 1876 until a few years ago and her service in the Universalist Church since 1879, is expressed by Rev. William Wallace Rose, minister of the First Universalist Church.

"Mrs. Stetson, known for years as Julia Joy, began her distinguished career as a teacher of youth in 1876, being assigned to Andrews School No. 9," Mr.
Rose said. "Ten years later she was transferred to Eugene Field School, No.
10, at which she continued until her marriage several years ago. She represented that large class of teachers who have served and are serving the city faithfully and well, and will be greatly missed by her former pupils and those who have been associated with her.

"In 1879 Mrs. Stetson joined the First Universalist Church and, true to her nature, became from the first an ardent worker. She has been adequately described by one who knew her as that type of Christian who rolled up her sleeves and performed any task calculated to advance the fortunes of her church and contribute to its influence in the city.

"A long-time member of the Wooden Class of the First Universalist Church, she became in 1911, the president and teacher of this organization for the study of the Bible and philanthropic endeavor, continuing in this dual office until her death. Funeral services were conducted in the First Universalist Church, attended by hosts of Mrs. Stetson's friends, former associates and pupils, and graced by a great bank of floral tributes. This veteran teacher of the public schools; this tireless worker for every good cause, deserves chiefly what she has created through the years—far-flung memories of a simple and useful life."

MINISTER DEAD AFTER 50-YEAR SERVICE BURIED

Rev. J. A. Schlenk Honored by Many at Funeral Rites in Newark.

FILLED MANY CHARGES

Retired from Pulpit Five Years Ago; Had Taught Calvary Class Since.

Widespread sorrow expressed by his pulpit associates and his church laymen, and the presence of so great a number of his friends at the burial services Friday afternoon at Newark cemetery, gave eloquent testimony to the place Rev. John Adam Schlenk carved for himself in his fifty-odd years of service to the church and his community. At Calvary Evangelical Church, where Rev. Mr. Schlenk rounded out the last years of his labors, which ended with his death Tuesday evening in the Park avenue Hospital, a special service was read.

Rev. L. Heinmiller, of the First Evangelical Church, read the Scripture lesson; Rev. H. P. Merle offered a prayer; the pastor read the biography, and Rev. P. C. Braunschweig spoke on the life and work of Rev. Mr. Schlenk. Mrs. C. E. De Visser sang "Lead Kindly Light," and "Crossing the Bar." The following ministers acted as bearers: L. Heinmiller, A. Holzwarth, W. Wagner, W. Meffe, E. U. Braunschweig and O. W. Gesell. Other ministers at the funeral were: W. H. Seyferet, of Webster, Harvey Schoopin, of West Walworth, A. D. Gishler, of Buffalo, A. M. Baum, of Newark, and Henry W. Link, of Lansing, Mich.

In Pulpit Fifty Years.

Confined to his home for the past few months by illness, the aged minister's patience and cheerfulness persisted to the end. The fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the ministry had been celebrated five years before and his retirement from active service followed. Relieved of the responsibility of a particular charge, Rev. Mr. Schlenk applied himself as assiduously as ever to his chosen task, functioning as a member of the congregation at Calvary Bible Class, of which he was president and teacher, feel his absence. Appreciation of his worth was expressed by the many congregations in whose pulpits he had supplied frequently despite his retirement.

Born in Germany, February 4, 1849, he came to America with his parents at the age of 6 years. After an ocean trip lasting fifty-seven days, the family arrived in Rochester and decided to settle here. In this city and surrounding towns almost all his life was spent.

Three Times at Newark.

His parents were converted by Rev. Martin Laurer one year after their arrival in this country. They joined the First Evangelical Church in this city. In 1868, when 20 years old, Mr. Schlenk was converted by Rev. A. Holzwarth and he also joined the First Church.

As a boy, Rev. Mr. Schlenk attended the public schools of this city, and later attended Plainfield College in Illinois, where he placed his church membership. Recommended to the Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Church some time later, he applied for a license to preach and received it in 1870. He returned to New York state and was stationed at Newark as a co-worker with Rev. Mr. Holzwarth. Twice afterwards in his career he was stationed at Newark, his last charge extending over a period of seven years which terminated his active service.

Rev. Mr. Schlenk was ordained deacon in Syracuse and elder in Buffalo by Bishop Yeake. A summary of his fifty years in the ministry follows: Until 1871 he was in Newark and Lyons. In 1871 and 1872, he was in Tonawanda and Niagara Falls; 1872-74, Oneida; 1874-76, Dansville; 1876-78, Geneva; 1878-81, West Sand Lake; 1881-83, Albany; 1883-88, Portland, Ore.; 1888-90, Newark; 1890-92, Syracuse, First Church; 1892-95, Webster; 1895-97, Warsaw; 1897-99, Niagara Falls; 1901-04, Buffalo, Rhode Island Street Church; 1904-08, presiding elder; 1908-09, Penfield and Brockport; 1909-14, West Walworth; 1914-20, Newark.

Anniversary Celebrated.

The New York Conference celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of Rev. Mr. Schlenk's entry into the ministry at Memorial Church, Buffalo. Bishop S. C. Breyfogel presided. Numerous talks congratulating the aged pastor were made by members of the conference, and a gold-headed cane was presented to him.

Forty-three years of his labor in the ministry were shared by his wife, Catherine Schlenk, daughter of the late Rev. Jacob and Elizabeth Derrick, to whom he was married in 1872. To them two sons were born, the elder dying in infancy. Le Roy Schlenk, the younger son, lives in Rochester. Mrs. Schlenk died in 1915 and was buried in the Newark cemetery.

Rev. Schlenk served as chaplain of the New York Division of the Sons of Veterans and, at the time of his death, was chaplain of the Burnham Camp of Newark. He was always a Republican in politics, but was known to stand for the right, regardless of party ties.

S. W. BEAVEN, 75 NOTED PIONEER MINISTER, DIES

Associate Pastor of Lake Avenue Baptist Church for Ten Years.

D.H. Feb 77
LIVED IN FAR WEST

1975
Founded Fourteen Churches and Home for Children of Missionaries.

Rev. Samuel W. Beaven, for the last ten years associated with his son, Rev. A. W. Beaven, D. D., as minister of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, died yesterday at his home, No. 30 Rochelle avenue, aged 75 years. The funeral will be conducted tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the church. The body will lie in state from 11 o'clock in the morning.

Until January Rev. Mr. Beaven was associate minister of the church and then was made pastor emeritus by action of the congregation. Shortly after, he was taken ill and had been confined to his home since.

For many years of his life Rev. Mr. Beaven was engaged in religious pioneer work in small communities of the Far West, where he founded fourteen churches in the course of his ministry. He also founded and built a home for missionaries' children and helped found three high schools and a seminary. He exercised much influence in the life of the communities in which he worked.

At the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, to which he came in 1915, he was affectionately known as "Father" Beaven. His decade of service there won him a deep regard in the congregation and a host of friends outside the church.

He was born in Bradford-on-Avon, England, on February 25, 1849, the descendant of five generations of clergymen. Coming to America when 19 years old, he landed in Montreal, and started for the Far West on one of the first trains to cross the continent. After studying in McMinnville College in Oregon, he became a home missionary. His last charge before coming East was as assistant pastor of the First Church of Tacoma, Wash.

His wife, Mrs. Lizzie J. Beaven, who survives him, is well known throughout the city through her activities in religious work. Besides Dr. A. W. Beaven, he leaves two other sons, Dr. Paul W. Beaven and Joseph C. Beaven, both of this city, and two daughters, Mrs. W. L. Bricker, of Mount Vernon, Wash., and Mrs. William Platt, of this city.

At the funeral services tomorrow, the board of deacons and the board of trustees of the church will be honorary pallbearers, and the board of deacons will act as a guard of honor.

Ends Notable Career

REV. S. W. BEAVEN.

Long Life Ends Peacefully For J. U. Mrs. Jane Young

March 3, 1924
A long and active life came to a peaceful end this morning when Mrs. Jane Young passed away at her home, 31 Caledonia avenue, where since 1871 she has lived and seen Rochester grow up around her. Mrs. Young observed her 90th birthday last October.

Born in Aurora, N. Y., Jane Cross came to Rochester when a young girl and married Charles D. Young. She raised a family of five children, surviving them all except one son, Dr. Charles Young a physician of this city. In 1871 Mrs. Young came to the home in Caledonia avenue where for the last 44 years she has lived and associated with many whose names have long since passed into the annals of Rochester's history. She was well acquainted with Susan B. Anthony and was often known to voice her admiration of the pioneer woman suffragist, although her own views of suffrage were at variance with the great leaders. Politics and current events and everything going on in the world about her were the chief interests of the elderly woman who found it a hardship when her sight began to fail about a year ago and she was unable to read the news of the day.

Being of Quaker parentage, Mrs. Young was retiring in disposition and enjoyed the pleasures of her home to the exclusion of others. She was not given to reminiscence, unlike most elderly persons, but preferred to live in the present. She was the oldest member of the Unitarian Church.

Last Rites—Lake Ave.
Baptists Pay Tribute.

The last rites for the Rev. Samuel A. Beaven, pastor emeritus of Lake Avenue Baptist Church, and one of the most beloved and revered ministers of Rochester, were read this afternoon in the church auditorium, by his son, the Rev. Dr. Albert W. Beaven, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary. Members of the church choir, under direction of George E. Fisher, sang, and a special duet was sung by Mrs. C. A. Howland and Ralph Scobell. The active bearers were two sons, Dr. Paul Beaven and Joseph Beaven, a son-in-law, William Platt, and a brother, the Rev. Joseph Beaven, of Rochester, Minn.

The board of trustees and deacons of Lake Avenue Baptist Church acted as honorary bearers and the board of deaconesses of the church formed a guard of honor for the body as it lay in state in Barrett Memorial Parlors, at the church, from 11 o'clock this morning until the time of the services. Burial was made in Riverside Cemetery.

Throughout yesterday and today, hundreds of Rochesterians called at the home, at 30 Rochelle street, to express their sympathy to the family of this pioneer minister in the Rochester field. And throughout today, up to the time of the funeral, there was a continual line of his parishioners and friends in the Barrett Memorial Parlors, paying a final tribute.

Professor C. H. Moehlinman of the Rochester Theological Seminary, who substituted in the pulpit yesterday, said of the Rev. Mr. Beaven, in his sermon: "Father Beaven, pioneer, patriot, pastor and preacher. He knew privation and distress but never faltered. His was the enthusiasm of youth. He could not grow old. He believed in the next generation, he rose to move the ordination of the young gentlemen."

"His ministry had, as its chief aim, 'Sir, we would see Jesus'. No pastor ever had a more loyal associate minister than ours during the last decade. Father Beaven, as we delighted to call him was more than 100 per cent. Last Tuesday I spoke to him for the last time. That incomparable smile played around his lips. Hard work was written on his face. Love was there, God was there. There was a man sent from God, and his name was Samuel Beaven."

Special memorial services have been arranged by the church for Sunday, March 8, and at the Wednesday evening services the Rev. Dr. Albert W. Beaven will spend the devotional hour speaking of experiences with his father during the past week. Wednesday would have been the 76th birthday of his father.

G. P. BARTON DIES EMINENT LAWYER, U. OF R. GRADUATE

Patent Counsel for Western Electric Helped Brother Found Company.

SON IN COLLEGE HERE

Mch. 7-1925
Also Leaves Sister in City; Mother Mortgaged Home to Give Sons Education.

Ossining, N. Y., March 1.—(Special Dispatch to the Democrat and Chronicle)—George Preston Barton, 73 year old, for twenty-eight years general patent counsel for the Western Electric Company, and brother of the late Eno M. Barton of Chicago, died after a long illness at the Ossining Hospital this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Born on a farm in Lorraine, N. Y., on August 25, 1851, the first twenty years of his life were spent in Jefferson county, where his widowed mother on slender resources gave her five children a foundation of character and a good education. After graduating from the University of Rochester in 1876, he began legal work in Chicago, where his brother, Eno M. Barton, was just starting the Western Electric Company. The patent work in connection with the electrical devices manufactured by the company at once began to assume a major position in the success of the enterprise. In the few years that followed, but before the enormous expansion of the telephone, Mr. Barton had written more specifications for electrical patents than any other solicitor in the world.

Won Famous Suit.

With the development of telephone engineering came much important patent litigation. Suits defending the Patterson Cable patents were successfully prosecuted, and the highly complex multiple-switchboard cases were secured to the interests of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The famous double carbon lamp suit was bitterly fought and won by Mr. Barton, until that time involved more money than any previous patent litigation.

One of the greatest satisfactions of Mr. Barton's life was the success of the men who began their careers as boys in his office. Notable instances are J. G. McCulloch, now of the Illinois Merchants Trust Company, and Walter Clyde Jones, both of Chicago; and his former partners in the firm of Barton, Tanner & Folk—DeWitt C. Tanner and George E. Folk, now patent counsel for the Western Electric Company and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in New York.

Mr. Barton's life was spent mainly in Chicago, where he for many years was a member of the Union League Club. He served as president of the Chicago Patent Law Association shortly before he retired, in 1912.

In the office of D. C. Tanner at No. 195 Broadway, New York, is framed an old mortgage note, with a description by George Barton, telling how his mother raised $400 by mortgaging her home so that the older son, Eno M. Barton, could buy a business in Cleveland and out of which grew the Western Electric Company.

Mr. Barton first married Lucy Nichols, daughter of Colonel William T. Nichols, of Rutland, Vt., the founder of the town of Haywood, Ill., who died in 1891. In 1893 he married Emma Welles, of Towanda, Pa., who survives him and is living in Pasadena, Calif. He also leaves five children: Mrs. Sherman W. Dean, of Briarcliff Manor, N. Y.; Hubert C. Barton, of Amherst, Mass.; Amelia P. Barton, of Pasadena; William Barton, of Berkeley, Calif., and Ralph Barton, a student at the University of Rochester, and a sister, Miss Adella C. Barton, of Rochester.

Mr. Barton was a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity.

Funeral services will be conducted Wednesday at Oakwood Chapel, Chicago.

among Close Friends.

Edwin S. Hoagland, for fourteen years station master at the New York Central station and a figure known to thousands of travelers, railroad employees and officials, died yesterday morning at his home, No. 98 Hobart streets. News of the passing of a man, considered by many the most popular railroad man in Western New York, traveled quickly and messages of condolence began to pour into the Hobart street home in the early hours of the evening. Among the first to express his bereavement was T. W. Evans, vice-president of the New York Central Railroad.

Mr. Evans, who, as superintendent of the Rochester division of the New York Central fourteen years ago, promoted Mr. Hoagland to the position which he held until his death, sent the following telegram to Mrs. Hoagland:

Central Chief Voices Grief.

"Please accept my sincere sympathy in your great bereavement. The railroad has lost a faithful and untiring employee whose admirable qualities will be greatly missed by all who came in contact with him."

Mr. Hoagland was in the employ of the New York Central during the entire thirty-three years of his residence in Rochester. Previously for several years he had been connected with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad at Ithaca. During the two-score years of employment as a railroader, Mr. Hoagland acquired a host of friends both within and outside of the organizations with which he was connected. Among his intimate friends outside of the New York Central organization were W. T. Noonan, president of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway Company, and John M. Beckley, president of the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railroad Company.

Throughout his Rochester residence Mr. Hoagland was a participant in the activities of the Railroad Y. M. C. A.

EDWIN S. HOAGLAND.

Frederick D. Lamb, secretary of the Railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A., characterized Mr. Hoagland as a man who in all the years of his railroad experience, had never made an enemy and as one who had given more than generously of his time and money to the organization. In commenting upon his death Mr. Lamb said:

"I am inexpressibly shocked at the death of my dear friend, Edwin S. Hoagland, who was one of the most devoted and valuable members of our organization. Mr. Hoagland was one of the plainest and most unpretentious men I have ever known, but his sterling qualities made him a general favorite, beloved by all. He was easily the most popular railroad man in Western New York and was considered to be one of the most competent employees of the New York Central."

Active in Y. M. C. A.

During practically the whole of his life here Mr. Hoagland acted as recording secretary of the Committee of Management of the Railroad Y. M. C. A. For many years he won first prize in the annual membership contest of the branch and for the last five years he had served as chairman of the committee in charge of the annual Cobourg excursion of railroad men. He was a member of the Quarter Century Club, composed of railroad men who have been members of the branch for twenty-five years.

On the occasion of his elevation to the office of station master here in 1911 he was the guest of honor at the largest and most representative reception ever given a railroad official here. The gathering attracted the largest attendance of any event ever held in the rooms of the Railroad Y. Ten prominent railroad officials and civic leaders, including the late Mayor Hiram H. Edgerton, presented gifts to Mr. Hoagland on behalf of ten organizations.

Mr. Hoagland was born at Union Springs on March 1, 1862, his death occurring on his birthday. His father was Henry Harrison Hoagland and his mother, Mary White Hoagland. He was educated in the schools in the vicinity of Union Springs and later attended a military academy. He began his railroad career as station agent for the D., L. & W. at Ithaca. Shortly after he entered the employ of the New York Central here he was advanced to the position of night stationmaster, which he held until his advancement to stationmaster.

EUGENE J. ELLIS, AUTO DEALER, DIES IN NEW YORK CITY; PROMINENT AMONG DISTRIBUTORS HERE FOR LAST 9 YEARS

Herald Feb. 4 - 1925

Eugene J. Ellis, one of Rochester's best known and most progressive automobile merchants, and president of E. J. Ellis & Company, Rochester Dodge Brothers distributors, died in New York City yesterday, aged 53 years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Violet Ellis, who was at his bedside when the end came, and two sons, Elbert A., a student at St. John's Military Academy and Eugene J., Jr.

Mr. Ellis left Rochester on February 15 for a short vacation at Pinchurst, S. C. Ten days ago he executive in the Packard Motor Car Company. Mr. Ellis came to Rochester from Detroit in 1915 to take over the Packard and Dodge agencies. With some friends in Detroit, he formed the E. J. Ellis Company, Inc., and the new firm opened up at 15 Solo Street. From the start the concern was eminently successful due in large part to Mr. Ellis' training as a sales executive. After a few years, however, the concern gave up the Packard franchise and centralized on the Dodge car. From his first connection with the motor sales industry in Rochester, Mr. Ellis took a great interest in the Rochester Auto Trades Association, and in 1920 he was elected president.

Helps For Dealers Group.

The following year, with a few of the more progressive passenger car dealers, Mr. Ellis formed the Rochester Automobile Dealers' Association, which a year later superseded the old Trades Association as the business organization of automobile men. Mr. Ellis served as first president of that organization and two years later was again elected president.

Later in 1923, when an effort was made to build up the Empire State Automobile Dealers' Association, Mr. Ellis was elected president of that body and served in the capacity until the first of this year.

Late last fall Mr. Ellis, believing that the automobile business did not require an expensive "downtown" location, leased a section of the Million Dollar Garage in University Avenue and opened up his sales and service station there. The wisdom of his reasoning was evident from the start, and other dealers have followed his lead.

Mr. Ellis was a director of the Automobile Club of Rochester, a member of the Oak Hill Country Club, the Rochester Club and Rochester Lodge 24, Elks.

Directors of the Rochester Automobile Dealers' Association met yesterday and adopted resolutions on his death. Directors of the Automobile Club of Rochester will meet this noon and adopt similar resolutions.

The death Tuesday of Mrs. Caroline Vernam FitzSimons, widow of Charles FitzSimons, one of the founders of the drygoods firm of Burke, FitzSimons, Hone & Company, removed a woman who had been known in Rochester for the past half century for her cultural tastes and interest in literary activities.

On October 7, 1862, Mrs. FitzSimons was married to Charles FitzSimons, and shortly afterwards took up her residence in Livingston park, in a house on the opposite side of the street from the residence at No. 5 Livingston park, which had been her home for many years prior to her death.

A woman of the old school, Mrs. FitzSimons did not take kindly to the motor car, and for several years after automobiles dominated the city's streets, she continued to go forth each day in a highly burnished coupe, with a silk hatted coachman on the box.

Since Jan. 1 he was connected with the district attorney's office as a confidential stenographer for the Grand Jury on leave of absence from the police department. Prior to that time he was confidential secretary for Captain of Detectives John P. McDonald.

The esteem in which he was held by the entire personnel of the detective bureau was manifested in Captain McDonald's office this morning when he received news of the death. Reynolds lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Reynolds, at 130 Cedarwood terrace. He was a graduate of Cathedral High School. He took a temporary appointment in the filing room at police headquarters on Dec. 3, 1917. The appointment was made permanent on Nov. 15, 1919. In that position he took all the notes when prisoners were questioned and took care of all the private correspondence. Whenever Captain McDonald went out of the city on investigation Leo went along. When Captain McDonald went to Linden on the triple murder investigation Leo went along and won friends immediately with the investigators and the newspaper correspondents.

"In the death of Leo I feel I have lost a son, he was so close to me," declared Captain McDonald this morning.

On an. 5 last Leo was given a leave of absence to work with the Grand jury.

The members of the detective bureau took up a collection and purchased a gold watch and chain, handsomely engraved, to give to him as a token of esteem and friendship. It was to be presented to him when he was taken ill and the men were waiting for him to recover.

He was a member of the Knights of Columbus and the J. E. W. S.

The Cathedral was crowded to the doors and throngs stood in the street without in a silent tribute to a woman who, born in Ireland came to this city in her childhood and has always been a devout and ardent member of her church. Traffic in the streets adjacent to the Cathedral was tied up for some time and a special detail of traffic policemen was detailed to facilitate the movement of the long cortege.

The bearers were six grandchildren of Mrs. Hickey, namely: Leo A. Lewis, Raymond Lewis, Richard Gorsline, Walter Hickey, Thomas Hickey and John T. O'Hara. Final blessing at the grave was pronounced by Bishop Hickey, assisted by the Rt. Rev. J. Francis O'Hern and the Rt. Rev. Mons. M. J. Nolan. Wife Of President Erb Died In Hospital Here

J. U. Meehan, 26 1925
Death of President of Ann Arbor Railroad, Yesterday, in New York City, Recalls Accident in Which Mrs. Erb Was Fatally Injured on September 25, 1904 — Homeopathic Hospital Received Gift From Husband.

The death of Newman Erb, president of the Ann Arbor Railroad, in the oseevelt Mispital, New York city, yesterday, following an operation, recalls the circumstances of the death of Mr. Erb's wife in the Homeopathic Hospital in this city on Sept. 25, 1904, following injuries received in an accident which occurred early in the morning on that day when the Western Express of the New York Central left the rails near Lock Berlin.

The incident was recalled this morning by Leonard M. Welner of the L. M. Jeffreys Company of 32 Chestnut street. Mr. Welner has an unusually complete series of scrapbooks containing clippings concerning the deaths of prominent people and in this book was found the account of the accident.

Mrs. Erb was the only person who suffered fatal injuries in the wreck. At the time of the crash she was in her berth in the Pullman and, when found, was wedged beneath the wreckage in such a manner that both legs were crushed. Mr. Erb was badly bruised and received a fracture of the wrist, but he led the rescue party and as soon as Mrs. Erb was released from the wrecked train he brought her to Rochester on a special train for which the lines were cleared. On the train were Dr. N. M. Collins of this city and Dr. Putnam of Lyons who did all that was possible for the injured woman during the anxious journey. When she arrived at the hospital it was found that her legs were so badly crushed tha they must be amputated. Other injuries prevented Mrs. Erb from raly ing from the shock of the operation and she died at noon. Notes in Mr. Welner's scrapbook show that the body was forwarded to New York city for burial by the Jeffreys Company. According to other clippings in the book Mr. Erb, who was then president of the Pere Marquette Railroad, was so grateful to the Homeopathic Hospital for the care given to his wife that he not only sent a personal letter of thanks to the directors, but sent a contribution of $2,500 to the hospital as a memorial and also sent gifts to each nurse who had been employed on the case.

The scrapbooks which furnished the information given above were begun by Mr. Welner as a hobby but have become invaluable both to him and to many who consult them as a record of prominent Rochesterians reaching back to 1903. Mr. Welner has indexed and cross-indexed the scrapbooks so that the material contained in the newspaper clippings is easily available. The books are often consulted by attorneys and others terested in the settlement of estates, since they contain not only the dates of deaths but lists of relatives of those whom they concern. Mr. Welner also has a collection of Rochester directories from 1860 onward, the books having been acquired, year by year, as they were issued, by the Jeffreys firm which has been in existence in Rochester for 75 years.

Well Known as Writer

FRANK G. PATCHIN.

F. G. PATCHIN, EDITOR, WRITER DIES IN SOUTH

D. & C. McK. 24
Author of Tales for Young

Had His Last Position on Democrat and Chronicle.

Word was received last evening that Frank Glines Patchin, editor and author, had died in Jacksonville, Fla., Sunday evening about 8:30 o'clock. Mr. Patchin's last editorial work was on the Democrat and Chronicle, resigning the office of night editor last July because of ill health. He went to the country, and later to Florida and it was believed that he was well on the way to recovery when the last illness overtook him.

The funeral will take place to-morrow in Wayland. Burial will be made in the cemetery of that village where his father and mother are buried.

Fifteen Years with Post Express.

Mr. Patchin was a writer of more than average ability, both for newspapers and in authorship where his talents had fuller scope. He was educated for the legal profession, but early found his congenial work in the literary field. Especially on Rochester and New York newspapers he showed his ability as a journalist. For fifteen years he was managing editor of the Post Express, this city. His acquaintance included some of the country's brilliant men. Mr. Patchin's creative talents and his appreciation of the finer things in life made him an ornament to the profession he loved. He excelled in writing stories for boys and girls. These works alone are published in two hundred volumes, some bearing his own name, others a nom de plume.

In the summer home of his brother, at Stewart, Fla., Mr. Patchin had spent part or all of last winter. Not long ago he wrote a cheerful letter to a member of this newspaper's staff. His death was a shock to his former associates, as they believed that he would regain his full strength, if he had not already found it. Last Friday, Mrs. Alfred Edward Botham, of Brooklyn, Mr. Patchin's daughter, received word that her father was seriously ill. She called his physician in Jackson, Fla., over the long-distance telephone, and learning further particulars, immediately started for that city. She went to his bedside in St. Luke's Hospital that city. Saturday, Mrs. Patchin, her mother, was notified by wire of her husband's condition, but having been ill in bed, was unable to make the trip South. She was kept informed of Mr. Patchin's condition until the end came. The last message informed her that their daughter would arrive with her father's body in Wayland, Wednesday, to-morrow, and directed her to leave Rochester at 7 o'clock in the morning. The Masons of Wayland are to meet the train bearing Mr. Patchin's casket, and they will make arrangements for the funeral.

Publicity Director in War.

Mr. Patchin was born in Wayland. His father was the late Dr. Cameron Patchin, a physician and surgeon, coming of a family of doctors. His mother's name before her marriage was Miss Harriet Glines. Mr. Patchin attended a grammar school in Wayland; the Dansville Seminary; the Genesee State Normal, where he made special preparations for college, and in 1884 he was graduated from Cornell University with the degree of master of arts. One year later he received a diploma from the Albany Law School of Union University.

During the World war, Mr. Patchin was assistant publicity director for the Liberty Loan campaigns in New York city, was publicity director for a Red Cross drive in that city and served in the same capacity there for the $1,000,000 Jewish war relief drive. In the closing year of the war he was assistant national publicity director for the War Service Department of Labor, in Washington.

Mr. Patchin was at different periods of his writing career a reporter on the New York Press, the New York Journal, copy-reader, assistant Sunday reader and then city editor. He was night editor of the New York Recorder and city editor of the Washington Post and a special writer for the New York World.

As the author of his many books of juvenile fiction, Mr. Patchin won a wide friendship among young boys and girls. He frequently received letters from readers of his stories, owing to their interest in certain characters he had created.

Traveled in Many Climes.

Mr. Patchin had widely traveled. He took some of these journeys to gather material for his books. This experience, made his readers feel they actually had been introduced to the characters of whom they read. He was skillful in portraying adventure without those objectionable elements which sometimes start boys and girls on a dangerous path. His heroes and heroines were wholesome characters but not impossibly perfect, while their experiences were sufficiently thrilling to hold interest of either boys or girls or adults.

Mr. Patchin visited nearly every part of the world except South America. He joined jungle hunters in Borneo and Sumatra. He crossed the Sahara Desert with an Egyptian caravan and at one time lived in a head hunters' village in Borneo. He went around the globe on one voyage and on another sea trip was a guest on a United States man-of-war. He once went as purser on a vessel because the only way he was allowed to take passage was as a member of the crew. For two years he was a member of the press department of Barnum and Bailey's Circus. There he gained interesting material for some of his books.

Bearers will be County Judge Willis K. Gillette, James L. Hotchkiss, Charles J. Brown, Charles S. Owen, Charles T. Chapin and Herbert W. Pierce. Rev. Sherman L. Divine, D. Only last November Mrs. Riley celebrated her eighty-eighth birthday at her home, with representatives of four generations of her family present. Born on November 18, 1836 in this city, she had lived here all her life. Although she was confined to her home for the past few years of her life, Mrs. Riley took the keenest interest in the civic progress of Rochester and had maintained a wide circle of acquaintances. During the Greater University drive, she was particularly engrossed by the current developments and took great pleasure in regaling her friends with stories of the earlier days of the institution and other integral parts of the past life of the city.

Mr. Patchin leaves his wife, Elizabeth Calisher Patchin, of Alexander street, this city; one son, Cameron A. Patchin, of New York; one daughter, Mrs. Alfred Edward Botham, of Brooklyn, and one brother, Bert C. Patchin, of Patchinville, N. Y., and of Stewart, Fla.

He was a member of the New York Press Club, the New York Athletic Club, the Theta Delta Chi fraternity, and the National Theta Delta Chi Club, in New York.

MASONIC RITES HELD AT BURIAL OF F. G. PATCHIN

Former Editor Laid to Rest Near Boyhood Home at East Wayland.

D. & C. Mch. 76
WAS RETURNING HOME

—1924—
Overtaken by Death on Trip from Florida; Attended by Former Playmate.

Funeral services for Frank Glines Patchin, author and editor, whose last newspaper work was as night editor of the Democrat and Chronicle, took place yesterday noon in the East Wayland cemetery. Three generations of Mr. Patchin's family had lived in the countryside of the vicinity and some of their homesteads almost bordered this burial ground. There he was laid to rest amid the hills and plains where he had spent his boyhood. His father and mother, the late Dr. and Mrs. Cameron Patchin, are buried close by. Services conducted by Warren Patchin Masonic Lodge, named for his grandfather, took place in a marquee. Worshipful Master Leon Harvey presided and read from the Masonic ritual, while Rev. John H. Sandmeyer, minister of the First Methodist Church of Wayland, acted as chaplain.

Mr. Patchin's body arrived in the morning from Jacksonville, Fla., where he died Sunday evening in St. Luke's Hospital. The casket was accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Alfred Edward Botham, of Brooklyn, who was with her father when he died. Her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Patchin, of Alexander street, Rochester, had gone to Wayland Tuesday evening, accompanied by Miss Jennie E. Strowger, a close friend of the family. Cameron A. Patchin, son of the late editor, arrived shortly before the funeral, from New York. Gordon Patchin, a former state assemblyman, cousin of Frank Patchin, joined the family at the services.

Beautiful floral tributes were on and about the casket. The following Masons were the bearers: William Clearwater, C. C. Folta, H. V. Pratt, Ray G. Cooke, J. E. Barber and Henry Meade, all of Wayland.

When Mrs. Botham arrived, facts concerning Mr. Patchin's last illness not known here before were learned. In Jacksonville, she found that her father had started for New York from Stewart, the winter home of his brother, Bert C. Patchin. Knowing that his health, which he had gone South to regain, was greatly impaired, the brother and his wife made every attempt to prevent Mr. Patchin from taking the trip. He would not be persuaded, saying that he wanted to go "home."

On the train between Stewart and Jacksonville, he felt ill, and stopping off at the latter place, was induced by a physician to go to St. Luke's Hospital. He was detained there with the advice that he "rest" for a night before continuing the journey.

It was a coincidence that one of three physicians who attended Mr. Patchin at the last was Dr. Fred Bowen, of Jacksonville, who had been a playmate in boyhood in the country about Wayland, and who now is an eminent surgeon. In his last fight for life, Mr. Patchin's nurse was frequently beseeched to permit him to rise from his bed, that he might make ready to return to his family in the North.

Mrs. Botham returned last evening to Rochester with her mother and will remain until early next week.

E. R. WILLIAMS, LAWYER, WRITER, —DIES IN ITALY

Egerton R. Williams died recently at Alasio, Italy, aged 53 years. He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Florence A. Johnson of Booneville, N. Y.; his daughter, Florence R. Williams, both of Rochester; a sister, Dr. Grace A. Williams of San Francisco, and a brother, Arthur H. Williams of Boston.

Egerton R. Williams' mother was the daughter of Charles J. Hayden, prominent in the commercial life of Rochester 30 years ago. Most of his boyhood was spent in his grandfather's home in South Fitzhugh street. Through his father, Mr. Williams was connected with the well known Canadian Ryerson family.

After graduation from St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H., Mr. Williams spent two years at Yale, traveled in Europe, was graduated from the Albany Law School, and then entered the office of William F. Cogswell, at that time leader of the Rochester bar. Mr. Williams was associated for a number of years with William F. Cogswell and William N. Cogswell.

From boyhood Mr. Williams had been greatly interested in Italy, and decided to make a study of some of the less known Italian cities. He spent a year abroad and then wrote his "Hill Towns of Italy," which had an immediate success. This was followed by similar popular treatises on the Lombard cities and the cities of Venetia. Mr. Williams was also a frequent contributor to magazines and reviews. During the war he was for a time a correspondent for the New York Times. At the time of his death he was making studies in Italy for a book on the cities of Apulia. GRIDIRON STAR OF DECADE AGO, DIES AT HOME

T. U. Apr. 1 - 1922
Conrad R. Koegler, Captain and Star Tackle of Varsity in 1911—Called One of "Best Sports" Who Ever Wore Yellow.

Death called "time out" last night for Conrad R. "Duke" Koegler, described as one of the "best sports" who ever wore the University of Rochester uniform on a football field. After a fight against illness, as game as any battle ever fought on the cross barred field, he died at his Pittsford home.

"Duke," his college nickname stuck to him in after years, came to the university in 1908 from the High School of Commerce in Brooklyn, where he had been a member of the school's varsity football squad. His ability in the line brought him a berth on the varsity team at the university in his freshman year, and from that time on he was considered one of the best tackles ever developed at Rochester.

Hugh Smith, alumni secretary of the university, this morning recalled an incident of the Rochester-Colgate game of 1911 when "Duke" was captain. Toward the end of the second half the score was 5-0 in Rochester's favor and both teams were playing in that desperate fashion common to such struggles. One of the Colgate backfield stars forgot himself and was caught slugging. He was banished to the sidelines by the umpire but upon the Rochester captain's earnest intercession in his behalf the official reversed his ruling and allowed him to remain in the game. A few minutes later this same man broke loose and scored a touchdown. The goal was kicked and Colgate won the game, 5-5.

"That was the sort of sport, 'Duke' was," said Mr. Smith.

Upon leaving college in 1912 Mr. Koegler joined the sales staff of the Ailing & Cory company and remained with this firm until last summer when he entered the book department of Scrantom's, being attached to the East Main Street store. His health had been failing for some time however and soon after the New Year he was compelled to drop his work in an effort to regain his health.

A few years after leaving college Mr. Koegler married Miss Olive Arcey, daughter of Professor Albert L. Arcey, formerly of the Rochester Free Academy. She survives him with a son, Ansel, a daughter, Constance, his mother Mrs. Eliza Koegler and two brothers George and Charles Koegler. Mrs. Koegler and his two brothers live in New York city. Mr. Koegler was a member of the Rochester chapter of Psi Upsilon fraternity. The funeral tomorrow will be private and the interment will be at Brooklyn.

Thomas Doud,^{1/2} Former Hotel Man, Is Dead

T. U. Apr. 7 - 1922
Thomas Doud, for more than a quarter of a century proprietor of the old Franklin House in Franklin street and one time Democratic supervisor of the Seventh ward, died last night at his home at 32 Lake View park, aged 70 years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Julia Thomas Doud Kane Doud; two daughters, Mrs. Martin A. Haskett of Fairport, Mrs. Daniel Hall; two sons, Thomas E. of Fairport and Alfred J. Doud; one sister, Mrs. George Hess of Buffalo; one brother, Frank, and 10 grandchildren.

Mr. Doud, who was prominent in Rochester politics and well-known to thousands of the residents of this city, retired from active business six years ago. As proprietor of the Franklin house he managed one of the oldest hostleries and, at one time, the leading hotel of this city. It was opened by Mr. Doud on the site of a wine garden, established on the early eighties by a French woman and was well-known to the older citizens of Rochester as the first place in the city where illuminating gas was used.

In 1923 the old hotel property was purchased by the Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Company and razed to make way for additions to that store. An auction of its furnishings just prior to the sale attracted many bidders and much of the old-fashioned statuary and other antique things were sought by friends of Mr. Doud. He was a member of the Elks, Knights of Columbus, the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Red Men.

Funeral services will be held Friday morning at 9:45 o'clock from the home and at 10 o'clock from St. Mary's Church.

J. G. COMERFORD DIES, AGED 73; COLORFUL LIFE

T. U. Apr. 9 -
One of City's Most Important Realty Operators at Time of Death, He Started Life "Punching" Cattle on Texas Ranch.

1920
James G. Comerford, president of Fahy's Market Inc. and of the Sagamore Hotel and one of the largest real estate operators in Rochester, died unexpectedly at 11 o'clock last night at his home at 779 East avenue, aged 73 years. He is survived by his wife Mrs. Mary Louise Comerford; two daughters Miss Mary E. Comerford and Mrs. George T. Sullivan and one son James G. Jr.

JAMES G. COMERFORD

Mr. Comerford was taken ill shortly after noon yesterday, while on his way home in his automobile, in East avenue. His chauffeur stopped the car and asked a traffic officer to get in and come with him so that all speed might be made in taking the stricken man to his residence. At the home the policeman assisted the chauffeur in helping him into the house. Mr. Comerford rallied from the attack, which seemed to be acute indigestion, and by evening was up and about the home, playing cards, listening to the radio and singing. Shortly before 11 o'clock he retired, saying that he would go to his office this morning as usual. Within 20 minutes he was dead.

His death brings to a close one of the most colorful careers connected with the development of this city. Born in Rochester and educated in the First Ward, in which his boyhood home was located, he went to Texas in his youth, when the old West was still full of romance, and became a "cowpuncher" on a cattle ranch in that state. There he learned the elements of the business which in later years was to make him a fortune. After several years on the ranches of Texas Mr. Comerford went to Chicago and entered the packing houses where he spent several years learning another branch of the meat industry.

Following his Chicago experiences Mr. Comerford returned to Rochester, still a poor man, and entered the employ of Fahy's Market as a clerk. Up until the time of the death of Mr. Fahy he continued in his capacity as clerk in the market, but after that was put in charge of the business. He was then 45 years old, and, according to his own story and that told by friends, just at the beginning of his success in life. Within a few years he had accumulated sufficient money to take over the entire business, in which he had started as a clerk.

Interested in real estate, he began operations in that field and gradually accumulated a fortune. He was one of the first operators to enter the East avenue field, where he made large profits. His fortune was made at a time of life when most men have quit the struggle and settled down to live on their accumulations or a wage. He was one of the first officers of the Community Chest and for several years was treasurer of that organization and a member of the budget committee. He was also for several years a member of the board of directors of the National Bank of Commerce.

He was a member of the Automobile Club of Rochester, Chamber of Commerce, Elks Club, Oak Hill Country Club, Rochester Club, Ad Club, Rochester Historical Society, Rochester Yacht Club, Washington Club and the New York State Archeological Society, Morgan Chapter and Fourth Degree Assembly, Knights of Columbus.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Julia Kane Merkel; one daughter, Elsie; one son, Albert; four grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. William Hetzer of Pittsford and Mrs. William Pietchman of Henrietta.

Mr. Merkel was born on a farm near Pittsford and left his home during his early manhood to go to Chicago. He later spent several years in Wisconsin and returned to Rochester 38 years ago where he settled down to spend the rest of his life. He was a past master of Masonic Craftsmen, a member of the Blue Lodge of Pittsford and for a quarter of a century treasurer of the National Association of Engineers.

ROCHESTER DOCTOR COMMITS SUICIDE IN HOTEL NEAR VERSAILLES, FRANCE; DESPONDENCY CAUSE, RELATIVES SAY

H. Apr. 17 - 1924
Despondency, induced by disease and loneliness, is thought to have led to the suicide of Dr. Oscar Pardo, aged 57 years, of 315 Culver Road, in a small hotel at Chatou, near Versailles, France, yesterday. Dr. Pardo, according to a news dispatch from Paris last night, took a large dose of veronal and opened his jugular vein.

A letter found near his body, addressed to Robert B. Wickes of Rochester, stated a cancer in his chest had been pronounced incurable by French physicians, leading him to prefer death to further suffering, according to the foreign dispatch. The doctor had also been extremely despondent over the death last October of his wife, and had brooded continually over it, Rochester relatives say.

Born on Island of Malta.

Dr. Pardo, born on the Island of Malta, a British possession, was the son of a family of Neapolitan bankers. In his youth, he studied in Cambridge University, England, and later received a medical degree at Harvard University in this country. Following this, he came to Rochester, where he was naturalized. A brother of Dr. Pardo came here on an Italian Government secret mission, during the World War. The brother later died in Russia.

Dr. Pardo was the husband of the late Mrs. Alice Cogswell Pardo, whose father was the late William Cogswell, an attorney. Mrs. Pardo was the sister of Mrs. Robert C. Wickes, to whose husband Dr. Pardo's death communication was addressed.

After retiring from active medical practice years ago, Dr. Pardo devoted his life to philanthropy and study. For some time, he gave free service to members of the local Italian Colony, especially during the severe influenza epidemic in 1919. At the time of his death yesterday, Dr. Pardo was on the eve of a trip to Russia to engage in independent medical relief work among the poor. He was waiting in France for warmer weather, when seized with his fit of extreme despondency.

Charlotte's Oldest Woman Dies, Knew Site Of Grave Of Famous Jumper, Sam Patch

J. U. Apr. 10 - 1924

Mrs. Mary Ann Davis from a photograph posed for The Times-Union's staff photographer upon the occasion of her last birthday, October 2, 1924.

Probably the last living person to know the final resting place of Sam Patch, of jumping fame, whose last leap was over the falls of the Genesee river, nearly 100 years ago, died yesterday morning at her home at 103 River street, Charlotte. She was Mrs. Mary Ann Davis, aged 95 years. The famous jump that resulted in Sam's death occurred some four months before her birth.

Mrs. Davis spent most her life in Charlotte and was known as the oldest woman in that district. She was exceptionally active, keeping her health to a ripe old age by "puttering around with gardens and things," to use her own words. Born in Brighton on Sept. 30, 1829, she moved, when but a child to Charlotte, where her parents had purchased the seven acres of land which now comprises River street. When a child her mother took her often to the site of Sam Patch's grave, beneath a towering pine tree in the Charlotte Cemetery. The tree has long since been cut down, but Mrs. Davis always retained a vivid recollection of the location of the last resting place of the man who won lasting fame by his dare-devil jumps.

Living at the home of her daughter Mrs. Thomas Hogan, the old lady was very fond of telling tales of early Rochester and the Charlotte district. Her memory, always keen, held pictures of this city when it was but a village, with a log cabin on the site where the Powers Hotel now stands. It was in this cabin that the first white child in Rochester was born.

She also had memories of the village of Charlotte which in her childhood was a settlement made up of two hotels and a general store, surrounded by dense forests, from which friendly Indians would emerge now and again to trade with the settlers or to teach the little girl how to weave baskets. Mrs. Davis at that time made friends with the squaws of the Indian settlement at Hanford's landing where she learned bead work.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Dora A. Wallace of Henrietta and Mrs. Hogan; one son, Charles A. Davis of Rochester; eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Funeral services will take place Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the home. Burial will be made in Charlotte Cemetery.

OLDEST WOMAN IN COUNTY 105, DIES, LOVED BY MANY

D. & C. - April 19
Aged Men Recall Her as Teacher; Service Life Keynote.

1920

Miss Elizabeth Jane Kewin, 105 years old, said to have been Monroe county's oldest woman, died Saturday in the Rochester Friendly Home, it became known yesterday.

Many aged men in Rochester remember learning their three R's from Miss Kewin in the Jay street public school, where she later became principal, serving until 1892 when she left the city to make her home at Bergen.

In her last years at Bergen, where she had cared for an invalid sister who died, Miss Kewin became so infirm she was unable to care for herself and friends made it possible for her to enter the Rochester Friendly Home. For the last seven years she had occupied a bed in the infirmary, but was strong enough sometimes to sit in a chair part of the day.

She took pleasure in seeing old friends and in making new ones. Even in her advanced years she had a cheerful outlook and took an interest in the life about her. Attendants at the home called her the sunniest and most patient of the residents.

Although Miss Kewin was not certain of her exact age, officials of the Friendly Home said it was established by her friends that she was 105 years old. A Rochester woman fixed Miss Kewin's age by recalling that her mother and Miss Kewin were children together.

Miss Kewin's parents were Matthew and Jane Kewin, who were born on the Isle of Man. The family came to this country and lived at No. 109 Brown street, this city, for a number of years.

Her life was devoted mostly to the service of others, according to those who knew her intimately. As a teacher she was remembered as a woman of patient and gentle kindness who endeared herself to her pupils. Friends spoke of her untiring care of her invalid sister in Bergen later and of her neighborly spirit.

She was a member of the Methodist Church of Bergen and also showed much interest in school affairs. Up to ten years ago her mind was active and in many ways she showed the mental attainments which made her a successful teacher.

Her hobby was flowers, for which she showed a passionate fondness. The little garden before her Bergen home was brilliant with old-fashioned blossoms from early spring to late fall.

"A wonderful woman and a most lovable character," was the tribute paid Miss Kewin by Rev. Adam Schelink, of No. 335 1-2 Alexander street, who was her pupil, and by George Wiedrich, of Bergen, both of whom had kept in touch with her through the years.

Sargent Mourned Here; Selected Rochesterian as Soldier Model

D. & C. Apr. 16-1920

JUDGE I. HARMON.

The death of John Singer Sargent, recognized as the greatest painter America has yet produced yesterday morning at his home in Chelsea, on the Thames, London, was the source of deep regret to hundreds of Rochesterians. This was true, not alone for the pleasure given by his famous canvases on exhibition at the Memorial Art Gallery at various times, but because of the honor he paid a resident of this city, Judge I. Harmon, whom he characterized as typical of the Anglo-Saxon race in the World war.

Most of the representative portraits painted by the artist have been seen during recent years at the Memorial Art Gallery. The latest of his works on exhibit there was the "Portrait of a Boy," loaned by Mrs. Augusta St. Gaudens. It was here last September simultaneously with the showing in the Grand Central Art Galleries in New York, where the most complete collection of his works ever gathered was on display. Mr. Sargent aided in the collection of that exhibit.

At the time of his being chosen as model for the painter, Judge I. Harmon, now a member of the advertising staff of the Times-Union, was a private in the American Expeditionary Forces in France. Sargent had gone to the French front to sketch some British and American soldier types for a large canvas to be placed in the London Museum.

His meeting with the artist was described by Harmon in a letter to his mother, part of which is quoted:

"I was walking my post and a car-load of officers, British and American, got out at headquarters. I did not pay any particular attention to the occasion save that one man had an enormous amount of luggage and looked very much different in type than one of the party. About two hours later, around 12:30, this same personage came up and stood near my post against a Mission hut, and I noticed that he seemed to keep looking at me steadily.

"Major Starr came along, why by the way, was my old captain, and was stopped by this man. After a little conversation they both came to where I was standing and Major Starr said: 'Harmon (when are you off duty?)' I told him at 1 o'clock. I thought I was suspected of being a spy or that something dreadful had happened, but in a few seconds I was introduced to the world's greatest portrait painter, John Singer Sargent, who is here getting material for a great picture representing Great Britain's and America's part in the war—or, better—that of the Anglo-Saxon race. Mr. Sargent wanted me as a model and I was relieved from guard and was assigned to him.

"After dinner I reported to him in full military equipment and he began his sketches. I was with him two hours that afternoon and he did about twenty pencil sketches, one large watercolor painting and several photographs during the week.

"Mr. Sargent commented on how healthy I looked and said what attracted him was the shape of my head. He remarked I had a splendid head for portrait painting. He took my address and told me he wanted to see me in some work he had to do after the war."

Later Harmon was the guest of the painter at his home in London and at his studio in Boston. For a time Sargent and his model took advantage of every opportunity to complete sketches. After he had posed in Boston for sketches to be used in the great murals Sargent painted for the Boston Library, Harmon was urged to keep in touch with the artist.

Ripton, Jr., all of Rochester; a sister, Mrs. John E. McKeonnie, and a brother, David H. Ripton both of Le Roy, and thirteen grandchildren.

D.C. Ed. Apr. 20 A Faithful Public Servant.

Men of the type of Frank V. Reynolds, deputy city comptroller, who died suddenly yesterday, are the mainstays of important, but often uninteresting, functions of government. Their usefulness is the result of an unusual degree of faithfulness, application and exactitude, and their reward generally is little more than the consciousness of doing one's duty faithfully and without deviation. No spectacular honors are theirs, none of the excitement of political struggle, but without them those who receive the honors, those who have the excitement of political struggle and recognition, could not properly function.

Mr. Reynolds served in the city comptroller's office more than half a century, as its chief clerk. He established the system of bookkeeping now in use there; he prepared the statistics for the comptroller's annual reports and kept unceasing watch that, without official authorization, departments did not exceed or deviate from their official allowances. He performed many other duties that did not bring him much in the public eye, but that were well appreciated by those who knew him in official circles.

To care and exactitude in the performance of his official duties he added an unflinching courtesy and readiness to give information about the city's financial affairs that was legitimately asked, a quality not always associated with his type of position.

His place will be difficult to fill. 1925

Funeral services for Rev. Evan Hartzell Martin, rector emeritus of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church and widely known throughout Western New York, who died yesterday morning at Lakeland, Fla., will take place Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Thomas's Church. The body will arrive in Rochester Thursday.

Rev. Mr. Martin went to the Lakeland Hospital about two weeks ago, hoping for restoration to health. He was stricken there, however, and failed to rally. Death was due to septicemia. He was in his seventy-ninth year.

Bishop to Officiate.

Bishop Charles H. Brent, of the Western New York diocese, under whom Rev. Mr. Martin served for many years, and Bishop Coadjutor David Lincoln Ferris, of Rochester, will officiate at the funeral service, assisted by Rev. Arthur O. Skyes, D. D., rector of St. Thomas's. Burial will be made at the family plot at Danaville. Episcopal clergymen will be active bearers.

Rev. Mr. Martin, a native of Bridgeport, Ohio, was graduated from Williams College and the Yale Divinity School. He entered the Congregational ministry in 1890, holding pastorates at Perry Center, N. Y. and Deadwood, S. D. He entered the Episcopal Church in 1888, being ordained deacon in 1890 and priest the next year by Bishop Cleveland Cox, of Western New York. He was rector of the following churches: St. Mark's Church, North Tonawanda, from 1892 to 1899; St. Stephen's Church, this city, from 1899 to 1902; assistant rector from 1899 to 1902 at St. James Episcopal Church, Buffalo.

Taking charge of St. Thomas's Mission in 1892, then holding services in a vacant store at Monroe avenue and Rutgers street, he built that mission into a self-supporting parish. The present edifice in Field street was erected under his direction. He remained as rector there until 1917, when he was succeeded by Dr. Sykes.

He was a musician and laid special stress on choir work. He was a forceful preacher and wrote several religious books, notably his most recent work, "The Great Christian Essentials."

Aged Rector Dies

REV. EVAN H. MARTIN.

For fifteen years Rev. Mr. Martin served under Bishops Brent and Walker as examining chaplain. After retiring from the pastorate of St. Thomas's Church, he served at supply rector in Western N-w York churches, among them Hornell, Salamanca and Albion. He once assisted Rev. W. R. Goodwin, former rector of St. Paul's Church in East avenue.

From 1923-24 Rev. Mr. Martin was supply rector of the Episcopal Church of Bartown, near Lakeland, Fla. Last summer he returned to Rochester, living at his home, No. 24 Field street, until last October, when he returned to Florida with his daughter, Mrs. Mary Martin Wiffen, to take full charge of the church.

He leaves a brother, living in Ohio; a daughter, Mrs. Wiffen, and a grandson, Hartzell Wiffen, of this city.

He was a member of the Rochester Clericus, the Rochester Ministerial Union and the University Club.

Grieved at news of Rev. Mr. Martin's death, Bishop Brent, in Buffalo, said yesterday morning:

Bishop Mourns Death.

"With the death of Rev. Evan H. Martin, of Rochester, we lose one of the most devoted clergy of the diocese. Almost up to the very last he has borne the burden of years well and continued to give his services to the diocese in which he has spent his entire ministry.

"Rev. M. Martin was president of the board of examining chaplains of the diocese through the latter years of his life. Two years ago he published a volume, "The Great Christian Essentials," in which he sums up a belief that he not only held theoretically, but lived. His sympathetic, affectionate nature endeared him to his brother clergy and we shall miss his genial and kindly presence."

NOTED AUTHOR PASSES AWAY IN THE WEST

Herbert Quick, Father of Mrs. Raymond N. Ball,

at the University of Missouri. 1920

Herbert Quick, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., author, editor and economist, who was well known to Rochestrians, died unexpectedly, Friday in Columbus, Mo., aged 64 years. Death came as the result of a heart attack, following an address, made against the wishes of physicians, at a dinner which closed Journalism Week at the University of Missouri. He was taken to a hospital at the conclusion of his address and died during the night.

Mr. Quick, who was the father of Mrs. Raymond N. Ball of 202

Herbert Quick.

Yassar street, wife of the treasurer of the University of Rochester, was born on a farm in Iowa in 1861. With limited educational opportunities in early life, he, by his own indefatigable efforts became an author, lawyer, politician, editor and economist of note. Under the Wilber of the Federal Farm Loan Board and in 1902 was defeated as candidate for the Iowa Supreme Court. In 1909 he gave up the law profession to become associate editor of Lafollette's Magazine and a short time after that became editor of Farm and Fireside, published in Springfield, O. At one time he was editor of a farm magazine published in Omaha, Neb.

An advocate of inland waterway, Mr. Quick wrote an exhaustive treatise on that subject. He also wrote special articles for the newspapers and was a regular contributor to the Saturday Evening Post. Among the products of his pen are "Vandemark's Polly";

Services For 1925 Thomas Cook Held Today T. U. May 8

Thomas Cook, probably the last of the old time musicians of Rochester and a life long resident of this city was buried today, in Mt. Hope

Thomas Cook.

In the days of long ago Mr. Cook, and his wife, an accomplished pianist, were well known figures in the social world of the then almost embryonic city of Rochester. Old residents of the city remember him well, as he played on his violin or cornet in the old Wood Dancing Academy, or at the country dances when the Cotillon, the Money Musk, the lancers and the Virginia Reel were all the fad. Thomas Cook was known as a fine musician, a genial character, unassuming and friendly. He was known to thousands of Rochesterians and residents of Western New York.

Born of English parents, at what is now 530 Main street west, Mr. Cook lived practically all of his life in that district. In the old days he knew this city when Indians were familiar figures about the streets, and he had recollections of friendly visits of the Red men at his home and at the little trading spots in his neighborhood. He was a member of Scott's Band the first musical organization in Rochester, Walsches Band, and the famous Hebing's Band. He was also a Charter Member of the 54th Regiment Band and the Rochester Musician's Protective Association. JOHN H. QUICK FUNERAL HELD IN SYRACUSE

D. & C. May 1920
Services for Novelist and Noted Political Economist Held at Oakwood Chapel — Distinguished Men Act as Bearers.

Funeral services for John Herbert Quick, famous novelist, editor of Farm and Fireside, and noted political economist, who died at Columbia, Mo., were held at Oakwood Chapel, Syracuse, yesterday afternoon. Mr. Quick was the father of Mrs. Raymond N. Ball, wife of the treasurer of the University of Rochester.

Chancellor Charles Wesley Flint of the University of Syracuse officiated at the service and friends of Mr. Quick from Berkeley Springs, W. Va., his home, and Washington, D. C., acted as bearers. Burial was in Oakwood Cemetery.

Honorary bearers included: Judge Lobdell, chairman of the Federal Farm Loan Board at Washington, D. C.; Judge Elmer S. Landis, National Farm Loan Commissioner; B. D. Culliver, Washington, D. C.; C. H. Thompson, president of the Springfield, O., Loan Bank and Mr. Robinson, of Springfield. Active bearers were: Congressman Meyer Jacobstein, of Rochester; Frank Gannett, editor of the Rochester Times-Union; Burt Van Wie, Glenn Ewell and D. B. Gilchrist, all of Rochester. Shows Place He Held.

The following editorial in the New York Times under the heading "A Creator," shows the place that Mr. Quick held:

The late Herbert Quick seems to have been 'capable de tout.' He was school teacher, lawyer, journalist, politician, prosecutor of hoodlums, mayor, organizer of the Federal Farm Bureau, Red Cross executive in the Far East, a suave and delightful speaker, a country gentleman. These were among his vocations. "I am like a setter pup," he said, "forever smelling out something new." Gay, active, variously successful, he maintained that infantile paralysis, which he had as a child, left its victims superior, as a rule, to their fellows. As a boy he wanted to be a war correspondent and to go to West Point for military training and the modern languages. His life-long infirmity, about which he never whined or sighed, prevented. He thanked humorously the disease that perhaps had kept him from being a professional ballplayer or a pugilist. His was a brave, buoyant, cheerful spirit, a steady will, keen interest in many things. The compensating gods gave him in addition the high gift of imagination.

He didn't find his vocation till late. He was 41 when his first book was published; more than 40 when "Vandemark's Polly," followed the next year by "The Hawk-eye," made his fame. In these he puts flesh upon the dry bones of documents and archives. He recreates the history of the trek, the settlement, "The early neolithic" age of Iowa. These books are crowded with life, character, incident, with whose processions of salient minor figures. They are rich in natural humor. They smack of the soil and the crops. Their homely fidelity and their breath of poetry, their recovery of the atmosphere and attitude of two generations, their etchings of land and people, of cottonwood and willow and the tumbleweeds, "hurrying gray shapes" driven out of the dusk by the October northwest wind—what a wealth of matter, with sufficient art, the memory calls up! And philistines have reason to be grateful to Mr. Quick for the treasurers of forgotten word and speech that he dug up between "the raging Canaw" and Hell Slow.

"Romantic" Better "Stayer." Critics complain that some of his major figures are "romantic." Well, Americans persist in being "romantic." Indeed, the "romantic" seems a much better "stayer" than the exotic-neurotic-erotic. Let the Devil's Advocate pretend, if he likes, that Mr. Quick kept Mother day too often and that Captain Gowdy is a bit "touched up." But what triumph Cow Vandemark is with his slow unfolding, his shambling style, his everlasting depressions, episodes, obscure allusions. So not only "Dutch" farmers but all countrymen of the old school uttered themselves. An ancient Yankee would say of such a rambling narrator, "he needs a four-acre lot to turn around in." Mr. Quick was sympathetic to Americans of whatever strain, and he never borrowed his bucolics from literature, French, Russian or Scandinavian.

His two chief books are not the perfume and appliance of an evening. They are spacious chronicles of life, full, deliberate, de Morganesque. Take your time and your pleasure. It may be true, since our "realist" old friend, The Gazetteer, says so, that Ulster county "is bounded on the east by the Hudson river, is intersected by Wallkill and Rondout rivers, and is also drained by the Neversink and Shawangunk rivers and Esopus creek." We know it only as the birthplace of Jacobus Tenius Vandemark, steerer of the four cows. Iowa has Brookhart and many virtues and too many bootleggers. If we shut our eyes we see only Centropolis, and in St. Tropias Hotel—as the French Canadian painter transliterated—our not fanatically honest acquaintances, draw Upright, massacring with incredible violence the chicken people.

Late Mrs. M. A. Abrams

Pioneer At Charlotte
D. C. June 1920
The death of Mrs. Maria Augusta Abrams occurred at her home on the Latta road on Tuesday morning. She had been confined to her bed for more than a year, which was her first severe illness. Mrs. Abrams was born on the farm now owned by Clarence S. Lunt in Greece, Oct. 20, 1842. She was the daughter of the late George C. and Frances Mann Latta, both of whom belonged to the pioneer families of Charlotte. Samuel Latta, an older brother of George C. Latta, was the first customs officer of the port of Genesee, receiving his certificate from President Jefferson. Mr. Mann settled here in 1827.

Mrs. Abrams attended school in the small brick building that stood on Stutson street. When the plank road from Rochester to Charlotte proved a failure financially, her father purchased the hotel at the corner of Lake avenue and Latta road, which had been erected by the road company, and moved his family there, converting it into a private residence. They resided there until after his death in 1870, when they moved to a farm on Latta road, on the outskirts of the village.

On April 25, 1888, Maria A. Latta was united in marriage to Benjamin S. Abrams of Charlotte, formerly of Napanee, Ont., and they moved to Hilton where they resided six years. With the exception of these few years, all of Mrs. Abram's life has been spent here. She was of a social disposition and was known to many as "Aunt Rie." She was naturally very cheerful and this quality she displayed to a wonderful degree all through her illness.

From a hamlet she lived to see this place become a ward of Rochester. The days of the ox-cart have become the days of the automobile, the trolley and the airplane. Thoughts are not only transmitted by the written word, but by the telegraph, the telephone and the radio.

Mrs. Abrams is survived by a sister, Mrs. A. J. Mulligan of Albany; a brother, Manvalet H. Latta of this city; six nieces, Mrs. May Latta Stern, Mrs. Frances Partridge, Mrs. George O. Keir, Mrs. Fred Slater, all of this city; Mrs. W. E. Searle of Haddonfield, N. J., and Miss Catherine Mulligan of Albany; three nephews, George L. Barrus of this city, G. Emmett Mulligan of Albany, and A. Roger Mulligan of Syracuse.

Mr. Callister was active in politics throughout his life and was a staunch Republican, serving as a member of the Sixth ward committee for many years. On Nov. 1, 1915, he was appointed excise commissioner for Monroe county and served in that capacity until March 1, 1918, with offices in the Ellwanger & Barry building. M.; a member of Rochester Consistory, Damascus Temple, Shrine; the Elks, Protectives, Knights of Pythias and Brick Presbyterian Church, where he served as church librarian for 30 years.

Life of Mrs. Sarah Todd Full of Interest to Last; Literary Ability Marked in 93d Year

D. & C. June 2 - 1924

Thanksgiving. -

Thanksgiving is a joyful day,
Handed down through years passed away! -
As all who live here, say and know,
No other land has prepared so. -
Kind fortune brought the Pilgrims here
Searching for homes all free from fear;
Generations to bless - fruition is ours,
In homes secure from tyrant's powers. -
Very hard their lot, very brave their hearts
Unfired, determined, they played their parts - Never forget while live you may Grateful to be on Thanksgiving day. +

S. M. Todd
17 Buckingham St.
Nov. 24.

The funeral of Mrs. Sarah McLouth Todd, widow of Asabel Todd, was held at her home, No. 19 Buckingham street, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Rev. William Wallace Rose, minister of the First Universalist Church, officiated. Grandchildren of Mrs. Todd acted as bearers. Burial took place in Riverside Cemetery.

Mrs. Todd was born in Walworth April 16, 1832. Although she was past ninety-three years of age at the time of her death she retained her faculties in a remarkable degree almost to the end. She was a woman of unusual intelligence and mental vigor, took a keen interest in all that went on about her and was thoroughly posted on the news of the day. She frequently contributed verses and articles to the Democrat and Chronicle, many of which appeared in the department of Over the Percolator. Her hand-writing was clear and legible, and all the little niceties of punctuation and capitalization were carefully observed.

The reproduction herewith of a short poem she wrote last Thanksgiving Day for members of her family is an exact facsimile of the original manuscript and gives a fair illustration of her unusual literary talent and also of her firm penmanship. Her death will be deeply mourned not only among the immediate circle of her relatives, but also among a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

The early married life of Mr. and Mrs. Todd was spent in Paltneyville. They moved to Rochester some thirty years ago. Mr. Todd died about nine years ago. Mrs. Todd is survived by three children, Miss Ellen Laura Todd, George W. Todd and Libanus M. Todd, all of Rochester; one brother, John McLouth, of Walworth; eight grandchildren, Walter L. Todd, George L. Todd, Donald S. Todd, Conway L. Todd, A. Richard Todd, Margaret M. Todd, Sarah M. Todd and Ellen Laura Todd; and two great-grandchildren, Jonatha Todd and Jocelyn Todd.

LIFE COVERED EARLY HISTORY OF AMERICA

T. U. Jan 1925
Mrs. Miriam M. Freeman

Only Surviving Daughter of Man Who Figured in William Lyon
McKenzie Uprising.

Mrs. Miriam M. Freeman, wife of the late Zenas Freeman of Hamilton, Canada, died after a long illness, yesterday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Arvilla M. Lottridge, 167 Alexander street, this city.

Mrs. Freeman was the only surviving daughter of the late Philip Triller of Trafalgar, Canada. Her ancestors came to this country in the first ship that sailed for Philadelphia. They settled in Essex county, New Jersey, and her grandmother, Mrs. Young, owned at one time, 200 acres of land, where Jersey City now stands. Her great-grandfather enlisted in the War of 1776, and witnessed the surrender of the sword by Cornwallis, to George Washington. He, with his family and others, moved to Canada in 1805. This was a hazardous journey by covered wagons. They carried with them a trunk in which all the money of the whole company was placed, each man taking his turn to guard it on the journey. This company settled between Grimsby and Toronto, near the shores of Lake Ontario, each taking up a large tract of land. Mr. Triller settled in Trafalgar, near the Sixteen Hills, where he built a large colonial home. Mr. Triller was also an officer in the War of 1812. A piece of the crimson silk sash which he wore at that time is preserved by the family. When the Rebellion of 1837 started, he was a sympathizer of the great leader, William Lyon Mackenzie, for whose capture, dead or alive, the government had offered a large reward. One night, hotly pursued by the soldiers, William Lyon Mackenzie fled to Mr. Triller's home. The officers in pursuit arrived on the same evening, but were so graciously received by the eldest daughter, who was considered very beautiful, that they forgot to search the house, and the life of Mackenzie was saved. Mr. Mackenzie donned women's attire, and with Mr. Triller's assistance escaped to friends at Niagara.

The present Premier of Canada, McKenzie King, is a grandson of William Lyon MacKenzie. Premier King recently visited the Triller homestead. This historic house is more than a century old, and is still in a good state of preservation. Mrs. Freeman was born, grew to maturity, and was married in this home. She was deeply interested in the early mission work that developed into what is now the South Congregational Church. For some time she was a member of this church, and one of its most active workers. In more recent years she has been a member of the Monroe Avenue Methodist church. For 12 years she has been an invalid, and unable to engage in active work, but has always maintained her deep interest in the church and all good works, and was a woman of splendid Christian character. Her mind was very active and vigorous to the last. She was a loyal and devoted member of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

She is survived by three children, Delmar Clarkson Freeman, of Franklin, Pa., Herbert P. Freeman of this city, and Mrs. Arvilla M. Lottridge of 167 Alexander street, with whom she made her home. Four grandchildren, Harry D. Freeman of Vancouver, B. C., Chester D. Freeman of Chicago, Ill., Herbert Stanley and Walter Freeman of this city and two great grandchildren.

He was a member of the old Union Blues of Rochester during the Civil War, and was an active member of the Rochester Historical Society. MISS ELLA E. SEE, ARTIST AND TEACHER BELOVED BY THOUSANDS, DIES FOLLOWING BRIEF ILLNESS

H. June 14, 1920

Members of the artist community of Rochester, as well as hundreds of persons who had been associated with Miss Ella E. See in her work as a teacher and artist, were greatly shocked yesterday afternoon to learn of her death, following a brief illness at the Knorr Convalescent Home in Troup Street.

Miss See was a daughter of the late William See, an architect and one of the founders of Mechanics Institute. She was born at a place called Pillar Point, near Watertown, and came to Rochester as a child with her parents and was one of the first pupils in the course of freehand drawing and painting at Mechanics Institute. Following her traveled abroad and in the West extensively, and this fact influenced her work to a marked degree. She was not content to adopt one style or mode of expression, but her work of different periods reveals a constant progression, a striving to improve and to approach perfection. Her early work was strongly marked by impressionism, her later pictures being more in the direction of realism. Her last, an Oregon canyon scene recently exhibited, was a daring bit of color work that attracted much admiring comment.

Because of her long association with Miss See and her intimate knowledge of the artist's achievements, Miss Herdle was deeply affected by the news of her friend's graduation, she studied at Columbia University and at the summer school for artists in Gloucester, Mass. In New York City she was a pupil of such instructors as Dow, Chase and Du Mond. In 1906 she became an instructor in art at West High School, a position she had filled ably since that time.

Since 1902 she had been a member of the board of control of the Rochester Art Club. She was also a member of the Corner Club and of the Women's City Club.

Speaking of her work as an artist, Miss Gertrude R. Herdle, director of Memorial Art Gallery, said yesterday that Miss See was one of the outstanding artists of Rochester, with a personality and talent that was most interesting to those who knew her. She had sudden passing. She spoke particularly of the spirit of service and self-sacrifice that marked Miss See's career, saying that in her work she always seemed to have in mind a wish to do something that would be helpful to the public.

So far as known, Miss See left no immediate relatives in Rochester. A cousin, Charles See of Michigan, who is visiting in this city, took charge of funeral arrangements.

Paintings Nearly Finished.

Principal William M. Bennett of West High School spoke highly of Miss See's work as a teacher and remarked feelingly on the fact that the series of mural paintings, "The Story of the Book," which Miss See was executing in one of the corridors, had been completed with the exception of the dedication tablet. There are now six completed paintings, the dedication tablet being the seventh and final of the series. Professor Bennett was not able to say last evening what might be done about having the series completed by another artist. Miss See was in the midst of designing the final painting when overtaken by fatal illness. She had devoted many hours to the task, which will stand as a permanent reminder of her long and faithful service to West High School.

Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock in Mt. Hope Chapel. Burial will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

The body has been removed to Jeffrey's undertaking rooms, 32 Chestnut Street.

H. Editor Faithful Service. June 15, 1920

Eighteen years ago Miss Ella E. See, whose artistic talent gave promise of bringing her far wider than local fame, accepted the office of instructor in art at West High School. So well did she carry on that when, in the midst of activities incident to closing the school year, death summoned her, she left a record of attainment and of faithful service that would be difficult to surpass. More than that, she left to mourn her departure a circle of friends numbered by hundreds.

Although born in another part of the state, Miss See was a true daughter of Rochester. Her education was received here, and it was in this city that she received that inspiration to achievement which marked her out for a career. It is said of her work that she was never satisfied to leave it as it was, but that each bit of interpretation in black and white or in color was but the spur to better and more perfect achievement. Her work was a progression, a growth as definite as that of life itself, and was therefore the true expression of that divine unrest which must go on while life endures.

There is a pathetic note in the unfinished paintings which Miss See was engaged in completing when called to another life. A group of several rural pictures, an allegory depicting "The Story of the Book," similar to a famous series in Washington, was being painted by Miss See in a corridor of West High School. Six of the series had been finished. There remained only the dedicatory panel, the design for which she was engaged in sketching. That blank wall where was to have appeared the last painting is eloquent of the story of patient and self-sacrificing devotion, of an unflinching spirit that paid no heed to physical ills.

Rochester owes much to Ella E. See. Had she lived to reap the fruits of her lifetime of effort, there seems no doubt she would have ranked even higher in her chosen field. As it was, through her instruction and inspiration there have been planted the seeds of other careers which in years to come may attain to those heights on which her gaze was fixed. The torch she bore has been passed to other hands; it will go on to illuminate and inspire generations yet unborn.

Hit When Crossing Street.

John Fraas, 84, who lived with a companion at 94 Front street and who was a veteran of the Civil War and an old-time custom shoemaker, was killed almost instantly when struck by an automobile at Main street east and South avenue, late yesterday. Feeble and hard of hearing, the aged man started to cross the street just as the traffic signals turned against him. Fannie Goldstein, 22, of 35 Weaver street started her car in motion as the signals changed. She sounded her klaxon but Fraas did not hear it and walked directly into the path of the car. He was knocked down and suffered a fractured skull which caused his death a short time after at Highland Hospital.

Mr. Fraas was one of the few old-time custom shoemakers remaining in this part of the state. He came from Germany when but a child and lived the rest of his life in this city. His old shop and store at 39 Front street, which he ran for some 50 years before he retired, is remembered as a gathering place for village philosophers and conversationalists of the old days when Rochester was but a village. When the Civil War broke out, Mr. Fraas volunteered in the 140th New York Regiment and served throughout the war. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Carrie Piper and Mrs. Frank Bravat, and one son William Fraas. Coroner Charles L. Maggio will hold an inquest. Mrs. Goldstein, who, according to police, admitted that she is an inexperienced driver, was not held.

JOSEPH A. KIRBY, 1920 PROMINENT LAWYER, DIES IN BATAVIA

July 10

Attorney Joseph A. Kirby of Rochester died yesterday morning in St. Jerome's Hospital, Batavia, where he was taken several weeks ago. An affection of the throat, which resulted in paralysis of the larynx, contributed largely to his death.

Beginning his career as a court stenographer in Buffalo, Mr. Kirby learned enough law in his court reporting and by outside study to qualify him for admission to the bar. At one time he was associated in the practice of law in this city with John J. Molnerney and Charles B. Bechtold, and both those attorneys testify to his shrewdness and ability. He later was a member of the firm of Kirby & Millener, until Attorney John A. Millener left Rochester to act as national counsel for a fraternal organization. Since that time he has practiced alone.

He leaves a wife, Mrs. Frances A. Kirby. Mr. and Mrs. Kirby lived at 15 Cumberland Street.

FORMER BANKER SUCCUMBS TO LONG ILLNESS

H. June 15
Harold P. Brewster, Former President of Rochester Savings Bank, Dead—Was Active in War Financing. 1925

Harold Pond Brewster, formerly head of the H. P. Brewster Company, former president and member of trustees of the Rochester Savings Bank and the Rochester

HAROLD P. BREWSTER.

Board of Education, died today after an illness of nearly two years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Brewster; one daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Wolcott, and six grandchildren.

Mr. Brewster was born and spent his entire life in this city, receiving his education in the Rochester public schools. Upon the completion of his education he entered the business world with the H. P. Brewster Co., where he continued until February, 1909, when he resigned to become president of the Rochester Savings Bank, where he had been a trustee since February, 1899.

While connected with this bank, Mr. Brewster established the Barrows Plan of School Savings in the Rochester schools and it was through his enthusiasm and energy that this plan has reached such large proportions in this city. During the war he was most active in the Liberty Loan campaigns, speaking in the factories and other institutions in Rochester and through his efforts, working in co-operation with his bank obtained subscriptions from some 100,000 persons covering an aggregate sum of over $12,000,000.

On June 15, 1923, at a luncheon at Genesee Valley Club he was decorated with the Chevalier of the Crown of Italy by Vittorio Rolandi-Ricci, Ambassador from Italy. This award was in recognition of Mr. Brewster's services as chairman of the drive by which Rochester Italians raised $50,000 toward the amount needed by Italy in equipping and rationing her armies during the World War.

In the fall of 1922 Mr. Brewster was stricken with the illness that culminated in his death. In February, 1923, he resigned as president of the Rochester Savings Bank and in February of this year gave up his position on the board of directors. Funeral services will take place privately Wednesday afternoon from his home at 24 North Goodman street. The Rev. Phillip A. Swartz of Third Presbyterian Church will officiate. Burial will be made in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Harold Pond Brewster. 1925

Many thousands of humble folk, as well as those well circumstanced, have heard with genuine regret of the passing from this life of Harold Pond Brewster. Known for years through his connection with the tobacco trade, he acquired a still wider acquaintance through his able administration in the Rochester Savings Bank.

But to Rochester of today, Mr. Brewster will live most vividly in memory through his self-sacrificing labors for the success of Liberty Loan drives and his enthusiastic sponsorship of the Italian relief fund. Mr. Brewster was a friend of Rochester's Italian residents and of those Americans of Italian lineage who were seeking to assist the Allied cause through both their former and present homelands. His decoration by the Italian government was well deserved. No man was more devoted to the cause of America and the Allies than was Mr. Brewster.

In still another direction Mr. Brewster displayed talent and vision for which Rochester can well afford to honor him. He was a pioneer in the field of school savings. While others hesitated, he embarked on a campaign to teach the children in the schools how to save their pennies and nickels and thus make dollars grow. Small at first, these savings have increased rapidly until now they are recognized as a valuable source of funds that go to create new capital and thus aid the march of progress.

It is one of the tragedies of existence in this world that men who give willingly of their time and talents for the good of their community and nation cannot live on to continue their beneficent labors indefinitely. Yet there remains the inspiration of example set by such a life of usefulness to spur others no less capable to similar good works.

D. & C. An Effective Citizen. 1925

Harold P. Brewster, who has just passed on, was a citizen of positive worth to Rochester. As a successful business man he contributed to the prosperity which is the foundation for the city's many other distinguishing qualities, but, like so many other successful Rochester business men, he also gave positive civic service to the community.

His forceful personality found effective expression in the Liberty Loan campaigns during the war, in which he was both a leader and a determined worker. As director of the Rochester campaign to add fifty thousand dollars to the Italian war fund, he won appropriate recognition from the Italian government.

His service to the city itself was typified best, perhaps, by his activities as a member of the Board of Education. While he was a commissioner, and president of the Rochester Savings Bank, he put into force the school savings plan started by a former fellow school commissioner, the late Howard P. Barrows. This project engaged his interest intensely and his work to make it go brought him into frequent and intimate contact with groups of children, a contact which he used effectively and enjoyed immensely.

The illness which made his relinquishment of active affairs imperative a year or two ago came as a great shock to his many personal friends and to others who knew him. Their sadness is increased by his death, but is mitigated by the memory of his public-spirited character.

Ray K. Savage Killed In Trolley-Auto Crash

Two Others Seriously Hurt; Girl May Die

J. H. June 22 1920

Jefferson Junior High Principal Accident Victim at Marsh Road Crossing—Funeral Services at Lake Avenue Church Tomorrow—John D. Sullivan and Daughter Injured.

Ray K. Savage, 46, of 36 Riverside street, principal of Jefferson Junior High School, was instantly killed; Eleanor Sullivan, 16, daughter of John D. Sullivan, of 902 Harvard street, Rochester attorney, was probably fatally hurt, and Mr. Sullivan was badly cut and bruised shortly before 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when the sedan in which they were riding, and which was driven by Mr. Sullivan, was struck by a west-bound Rochester & Eastern trolley car at the Marsh road crossing, a mile east of Pittsford.

Miss Sullivan, who is a sophomore at Columbia Preparatory School, lies at the Highland Hospital today with a fractured skull and serious cuts and bruises. Little hope is held for her recovery.

Eleanor Sullivan Believed fatally injured.

According to report the trolley car struck the rear end of the sedan, throwing it completely around and knocking the body off the chassis. Mr. Savage, who was riding in the back seat, was dropped directly onto the tracks in front of the trolley car. He was caught in the front trucks of the car and dragged some 300 feet before the trolley, in which the controller and the auxiliary air tank had been broken, could be brought to a stop. When picked up he was terribly crushed and both his legs had been severed from his body. Mr. Sullivan and his daughter were riding in the front seat. He was thrown clear of the wreckage and suffered cuts and bruises. His daughter was crushed in the wreckage of the automobile.

Stopped Before Accident.

According to Motorman James Parks, Conductor William Simmons, both of Canandaigua, passengers on the car and other witnesses interviewed shortly after the crash by Roy R. Hadsell, of the New York State Railway, the automobile appeared to have been stopped at one side of the crossing before the accident. The Marsh road is being used as a detour around repairs now in progress on the Palmyra road. Mr. Sullivan is said to have asked several persons along the road as to the best route through to his destination. In the midst of the wreckage of the automobile was found an open road map of the highways of the district, and it is believed the party stopped near the tracks to study the map.

The trolley, approaching from the west, where it is said there is a clear view of 1,500 feet, blew its whistles for the Palmyra road crossing, near the Marsh road crossing, and slowed up at that crossing, as a woman appeared to be about to take the car. She evidently changed her mind and went back into the station. The car had been slowed down to about 15 miles an hour at the Palmyra road crossing, according to Motorman Parks. It put on power and was going about 25 miles an hour when the accident occurred. Just prior to crossing the Marsh road, according to passengers, the motorman again blew the whistle for that crossing.

Above, Marsh road crossing, where automobile driven by John D. Sullivan was struck by Rochester & Eastern trolley just as auto was almost clear of tracks, and driven to side and into fence at right, where planks are broken. Ray K. Savage was killed and Mr. Sullivan's daughter Eleanor was probably fatally injured.

Saw Auto; Blew Whistle.

Parks reports that he saw the automobile standing near the tracks; saw it start and lunge forward, as though it were being started in high gear. He says that he blew his whistles several short blasts. The automobile continued forward until about half across the tracks, when it stalled with a jerk. The motorman threw on his air brakes, but it was too late, and the momentum of the trolley carried it forward into the machine. The crash snapped off the controller, and also shattered the auxiliary air tank, thus shutting off more power for the brakes.

The crash, heard for some quarter of a mile about the district, attracted many persons to the scene. Some 20 passengers on the car were badly shaken up and interurban motor traffic was held up for more than an hour. The trolley was towed into Rochester and passengers transferred to another car at the city limits.

The party had left Rochester, enroute for Colgate University, at Hamilton, where Mrs. Savage and her daughter, Edith, had been attending commencement exercises, where a friend of the family was graduating.

Hundreds Shocked at News.

News of the tragedy spread rapidly through the city, announcement of it going to many homes over the radio, from Lake Avenue Baptist Church, where Dr. Albert W. Beaven, Mr. Savage's pastor, gave the news to his congregation. Earlier, the information had been carried over the telephone to many of the teachers and educational works and friends of Mr. Savage. It came as a great shock to his associates and several of his teachers were prostrated by the news, and in two cases the aid of a physician was summoned.

Speaking of the death of Mr. Savage, the Rev. Dr. Beaven said: "This has been a great shock to me. He was one of the fairest chaps I have known. He was doing great work in Jefferson Junior High School and I know that Rochester has lost one of its really great citizens."

Superintendent of Schools Herbert S. Weet when advised of the tragedy, said: "It's a tragic loss. He was one of our ablest men as shown by the fact he was promoted to the principalship of one of our junior high schools, one of the most important posts in our entire system. He enjoyed the complete confidence of all with whom he came in contact. It is a striking shock to us all."

Pioneer in Junior High Work.

Mr. Savage was one of the pioneers and a leading figure in junior high school work in this city, his accomplishments being so highly esteemed that he was called upon to teach junior high school administration in the Johns Hopkins Summer School in Baltimore, Md., which he did in 1922 and 1923. He was to have given a course in junior high school work at the University of Rochester Summer School this summer. He was looked upon by all with whom he was associated in educational fields as a sane, dependable leader, a loyal and thorough director, whose judgments were sound and whose interest unflinching.

Mr. Savage was born in Oswego, May 1, 1879, and after being graduated from Oswego High School attended the University of Rochester, taking a degree of bachelor of arts from that institution with the class of 1903. Shortly after his graduation he was appointed principal of Lake View School 7, where he served until 1919, when he assumed principalship of Jefferson Junior High School. From 1900 to 1902 he taught Latin in the Oswego High School and in 1921 gave courses in pedagogy at the summer sessions of the University of Rochester. Mr. Savage also took several summer courses at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York city, and in 1916 received the degree of master of arts from that college.

Taught Foreign Born.

While still in college here, Mr. Savage, with another undergraduate of the U. of R. opened one of the first night school classes to teach foreign-born Americans the ways and manners of their adopted country. His first classes in this field were in teaching English and the work was so successful that it has grown to its present large and important proportions. The work, which was entirely voluntary on the part of the two young undergraduates, has proved of incalculable worth to the city.

Mr. Savage was a leading member of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, Corinthian Lodge of Masons, Hamilton Chapter, Royal Arch Masons and Monroe Commandery, Knights Templar. He was also affiliated with the Delta Upsilon fraternity and was keenly in-

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Antoinette Brady Savage; one daughter, Edith Savage, a junior at the University of Rochester, and one son, Raymond F., a second-year pupil at Charlotte High School.

Funeral Tomorrow.

Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning at Lake Avenue Baptist Church, the Rev. Dr. A. W. Beaven officiating. Burial at Riverside Cemetery will be private.

Bearers will be Herbert S. Weet, superintendent of schools; William Earl Hawley, principal of Monroe Junior High; Theodora A. Zornow, principal of Madison Junior High; George W. Cooper, principal at School 43; Raymond C. Koepel, director of manual training, and Arthur Rogers, of the shop school faculty.

Pays High Tribute.

William F. Love, president of the 1903 Class, University of Rochester, of which Principal Savage was a member, was shocked at news of the fatality. He immediately ordered a floral tribute sent to the Savage residence on behalf of the alumni.

As soon as funeral arrangements are perfected members of the class will be informed of the time and will arrange to attend in a body. Mr. Love said.

Mr. Love paid a personal tribute to the scholarly attainments and manhood of Mr. Savage. "He was a splendid scholar and citizen, as attested by his standing in the community and the responsible position he held in the public school system for many years," Mr. Love said.

Seniors to Attend Service.

Members of the senior class of Jefferson Junior High School are asked to meet at Lake Avenue Baptist Church at 10:45 o'clock tomorrow morning to attend the funeral services. Wilfred Merlich, president of the class, requests that the girls wear their graduation cos-

Editorial
Ray K. Savage

Death of Ray K. Savage, principal of Jefferson Junior High School, comes as a shock to all who knew him personally or were acquainted with his work as an educator.

Mr. Savage was a man who took his work seriously. During the long period of years when he was principal of Lakeview School 7, after his graduation from the University of Rochester in 1903, he was continually improving his educational equipment and preparing himself for better and more responsible work.

Not only did he take courses at Columbia during the summer for a number of years, earning the degree of master of arts, but he also worked for a time in the auditing department of one of Rochester's largest business organizations to acquire first-hand knowledge of the relation of education to practical business requirements.

Thus equipped, he was the logical choice in 1919 as principal of Jefferson Junior High School. His work as an executive and teacher justified his selection for this responsible position. Recognition of his standing in this comparatively new field was shown by the invitation to conduct courses in junior high school administration at the summer school of Johns Hopkins University. He did this for two years and was to have conducted a similar course for the University of Rochester this summer.

Mr. Savage was 46 years old, with many years of usefulness before him when he was killed in the accident yesterday, the automobile in which he was a passenger being hit by an interurban car. His death is a loss to the Rochester school system and the community, as well as a source of grief to his relatives and numerous friends.

Hundreds Pay Tribute To Ray K. Savage

SERVICES AT LAKE AVENUE BAPTIST CH.

Dr. A. W. Beaven Pays High Tribute to Educator Whose Tragic Death Sunday Shocked Entire Community.

Educators, professional and business men and women, and pupils of Jefferson Junior High School laid aside their tasks this morning to pay their last tribute to the memory of Ray K. Savage, principal of Jefferson Junior High, whose tragic death Sunday afternoon shocked the entire community.

Lake avenue Baptist Church, in which the services were held, were crowded to the doors, there being at least 2,000 men, women and children present. It was a gathering which showed the wide influence exerted by the man who was killed when an automobile in which he was riding was struck by a Rochester and Eastern trolley at Marsh road crossing.

Members of the Board of Education, head by President Charles F. Wray; public school executives, teachers in Jefferson Junior High as well as in the other schools; several members of the class of 1903, University of Rochester of which Mr. Savage was a member; members of the various church boards of Lake Avenue Baptist, all these were present with hundreds of others whose lives Mr. Savage had touched in one way or another during his life.

Life Makes Challenge.

The note of sorrow was not emphasized in the services, rather did the Rev. A. W. Beaven, the pastor, bring out the challenge to the school authorities and children to carry on the work which Mr. Savage had started. Mr. Beaven's tribute to Mr. Savage was in part as follows:

"We are here because we loved him. His inspiration he imparted to the souls of our children. He lifted their vision to something finer. The people of the Ninth and Tenth wards, yes, the people of the entire city are indebted to him, for he has placed the stamp of fine personality and sterling leadership on our boys and girls.

"Ray Savage was the kind of a fine, clean, upstanding citizen that makes the world worth living in. Out of a sense of his loss comes a benediction on these boys and girls, the graduating class of Jefferson Junior High, whose lives will hold problems and temptations. God help them to be what he thought they were going to be, good citizens of a great nation.

"Life is not measured by quantity, but by quality. Thank God for Ray Savage. He has closed his books here to open them over there. His life is a challenge to those associated with him."

Services Simple.

The services at the church were simple, as were those conducted at the home at 36 Riverside street prior to the church gathering. Norman Nairn, at the organ, played appropriate hymns as the body was carried into and out of the church.

At the conclusion of the service, members of the graduating class at Jefferson Junior High School—the girls dressed in their graduation costumes—formed an escort through which the body was carried to the hearse.

The bearers were Herbert S. West, superintendent of schools; William E. Hawley, principal of Monroe Junior High; Theodore A. Zornow, principal of Madison Junior High; George W. Cooper, principal of Theodore Roosevelt School 42; Raymond C. Keuple, superintendent of the bureau of work permit certification of the Board of Education, and Arthur H. N. Rogers, supervisor of industrial arts at Jefferson Junior High School—all closely associated with Mr. Savage in school work.

MORTUARY RECORD

Mrs. Mary A. Wheeler.

Mrs. Mary A. Wheeler died yesterday at her residence, 225 Rutgers Street. Mrs. Wheeler came to this city in the early eighties and throughout the greater part of her life she maintained a keen interest in Rochester, its people and its industrial growth; and, with her husband, the late Herbert Wesley Wheeler, did much, in a quiet way, to help with financial aid and words of encouragement many young persons of the city who were desirous of securing an education or entering business. Several of Rochester's prosperous industries credit their humble start to the financial assistance and moral support proffered them in trying days by Mrs. Wheeler and her husband.

ABRAM J. NEWMAN.

The six sons of Abram J. Newman, former vice-president of the Newman Brothers Grain Company, who ten years ago bore the body of their mother to her grave in Mount Hope cemetery, will act as bearers at their father's funeral to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Of Mr. Newman's twelve children, six sons and six daughters, one son lives at Homer, La., and another at Newark, N. J. The rest live here. Last Saturday the Newman family had a reunion, with all the children present. Mr. Newman took an active part in the celebration. Tuesday night, after eating supper at his home, No. 548 Flint street, he rose from the table, sat down in an arm chair, when he died suddenly. He had been in apparently good health.

Born in Reuch, Cambridgeshire, England on August 13, 1839, Mr. Newman came to Rochester more than fifty years ago. He retired from active business about twenty years ago.

H. Editorial June 10 Michael J. Zimmerman, 1920

In the death of Michael J. Zimmerman, Deputy Chief of Police, the city of Rochester suffers the loss of a faithful public servant and the Rochester Police Department an officer whose presence was an inspiration to the members of the force.

"Big Mike" Zimmerman gave the best years of his active life to the service of Rochester. He was utterly without fear, with a fine sense of discipline and of the dignity of his position. Yet he was one of the most companionable of men, a type of policeman who could be friendly without inviting familiarity or contempt for law enforcement. From the time he joined the force until illness obliged him to retire, he inspired a wholesome respect for the law, as well as a spirit of order and of confidence in the strong arm of the law.

Departure from this life of Deputy Chief Zimmerman will not disrupt the Police Department, for many capable men remain to carry on the work to which he devoted his life. But it is not exceeding the truth to say that as a result of his conscientious labors and his spirit of service, the Rochester Police Department is better able to fulfill its part in the difficult business of upholding the law and safeguarding the citizens.

DEATH TAKES C. E. KELLOGG, SCHOOL HEAD

D. & C. B. & C.
Principal of Washington

Junior Second to Die

This Summer.

Aug. 28 - 1925
VERSATILE FIGURE

Associates Praise Long Career as Leader in Education.

Clinton E. Kellogg, principal of Washington Junior High School, died at his home, No. 76 Gorsline street, yesterday, after an illness that extended almost a year, aged 47 years.

This is the second time in a little over 2 months that death invaded the teaching profession of Rochester and taken one of its strong characters, and one of the leaders in the junior high school movement. Friends have known since early spring that Mr. Kellogg's life was ebbing slowly away—that only a miracle could effect a recovery. His death, therefore, was not the sudden and swift tragedy that marked the passing of his associate and intimate friend, Ray K. Savage, former principal of Jefferson Junior High, last June.

Mr. Kellogg had risen through merit to an excellent position among the school men of the country. His successes had been honestly won, and came through unusual diligence, and application, his associates declared.

He was born at Fulton Center, Mich., on April 19, 1878. His father died in his infancy and his stepfather in his early manhood. He was educated in the country schools of Michigan, and at the State Normal School at Ypsilanti. Before attending the latter institution, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903, he had taught in country schools. After graduation he was a grammar school principal in his native state. In June 1906, he became principal of Concord School No. 18.

Concord school is the largest elementary school in the Rochester system. Its registration is almost wholly foreign and Mr. Kellogg's work there was outstanding. One of his characteristics was that he became deeply and sincerely interested in the lives of his pupils, his friends said. This was true while he was at Concord school and it carried over into his career as principal of Washington Junior High school to which he was transferred in January, 1921.

Noted as Educator

Developed Washington Junior.

Washington Junior High School was one of the first schools of its type east of the Mississippi river. Few schools have attracted as wide attention and few schools have deserved to an equal degree the recognition which has come to it, educators declare. James M. Glass, its first principal, whom Mr. Kellogg succeeded when the former resigned to become director of junior high schools for Pennsylvania, had built up an enviable reputation both for himself and for his school. To the task of measuring up to the standard of his predecessor and the school, Mr. Kellogg adjusted himself easily and smoothly. That he made this easy adjustment was a matter of pride to his teaching associates, who had sincere affection for him. To them he was "Pa" Kellogg, and, in that appellation there was always both a note of pride and the sincerest respect.

Mr. Kellogg was a many-sided man. He was a maker of teachers and this he was as successful as he was in his administrative work. Teacher after teacher, has credited his success to Mr. Kellogg's encouragement, patience, and determination that he should make the most of his abilities. On learning that his advisor could not recover, one teacher remarked:

"It is just as if a comrade had been shot from ambush. There are many of us who owe whatever success we have had to him. He took us as teachers with ambition, but sometimes without definite aims, and directed us in the way that we should go, placing before us a goal that stabilized and held us to the course."

Took Degree Here.

While he was developing Concord school, making Washington Junior High the model for junior high organization the world over and shaping the destinies of teachers, Mr. Kellogg was working assiduously to advance himself professionally. For a number of years he was a student in the extension division of the University of Rochester, being graduated with the A. B. degree in 1923.

During the World war, Mr. Kellogg served in the War Risk Bureau in Washington for a time. He had been president of the Rochester Teacher's Association, and had been active in the New York State Teachers' Association.

Mr. Kellogg was a naturalist of ability and he occasionally gave nature talks before small groups of people, illustrating them with slides from photographs he had taken, and which had been colored by Mrs. Kellogg.

Zornow Lauds Career.

Theodore A. Zornow, principal of Madison Junior High School, now in Europe, said a few days before he sailed:

"Mr. Kellogg is an unusual man. He has been one of the very strong figures in education. He is sympathetic, sincere and earnest. He is clear thinking and he is lovable. It is hard to imagine the Rochester school system without him. He never has faltered in the face of problems of administration. When other minds hesitated, he was able to make a clear-cut analysis of the factors involved, and expeditiously and succinctly, and with rare power of persuasion, enunciate his views with conviction. He has possessed the faculty of seeing far in advance obstacles to be surmounted and difficulties to be ironed out. The result has been that most of these administrative hazards failed to materialize because they were adroitly avoided, and avoided in such a way that nothing was left undone that should have been done, and nothing done that should not have been done."

William E. Hawley, principal of Monroe Junior High School, said:

"Mr. Kellogg stood for achievement. His strong characteristic in educational work was his superb administrative ability. He administered everything with clarity, definiteness and commonsense, but with firmness. His work in developing student government and the code of honor at Washington Junior High School, are two outstanding features recognized throughout the United States. His influence in placing upon a sound pedagogical and psychological basis the principles and practices of the junior high school, has been notable. As an administrator, Mr. Kellogg had a wholesome sense of things and the needs of his pupils. The finest piece of work done in this city is the Americanization of the neighborhood served by Washington Junior High School, a work in which Mr. Kellogg was committed wholeheartedly. His school at Concord No. 18, was the first to adopt the semi-departmental plan, a plan which has become famous throughout the United States."

O'Hern Pays Tribute.

Joseph P. O'Hern, assistant superintendent of schools, said:

"The death of Clinton E. Kellogg comes as a great loss to the teachers of the Rochester public schools and to the thousands of pupils and their parents who knew him so well as principal of Concord School No. 18 and of Washington Junior High School. Mr. Kellogg was one of the outstanding educational leaders in the school work of Rochester. He was a man of unusual ability and high ideals. No one in the school system of Rochester was more beloved than Clinton E. Kellogg."

"Mr. Kellogg came to Rochester in 1906 and was at once assigned as principal of Concord School. Mr. Kellogg saw Concord School develop from a small grade school to one with an attendance of approximately two thousand pupils. It was during his principalship at Concord that the semi-departmental system was adopted in large grammar schools like Andrews Schools No. 9 and Anthony School No. 27. In this new type of organization he showed marked ability as an organizer. He was one of a group of a few school principals who took a special interest in the problem of readings as applied to foreign pupils. He wrote a number of articles on the subject which attracted wide attention in educational circles."

"As principal of Washington Junior High School he showed the same marked ability and initiative that made him such an outstanding figure as a grammar school principal. He threw his heart and soul into the life and work of Washington Junior High School. He was probably one of the best known junior high school principals in the country."

Summer School Last Work.

Mr. Kellogg's last work was in connection with organizing the junior high school training courses at Washington Junior High School, part of the summer school of the University of Rochester. Mr. Kellogg was not able to assume the directorship when the school opened on June 24th, but most of the administrative work was done before he was compelled to retire.

Mr. Kellogg leaves his wife, Mrs. Myrtle B. Kellogg, and two daughters, Delores H. Kellogg, a teacher at Monroe Junior High School, and Marion G. Kellogg, a sophomore student at the University of Rochester.

Funeral services will take place at 2:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon at the home in Gorsline street. Interment will be in Riverside cemetery.

MANY AT FUNERAL

on His Work.

Funeral services for Clinton E. Kellogg, principal of Washington Junior High School, were conducted yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock from his late home, No. 76 Gorsline street. An eulogy, prayer and benediction were delivered by Rev. Albert W. Beaven, D.D., minister of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, of which Mr. Kellogg was an associate member.

Dr. Beaven spoke of the exemplary life of Mr. Kellogg, his work with children and for the community, his love of nature, and the inspiration his life had been to all who knew him. He said that Mr. Kellogg had died in the flower of his life work, the fruits of which could not reach maturity for years to come. The minister declared that Mr. Kellogg had been a big man—that his outlook on life had been big, wholesome and constructive, and that no one who knew him could ever forget the quiet forcefulness of his personality. Dr. Beaven admonished Mr. Kellogg's associates in Washington Junior High School that part of the immortality of their leader depended upon how well they carried on in the spirit which he had shown and in the way he had cut out for them.

Faced Death Courageously.

During the course of his remarks, Dr. Beaven spoke of the relationship that had existed between Mr. Kellogg and Ray K. Savage, who was killed in an automobile accident in June. For years, he said that these two men not only had been neighbors and associated in school work, setting high standards of achievement, but that they had been like devoted brothers. Tragically, he said, had marked the passing of Mr. Savage, but the passage of Mr. Kellogg was no less incomprehensible.

Dr. Beaven then spoke of the fine courage with which Mr. Kellogg for weeks had faced death, knowing that it was coming, and setting things in order so that when the end came, he would be like a traveler who, having prepared for a long journey, takes the long road, and as he turns the bend waves a cheery goodbye. This brave fight, the minister said, was a reflection of the characteristic attitude of Mr. Kellogg in life—to meet every crisis with courage and confidence.

Burial was made on a knoll in Riverside cemetery only a few feet from the grave of Mr. Savage, so that these two men, who had been friends and neighbors in life, are not so far separated in death. At the request of Mrs. Kellogg, Mr. Savage's grave had been covered with some of the flowers sent for Mr. Kellogg, of which there were great quantities.

Many Associates Present.

Every school principal who had returned from vacation, attended the funeral. The teaching staffs of Washington and Jefferson Junior High Schools were well represented, and there was a good representation of the teachers from the other junior high schools, and from the elementary schools.

The bearers were Jackson Gallup, who succeeded Mr. Kellogg as principal of Concord School No. 18; Squire H. Snell, principal of Longfellow School No. 36; William E. Hawley, principal of Monroe Junior High School; Mark W. Way, principal of Henry Lomb School No. 20; R. Park Parkhill, member of the teaching staff at Washington Junior High School, recently appointed principal of Seward School No. 19; and R. L. Butterfield, principal of Charlotte High School, and president of the Rochester Teachers' Association, of which Mr. Kellogg was a former president.

The Board of Education was represented at the services by James P. B. Duffy and Mrs. Henry G. Danforth; the central office of the Board of Education by Joseph P. O'Brien, assistant superintendent; J. Sankay Mullan, secretary to the board, and Miss Mabel E. Simpson, director of kindergartens and elementary grades. The New York State Teachers' Association in which Mr. Kellogg had been active, was represented by Richard A. Sealing, secretary, Herbert S. Weet, superintendent of schools, is out of town and could not return for the services.

MISS FRINKE, LONG IN MUSIC, IS DEAD

D. & C. - Sept. 1
Was Secretary of Festival

Chorus Fifteen Years.

FRIEDA FRINKE.

Musical people throughout this city, as well as personal friends, were saddened Sunday by the death of Miss Frieda E. Frinke at her home, No. 320 Seward street. For about fifteen years, since its formation; she had been secretary and treasurer of the Festival Chorus. Before that she was secretary of the old Tuesday Musicals. Beginning in early youth her activity in musical circles, Miss Frinke maintained it until her death. For some time she was director of music in St. Mark's Lutheran Church and for eighteen years was secretary to Charles F. Boylan, teacher of music.

Obscure persons and others whom she helped to success knew her for her kindly qualities. It was said yesterday by one who knew her intimately that her private charities and unselfish acts for others would never be known. Two groups have special reason to remember her—those who needed at some time the necessities of life, and others who, although clothed and fed, longed to cultivate musical talents. She helped young persons working for scholarships or otherwise struggling for a musical education. Most all of her strictly musical work was done without pay.

Miss Frinke was born in Brooklyn in 1882. She came with her parents to Rochester in 1895. Her interest in the city's musical life, since that time, had never ceased.

She leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Frinke. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at St. Mark's Lutheran Church. Rev. C. A. Behnke, minister, will officiate.

Emil J. Esser, for a number of years one of the leading shoe merchants of the city, died suddenly while witnessing a performance in Victoria Theater last night. Mr. Esser was seen to topple forward in his seat, and was carried to the theater lobby. An ambulance was summoned. He was pronounced dead on his arrival.

Coroner David Atwater was notified and ordered the body removed to the Morgue, where he will conduct an autopsy today to determine the cause of death. Mr. Esser had been in apparently good health and his death was most unexpected.

Born in Erie.

Mr. Esser was born in Erie, Pa., and came to this city 45 years ago, where he found employment with the shoe firm of Gould, Lee & Luce. After working there for a period of ten years, he set up in business for himself at 24 State Street.

When business began to move up Main Street East, the Esser store moved from State Street to 143 Main Street East and later to 155 Main Street East where he continued, until he retired two years ago.

In 1883 he married Catherine Fitzgerald in St. Bridget's Church. She survives him with three children, Rev. E. J. Esser of Trumansburg, Miss Ann Esser of Pittsford and Mrs. Carl Loewenguth of this city. He also leaves three sisters, Mrs. George Gunenger, Mrs. Katherine Fuhrman and Miss Emma Dunars, and a brother, Martin Esser, all of Erie, Pa.

He was a charter member of Rochester Council, Knights of Columbus, and served that organization as treasurer for a number of years. He was a fourth degree member of that order. He was also a member of the old First Separate Company, National Guard and the Holy Name Society of Blessed Sacrament Church.

Another Teacher Passes

The schools of Rochester owe their high reputation throughout the English-speaking world to the quality of the men and women who have directed them, and it is a tragic misfortune that this year two of the city's foremost school directors should be taken away by death.

The sudden death of Ray K. Savage removed the head of one of the four junior high schools. The death of Clinton E. Kellogg, not unexpected but none the less mourned, removed another junior high school principal.

The places of both of these men will be filled—adequately, such is the efficiency and foresight with which the teaching staff of the schools is maintained—but the work they have done and the impress of their personality will not soon be forgotten.

The work that fell to Mr. Kellogg was particularly difficult and important, for it is not one of the least tasks of the public schools of the country to train the children of those who come from foreign lands both in the language and the customs of America and in the ideals which animate the nation.

Language and customs can be taught by efficient pedagogy, but ideals can only be instilled by a teacher of sympathetic and respected character. Mr. Kellogg's success at Concord School, No. 18, where his pupils were largely the recent or immediate descendants of oversea peoples, prepared him excellently for his later more important task of starting pupils of the same type out into the world at the close of their schooling—for the junior high school to many pupils served by Washington Junior High School is the end of their formal education.

Mr. Kellogg was efficient and progressive in the practice of his profession; he added to efficiency and foresight a personality that won respect and admiration from his pupils, and brought out the best abilities in the many teachers who served under him.

Such men mean much to a city like Rochester; to a country like the United States. Their influence is incalculably wide and valuable.

John S. Bingeman, known through the country as a jobber and importer of buttons, and an early settler of this city, died suddenly last night while attending a theater. Mr. Bingeman was a pioneer of the button industry in this city. He was born in Breslau, Ont., and acquired his early education in that place and learned the button trade.

He came to this city in 1887 and entered into a partnership with M. B. Shantz, forming the company of M. B. Shantz & Company, which is now the Rochester Button Company. He remained a member of this firm until 1891, when he sold his interest and became sales manager for the German-American Button Company, a firm that was organized by General Noyes.

He acted in that capacity until 1894, when he organized the firm of Bingeman & Baxter, his partner being Major R. Baxter, who for a number of years had been associated with M. B. Shantz & Company. From the beginning this firm prospered and conducted one of the most extensive importing businesses in this line in the country.

In April, 1891, Mr. Bingeman married Miss Frances L. Davidson of Michigan. Mr. Bingeman continued with this firm until 1918, when he retired from active business owing to ill health.

Associated with Son.

About two years ago he again took up active business and became associated with his son, E. Russell Bingeman, in the button business, forming the firm of E. R. Bingeman & Company. Mr. Bingeman was named president of this firm and served in that capacity at the time of his death.

He was a member of Central Presbyterian Church since he came to this city and served as a member of the board of trustees of that church for a number of years. He was also a member of Oak Hill Country Club. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Frances L. Bingeman; one daughter, Miss Alice R. Bingeman, who is well known in society and Horse Show circles, being one of the exhibitors of the Rochester Horse Show at Edgerton Park last week; one son, E. Russell Bingeman, and one sister, Mrs. Isadore B. Snyder of Ketchener, Mich.

The notice of the funeral will be made later.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ackerman
Until End.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ackerman, 108 years old and for 101 years a resident of this city, died Thursday at St. Ann's Home, where she had lived for several years. Born in Germany she came to this city when she was seven years old. She was the oldest member of St. Joseph's Church.

She was married at St. Joseph's Church and had two sons and two daughters, all of whom died years ago. Until she was 82, Mrs. Ackerman lived in the little cottage where she had brought up her family and had seen them die. When home duties added to the work necessary to earn her daily bread proved too arduous a task for her to keep up, she moved to St. Ann's Home, then located in Main street east.

Until recently she had been able to be about a few hours each day and was accustomed to walk about the corridors of the home. She had retained her faculties to a remarkable degree. Hard work and plenty of plain food had been her motto throughout her life. It was her greatest joy to sit with friends and talk of recipes for making old fashioned dishes.

Funeral services will take place this morning from St. Ann's Home. Burial will be made in the Holy Sepulchre cemetery.

Miss Scott came to Mechanics Institute as one of the first instructors in the department of applied art. Besides her work in teaching she had considerable individual work, which was held in high regard by critics. Her work is said to have been marked by a strong sense of color and force in presentation.

Attending the schools in her native town she later entered the Art Institute in Chicago, where she studied for three years. This was followed by a year of study at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia and a year and a half of study in Paris. She completed her work abroad by an extended period of study in Holland.

Leaving Mechanics Institute, she took up the work in the city, giving lessons in various crafts for disabled persons for several years, after which she returned to Dubuque. It is said that throughout her life she was interested in emphasizing the need of art in the home and in trying to persuade persons of the value of art in every day life.

rites to-morrow FOR F. F. CHURCH D. & C. Oct. 21 Services at Unitarian Church at 2 O'clock.

FREDERICK F. CHURCH.

Frederick F. Church, of No. 306 Oxford street, well known patent attorney, who died suddenly while witnessing a performance in the Eastman Theater Monday night, was chairman of the patent branch of the American Bar Association and had been active in framing proposed legislation for amendments of the patent laws.

Mr. Church represented several of the large industries in this city, including the Eastman Kodak Company, the Taylor Instrument Companies and the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company.

Although Mr. Church's chief interests were his business and his home, he had a wide circle of friends in Rochester. He had resided for several years prior to the marriage of his three daughters in Culver road.

Funeral services for Mr. Church will take place at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon from the Unitarian Church.

Frederick F. Church.

The death of Frederick F. Church, shocking to his many friends in its suddenness, removes from the life of the city a quiet but much respected and useful citizen. Skilled as a patent attorney, he added to that mastery of his profession a quiet kindness and strength of character that made him a mainstay of many worthy activities and a strong factor for good in the community.

Firm in his convictions, he did not intrude them upon others; a possessor of sound common sense, his advice was sought in many enterprises of importance. Rochester has many such citizens, but it could not be the city of character it is if it did not have them in sufficient number to keep the economic basis of its life firm and its cultural and philanthropic activities sound and progressive.

The honorary bearers were Walter S. Hubbell, Joseph A. Taylor, Charles A. Case, Willard Rich, Herbert J. Wann, Clarence P. Moser, Edward W. Harris and Edward Bausch. The active bearers were Richard L. Jackson, Clifford B. Smith, Russell B. Griffith, Embury C. McDowell and Edward Campston. Interment was made in Mount Hope cemetery.

Among the many friends from Rochester and Western New York attending the funeral was a committee representing the Rochester Bar Association. The members were John Desmond, C. Schuyler Davis, Eugene VanVoorhis, John S. Bronk, Homer E. A. Dick.

Bar Adopts Resolutions.

Resolutions on the death of Mr. Church were adopted at a special meeting of the Rochester Bar Association over which Judge William W. Webb presided. The resolutions, drawn by a committee composed of Joseph W. Taylor, Morrison H. McMath, Herman W. Morris, William B. Lee and John P. Bowman, follow:

Death again invades our ranks. This time, just past the prime of his life, measured by years, but in the very heyday of his activities and usefulness, Frederick Fargo Church is called. And the call comes with startling, shocking suddenness. At noontime he was a participant at a luncheon given to a famous explorer. In the evening, with the companion of his adult years, he was indulging in a favorite diversion. There without warning, without pain, with only a barely audible sigh, the thread snapped and a brave life came to its end.

Mr. Church was born at Alexandria, on the south bank of the Potomac river, May 4, 1864. His boyhood and early manhood years were passed in the city of Washington. His education was acquired in the public schools of that city. Directly from those schools he entered upon his legal studies in the office of his brothers, Melville and Joseph Benedict Church, the former then and still one of the country's eminent patent lawyers. Simultaneously he pursued the prescribed course of study in the Law School of Columbia University, from which he received his LL. B. degree in 1889. In the same year he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. In the following year the same Law School conferred on him the degree of LL. M.

Beloved in City.

The next year, 1888, found him in Rochester representing for his brothers the F. E. Graves Elevator Company. Rochester obviously appealed to him because he never left until yesterday-day he was called away forever. He was admitted to the bar here in 1889. At first, 1888-9, in an office in the Reynolds Arcade, and thereafter continuously in an office in the Wilder building he practiced his profession with ever increasing success.

As a lawyer he stood high. No one in his locality excelled him in his chosen field of patent and trade mark law. In his clientele were many of the large successful industrial enterprises of our city. Clients seldom, if ever, left him. New ones constantly sought his services and advice. That that there is no higher need of praise.

As a man there were upon him no disfiguring scars. His courtesy was unflinching, his character unblemished, his integrity unswerving.

As a companion he was a joy forever, genial, interested and interesting, always ready with a pleasant word. In the customary diversions of humankind he was an ardent enthusiast. Life had to him all its varied meanings and in each he was a vital part. In the various bar associations, local, state and national, he occupied a conspicuous place and never shirked the onerous duties he was asked to bear. In his clubs and among all his associates he carried always his full share of duties and responsibilities. Always he did his best. None can do more.

Of him it may truly be said, "None knew him but to love him."

Mr. Wilson was born in Rochester and had lived here all his life, having watched the city grow from a small community, consisting largely of farms and marshes, to its present size.

Mr. Wilson was born in a little farmhouse in what now is Wilson street, the son of Edwin F. Wilson, who lived to be 90 years old, and Lucinda Davis, who was born in Rochester. His uncle, John S. Wilson, lived to be 104 years old. He received his early education in a two-room, brick schoolhouse in Joseph avenue, at Baden street, the site of the present Andrews School, No. 9.

Mr. Wilson did not become established in the florist business until he was 40 years old. Beginning in a small store, he built up the business until now there are three stores.

Several years ago Mr. Wilson retired from active business but still maintained a deep interest in flowers and trees. In 1921, when he was well over 80, he cut down walnut trees, which he had planted sixty years before on his property. He had always been interested in such work and had planted trees and orchards, continually planting and replacing trees throughout his life.

He leaves his wife, Esther Perrin Wilson, who is nearly 90 years old; three sons, Edwin P., Hiram W. and Randolph W. Wilson, who were his partners in business, and a brother, Franklin E. Wilson. Connected for many years with his father, Nehemiah Osburn, in the contracting business, and owner of much valuable property in the city, Mr. Osburn played an important part in the growth and development of Rochester.

The son of Nehemiah and Sarah Van Schuyler Osburn, he was born on July 12, 1837, in an old homestead located in East avenue where the Manhattan restaurant now stands. The family later moved to a residence at East avenue and Main street east, on the site of the present Liberty building.

He also had large real estate holdings in Rochester and in both these activities the son was interested largely.

Nehemiah Osburn built the first Osburn House on the present site of the Granite building, and the present Osburn House in South avenue, where Emory Osburn and his wife spent several winters after their removal from their Rochester residence to their summer home on Canandaigua lake.

Mr. Osburn was a lifelong member of Christ Episcopal Church and served on the Board of Vestrymen and the Building Committee when the church was erected.

His death resulted from an injury received last June, when he fell and fractured his hip. On October 1st he was removed from the Thompson Memorial Hospital at Canandaigua, where he had been since his accident, to the Osburn House, where he died.

SIMON HAUS, EASTMAN CO. VETERAN, DIES

D. & C. - Oct. 6
Expires at East Avenue Home After Protracted Illness. 1925

HAD RAPID RISE

Credited with Development of Kodak Business in England.

Simon V. Haus, of No. 2,345 East avenue, veteran Kodak executive, died late last night after a protracted illness, of hemorrhage on the brain.

Simon V. Haus was one of the veterans in the organization of the Eastman Kodak Company, having served the Kodak firm for more than thirty-six years, eighteen of which were spent on the Continent. He was one of the men who entered the employ of the firm in its infancy and, starting in a minor capacity, advanced himself to the position of general manager of the European factories of the company, a position which he held until June, 1922.

Mr. Haus, after serving the Eastman company in a number of positions, was sent abroad in 1904 to reorganize the Harrow Kodak Works at Wealdstone, England. At that time the English plant was small in size. The outstanding achievement of Mr. Haus's career as a Kodak executive was the development of the English factory into a plant many times its former size and the placing of the products of the Wealdstone factory on a par with the American-made films and cameras.

Rose Rapidly with Company.

Mr. Haus started work as an employee in the developing and printing department of the Rochester factory and later held in succession responsible positions as emulsion foreman, superintendent of the Kodak Park paper department and manager of the Nepera chemical plant after it was consolidated with the Eastman interests. When he was sent to England in 1904, he intended to stay only a short time, but he liked the country so well and found his employment so congenial that he remained as works manager at his own request.

During the period that Mr. Haus was manufacturing head of Kodak in Great Britain, the factory was greatly increased in importance and size. He successfully introduced Kodak processes and skillfully adapted them to the special needs of conditions there. His superiors credit him with energy and ability in the development of the quality and uniformity of the English product.

Mr. Haus left the Harrow Works

in June, 1922, and returned to this country. In the spring of 1923 he was added the staff of executives assigned to the main office in State street where he had been employed since.

When he left Wealdstone, employees of the English Kodak plant presented Mr. Haus an antique grandfather clock, which was one of his most highly-prized possessions.

An account of the presentation of the timepiece by W. G. Bent, a fellow worker, in the London Telegraph, included the following recital of Mr. Haus's work abroad:

Transformed British Factory.

"Those who were there when Mr. Haus first came to England could picture the contrast in their own minds better than he could do in words. They had seen the working conditions, then and now; they had seen facilities of all kinds given for the well-being of their bodies and minds. They had seen the welfare of the worker dignified to an importance which the Kodak was among the first to demonstrate.

"All these changes which meant so much to both the community and to themselves were brought about through the efforts of Mr. Haus. He found a factory that was losing money for Kodak and a factory which could not have been a very pleasant place to work in. His ability and energy changed it into a works which now not only made goods of the highest quality, which could be sold at a profit, but a factory where it was a joy to work."

He leaves his wife, Anna Noth Haus; two daughters, Georgiana and Dorothy Haus; a sister, Miss Rose Haus, of Buffalo, and a brother, Frank Haus, of this city.

MISS MANVEL, FORMER SCHOOL TEACHER, DEAD

D. & C. -
Connected with Education System More Than Fifty Years.

Jan. 8 - 1926

Funeral services for Miss Livia A. Manvel, for fifty years a teacher in the Rochester public schools, were held yesterday afternoon at her late home, No. 9 Bradburn street. Miss Manvel was among the successful teachers of the city, and numbered among her former pupils many of the prominent men and women of the community, most of whom never lost their affection for her. Representatives of various classes taught by her were at the funeral yesterday.

Miss Manvel began teaching in the Rochester schools in September, 1867, when she was assigned to what is now Horace Mann School No. 13, in Hickory street. In 1870 she was transferred to Wadsworth School, No. 12, and five years later to old Monroe School, No. 15, in Monroe avenue. In 1878 she became a teacher at Concord School, No. 18, and in 1883 was transferred back to Horace Mann School, where she spent the rest of her teaching days. She retired from the service in 1917, when nearly 70 years old.

Miss Manvel was born in Rochester, her family having been among the early settlers of the city. She was one of the few remaining men and women who had served in public schools in the days when the community was a place of comparatively small things, when the schools and teaching methods were far different from those of to-day. For several months she served as acting principal of Horace Mann School, No. 13, in the period between the death of Principal Pike and the appointment of Roy H. Outtersen to the position.

Miss Manvel leaves a sister, Mary Manvel, and a brother, Lewis C. Manvel.

Rev. A. T. Mercer, pastor of Emmanuel Baptist Church, officiated at the funeral services. Burial was in Mount Hope cemetery. The bearers were Joseph Gilmore, Kendall B. Castle, Clarence Vick, Wilson B. Gates, James Robinson and R. H. Outtersen.

DR. LEE PAID LAST TRIBUTE BY ALL RANKS

Funeral Rites Conducted for Noted Physician at Lake Avenue Church.

D. & C. Jan. 13-1926
MANY FLORAL TOKENS

Telegrams of Condolence Received from All Over Country.

High tribute was paid Dr. John M. Lee, founder of the Lee Hospital and eminent surgeon and physician, at the service yesterday afternoon at the Lake Avenue Baptist Church. Rev. Albert W. Beaven, D. D., Dr. Lee's pastor for the past sixteen years, conducted the services and spoke feelingly of the strength and character of Dr. Lee, his iron will, his decision, courage, his skill as a physician and his hard work.

"While we did not think of Dr. Lee first of all as a religious man," said Dr. Beaven, "I do not think I know of any case where I believe that prayer and a sense of the help that comes from God meant more to a man when he came to the close of life."

Dr. Barbour Pays Tribute.

Rev. Clarence A. Barbour, D. D., president of the Rochester Theological Seminary, who assisted Dr. Beaven, spoke especially of Dr. Lee's ability to rise above adversity, his service to the poor and destitute, his eminence as a physician and surgeon and of his great service to the church, which he supported wholeheartedly. Rev. Whitney S. K. Yeaple, associate pastor of the Lake Avenue Church, also assisted Dr. Beaven.

Physicians, nurses, business men and persons eminent in many walks of life made up the large crowd which attended the service at the church. Hundreds more passed by the casket as it lay in state in the church and prior to that time in the parlors of the Lee Hospital.

The floral tributes came from people of all stations, rich and poor contributing in expressions of love and sympathy. Eminent churchmen and leaders in political life were among those sending flowers. Telegrams were received by Mrs. Lee from all over the United States. Senator Royal S. Copeland wired, "Greatest sadness in the death of my lifelong friend and your beloved husband."

Tributes from Afar.

General M. O. Terry wired from the Biltmore Hotel at Los Angeles his expression of sympathy and this tribute: "His distinguished career will ever stand out as an example in our great profession."

Dr. James C. Wood, an outstanding surgeon in Cleveland, paid this tribute by wire: "He was a surgeon of international reputation, a man of unimpeachable character and a friend whose fidelity was unflinching."

A special guard of honor for the casket while it lay in state was made up of representatives from the church and from the Board of Managers of the hospital. They were Mrs. W. A. Hubbard, Mrs. Edward Ocumpaugh, Mrs. Frederick S. Miller, Mrs. John B. Barbour, Dr. Howard A. Allen and Lyle Meader. The board of trustees and deacons of the Lake Avenue Church acted as a special guard of honor for the casket at the service. Representatives of the Nurses Training School, the Nurses Alumnae Association, the Rochester Alumni Association of the University of Michigan and other groups attended.

William Campbell had charge of the ushers at the service and George E. Fisher was at the organ. The quartet of the church sang, "Hark, Hark, My Soul," and "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."

The honorary bearers were T. E. Lannin, W. A. Hubbard, James M. E. O'Grady, James P. B. Duffy, Drs. H. T. Williams, Harold H. Baker, Shirley Snow, Lucius Button, H. G. Shepard, Paul Beaven, Cyril Sumner, W. S. Rambo and J. S. Barnard. The active bearers were Charles Elwood, G. Fred Laube, Dr. Edward R. Hardenbrook, Asher P. Whipple, Clarence A. Macy, Richard Kemp, Charles E. Crouch and Robert Tait.

Private services took place at Riverside cemetery, where interment was made.

D. & C. Jan. 13-1926
Dr. John M. Lee
A familiar and respected figure in Rochester's life has been removed in the death of Dr. John M. Lee. Known to the medical profession of the city, and generally, as one of its most skilled surgeons, and as a pioneer in the use of radium to treat malignant diseases, he was also known to the community as a good citizen and a friend of the poor and unfortunate.

Dr. Lee was a native of the section of New York state of which Rochester is the metropolis, and it was natural, therefore, that after he had completed his studies at the University of Michigan he should choose Rochester as the scene of his practice.

His skill in his profession, soon made manifest, brought him recognition locally, and in time in the state and national bodies of the medical school to which he attached himself.

That one so skilled in his profession, and so devoted to its practice, should find time to become also an active force in one of the city's leading and most energetic churches, the past and present ministers of which yesterday joined in paying him tribute, is an evidence that he had that quality which makes of a skilled physician a great one—the quality of sympathetic manhood.

He is deservedly honored both as a physician and as a valuable citizen.

DIES AT 82; WAS THOUGHT DEAD IN CIVIL WAR PRISON

D. & C. Jan. 18, 1926
Edward Hargrave, Mason
Here, Crawled to Life from Andersonville.

EDWARD HARGRAVE.

Edward Hargrave, Civil war veteran and for many years a resident of Rochester, died Friday at his home, No. 19 Jacques street, aged 82 years.

Mr. Hargrave served in the Union army for nearly four years during the Civil war, enlisting when he was 16 years old. After receiving an honorable discharge at the end of his first three years of service, he re-enlisted and served in Company C, 152d Regiment, New York Infantry, until he was taken prisoner by the Confederate army at the Battle of Gettysburg.

Taken first to Libby Prison in Virginia, and later transferred to Andersonville Prison, at Camp Sumter, Georgia, Mr. Hargrave spent nine months amid conditions of indescribable hardship and misery. Of the 35,000 Union soldiers imprisoned at Andersonville, more than 15,000 died from starvation and exposure. Many of them were forced to sleep in the open through all kinds of weather and the daily rations furnished them were barrels of uncooked corn meal. The sick were left without attention or turned out of the prison to wander in the surrounding woods and marshes until they died.

It was sickness which finally brought Mr. Hargrave's release from Andersonville. In the months which he had spent without proper food and shelter, he had become a living skeleton, and when it was thought that he could live only a few days at the most, he was taken outside the "dead line" and high stockade which surrounded the prison, and given his freedom. Too weak even to walk, he crawled for miles on his hands and knees, finally making his way north by boat and stage coach, being helped along the way by travelers. He finally arrived at his home in Morris, Otsego county, New York, where he was nursed back to health.

Mr. Hargrave came to Rochester in 1907, and until recently was engaged in the mason's trade.

He leaves his wife, Josephine Hargrave, whom he married in 1873; four sons, Edward L., Alfred and Walter Hargrave, all of this city, and John J. Hargrave, of Bristol, Pa.; four daughters, Mrs. H. A. Allen, of San Francisco, Calif., Mrs. Edith Robertson, Mrs. Jessie Helms and Mrs. Alice Dool, all of this city, and nineteen grandchildren.

D. & C. - Jan. 26 - Henry F. Marks 1926

The passing of a business man of the calibre of Henry F. Marks, former president of the Traders' National Bank, and vice-president of the National Bank of Rochester, is a distinct loss to any community, and particularly to Rochester.

Mr. Marks was a native of the city, was educated in its public schools, and by the force of his character and application had risen from his first job as messenger to the presidency of the same bank, and when the bank was consolidated with the National Bank of Commerce, he was one of those who contributed materially to the formation and up-building of the new banking house.

Mr. Marks was active in the community life, and during the war, in the frequent Liberty-loan drives, he played an energetic part in keeping Rochester abreast and in advance of its part of that patriotic duty.

The importance of banking in the life of a community is large; and the satisfactory operation of its function depends much on the character of the men who direct it. Mr. Marks had a character that met those requirements.

Burt Lealie Fenner, prominent New York architect and former resident of Rochester, died suddenly Sunday night at his home in New York.

He attended the University of Rochester, where he was a member of the Psi Upsilon fraternity, and later went to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he received his degree. Returning to Rochester, he entered the profession of architecture and was connected with several firms here before his removal to New York.

Mr. Fenner was connected with McKim, Mead & White for about thirty years. His rise in that concern was rapid, and some years ago he was taken into partnership. The work of this firm is characterized by studies in classic and Renaissance architecture and by beauty of the classic type. Important buildings which it designed include the University Club, the Pennsylvania station and the Pennsylvania Hotel, the municipal building and the Columbia University buildings in New York. During Roosevelt's administration the firm drew plans for the remodeling of the White House, and Mr. Fenner was personally responsible for the carrying out of these plans.

In 1911 Mr. Fenner received an honorary degree from the University of Rochester for his distinguished work in the architectural field. He was a member of the American Institute of Architects, at one time serving on the board of trustees.

'OLDEST TRAVELING MAN, 77 YEARS ON ROAD, DIES

D. & C. Jan 18, 1976

George Joel, 93, Made Start Carrying Pack on Back.

GEORGE JOEL.

George Joel, probably the oldest traveling salesman in the world and one of the oldest Masons in New York state, died Saturday evening at his home, No. 467 Clifford avenue, aged 93 years. He had retired a year ago from the employ of the Underwood Whip Company of Westfield, Mass., after serving as a commercial traveler for seventy-seven years.

Mr. Joel was born in Lynn county, Norfolk, England, on July 4, 1833. Left fatherless when 7 years old, he ran away from home and worked as captain's boy on a ship. His sea career was cut short by a shipwreck, after which he was rescued in a small boat. It was directly after the wreck, in 1841, that he came to America with his sister.

Mr. Joel lived in New York city for some time and later went to Albany to live with a sister. When he was 16 years old he took to the road, selling Yankee notions, needles, pins, stockings and small articles for the housewife. In those days he traveled afoot, carrying his pack of wares on his back. Since that time he has traveled afoot, on horseback, by buggy and by rail from coast to coast.

Mr. Joel came to Rochester in 1869 and was employed by J. C. Lighthouse, manufacturer of horse collars, then located in State street at Central avenue. After Mr. Lighthouse's death, Mr. Joel changed his line to horse whips, being employed by the Steiner & More Whip Company, of Westfield, Mass. When that firm broke up on the death of one of the partners, he went to the Underwood Whip Company of the same city. In his whole career of nearly a century he changed jobs only three times.

He retired after his eyesight failed as the result of a fall. After his retirement he was extremely active, tending a large garden and taking a two-mile walk each morning.

Mr. Joel was married in this city in 1861. His wife died about twelve years ago. At the time of their golden wedding anniversary in 1911 they were given a loving cup by members of the family.

He was a member of Valley Lodge of Masons, Commercial Travelers Association, the Monroe County Democratic Club and Temple Berith Kodesh, of Utica. He leaves three sons, Hyman, Isadore and Solomon; two daughters, Miss Sophie Joel and Miss Leah Rosen, of Boston, and fourteen grandchildren.

Funeral services will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made in the family lot in Mount Hope cemetery.

MRS. HYLAND, LONG CHURCH WORKER, DIES

as Catholic; Brothers in Priesthood.

Feb. 9, 1976

Mrs. Eliza Hendrick Hyland, widow of Fenton Hyland, died Monday morning, February 1st, at her home in Penn Yan, aged 86 years. Born in Ireland, Mrs. Hyland came to this country with her parents in 1849 and settled in Penn Yan. She was the daughter of Thomas Hendrick, who upon going to Penn Yan found that there were no Catholic churches in the village or surrounding vicinity. By special permission of the late Bishop Timon, Mr. Hendrick organized the Catholics and built a church. The first resident priest was Rev. Joseph McKenna, who officiated on alternate Sundays at Watkins, Jefferson and Penn Yan.

Later Father McKenna appointed Mrs. Hyland, then Miss Hendrick, to the position of church organist. She retained the post until she married Fenton Hyland. Her sister, Katherine Hendrick, took up the duties of organist, which she continued for many years. When the late Bishop McQuaid began to build the diocesan seminary, St. Bernard's, in Lake avenue, Mrs. Hyland was one of the first to volunteer her services for the collection of funds, a task she actively performed for fifty years.

Mrs. Hyland was one of a family of sixteen children, several of whom have distinguished themselves in church and international affairs. The late Bishop Hendrick of Oebu, Philippine Islands, formerly of Rochester, was one of her brothers. Mrs. Hyland was of a kind, sympathetic and helpful nature and leaves a large circle of friends.

HOSPITAL STAFF EXTOLS DR. LEE

D. & C. Feb. 7
Draws Resolution to Show

Esteem at Meeting.

At the annual meeting of the visiting staff of the Lee Hospital, last Monday evening, Dr. C. T. Graham was elected president for the coming year, with Dr. H. R. Roberts vice-president and Dr. N. M. Dennison secretary and treasurer. Dr. E. R. Sprague, Dr. J. L. Hondorf and Dr. C. I. Maggio were chosen to serve on the Board of Censors.

The annual business report for the year ending December 31, 1925, showed that nearly 2,300 cases were discharged from the hospital and 935 surgical operations were performed during the year. Mrs. John M. Lee spoke a few words to members of the staff, informing them that she wished the hospital to be continued along the same lines that have been laid down in the past.

A resolution of sympathy to Mrs. Lee and her family in the recent loss of Dr. Lee was passed by the visiting staff, and the following eulogy to Dr. Lee was made:

John M. Lee had many qualities of character which endeared him to the profession at large and to his associates in Rochester in particular. The greatest perhaps was courage—courage to fight for his convictions. While this spirit made opponents, and oftentimes bitter opponents, it made those who disagreed respect him for his character. It was this courage which carried his battles to the legislative halls; this courage that enabled us, as members of the medical profession, to enjoy many privileges to-day which would not have been possible without this courage. It enables the citizens of Rochester and the community at large to enjoy hospital facilities that would not be possible to-day had it not been for the courage and character of John M. Lee.

It is this character which will be remembered long after his reputation as a surgeon and progressive student of medicine is forgotten.

There is a vast difference between character and reputation. Reputation may be made in a day and lost in a moment; but character is built day by day and when built upon the right foundation, will last eternal. Such was the character of John M. Lee.

This particular group of the profession will especially long for the comradeship of our brother, who has gone the way from which no traveler returns. The wise counsel, the real interest shown in our affairs will be cherished memories kept ever bright by the remembrance of his help in time of trouble. As we walk in these halls and work in this hospital, we will feel his kindly presence in spirit, that will give us courage to carry on.

Let us resolve to-night among ourselves, to put our shoulder to the wheel; to so conduct ourselves and our affairs in this hospital that it will always remain in the high esteem of the public, our profession and the American College of Surgeons, that our departed brother so desired while working with us.

He continued to operate the Cobb Preserving Company until that concern merged several years ago with the New York Cannery, Inc., at which time Mr. Cobb became an officer in the last named organization.

Mr. Cobb, with his brother, George W. Mr. Cobb was chairman of the fruit section of the national association and presided at one meeting of the section before illness forced him to retire from the convention sessions. For several days it was not believed that his illness was serious, but early this week he suffered a relapse. His two sons were summoned to his bedside, Amos H., the older, arriving only a few hours before his father died.

W. R. SEWARD FUNERAL TO BE PRIVATE

Retired Banker Dies Hour After Close of His 92d Birthday.

D. J. C.
ACTIVE TILL DEATH

Feb. 10-1926
High Character and Quiet

Philanthropies Draw Tribute of Many.

Funeral services for William Rossiter Seward, pioneer resident of Rochester, retired banker and private philanthropist, who died early yesterday morning at his home, No. 218 Alexander street, after quietly celebrating his 92d birthday, will be private, only a few close friends of the family being present, it was announced last night.

Mr. Seward's death came shortly after he had spent a happy day in the observance of his anniversary. He had received friends who had called to congratulate him and in the afternoon went for a short automobile ride as was his custom.

Active Until Death.

Except that he complained slightly of weariness he seemed to be in his usual health, until about midnight when there were indications of illness and Dr. George W. Goler, his physician and long-time friend, was summoned. Mr. Seward died shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday morning, the news of his death coming as a shock to friends who had been with him the day before.

Despite his advanced years, Mr. Seward was unusually active and his mind retained its clearness until the time of his death. Each day he had spent several hours motoring, a privilege which he believed had done much to balk the traditional infirmities of old age.

His death ended a long life of self-effacing usefulness to his fellow citizens and closed a career that had as its constant goal the betterment of the community and the helping of his fellowmen. His unostentatious philanthropies aided many unfortunate families whose identity or straits never became known even to his intimates.

Came to City on Canal.

Mr. Seward was born in New Lebanon, Columbia county, on February 8, 1834. His parents came to Rochester shortly after his birth, making the trip on the old Erie canal. The canal boat on which they traveled made the trip in a little over a week. It was in 1834 that the village of Rochester was incorporated.

The Seward family took up its residence at Alexander street and Monroe avenue where Mr. Seward lived during part of his life in Rochester.

Pioneer Passes

Later they moved to the north, on the same thoroughfare, and finally Mr. Seward took up his residence at No. 218 Alexander street, where he lived until his death.

In 1852 he became a clerk in the Farmers and Mechanics Bank, following the death of his father. An epidemic of black cholera swept the village in that year, and the elder Seward's death was the first that the disease caused. The son, 18 years old at the time, went to work in the bank to assist in the care of his mother and a sister, Sarah Louise Seward, who later married E. P. Gould, of Rochester.

Made Bank Cashier.

At the age of 28, in 1862, Mr. Seward married Josephine Coburn, of Dracut, Mass. Five years later he was named cashier of a newly organized bank, the Bank of Monroe, in the service of which he continued until 1890. In that bank he was associated closely with Hiram Sibley, Sr., who died in 1890. Later Mr. Seward became a director of the Fidelity Trust Company and the Mechanics Savings Bank.

His interest in charity work had been manifest for many years. He was associated with many charitable organizations, while his own personal and private charities were many. He was president for a time of the Organization of Charities, finally merged into the Social Welfare League. He also was president of the Board of Directors of the State Industrial School.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. Mary S. Mosher, of this city, and a son, William C. Seward, of Dorset, Ont. His wife died about fifteen years ago.

Friends Pay Tribute.

Dr. Goler, his close personal friend and with him at the time of his death, last night paid the following tribute to Mr. Seward:

William R. Seward passed out of this life an hour after his 92d birthday. He spent a last happy day on earth receiving the congratulations of his friends and their flowers. One of the things that stood out in the character of William R. Seward was the judicial quality of his mind. He was not only just to others but he had what men rarely have, that is, a just kindness which was often of a material sort. He did many things for many people but he never spoke of them and he never permitted others to speak of them. He had marvelous confidence in people and nothing that they did ever appeared to destroy it. He felt that no matter what people did, they did it for the best.

With all his justice, his kindness and helpfulness, he was a most religious man. His religion was a liberal religion. He believed that without form or ceremony people found their way into a religious life through themselves. He had no use for piety, and, if he hated anything, he hated shame. No man came under his influence but that he was the better for it. He did not preach. He was an example in his behavior, in his conversation and in his whole life. This was William R. Seward.

William B. Hale, president of the Mechanics Savings Bank said: "Mr. Seward was one of the finest, highest-souled men that I have known and he was absolutely incapable of an action that was not just and noble."

Trustees of the bank adopted a resolution in which they stated that Mr. Seward's judgment and his keen insight into the character of people with whom he associated made him almost invaluable to the institution and that no one with whom he was brought in contact failed to feel the "influence of his great character always leaning to the side of justice and righteousness."

a cold bath.

Editorial Feb. 10 -
T. U. William Rossiter Seward

Death of William R. Seward removes one of the oldest and best loved residents of Rochester.

Mr. Seward was born Feb. 8, 1834, in New Lebanon, N. Y., but was brought to this city by his parents when a baby. He thus spent practically all of his life in Rochester. He possessed a remarkable fund of information regarding the growth of the city, the changes which have taken place here, and the men who have been leaders in business and civic affairs.

This truly remarkable life spanned one of the most significant periods in modern history. Mr. Seward was brought to Rochester as a babe in arms, in a packet on the Erie canal, before the days of the steam locomotive. He lived to have a radio in his own home.

As cashier and active executive head of the Monroe Bank, when that institution, since dissolved, was controlled by the late Hiram Sibley, Mr. Seward was at one time in close touch with Rochester business life. For more than 70 years he lived in the residence at 218 Alexander street, where he died yesterday, just after many friends had congratulated him on entering his 93d year. He was one of the early stockholders in the Eastman Kodak Company, taking shares in return for a lot sold to the late William H. Walker, a neighbor.

William R. Seward was a man of kindly disposition and truly remarkable generosity. He contributed his share to organized charities, but the greater part of his benevolence went directly to persons whom he knew to be in need of aid.

There are today in Rochester many families and individuals who could testify to the generous assistance given by Mr. Seward in times of trouble and distress, enabling them to get on their feet again and escape hardship, or to meet an emergency.

It was one of the distinguishing qualities of his heart and mind that, although he had a keen sense of historical values and discussed early events with great intelligence and zest, he was always more interested in the world's progress than in merely historical reminiscence. No youngster just out of college more eagerly espoused progressive movements than did William Seward, even in his most advanced years.

William R. Seward will be remembered by all who knew him as one who was the truest and kindest of friends.

BRIAND DELAYS DECISIVE VOTE ON TAXING BILL

Situation Little Changed But Optimism Shown for Life of Cabinet.

Paris, Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—The Chamber of Deputies sat today, both morning and afternoon, but adjourned without reaching a decisive vote on the financial measures.

The situation is regarded in the lobby as little changed from yesterday, but there is an impression of optimism with regard to the cabinet's ability to maintain itself.

The compromise text of the stamp tax on business transactions has not yet been drafted, but the latest reports are that the Government and Finance Committee have reached an agreement to use for balancing the budget the 3,500,000,000 francs so-called Loucheur taxes voted on December 4th, as an anti-inflation measure, in which case the Government may not find it necessary to maintain the stamp tax.

The Government was unable today to persuade the Chamber to accept several proposed increases in direct taxation; it was, for instance, unwilling to double the salt tax, from 10 to 20 francs per quintal. This tax has not been changed since 1848, and it was estimated the increase would yield 35,000,000 francs, but the House rejected the proposal 390 to 170.

The Government was also willing to increase the tax on alcohol 100 francs per hectolitre, but M. Barthou's motion to disjoin this article from the measures was accepted 303 to 113, the proposer saying that the country had no wish to be made dry through prices being raised too high.

An increase in the stamp tax on house operations, which the Government favored, was accepted 335 to 212, and is expected to yield 100,000,000 francs.

MINERS BEGIN PREPARATIONS TO OPEN PITS

Ready to Begin Work Day after Representatives Ratify Agreement.

Philadelphia, Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—Ratification of the five-year agreement between the operators and miners Tuesday or Wednesday this week, will see the longest and costliest strike that has ever occurred in the anthracite fields pass into history.

To-morrow marks exactly five and a half months since the wheels in the hard coal fields ceased to turn but the mine owners after first stilling the miners' anger by conceding to them the right to work, are now preparing to open the pits.

Pinchot Invited. Governor Pinchot has been invited to address the convention the day it convenes. In extending the invitation, the international officers and the three district presidents of the United Mine Workers said: "As Governor of Pennsylvania you maintained through nearly eight months of negotiation and strike the most personal and official interest and diligence devoted your time, energy and brilliant talents to the problem of bringing about an honorable peace. The high courage displayed by you in making known to the public at large the essential facts of the great controversy in the face of bitter and adverse criticism has rarely

LEGISLATURE TO GET GRADE CROSSING BILL

Measure Allocating Bond Issue Funds Will Be Introduced To-day.

RECESS EXPECTED

Republicans to Decide on Procedure in State Reorganization.

Albany, Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—With the major part of important necessary legislation cleared up in the first few weeks of the 1926 session, the Legislature this week is awaiting decision by the Republican leaders on the question of recess or adjournment so that a special session may be convened to handle only bills designed to carry out the recommendations of the Hughes commission on state reorganization.

Senator John Knight, majority leader of the upper House, and Speaker Joseph A. McGinnies of the Assembly, who spent the week-end in New York conferring with former Governor Charles Evans Hughes, chairman of the commission, will return to-morrow to Albany. They immediately will present to their colleagues the status of the commission's proposed legislation, and then attempt to reach a decision on the necessity of an extended session.

Indications were that such a session will be called, or at least, a recess taken, and an adjourned session held, chiefly to give the Legislature bill drafting commission free time in which to prepare the mass of reorganization bills. These, it is generally agreed, are likely to amount to some 400 bills of various kinds.

CAROL REGRETS LOSING THRONE, FRIENDS THINK

Support of Present Ruler Urged by Former Crown Prince of Rumania.

Bucharest, Rumania, Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—That former Crown Prince Carol's recent renunciation of his rights to the Rumanian throne was not due to a dynastic nor political conflict or even family quarrels is made clear in a letter sent by Carol from Milan to Miron Christea, patriarch of the Orthodox Church and a member of the Prince Michael regency. The letter was released for publication today by the minister of the interior.

It contains a powerful plea to all Rumanians to sink their party differences and strike for national unity and advancement and give loyal support to the ruling sovereigns. The newspapers without comment on the letter, but the feeling seems to be that Carol now regrets his escapade. The opinion is even expressed in diplomatic circles that the atmosphere possibly is being prepared for Carol's return.

Two Carloads of Beer, Valued at $10,000, Seized by Federal Men on New York Central Siding

Two carloads of alleged Pennsylvania beer, valued at more than $10,000, were taken early yesterday morning by prohibition agents, customs officers and deputy marshals from the New York Central siding at North Goodman and Circle streets, in what was declared to be the largest liquor raid in this city in more than a year. Four large moving vans were kept busy for four hours moving the barrels from the siding to a Federal warehouse.

It is estimated that there were 141 full barrels and sixty-nine half barrels of alleged beer in the shipment, which was consigned to a Rochester company. Although it was unlabeled, a part of it is said to have 3.24 per cent. alcoholic content and the rest 4.25 per cent.

MUSSOLINI SEEKS NEW ART TO REDRESS ETERNAL CITY

Changes May Make New York's Skyscrapers Seem Old-Fashioned, Architects Say.

Rome, Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—The new imperial city of Rome, which Mussolini's magic wand has commanded to come into being within five years may bring into an artistically jaded world architectural innovations so startling and revolutionary that, compared to them, the most daring skyscrapers of New York will seem old-fashioned.

This is the present determination of the vanguard of Fascist architects and artists, who are furnishing the bone of contention in the most spirited aesthetic controversy which has racked Italy since the glorious days of the Renaissance.

Architects Clash.

The new Rome must be a continuation of medieval Christian and ancient Rome—calm, dignified, and balanced—say the traditionalists, who are represented by Armando Brasini, the most prominent "academic" architect in the nation. On the other hand, F. T. Marinetti, father of futurism, storms: "We want Rome to have a Mussolinian imprint, that is to say, Fascist futurism—never an archaeological imprint."

"Mussolini," continues Marinetti, "wants to liberate all the monuments of the past from unworthy structures, which now hide them, by dynamiting the centre of Rome and freeing it for ever increasing traffic. This absolutely rules out any of the old kinds of architecture."

"Rome, capital of the new empire," says Settlemill, editor of Impero, "awaits her architect and will have him await the giant who will put a Fascist face on the capital of capitalism."

The same writer goes into a rhapsody.

BITES TUESDAY

WILL BE PRIVATE D. & C. Feb. 14 Active in Charity and Civic Affairs until Strength Waned.

John Jacob Bausch, founder and president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, died at 10:04 o'clock yesterday morning at his home, No. 1075 St. Paul street, aged 95 years. Mr. Bausch had been confined to his bed for four weeks. Until December, 1924, he had been active in the business he founded, and made an occasional visit to the plant in St. Paul street until he was confined a few weeks ago to his home by the infirmities of age.

The business of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, which spreads to all parts of the world, will cease to-morrow. Funeral services for Mr. Bausch, which will be private, will be held at 2:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon from the family home. Burial will be in Mount Hope cemetery.

Early Settlers to Pay Tribute.

In deference to what the family believes would have been the wish of Mr. Bausch, who was an indefatigable worker all his life, the plant will be closed for business today as usual, but activity will be suspended all day to-morrow. Employees of the company are invited by the family to view the body at the home, between 10 and 12 o'clock to-morrow morning. Many of the workers in the plant have been intimately associated with Mr. Bausch for years and held him as a personal friend.

More than three hundred telegrams were sent yesterday to friends of Mr. Bausch, scattered throughout the world. Branch offices in Australia, India, England, and other foreign countries, and in the important cities of the United States were expected to suspend to-morrow in tribute to Mr. Bausch's memory. Final plans for the funeral will be perfected to-day. The flag on the plant is at half mast.

The Early Settlers' Club, made up of 200 employees of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company who have been in the employ of the firm for more than twenty-five years, will meet at 8:30 o'clock this morning to take action on his death. The employees of the plant have ordered a floral blanket, made of violets, lilacs of the valley, and orchids, which were to be placed on the casket. This floral tribute will be placed closest to him, members of the family said yesterday.

Mr. Bausch leaves his wife, Mrs. Caroline Bausch; two daughters, Mrs. Carl F. Lomb and Mrs. William A. E. Drecher; two sons, Edward and William Bausch; four grandchildren, Mrs. Herbert Eisenhart, Mrs. Joseph E. Taylor, Mrs. Gordon C. Baird and Theodore B. Drecher, and ten great-grandchildren.

Immigrant Boy Achieved Triumph over Adversity

The story of Mr. Bausch's life is the story of the triumph of a poor immigrant boy over the various forms of adversity that beset him with discouraging frequency during the early days of his career in the New World. His chief equipment when he landed in this country in 1850 consisted of an indomitable courage and an unrelenting determination to succeed, those cardinal possessions of so many of the country's successful men who began their careers with few of what are known as life's advantages. Misfortune visited him shortly after his arrival. Employed as a woodworker, he met with an accident that resulted in the loss of two of the fingers of one of his hands and incapacitated him for further participation in his trade.

Undaunted by this accident, the young man looked about for another source of livelihood and with his recovery inaugurated in the most humble way an optical business that developed through his lifetime to the great institution of the present Bausch & Lomb Optical Company.

Found Epidemic in Buffalo.

Mr. Bausch was born on July 25, 1830, in Gross, Suesen, Germany, and during his youth worked for his brother, who made and dealt in optical instruments. After serving for several years as an apprentice in this business, both in Germany and Switzerland, Mr. Bausch realized that opportunities to advance in this line of work, because of limited financial and educational equipment, were limited, and in 1849 he left his native land

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—The bodies of fifteen additional victims of the Horning mine explosion were recovered by rescue crews to-day.

Five bodies were previously found, leaving one miner unaccounted for.

The bodies brought out to-day were removed to an undertaking establishment, where they were identified, and later taken to their homes.

T.Y. John J. Bausch Feb. 15

In the life story of John J. Bausch, who came to this country at the age of 19 as a poor immigrant, founded after many struggles a little enterprise for the sale of eyeglasses and lived to see it expand into one of the largest optical manufacturing companies in the world, there is much of inspiration and instruction for ambitious young men.

Success did not come quickly or easily to John J. Bausch. Forced to abandon his first trade of woodworker by an accident which caused him to lose two fingers, he turned to good account the knowledge of the optical business which he had acquired as a youth in Germany.

As this enterprise was established in 1853, Mr. Bausch, at the time of his death yesterday, had been engaged in the optical business in Rochester for over 72 years, or a longer period than the entire span of most men's lives.

Into the history of his early struggles to maintain the business, as into that of the career of many other successful men, enters an incident of assistance from a loyal friend, who later became his partner. Henry Lomb loaned John Bausch $60 at a time when only a friend would have been willing to advance even that small sum. It was agreed that if the business warranted it he should become a partner.

From the very first Mr. Bausch established those standards of quality and displayed that zeal for improvements in manufacturing methods and design which have characterized the firm to this day. Rubber frames for eyeglasses, perfected by untiring labor, were a product which gave impetus to the business in its early days. He also designed power machinery for lense grinding.

By making photographic lenses the company assisted in the development of the camera, which has so conspicuous a place in Rochester's industrial history.

John J. Bausch was president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company and was active in its affairs almost until shortly before his death, at the age of 95 years. He was personally known to a great number of the workers in the plant.

He had a great interest in the charitable work of the community and in community enterprises, such as the General Hospital and the Mechanics Savings Bank, both of which he served as president.

John J. Bausch will be remembered both for his personal qualities and as one of the builders of Rochester.

BELL TOLLS FAREWELL TO OPTICAL HEAD

Humblest Employees in Paying Respects.

1976

As the funeral cortege of John Jacob Bausch passed the Bausch & Lomb plant in St. Paul street yesterday afternoon on its way to Mount Hope cemetery, the bell in the tower tolled the last of ninety-five peals, one for each year in Mr. Bausch's life. On the sidewalks were scores of workers, gathered in sorrowing demonstration as the body of their late employer and friend was carried past the plant which is the product of his industrial acumen.

Earlier in the day, the employees and friends of Mr. Bausch, in solemn tribute, passed the bier in the home, No. 1,075 St. Paul street. Approximately 3,000 persons passed through the home, being organized in groups by their foreman. The first group to view the body was that of the Early Settlers' Association, made up of 200 workers who have been in the employ of the company for twenty-five years or more. These employees, and scores of others, knew Mr. Bausch intimately, he being active in the business until December, 1924.

Many Floral Tributes.

A wealth of floral tributes, from all parts of the world, was in the house. Telegrams and cablegrams were received from high army and navy officers, who knew of Mr. Bausch's skill and characteristics, because of the large amount of war material manufactured at the factory, and from prominent persons in the optical industry throughout the world. Mr. Bausch was recognized widely as the founder of the optical industry in the United States.

The funeral services were held at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. Frederick J. Frankenfeld, of Salem Evangelical Church, conducting the simple but impressive ceremony. Gathered in the home were many of the prominent men of the city who knew intimately of the qualities that made possible Mr. Bausch's business achievements.

The Rochester General Hospital, of which Mr. Bausch was honorary vice-president, was represented by Edward Harris, president of the board. The Mechanics Savings Bank was represented by Wendell J. Curtis, Mr. Bausch being honorary president of the institution, and a trustee for more than fifty years. Others who attended the funeral included James G. Cutler, former mayor of Rochester, and chairman of the board of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank; Thomas E. Lannin, president of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank, and Julius M. Wile, vice-president of the Security Trust Company.

Among others who attended were Channing Wells, president of the American Optical Company, of Southbridge, Mass., the largest competitor of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company; Henry Bartholomay, of Chicago; Henry Fincke, of New York, who has been in the employ of the company for fifty-four years; and others of prominence in the industry.

The honorary bearers were Henry Fincke, Albrecht Buedingen, Joseph Hammele, Jack Powell, William Wishart, Paul Lemke, Edwin Hart, Raymond Kandler, Fred Saegmuller, Edward Hilgenreimer and William Patterson.

The active bearers were M. Herbert Eisenhart, Joseph F. Taylor, Theodore B. Drescher, John C. Kurtz, Jr., Gordon C. Baird and Carl N. Bausch.

The following honorary committee of the Early Settlers' Association attended the funeral: Henry Meyers, Henry Albrecht, John Hoch, Paul Lemke, Cornelius Zwierlein, Frank Baum, Oscar Seeman, Carl Jaeger, William Wishart, William Woodworth and Jacob Powell.

Employees who served on the Committee of Arrangements for the funeral included Otto Seebach, George Löffler, Edward Reh, Gus Rosenhagen, Otto Kirchner, Charles Chard, George Gallasch, Conrad Kurzrock, William Storehr, Louis Teramore, Raymond Grant, C. A. Allatt, Sam Bouchard and Timothy Mahar.

As the body was taken from the house it passed between two columns of old employees and friends of Mr. Mr. Bausch, who stood uncovered as a parting tribute to his memory.

Minister Pays Tribute.

In his funeral remarks, Rev. Mr. Frankenfeld pointed out that he knew Mr. Bausch as a neighbor for fifteen years, and characterized him as "a man, father and friend." Rev. Mr. Frankenfeld said:

To pay a tribute to the very unusual life and character of Father Bausch, to me is not a solemn professional duty, but rather an extraordinary personal privilege. Having been, for fifteen years, his neighbor, and as such, an interested and a close observer of his ways and habits, I covet sincerely the opportunity of sharing with many others the testimony we bring this day to honor the memory of our distinguished fellow citizen and friend. It is not my purpose to review, upon this occasion, the very interesting history of his eventful life, nor to relate the varied experiences of his long industrial career in the earlier days, so full of struggle and disappointment, in the later years so rich in romance and glorious achievement. He himself has given in his own words to the world the fascinating and thrilling story of human accomplishments seldom equaled in the history of our country; many monuments in other lands bear eloquent witness of the almost unparalleled successes which crowned his untiring labors, until declining strength made further conquests impossible, and among us to-day are several hundred men who, because of close business relations for more than a quarter, in some instances for nearly a half-century, are much better qualified to speak of these than am I.

I would in just a few brief simple words recognize the man among men. The man of far-reaching vision, of undaunted courage, of unflinching hope. The man who could always rise above life's most trying circumstances, who could triumph over the most perplexing difficulties and turn apparent defeat into glorious victory. The man whose word was his bond, whose honesty was his trademark, whose fairness was the secret of his influence. And withal, the man who in the days of prosperity and affluence maintained a simplicity of life which marks the strong and beautiful character, and a humility which is ever the foundation of true greatness. What is there on earth more to be desired than just to be known as a man among men?

One thing that always impressed me, and that I will cherish in my memory of the departed, is the fact that "Father Bausch" is more than a mere name. He was a father in a sense which thousands of men have entirely lost. Large business interests, perplexing problems, unavoidable worries, could not undermine his throne in his home. Here he was the center about which the family moved. The welfare of children and children's children was ever his deepest concern. His love and loyalty and devotion at home won for him the undying affection of all within and the unfeigned admiration of many without. What a lasting benediction upon generations to come to have been a true father. How much better this world would be, if we had more of them.

And as he was a father of his own, so he proved a friend to his fellow-man. What he revealed in his own character, he looked for in others—unbending diligence, integrity, honesty, sincerity—and, having found these and tested them in men, he made them his friends. The very fact that to-day there are more than 250 old settlers who have been intimately associated with him in industry for more than twenty-five years, bespeaks a glowing tribute to a friend. Business acumen and qualities of leadership alone cannot explain these enduring affiliations. They are rooted in the fertile soil of friendship.

A man, a father, a friend, these simple words express to me the significance of the long and eventful and successful life of Father Bausch.

The Rochester School of Optometry closed at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in respect to Mr. Bausch. Ernest Petry, head of the school, attended the funeral as its representative. Memorial services for Mr. Bausch will be conducted in the school assembly to-day, it being pointed out that with other optical organizations the Rochester School of Optometry is indebted to Mr. Bausch for his pioneer work in the optical field in this country.

DR. JOHN F. FORBES.

Funeral services for Dr. John Franklin Forbes, at one time professor of Greek and Latin at the University of Rochester, for eighteen years head of the John B. Stetson University at Florida and former president of the Rochester Business Institute, who died yesterday morning at his residence, No. 253 Alexander street, following an attack of influenza on Palm Sunday, will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the home of his son, Leighton Forbes, No. 2 Arnold park. Interment will be made in Mount Hope cemetery.

Dr. Forbes leaves his wife, Ida Higbie Forbes; his son, Leighton; two daughters, Mrs. Abram J. Mann, of this city, and Mrs. George J. Schmuucki, of New Rochelle; six grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. H. L. Hoyt, of Los Angeles, and two brothers, Professor George M. Forbes, of this city, and Yale Forbes, of Brockport.

Dr. Forbes was born in Middlesex on June 13, 1853, the son of Rev. Merrill and Maria Palmer Forbes. He prepared for college at Middlebury Academy. In 1871 he entered the University of Rochester. At the close of his freshman year he became principal of Castle Union School and Academy, a post he filled two years.

Attracted Early Attention.

His ability attracted the attention of a wealthy farmer of philanthropic tendencies, who advanced him and his twin brother, George Mather, sufficient funds for a thorough training in Europe. During 1874 and 1875 Dr. Forbes studied at Berlin, Leipzig and Paris and specialized in psychology, ethics, pedagogy, logic and commercial law. He traveled extensively in England, France, Germany, Austria and Italy, spending much time in Rome and Paris.

Returning to this country with his brother, Dr. Forbes passed the examinations for the sophomore year and in 1877 and 1878 took the junior and senior years at the University of Rochester, being graduated with the class of 1878. He was elected to the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity and won the Davis senior oration prize and the Sherman Fellowship, treatise on economics and political science from books published in French and German languages.

In September 1878 he was called to the department of Latin and Greek at the State Normal School at Brockport.

On June 25, 1879, Dr. Forbes married Ida Higbie, daughter of Abijah and Sarah Ross Higbie, of Penfield.

For seven years Dr. Forbes taught Latin and Greek at the Brockport Normal School and in 1885 he was called to DeLand, Fla., to take charge of the DeLand Academy, founded by H. A. DeLand of Fairport.

Institution Flourished.

During his second year at the academy, John B. Stetson, hat manufacturer of Philadelphia, went to DeLand, became interested and donated $1,000,000 to the school. The name of the academy was then changed to John B. Stetson University. Elizabeth Hall, the main recitation building, two large dormitories, one for girls and one for boys, and a gymnasium were erected. The academy building was used for the music hall. Henry M. Flagler gave $80,000 for a fully equipped science building. Mr. Sampson, of North Adams, Mass., contributed towards a library, and other men of wealth contributed to its endowment.

The university made rapid progress under the leadership of Dr. Forbes, who made it one of the most noted institutes of learning in the South. A corps of fifty experienced educators was maintained and thousands of students were graduated, more than five hundred representing nearly every state in the union attending when he resigned.

Dr. Forbes was given the degree of Ph. D. by the University of Rochester, when he became president of the John B. Stetson University. In 1894 he was given a nine-months leave of absence for study and travel abroad. He traveled in France, Switzerland, Italy, crossing the Mediterranean to Algiers, thence to Egypt up the Nile to the first cataract, to Palestine, Damascus, and Baalbek, Greece, Turkey; thence to Russia where he attended the crowning of the Czar Nicholas II at Moscow. He then continued on to St. Petersburg, Finland, Stockholm to Trondheim, taking the mail steamer to North Cape, returning to Christiania, Liverpool and home.

Dr. Harper, president of Chicago University, visited DeLand and was so impressed with the work of the institution that he returned and arranged an affiliation with Chicago University, by which the students would receive full credit for work done. Every winter he sent fifty or more pupils who needed a mild climate or whose parents were spending the winter in the South.

For eighteen years Dr. Forbes successfully guided the destiny of the university and then resigned from the presidency, returning to Rochester in 1903. From 1904-1905 he had charge of the Department of Psychology and Ethics in the University of Rochester in place of his brother, George Mather Forbes, who was traveling in Europe on a leave of absence.

In 1906, Dr. Forbes was asked to give lectures at the Rochester Business Institute on psychology and ethics. These became very popular, the first instruction of this character to be undertaken by a private commercial school. In 1907, the need of institutions equipped for the training of commercial teachers to take charge of the commercial departments that were being organized in high schools and colleges throughout the United States, became so great that Samuel C. Williams, F. G. Nichols and Dr. Forbes organized summer courses for the training of teachers. Dr. Forbes had charge of the department of psychology, pedagogy and ethics. Applied psychology was shown to be helpful in every phase of life, and instead of its study being left to college seniors, Dr. Forbes taught that it should be used by everyone in every day life.

Dr. A. H. Strong, president of the Rochester Theological Seminary, was much interested in Dr. Forbes' new venture in that direction and said he thought of his psychology in college as a difficult study which was to be cast aside when examination was passed; but that now it was to be made practical, helpful and necessary to teachers and students even in the higher grades, high schools and commercial schools.

Business Men Join.

In Dr. Forbes' special evening classes were found leading business men and their wives, bankers and well known citizens. He spoke on salesmanship, and upon special invitations to employees in the department stores. In one term he had eighty nurses from the hospitals and some from nearby towns solving the problem of how the friends of the injured should be dealt with "sympathetically," as well as the patient. His classes in these subjects became so popular that he was invited to give lectures in New York, Cleveland, Des Moines, San Francisco, Montreal and many other cities.

Many Applications.

Dr. Forbes was a member of the University Club of Rochester, City Club, a charter member of the Rochester Ad Club, a member of the Genesee Valley Club, treasurer of the Social Welfare League, member of the Board of Directors of the Public Health Nursing Association, member of the Educational Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, a trustee of the Provident Loan Society, member of Psi Upsilon Chapter of the University of Rochester, a lifelong Republican and actively interested in all civic affairs. He and his family were members of the First Baptist Church.

Dr. Forbes leaves his wife; a son, Leighton Forbes, of this city; two daughters, Mrs. Abram J. Mann, of this city, and Mrs. George J. Schmuucki, of New Rochelle; six grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. H. L. Hoyt, of Los Angeles, and two brothers, George Mather Forbes, of this city, and Yale Forbes, of Brockport.

In 1905 Dr. Forbes purchased an interest in the American Drafting Furniture Company, with which he was connected until 1910, when he and his family and his brother visited Europe. They spent some time in Holland, Switzerland, France and England, then went to Edinburgh, where they discovered the beautiful statue and monument in the Hall of Justice which was erected to their ancestor, Duncan Forbes, of Culloden, presiding judge of the Supreme Court from 1757 to 1747. They next visited Culloden House, just out of Inverness, Scotland, the Forbes ancestral home and estate, and saw the portraits of the family for generations back to 1400.

On his return to Rochester, Dr. Forbes and S. C. Williams purchased the interests of their associates, L. L. Williams and F. E. Rogers, in the Rochester Business Institute, and in 1915 erected the new building at No. 172 Clinton avenue south. In March, 1924, Dr. Forbes purchased the interest of S. C. Williams, who wished to retire from active life, and became the sole owner and president. The following year, a few days before Thanksgiving, Dr. Forbes suffered a slight shock, and in January, 1925, a new corporation was formed and Dr. Merv Jacobstein became acting president.

MISS RECHE, 95, MEMBER OF OLD FAMILY, DEAD

D. & C. Apr. 13.
Ancestors Came to Canada

300 Years Ago; Friend of Susan B. Anthony.

The funeral of Miss Eugenie M. Reche, of No. 31 Howell street, who died yesterday morning in her 96th year, will take place Thursday morning in St. Mary's Catholic Church. Identified with one of Rochester's oldest families, Miss Reche and her younger sister, Miss Helene, held in memory events that to most other residents of the city are matters of history before their time. Miss Eugenie had lived here for more than ninety years.

Miss Reche was a friend of the Rochester family, and when the last Miss Rochester died, she was among the relatives as a mourner. Connections of the Reche family go back for 300 years on this side of the water, through their ancestors in Canada, and still earlier to Louis XV of France. Members of the Rochambeau families were among friends of the Reche sisters. Miss Helene still corresponds with them.

Miss Eugenie was born in Quebec, and came to Rochester with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Vital Reche, when a small child. The father lived to be 99 years old. His mother signed a deed for the transfer of property when she was 103 years old. Mr. Reche was at one time one of Rochester's best known business men, first a grocer, and later head of a coal business. At his death, he was referred to as "the oldest citizen of Rochester and, probably, of Western New York."

A son was associated with Mr. Reche in his business for a time, but died before his father. On his deathbed, the younger man asked Miss Eugenie to take his place in her father's office. She did this, remaining with her father until he retired from business, in 1883. She traveled much of the time for some years following, three times going abroad.

Miss Reche was a graduate of the old Lucille Tracey Seminary which stood on the site of the Homeopathic Hospital. For twenty-six years she and her sister were members of the Rochester Shakespeare Society. Eugenie had studied dramatic reading and often cast the parts for the meetings. Mrs. Mary McClure Noah, famous actress of the last century, was a personal friend, and at one time gave a reading at the Reche home.

So marked was Miss Reche's talent for public speaking, that Frederick Douglass urged her to take the platform in the interest of equal suffrage. She was a personal friend of Susan B. and Mary S. Anthony.

Miss Reche's memory was remarkable even when she was past 90 years old.

She was a life member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

MRS. MARY TODD, MEMBER OF OLD FAMILY, PASSES

D. & C. May 4
Aged Rochester Woman

Had Memory of Lincoln;
Active in Many Ways.

Mrs. Mary Stone Todd, of this city, died Friday at Meyerstown, Pa., where she had been staying temporarily with her son, Dr. Harry Swain Todd, of Rochester, and his wife, Dr. Helga Colquist Todd, at Albright College.

Mrs. Todd was born in 1844 at Manlius. She was a daughter of Timothy Todd and Elizabeth Swain Todd. When she was thirteen years old, she removed with her parents to Fayetteville, which remained her home until her marriage to Henry Perine Todd, of Spencerport, in 1879. In 1908 Mr. and Mrs. Todd came to Rochester. Mr. Todd died in 1911. Prior to her marriage, Miss Todd was a teacher in Fayetteville and in Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Todd had a clear recollection of the Civil war days and delighted to recount the events of those times. She was 16 years old when the war broke out and used to meet with the other women in Fayetteville to scrape lint and make bandages for the soldiers. She often told of the assassination of President Lincoln, describing how the women of the village all hung black shawls on the front porches as a sign of mourning. She remembered attending a public reception given at the White House in Washington and of shaking hands with President and Mrs. Lincoln.

Mrs. Todd came of old New England stock, the family originally settling at New Haven with the first shipload of English people to arrive there. Another of her ancestors, John Dunham, came over in the Mayflower, and many of the Todds, Dunhams, and Swains distinguished themselves in the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812.

During the many years that Mrs. Todd lived in Spencerport, she was active in the cause of prohibition. She was a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and formerly was active also in other temperance and prohibition organizations. She was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church at Fayetteville, later at Spencerport, and since coming to Rochester she was a member of the Westminster Presbyterian Church. She was active in G. A. R. circles in Spencerport.

Besides her son, Mrs. Todd leaves the following nieces and nephew: Mrs. Florence E. Todd Hoffman, of Baltimore; Mrs. Elizabeth Conklin Dowding, of East Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Millie Todd Smith, of Brooklyn, and Dr. Fred Perine Todd, of Baltimore.

Interment will be made in the family lot at the Fayetteville cemetery.

W. B. COON, 56, HEAD OF SHOE CONCERN, DIES

Internationally Known as Maker of Footgear for Women.
D. & C. July 14
STARTED IN 1891
1926
Last Illness Result of Pneumonja Attack
Five Years Ago.

Wilbur Barry Coon, Rochester shoe manufacturer, died yesterday afternoon at his home on The Lane, Harwood Farms, Pittsford, after a short illness, aged 56 years.

Mr. Coon was head of the W. B. Coon company, internationally known shoe manufacturing concern specializing in out-sizes for women, and one of the largest and most successful concerns of its kind in the United States.

Born in Hartland, Niagara county, on April 3, 1870, Mr. Coon was educated in the high school at that place and fitted himself as an expert accountant. In 1888 he became bookkeeper and auditor of the firm of Pryor & Warrant, shoe manufacturers, of Rochester.

Forms Partnership.

Three years later, when he was only 21 years old, he formed a partnership with Herman Meldola and engaged in the manufacture of women's shoes in Rochester. From small and modest beginnings in a building in River street the firm removed to larger quarters in State street, finally building a plant at Brown's Race and Commercial street.

The co-partnership of Meldola & Coon continued until 1911, when Mr. Meldola retired and Mr. Coon organized the W. B. Coon Company, carrying on the business under that name. Specializing in out-sizes for women, the firm met with great success, and has become the largest of its kind in the world. At the time of Mr. Coon's death the concern was doing a business of more than $3,500,000 yearly, with 6,000 retail dealers selling its line of shoes.

At present the concern operates two shoe factories, one at Brown's race and Commercial street and the other at North Water and Andrews streets, and occupies large additional store rooms for stock shoes.

Had Pneumonia Attack.

The illness which resulted in Mr. Coon's death was the consequence of a severe attack of pneumonia five years ago. Another attack last fall left his health impaired, and on the advice of his physician he left Rochester in January for a Mediterranean trip with his family. Returning the latter part of April, he had apparently recovered completely, but about four weeks ago he became ill with low blood pressure and sank steadily until his death occurred yesterday.

Mr. Coon was a member of Vonnondio Lodge, F. and A. M.; Hamilton Chapter, Monroe Commandery, K. T.; the Shrine, the Rochester Club, the Chamber of Commerce and the Rochester Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association.

He leaves his wife, Esther Levis Coon; one son, Wilbur L. Coon, and one daughter, Esther J. Coon, all of whom made their home with him; his father, Charles E. Coon, and one sister, Mrs. Charles E. Dales, both of Lyndonville.

The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon from the home. Burial will be in Mount Hope cemetery.

DEATH EVICTS RECLUSE FROM HER OLD HOME

Miss Anna E. Parsons Dies in House She Occupied More Than 70 Years.

D. & C. July 18
ORDERED OUT ONCE
1926

Rescued from Want by Few Friends; Was Cousin of Mayor Parsons.

Miss Anna E. Parsons died yesterday at her home, No. 16 Franklin square, where she lived for more than seventy years, aged 85 years. Miss Parsons was born here, a daughter of the late Joseph and Mary Barrons Parsons. She was a cousin of the late Cornelius R. Parsons, who served seven terms as mayor of Rochester.

Since the death of her mother more than thirty years ago, Miss Parsons lived alone in the scantily furnished home. Always keeping to the house, her only means of communication with the outside world were the newspapers.

Facing eviction in March, 1919, because of an overdue mortgage, Miss Parsons, friendless and penniless, refused to be evicted, but calmly sat in her home awaiting the expected to happen. The mortgage was held by the Monroe County Savings Bank and amounted to $2,000 with accrued interest. The property was bid in by Abraham Kauffman for $2,200, and two weeks later the bank served her with a notice of sale and demanded that the property be vacated.

Believing that she stood on her rights and reluctant to leave her lifelong home, she refused to go. Then the law ordered her eviction.

Helped by Friends.

Days of despair for Miss Parsons followed. Efforts by several friends to purchase the property from Kauffman for her failed. It was until her furniture was finally removed from her home and placed in a van, that a court order arrived in time for her to spend the rest of her days there.

Joseph A. Tait, as trustee, and a dozen other warm-hearted citizens of Rochester, finally purchased the property from Kauffman and gave her the little house for as long as she might need it.

For years, more years than most of her neighbors care to remember, Miss Parsons has been sort of a mystery. Always since the death of her mother she had lived alone and neighbored with very few of those who lived near. She never asked favors. She seemed different to the eyes of her neighbors. Her reason for being different, as gossip goes, is that she was disappointed in love, not once, but three times, and that the effect was to give her a desire for solitude and a distrust of men.

In earlier years, before she faced eviction, with the blinds of the cottage tight drawn at all hours of the day and night, with the grass in the little yard uncut, with the house itself falling into decay, the lonely woman and her home became the target for the missiles and gibes of small boys in the neighborhood. Three generations of small boys have hurled things at Miss Parson's windows, sped by the house after dusk shouting "Crazy! Crazy!" and then slipped around the corner out of reach.

Gibed by Boys.

Some of her neighbors once said that she was unbalanced because of her anger at the boys who threw stones through her windows, and once she was spirited away to a hospital for the insane, but was released a few days later with a clean bill of health.

In her late years the little group of Rochesterians who bought the property for her made her comfortable. The home was improved, city water installed and rooms redecorated. Each year it was looked over and needed repairs done.

The body will be removed to the undertaking rooms at No. 182 East avenue, from where funeral services will take place to-morrow afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. Burial will be made in the family plot in Mount Hope cemetery.

The plot was purchased by her father years before he died and it is said to be one of the most beautiful in the cemetery. Her parents and brother, S. Warner Parsons, who died in his junior year at the University of Rochester, are buried there.

L. J. CARTER, WRITER, DIES; BORN IN CITY

Wrote Melodramas That Thrilled Audiences

Generation Ago.

D. & C. July 14
PARENTS ON STAGE

1926 Named for Lincoln Who

Was Shot on Day Carter
Was Born Here.

Chicago, July 13.—(Special Dispatch)—The curtain fell to-day on the final act in the life drama of Lincoln J. Carter, creator of hundreds of melodramas that have thrilled the hearts of thousands.

Informed a month ago that he could not live long, the playwright remarked: "I am ready for my cue. I have had all the happiness and contentment that could be packed into one life."

Knowing the end was not distant, Mr. Carter retired some years ago from active life and settled down on his estate near Goshen, Ind., which he had bought with part of the royalties on plays that held audiences spellbound in every city and village visited by the old stock companies prior to the advent of the movies. He was 61 years of age. He was born in Rochester, N. Y., of actor parents. On the day he was born, April 14, 1865, President Lincoln was assassinated and in tribute to the martyred executive whom she admired, Carter's mother christened him Lincoln. Cary Carter, his father, was proprietor of a traveling troupe known throughout the country fifty years ago.

Wrote "The Fast Mail."

Some of Lincoln J. Carter's best known thrillers were "The Fast Mail" and "The Heart of Chicago." Old-timers will readily recall the far-away sound of a locomotive—a dim speck of light that grew—the increasing roar of the oncoming train, the blinding flash of the beamlight as the brakes screamed and the "night mail" arrived on the stage.

In 1885 he produced his first thriller, "Sidonia," at the Academy of Music in Chicago. Then came "The Fast Mail" in 1889; "The Tornado" in 1893; "The Defaulter" in 1894; "Under the Dome" in 1894; "The Heart of Chicago," in 1896; "Remember the Maine" in 1899, and "Chattanooga" in 1898.

With the profits from his shows Carter brought the Criterion Theater in Chicago, staging "The Flaming Arrow"; "Down in Mobile"; "The Eleventh Hour," "Two Little Waifs," "Too Proud to Beg," "Her Only Sin," "The Eye Witness," "Bedford's Hope" and "While Fiesco Burns." At one time he had twenty companies playing out of Chicago. He claimed he never had written a failure.

"First select a mechanical sensation and then build a plot around it," was Carter's unorthodox formula for writing melodramas. "Let no manifestation of nature's forces, on land and sea, baffle you, and always have a happy ending."

Birth of the motion picture industry meant the death of the old stock companies. Mr. Carter tried a few films, but they were not successful, so he retired on his laurels.

On February 12, 1926, he married

Mrs. Mary L. Whitner, of Goshen, Ind., a year after the death of his first wife. The first Mrs. Carter, resident of Chicago since 1885, died here in January, 1915. Harry and Lincoln J. Carter, Jr., are her sons.

Surviving Mr. Carter, besides the widow, are one son, Lincoln J. Carter, Jr., connected with the advertising department of the Studebaker Corporation, South Bend, Ind.; one half brother, Walter Linn, of Salt Lake City and two half sisters, Miss Hattie Carter and Miss Lettie Kolberg, residents of Salt Lake City.

Old-timers in the theatrical business in Rochester knew nothing of Carter last night except by reputation. He was generally looked upon in this city as a Chicago man and if his earlier years were spent in Rochester no one could be found last night who knew either him or his family.

John R. Pierce, first house manager of the Lyceum Theater, acting from 1888 to 1903, said:

"Carter specialized as an author of melodramas of the ten, twenty, thirty type. He was a Chicago man and I never knew him or met him personally."

In December he was assigned to the Artillery Brigade of the Sixth Corps and participated in the operations of the Army of the Potomac until the surrender of General Lee. Later his regiment moved to Danville and from there to Washington. Here he was assigned to DeRussy's division of the Twenty-second Corps, and the latter part of May, 1865, he was transferred back to the Fourth Artillery.

He was honorably mustered out of service September 26, 1865, in Washington.

The following is an official record of the most important actions Mr. Weller participated in: Wilderness, March 5 to 7, 1864; Spottsylvania, May 8th to 21st; North Anna, May 22d to 26th; Totopotomoy, May 27th to 31st; Cold Harbor, June 1st to 12; Petersburg, June 15th to 19th; Weldon Railroad, June 21st to 23d; Deep Bottom, July 27th to 29th; Strawberry Plains, August 14th to 18th; Reams Station, August 25th; Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Sailor's Creek, April 6th; Appomattox, April 9th.

Mr. Weller was a member of the Thomas Farr Post, G. A. R., of Webster. Funeral services will take place this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of his son, John G. Weller, No. 26 Lawndale terrace. Interment will be made in West Webster Rural cemetery.

The following March he joined the Army of the Potomac in the field and was assigned to the second corps.

The same month he participated in the battle of the Wilderness and in May he was at Spottsylvania, North Anna and Totopotomoy. From June 1st to 12th he engaged in the battle at Cold Harbor, later the army moved through Cold Harbor to Petersburg and Weldon railroad. MISS M. E. WEAVER, LONG WEST HIGH LIBRARIAN, DIES

D. & C.
Served at School Twenty Years, Retiring from Service in 1925.

June 1926

Miss Margaret E. Weaver, for twenty years librarian at West High School, died yesterday at her home, No. 185 Alexander street, after a long illness. Miss Weaver was a graduate of the old Free Academy, afterwards studying at the library school of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn. In September, 1905, when West High School was opened with Herbert S. West as principal, Miss Weaver began her services with the school. She served without interruption until a little more than a year ago when ill health forced her to take a leave of absence. Last November she retired from the service.

Joseph P. O'Hern, assistant superintendent of schools, who, as head of the English department at West High for a number of years, had opportunity to know Miss Weaver's work first hand, said yesterday:

"Miss Weaver was a very conscientious woman and absolutely devoted to literary work. Industrious and untiring in her efforts to help pupils, she believed, as we all do, that the library affords opportunity for developing and molding reading habits just as the class room affords teachers a similar opportunity."

"The library at West High was Miss Weaver's classroom, and she was a teacher who not only helped direct children's minds but also molded their characters. Many men and women now successful in their callings owe a debt of gratitude to her for her direction and encouragement that they never have failed to acknowledge. Her interest in West High school pupils followed them beyond the limits of the schools and the limits of the years that bound them closely to it.

"I recollect, from my own experience, how helpful she was to the English department in building up the library so it would be an asset in teaching English. Those of us who worked with her valued her association more than we can tell."

She leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius E. Weaver, and a brother, Paul Weaver, of this city.

E. Leary
Thomas Leary

In the death of Thomas Leary, veteran of the Civil war, business man, political leader and newspaper man, Rochester has lost a citizen of unusual talents, and many residents of this city have been deprived of the counsel of a good friend. With little schooling of the conventional type, he was possessed of a keen and inquiring mind, and so well did he apply his talents and time that in his later years he surpassed in his knowledge of men and events most of those with whom he came in contact.

Thomas Leary was one of those unusual persons who cannot be classified and catalogued along with the general run of humanity. From the very first his life had been out of the ordinary. As a mere boy he joined the navy in days when the life of a seaman was hard. He came out of that rough school a man in experience, though still a boy in years. As with many who have seen much of the world, he learned to read men as others read books. There were few important political events in his home city in his later years in which he did not have a hand, either directly or otherwise. But knowing the world and men as he did, he wisely chose to remain in the background, avoiding the spectacular glory of public office with its attendant dangers.

Many men who have found success in Rochester testify to the fact that no small part of the credit for their rise belongs to the kindly old man whose advice they sought at a critical period of their lives. Unlike some self made men, Thomas Leary retained to the last that broad sympathy with his fellows that enabled him to make and retain a host of friends, who will mourn his passing sincerely.

HARRY C. GORTON, PIONEER, DEAD

D. & C. July 27
Was Life-long Resident of City and Vicinity.

Harry Crosby Gorton, a life-long resident of Rochester and vicinity, died last night at his home, Harwood Farms in Pittsford, aged 85 years.

Gorton & McCabe was dissolved twenty-five years ago.

After the furniture company closed Mr. Gorton became connected with the Wollensak Optical Company, and he was with this firm at the time of his death.

Mr. Gorton was a son of Francis Gorton, for many years president of the Flower City National Bank in State street.

He leaves his wife, Lillian H. Gorton; a brother, Charles W. Gorton, of Los Angeles, and a daughter, Miss Lesley Gorton, of New York.

SPENT LIFE HERE

Active in Abolition Cause, Temperance and Women's Rights Movements.

In the death of Joseph B. Bloss, No. 334 Oxford street, early yesterday morning, there passed away another man who had been active in the great reforms of the last century. On November 23d last, Mr. Bloss passed his eighty-sixth birthday in the city where he had spent all his life and where he had made material contributions to the forward-thinking movements of his age.

Mr. Bloss was the son of William Clough Bloss, who came to Rochester with his parents in 1816, when he was 21 years old. Mr. Bloss's mother came from Cape Cod in 1812 in a covered wagon and lived with her sister in a log cabin where Brighton now is. On one occasion she drove away some Indians who had come to steal food from her larder. The father and grandfather of William Bloss both served in the Revolutionary war and the latter was killed in 1776 in defense of New York city. William Bloss conducted a hotel in Brighton, but soon after was converted to the temperance movement and made a public demonstration of destroying the liquor in his house.

Ardent Abolitionist.

William Bloss also was one of the originators of the abolitionist movement. In 1834 he published one of the first papers issued on the subject in this country entitled "The Rights of Man." In 1838 he advocated the vote for women and was prominent in the women's rights movement, as well as the agitation for a free school law. For three years, from 1845 to 1848 he represented this district in the Assembly.

He was born in 1839 at the home to which his parents had moved in East avenue, near Scio street. He was educated at old No. 14 School and Clover Street Seminary. His father's house was on of the stations in the underground railway, helping escaped slaves from the South to reach Canada, where they might be safe from pursuit. Some of the most vivid childhood memories of Mr. Bloss were in connection with this work of his father, for he often helped conduct the frightened slaves from his father's house to that of Mr. Douglas in South avenue or to the lake shore. He heard John Brown speak at the Court House, Brought up in such an atmosphere, the boy became a strong advocate of the abolitionist movement and, after the slaves were enfranchised, of their actually obtaining the equal rights to which they were entitled by law.

Following his father in agitation for temperance and women's rights, on two occasions Mr. Bloss brought Mrs. Emmaline Pankhurst and her daughter, Sylvia, to Rochester for lectures.

Mr. Bloss was one of the founders of the Labor Lyceum in the days before it developed ne wtendencies, and when it met in the Court ouse he was an almost constant attendant and speaker. In 1904 he was prominent in the resistance offered to the personal tax proposal and he claimed to be one of the first in the movement for the income tax. He was a personal friend of Theodore Roosevelt, whom he greatly admired. In 1915 he became chairman of the Republican-Progressive Committee from this district and attended the national Progressive convention in Chicago. The soldier bonus measure and city manager charter were warmly supported by him.

Saw Measures Succeed.

Though he had lived to see three of the great measures which he worked for, prohibition, abolition and women's rights, achieve success, he adopted many other movements in which he actively showed his interest. One of the things he wanted to see was the attainment by the Indians to the same advantages in education and citizenship which the Negroes had obtained. He was a tried optimist. "I believe that justice and right will triumph," he said. "As Freud says, all that is wrong will eventually pass away."

Mr. Bloss began his business career in a grocery store in Brighton, where he worked until he became connected with the wholesale grocery firm of C. C. Buell & Company, with which he was connected until he retired from business some years ago.

In 1888 Mr. Bloss married Mary Ellen Hooker, of this city. She died, leaving an infant daughter. He later married Ella Welch, of Port Hope, Canada.

Of late years Mr. Bloss's birthdays have been marked by a meeting of the William Clough Bloss Club, an organization founded in 1905 by persons most of whom live in the Brighton section and with whom the history of the Bloss family is most closely associated. Its membership is limited to one hundred and is always full.

Mr. Bloss retained his excellent health until a week ago, when the illness which resulted in his death set in. He leaves his widow, Ella Welch Bloss; a daughter, Mrs. Roger S. Vail, of Highland Park, Ill., and three sons, William Clough Bloss, of Okmulgee, Okla., Joseph Blossom Bloss, Jr., and Erny Welch Bloss, of this city.

Funeral services will take place from the home at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Interment will be made in the Brighton cemetery, where stands the monument to his father, which bears the inscription, "A thinker in advance of his age and an orator upon whose lips the people hung."

D. + C. Joseph B. Bloss July 9 1926

Many persons resident in Rochester, as well as former Rochesterians now dwelling elsewhere, heard with genuine sorrow last week that Joseph B. Bloss had passed from this life. A native of Rochester, Mr. Bloss came of sturdy New England colonial ancestry, of the sort that refuses to be discouraged by difficulties or daunted by dangers.

As a son of pioneer residents of Rochester, Mr. Bloss saw a great deal of the city's development from small beginnings to its present metropolitan proportions. At the time of his birth in 1839, the young city was just emerging from its frontier stage of growth. Canal boats and stage coaches were the accepted means of travel. It was not until shortly after his birth that the first railroad reached this city.

But it was not so much what he saw in his long and useful life as what he did and what he stood for that made Joseph Bloss widely known and respected among his fellow townsmen. With that sure judgment that had been bequeathed him by his New England forefathers, Mr. Bloss perceived at once the justice of the abolitionist cause, the merits of woman suffrage and the desirability of temperance. He had that rare quality, vision, by which he perceived in his mind's eye the advantages that might flow from banishment of evils and righting of wrongs. Not only did he foresee the probable success of the causes he espoused; he had the courage to stand squarely for such measures when all about him his fellow citizens had not yet been aroused to the point of interest, much less action.

It was well said of him that he was an incurable optimist, yet the record of his life shows plainly that he knew well the quality of the causes he advocated and that he was no idle visionary, even though gifted above the average with enthusiasm and the spirit of progress.

Long ago the prophet of Israel exclaimed, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." It might well be added in this age that where such men as Joseph Bloss arise in a community, the cause of progress is in safe hands, and the people will not perish.

The death of Mayor Van Zandt will have a drastic effect on the political situation in Monroe county. Mayor Van Zandt, through the large patronage he controlled, was the mainstay of the Van Zandt-Wilson-Love Committee, which last week submitted a peace proposal to James L. Hotchkiss, chairman of the Republican County Committee, and leader of the county organization. His successor, Martin B. O'Neil, who is president of the Common Council, is one of the most active leaders in the county organization, and is leader of the Fifteenth ward, in conjunction with Andrew Wiedenmann, collector of customs.

Mayor Van Zandt, after the re-designation was refused him by Mr. Hotchkiss, at the supervisor's picnic last August, threw down the gauntlet to the county organization and asked for the resignation of Harry J. Barcham, as commissioner of public safety. Mr. Barcham was one of the most prominent leaders in the county organization, and headed the Sixteenth ward group.

Shortly after his re-election Mayor Van Zandt requested the resignations of Herbert W. Pierce, as superintendent of city planning, William S. Riley, as commissioner of parks, and Simon Fennell, superintendent of buildings. Mr. Riley was succeeded by William E. Blackwood, who was secretary of the School Census Bureau, and who led a fight in Mayor Van Zandt's behalf in the Third ward against Mr. Pierce and Mr. Fennell for the leadership.

Martin B. O'Neil as mayor will have the naming of a new cabinet, and the resignations of Harold W. Baker, commissioner of public works; William E. Blackwood, commissioner of parks; Curtis W. Barker, as commissioner of public safety; C. Arthur Poole, as city engineer; Edwin A. Fisher, as consulting engineer; Clarence M. Platt as corporation counsel, become effective at his pleasure. No immediate changes, or anything to interfere with the conduct of the city's business, is expected, and a number of these officials are expected to continue in the new cabinet.

The patronage controlled by the mayor extends to the subordinates in the various departments. A general political change is expected.

CITY'S CHIEF EXECUTIVE, 73 YEARS OLD, WAS SERVING HIS THIRD TERM

Clarence D. Van Zandt, three times mayor of Rochester, died suddenly last night at a fishing camp at Bancroft, Canada. Mayor Van Zandt's death was announced in a telegram received by his secretary, Albert M. Flannery, shortly before midnight, from Clarence D. Keehn, president of the Lisk Manufacturing Company, of Canandaigua, the mayor's son-in-law. Mayor Van Zandt, accompanied by Louis F. West, Frank B. Rae and Mrs. Keehn, left Rochester Tuesday evening for a fishing trip and intended to return Monday.

The details of Mayor Van Zandt's death were not disclosed in the telegram received by Mr. Flannery, it stating that "Mayor Van Zandt died of angina pectoris at Bancroft, Canada. Bringing back body, twenty miles in from Belleville. Will wire time of arrival."

Mayor Van Zandt left Rochester apparently in the best of health. He is the first mayor to die in office. His predecessor, Mayor Hiram H. Edgerton, who served seven terms, died six months after he left office.

Mayor Van Zandt was 73 years old. Fifty-eight years ago this month he entered the employ of the Paine Drug Company, as an errand boy. His first salary was $2 a week. He had a marked success in business and was president and treasurer of the Paine Drug Company, owning a large majority of the stock. Besides conducting a retail business, the Paine Drug Company is a large wholesaler and manufacturer and has salesmen in all parts of this state.

Mayor Van Zandt was born in Rochester March 21, 1853 and had lived here all his life, with the exception of one year spent in business in Pennsylvania. He married Miss Mary E. White, of New York city in 1881. Six children were born to the couple, only one of whom, Mrs. C. C. Keehn, of Canandaigua, is living. Mrs. Van Zandt died in 1917.

Mayor Van Zandt was educated in the public schools of Rochester. He began his business career as an errand boy in the employ of Lane and Paine, druggists. In 1881 he became a member of the firm, and when the company was incorporated, in 1910, as the Paine Drug Company, he was made president. Mayor Van Zandt was the principal owner of the company at the time of his death.

He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Oak Hill, Rochester and Washington Clubs, Rochester Lodge of Elks, and for years was one of the most active members of the Automobile Club of Rochester, of which organization he had been president and honorary vice-president. He was affiliated with various organizations devoted to the furthering of the civic interests of Rochester, and also was a member of the Oak Guard, Guard. He never was active in politics until 1921, when he was nominated for mayor by the Republican Party.

Was Collector of Guns.
One of Mayor Van Zandt's hobbies was the collection of revolvers and antique guns. He had one of the best collections in the country and recently turned it over to the Municipal Museum. He was interested in the cavalry troop in Rochester and gave several horses to it.

Mayor Van Zandt was not active in politics until he was designated for mayor by the late George W. Aldridge in August, 1921. Prior to that time, Mayor Van Zandt, had been active in civic affairs, serving several terms as president of the Automobile Club of Rochester.

With the retirement of Senator John B. Mullan, to become postmaster of Rochester, Mayor Van Zandt was urged by a number of his friends, including John J. McInerney, George C. Donahue and Frank J. Smith for the senatorial nomination for the forty-sixth district.

Once Boomed for Senator.
Mr. Aldridge sounded sentiment for Mayor Van Zandt for the senatorial nomination, and it looked as if he would have been designated for that place. Several newspaper articles were inspired by Mr. Aldridge for the purpose of ascertaining sentiment. Great interest was manifested in the mayoralty designation that year. Mr. Aldridge was at the height of his political power, having taken an important part in the nomination of President Harding, and having been named as collector of customs for the Port of New York, carrying with it for Mr. Aldridge recognition as Republican leader for New York state.

The afternoon prior to the supervisor's picnic when the designations of the Republican organization were announced, Mayor Van Zandt was called to Mr. Aldridge's home at No. 66 Plymouth avenue south and was told that he could have the mayoralty nomination if he desired it. At that time the candidates most prominently mentioned were Harry J. Barcham, who was president of the Common Council, and William H. Craig. There was no thought in those political circles of the nomination going to Mr. Van Zandt. After the designation was offered to Mr. Van Zandt, he called a meeting of his business associates and reached a decision to accept it.

The supervisor's picnic the next day was a political event of outstanding importance. At 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon the names of the designees had not been announced. Mr. Aldridge's closest advisers and friends mentioned names of men, but virtually no one, except Mr. Aldridge, James L. Hotchkiss and Mr. Van Zandt, knew who the mayoralty candidate was to be.

Designation Was Surprise.

Tribute to Mayor Van Zandt was paid yesterday by the Board of Trustees of the Rochester Bureau of Municipal Research. In the resolutions that were adopted by the board, Mayor Van Zandt's service to the city is lauded. Mayor Van Zandt and Stephen B. Story, director of the Bureau of Municipal Research, acted in close co-operation.

The resolutions are as follows:
The Board of Trustees of the Rochester Bureau of Municipal Research records its deep regret at the death of Mayor Clarence D. Van Zandt. The board is keenly appreciative of the attitude of the late Mayor toward the work which the bureau is doing and of his intense desire to improve, with all the power at his command, the city government under his administration. His complete co-operation which was afforded at all times bears witness to this attitude.

The board, to an extent which can be but meagerly expressed in words, conveys to his daughter, Mrs. Keehn, its sincere sympathy and to the City of Rochester this expression of its sorrow at the passing of an able and an efficient chief executive.

Estimate Board Acts.

Resolutions on the death of Mayor Van Zandt were adopted yesterday by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. Mayor Van Zandt was the presiding officer of the board, and is succeeded by Mayor Martin B. O'Neill. The board is now composed of Mayor O'Neill, Comptroller Joseph C. Wilson, Frederick T. Pierson, president of the Common Council, Corporation Counsel Clarence M. Platt, and City Engineer C. Arthur Poole.

The resolutions are as follows:
On June 17th the presiding officer of our board, Mayor Clarence D. Van Zandt, answered the last Divine call. In considering the problems presented to this board Mr. Van Zandt brought to bear his cardinal belief that the just, the honest, the fair thing should be done, and that which would move forward the business affairs of the city on the highest plane. He gave so thorough an application to the proceedings and possessed so excellent a business ability that the members of this board in full measure deplore the absence of his assistance.

A winning personality and a charming presence served as a fitting garment to display the high quality of his character which so greatly endeared him to us.

Resolved by the board of Estimate and Apportionment that the foregoing statement be spread upon the minutes as a token of our grief and that the sincere sympathy and heartfelt condolence of the members of this board be extended to the family of Clarence D. Van Zandt.

Expression by Women.

Officers of the Women's Division of the Monroe County Republican County Committee, composed of Lillian R. Jones, chairman; Olive Goettell, secretary; Katherine Swanton, treasurer, and Anna Kimmell, corresponding secretary, adopted the following resolutions on Mayor Van Zandt's death:
Whereas, in the passing of our esteemed Mayor, Clarence D. Van Zandt, the city of Rochester has suffered the loss of a faithful official, and the Republican party a staunch adherent.

Be it resolved, That the Women's Division of the Monroe County Republican County Committee does hereby extend its deep sympathy to the family and to the close personal friends of Mr. Van Zandt in the grief which they are called upon to bear.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Clarence C. Keehn, the daughter of Mayor Van Zandt and, also, that a copy be inscribed upon the minutes of this organization.

It takes more workers to construct a modern home than were employed by King Solomon to build his costly temple in Jerusalem, declared C. Storrs Barrows, local architect and president of the Lions Club, who addressed his fellow members of the club at the luncheon at the Osburn House this noon.

The men behind the scenes, who supply the materials with which the home of today is constructed number more than the army of 80,000 which cut the cedars in the forests of Lebanon and quarried the stone that formed the walls of the temple.

Long In Ministry

REV. HENRY C. APPLGARTH.

DR. APPLGARTH WIDELY KNOWN PREACHER, DIES D+C July 19 Served as Minister of Park Avenue Baptist Church from 1901 to 1903. 1926

Rev. Henry C. Applegarth, D. D., formerly minister of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, died on Saturday evening at his home, No. 21 Arnold park, after a serious illness lasting almost a year, aged 73 years. Dr. Applegarth came to Rochester from the First Baptist Church of Cambridge, Mass., in 1901 and served as minister of the Park Avenue Baptist Church until 1903, when he retired from the active ministry to devote himself to other work.

After surrendering his ministry he spent a year as financial secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in Boston, and another year in traveling in Europe. He then settled down in Rochester and supplied for fairly long periods such prominent churches as the First Presbyterian, St. Peter's, the First Baptist and others. He became well known for his Bible lectures before the Century Club, D. A. R., Northfield League and in many churches, where his originality and eloquence won him many admirers.

Dr. Applegarth was born in Baltimore, Md., where he attended school and college. He has held pastorates at Bryn Mawr, Pa., the First Baptist Church, New Brunswick, N. J.; the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh; the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, and the First Baptist Church, Cambridge, Mass.

Boards of trustees of numerous institutions sought the services of Dr. Applegarth. Among them were the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Crozer Theological Seminary, Newton Theological Seminary and Rochester Theological Seminary.

During the latter years of his life he preferred to resign all such activities, including preaching, in order to live quietly at home with his daughter, Miss Margaret Applegarth.

Besides his daughter, he leaves a brother, William Applegarth, and a sister, Mrs. Warner Waring, both of Baltimore, Md.

Funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon at the First Baptist Church. Burial will be private.

Dies Unexpectedly

HENRY R. HOWARD.

HENRY HOWARD, ATTORNEY HERE, DIES SUDDENLY

Returned from Automobile Trip on Monday Night in Good Health.

BORN IN THIS CITY

Was All-American Football Star at Amherst; Will Be Buried Friday.

Henry R. Howard, well known attorney of this city, died yesterday afternoon at the home of his father, Dr. Eugene M. Howard, superintendent of the State Hospital, aged 45 years. He was the only child of Dr. and Mrs. Howard. Mr. Howard returned from an automobile trip Monday night and said that he had enjoyed the trip and felt refreshed by it. The trip took him to Boston, the Adirondacks and Amherst College, where he attended reunion exercises at commencement.

Dr. Howard's wife, Mrs. Sophie K. Howard, is in Europe. Besides his wife and father, he leaves his mother, Mrs. Eugene M. Howard, and two children, William Howard and Lydia Howard.

Born in this city on February 3, 1881, Mr. Howard attended the public schools of Rochester and later went to Bradstreet's Preparatory School. From there he went to Amherst, where he was graduated in 1904. While at Amherst Mr. Howard made a reputation for himself as an athlete and was a member of the All-American football team in his senior year.

Two years were spent in the New York Law School following graduation from Amherst. Mr. Howard then became associated with Harvey F. Remington in the practice of law in this city and remained with Mr. Remington until 1908, after which he practiced by himself until January 1, 1926. At that time he entered the law firm of Weidgen, Howard, Greene & Newton, with offices at No. 400 Terminal building, and remained a member of that firm until he died.

Club affiliations of Mr. Howard included the Rochester Bar Association, the New York-Amherst Club and the University Club, of which he was secretary. He was a member of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity and St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

D+C Editorial July 20
Henry C. Applegarth

The death of Dr. Applegarth removes one of the able, widely known and universally honored ministers of his denomination. He filled important pulpits in various cities, served as trustee of several theological seminaries, including that in Rochester, was secretary of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and as a lecturer in Scriptural exercises was in demand. One of the pastorates he filled with high distinction was that of the Euclid Avenue Church in Cleveland; and his warm relations with his parishioner, John D. Rockefeller, contributed, as such things do, to bring his pulpit utterances to the general attention their wisdom and eloquence deserved.

For Dr. Applegarth impressed, as we believe, all thoughtful people privileged to hear him as a gifted, broad-minded preacher, serene in his outlook on the world, tolerant in his wisdom and able to illuminate without heat even controversial subjects on which he spoke. It seems not too much to say that hearers carried away from his discourses something of new, impressive, striking thought, either in its substance or its presentation. In this city his last pastorate was served, and thereafter he was invited to many pulpits as a supply sure to be heard with interest and profit; and we fancy he was generally classed, along with Dr. Barbour, Dr. Woelfkin, Dr. Joseph Fort Newton as one of the leading lights his great denomination had given the country in recent decades.

Funeral Monday.

Frank Addison Ward, president of Ward's Natural Science Establishment, bank director and former alderman of the Sixth ward, died yesterday morning at his home, No. 12 Grove place, after a brief illness, aged 75 years.

Mr. Ward early identified himself with the Republican party, and besides having served as alderman of the Sixth ward he was for a time party leader on the Council floor. He served as chairman of the Finance Committee and was a member of the Maps and Surveys, Public Safety, and Public Schools committees.

Graduate of Princeton.

While a member of the Public Schools Committee Mr. Ward had much to do in preparing the $300,000 bond issue, with which the schools were developed to house the many children seeking admission.

He was graduated from Princeton University with the class of 1870 with honors. He entered the insurance business with his father, the late Levi A. Ward, one of the early mayors of Rochester, with offices in Smith's Arcade, on the present site of the Rochester Trust and Safe Deposit Company.

Several years later he left the insurance offices to become associated with his cousin, Professor Henry A. Ward, in Ward's Natural Science Establishment. Through his efforts, the fame of the establishment spread through the world. While Professor Ward had toured the world in search of rare collections, his cousin directed the activities of the establishment and when Professor Ward died in Buffalo in 1906 as a result of an automobile accident, Frank Ward became its president.

For many years he was a director of the Rochester Trust and Safe Deposit Company and of the Merchants Bank. In 1924, when Percy R. McPhail resigned as president of the Merchants Bank, Mr. Ward was elected to head the institution. For the last year he served as chairman of its board of directors.

Judge William W. Webb

JUDGE WILLIAM W. WEBB DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Life-long Resident of City Held Offices

Many Years; Came of Old Family.

D. & C. July 7-1926

Judge William W. Webb, distinguished jurist and a life-long resident of Rochester, died yesterday at his home, No. 45 Westminster road, after an illness of six months. Judge Webb was one of the best known citizens of Rochester, having served as assistant district attorney of Monroe county; corporation counsel of Rochester, and associate judge of the New York State Court of Claims.

Judge Webb had a wide circle of close friends, including such well known residents as Hiram W. Sibley, Joseph W. Taylor, James L. Hotchkiss, Supreme Court Justice Benjamin H. Cunningham and others prominent in the affairs of Rochester. Judge Webb was born in the old Eagle Hotel which stood on the site of the present Powers building, on September 16, 1850, and later he had his law offices for years in the Powers building.

Came of Leading Family.

He was a life-long Republican and came from one of the leading families of Rochester. His parents took an active part in the agitation for the freedom of the slaves, and with some of the leading families in the Northern states before the Civil war, assisted in caring for negroes who escaped from bondage in the South.

His father was Charles H. Webb, a prominent citizen of his day, and his mother was Caroline Vloss, daughter of one of the pioneers who settled in the town of Brighton.

Judge Webb attended the public schools of Rochester and was graduated from the University of Rochester with the class of 1871. He entered the university on a scholarship awarded by the city for excellence in study. After his collegiate course he studied law with William F. Cogswell and was admitted to practice in 1874. In 1878 was appointed assistant district attorney of Monroe county, serving a year, then retired to private practice. Mayor James G. Cutler in 1904 appointed Judge Webb corporation counsel and he served in this capacity for twelve years. In 1916 Governor Whitman, upon the recommendation of the late George W. Aldridge, Republican leader, nominated Mr. Webb for associate judge of the Court of Claims, a position he filled until two years ago, when he retired because of the completion of his term, and the fact that he had passed the age limit of 70 years.

As associate judge of the Court of Claims, Judge Webb frequently held court in Monroe county and in his judicial experience throughout the state passed on claims aggregating millions of dollars that were filed against the state, many of them arising from the construction of the Barge canal. He had a reputation as an impartial, courteous jurist, with a keen insight into the various questions that came before him.

Known as Fine Gentleman.

Judge Webb was regarded by many who knew him as "the highest type of gentleman of the old school." One of his friends said last evening, that perhaps no person in Rochester and the social side of his nature better developed. He was keenly sympathetic and a brilliant conversationalist. Frequently he took trips with Hiram Sibley, sometimes with Thomas W. Finucane, to Mr. Sibley's ranch in British Columbia, and on Mr. Sibley's yacht.

Judge Webb was always interested in the welfare of younger lawyers, and tribute to him was paid by Supreme Court Justice Benjamin B. Cunningham, and Charles L. Pierce, both of whom were associated with Mr. Webb for years, as associates in the corporation counsel's office. Later each of them became the corporation of Rochester.

Judge Webb married Miss Mary Clarke, of this city, daughter of Free-

Funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon from the home by Rev. Warren S. Stone, D. D., former minister of the First Presbyterian Church, where Judge Webb was a member. Dr. Stone now has a pastorate in Charleston, W. Va.

There will be a meeting of the Rochester bar this noon at the Court House to take action on the death of Judge Webb. The meeting has been called at the request of the Memorial Committee of the bar association.

MANY HONOR JUDGE WEBB AT FUNERAL D. & C. July 9 Mayor, Other Officials Offer Family Sympathy; Dr. Stone Officiates. 1926

Many leading citizens of Rochester gathered at the home, No. 45 Westminster road, at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon when funeral services were held for Judge William W. Webb, with Rev. Warren S. Stone, D. D., of Charleston, W. Va., officiating. Dr. Stone was formerly minister of the First Presbyterian Church in this city where Judge Webb attended.

Judge Webb was a life-long resident of Rochester and was a member of one of the prominent families of this city. The funeral services were brief, but impressive. There was no eulogy. Burial was private. There were many floral tributes from friends and associates of Judge Webb.

Mayor Martin B. O'Neil called at the house to convey his sympathy to the family. Among those attending the funeral were Darrell D. Sulley, James J. Johnston, Wendel Curtis, Henry D. Buell, Frederick S. Todd, Supreme Court Justices Adolph J. Rodenbeck and Benjamin B. Cunningham; James L. Hotchkiss, Corporation Counsel Clarence M. Platt, City Engineer C. Arthur Poole, Consulting City Engineer Edwin A. Fisher, John M. Stull, Thomas W. Finucane, Thomas P. McCarrick, Everett K. Van Allen, Richard White, Frank Keiper, J. Clifford Kalbfleisch and others.

William W. Webb

An upstanding citizen, who recognized and fulfilled the responsibilities that only a good citizen perceives and acts upon; a man of fine character and intellect; a good lawyer; a competent judge in a difficult and important, but unpretentious, court. These are the qualities that come uppermost in mind in considering the career of William W. Webb, whose death has saddened his family and immediate friends, and caused his fellow citizens to pause a moment to mark his services.

Judge Webb was a son of pioneer residents of this vicinity; he attended the University of Rochester under its first President, Dr. Martin Brewer Anderson, under whom were laid the foundations on which the University's present magnificent development morally rests; he studied law in the accepted manner of those days; was recognized as competent to be district-attorney; and then for twelve years was the city's chief advocate and law officer—all a logical, consistent rise in his own community, a good enough tribute to any man's character.

His last public service, the judgeship in the state Court of Claims, was a difficult and exacting task, made unusually so by the large number of claims that arose from the construction of the Barge canal. Yet his character and painstaking ability were equal to its demands, and his retirement, made necessary by ill health, brought wide recognition of his services.

The state and city, and Judge Webb's large community of personal friends suffer a grievous loss in his death, though the impress of his work and character will not soon be effaced.

Miss Fitzgerald was born in Lakeside and spent all her life there until she came to Rochester some years ago to take up nursing. She was graduated from the high school at Peterboro, Ont. She came directly from the Peterboro school to the Rochester General Hospital Training School from which she was graduated in 1905. Shortly after her graduation she joined the nursing staff of Thompson Memorial Hospital, Canandaigua, where she remained about a year, resigning that position to take charge of Dr. Fitch's hospital. She held this position for eight years. During the World war she enlisted in Base Hospital No. 19. In June, 1918, she went overseas. After the armistice, she signed up for further service and was sent to Nancy, France, in January, 1919.

In July, 1919, she returned to Rochester and for a year was a member of the staff of the Rochester Public Health Nursing association. Then she joined the nursing staff of the Health Bureau and in April, 1922, was assigned to Jefferson Junior High School, where she served for a year. When the convalescent hospital for crippled children was established at the Infants' Summer Hospital, at the request of Dr. Fitch, she was temporarily loaned by the Health Bureau to it.

On September 1, 1925, she was given leave of absence on account of her health and returned to her mother's home. She was in Rochester for a few days in June after which she returned to Lakeside.

Miss Fitzgerald had many friends here. Those who were associated with her were impressed by her happy disposition, her conscientious and loyal work—traits that made her loved by her associates and co-workers.

She leaves her mother, Mrs. Thomas Fitzgerald; a brother, Arthur, and a sister. She was a member of the Rochester General Hospital Alumnae Association, the Genesee Valley Nurses Association, Nightingale Post, American Legion, the American organization of Public Health Nurses, and of the School Nursing Staff of the Health Bureau.

DIES SITTING AT ORGAN, FULFILLING HER DESIRE

D. & C. - Sept. 24
Often Had Wished to Pass While Playing Loved Instrument.

1976
Sitting at the organ she had played for twelve years, in the Church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, Mrs. Mary J. Schuhart died yesterday morning while the instrument still vibrated with her last chords.

"If I could only die at the organ!" members of her family had heard her say so often that grief could not obliterate her words from memory.

"It had always been her wish," said a sister yesterday. "It seems miraculous! Sad as it is for the rest of us, it was really a beautiful ending!"

Devoted Musician.

Mrs. Schuhart had played for 8 o'clock mass, and stayed after the service to look over music she intended to play at a wedding to-day in the church. Her family had feared that going every morning, as was her custom, to play for early mass, was too great a demand on her strength, as her duties as organist did not require it, but she replied, "I love to do it." At another time she said, "If I ever give up the organ, it will be because I have passed on while playing it."

While Mrs. Schuhart was practicing yesterday, Rev. John P. Schellhorn, rector, was downstairs in the church and, hearing the organ give out the same notes for some time, he thought something was amiss with the instrument. Looking up to the choir loft, he saw Mrs. Schuhart leaning forward over the keys. He called to her, but she did not answer. The priest approached the instrument and saw the director of his choir had passed to "the choir invisible." The physician called and said that death was due to a heart attack.

Her Work Finished.

On Tuesday evening she rode to Pittsford with her daughters. They had recently remodeled their home in Clifford avenue exactly as Mrs. Schuhart had wished it to be. "I am so happy with you girls," the mother said. "Our home now is precisely as I had wanted it to be."

The church had recently installed a new organ. Mrs. Schuhart directed the choir, in which she took special pride, and the singers' work of late had been gratifying.

"It seems as if everything she had wished to do had been finished," said a relative.

Mrs. Schuhart had played an organ

since she was 16 years old. After studying with the best teachers she could find there in Auburn, her native town, she attended the conservatory of music at the University of Syracuse. Miss Mary J. Ohlweiser was her name then. After her marriage to the late Dr. Q. C. Schuhart, she discontinued playing in church for a few years. Her husband opposed her taking up her music again as a profession, but she urged that her life would be that much nearer complete if she might. He consented, and became proud of her attainments. Dr. Schuhart died nine years ago this month.

Mrs. Schuhart leaves three children, one son, Herbert; two daughters, Marie and Bernadine, and five grandchildren, all of this city; her mother, Mrs. George Ohlweiser; four sisters, Mrs. D. V. Harrington, Mrs. Frank Steigerwald and Mrs. Fred Maywalt, all of Auburn, and Mrs. John Rauber, of Rochester.

The funeral will take place on Saturday morning at 9:30 o'clock at the home, No. 56 Clifford avenue, and at 10 o'clock at the Church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help in Joseph avenue. A number of persons from Auburn are expected. Three priests will officiate, Rev. John P. Schellhorn, rector of the church; Rev. Mathias J. Hargather, rector of St. Michael's Church, in whose parish Mrs. Schuhart lived, and Rev. Stuart Hogan, assistant priest at Church of the Sacred Heart. Mrs. Schuhart's choir will chant liturgical portions of the solemn mass of requiem.

C. F. BOYLAN, DISTINGUISHED MUSICIAN, DIES

Prominent in Rochester's Music Circles Score of Years Ago.

D. & C. Not. 21
NOTED ORGANIST
Sept. 4 - 1926
Origination of Successful Voice Culture System Brought Him Fame.

Charles F. Boylan, for years a prominent musician and music teacher of Rochester, and one of the last survivors of the musical pioneers who helped to mark Rochester as a city of culture twenty or more years ago, died last evening at the Knorr Convalescent Home in Troup street. He was about 65 years old.

Mr. Boylan, who was generally known as "Professor" Boylan in music circles, was for years one of the best known music teachers in this part of the state. He perfected a teaching system that developed many singers of high standing in this community and elsewhere and that gave him recognition far beyond the city's boundaries. Some of the best known singers in Rochester churches, and many who have won success in other fields, owe their training to Mr. Boylan.

Developed Voice Training System.

In his early career, Mr. Boylan was known as a pianist and organist of uncommon talent, and most of his pupils specialized in piano. Later he developed a system of voice training which was so effective that he gradually turned from piano instruction, and in later years had only occasionally taken pupils for that instrument. For many years Mr. Boylan was organist at the First Church of Christ, Scientist.

It was frequently said of Mr. Boylan by his pupils, that his success as a teacher was due as much to his personal interest and his sympathetic treatment of individual problems as to his course of instruction. He had a knack of winning the affection of those who came under his instruction and inspiring them through the desire to win his approbation. To take part in a "Boylan recital," had come to have almost as much significance as a professional debut.

Mr. Boylan had a strong aversion for what he termed "musical fads," but he was not insensible to the value of new methods and new forms of musical expression, and he made it a point to keep abreast of modern compositions, many of which he introduced in his recitals.

Musician Passes

CHARLES F. BOYLAN

Although Mr. Boylan had been a resident of Rochester for forty years or more, few facts of his early life were known to even his intimate friends. He never married; and, so far as is known, he leaves no near relatives. He was born in Lima, attended Lima Seminary and later went to Boston, where he developed a good tenor voice and gained the groundwork of the musical knowledge that paved the way for his success as a teacher.

Influential Figure.

In the musical life of Rochester a generation ago Mr. Boylan was an influential figure, a member of the same school of musicians that produced the late Professor Herve Wilkins, a name well known to older residents of the city. For years he had maintained a studio in the Sibley block, but a number of years ago removed to the Cornwall building, where he since had his headquarters. For some time he had been a patient at the Knorr Convalescent Home. He frequently spent his summers at East Bloomfield.

Friends will complete arrangements for the funeral to-day.

DEATH CLAIMS LAST OFFICER OF OLD 108TH

Alfred Elwood Promoted to Captaincy in Service
During Civil War.

Alfred Elwood, the last surviving commissioned officer of the old "Fighting 108th" New York Infantry, died yesterday morning at his home, No. 35 Crossman terrace, aged 84 years. Mr. Elwood enlisted with the 108th Infantry as sergeant on July 24, 1862. He was wounded in action at Antietam in September, 1862, and the following year received wounds at the Battle of Gettysburg, and in 1864 at Cold Harbor. He was captured in action at Reams Station, Va., in August, 1864, and later escaped, for several days hiding in corn fields before being able to return to his lines.

Mr. Elwood was promoted to first sergeant a month after his escape and the following year he was commissioned second lieutenant. At the end of the war Mr. Elwood was appointed captain of his company. He was active in G. A. R. circles, being a member of George H. Thomas Post, and in 1898 at the annual convention of the Union Veterans' Union he was elected department commander.

Mr. Elwood was born in Stokes-on-Trent, England, on July 6, 1842, and at the age of 9 years he came to Rochester with his parents. He retired from active business more than thirty years ago.

At the annual reunion of the 108th Regiment last August, Mr. Elwood was one of the three surviving members to attend. He leaves a son, Charles A. Elwood, and a daughter, Mrs. Emma J. MacNitt, both of this city. Funeral services will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home. Rev. Albert W. Beaven, D. D., minister of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, of which Mr. Elwood was an active member for many years, will officiate. Interment will be made in Mount Hope cemetery.

FORMER FIRE CHIEF LITTLE DIES OF HURTS

D.C. Dept. 4 Injuries Received in Crash of Automobile and Street Car Fatal to Veteran.

1926
SPLENDID RECORD

Firefighter from 1873 to 1922, Battling at City's Largest Blazes.

Charles Little, of No. 289
Rugby avenue, former chief for many years of the Rochester
Fire Department, died at 7:25 o'clock last night at the Genesee Hospital, of injuries received late Thursday afternoon when a street car left the tracks in Bay street and crashed against the automobile in which he was riding with his daughter, Miss Grace Little. Hospital physicians said death was due to shock and head injuries. Mr. Little was 72 years old.

Miss Little was driving her sedan west in Bay street, the police say, when a trolley car operated by Thomas Gaffney, of No. 448 Holley street, ran into an open switch, leaped the track and crashed against her machine. The force of the impact buried the automobile over the curb and overturned it on the sidewalk.
Miss Little suffered from bruises, lacerations and shock, and was removed to the hospital in the ambulance with her father. Her condition was reported last night as not serious.

Mr. Little was born at No. 62
Wilder street on September 19, 1854.

He was appointed to the fire department on July 15, 1873, as a minute man. He was assigned to Truck
No. 1 and three years later became assistant foreman of his company.
When Hose No. 5 was formed in 1885, he was made foreman of that company, and the following year he was transferred to the foremanship of Hose No. 3.

When the department was reorganized his title was changed to captain, and on April 9, 1894, he was appointed battalion chief. He served in that capacity until April 1, 1903, when he became chief of the department, succeeding Chief James Malcolm.

Firefighter Dead

EX-CHIEF CHARLES LITTLE.

In his career in the department Chief Little fought two of the largest fires in the city's history. One was the Granite building fire in the winter of 1904, which he always considered one of the worst he ever had to contend with. He remained at the fire from 6 o'clock in the morning until 3 o'clock the following morning, then went home for a rest. When he arrived home, he felt so tired that he could not sleep. He dressed and returned to the scene of the fire and remained on post until the following morning. His other most difficult fire was the big blaze at Main street east and Gibbs street in 1909.

It was mainly through Chief Little's efforts that the Central avenue fire headquarters was established. He always was proud to say that during the period that he was chief, the department lost only one man, Lieutenant Fitzgerald, who was electrocuted when he came in contact with an unguarded power distributor while fighting a fire in the cellar of an electric store in State street.

Mr. Little had always taken an active interest in the department. He attended conventions of fire department officials and at one time served as vice-president of the National Association of Fire Engineers. Although he maintained strict discipline,
Mr. Little always was popular with members of the department. He was utterly fearless, and he never ordered a fireman into any danger which he himself would not willingly face.

Upon his resignation from active duty on January 1, 1922, when he was succeeded by Frank A. Jaynes as chief, Mr. Little said:

"I have been chief of the Rochester Fire Department for eighteen years and nine months, which is considerably longer than any other chief has held that position. During that time I strove to do my best and it will be for others to tell whether I have succeeded."

I.G. SCRANTOM, SON OF EARLY PIONEER, DIES

Grandfather Erected Cabin on Site Where Powers Building Stands.

D. & C. No. 8
LONG IN BUSINESS

First with Scrantom's, Inc., Founder, and Afterward with Hayden Company.

Isaac Gridley Scrantom, a direct descendant of Seventeenth Century American settlers, and a son of one of the first residents of the little frontier colony that is now Rochester, yesterday died at his home at No. 27 Strathallan park, aged 76 years. Mr. Scrantom had been in ill health for some time.

Until his retirement from active business seven years ago, Mr. Scrantom was vice-president of the Hayden Company, with which concern he had been associated for the greater number of his years of business life. He leaves his wife, and two sons, Isaac Elbert Scrantom, president of the Hayden Company, and De Hart Gridley Scrantom, of Maplewood, N. J.

Born Here in 1850.

Mr. Scrantom had lived most of his life in Rochester. Born on March 14, 1850, he was educated in the public schools of this city. At the conclusion of his schooling he was associated with his brother, Henry Scrantom, founder of the present firm of Scrantom's, Inc. He left that business when a young man to become connected with J. E. Hayden, founder of the Hayden Company, furniture manufacturers and decorators.

The lineal descendants of Mr. Scrantom are traced easily back to the early days in Massachusetts when John Scrantom, from Guilford, Surrey, England, arrived with a group of his townsmen in Boston June 26, 1627. With other settlers, Scrantom established a small colony not far from Boston, which was known as Guilford, the name being adopted from the place in England from which these hardy men and women had come.

In the early days of the Nineteenth Century, Hamlet Scrantom, grandfather of the deceased, deeply imbued with the pioneer spirit, moved from his home in Durham, Conn., to the western frontier, the outpost of which in those days was Western New York. Hamlet Scrantom, with his small family, included in which was Elbert W. Scrantom, made a small clearing in what is now the heart of Rochester and with arduous labor erected a log cabin on the site where Powers Hotel now stands.

Of Pioneer Stock

I. GRIDLEY SCRANTOM.

The occupation of Hamlet Scrantom was milling, and he practiced this until, with the acquirement of new wealth, he moved to a larger clearing and a more pretentious log cabin, still not more than a few minutes walk from the present Four Corners. In this second cabin, Elbert W. Scrantom, father of the deceased, was born.

Devoted to Family.

The life of Isaac Gridley Scrantom was dedicated jointly to his home and to his business. His single active interest beyond these two was the Church, and for many years he served as vestryman in Christ Church. He was a quiet, unassuming man, whose most marked characteristic was his whole-souled devotion to his family.

"Mr. Scrantom was an ideal home man," said a long associate of the deceased yesterday. "Directly descended from men who laid the foundations of the American home, he found in this institution his greatest comfort and pleasure. His tastes were simple. Although a most capable business executive, his friends—his real friends—will remember him mostly because of his sterling qualities as a father and husband. His life was beautiful in its devotion to his family."

On account of his ability as an organizer, Mr. Scrantom was selected for the important task of establishing the Hayden Company in New York city in 1887. At the beginning of this work, Mr. Scrantom moved to New York city, and lived there and in Mount Vernon, N. Y., for eighteen years, returning to this city finally to fill the position of vice-president of the Hayden Company.

On June 3, 1874, Mr. Scrantom married Kate Gardner Quinby, a daughter of General Isaac F. Quinby, a graduate of West Point and a brevet general of the Civil war, and later a professor of mathematics at the University of Rochester.

Observed Golden Wedding.

Two years ago Mr. and Mrs. Scrantom celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, and at that time they received the congratulations of not only many of the older residents of this city, but of men and women who had become acquainted with the Scrantoms in their residence in New York and Mount Vernon.

The funeral will be private, and will take place at the home tomorrow.

D. & C. Editorial 1926
Of Pioneer Stock

Pioneer days of Rochester are brought vividly to mind through the death Sunday of Isaac Gridley Scrantom, a grandson of Hamlet Scrantom, one of the first settlers on the site of the city that is now Rochester; in fact the first to erect a cabin on the west side of the river in the famous Hundred-acre Tract. That Isaac Gridley Scrantom was only the third in the line from the founding of the city is a striking reminder of the city's extreme youth, as cities go.

It is difficult for this generation of Rochesterians to visualize the conditions under which the pioneers laid the foundations of this city. Accounts of the early settlers agree that the site now occupied by the metropolis of the Genesee Country was once a most undesirable place of residence. Dense forests covered the land, and on the west side of the river, in the very spot selected as the center of the new town, malarial swamps threatened to baffle all efforts at settlement. The vicinity of the Genesee falls was avoided for years by the land-hungry immigrants from Pennsylvania and New England who preferred to settle in the hill country toward the south. Avon, Canandaigua, Geneva, Lima, all boast a greater age than Rochester, and Caledonia was a center of trade long before a clearing had been made in this vicinity.

That the pioneers of Rochester were men of a sort not easily discouraged is proved by the triumph they won over the forces of Nature, over distance from their markets, over disease and early border lawlessness and war. In spite of everything they persisted in their endeavor to found a vigorous community in the wilderness, and their ultimate victory was deserved by reason of honest effort and indomitable courage.

That many representatives of the pioneer families of Rochester remain in positions of trust and responsibility in this community after a century of change and stress is eloquent testimony as to the character of the families who created a city where there had been but a howling wilderness.

DR. OWEN E. JONES, STATE MEDICAL SOCIETY LEADER, DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

D. & C.
Had Wide Reputation as Specialist in Surgery.

Nov. 19 - 1926
Dr. Owen E. Jones, of No. 267 University avenue, died yesterday at his home after a lingering illness. Dr. Jones had a nation wide reputation as a specialist in general surgery. He is survived by his widow, Margaret Healy Jones; one brother, Dr. J. H. Jones, of Dowagiac, Mich., and two sisters, Miss Emma J. Jones and Mrs. Gilbert Hadley, of West Winfield.

Dr. Jones, who was of Welsh descent, was born at Frankfort, N. Y., in 1864. After graduating from Herkimer High School, he attended Union College at Schenectady, and took a medical course at Albany Medical College, obtaining his degree in 1894. He was licensed to practice medicine in that same year.

Medical Society Head.

Shortly after graduation, Dr. Jones came to Rochester through the influence of Dr. Eugene H. Howard, superintendent of the Rochester State Hospital. Dr. Howard attended the graduating exercises of Dr. Jones's class, and was highly impressed with the young man. For some time after coming to Rochester, Dr. Jones was an interne at the State Hospital.

After beginning private practice in Rochester, Dr. Jones's prestige increased steadily, particularly in general surgery. He was elected president of the Medical Society of Monroe County, seventh district branch of the Medical Society of Central New York, and in 1924 became president of the Medical Society of New York state. As president of the medical society, he was called on to attend meetings of almost every county medical society in the state.

Under his administration, the state medical society obtained the passage of the medical practice act which became a law early this year. Dr. Jones was largely instrumental in preparing the bill that was passed over bitter opposition. The act does much to regulate the practice of medicine in this state, and is said to be the first law ever passed in New York state which actually defines the requirements for the practice of medicine. The law has been copied in other states.

Dr. Jones also was at one time president of the Rochester Medical Society. At the time of his death, he was consulting surgeon at the Rochester General and St. Mary's hospitals. He also held the position of member of the council of the Medical Society of the State of New York, and was delegate from the Medical Society of Monroe to the state society, and delegate from the state society of the American Medical Association.

Dr. Jones was a member of the Oak Hill Country Club, the Genesee Valley Club, the Rochester Medical Society, the Rochester Pathological Society, the Rochester Academy of Medicine, the Medical Society of the County of Monroe and the Medical Society of New York state.

Expressions of regret at Dr. Jones' sudden death came from all over the state last night and yesterday afternoon.

Funeral services will be at the home tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Burial will be in the family lot in Mount Hope cemetery.

DR. OWEN E. JONES.

MEDICAL MEN PAY TRIBUTE TO DR. JONES

Unusual Skill and Charming Personality Among His Characteristics.

Tributes to Dr. Owen E. Jones, prominent surgeon, who died yesterday, were paid last night by Rochester physicians and surgeons who have been associated with him in his work. Among those to offer regret and appreciation of Dr. Jones and his work last night were the following:

Dr. Warren Wooden, vice-president of the Medical Society of Monroe and associated with Dr. Jones in his practice for the past twelve years:

"An attempt to represent the feelings of the Medical Society of the County of Monroe on the occasion of the death of its most distinguished member, requires but little reference to the life and work of Dr. O. E. Jones in view of his wide-spread intimacy among the profession and the warmth of his professional relations with numerous thousands of people of Rochester.

Developed Rapidly.

"Born in Frankfort, N. Y., educated in Fairfield Academy and graduated from the Albany Medical College in 1894, Dr. Jones began in 1895 a medical practice in this city which rapidly became one of the largest and most successful in terms of service of a high order to his fellow citizen. Gradually there evolved from this enormous general practice of incessant demands, evidence of a superior diagnostic skill and a talented dexterity of hand, in the conduct of surgical cases, which, sheerly from merit recognized by medical associates, resulted in his establishment as one of the leading surgeons of Central and Western New York.

"Not content with the limitations of personal service regardless of its high order, the last twenty years of Dr. O. E. Jones activities embraced most successfully the wider fields of professional life represented by organized medicine and its consideration of the problems of preventive medicine, public health and increased standards of scientific medical practice. Great self-sacrifice and almost impassioned devotion to the numerous responsibilities attendant upon holding practically every medical office in the gift of his own city and county, ultimately resulted in his election in 1923 to the presidency of the second largest medical society in the world, the Medical Society of the State of New York, an organization of 11,000 members, many of whom knew their president intimately and all of whom held in high respect the reputation of this citizen of Rochester who had attained such merited eminence in his professional life."

Dr. Christopher G. Parnall, medical director of Rochester General Hospital—"Of a cheerful and equable nature, Dr. Jones endeared himself alike to his patients and his associates. In addition to other high qualities, he possessed a high devotion to his profession and continued to give of his skill and knowledge almost to the end, in spite of an illness which would have sapped the courage of a man of less determination."

Dr. Leo F. Simpson of the surgical staff of St. Mary's Hospital—"Dr. Jones was a man we could ill afford to lose. A charming gentleman and a surgeon of exceptional ability, he was an honor to our profession."

Dr. Floyd S. Winslow—"Dr. Jones rose to position of high prominence in the surgical world through a combination of native skill and a determined character. He was a man who had a world of friends. Because of his extensive contributions to the public life of Rochester, he will be greatly missed, not only by the medical profession but by the whole city."

"Staunch Friend."

Dr. John A. Stapleton—"Dr. Jones was a very able surgeon; in addition, he was a man of sterling character and a staunch friend to hundreds of persons. It was in keeping with his character that he continued to exercise his skill almost to the very last in spite of a deep-seated illness."

Dr. Walter A. Calihan—"The death of Dr. Jones will call forth true sorrow in the ranks of the medical profession of Rochester and New York State. Dr. Jones's efforts, helping in the progress of the medical profession of the state, have made him many friends who will truly mourn his loss."

LOUIS SACHS.

Louis Sachs, of No. 13 Lawn street, Civil war veteran and junior vice-commander of Pelasner Post, G. A. R., died yesterday morning, aged 81 years. For many years Mr. Sachs had taken a deep interest in the activities of the G. A. R., and even in late years he made it his duty to visit comrades who were ill.

Up to a month ago, Mr. Sachs made his visits to the homes of his old associates and the G. A. R. headquarters, and was a familiar figure in Main street, where he often could be seen taking his daily walk. In the death of Mr. Sachs passes the last charter member of the Blucher Lodge, Knights of Pythias. There were twenty-seven members when the lodge was organized nearly fifty-four years ago. He also is the last member of Company B, 140th New York Volunteer Infantry, with which he served in the Civil War.

Mr. Sachs was born in Germany, and came to this country with his parents when a child. He enlisted in the service in 1862 and was in action at Gettysburg.

For nearly thirty-five years he had been in the paper box manufacturing business, and retired nineteen years ago. Mr. Sachs leaves his wife, Carrie Sachs; a sister, Mrs. F. B. Schmitt, of this city, and a number of nieces and nephews. The body was removed to No. 301 Alexander street.

Funeral services will take place Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Members of the G. A. R. will officiate, and a delegation from the Knights of Pythias will attend. Interment will be made in Mount Hope cemetery, where "Taps" will be blown by Bugler A. J. Waterman.

Body of Congressman Wadsworth Laid to Rest Beneath Elms of Loved Valley

D. & C. Dec. 27, 1936

Friends in Many Fields Attend Funeral.

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

Geneseo, Dec. 26.—The mortal remains of the man whom the late August Belmont once characterized at a dinner of racing men in New York city as the "finest type of American gentleman" were given to the custody of two great elms which spread their gnarled branches over the little hedge-enclosed plot of the Wadsworth family in Temple Hill cemetery to-day.

A purple shroud lay gently over the hills of the Upper Genesee country as the body of Genesee's beloved Congressman, James W. Wadsworth, Sr., whose death occurred in Washington Friday night, was lowered into its final place of sleep in the sorrowful accompaniment of rags, sounded by a young man in the uniform of the military service of the country.

Flag Placed on Casket.

There was a momentary hush as the echo of the huge spent itself in the chill winter air and then from the crowd at the grave an elderly man shuffled forth to lay a small American flag on the cluster of roses and lilies which softened the harsh lines of the wooden casket.

"In behalf of those who fought to preserve the integrity of our glorious country, I lay this flag on the casket of one of our comrades, a great friend and a great leader," said the faltering voice. "Hail, and fare thee well."

George Williams, lifelong friend of the late Congressman, and a member with him of the Federal army in those dark days of the great Civil war, moved back into the crowd of dark suited men and touched his eyes with a handkerchief. A woman's sob was heard. And then the last rites of burial were begun.

The country folk who had known the elderly Congressman for periods depending upon their own years in the Genesee valley mingled to-day with political dignitaries and men high in the social and financial circles of the country who came to little St. Michael's Episcopal Church to pay their final respects to a man who, although a gentleman in the sense that the word is understood in European countries, nevertheless preserved deep and strong in his being the spirit of true democracy.

Hundreds View Body.

The body of the Congressman, which was brought on in a special car which also bore the members of Mr. Wadsworth's immediate family, lay in state in the early part of the day in the little chapel of the church, and there it was viewed by hundreds of persons both from this village and countryside and many of the great centers of the East.

It was difficult for many of these men and women to realize that the tall, active figure of their friend had been stilled forever. They knew well the rugged strength of the old politician, sportsman and farmer. The mounting years had rested as lightly as a webbed mantle upon this kindly old gentleman, who despite his four-score years had retained a keen enthusiasm for life and eagerly participated in it.

"Hear my prayers, O Lord, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears; for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were."

From the Thirty-ninth Psalm, read Rev. J. W. Denness Cooper, rector of St. Michael's Church, after the flower-adorned casket had been moved up the aisle of the church, the nave of which was filled beyond its seating capacity. The service ended, and the funeral cortege moved out to the little graveyard, on a hill above the village. Here many of the older members of the family of Wadsworth are buried, under the drooping branches of the great elms, and here the body of James W. Wadsworth, Sr., was laid, side by side with that of his fathers.

Friends from Many Fields.

It was fitting that the active hearers of the casket should be members of the Genesee town baseball club, an organization which was started many years ago and supported, during the height of its success, by the old Congressman. He was ever a patron of sports and until an injury, sustained twenty years ago by a fall from a tallyho, shortened the range of his own physical exercises, an ardent participator in them.

In the crowd that filled the little church were many men who knew the Congressman best during the years that he was actively interested in baseball and fox hunting. There were others who had been associated with him in the conduct of his great farms, ranging over this valley country for thousands of acres. They spoke of him as the ideal farmer. There were men who were closest to him because of his interest and support of racing, for "Congressman Jim" was the first and only chairman the racing board of New York state had ever known. And there were men who knew him best as an astute financier. But everyone, who knew him at all, called him "friend."

Until the illness which finally stopped his life in his winter home in Washington, Mr. Wadsworth had planned to return to the upper valley country to celebrate Christmas with his son and his grandchildren. There was to have been the usual Christmas reunion of the Wadsworth family at the home of Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., at Groveland, and even during the final stages of his illness the Congressman had keenly anticipated the big family party. But death came on Christmas Eve.

Did Not Fear Death.

"I do not fear death," the Congressman once said, "for I have lived a happy and active life. My most earnest wish is that the other members of my family will not desert the Genesee Valley, where we have all lived and known the fruits of the soil."

With his death, Congressman Wadsworth's wish is being carried to fulfillment, for it is said in this village that Senator Jim, at the expiration of his term in Washington, will return to his country home and give his attention to the vast holdings of the Wadsworth family, which political necessity has taken him from during the years of his senatorial service.

From Rochester to-day came a group of Republican leaders who knew the old Congressman well and who had fought side by side with him during the strenuous years that Mr. Wadsworth was actively engaged in political campaigns. The Rochester delegation was headed by James L. Hotchkiss and Mayor Martin B. O'Neill, and included Andrew J. Wiedenmann, collector of the Port of Rochester; Marshal Joseph Fitch, Jr., and Assemblyman Simon L. Adler.

Colonel William J. Donovan, assistant to the attorney general of the United States, came from his home in Buffalo, and there were several representatives in Congress, state senators, and member of the Supreme Court at the funeral services.

Guard Escorts Body.

The body was escorted to the grave by Troop M, a National Guard cavalry organization that was organized and which has been supported more or less by members of the Wadsworth family, and a guard of honor, composed of troopers, stood in the chapel while the body lay in state.

The active bearers were: Harold Cahill, Jay Rogers, Daniel Gillan, James Welch, Lee Costello and Mark Welch.

The names of the honorary bearers follow: William S. Olmstead, Theodore S. Olmstead, George S. Williams, George S. Williams, Perry C. Buchner, Dr. Walter E. Lauderzale, Frank K. Cook, Julian G. Buckley, Dr. W. A. Holcomb, Dr. J. W. Cowan, Thomas Russell, Lockwood R. Doty, Otto Kelsey, John D. Abbott, Charles D. Newton, all of Genesee; Louis H. Rowe, New York; Robert F. Thompson, Canandaigua; William W. Clark, Rochester; Colonel Nathan C. Shiverick, Avon; Dr. Charles Cary, Buffalo; John Knight, Arcade; Dr. John R. Williams, Rochester; Charles Sherman, Henrietta; R. Titus Coan, Albion, and Frank Fielder, Dansville.

Editorial Major Wadsworth, 1826

Genuine sorrow is reflected in comments from the Genesee Country on the death of Major James Wolcott Wadsworth, Sr., former representative in Congress, veteran of the Civil war, and a citizen of outstanding character. To hundreds of his neighbors in the Valley his sudden passing comes as a personal loss. To thousands of others, who had known him less intimately, the news of his unexpected death brings a distinct shock.

Major Wadsworth was one of those rare leaders of men who continued to face life with the eager zest of youth long after the period when most men seek quiet in retirement. His four score years seemed to weigh lightly on a spirit ever ready for fresh adventure. His interest to the last was as keen in affairs of to-day as in the victories and defeats of a former era. A true sportsman, he evinced keen delight in a clean fight and knew how to concede a point gracefully to those whose views differed from his own.

As a leader in civic affairs, a soldier, an officer of the state government, a representative in Congress, Major Wadsworth served the interests of his fellow citizens manfully and well. He was not easily led astray by glittering promises, yet he was not a foe of progress. For the things he believed right he was willing to fight to the end.

But it is as a friend and neighbor that he will be most sincerely mourned in the villages, the hamlets, the lonely farmhouses where he had been a familiar figure for many years. As a true test of his character surely nothing more than that could be demanded.

MRS. PUFFER, 85, LONG FRIEND OF LINCOLN, DIES

Met Him When School Girl; Considered Authority on His Early Life

Mrs. Mary C. Puffer, one of few women to have been personally acquainted with Lincoln for many years, died yesterday at her home, No. 140 South Goodman street. Mrs. Puffer was the widow of Samuel W. Puffer. She was born on December 6, 1841, in Winchester, Ill., a daughter of Starker R. Powell, who was associated quite intimately with Lincoln in the Black Hawk Indian war, when Lincoln was a private citizen and a soldier.

Mrs. Puffer first met Lincoln at the Lincoln-Douglas debate, when she was a school girl. She also attended with her father a reception given Lincoln after he was nominated for the Presidency. Among the many treasures that Mrs. Puffer cherished was a Lincoln badge of the first presidential campaign in which he was elected, and a photograph of Lincoln which he gave her and on the back of which he wrote his name.

Mrs. Puffer often related the experiences told her by her father while he was in close contact with Lincoln. One story she vividly remembered was the story of an old, demented Indian who strayed into her father's camp, a story that has become a classic. The other soldiers thought he was a spy, she related, and he never would have left the camp alive, had not Lincoln lifted his arm and held it over him until he was safely out of camp.

During Lincoln's visit to her father's home, she often showed him her playthings, among them being a toy flatiron which he once hid from her to make her believe it was lost to tease her.

Mrs. Puffer came to Rochester in 1890 and resided here ever since. She was well known in literary circles. She was considered an authority on the early life of Lincoln and was the author of several short sketches and articles on his early days in Illinois.

Mrs. Puffer leaves her son, S. Powell Puffer, of Charleston, West Va., former Rochester newspaper man and for years managing editor of the Evening Times. Funeral services will be conducted this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the parish house of Third Presbyterian Church, in Meigs street near East avenue. Rev. Hugh W. Stewart, for many years Mrs. Puffer's minister, will conduct the services. The body will be taken to Massachusetts, where burial will be made in Shoburn Hall.

A. M. FLANNERY FUNERAL TO TAKE PLACE MONDAY; SERVICES AT CATHEDRAL

D. & C.
Friends, Associates
Send Many Floral
Tributes

Jaw. 8 - 1927

Floral tributes and messages of sympathy from grief stricken friends and associates poured into the home, at No. 116 Tinfalgar street, of Albert M. Flannery, secretary to Mayor Martin B. O'Neil, whose unexpected death early yesterday morning stunned city and county officials and employees, and hundreds of persons who knew Mr. Flannery through his twenty-five years service as a news writer for Rochester papers.

Arrangements for the funeral were completed yesterday afternoon. Services will take place Monday morning at 8:30 o'clock at the home, and at 9 o'clock at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Solemn requiem high mass will be celebrated by Rev. Charles F. Shay, rector of the Cathedral, assisted by Rev. Joseph Grady as deacon, and other priests.

Selected Own Bearers.

The bearers, for all of whom Mr. Flannery made known his preference on Tuesday, when there apparently was no reason for such action, are William J. Rafferty, David Condon, Glenn Byers, Ross Erwin, Curtis W. Barker, and William H. Gragen. On Tuesday Mr. Flannery told Mrs. Flannery that if anything happened to him he wished to have these men named as bearers. Mrs. Flannery treated the matter lightly, as Mr. Flannery appeared to be in the best of health, and there was no reason to be alarmed at his request.

Mr. Flannery's death came five minutes after he retired. Death was owing to apoplexy and is believed to have been almost instantaneous. His closest friend, Roy P. Galligan, deputy city clerk, died of apoplexy three months ago.

Comptroller Joseph C. Wilson, who was an intimate friend and neighbor of Mr. Flannery, did not know of his death until yesterday morning. Mr. Wilson was greatly affected, and said: "I don't believe I ever knew so useful a man. He was always doing something for you, and never permitting a return. Though few knew it, the holiday parties he gave to needy children, without public notice, placed Mr. Flannery among the city's most charitable persons."

Tributes to Mr. Flannery were paid by all of his associates in the city and county service. As secretary to the Mayor, Mr. Flannery came in contact intimately with all of the city officials, and he was held in high esteem. Mayor O'Neil was notified early yesterday morning of Mr. Flannery's death, and hastened to the Flannery home. Mayor O'Neil greatly admired Mr. Flannery's character, and said his loss was a blow to the community. Frederick T. Pierson, president of the Common Council, praised Mr. Flannery's ability and exemplary personal habits.

Mr. Flannery passed his last evening at the dinner of the Protectives, an organization in which he was keenly interested and in company with many of his closest friends. He left the Powers Hotel at midnight, and appeared then in the best of health, and spirits. He passed the early evening at the fire house in Central avenue, with Alderman William J. Ward, floor leader of the Common Council, preparatory to going to the annual dinner of the Protectives.

Press Club Resolution

The Board of Governors of the Rochester Press Club yesterday adopted the following minute:

"Albert M. Flannery was long and actively identified with the activities of the Rochester Press Club. As a newspaper worker, he was interested in the affairs of his fellow newspaper men and women, and at all times displayed a willingness to participate in the work of the club. His co-operation was appreciated, and his counsel was frequently sought."

"For a number of years he served as treasurer of the club, being unanimously re-elected at succeeding elections until his appointment as secretary to the mayor made him ineligible to hold office in the club."

"In the passing of Mr. Flannery, newspaper men and women have lost a loyal friend, and the Rochester Press Club has lost a respected member."

D. & C. Editorial
Albert M. Flannery 1927

Successful newspaper men often are called upon to be the secretaries or executive assistants to public officials; in part because the practice of their profession gives them the contacts with all kinds of people which are the daily work of the public official, and in part because their success in meeting these contacts develops qualities that are indispensable in the proper conduct of public office.

The death of Albert M. Flannery, secretary to the Mayor since the first term of Mayor Van Zandt, removes a man who particularly well met the requirements both of success in newspaper work and of success in the public service.

Absolute, quickly recognized integrity, the prime requisite in both fields; judgment and honor in respecting confidences, a first tenet in the newspaper man's creed and in trained assistants to public men; tact in dealing with all sorts of people—these were the qualities that made Mr. Flannery a newspaper man particularly respected in his profession and generally respected outside of it. Both the newspaper profession and the city administration will feel his loss keenly.

H. S. HANFORD, SAVINGS BANK HEAD, EXPIRES

Native of Rochester; Born in 1847, Descendant of Pioneers

ILL FOR FEW DAYS

Entered Banking Business

in 1863; Specialist
on Mortgages

Henry S. Hanford, of No. 285 Oxford street, president of the Rochester Savings Bank, died yesterday afternoon in the Genesee Hospital. Death was caused by an illness which set in on January 9th. Last Sunday his condition became worse, and Monday morning his physicians ordered that he be removed to the hospital. Dr. Warren C. Daly attended him.

Born October 4, 1847, at the corner of Monroe avenue and Alexander street in a house still standing and later occupied by Colonel N. P. Pond, Mr. Hanford later moved with family to Alexander street, south of Monroe avenue, where he passed his boyhood. He attended No. 15 School and the Rochester Free Academy, but left school at the age of 16 to go to work.

Descendant of Thomas Hanford

He was a direct descendant of Thomas Hanford, who came from England about 1650 and settled in Connecticut; also of Captain Samuel Hanford, a soldier in the Colonial wars, and the American Revolution. His father was William L. Hanford, who came to Rochester from Connecticut about 1825, and who was a member of the Monroe county Board of Supervisors half a century ago.

Mr. Hanford's mother was Julia Ann Cobb, daughter of Colonel William Cobb, who with his brother, Gideon Cobb, emigrated to Rochester as one of the early settlers, arriving here before 1820. On his mother's side, Mr. Hanford was a descendant of Governor Bradford of the Plymouth Colony. Mr. Hanford was the youngest of a number of children, four of whom lived to reach maturity. His brother William served through the Civil war and was wounded at Chancellorsville. His sister, Emily Hanford, was a teacher at No. 15 School for nearly fifty years. None of his brothers or sisters are now living.

Taken by Death

HENRY S. HANFORD.

In 1871 Mr. Hanford married Florence M. Saxe, a daughter of Rev. Dr. Asa Saxe, who for 35 years was minister of the First Universalist Church of Rochester. Soon after his marriage, he built a home in Meigs street, near East avenue, and later built the house at No. 525 University avenue, where he lived from 1885 to 1923. For the last three years, he had lived at the Oxford Apartments.

Mr. Hanford as a boy became a member of the Third Presbyterian Church, of which his mother was one of the original members, and he was always active in its affairs, being a trustee for many years. He was actively connected with the Rochester General Hospital as a member of the Board of Directors, and was treasurer of the Rochester City Hospital for many years.

At the time of his death, he was a member of the Genesee Valley Club, and also a life member of Genesee Falls Lodge No. 507, F and A. M.; Hamilton Chapter No. 62, R. A. M.; and Monroe Commandery No. 12, K. T.

Throughout his life, Mr. Hanford's health was remarkably good, and only on a few occasions was he forced to stay away from his work. He had attended business regularly in the last few months and was at his desk on January 8th, the day before he was taken ill.

Besides his wife, Mr. Hanford is survived by five children: Saxe H. Hanford, Mrs. Raymond H. Arnot, both living in Rochester; J. Holly Hanford, of Ann Arbor, Mich.; William C. Hanford, of New York, and Herbert E. Hanford, of Buffalo. There are ten grandchildren.

Entered Banks Early

From his youth, Mr. Hanford was interested in banking matters, and his mother is said to have cherished an ambition that he become a banker. Through most of his long life he was identified with Rochester banking institutions.

Mr. Hanford began to work in 1863. His mother was acquainted with Abram Karens, who conducted a private bank in the Reynolds Arcade, in the store now occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company. Young Hanford was engaged as a bank runner. Two years later he obtained a position with the old Union Bank, of which Aaron Erickson was the head. This bank stood on the site of the Monroe County Savings Bank, in State street.

The savings bank field was then beginning to be developed, and on July 3, 1871, Mr. Hanford obtained employment with the Rochester Savings Bank. That bank then occupied a two-story building on its present site, at the southwest corner of Main street west and Fitzhugh street. Before leaving the Union Bank, Mr. Hanford had been promoted to bookkeeper, and he resigned to become an extra clerk at the Rochester Savings Bank, which at that time had a personnel of a secretary, two tellers and two bookkeepers.

When Mr. Hanford began his employment with the Rochester Savings Bank, it had deposits aggregating $4,493,000, and 11,000 accounts. When he became president, in 1923, the deposits totaled 42,754,800 and the number of accounts, 80,848. At the end of 1926, the bank had 93,600 accounts and deposits of $52,793,040.62. Mr. Hanford did not remain long as extra clerk. William A. Reynolds, who was owner of Reynolds Arcade, one of the most pretentious and valuable pieces of property in Rochester in those days, recognized ability in the conscientious young bank clerk, and soon added responsibility in the bank's affairs was delegated to Mr. Hanford.

At one time, George Eastman was an associate of Mr. Hanford in the employ of the bank. Mr. Hanford and Mr. Eastman have been friends for fifty years.

In almost all of his association with the Rochester Savings Bank, Mr. Hanford paid special attention to the mortgage department. From clerk, he became bookkeeper, and then was placed in charge of the mortgage department. On February 1, 1893, he was elected treasurer of the institution but his activities were principally in the mortgage department.

Appraised Much Property

In his capacity as mortgage expert, Mr. Hanford appraised hundreds of parcels of real estate in Rochester. His constructive methods aided greatly in the development of this city, for mortgage loans were made where the city would derive the most benefit. Loans were spread to embrace the wage earner who wished to erect a home for himself and his family, and loans on property acquired for speculation were made secondary to building construction for the development of the city. Mr. Hanford made this a principle in examining the requests for loans, and how well it worked out is demonstrated by the thousands of wage earners in Rochester who own their own homes.

On November 1, 1920, Mr. Hanford was made vice-president and treasurer of the bank. His activities increased manifold as the business of the bank developed. Mr. Hanford never tired of the routine of banking, of advising people to his best ability on their financial needs, and to prevent the dissipation of years of saving in some wildcat scheme.

Following the resignation of Harold P. Brewster as president, following a year of ill health, Mr. Hanford was elected by the trustees to his place. He assumed his new duties in February, 1923, but for six months previously, had been acting as president. Mr. Hanford became the sixteenth president of the bank, and his predecessors include some of the most prominent men of Rochester in their day.

In the year in which Mr. Hanford became president, the officers and trustees were confronted with the necessity of providing larger quarters for the bank; and after careful consideration, decided the best interest of depositors would be served by establishing a branch at the intersection of North, Ormond and Franklin streets. When plans for the new building were filed early in 1926, the cost was estimated at $1,089,750.

The cornerstone of the new branch was laid on June 10, 1926, by Mr. Hanford, who used a silver-bladed trowel, made specially for the occasion. It is expected the branch will be completed early this year. The structure has accommodations not only for the banking offices, but also for fifty other offices, and for stores along the North street side.

George Eastman Pays

H. S. Hanford Tribute

D. & C. Jan. 11, 1927

On hearing of the death of Henry S. Hanford, president of the Rochester Savings Bank, George Eastman yesterday wired the following tribute to Rochester from his winter lodge at Enfield, North Carolina:

"I have known Henry S. Hanford ever since I became a clerk in the Rochester Savings Bank nearly fifty years ago. He was one of the finest and most dependable men I have ever known. He called upon me at Christmas time, apparently in perfect health. News of his death is therefore a great shock."

D.C. & Editorial Jan. 14
Henry S. Hanford 1927

Among the institutions which count much in making the life of the average family in the United States so prosperous and happy that its status is the goal of most workers and small professional groups in other lands is the savings bank.

The conduct of savings banks calls for the exercise not only of good judgment and business ability, but of the soundest kind of character and integrity as well. When a man, therefore, has made the welfare of a great savings bank in so high-grade a community as Rochester his life work his value to the community is considerable.

The qualities that make a man a success in conducting the affairs of a great and successful savings bank are synonymous with the qualities that make for good citizenship; and it is natural, and wholesome, that in marking the passing of a man who possessed all these qualities in such full measure as did Henry S. Hanford, president of the Rochester Savings Bank, who has just died, the community should be particularly conscious of their worth.

Mr. Hanford and the savings bank which he served so long and so well have been vital factors in making Rochester stand out among American cities as one in which the typically American conditions of individual home-ownership and widely diffused material prosperity—which are important factors in developing good spiritual and moral character in individuals as well as in communities—are developed to a very high degree.

SAMUEL B. WILLIAMS DIES, AGED 83 YEARS; FORMER CITY OFFICIAL

Expires Following Brief Illness in Home in Meigs Street; Active in Many

D.C. Fraternal Circles Jan. 18 1927

FUNERAL SERVICES WILL TAKE PLACE ON THURSDAY

Samuel Burbank Williams, former city official, Civil war veteran, and one of Rochester's most prominent citizens, died at 8:30 o'clock last night at his home, at No. 316 Meigs street, aged 83 years.

Mr. Williams, despite his advanced age, was active in private and public life until a few days before his death. He died following a brief illness. The death of Mr. Williams marks the passing of one of the last of a group closely associated with the public life and growth of the city nearly two score years ago.

Friend of Aldridge.

For nearly seventeen years he served as treasurer and comptroller of the city, and was a close personal friend of George W. Aldridge. He was a prominent Mason, and served sixty-one years as a member of the Protectives.

Mr. Williams was a personal friend of President Coolidge, and took part in a Williams College ceremony with the President when Mr. Coolidge was governor of Massachusetts. He has received two personal letters from the President in the last few years.

Born in Deerfield, Franklin county, Mass., on October 17, 1843, Mr. Williams came to Rochester with his parents in April, 1857. In December, 1863, when only a little more than 20 years of age, Mr. Williams enlisted as a private in Company L, 50th New York Engineers. For the rest of the Civil War he served in the Engineer Brigade of the Army of the Potomac.

In January, 1867, Mr. Williams joined his father-in-law, H. N. Warfield, junior member of the oil firm of George Arnold Company, in forming the firm of Warfield & Company. He began his public career with his election to the old Executive Board in 1882.

He was a member of the Brick Presbyterian Church since 1860, was a trustee of the church for thirty years, and was secretary and treasurer of the primary department for forty-four years.

Mr. Williams was secretary and treasurer of the Engineer Brigade, Army of the Potomac, for forty-seven years, a trustee of the Fireman's Home, at Hudson, N. Y., for twenty-one years, and was a charter member of George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R. He was at one time treasurer of eighteen organizations.

He was one of the organizers of the Masonic Temple Association of this city and was active in the erection of the present Masonic Temple. He was treasurer of the temple for twenty-two years.

Funeral services will take place

SAMUEL B. WILLIAMS.

Thursday morning at 11 o'clock from the home with Rev. Justin W. Nixon, D. D., officiating. Interment will be made in Mount Hope Cemetery.

Mr. Williams, who was a direct descendant of Colonel Ephraim Williams, one of the founders of Williams College, leaves a son, George H. Williams, business manager of the Geneva Printing Company, publishers of the Geneva Daily Times; a brother, James B. Williams of this city, and a nephew, Clarence Williams.

Executive Board Member.

Mr. Williams was a member of the old Executive Board for three years, 1882-83; in 1903 and 1905 he was elected comptroller, but his memory is most closely associated with the office of city treasurer, which he held for twelve years and nine months.

At the expiration of his second term as comptroller in 1907, he left public life. Thereafter he was connected with the National Bank of Commerce. The oil business which he conducted for many years was closed up in 1913.

When he was a member of the Executive Board Mr. Williams played an important part in blocking the attempt of the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railroad Company to cross West avenue at grade. The company obtained a temporary injunction, under which it was sought to prevent the city from interfering with the work of the railroad in removing a dam near the old Pennsylvania station. The injunction was served upon George W. Aldridge and Byron Holley, but Mr. Williams, the third member of the board, could not be found. He had been warned of the impending move by the railroad and disappeared.

For many days when feeling ran high and the railroad was threatening to carry out its plans, Mr. Williams was not to be found. But he was no farther away at times than under a pile of lumber near where the railroad company was likely to start removing the dam in question.

The affair ended in a battle between railroad employees and the city Fire Department, called out to repel invaders. Then the matter was taken to the courts, and the city's interests were protected.

In 1885 Mr. Williams tried for a re-nomination to the Executive Board, but was beaten in convention by James M. Alkenhead.

In 1891 Mr. Williams started his career as city treasurer. He was nominated at that time, later elected, and he continued that process until he became a candidate for comptroller in 1903. In 1895 and 1897 he had no opposition.

He recommended many changes in the treasurer's office, and many of them, especially in regard to unpaid taxes, were adopted. At one time he engineered a popular loan of $700,000 among the citizens of Rochester. The city had not then begun to sell its notes in the money markets of New York and Boston.

Mr. Williams had amusing stories to tell in connection with this loan. One of the subscribers was a retired clergyman. A few weeks before the notes were issued Mr. Williams befriended the man, he thought, by giving him 25 cents for a printed copy of a sermon. When the clergyman asked for $20,000 worth of city notes, the city treasurer was skeptical enough to demand a certified check. The clergyman produced it.

On October 8, 1915, the Protectives had a celebration in their rooms at fire headquarters. The occasion was the fiftieth anniversary of Mr. Williams' connection with the organization, and he was their guest of honor.

Mr. Williams joined the Protectives in 1865. He was first assistant foreman of the old fire company, and became foreman when Dwight H. Wetmore died in office. For twenty-five years he was financial secretary of the Protectives. He was also a trustee in the Fire Department of the City of Rochester and the Rochester representative in the Firemen's Home at Hudson.

When he wished to throw off the cares of business and public life, Mr. Williams went away with a fishing rod or a gun. He was particularly fond of hunting.

"I would rather fish than eat," he used to say, "and I would much rather hunt than fish."

Mr. Williams was one of the first members of O'Rourke Post No. 1, G. A. R., and a charter member and past commander of George H. Thomas Post.

He was a member of Genesee Falls Lodge, Hamilton Chapter, Monroe Commandery, Damascus Temple, Rochester Consistory, of the Masons, and the Military Order of Loyal Legion, California Commandery; Colonial Wars Society and Colonial Governors Society.

On December 9, 1925, Mr. and Mrs. Williams celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary at their home, in Meigs street. Mrs. Williams died a year ago.

Editor, Democrat and Chronicle:

Those who knew and loved the patriotic granddaughter of Rochester's founder—to know her was to love her—have looked in vain for some tribute to her part in the city's betterment. While Mrs. Rogers was a daughter of Puritan, as well as Cavalier, she was typically the well-bred Southern gentlewoman. So quietly she played her part, not only in the home where she reigned supreme, in the church so dear to her heart, in the social and literary circles which she adorned, but to the community at large, her quiet contribution was inestimable. It was but natural with her heritage that she early became a Daughter of the American Revolution, being the thirty-first woman in Rochester to affiliate. Thenceforth the Irondequoit Chapter held her loyal support, and great is the indebtedness it owes her.

When some eighteen months later, the Chapter began the consideration of a Chapter Home, the movement met her hearty support. In those anxious days when the forward step was not without opposition, she was a quiet tower of wisdom and strength to the official leaders. She was a member of the incorporation board, as well as of the first board of directors, and she was one of the three Daughters whose financial backing made the purchase of a Chapter House possible. As its first chairman, her wise guidance paved the way for its success as patriotic headquarters, which the first Chapter Home epitomized. That historic house, which was the home of four generations of her Rochester kindred, was very dear to her. Its rare old-time structure appealed to her. It is fortunate she did not live to know that Rochester had allowed this rare old house, fashioned as no modern hand can fashion to be utterly destroyed, leaving only a memory of its history greater than any other north of the Mason and Dixon line. "There is a gain which tendeth to poverty."

Mrs. Rogers exemplified the finest type of American womanhood; she honored her long line of distinguished ancestry. "As the greatest only are in her simplicity sublime."
