Brief Illness Ends In Death Of Dr. Crapsey

R. J. H. Dec 31 '27

Former Rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Who Gained Fame as Lecturer and Publicist, Dies at Averill Avenue Home, Aged 80 Years

Dr. Algerson Sidney Crapsey, former rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, lecturer and publicist is dead.

Coming, at length, to the end of what he whimsically called his "borrowed years"—those beyond the Scriptural "three score and ten"—he died at 7 o'clock this morning at his home, 678 Averill Avenue, following an illness of little more than a weeks' duration.

Dr. Crapsey is survived by his widow; two sisters, Mrs. Warren Draper of Oklahoma City, Okla., and Mrs. Anna Harvey of Minneapolis, Kan., and five children, Paul B. Crapsey, Algernon Sidney Crapsey Jr. of New York City, Arthur H. Crapsey, Marie Louise Crapsey and Mrs. Walter L. Garside of Somerville, N. J. Algernon Crapsey and Mrs. Garside were called to Rochester at the time of Dr. Crapsey's illness. He leaves six grandchildren.

Services will be at the home on Averill Avenue Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock and will be private. It is requested by the family that no flowers be sent. The Rev. Dr. Justin W. Nixon, pastor of Brick Presbyterian Church, will officiate at the service and the officers of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, founded by Dr. Crapsey when he first came to Rochester as pastor of St. Andrew's Church, will act as pall bearers. The body will be cremated.

Algernon Sidney Crapsey was born in Fairmount, Ohio, a suburb of Cincinnati, June 28, 1847, a son of Jacob Tomkins and Rachel Morris Crapsey.

His maternal grandfather, Thomas Morris, was one of the leaders of the Ohio bar, served in the early legislatures of the state, was a justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio and in 1830 was chosen to represent his state in the United States Senate. In consequence of a speech delivered in the Senate in 1836 attacking slavery Thomas Morris suffered political exile and social ostracism.

Dr. Crapsey Dead At 80; Was Ill Only Few Days

From this ancestor Algernon Crapsey may have inherited something of that readiness to brave consequences in defense of his beliefs which he displayed in later life.

Civil War Veteran

In the strict and formal schooling of those days young Crapsey showed little interest. In 1862 when little more than 15 years old, he enlisted in the Union army. He served as a member of Company B, 79th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, until the following year, when sickness following the hardships of the campaign in Kentucky forced him to leave the army.

Jacob Crapsey, who was a lawyer, maintained an office in Cincinnati. His son finding his duties as clerk there taking but little of his time, became an omnivorous reader, gaining an acquaintance with the best in literature.

In 1864, with $100 which he had saved, and some letters of introduction which proved of little assistance, he went to New York city. After a long search for employment he secured a position with a business house just as his funds were nearing exhaustion. This experience of job-hunting gave him lasting sympathy for those in such circumstances.

While in New York he was attracted by the preaching of Ferdinand Cartwright Ewer, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, was received into membership and felt within him the call to preach the Gospel.

Deacon In 1873

Following this desire he became a student in St. Stephens College and Seminary, acquitting himself with credit there and in his course at the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York city. He was made a deacon in 1872 and was ordained to the priesthood in 1873.

From 1872 to 1879 he was on the staff of Trinity Church, holding a responsible position as a junior assistant minister in that great parish, with charge of much of the work of St. Paul's chapel. He then accepted a call at a much lower salary to come to Rochester as rector of St. Andrews Episcopal Church. His ministry there extended until 1906, over a period of 27 years, when he was deposed for heresy.

St. Andrews was a struggling parish with a handful of communicants when Dr. Crapsey entered upon his ministry there. But his remarkable gifts as a preacher, which had found little scope during his work in New York, soon attracted hearers.

In 1880 with the aid of William B. Douglas, a man of wealth who had been the original supporter of the South Avenue mission, the church was greatly enlarged. In the course of three years the congregation frequently numbered 500. Within six years the church had a communicant list of more than 500 and a membership list of 1,000 including the children. With this came a great growth in pastoral duties, in which Dr. Crapsey was assisted by his wife, who possessed great organizing ability.

Delegate To The Hague

When the Peace Conference was called at The Hague, Dr. Crapsey was named as one of the representatives.

In institutional work, during Dr. Crapsey's ministry, the church was notable for opening a kindergarten and a training class for kindergarten teachers which did pioneer work in Rochester under the direction of Mrs. Katherine Whitehead. There were also evening schools with paid teachers in mechanical arts and the mutual benefit society for young men known as St. Andrews' Brotherhood.

At the call of the church, Dr. Crapsey conducted with success in various cities over a period of years some 20 missions, corresponding to the evangelistic services or revivals of other Protestant denominations.

St. Andrews' Church during Dr. Crapsey's ministry met remarkable success in attracting and retaining as members on an equal and democratic basis persons from all walks like. It began as a mission church in a working class district and retained its hold on the workers after many persons more fortunately placed became communicants.

Meantime the pastor's reading along scientific lines had led him into doubt regarding strictly literal interpretation of creeds and the Scriptures. He was, however, too busy with preaching and pastoral work to follow in detail the exhaustive textual investigation and other intricacies of the so-called higher criticism.

On Feb. 18, 1905, in the course of a series of evening lectures, he said:

"In the light of scientific research, the Founder of Christianity, Jesus, the son of Joseph, no longer stands apart from the common destiny of man in life and death, but He is in all things physical like as we are, born as we are born, dying as we die, and both in life and death in the keeping of that same Divine Power, that Heavenly Fatherhood, which delivers us from the womb and carries us down to the grave. When we come to know Jesus in His historical relations, we see that miracle is not a help, it is a hindrance, to an intelligent comprehension of His person. His character and His mission. We are not alarmed, we are relieved when scientific history proves to us that the fact of His miraculous birth was unknown to Himself, unknown to His mother, and unknown to the whole Christian community of the first generation."

In his autobiography, Dr. Crapsey says that his lecture was not written out beforehand, nor was he conscious at the time of delivery of the fact that highly educated men and women who had no objection to application of scientific methods in Old Testament criticism shrank back from so dealing with the first chapters of the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke.

Criticism Of Lecture

Publication of the lecture aroused a storm of criticism. Bishop Walker first demanded repudiation or retraction and later, at the request of a number of the clergy, appointed a committee of five to investigate and report whether there was any cause for action on the part of the authorities of the diocese.

This committee by a vote of three to two reported against a trial.

But this did not prove the end of the matter. From a merely diocesan quarrel the case of Dr. Crap-sey became a question of general interest to the entire Episcopal Church.

Members of the clergy, who were horrified at the enunciation of such views, laid the matter before Bishop Walker of Buffalo, who cited Dr. Crapsey for trial before an ecclesiastical court. This court was made up mainly of country clergymen. It held its sessions at Batavia, the trial attracting attention all over the country.

Such men as Seth Low, George Foster Peabody, Edward M. Shepard and many others of equal prominence co-operated with the accused clergyman's friends in Rochester and organized a defense committee. The trial resulted in Dr. Crapsey's conviction and removal as rector of St. Andrew's.

It was regarded as a fight to the death between the conservative and liberal elements in the church.

Author Of Note

"Belief in the inerrancy of the Bible is no longer possible," Dr. Crapsey said, "to an educated man or for anyone, in fact, who reads his Bible with reasonable intelligence and attention. It does not need profound scholarship—it only requires common sense—to see that the Bible is not the miraculous book which orthodox theology asserts it to be. It is not the higher critic; it is the ordinary, modern reader who has reverently placed his Bible among the great literatures of the world and finds that both he and his Bible have gained immensely by the operation. He can read his Bible now with pleasure and profit, since in reading he does not have to outrage his intelligence."

Since 1906 Dr. Crapsey had spent much of his time on the lecture platform and in writing books. Among his works are "Five Joyful Mysteries," "The Voice in the Wilderness," "The Disunion of Christendom," "Sarah Thorne," "The Greater Love," "Religion and Politics," "The Rise of the Working Class," "The Ways of the Gods" and "The Last of the Heretics," his autobiography.

Founder Of Brotherhood

He was the founder of St. Andrews Brotherhood of this city and lecturer of the Ethical Society. He was parole agent of the Albany district of New York state for six years, resigning in 1919, giving as the reason his belief that the place should be held by a younger man. He was greatly interested in the work of the State Agricultural and Industrial School at Industry.

He received the degree of S. T. D. from Hobart College in 1900. In 1875 he married Adelaide Trowbridge of Catskill, N. Y., whom he leaves, besides three sons, Paul B. of Rochester, Algernon Sidney, jr., of New York and Arthur H. Crapsey of Rochester, and two daughters, Mrs. Walter Garside of Plainfield, N. J. and Marie Louise Crapsey of Rochester.

Letter To Bishop Walker Expressed Conviction Upon Which Dr. Crapsey Lived

The following paragraph taken from Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey's letter to Bishop Walker following his trial for heresy expresses the conviction upon which he lived out his life of service:

"If I seem to have lost my hold upon some of the traditional and physical interpretations of the creed, let it not be thought on that account that I have lost my hold on the Gospel of Christ. Nay, rather because I have let go these temporary and unstable interpretations of the creed, I find strength to hold more firmly than ever to the gospel. I believe as never before that to love the Lord my God with all my soul and all my mind and all my strength, and to love my neighbor as myself, is not only more than the law and the prophets, but is also more than the creeds and the Churches. I see more clearly than ever that the five negative laws of righteousness laid down by Jesus, which laws command us not to be angry, not to lust, not to take any oath or vow, not to resist evil, not to hate the stranger, though he be an enemy, I see, I say, more clearly than ever that these laws are the hedges of that straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life. To walk in that way has been and will be the constant labor of my soul."

W. DEWEY CRITTENDEN

This is the fifty-third of a series on My Favorite Sport and Why. The next article in the series will appear in an early issue.

NO. 53

UNABLE to break business ties with sufficient regularity to play golf seriously, W. Dewey Crittenden, former president of the Automobile Club of Rochester, gets his fill of sports as a spectator. And as a spectator in recent years he has gone in for athletics with the same whole heartedness which marked his efforts as a player.

Mr. Crittenden, be it known, was one of the best bowlers hereabouts not so long ago. Too, he used to play baseball, basketball, tennis and a host of other clean out of doors games.

His principal interests have been and still are in the direction of baseball, football and speed-racing. He likes baseball better than any other sport and has not missed a World Series for almost a dozen years. He takes in the big football games in the Fall.

More than once he has driven to Indianapolis to attend the annual speed racing there, and en route, Mr. Crittenden will confess, he likes to burn up the roads.

—Bank Officer—Active in Church, Civic Affairs

Pharcellus V. Crittenden, president of Brewster-Crittenden Co., wholesale grocers, and a Rochester civic and business leader, died unexpectedly last night at his home, 140 Plymouth Avenue South. He was 87.

Mr. Crittenden was stricken about 9 o'clock and died within a few minutes. Although he had been in poor health for three years, he had shown no sign of fatigue following a drive in the country yesterday, relatives said.

Despite advancing age, Mr. Crittenden to the last retained an active interest in his business and in church and civic activities. At time of his death he was connected with several commercial organizations and was chairman of the board of trustees of the Central Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Crittenden was born Aug. 6, 1846, in the Town of West Brighton, the youngest of eight children of Justin and Sarah Crittenden. He was educated in country district schools and later prepared for his business career at the Commercial School in Rochester. Coming to the city at the age of 18 to seek his fortune, he entered the employ of H. Austin Brewster, grocer, and a few years later became a partner in the firm.

Friend of Aldridge

He later became president of the concern and continued in that capacity until his death.

In politics Mr. Crittenden was an ardent Republican and supported the policies of the G. O. P. in many a hotly contested campaign. He was a close friend of the late George W. Aldridge, chairman of the Monroe County party, and active in the party councils, although he himself never ran for office.

Mr. Crittenden was a vice-president of the Monroe County Savings Bank, a director of the Security Trust Company and a member of the board of governors of the Genesee Hospital. For many years he served on the board of the Friendly Home. He belonged to the Genesee Valley Club, the Oak Hill Country Club, the Washington Club, the Caledonia Fishing Club and the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. In 1907 he served as chief commissioner from New York at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition at Hampton Roads, Va.

Mr. Crittenden married Miss Frances Baker Oct. 12, 1870, at the Second Baptist Church. Mrs. Crittenden's death occurred May 9, 1931.

The surviving relatives are four nephews, Austin C. Jackson, W. Dewey Crittenden and Austin F. Crittenden of Rochester and Stephen Leggett of Albany, Ga., and four nieces, Mrs. Isabelle Cook, Mrs. William S. Riley, Mrs. Robert Tait and Miss Helen J. Baker, all of Rochester.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 2:30 p. m. Wednesday. Private burial will be in the family mausoleum at Mt. Hope Cemetery.

2 Million Dollar Estate Of P. V. Crittenden Given Kin, Friends, Institutions

Estimated to be in excess of $2,000,000, the will of Pharcellus V. Crittenden, who died Oct. 15, yesterday was filed for probate in the Surrogate's office by Castle & Fitch, attorneys. The will is dated June 10, 1926, and there are two codicils thereto, one dated Apr. 4, 1930, and the other dated Apr. 19, 1932.

Mr. Crittenden's fortune is divided among a large number of relatives, friends and employees of Brewster, Crittenden Company, Inc., and substantial bequests are made to various churches, hospitals, orphan homes and other charitable and philanthropic institutions in this city.

The original will was executed before the death of Mr. Crittenden's wife, Frances D. Crittenden, and bequeathed her a cash legacy of $100,000, provided a trust fund in her behalf of $40,000 and after certain bequests gave her the use of the residue of the estate.

The will provides for a bequest of $50,000 to Central Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Crittenden was a trustee. The Baptist Temple is to receive $10,000.

The will and codicils as now in effect provide for the following bequests to members of his family:

$5,000 to his brother Cornelius S. Crittenden (now deceased); $25,000 each to his nieces and nephews, Carrie M. Riley, Austin C. Jackson, W. Dewey Crittenden and Isabella F. Cook; $20,000 each to his niece Margia C. Tait, and nephews Austin F. Crittenden and Stephen A. Leggett; and $10,000 each to P. V. Crittenden Jackson, grandnephew, and Delora Leggett Stern, grandniece and namesake of his wife, of Albany, Georgia.

After making these provisions for his family, Mr. Crittenden directed the following distribution "in the name of both my wife and myself:"

To Helen J. Baker $60,000, "Helen J. Baker is my wife's cousin, from California, a graduate nurse. She came to us over four years ago at the request of my wife. She is kind and thoughtful and has taken excellent care of us both, especially so during our recent illnesses. She has seemed to us like our own daughter. My wife and I have been about the only ones she could look to for any material help. Therefore, I am glad to aid her to the amount herein stated in memory of my wife."

To C. Edward Evans "my faithful employe for many years," $8,000; and to Mrs. C. Edward Evans $2,000.

Charles P. Kingston since deceased) $15,000; John W. Swanton (since deceased) $15,000; James L. Gott $10,000; Jay B. Edgerton and Earl M. Tuttle each $8,000; William H. Lauth $7,000; John F. By the two codicils to his will he increased the legacies to Mr. Swanton to $35,000 with the following explanation: "John W. Swanton has had an extra responsibility in our business (Brewster, Crittenden & Co., Inc.) since the death of Charles P. Kingston and during my recent illness, and I am pleased to say that he has done remarkably well. He has been connected with our firm and corporation for nearly fifty years."

Mr. Crittenden in his will also gave Miss Meier an additional $5,000 explaining that "she has attended to my special correspondence with careful and untiring ability," and by his last codicil he gave her $5,000 more with the following explanation: "Caroline M.

Meier has also been with us many years. She has been faithful and trustworthy and for the last few months has had charge of my personal financial affairs, acting as my secretary."

By his will he also bequeathed an additional $3,000 to Mary L. Covey "for her capable efforts in looking after the office work."

To the Directors of Brewster, Crittenden & Company, Incorporated, "with the request that they distribute this amount among the employes of Brewster, Crittenden & Company, Incorporated, not above provided for, as they may elect" $5,000.

Pharcellus V. Crittenden

A host of friends and acquaintances in the Rochester area learned with regret of the sudden death of Pharcellus V. Crittenden, known for at least three generations as one of the leaders of business and civic activities in this city. A native of Monroe County, Mr. Crittenden had lived in or near the city for his entire 87 years of his busy and useful life.

Mr. Crittenden gave evidence early of his capacity for leadership and enterprise and maintained that reputation all through his numerous activities. He entered on a business career when only 18 years of age and soon won a partnership in the concern of which he afterward became president.

He was personally acquainted with most of the outstanding men and women of the Empire State. He was on terms of close intimacy with such men as George W. Aldridge in the days when that far-sighted leader of the Republican party in Rochester was at the height of his career. In business and finance, Mr. Crittenden's judgment was widely sought and quoted. In private life and as a supporter of church activities, he had the respect of all who knew him.

Through the death of Mr. Crittenden, Rochester loses a representative citizen of high character; a good friend whose advice and guidance had been of value to the community on many occasions. He belonged to a generation that worked unceasingly and with constructive purpose to build up Rochester through numerous activities; a generation that has left a heritage which, if wisely used, must be of great future value.

Civic Leader Dead at 87 Years—Active In City's Life

Pharcellus V. Crittenden, president of Brewster-Crittenden Co., wholesale grocers, and a Rochester civic and business leader, died unexpectedly last night at his home, 140 Plymouth Avenue South. He was 87.

Mr. Crittenden was stricken about 9 o'clock and died within a few minutes. Although he had been in poor health for three years, he had shown no sign of fatigue following a drive in the country yesterday, relatives said.

Despite advancing age, Mr. Crittenden to the last retained an active interest in his business and in church and civic activities. At the time of his death he was connected with several commercial organizations and was chairman of the board of trustees of the Central Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Crittenden was born Aug. 6, 1846, in the Town of West Brighton, the youngest of eight children of Justin and Sarah Crittenden. He was educated in country district schools and later prepared for his business career at the Commercial School in Rochester. Coming to the city at the age of 18 to seek his fortune, he entered the employ of H. Austin Brewster, grocer, and a few years later became a partner in the firm.

He later became president of the concern and continued in that capacity until his death.

In politics Mr. Crittenden was an ardent Republican and supported the policies of the GOP in many a hotly contested campaign. He was a close friend of the late George W. Aldridge, czar of the Monroe County party, and active in the party councils, although he himself never ran for

He belonged to the Genesee Valley Club, the Oak Hill Country Club, the Fishing Club and the Rochester Washington Club, the Caledonia Chamber of Commerce. In 1907 he served as chief commissioner from New York at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition at Hampton Roads, Va.

tenden's death occurred May 9, 1931.

The surviving relatives are four nephews, Austin C. Jackson, W. Dewey Crittenden and Austin F. Crittenden of Rochester and Stephen Leggett of Albany, Ga., and four nieces, Mrs. Isabelle Cook, Mrs. William S. Riley, Mrs. Robert Tait and Miss Helen J. Baker, all of Rochester.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 2:30 p. m. Wednesday. Private burial will be in the family mausoleum at Mt. Hope Cemetery.

The Times-Union congratulates Justice Benjamin B. Cunningham and Henry E. Kirstein on their birthday anniversaries tomorrow.

JUSTICE BENJAMIN B. CUNNINGHAM, 54 years old tomorrow, has been a judge of the Seventh judicial district of the Supreme Court of New York since 1920. Among various civic measures he sustained the right of the city to preserve Hemlock Lake from pollution that it might become the source of water supply.

Justice Cunningham married Eleanor MacKearnin June 28, 1911. The wedding took place in Buffalo. They have four children, Benjamin B. Jr., Eleanor, Betty Anne and Roderick.

Justice Cunningham is a member of the American Bar Association and served as president of the Rochester Bar Association in 1918. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Genesee Valley Club and the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. The Cunningham home is at 1330 Park Avenue.

My Favorite Sport and Why

RAYMOND J. CURRAN

This is the forty-ninth of a series on My Favorite Sport and Why and today Mr. Curran neglects to explain exactly why. The next article in this series will appear tomorrow.

NO. 49

ANY sport you choose to mention will bring forth a definite response from Raymond J. Curran, general manager of the Columbus Building. Mr. Curran has played most of them and watched them all.

Indeed, when he reminisces about athletic activities, you will be amazed at trying to associate so young a face and so active a body with the distant years to which his memory of sport carries him.

The seeming disparity between his wealth of experience and his youthful appearance, however, is an all-important indicator of how Ray makes life worth living. He extracts the utmost of satisfaction from everything he does. And he stays young doing it.

Not too long ago he was one of the best bowlers in the city. That was a winter occupation. Until some seven or eight years ago he filled Summer spare moments by playing baseball. Of late he has turned to golf. And he finds the links game one which yields many pleasant moments.

If he were to take his youngsters on the links, however, he could enjoy himself only as an arbiter for two foursomes. The young Currans, you see, are eight in number.

JAMES G. CUTLER DIES; TWICE MAYOR, PROMINENT IN CITY'S BUSINESS LIFE

JAMES GOOLD CUTLER

in Many Lines

James Goold Cutler, former mayor, prominent business man, banker and philanthropist, died yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at his home, No. 766 East avenue, after an illness of several weeks. Death was caused by heart trouble.

Mr. Cutler would have observed his 79th birthday Sunday.

Mr. Cutler was twice mayor of Rochester, and at the time of his death was chairman of the Board of Directors of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank, following a long service as its president. He had been interested in the bank and one of its predecessors, the Alliance Bank, since 1893. Mr. Cutler was closely identified with the civic life of Rochester. He was an architect by training, and his interests were diversified and large. He manifested a deep interest in the

Born in Albany

Mr. Cutler was born in Albany on April 24, 1848, the son of John N. and Mary E. Gould Cutler, and was of English-Dutch ancestry. He received his early education at the Albany Boys' Academy. In his earlier years, he worked in a carriage factory owned by his grandfather, and after his graduation from the academy began the study of architecture in the office of Nichols & Brown in Albany.

In 1872, Mr. Cutler moved to Rochester and became a draughtsman in the office of the late A. J. Warner, later becoming Mr. Warner's partner. After this, Mr. Cutler opened an office of his own as practising architect, and maintained it until 1884, making an enviable reputation as the architect of many outstanding public and private buildings.

In this period, Mr. Cutler became interested in the practicability of a mail-chute device for office buildings, and obtained a patent on an invention for the reception of mail on every floor of a building. It is this invention that has since carried Mr. Cutler's name all over the world. In 1884, in association with his brother, J. Warren Cutler, he formed the Cutler Manufacturing Company, controlling and operating the Cutler mail chute patents.

At the time of engaging in the manufacturing business, Mr. Cutler gave up his architectural office, but by this time many structures in this vicinity had been erected in accordance with plans drawn by him. Among them were the Elwood building, the Kimball factory (Cluett, Peabody building), Bank of Monroe building, the Fitch Institute in Buffalo, and the residences of Granger A. Hollister, Hiram W. Sibley, Rufus A. Sibley, W. S. Kimball, Alfred Wright, John Durand, A. M. Everest, G. E. Mumford, L. Ward Clarke, William W. Webb, Alexander M. Lindsay, J. A. Baum, and John Van Voorhis.

Mr. Cutler's brother, Clarence B. Cutler, likewise attained fame as an architect, before his retirement in 1924. He was consulting architect for the State Education Department for a number of years.

Invented Mail Chute

The invention of the Cutler mail chute came, like most valuable inventions, from a resourceful man's search for an improved method. The Elwood building at State and Main was being outlined by Mr. Cutler in 1879, with a view to giving its future tenants the maximum of convenience. Mr. Cutler realized the hardships involved in office buildings through the necessity of having to carry mail matter to the street letter box, so he evolved the mail chute. From his design, carpenters built a wooden chute.

This method of mail delivery instantly attracted considerable attention from postal authorities and men interested in office buildings. Mr. Cutler was granted patents on the mail chute and mail box in 1883, and arrangements were made with the Yawman & Erbe Manufacturing Company to manufacture the mailing systems. For the next twenty-five years, or until about 1908, that company produced the systems, which were rapidly installed in office buildings throughout the country.

In 1908 land was purchased in Anderson avenue, and a factory erected. Necessarily, the business of the company always has been somewhat limited by the restrictions of the Postoffice Department, as only buildings in certain classes are eligible to use its mailing systems. Buildings have been equipped with the chutes and boxes in South Africa, India, Australia, England, Mexico, Cuba and Japan.

In 1909 the Cutler Manufacturing Company and the Automatic Mail Delivery Company of New York merged

Late Francis X. Cullinan Suggested for Sainthood In Dr. Grady's Address

By AMY H. CROUGHTON

That Francis X. Cullinan, who died in 1930, at the age of 24, after a life of exceptional beauty and spirituality, may one day be canonized and become Rochester's first saint, was suggested, last night, by the Rev. Dr. Joseph E. Grady, principal of Aquinas, in an appreciation of the young student's life given before the Rochester Historical Society at Edgerton Park.

Francis Cullinan, was born in Rochester Nov. 27, 1906, the son of Francis X. and Mary Brick Cullinan, of 733 Genesee Street and was educated at St. Joseph's Collegiate Institute, Buffalo; Aquinas Institute and Holy Cross College, entering the Society of Jesus at Poughkeepsie in 1925 and later taking up the study of philosophy at Woodstock College. His desire was to become a missionary in the Philippines, but his health gave way under the severity of his studies and the self-discipline he practiced, and he died from hemorrhage while swimming, in 1930.

Quoting from letters the reminiscences of friends and relatives, and his own knowledge, Doctor Grady painted a character-portrait of a personality in which keen intellect, artistic talent and gay humor were brought into the service of a strongly idealistic spirit. The influence of such a character does not end with death, Doctor Grady declared.

Charles H. Wiltsie, president of the Historical Society, announced general plans for participation of the society in the coming centennial celebration of the city.

An appreciation of the late Mrs. Edward R. Foreman was read by Mr. Wiltsie and a resolution of sympathy on her death was adopted by the society.

Distinguished Addition to Rochester's Roll of Artists

MICHAEL CUYPERS AT WORK

This Newcomer a Real Master of Arts

Michael Cuypers, architect, sculptor, decorative painter, wood carver, designer of furniture and of stained glass windows—that is the way the business card of one of Rochester's newly acquired citizens would read if he were to lay claim to all of his varied talents.

Mr. Cuypers calls himself an interior decorator and originator of furniture designs and lets it go at that. His ability in nearly every branch of the fine arts, he declares, is as natural to him as it is for the American boy to like baseball.

The time spent since he was a child in the studios of two generations of Holland's leading architects and his contact with the art industries of Holland as a member of the younger group of artists are good reasons for his versatility.

OF FAMED FAMILY.

Holland today knows well the name of Dr. Peter Cuypers, grandfather of Michael and who is recognized as the founder of the modern school of art in northwestern Europe.

It was he who discovered that the early Gothic architecture followed a structural plan that in itself was artistic. During this period he found it was considered ridiculous to erect a building first and then plan its decorative features. With this in mind he planned buildings with the very foundation stones a part of their artistic design.

A list of the elder Cuypers' awards and honors fills four sheets of typewritten copy. He was made a member of most of the academies and institutes of the world, including the American Institute of Architects, and was a gold medalist in the Royal Institute of British Architects. In addition, he had the distinction of being architect to Queen Wilhelmina.

SOME OF HIS WORK

Restoration of the magnificent fourteenth century Castle of Haar, near Utrecht, owned by Baron van Zuylen van Nyevelt; of the Cathedral of Mainz, in Germany, and of a score of Gothic churches and cathedrals in Holland was directed by Doctor Cuypers and carried out by artists representing his studios. Among them was the young Michael Cuypers.

The new rikmuseum and central station at Amsterdam, the cathedral at Breda and the building reserved for the Lower House at the Hague, all were built after plans made by Peter Cuypers.

So great had the name of Cuypers become when Michael Cuypers' father, Joseph, succeeded the older artist, that contracts came to him for entire towns and the Province of Limburg, in southern Holland, of which Roermond, native town of the family is a principal one, was made to conform with a plan made by him.

The Cathedral of Saint Bavo at Haarlem, entirely modern in its conception, and the Stock Exchange building in Amsterdam are permanent monuments to the genius of this contemporary architect.

His distinguished place among architects of the world was assured with his election in Paris this summer as president of the Permanent Committee of the International Congress of Architects.

MICHAEL CUYPERS HERE

Michael Cuypers, representative of the third generation of the line, takes greatest delight in making original designs for furniture. It is his plan to bring to this country a complete museum collection of the work of furniture builders in Holland, both of old and modern schools.

An exhibit of the antique pieces he has brought to this country is being displayed at the Women's City Club.

In connection with it he will give a series of lectures on interior decorating on Wednesday evening, beginning February 15.

Golf No Seasonal Hobby For John P. Day, Genesee Valley Trust Official

J. H. A. 10. 30
Golf is the hobby of John P. Day, vice-president of the Genesee Valley Trust Company, whose home is at 232 Barrington Street.

While golf is only a seasonal pastime with most devotees it is not so with Mr. Day. He thinks golf the year round and is always in the van of those who make an early exodus to the links in the Spring.

Mr. Day has followed his hobby with real fervor for the last 20 years and has played over many courses in the state. It has not gone unproductive as hobbies sometimes do, for there are several trophies bespeaking the success of Mr. Day as a golfer. In addition to advancing far in various tournaments throughout the state, Mr. Day has been three times champion of the Rochester Country Club.

He bowls occasionally in the Winter and has one other hobby he pursues as opportunities present themselves.

Rochester - Biography

Robert M. Dalzell ...was born in North of Ireland, of Scotch ancestry. ... His father, John Dalzell, was the last of an old family of Covenanters that established itself in the county of Down, adjoining Belfast, and became a leading family in influence and character, with large property. In the rebellion of 1798, he was one of the recognized leaders; and the family mansion, that had been the family home for several generations, was with its accumulated treasures and objects of historical interest burned by the British soldiers, and all his property was confiscated by the government, while a reward was offered for his person. Escaping to sea by an open boat, he was picked up by a ship's crew and carried to New York. Hither his family, including Robert, the subject of our notice, then five years of age, soon followed arriving in 1798. Stripped of prosperity and power, they had to begin, as it were, life anew in a strange land and under strange and adverse conditions.

They selected Oneida county, in this State, as their future home, from whence our respected townsman came to this city in 1826.

...He was the inventor of the elevator system now in use in all large ocean and inland ports. But with his characteristic unselfishness, he refused to apply for a patent, that would have added greatly to his property. Under his supervision all the flouring mills of this, the "Flour City" were built. For many years he was a director of the old Rochester City Bank.....

...For many years, nearly fifty he has been a member of the First Presbyterian Church of this City, and for over twenty-five years a ruling elder therein.

...He has left a widow, and a son and daughter, Mr. James Dalzell, and Mrs. Elizabeth Crangle of Wheeling, West Virginia.

Rochester Entomologist on His 82d Birthday Still Marvels Over Wonders of Insect World

Second Man at 95 Looks Forward to Enjoying
Baseball Season

Conedrichelusenuphar is the name of a little bug and it rolls quite easily off the tongue of William L. Devereaux, who today on his 82nd birthday has known insects for more than half a century.

Long bug names don't stump Mr. Devereaux and neither does age, for he's as wiry and jolly as a youth of 50, grinds out entomological articles by dozens on his typewriter and hikes a mile and a half a day in search of more material to write about.

The second oldest member of the American Society for the Advancement of Science is still overwhelmed with the wonders of the insect world, he admitted yesterday. Why so many bugs that will never be seen by man exist is a question he ponders over and over.

"Isn't it strange that there are over a million different species of insects and not anywhere near that many in any other animate or inanimate life?" he asked, shaking his head. "It's a marvel why those things should be so beautiful, and why should they be so intelligent?" "Dogs, horses and cattle can't make their own houses but bugs can make wonderful homes for themselves from silk and fibers." As though the mystery were too much for him he turned to talking about the changes in entomology during the last 60 years.

Traveled Far

When Mr. Devereaux was a boy, botany and entomology were hobbies with him, and, like Topsy, he said, he just "grew" into an entomologist. He collected moths, butterflies, beetles and weevils by the hundreds. He still has many of the earliest of his collection. He traveled up and down the country and in Mexico to learn more about

William L. Devereaux, second oldest member of the American Academy for the Advancement of Science and ardent entomologist, today celebrates his 82d birthday. He is shown above with one of his collections of insects. He has even exchanged specimens with European collectors.

There were few entomologists in those days and now there are dozens in Rochester alone.

The early entomologists concerned themselves only with finding new bugs, but nowadays they are absorbed by insect history, and Mr. Devereaux keeps up with their discoveries by assiduous reading and frequent visits to the Ward Mu-

Gadgets Astound Him

"Why, all we had was pen, ink well and a set of books. They don't even have to think with all those gadgets they have around now," he observed with a hearty chuckle.

He has been a farmer and a merchant, but his hobby of natural science has been his first and last love. His knowledge of the subject earned him membership in the American Entomological Society of which he is the oldest member.

"That hobby of mine has kept me so busy I haven't had time to think of getting old. It's awful to feel so young and be so old," he said.

Dr. Devereaux won't officially celebrate his birthday until Sunday when his children and grandchildren will have a party for him. He has one daughter, Mrs. Minerva Canfield of 110 Park Avenue with whom he lives; four sons, Hugh and John of Watertown and Lynn and Ray of Clyde and four grandchildren. Mrs. Devereaux died before he moved to Rochester from Syracuse where he kept a store 15 years ago.

Marks 95th Birthday

Springtime here, 95 years to look back upon and the baseball season to enjoy makes life worth living, according to the way Norman G. Upson looked at things on his birthday anniversary yesterday.

His son, Franklin, who lives with him at 9 Algonquin Terrace, celebrated his 68th birthday yesterday. The occasion drew a host of relatives and friends for a party last night. Baseball, a favorite sport of both father and son, held the spotlight of conversation.

George M. Roser of 76 Centennial Street raked and dug weeds in his flower garden yesterday by way of celebrating his 81st birthday. Mr. Roser used to celebrate his birthdays with long bicycle rides and would have yesterday had not Mrs. Roser objected.

He was born in Clyde, the son of Albert F. Devereaux and Mary Hall Devereaux, the daughter of the inventor of open guards for moving machines.

He attended the Rochester Business Institute, and is now its oldest graduate. He went there, he said, to learn to write a good hand and keep books, and he's astonished by all the machinery that business schools are equipped with these

AN ABLE TEACHER DECORATED

WHEN the Italian government of Premier Mussolini decorates anyone because of services they must be distinguished indeed. Il Duce pays tribute only to those who achieve notably.

Professor Domenick De Francesco, instructor in Italian in Rochester schools, gains an unusual distinction in the award by Italy of a silver medal. He received the citation—

"For diffusion of the Italian language in Rochester schools."

Consul-General Antonio Grossardi made the presentation. Mayor Charles Stanton spoke with understanding and feeling of the work of the teacher in the high schools of the city.

Rochester looked upon the scene, proudly.

Under any circumstances, there would be reason for gratification because the work of one of its sons—especially in its schools—was done so well that it attracted attention and honors from overseas.

Here are special reasons for satisfaction.

What Professor De Francesco is doing here not only pleases Italy but is of unusual value to the city which is his home—to this land of which he is a most useful citizen.

Besides, the recognition is given to one of many who claim the same fatherland—who are factors in the culture and development of Rochester. We congratulate this successful teacher.

Decker, Attorney of Iroquois Tribes, Honored by Wells

Efforts of George P. Decker, of this city, counsel for the Six Iroquois Nations and friend of the late Chief Deskaheh, to give the Iroquois representation in the League of Nations are mentioned by H. G. Wells, rewriter of history and world known British political commentator, in his latest volume, "The World of William Clissold."

Mr. Wells speaks particularly of the efforts of the Canadian Iroquois, represented by their late chief under Mr. Decker's counsel, to win a footing before the League of Nations at Geneva in the matter of an alleged Canadian violation of a British Crown treaty guaranteeing the nation of red men forever the peaceful possession of certain of their lands.

Mr. Wells in the second volume of his "Clissold" speaks of the Iroquois land strip at Grand River, Canada, as a "ribbon of liberty." He notes the efforts made to maintain the Iroquois's legal and tribal integrity in the face of encroachments on their soil. He describes the wampum belts and treaty, representing the sacred promise of the British Crown, which are lodged in a Rochester bank vault by the red men for fear that the treasures will be acquired by Canadian agents.

Rochester Public Library
64 Court St.

Isaac Huston Dewey, 83, real estate developer and leading churchman, died yesterday at his home, 1475 St. Paul Street.

Mr. Dewey was a member of the Central Presbyterian Church and was active in many of its affairs. He had been president of the board of trustees for 25 years.

In recent years Mr. Dewey's main business activity was the development of a farm he owned at Avenue E, Conkey Avenue and St. Paul Street, into a residential section. It was the last strip of farm land in that section to surrender to the city's march on the 17th Ward and Irondequoit.

Founded Furniture Firm

Mr. Dewey was born at Reed's Corners, N. Y., the son of Frederick William and Mary Husted Dewey. The family moved to Rochester in 1857 and for a time young Dewey was employed here by Newell & pin, picture frame manufacturers. When he was 19 he went to Detroit and entered the furniture business, and afterward returned to Rochester to found the firm of I. H. Dewey & Company, furniture manufacturers. In 1884 he sold his share of the business to his partners, who formed the Hubbard & Eldridge Company. After that time Mr. Dewey devoted himself to his farm and his real estate interests.

He leaves a sister, Miss Charlotte L. Dewey, a cousin and four nieces.

ALVIN H. DEWEY, INDIAN LORE STUDENT, DIES

R. U. F. Rochester, Aug. 27, 1917
Funeral Rites Tomorrow
for Rochesterian Long Active in Business and Social Circles.

Alvin H. Dewey, long active in Rochester's business, civic and social life and widely known for his knowledge of archaeology, died yesterday at his home, 34 South Goodman Street, in his 70th year.

Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. in Mt. Hope Chapel.

Mr. Dewey early manifested his bent for archaeology and his long continued study in that subject made him a recognized authority of Indian lore. His enthusiasm was largely responsible for the founding of Lewis Henry Morgan Chapter, New York State Archaeology Association, of which he was president 12 years. He was president of the state body many years and held that office at the time of his death.

Mr. Dewey's knowledge of Indian history won him the honor of election as fellow in the American Academy of Science. He served as president of the Rochester Municipal Museum Committee and was president of the Common Council two years.

Outstanding in his business life was his presidency of the Rochester and Lake Ontario Water Company for 16 years, from which office he resigned last year. He continued in business as secretary and treasurer of the Victor Plaster Company, Inc.

Born in Watertown, Aug. 5, 1859, the son of County Judge and Mrs. Hiram Dewey, Mr. Dewey was educated in the public schools of that city. He was printer and publisher of the Watertown Standard Republican, a daily newspaper, before moving to Rochester in 1885 to open a drug store in Monroe Avenue.

Alvin H. Dewey

From 1900 to 1908 he was district manager of the Bell Telephone Company, leaving that organization to join the Rochester & Lake Ontario Water Company.

Mr. Dewey's sustained enthusiasm for archaeological study, his valuable contributions to it and his activity in connection with Lewis Henry Morgan Chapter received a tribute from the latter group at its annual dinner in February, 1926, when the chapter issued a monograph of Seneca Indian history and relics, dedicated to President Dewey. Arthur C. Parker, director of the Rochester Municipal Museum, was the author of the monograph.

Mr. Dewey was a member of the Rochester Club, Rochester Chapter Sons of the American Revolution, Chamber of Commerce of Rochester and of the United States, City Club, Automobile Club of Rochester. During the World War he was chairman of the Chamber of Commerce committee on military affairs.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Grace Townley Dewey; two sons, Elliott T. Dewey of Chicago and Hugh S. Dewey of Rochester, and one sister, Mrs. Ralph H. Gorsline of Rochester.

DR. C. A. DEWEY PHYSICIAN AND PIONEER, DIES

Reynolds Library Trustee;
Active in Philanthropic

Affairs of City
D+C. Home 14-27
U. OF R. ALUMNUS

Assisted in Establishing of General Hospital;
Interests Varied

Dr. Charles A. Dewey, for many years prominent in scientific, educational, and civic affairs in Rochester, died suddenly yesterday morning at his home, at No. 174 Spring street, in his 85th year. Funeral arrangements have not been completed, Dr. Dewey having no immediate relatives in this city.

Dr. Dewey was in a quiet way, most active in philanthropic affairs, taking a particular interest in the University of Rochester, from which he graduated in the class of 1861. He was one of the supporters of the Memorial Art Gallery and of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, and a trustee of the Reynolds Library, to which he devoted much time and effort. Some years ago he founded the Dewey prize declamations in the University of Rochester as a memorial to his father, Dr. Chester Dewey.

Dr. Rhees Comments

In commenting last night on Dr. Dewey's character, Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the university and his lifelong friend, said:

"In the death of Dr. Charles A. Dewey, Rochester loses one of its few links with its own past. Born here in 1842, Dr. Dewey lived the most of his eighty-five years in his home city, and saw with his own eyes the changes which have wrought the transformations from a large village—though with city organization—into a city of more than 300,000 people.

"In his inheritance he had the best that New England has contributed to the growth of our country with his father and mother having come from illustrious families of Western Massachusetts. His father, Dr. Chester Dewey, was one of the foremost American men of science of his time, and after his coming to Rochester he was an active influence in all that contributed to the intellectual life of our city. He was one of the principal agents in bringing to pass the establishment here of the University of Rochester, in which he held the professorship of natural sciences from 1850 until his death in 1867. During that time as well as before, he was a frequent contributor to scientific journals and correspondent of the Smithsonian Institution.

"Dr. Charles Dewey's mother was Alivia Hart Pomeroy, of Pittsfield, a member of one of the prominent old Massachusetts families. From both his father and his mother, he inherited the fine qualities which made him the able, successful, lovable man whom we have known.

Studies at Harvard

"He was graduated from the University of Rochester in the class of 1861, just before he passed his nineteenth birthday. His early manhood was spent for the most part in business in New England. But after following that career for several years, he decided that medicine was calling him irresistibly, and entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1880.

"Having returned to Rochester to practice his profession, he soon rose to a front place, in close association with his classmate, Dr. William S. Ely. He co-operated with Dr. Ely and other leaders in his profession in the early development of what is now the Rochester General Hospital, which he served as attending physician, from 1883 to his retirement in 1908.

"Dr. Dewey's intellectual interests were wide, and his literary ability, as shown by several papers read to a circle of close friends, was so marked that his alma mater in 1924 awarded him the honorary degree of Doctor of Literature. This recognition had added significance in the fact of his long and wholly devoted service to the Reynolds Library, to which for many years and up to the day of his death he gave the best of his time, strength, and thought as chairman of its Library Committee. Hardly a day passed when he did not visit the library whose interests and needs were close to his heart.

"He was a generous and liberal helper of all good causes, though not many of his friends knew of his gifts. He was strong in his friendships and came very close to those to whom he gave his confidence. And he was a reverent and devoted spirit who looked at life and beyond it with a large faith."

Admitted to Bar

Dr Dewey spent most of his life in the Third ward, being born in the old house at Caledonia avenue and Spring street and later moving to the house adjoining it in Spring street. After his graduation from the University of Rochester he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1863, but never practiced law. He gave up his medical practice some years ago, but up to the time of his death was an examiner for a New England insurance company.

He was one of the founders of the Fortnightly Club, composed of literary men in Rochester, and it was before gatherings of this group that he read the papers mentioned by Dr. Rhees. He also read many papers before the Historical Society.

Dr. Dewey was a member of the Archeological Institute of America, the Memorial Art Gallery, the University of Rochester Alumni Association, the Harvard Club, the Fortnightly Club, the Monroe Medical Society, the Rochester Society, and the Society of Colonial Wars.

His nearest relatives are: Mrs. William J. Averell, of Ogdensburg, a niece, and George H. Perkins, of No. 111 Westminster road, a nephew. Mrs. Averell came to Rochester yesterday.

Active Career Ends

ALVIN H. DEWEY

He was president of the New York State Archaeological Association and of the Morgan Chapter for 12 years, and was largely instrumental in organizing the Morgan Chapter.

Although much of his time was given to his interest in archaeological studies, Mr. Dewey took a leading part in the business and civic phases of the city's life. He was for two years president of the Common Council, and was for 16 years president of the Rochester and Lake Ontario Water Company.

Born in Watertown, the son of County Judge and Mrs. Hiram Dewey, Mr. Dewey came to Rochester in 1885, and opened a drug store in Monroe Avenue. From 1900 to 1908, he was district manager of the Bell Telephone Company, which position he left to take up his duties with the Rochester & Lake Ontario Water Company. He resigned from the presidency of the latter early in 1927, and became secretary and treasurer of Victor Plaster, Inc.

Because of his endeavors in the interests of Indian history, Mr. Dewey was made a Fellow in the Academy of Science. In addition, he was a members of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, the Rochester Club, the Rochester Ad Club,

Dr. C. A. Dewey Dead; Patron Of Education, Supporter Of Arts

Rochester, June 13-27.

Physician Was Born in Third Ward and Spent Entire Life in District—Founded Dewey Prize Declamations at University of Rochester—
Author of Historical Papers.

Dr. Charles A. Dewey, whose death occurred unexpectedly this morning, was one of the oldest residents of Rochester and in a very quiet and retiring way one of its most active and notable citizens.

A son of Dr. Chester Dewey, who came to Rochester from New England to join the faculty of the newly established University of Rochester, Dr. Charles Dewey was born in this city, July 21, 1842, in the house still standing at the corner of Caledonia Avenue and Spring Street. In recent years he has made his home in the adjoining house in Spring Street so that his entire life was spent in the Third Ward with the history of which he was unusually conversant.

Dr. Dewey was educated by tutors and in private schools of this city and in 1861 was graduated from the University of Rochester with the degree of A. B. He studied law in the office of Judge Theron R. Strong and Oscar Craig and was admitted to the bar in 1863. He did not practise, however, but turned to manufacturing work in New England and spent some time in newspaper work. In 1876 he began the study of medicine with Dr. William W. Ely of Rochester.

Degree from Harvard.

He received his degree of doctor of medicine in the Harvard Medical School in 1880. He began his practise in Rochester and was connected with the Rochester City Hospital and was physician at the Church Home. He later gave up public practise but in recent years has been an examiner for one of the New England insurance companies.

Dr. Dewey was a typical gentleman of the old school, with a keen, analytical mind, manners that were meticulously courteous, and a wide interest in literature and the arts. His interest in the University of

Dr. Charles A. Dewey.

Rochester was constant and generous. He was also a supporter of the work of Memorial Art Gallery and of the Eastman Theater symphony concerts. It was not generally known that he was the donor of a number of scholarships at the summer school at the Marine Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass., taking an intense interest in the progress of the work of the students. The Dewey Prize Declamations at the University of Rochester were founded by Dr. Charles Dewey in memory of his father.

Trustee of Library.

As a trustee of the Reynolds Library Dr. Dewey devoted much time to active supervision of the work of the library, advising on the selection of books and keeping a guiding hand on the policies of the institution.

Dr. Dewey was one of the founders of the Fortnightly Club, a little group of Rochester men inclined to literature. He read many papers before the club and was also the author of several historical papers prepared for the Rochester Historical Society, of which he also was a member. Notable among these was the history of Colonel Rochester and his founding of Rochesterville which was read at the dedication of the tablet on the site of the old Rochester house at South Washington and Spring Streets.

Dr. Dewey was a member of the Archeological Institute of America, Memorial Art Gallery, University of Rochester Alumni, the Chamber of Commerce, the Fortnightly Club, the Harvard Club, the Monroe Medical Society, the Rochester Society and the Society of Colonial Wars.

On the paternal side Dr. Dewey was of Saxon-Welsh extraction, being descended from Thomas Dewey who settled in Massachusetts in 1634. On the maternal side he was descended from Norman stock.

Dr. Dewey was unmarried and survived his immediate relatives, his father dying in 1867 and his mother in 1885.
