Outdoor Life Is Hobby Of Harry K. Kingston, Jr., Raises Cocker Spaniels

Harry H. Kingston Jr., manager of the news bureau of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway, who lives in East Avenue, Brighton, some years ago chose outdoor life as his hobby.

Not wholly satisfied with hunting and fishing he branched out into horseback riding, and having always been a great admirer of dogs, later let his admiration get the better of him and became a breeder.

That is his principal hobby today, but he is now chiefly interested in only one breed, and has realized more than ordinary returns.

For more than 30 years Mr. Kingston has bred cocker spaniels of the hunting type. He founded the Hunting Cocker Spaniel Club of America, and is owner of Corinth Kennels, registered with the American Kennel Club.

As a lover of horses he is still interested in them and in riding. He is secretary-treasurer of the Monroe County Lanes and Bridge Association.

While hunting and fishing have been a measure he has discarded by Mr. Kingston, he, together with two other men, is owner of a fishing lodge on East Bay, near Sodus, where the trio gets together on occasion to try a rod and line and for the association of sportmen.

C. R. Kingston, Banker, Passes

Charles R. Kingston, 57, for 40 years teller at the Security Trust Company, died unexpectedly at his home, 221 Sagamore Drive, this morning.

Mr. Kingston also was active in civic and fraternal affairs. He was interested in the development of Cananda, having taken many trips into that country. He was in the northern part of Ontario for the gold rush 25 years ago.

He was an active member of the YMCA, particularly the Maplewood Branch. He also was a member of the St. Paul Boulevard Fire Association and was on the board of the School in 1866, in Carlyle, Ill. After graduating from McKendree College, and receiving the degree of M. S., he entered the law firm of his father, Darius Kingston.

Moves to Rochester

Shortly afterward he decided to practice law and in 1882 moved to Rochester. For a time he was connected with the Lawers Cooperative Publishing Company. He then became credit manager for Bausch & Lomb Optical Company and later served in the same capacity for L. Adler Brothers & Company. For two years he was general manager for the J. W. Gills Company.

Mr. Kingston was a member of the Cornelia Temple Lodge, F. & A. M.; Rochester Historical Society, Oak Hill Country Club and the Rochester Club.

Death Ends Career of John Kinne, President of Ford Shoe Company

Manufacturer Active for Nearly 50 Years, Ill

Since Last January Rochester Public Library

John H. Kinne, president of the C. P. Ford Company and prominent for many years in the shoe manufacturing industry in Rochester, died yesterday at his home, 206 Seneca Parkway. He was taken ill last January after having been continuously active in business for nearly 50 years.

Mr. Kinne was born in Weedsport, but moved to Auburn at an early age. While a young man he spent several years in the employ of Sartwell, Hough & Crokeer, a pioneer firm in the manufacture of shoes in Central New York. Through his experience in that factory he acquired a practical knowledge of the details of shoe making.

Mr. Hough withdrew from that company in 1880 and with Charles P. Ford formed the firm of Hough & Ford in Rochester. Mr. Kinne came to Rochester at that time with the new organization, together with his friend and factory associate, John S. Davis.

When Mr. Ford several years later organized the C. P. Ford Company, Mr. Davis became vice-president of the new company. Mr. Kinne secretary and the late Martin B. Hoyt, treasurer. During the years that followed the company acquired a national reputation as a manufacturer of quality shoes.

Upon Mr. Ford’s death in 1918, Mr. Davis became president and Mr. Kinne vice-president of the company. Mr. Kinne succeeded Mr. Davis as president upon the latter’s death in 1929.

Surviving Mr. Kinne are his wife, Nellie Allen Kinne; a daughter, Esther L. Kinne; two brothers, David B. Kinne of Norwich, Conn., and William W. Kinne of Zumbro, Minn.; a sister, Mrs. E. M. Lynes of Norwich, Conn., and several nephews and nieces. He was a member of St. Luke’s Episcopal Church and of Corinthia Temple Lodge, F. & A. M.; and the Y. M. C. A. Chamber of Commerce, ene, Washington Club, Brook and Lea the Automobile Club of Rochester.

Funeral services will be conducted at his home at 2 o’clock Saturday afternoon.

John H. Kinne succumbs to Long Illness—Appointed to Bench of County Court in 1889

Former County Judge John F. Kinne, 74, died last night at his home, 64 Lorimer Street, following an illness of two years.

Judge Kinne was born in Ogden on June 20, 1860. He received his elementary education in the public school of Spencerport. He took a collegiate course in Canusius College, Buffalo, and began the story of law in the office of W. H. Bowman. He then took a course in the Albany Law School and following his graduation was admitted to the bar in 1881.

In January, 1889, he was appointed to the county bench by Governor David B. Hill and was afterward elected for a full term. He was married in 1885 to Elizabeth J. Hanlon of Albany. In 1898 he served as corporation counsel.

He is a member of K. of C.

Judge Kinne was a charter member of the Knights of Columbus, Council 175, the Rochester Bar Association and the Elks.

He is survived by two sons, William E. and John J. of Rochester; two daughters, Helen R. and Mrs. Lloyd Bryant of Rochester; one brother, Joseph T. of Los Angeles; and four sisters, Mrs. William Ryan of Brockport, Mrs. Theodore Dunn of Mrs. Margaret Harrigan of Spencerport and Miss Agatha Kinney of Rochester, and five grandchildren.

Funeral services will be conducted Friday at 10 a.m. at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Burial will be in Holy Sepulcher Cemetery.

LOUIS E. KIRSTIE

Rochester has given one of its sons, Louis E. Kirstein, now reading in Boston, to the National Recovery Administration as an advisor for the cotton industry.

Mr. Kirstein, who was born here in 1887, rose from an errand boy to a figure in philantrophic, civic, and industrial life. He is now one of the leading merchants in the United States, and since 1911 has been vice-president of William Plene's Sons Company of Boston.

President of the Associated Jewish Philanthropies, and trustee of the Boston Public Library, Mr. Kirstein's civic and charitable connections are seemingly numberless. He paid for the construction of the first businessmen's library in Boston, the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library. He named in memory of his father when it was built in 1929. He also gave to the city a bronze traffic tower, and his name has been connected with all charity drives in that city.

It is said to be Mr. Kirstean's philosophy that a rich man should give the working man a greater share of profits. He has consequently scored the wealthy, declaring that they have been short-ighted when the capitalist system was on trial.

Mr. Kirstein married the former Rose Stein of Rochester in 1884 and they have three children.
Rochesterian's Death in Polar Wastes
50 Years Ago Recalled as 1932-1934
Outfit Plans Two Years in Northlands

A name flashing back into the headlines after lapse of decades today recalled the story of a Rochesterian who perished of disease and starvation in an Arctic wasteland a century ago.

Gen. A. W. Greely, leader of the ill-fated Greely Polar Expedition of 1881-84, is chairman of the national committee sponsoring the American Polar Expedition of 1932-34. Led by Capt. Favel M. Williams, the latter will leave next June to spend two years at Fort Conger, Eilesmere Island, northwestern land on the globe, where Greely and his men wintered 50 years ago.

Eighteen of Greely's 25 men died when a relief ship failed to reach them on time. Radio and airplanes will be employed by Williams to avert a similar disaster.

Among Greely's 18 who perished was Lieut. F. F. Kislingbury, born in Rochester, December 29, 1854. As an Indian hunter, he had served under Greely in building government telegraph lines, and expressed a desire to go to the Arctic when the project was breached. He was named second in command.

But when the icebreaker Proteus had dropped the little party and its two years supplies on desolate Eilesmere Island, Lieut. Kislingbury requested that he be relieved from duty. His request was granted, but too late, and the Proteus sailed without him. That mischance cost his life.

Greely says in his record of the Arctic tragedy, "Three Years of Arctic Service," that Kislingbury was a native of the Arctic, active as an officer of the expedition. An excellent shot and an audacious hunter, his skill often augmented the party's over-stretched stock of provisions.

During 1881 and 1882, Kislingbury was a member of the exploring party which ventured from Fort Conger. When the needed relief steamer failed to arrive, and the party began to part, their plight became desperate.

Eighteen members of the expedition were frozen to death, and Kislingbury's body, along with the others, was returned to Rochester on Aug. 10, 1884, and lay in state in City Hall. Then it was laid to rest in St. Mary's Cemetery, where it rests in the Bohemian masonic and military cemetary.

Dr. Harry W. Knight Dies of Heart Attack in Office

Won Fame for Treatment of Big League Baseball Players

Dr. Harry W. Knight, 53, one of Rochester's pioneer chiropractors, died unexpectedly of a heart attack at his office, 398 West Avenue, at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

He had just completed treatment of a patient when he fell to the floor and expired instantly. The patient picked Doctor Knight up, placed him on the work table and summoned aid. A physician came from a nearby office and pronounced the chiropractor dead. Coroner Richard A. Leonardo issued a certificate of death due to natural causes.

Doctor Knight had been in his usual good health and had not complained of feeling ill in any way, relatives said.

Born in Rochester

He was born in Rochester, Sept. 12, 1879, the son of the late George and Julia Knight, and was educated in Rochester schools.

He specialized in the treatment of athletes and made many successful adjustments of the bones and muscles of the stars of the diamond, gridiron, and boxing ring.

At various times such famous stars of sportdom as Walter Johnson, Trix Speakes, Lu Blue, Dusty Mails, Ted Lyons, Howard Ehmke, Sam Jones, Carl Mays, Babe Adams, Harry Wills, Bucky Jawors, Nat Holman and Johnny Bachman had strained tendons, cracked knuckles and ailing muscles put back into shape by Doctor Knight.

So widespread was Knight's fame in baseball circles that he was selected to take charge of the New York Giants and Washington Senators when those teams took part in world series.

In connection with his practice he maintained the Knight Sanatorium at the West Avenue address for a number of years.

After graduation from Gen. Ewell S. Otis School 30, he learned the steamfitter trade and for a number of years was employed by the Rochester Gas Electric Corporation and later by the City of Rochester. During his spare time he added to his knowledge by studying at home and at night schools and in 1912 took up chiropractic.

He graduated from the National School of Chiropractic of Chicago, Ill., in 1916. He was assistant physical instructor in the Rochester Police Department swimming pool for a time before he established his own offices.

Arthur Kohmann, Former Steward of Municipal Lodging House, Dies

Colorful Figure in City's Polities, Succumbs to Infection

By J. CODY WALLER

Arthur F. Kohmann, forty-one, former steward of the municipal lodging house and a colorful figure of the prohibition period, was dead today at No. 230 Brown Street.

Mr. Kohmann, who died alone as the only beneficiary of a Presidential pardon, granted in 1922 by Calvin Coolidge after Kohmann had served a year in the Erie County Penitentiary for selling ale in the Highland Hospital last night from a streptococcal infection. He had been there ten years, six months, and four days.

Kohmann, a lover of newspaper headlines and parades generally, was digested to death by his numerous encounters with prohibition agents, and his success in feeding homeless men at the municipal lodging house.

The whole system of the lodging house was claimed by Kohmann at the Leo A. MacSweeney when he was released commissioner in 1932. Kohmann led the guests "like kings," promoted tobacco funds for them and remembered them otherwise on all holidays. His work commanded outside attention, and he was paid for installing similar systems elsewhere.

In 1933 he ran afoul of a Republican movement which was determined to oust publisher MacSweeney, and he was ruled out after three competitions for a new contract.

In a first competition he was the only bidder, but was ruled out because of allegations of illegal attachments. In the second he was charged with forging the name of his chief in a bold bid to correct competition. In the third he bid high, as he said, because "the cards were stacked against me."

Kohmann had been raid at his Hunter's Lodge, Jay and Child Streets, his alleged cargoes seized unopened. Later, finally he was haled into court for trial in 1926. He was convicted, sentenced to a year in the penitentiary and given a fine of $3,600. He served the year, was prepared to serve additional time in forfeit for ball when President Coolidge, through influence of Buffalo friends, pardoned him.

He had many high political friends. His Hunter's Lodge baseball team won the championship of the Rochester Journal League last summer.

Mr. Kohmann was born in Rochester in the neighborhood of Jay and Child Streets, where he was a street coggler operator and circus cook.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Chappell Kohmann, he leaves his mother, Mrs. Barbara Glicker; five brothers and a sister, Elmer and Edmund Kohmann of Rochester.

Funeral arrangements were complete today.

Veteran with Forman
From Institution of Business

Paul Kubica
This is the twenty-seventh of a series of articles devoted to the loyal men and women who have given long years of service to a single business. They have seen tiny shops expand to giant companies, and many of them have enjoyed the friendship of the founders.

Paul Kubica, first and oldest employee of the B. Forman Company and personal friend of President Forman, is one of the chief reasons for the record growth of the company almost "overnight" from a "two-man stand" to a modern department store for women employing 400 people.

Mr. Kubica's career is like a Horatio Alger story. They are services will be conducted tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home with burial in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Not long afterward, he distanced his father to the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, and two days afterward had a job. He worked in New York for one year, and then came to Rochester. About the same time, Mr. Forman moved from Illaca to this city.

The two fired up a tailor shop at the corner of Main Street East and Corliss Street, where Scheer's jewelry store now stands. That was thirty years ago.

Specializing in women's clothes, Mr. Kubica became the "factor" and Mr. Forman, the "manager." Scene moved together on the "old stand" for three years, and then moved to Clinton Avenue North.

Their business grew rapidly. Mr. Kubica couldn't handle all the orders, so several assistants were hired. At that time, Mr. Forman decided to enter the ready-to-wear business, and the establishment moved to Clinton Avenue South, where the store is now located.

Ever since, the store has expanded from year to year, and additions have been built from time to time. The business is now one of the foremost in its line in Rochester.

Mr. Kubica, still the expert tailor, runs a department for fittings and alterations. He has forty employees under his personal direction. If a dress is sold which doesn't fit to customer's satisfaction, Mr. Kubica is the "specialist" called in, and when he is through with it, the B. Forman Company has added another permanent customer to its long growing list.

The veteran employee's interest goes beyond his department and store. He is interested in the employees' camp built by Mr. Forman near Soda Bay, where swimming, tennis, golf and other games are played during the summer months for employees. The camp is used for vacations and weekends.

Mr. Kubica was born in 1880, and when he was a boy, his family came to Rochester from Bulgaria. He was educated in Servian Capital and returned to his homeland to have a small shop in a Servian town, across the frontier from Bulgaria, he was bitten by what people in the old country call, "the American fever."

When Augustine B. Hone was named city treasurer, Mr. Kane reverted to his former post as deputy and remained at that post up to the time of his retirement, Jan. 1, 1932, on a pension of $3,600 annually, the position of deputy being abolished in the economy program of that time.

He is survived by three sisters, Annie F. Kane, Mrs. Nellie Mylacraine, Mrs. Emma Underwood and several nieces and nephews.

ORDONNANCE for flowers and plants formed in the gardens in the vicinity of his old home at East Avenue and Vick Park A, when a school boy, started Ellsworth P. Killip on a career that has culminated in his becoming Uncle Sam's botanist-at-large.

That is somewhat of a commonplace way of saying that Mr. Killip is now associate curator, division of plants, United States National Museum, in Washington, with a reputation established that causes him to be looked upon as one of the country's most distinguished botanists. He has traveled into many countries for his government during the last decade and a half he has been stationed in Washington and has become somewhat of an envoy of Uncle Sam to various scientific congresses and gatherings where plant life is the theme for discussion.

It was those journeys far afield, as exploring botanist for the National Museum, that will cause the former Rochesterian to leave next week for a stay of several months in Europe. He will visit countries where savants of plant life live and have their herbaria.

In his explorations in Eastern Colombia, as an assistant curator of the museum, Mr. Killip and his associates lifted the curtain of mystery from the plant life of the Eastern Cordilleras north of the Bogota region by penetrating regions not easily accessible and bringing back specimens that had not before found their way into American herbaria. In the course of that exploration approximately 7,200 collecting numbers were obtained, represented by nearly 30,000 specimens. In that collection are about 800 numbers of ferns, 300 of orchids, more than 200 of the moss and cactus families, approximately 75 morning glories, 100 passion flowers and nearly 700 Compositae. About one third of the collection consists of woody plants.

Two years later Mr. Killip made studies of flora in Amazonian Peru and Brazil and brought back 30,000 specimens that have proved invaluable to mankind because the properties, life and phenomena of these plants are now looked upon as great contributions to applied or economic botany for uses in drugs.

Of the specimens brought back from South America, at least 200 are unknown. No written word describing them is found in any language and the natives of regions of which they are indigenous had no name for them. It is to attempt to classify those plants and find names for them by comparison with collections in the British Museum of London and the museums of Paris and Madrid that Mr. Killip will make the European trip. If he should fail there in his quest he probably will go to the Soviet Republic, and even then if he does not find plants of the same species it will be up to him and associates of the National Museum to create names—names that will live and by which the plants will thereafter be known.

In Europe Mr. Killip will combine his mission as botanist-at-large with that of envoy extraordinary of this country to the Tercentenary of the Natural History Museum that takes place in Paris June 21 to 26. It will bring together some of the world's greatest scientists and naturalists. Mr. Killip only last week received a certificate from the President of France recognizing him as President Roosevelt's delegate to the Paris Tercentenary. Having finished his mission in Paris, he will go to Amsterdam for the International Botanical Congress, which will be in session Sept. 5 to 12.

Mr. Killip's life has been one of constant study and research, one of studious application in delving into the yet not fully known field of plant life. He attended the Pittsford High School and the University of Rochester, from which he was graduated in 1911. Teaching and other employment engaged him until he came to the National Museum in 1920, where he found a wide range for his field of inquiry into Nature's wealth of flowers and plants.

One of his most important missions was that to Madrid, where he attended a botanical conference and interviewed many of the great botanists of old Castile. In an out-of-the-way place he heard of a valuable collection of plants that had been gathered by curators in Colombia between 1760 and 1808. He soon located it, and obtaining permission to study the collection, he found himself in a world of unknown plants and flowers, the specimens being well dried and pressed and in a perfect state of preservation. Though months were spent in this far away land, valuable information was collected for the folk back home, and should a small boy in Rochester now be unable to identify a plant or flower that he may find all he has to do is to write to Mr. Killip, because he knows the name and the uses of the nearly half a million that grace the face of the earth in field or forest.

Drove Mules When They Were Tugs

A spinner of tales of the old Erie Canal barge days is Henry Knitter, West Webster hotel man, shown in characteristic pose.

Temperament Stupendous, Avers Canaler

Temperament? Henry Knitter never heard of it. But what he can tell about old Erie canalers dwarfs to paltriness the much publicized whims of these current movie stars.

A good deal of water has flowed through the locks since the days of 1910 when Henry, one of the old “Butterhole” boys took a job as captain of an eel grass cutter on the Erie. He’s a big, square-built fellow with heavy jowls and a cigar, proprietor of a Webster hotel which bears his name.

Cut Eel Grass

“You see,” he explained, “I didn’t know a thing about a boat or I was just a kid and those fellows wouldn’t have been easy for any one to handle. We used to cruise up and down the Erie, that was the last two years they used the old basin, cutting eel grass that got in the way of the boats, the canal hoggles. Newark was a lively town in those days and after a couple of experiences I learned to give it a wide berth when the paymaster came through because I never knew whether I’d have a crew after a payday in Newark. Once I had to get the cook out of jail so we could eat.”

Food on the “bum boat,” the second boat on which they lived, was no academic question, according to Henry. He had to board the crew for $12 a month, but they raised such a fuss that the second year he had to compromise on $10 and even at that they weren’t above accusing the cook of using canal water for making the coffee they didn’t like. Because they didn’t always have to go out fishing in the canal to supplement their fare.

Across the years he remembers with the old, wretched drivers who played a mean trick on him, and that after Henry had acquired a two-wheeled gig for him so he wouldn’t have to walk six hours a day behind the horses. As to why they had horses instead of mules, well, that’s a political issue and involves a favorite livery stable that didn’t deal in mules.

Wanted to Stay

“We were tied up at one of the towns and a fellow I had fired was hanging around,” he continued. “I decided we’d pull out in a hurry and told the driver to feed the horses and we’d get started as soon as they were fed and rested. Well, I guess he decided he’d like to stay. I’d pulled the line and coiled it on the deck because if I didn’t some canal hoggles would come through to help the crew, above lifting a good line when it came easy.

“When I came back after lunch the coil was gone. No canal hoggles had been through, so I knew that guy had thrown it overboard so I had to wait a couple of days for a new line. Sure we had to fill out all kinds of orders to get a new line. Well, we took the forks and shanked and when we pulled up that coil I didn’t tell that driver just wasn’t in my vocabulary. Sure, I fired him when we got to Rochester for paying me for that rig with a dirty trick.”

Like the life? Yes, says Henry, but these fellows who are writing books about it romanticize a lot.

Dr. Knubel Heard on WJZ

The Rev. Dr. Frederick H. Knubel, president of the United Lutheran Church in America and father of the Rev. Frederick R. Knubel of Rochester, gave a Good Friday message over Station WJZ in New York yesterday afternoon.

Doctor Knubel, whose headquarters is in New York, but who frequently has visited his son, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation here, said in part:

"We know definitely that the suffering of Christ has in many ways blessed all humanity, and we believe therefore that a divin hand is here laying a resolute hold upon the whole mystery of human suffering to give all of it a meaning, a purpose.

The Rev. Mr. Knubel said he was unable to get his father's talk on his radio.

Robert L. Kohler, 81 years old today, is still at the work bench in Ward's Natural Science Museum after more than half a century of service.

Mr. Kohler was born in Alsace-Lorraine, April 13, 1857. He followed the trade of cabinet maker until the Franco Prussian War drew him into the French Army. In 1871 he and his bride of a year came to Rochester for two years he worked in the old Charles Hayden furniture factory. In 1876, 54 years ago, Mr. Kohler joined Prof. Henry Ward and has since worked steadily constructing wooden foundations and pedestals to hold exhibits. His task has also included the building of models and maps.

The matter of a century or so makes little difference in his workshop with pre-historic relics lining the walls and shelves, believes Mr. Kohler. He lives at 113 Empire Boulevard.

His Married Couples Stay Married---Only Five Have Separated

In 18 Years the Rev. Walter Krumwiede Has United 263 Couples---125 Meet at a Reunion Service

"Marriages that last" are performed by the Rev. Walter Krumwiede, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, and there are figures to prove it.

The Rev. Mr. Krumwiede has united 263 couples in 18 years, and of these only five have separated, he revealed today. The minister told The Times-Union today his philosophy of matrimony.

His "formula" for successful marriage, in brief:

Pull together. It prevents marriages from pulling apart.

Know and respect the things that bind couples together, whether they be sacrifices and problems or joys and blessings.

Children are important for lasting wedded happiness.

Surround the family with the respect due it. It then will exercise a strong influence in the community. Succeeding generations will attain higher levels, help raise the level of the community.

Discussion of problems with a spiritual advisor will help.

Youth should be no bar to marriage, the Rev. Mr. Krumwiede feels. Youthful personalities are pliable, often make for real understanding, he says. His ideal age for marriage is 23 for women, 25 for men.

Questioned on his stand on very young marriages, the Rev. Mr. Krumwiede strongly denounced the current "child marriages" which have made headlines. He would refuse to unite any such couples if he knew the circumstances, and he would, for he always confers with the parties days before the ceremony.

The pastor believes that churches can do much to prolong marriages.

At his church a special young couples' group meets every two weeks on Sunday evening for discussion of the problems of married life. It has been well attended and highly successful.

Advisor To Married

This meeting supplements the work he does with individuals. He is deeply gratified at the frequency with which married men and women come to him, a neutral party, to find the solution for situations they do not seem able to cope with.

The Rev. Mr. Krumwiede held a reunion of couples he has married at his church last night. Invitations were issued to all 263 and 125 attended. Invitations were printed in wedding invitation form.

Highlight of the reunion ceremony was the pastor's baptizing the son of the first couple he married, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Niggli of Binghamton. They were married Oct. 5, 1919.
