John Marshall's Clubs

This term a new club system has been put into practice at John Marshall. All clubs were divided into two groups which meet after school on alternate Mondays with their respective advisers. In this way club membership is made available to a larger portion of students than was formerly possible. This new method prevents a few students from belonging to an excessive number of organizations and also tends to increase the attendance since there is a definite time for meeting without conflicts with other affairs. The experiment has been made in order to insure to a greater number of students the advantages of extra-curricular activities.

Because of lack of space there are photographs only of those clubs that haven't been pictured in recent issues of the John Quill or that are particularly representative of school activities. The others are described in this section of the annual.

Student Association Officers

Henry Klein, President; Rolfe Scofield, Vice-president; June Wedel, Secretary; Paul Suter, Cheer Leader.

"Jo-Mar" Staff

The Masqueeters

"It Happened in Hollywood," a gay comedy in three acts, was presented by the Masqueeters on Friday and Saturday evenings, December eighth and ninth.

During the course of the play a prince and a princess, each of whom had run away to avoid a forced marriage, went to Hollywood where anything can happen and did. Eventually, they met, after the prince's impostor had been discovered, and the story ended happily for everyone.

Throughout the play the clever situations added to the amusement; and the messenger boy, Lawrence Kondolf, did a brilliant bit of comedy acting.

Bettie Scott, as the heroine, portrayed the part of a princess and cook equally well to fill the roll of leading lady perfectly. Her school chum, Josie Pembroke, played by Marjorie Turner, proved to be a firm matchmaker both for her friend and herself and was well satisfied though her beloved was only the second hand prince. Robert Casey took the latter part and couldn't have done better if he had been born to the royalty.

Bert, the real prince, played by William Malley, spoke English like a native Frenchman thus making an ideal chauffeur; while Lester Marsh, as Tom Garritz, was the brains behind the plot and had the courage to go through with it as well as the intuition to know when to leave.

John Kelsey, as Jarvis the butler, did a splendid job especially when shaking with fear. He'd make a perfect listener if one wished to tell ghost stories.

Rose Gigliotti, Josie's mother, and Alan Cook who was Sir Humphrey, the prince's uncle appeared on the scene at just the wrong time and almost succeeded in spoiling a really good story, but fortunately all was saved in time.

Three members of the film colony, Dorrey Downing, played by Ruth Blake; Polly O'Connor, played by Margaret Lapp; and Phyllis Dugame, played by Josephine Ciaccia supplied hilarious comedy. Margaret would rival any gum chewing champion.

The admirable work of the stage crew and the able direction of Mr. Myers did much to make the play a success.

Orchestra

Mr. Clute, director; Brown, Corson, Cramer, Craven, Darling, Davis, Dougherty, End, Fogg, Galinger, Gardner, Gay, Gunn, Heberger, Kreuter, Leis, Markham, Mountcastle, Mumby, Paliani, Partridge, Petersen, Pococke, Rekers, Ringer, Rogers, Rosen-treter, Spence, Stocum, Tucker, Van Dam, Van Deusen, Wakefield, Wiggins, Wooden.

Sketch Club

For students interested in art, the Sketch Club offers a valuable opportunity for study as well as recreation. Miss Botsford supervises the group at their weekly meetings held on Monday afternoon. Special trips and work out of doors have proved a pleasant diversion from the usual routine of class.

Library Club

Girls who enjoy books and are interested in library work have formed a Library Club directed by Miss Grinnell. Each member spends at least one period a week in assisting the librarians and in learning library technique. In this way the club renders a very definite service to the school as well as offering to individual students an excellent opportunity for experience and training.

Language Clubs

The Latin Club, the "Optimates," has been established in John Marshall under the direction of Miss Mayo to reward those students who secure a "B" average beginning the second year and any successive terms following.

A similar club in the French department has been functioning for a number of years under the capable leadership of Mrs. Baker.

"Y" Clubs

The "Tri-Y" for girls and the "Hi-Y" for boys were established by the Y.W.C.A. and the Y.M.C.A. respectively, to promote good fellowship and to do away with the egotistical attitude of the younger generation as much as possible. Mr. Eike is the adviser for the "Hi-Y"; and Miss Paine, Miss Ascroft, Miss Fiske, and Miss Champney are the advisers for the "Tri-Y" groups.

Literary Club

The Literary Club was established to improve the literary knowledge of its members, to study novels, and to analyze and study styles of various authors. Miss Monaghan is Burt presides over this group.

Band

John Marshall High School is highly honored by having a band whose musical prowess is recognized by all the senior high schools of Rochester. Mr. Chute is chiefly responsible for the excellence of our band.

Aeronautics Club

The Aeronautics Club was organized for students who are skillful with their hands. The purpose of this club is to further the knowledge of its members in aeronautics and to show them how to build model airplanes. Mr. Goetz is to be credited for the organization of this group.

The Forum and Cabinet

The student government is in the hands of those students who are members of the Forum and Cabinet. One person is elected from each homeroom by the students to represent them in the forum. In turn, the members of the forum elect students from that group and from the student body at large for the cabinet. Mr. Burt presides over this group.

Senior Girls' Chorus

The Senior Girls' Chorus was organized for the first time this term in place of the Girls' Choral Club. The group, under the direction of Mr. Lyders, practices once each week after school. Entertainment for assembly programs and special music for graduation are the projects sponsored by the club.

Basketball

Marshall's basketball team won its first league game against Vocational by the score of twenty-seven to twenty-five, in championship form. In a pre-season game Marshall was defeated by the School of Commerce. Judging from present indications the team should have a good season, according to Mr. Makin. The members of the squad are: Klein, Gratzner, Norris, Scofield, Isabella, Sizer, Romig, Hanley, Graham, Allen, and Manager Ashley.

Two teams have been added to the league, Jefferson and Vocational. Each team has a schedule of eighteen games.

Bowling

Each week the interscholastic league bowls at the Buonomo Bowling Alleys. There are ten teams in the league, and during the eighteen-week season each team rolls each other twice. The matches each week are determined by the two games and the total pins of the two games. A point is awarded the winner of each match and a point for the total of the two matches. The members of the team are: Pero, captain; Yockel, Camelio, Yerkes, and Tracy. The boys have won five points of a possible nine.

Baseball

Last spring's team under Coach Ulrich displayed a very scrappy hand of baseball. Every man in the infield except the shortstop was a veteran of two teams. All the outfielders were playing their first season with the varsity. Under the wings of Cufo and Kinslow the boys won five of their eight league games. They were lowered to a third berth by Franklin, the champions; West, and Monroe. The varsity players were: Nucchi, Hanley, Pilaroscia, Gratzner, Smith, O'Neill, Cufo, Culhané, Miller, Kinslow, Klein, Altobello, Buckley, and Manager Allardice.

The reserves also displayed good baseball. Because most of last years regulars will have been graduated, the reserves will be the nucleus of next spring's baseball team. The reserve team consisted of Crowley, Wahl, Pickering, Terry, Scofield, Yockel, Chandler, Hutchinson, Mayse, Seeley, Ottman, Rouse, Scott, and Doane.

Varsity Soccer

Soccer

After Marshall lost the first game to Jefferson, the newest team in the league, and then to Madison, the hopes of the Alma Mater were very slim. Then something happened, for the tables turned, and Marshall began to win. They beat East, West, Tech, Franklin, and even Charlotte, the champions. Marshall was the only team in the league who beat Charlotte; but they lost their last game to Canandaigua. The result was that Marshall finished in fourth place. The players were: Sharpe, Gratzner, all-scholastic; Blake, Skinner, Johnson, co-captain; Cuifo, co-captain and all-scholastic; Yockel, Murray, Kinslow, Terry, Breary, and Manager Tom Daley.

The reserve team also played very good soccer. They won six games and tied three, giving them first place in the league. This is very encouraging because next year many of the reserve players will be with the varsity.

The players were: Levin, Green, Towriss, Rahn, Pommering, Boulton, Popp, Dumrese, Coyle, Rouse, Kane, Chandler, Coombs, Brown, Yerkes, Crowley, and Manager Carey.

Track

The track team under Coach Makin worked very hard before the season started and continued their workouts during the season. As a result of this training they had a successful season. The meets were held every week at the old University of Rochester field on Main Street. The events were: 100-yard dash, 220, 440, 880, mile run, and the 220 hurdles, pole vault, broadjump, high-jump, and shotput. The members of the team were: Dixon Lathrop, manager; Charles Blake, captain; E. Rodgers, Doe, Breary, Chatterton, Chard, O'Kane, Walley, Mathews, G. Rogers, Baker, Adair, Rebasz, Sprague, Kneeland, Abbot, Abson, Rahn, Nellis, and Payne.

Homeroom Soccer Champions

Homeroom Activities

For homeroom soccer there were thirteen teams divided into two leagues. The games were played after school on the athletic field with the help of Abram Cramer, manager; and Charles Eckerson, assistant. Because of the bad weather, some of the games were poorly attended. In the play off at the end of the season homeroom 111 defeated its rival 209 for the championship.

There have been formed four homeroom basketball leagues under the management of Charles Eckerson. The "A" league is for the best teams, the "B" league for the second best, etc. This year a homeroom may present as many teams as it wishes. There has been much interest in the early contests, for twenty-seven teams are in this league.

In the spring a homeroom league will play indoor baseball.

Hiking Club

Every Wednesday afternoon about thirty-two girls from this school take a hike through the neighboring fields and woods. During this jaunt they study birds, trees, plants, insects, and other phases of nature. About five o'clock they begin to prepare their evening meal. Isn't it strange that even if the weiners are raw or the beans are slightly burned, everyone is hungry?

Girls' Bowling

The John Marshall bowling club under the supervision of Miss VanDeWalle is enjoying a successful season. The club, consisting of ten young women, bowls every Thursday at Ridge Road Bowling Hall.

Girls Leaders' Club

Leaders' Club

Every Friday after school the Leaders' Club, under the direction of Miss Foster, meets in the gymnasium. The girls play games, exercise, and perform stunts. The object of this club is to train leaders to assist in the girls' physical educational department.

Social Dancing

There are three of these classes: a beginners', eighty members; an advanced, one hundred fifty members; and a boys' class, forty members. These classes are well attended. The members learn the latest steps and practice the older ones for the coming dance. Miss Smith plays the piano for the beginners, Dick Baron and the Marshall Jazz Band play for the advanced class, and Mrs. Line furnishes the music for the boys.

Riding Club

On Saturday mornings the Riding Club, with Mrs. Lay, goes to the Culver Road Armory for a brisk canter. The members have become expert riders. Some of the girls entered the September horse show at Edgerton Park and also the one at Christmas time.

Basketball Club

In this club there are seventy-four enthusiastic basketball players who meet every Monday after school. The girls practice shots, learn formations, and are taught the rules of the game. They have class competition.

A Decade In Hellas

When I had said, "Good bye, America" and now our liner had docked in Hellas. The next day we were in Gerakion, a small town east of Sparta, the famous city of the Lacedaemonians.

A year passed before we could understand the Greek language and the Greek customs.

The last year before we returned to America was spent visiting all parts of Greece.

Sparta was the first place we visited, the city of Helen and Menelaus, who long ago ruled that sacred city. Ancient Sparta is in ruins, but their agora, statues, and temples still stand to remind us of the glory of the past.

Olympia, famous for the first Olympic games ever held, in 720 B. C., shows its glory by the stadium and the most perfect statue of Hermes of Praxiteles.

Traveling through Achaea we reached Mycenae, where we found the Lion's Gate and the home of Agamemnon.

Through the Isthmus we reached Athens. Could it be really true that we were in Athens, the city of whiteness and brightness, with its noble temples seeming fairly to hang in the air like a vision disclosed of Paradise? No one, it is said, can live in the presence of noble and beautiful things without being influenced by them. Perhaps this accounts for the spirit of culture that still pervades Athenian life. Even the laboring classes, though poorer than in most countries, are intelligent and never fail in courtesy. "We teach our children to treat people well," said a Greek to an American traveler.

The people of today, like those of twenty centuries ago, love out-of-door life. The restaurants, which do not have adjoining gardens, set their tables on the side walk. The most popular theaters are those roofed only by the sky.

You may easily step back twenty centuries if you ever go to the Acropolis. Passing by the ruins of the Theatre of Dionysus, where the Athenians listened to the masterpieces of Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, we ascend to the Acropolis.

On the rocky plateau, which rises two hundred feet above the city, we come into the midst of the magnificent structure which has been the inspiration of the world, the Parthenon. The Parthenon as it exists today is shattered, almost entirely roofless, and robbed of its beauty. Today Phidias would be proud to see the Acropolis still standing with most of the statues which all had their part in making it so beautiful, but Pericles would be disappointed and would want to declare war against the barbarians who destroyed its beauty and robbed it of the treasures of old Athens.

The modern Acropolis museum of today contains many articles of the ancients, among them Phidias's small statue of Athena. Many beautiful and precious vases are standing at the feet of many of the statues. The statue of Apollo, the sun god, is like a living human.

When we left the Acropolis, the sun was setting in the west, and we traveled toward the Marathon. We followed the trail on which Pheidippides ran to bring the news of the battle of Marathon. The land here is covered with vineyards full of clusters of precious grapes. Some fields are full of olive trees, those spacious trees which were sacred to Athena.

Traveling through Boeotia we reached Delphi, that most famous city where the oracles were given. Many temples are scattered on hill sides; but the best of all to look upon is the temple of Apollo, who drove the chariot across the sky. Many of the shepherds we met gave us cheese and wine. They sang songs and played their flutes all night long.

We said goodbye to Lambros and the old shepherds and left for Chalcis. We stopped at a small restaurant for a few hours and then rode toward Marathon again, but this time we went on the west side to see the small silver mines and Mount Parnassus. It is from these silver mines that the Greeks got their silver to make the beautiful specimens of coins. From Mount Parnassus came that beautiful white marble which Phidias and Praxiteles used to carve the many statues. The Parthenon, made of Pentelic marble, is most beautiful.

On a slow train we came back to Athens; there we visited the Palace, the Public Library, the Public Museum, the Zaphion, and the Stadium, where we saw modern Greeks engaging in the same games and races as the ancients did.

On a chariot with four horses we travelled through the ruined walls which connected Athens and Pireaus, its port, where centuries ago many soldiers left to go to war and where many treasures were brought in.

A steamer neared the port and from there we voyaged through the Argolic and the Gulf of Corinth past the Isthmus of Corinth.

After a few hours on the water, we came to the Ionian Sea. On the north side we saw Ithaca, the island of that famous hero, Odysseus. On the south was lying that beautiful island, Zancynthia which seemed to float on the dark, blue sea.

At night we approached Naples. Every house was painted white and showed like a star against a dark sky. In the background was the volcano, Vesuvius, shooting lava high. The whole scene looked as though the people were having a fourth of July celebration on the top of the mountain.

The next morning we walked the streets of Naples and saw the sights of the city. By train we went to Rome. Many were the sights we saw, and beautiful, but little do we remember for we stayed there but a short time.

In the morning the great steamship, Vulcania, was waiting for its passengers. In no time we were on the boat, and sailed through the Mediterranean Sea, for a few days, to Gibraltar.

Once on the Atlantic we saw almost nothing but the salty sea for fourteen days. Then that huge Statue of Liberty reminded us of home, while in the background lay New York, a very modern and beautiful city.

To understand the English language and customs were very difficult for us. In a few days we arrived in Rochester and soon the ways of the Americans became very familiar to us.

THE CANTERBURY TALES

A Translation

When showers of April—cool, and fresh, and sweet
Have put the drought of March in full retreat,
And bathed each plant from root to leafy bower
With sap, producer of the bud and flower;
When breezes from the South have stirred the grain

And warm spring sun on every hill and plain
Invites the grass to grow, the bird to sing,
Then Nature puts new joy in everything,
Then people long to travel far and near
To seek new shrines of martyrs ever dear,
From every town and shire with happy song
To Canterbury comes the merry throng.

AGNES DEAN, IV-1.

The Tale of the Twig

HELEN ANCONA, IV-1.

As the Cinnamon Rat tucked the yellow soap into its paper bed and whisked the remains of a successful dish washing episode into the jack basket, the rest of the Rat family tugged and pulled, finally slinging the jack over the branch of a sturdy beech tree. The fool was safely cached for the night. Now for a camp fire.

I shall hasten to explain the why's and wherefore's of the Rat family. Every year at camp a four-day canoe trip is sent out to some place that has never been navigated by the Old Seashorsemen, who are the canoeists. This year two campers qualified, and the two canoeing councilors accompanied them. The Kennebec River is their territory, and it is just above Solon, where Benedict Arnold landed eleven hundred men en route to Quebec, that we find the Cinnamon Rat, because she liked cinnamon on her toast; the Cocoa Rat, because she really preferred cocoa to tea or coffee; the Blister Rat, because her hands had seen hard work; and the Arabian Rat, because she wore her wash cloth over her head (having forgotten to put it in her pack the morning before) —thus the Four River Rats.

Now it is often the custom of lumber men in Maine to notch a green twig about a half an inch apart with as many notches as there are men. One lumber-jack holds the twig in the fire and unravels a most amazing story. When his notch has burned off, he passes the stick to the next fellow who enlivens it with a bit of humor or perhaps makes it a little more thrilling. As this goes on, great stories crop up in the back woods, and eventually we have "Paul Bunyon."

That is why we find Al Ayer, the fussy Cocoa Rat, gnawing a notch into a strong maple twig. "I hope we can think of a good 'twig tale' tonight. I don't feel much like a foolish one—I mean one like 'How the Blue Heron Learned To Keep His Hair On!'"

"Al, I'd love to start it tonight. I have a dandy idea that would just fit into this Kennebec atmosphere." It was Jacqueline (Jack) Webb, alias the Blister Rat.

Dory Skerritt, christened the Arabian Rat, stoked the fire and then settled back to listen attentively to Jack, for she always made a good start. As the flames wound around the twig, this evolved:

"Many years ago when our nation was fighting its way to independence, a valiant army officer, who is unfortunately misjudged by many, lost his wife. This was in the year of 1775. Benedict Arnold was very fond of his wife and her loss grieved him greatly. Many think that her death caused the young man to lapse into a morbid mental state.

"It was later in the year of 1775 that General Washington received loud complaints from Arnold, then at Cambridge, in respect to the ill-usage of Lake Champlain. The General was greatly concerned about the progress of the young nation in Canada.

"To test Arnold's skill and manliness, Washington proposed an expedition, promising wild adventure and exercise of rare courage, into the wilds of Maine, eventually leading into Quebec. The wilds of Maine are right where we are now, so let me know when you see an Indian. General Washington commissioned Benedict Arnold as a Colonel in the Continental Army, and gave him command of eleven hundred hardy men selected from the forces at Cambridge.

"In the middle of September, they sailed from Newburyport in transports. They met in a large assembly at Fort Western just across the Kennebec from Augusta. They navigated the little stream in the uninhabited wilderness in the bateaux exactly like the one we saw at Fort Western when we were there. The tools that we saw in the block house on the west side of the road are those with which they built their boats."

"Al, my notch has burned off so you take the story on from there." Jack passed the stick to Al and snuggled into a comfortable position, for when Al's eyes grew large and sparkled, a splendid link would connect the story.

"Arnold and his men spent many days constructing their sturdy bateaux, and long oars had to be made with the precision of a splendid craftsman. At last they completed their toils, and navigated the river up to Norridgewock Falls where their labors really began.

"Through the wilderness oxen drew their bateaux, and the man carried the provisions on their backs. This was a wearisome task, for it was necessary to repeat it many times, but they pressed on cheerfully to the headwaters of the Kennebec, often wading and pushing the bateaux against swift currents.

"They left the stream and made their way to the Dead River over tangled ravines, gentle brooks, and deep morasses. After a portage of fifteen miles, they slowly navigated the Dead River, for it is a sluggish stream with little or no current.

"Suddenly they were confronted with the same great hill that we were when we went up the Dead River. There was Mount Bigelow looming before them. Arnold camped in the same mossy, cool spot that we did. Major Bigelow ascended the mountain hoping to see the tall church steeples in Quebec; and to this day it is called Mount Bigelow."

"Ev, I can see your notch being tickled by the flames. I actually am beginning to believe that we Four River Rats are part of Arnold's expedition. Go on, Evie, I'm all set for a thrill."

"Late in October keen winds came up from the north reducing the group rapidly with sickness and desertion. Arnold was still thirty miles from Lake Megantic, which is a tributary of the St. Lawrence.

"Heavy rain set in and the Dead River soon overflowed. Several channels were chucked full of drift-wood. Only twelve days food remained for the entire group.

"The Colonel called a council of war, and it determined to send the sick and wounded back to Colonel Enos at Norridgewock. Instead of obeying, Enos turned back to Cambridge with the whole division. Naturally he was looked upon as a traitor.

"In the meantime Arnold's situation was becoming very critical. Snow came now instead of rain, and many times the men were forced to wade, waist deep, in the freezing waters shoving bateaux before them. Two women, wives of two of the soldiers, were on that dreadful journey and they, too, waded in the bleak, freezing waters.

"At last they reached Lake Megantic and camped on its shores. On the next day, Colonel Arnold, with fifty-five men, started on a voyage to the nearest French settlement to procure provisions. They had no guide and the journey was a most perilous one.

"When they entered the river, the current was running very swiftly. Lashing their baggage to the bateaux, they gave themselves up to the merciless flood. The rapids foamed about them and horrible rocks sneered. Three boats were dashed against the rocks, but the men were saved by those who had moored their boats to the trees. The calamity was only a blessing, for if they had gone further they would have plunged over the cataract that danced to the sullen roar of the water.

"They continued on seventy miles further and finally reached Seritgan. The Indians were sent back to the main party with provisions. The friendly Abenakis were only just in time for the party; they had killed their last ox and slaughtered a dog to keep from starving.

"A few days later the army combined and marched toward the St. Lawrence. On November ninth they suddenly appeared at Point Lewis, opposite Quebec, which was blanketed in snow.

"Dory, here's the twig. I've run half way up to your notch without noticing it."

Dory took the twig and for a moment gazed into the dancing flames. She lifted her gaze and in the same "forgetful washcloth mood" took her turn at the twig.

"Lives of great men oft remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And in passing, leave behind us
Foot prints in the sands of time."

The Boy Scout World Jamboree at Godollo—1933

JULIUS STÖLL, 1-2.

When I say we, I am referring to eighteen Rochester scouts and two adult leaders who left Rochester by bus early in the morning of July 11 for New York City, where we boarded the Bremen enroute to the World Jamboree.

After five days of deck games, inspecting the ship, and watching the porpoises leap out of the water, we arrived at Southampton.

During three days in London we saw Warwick Castle, Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, the Tower of London, Shakespeare's home, and many other things of interest in the city and its vicinity.

After crossing the English Channel we went to Paris where we visited Notre Dame Cathedral, the Eiffel Tower, Napoleon's Tomb, Arch de Triumph, the Palace of Versailles, and other points of interest for which Paris is noted.

Next we went by train to Geneva, Switzerland, where we saw the Palace of the League of Nations and Mont Blanc in the distance. After a three hours ride by bus along beautiful Lake Geneva, we arrived at Montreux where we saw the Chateau Chillon made famous by Byron. At Interlaken we spent two days at the base of the majestic Jungfrau and then went on to Lucerne where we saw the famous Lion of Lucerne, the old painted houses and bridges, and had a beautiful drive along the Axenstrasse.

Next we travelled a whole day in a bus over the Brünig Pass, through Leichenstein into Austria and arrived at Innsbruck where we spent the night and part of the next morning.

At Vienna we spent a day and a half during which we visited Schonbrunn, formerly the home of Maria Theresa; there we saw the church where Mozart was blessed, a house where Beethoven once lived, and other interesting sights.

We left Vienna for Hungary and the Jamboree, changing cars at Budapest for Godollo where the meeting was to be held on the grounds of the summer palace of the Regent of Hungary. On the train we found many other scouts—English, French, Maltese.

After the opening of the Jamboree we started making friendships with the boys of all nations. It was not difficult to tell from which country a scout hailed. The Egyptians wearing their fezes, the Indians in their turbans, the Hungarians with white plumes in their hats, the Scotch in their kilts, and many others were typical of their countries.

Trading was widely practiced. A flashlight would procure almost anything. One day I saw a Hungarian scout wearing a Bond bread button which he told me was an American scout badge.

One afternoon our troop gave an "International Tea" to which each scout invited several scouts from different countries, and about sixteen different nationalities were represented. During the Jamboree the American troop presented a pageant depicting many scout tests and games and also an Indian dance in costume, closing with the formation of a large B - P in honor of Baden Powell, who had opened the Jamboree. After the pageant many scouts and other people came to our camp asking to see the Indians. The Hungarian scouts gave many shows at night. One night, in particular, there was a large crowd and I couldn't get a very good view. Two Hungarian fellows noticed this and raised me up on their shoulders so that I could see better. This was characteristic of the many acts of consideration that the Hungarian scouts were always doing for their guests.

One day we got up at five o'clock and went into Budapest. In the morning we visited the Royal Palace and then went for a swim in one of the pools for which the city is noted. We spent the afternoon seeing the rest of the city and at night we had a beautiful trip down the Danube on a steamer.

The two weeks passed quickly and it soon came time for the Jamboree to come to an end. All the scouts assembled in the large arena for the closing ceremonies. Count Teleki, the camp chief, closed the Jamboree with a speech, and after his last words, "It is our sincere hope that you take home with you in your hearts the remembrance of the brotherhood and comradeship here," every scout shouted "Brother" in his native tongue.

Two days later we left for Vienna. Our next stop was Munich, Germany, where we spent a day visiting the German Museum, watching the people in their picturesque Tyrolean costumes, and seeing the other points of interest that Munich has to offer. From Munich we went to Nurnberg. There we saw the quaint old houses, the "Iron Maiden," the old towers, and the wall about the city. Leaving Nurnberg we went by train to Heidelberg. At Heidelberg we spent half a day during which we saw the University and the castle on the Neckar River. Early the next morning we had about an hour's ride to Mainz, where we transferred to a Rhine steamer, and, after a delightful trip down the Rhine, getting a good view of the ruins of many once stately castles and vineyards, we arrived at Cologne. The next morning we spent our time visiting the famous cathedral and finishing up last minute shopping. That afternoon we travelled to Bremen, and the following day to Bremerhafen where we boarded the Bremen for America.

We realized, as our summer came to an end, that we had had experiences that we should never forget and that we had formed many warm friendships with boys of other countries, all having one common interest—scouting.

LESSONS

*Jerry, my angora cat
Was so very pretty that
I had quite a time
Proving he was really mine.*

*He was always much admired
And of this he never tired.
With amber eyes and sweet soft purring
His appearance was alluring.*

*His fur was soft, and gold, and fine;
Above one eye a short dark line.
His dainty paws were, oh, so small,
I don't see how he walked at all.*

*Well—I must finish now,
If I don't, I know not how
I'll make my drawing of a tree,
Or finish my biology.*

SHILA FLANNERY, II-1.

The Call of a River

It was well on toward midnight as Ted stood looking down into the lazy, carefree water. It looked dark and mysterious, from the top of the bridge, as it slipped through the night toward the cold, fathomless ocean.

"A river is a lifeless thing," he thought, "still it is full of life. A river that is fierce, and destructive or calm, and peaceful is full of emotions as is every human life. It also has a goal. You never see a river going first one way and then another. It is always pushing on and on with that determined look on its countenance of do or die.

"Wouldn't it be an adventure to be a river," thought Ted. "You would travel through the cool, refreshing highlands with the pine trees on the shores and the high, narrow falls to slip over. You would shoot around rocks, and zig-zag through rapids; now down a rocky slope, and then through a narrow gorge with the death-like rocks towering above you like the hardships that shadow life. Also there would be the plains with the fields of grain and the fruit trees. You would skim noiselessly through sleepy towns with their general stores and village graveyards as a canoe slips across a moonlit lake.

"What a romantic life it would be and how like the lives of many humans. You would, if you were a lucky river, spend your younger days in that beautiful mountain range where you had all your fun and play. As you grew older, you would calm down, no longer indulging in those games of dodging rocks and skipping through rapids. You would then join some raging ocean or shifting tidal sea and travel from land to land, or a retired river, nameless and forgotten. There might be a trip to the South Seas with their beautiful tropical fish. There would be a visit to the Mediterranean with its oriental atmosphere. Also, there might be a jaunt with the warm Gulf Stream to Europe. Then to—" but Ted's thoughts were broken by a blundering policeman who called Ted "buddy," and told him to move along or he might fall in.

DONALD MANLY, III-2.

Great Actresses in the Role of Lady Macbeth

MARGARET LAPP, IV-2.

“All right. All right. I’ll do your measly little play for you providing my next play is something I can get my teeth in.” It was the voice of Peg Du Barry. She was striding up and down the office of Al Durbin, gesturing viciously. Al was seated at his desk chewing a cigar and wearing an air of boredom.

“Now listen here, Peg. Just because you’re ‘Broadway’s greatest actress’ now—mind you I say now—don’t get the idea that you can have any part your little heart desires. Mr. Aubrey here, is your financial backer. He’s known many famous actresses, but I’m afraid none made your demands. Now, be reasonable. Peg. You do ‘House of Darkness’ for us and then we’ll talk over other prospects.”

“I’ll do your cheap play on one condition, just one—that you allow me to switch to Shakespeare and play Lady Macbeth.”

“Lady Macbeth? Peg, are you crazy? Good heavens, girl, you couldn’t do that. You’re a comedy actress not a tragedienne. Isn’t that right, Mr. Aubrey?”

At this Mr. Aubrey turned from the window through which he had been watching Broadway traffic. He was an elderly, well dressed gentleman. He spoke with perfect English. “My dear Miss Du Barry, Lady Macbeth is a beautiful role I’ve seen it done often.” He sat down and took out his pipe.

“One of the earliest women to play Lady Macbeth was Mrs. Siddons. In 1811 she retired and played the role as a farewell performance. And the effect of her sleepwalking scene was so great that, at the conclusion of it, the audience demanded that the play be stopped at that point. Her performance was so stupendous that they wished no anti-climax to the magnificence of the triumph.”

Peg waited a moment and then said softly, as if afraid of breaking the magic web woven around the two. “Go on, please. Tell me more.”

“Well, Charlotte Cushman was the first American actress to become a great star. In 1836 she entered the theater and appeared at the Bowery Theatre right here in New York. Her part was that of Lady Macbeth. From then on she became the reigning tragedienne of our stage. My, she was lovely. She was the embodiment of dignity and strength. She has often been compared in style with Mrs. Siddons. There were more. Mme. Janauschek, a German tragedienne, made her debut in America in 1867. At first her performances were in German, but later she also spoke English. She was most successful as Lady Macbeth because of her majesty, bearing, and her power.”

“Have you ever seen any famous actresses play Lady Macbeth?” Peg broke in inquisitively.

“My, yes, I saw Adelaide Neilson play Lady Macbeth when I was only ten years old. She gave an exquisite impersonation of the role, and left a lasting impression on my mind. Then there was Julia Marlowe who made a very successful Lady Macbeth. Of course, she played exclusively in Shakespearean drama. Many other actresses have given their interpretation of Lady Macbeth. If you like, I’ll lend you my copy of ‘Peg Wolverine, Tragedienne.’ She was quite the loveliest of them all.”

“Like it? I’d love it. You’re right—both you and Al. I’m not fitted to play the part, and now I realize it. You were sweet to tell me about all those wonderful actresses.”

“Not at all, Peg. I enjoyed it. Don’t give up your desire to play Lady Macbeth. Sometime when you're older you'll be able to play it beautifully. Then I'll coach you in the role, and—"

But Peg interrupted. She realized she'd been getting, what is known to Broadway, as "soft." "When I'm ready, but until then I'll leave it to the grand ladies of the past, and concentrate on being 'Broadway's Best Comedian' in 'House of Darkness.'"

Evening

The red sun was rapidly falling in the west. Laborers were returning from their hard day's toil. The barking of a dog and the occasional voice of a small boy driving the cattle could be heard as they approached the big yellow barn. The thrasher and various other farm machines were silent.

Far off at the horizon the sun was setting. The whole sky appeared to be on fire—a fire-place with one great glowing ember dying away among the coals. Slowly the sun sank until just the brightened sky remained. Soon darkness enveloped the world, and another day had come to a close.

ALAN MARTIN, II-1.

Snowflakes

I love to watch snowflakes. They're so light and fluffy. I like to think of them as a tribe of people. They seem to have so much fun! All they do is dance and flit around like some graceful dancing lady. But they are silent, oh, so silent. How nice it would be if we could ask them how they like their gay happy life! It would be very easy for them to whisper their story and secrets when they drifted into our ears. Such a tiny whisper it would be! Can't you hear it?

They seem to do the round dance and just whirl around and around. Then the wind chases them and they fly away as fast as they can, and when the wind has died down, they start dancing all over again. They also play tag, dodging, running and falling down together.

The snowflakes fear many gods. Hail punishes them if they have been naughty. (It's like our whippings.) The sun, the west and the south winds prevent them from being light and flyaway and make them change into a form in which they are wet and heavy. There is no dancing or tag then.

The North Wind is their friend. He makes the temperature go down and ice form on lakes and ponds. Then people can skate, and so can the snowflakes. What a thrill to be carried on someone's head or back, going at a lightning speed.

Snowflakes don't stay long though. Maybe that is why they are so happy and playful.

MURIEL LECHLIETNER, IV-1.

Sunday, The Day of Rest

Seven-thirty, breakfast and a vain attempt to read the "funnies" and the gravure section between gulps of scalding coffee and nibbles of toast! Pushing around the house to find my gloves, hymnbook and sundry other articles—which is equivalent to jumping rope for a half an hour—next occupies my time. At eight-twenty-five I have my daily road work with the street car, missing it by about ten steps. Nothing daunted, I walk up the street, turning around every few minutes to see if that confounded vehicle has crept into view. It finally sways along and I am my customary ten minutes late for Sunday School.

After this has finally come to an end, I go to church. The minister says, "We must go from Sunday School to Church." All right, I'll go. The solemnity of the church with its dark shadows cast by heavy-oaken rafters fills me with reverence—until the sermon. Then I begin to think of all the really interesting things there are to do in the world, and to wonder vaguely why I can never become interested in a sermon. A feeling of awe accompanies the benediction, and I go out feeling that all the troubles of the world are on my shoulders.

At home, after dinner, everybody is so tired from rushing around all morning that they go to sleep, leaving me to amuse myself—or so they say.

I spend all afternoon trying to wake people up and finally I become so bored trying to, that I adopt the line of least resistance and go to sleep too.

Naturally we all wake up in time for supper, and for the rest of the evening we sit around grumbling about the wasted afternoon. After a suitable interval has passed, the Sandman comes, and all is quiet. Thus ends a "perfect day."

HUGHES FRECH, III-2.

An Incident

In the darkness just before dawn a few scattered flakes of white snow sifted lazily earthward to give the finishing touches to the already flawless counterpane that covered the small clearing in the woods.

Flawless? Not quite, for in the center of the white floor, hardly noticeable from a distance, there rose a thick grey post about six feet high. Quite incongruous with its surrounding was this post, for its rough and splintered sides bore dents, and stains that gave evidence of the hand of someone other than that of the delicate Mother Nature; the silence was intense and ominous.

Then, as a stream of ink creeps from an overturned bottle onto a spotless sheet of white paper, so from out of the woods marched a small column of men to disturb with their footprints the unmarred snow.

The silence was broken by the creak of leather, and the labored breathing of the men, for they had come far and the snow was deep. Suddenly, dawn broke and its pale light came from out of the east, enchanting the woodland scene and offering a grim contrast to the ghastly work being done by the men.

With lips compressed, broad shoulders squared, and head thrown high, a military figure stood against the post with arms crossed on his chest and his eyes covered with a black cloth.

As a small cloud, drifting slowly across the exposed bars of the sun, momentarily obscured the few early rays, he was shot. They buried him, swearing at the cold, under the snow-frozen earth, and tramped back to a warm cup of coffee and friends.

"Damn the cold!"

ON GAZING THROUGH A CHAPEL DOOR

One day I chanced to wander in
 A stately church,
 Across the multitude I saw
 A chapel door flung wide and luring vistas.
 The sun was filtering through the leaves
 Of a tree just beyond. The organ played
 Softly "The Rosary"
 And as I heard, I dreaming fell,
 As dreamers will, of beauty beyond that magic door.

I saw afar a tiny hill and light running feet,
 A bevy of carefree happy maidens, gently voiced.
 Their silvery laughter echoed with the silvery babbling brook that was so near.
 Their faces shone with happiness and as I watched
 I wanted to be a carefree girl again happy in a convent garden,
 To find my soul, and ease my heart, and lay the burdens down.

And then, beyond the convent walls
 I saw another garden, where all flowers bloomed
 Lozely in rampant colors;
 And close by a silvery fountain, with Pan
 Dreaming and playing on his pipes,
 Vying with gay feathered birds far and near
 But there, oh there beneath the weeping willow tree

A white-haired angel sat in lavender and lace,
 Some fragile piece of sculpture brought from over-seas.

So delicate she looked, so dear; and happy
 children formed

A ring, about her dancing,

And all in that garden sang; the flowers

Sang a floral note; the fountain's music

Enchanting, clear; while Pan bewitched all who heard.

The song of the wind in the willows was a happy song yet sad.

These selfsame happy children, boisterously gay, must lose their happy youth

And to dull old age with lost hopes, decay.

The willows' sighs brought tears to the angel's eyes

As she remembered her youth, long past and far away.

And so I took one last glance at Paradise

Before the vistas faded the door was locked,
 And I found myself on the wrong side of the gate.

But oh, I'd give all that I have, to be on the
 the other side.

Not now, not just in fancy, but always, in reality.

MY FRISKY DOG

I put him on the lawn;
I put him on a chair;
I tried him on the window sill,
But I couldn't get him there.
I tried him on a stool,
And up against the wall;
I even set him on the floor,
But it wouldn't work at all.
I tried him from the front
And I tried him from the rear;
But when I thought I had it,
The thing went out of gear.
I put him on the hammock,
For there I thought he'd stay;
But just as I was ready,
The hammock all gave way.
I tried him this and that way;
And oh, I had to laugh—
The many, many ways I tried
To get his photograph.

A VEGETARIAN ROMANCE

"Come, lettuce get married," said Art,
"Will your celery keep too?" asked she.
"With carrot will do and I think dear,
Something better will turnip," said he.
She replied, slightly radish from blushing.
(Tho' her rouge was purely the fault),
"I've always been true, and I'll still be,
Tho' your kale may not keep us in salt."
So off to old Pars'n Ipp's cottage
Onion road, the wedding to stage,
They sped, and it took but a second
In this modern taxi-cabbage.
But you can't beet a taxi-cab meter,
Appeasing the bill left him broke,
Caused a lump to sprout in his throat,
And nearly made poor Artichoke.
However, they were not cress' fallen;
To the house on the corner they went,
Woke the Pars'n Ipp from his slumber;
On the greensward held the event.
Of a Ford V-8 he made her a present,
And they now take a spinach night—
And this is the endire my story,
For there isn't mushroom left to write.

POETRY

Relieve yourself by poetry; those writings, fond and fair
Quickly can comfort, when you are in despair.

A line here from Virgil, a stanza there from Scott,
Can make you feel so peaceful, that worries
haunt you not.

A poem now from Lowell, a poem then from Sill,
Of soft and swaying rhythm, 'til your quivering nerves are still.

The gruesome poems of Edgar Poe, can frighten the demon Pain,
The haunting rhymes of Shelley can bring you peace again.

So to see life and beauty, with wonders old
and rare,
Light your lamp, and read a poem, and then the world is fair.

TO JOHN MARSHALL HIGH SCHOOL

Three years have passed; the fourth goes on apace;
My high-school life will soon a memory be
Of teachers, courses, friends, long dear to me.
And now, another epoch I must face.
What lessons of the past will give me grace
To journey onward, though I cannot see
How rough the course to reach the knowledge
tree,
Or what will be the finish of the race?
You've taught me perseverance, industry,
And many other things not found in books
To aid me both in sunshine and in strife.
This is your greatest aim—to make me free,
To hearten me with memory of your looks;
To help me in my search for truth and life.

AGNES DEAN, 1V-1.

THE REWARD OF ESPIONAGE

I

*This is the night! The very breeze
Seems to whisper thru swaying trees.
Its melancholy song of fear
Softly mourns, "The time is near!"*

II

*High overhead, beyond veiling clouds,
Each twinkling star seems to call aloud
A warning of danger. Then they disappear,
Hidden by drifting shrouds of gray,
As the hour draws near.*

III

*From the flickering shadows of a lonely field
A plane climbs, circling high.
It drones away and disappears
Into the blackened sky.*

IV

*On, on it speeds, across the lines,
And over No-Man's Land,
Whirling and dodging thru a storm of shell,
With Death lurking on either hand.*

*Now all is still. No more
The whir and scream of whizzing shell;
The flash of archies like flaming spears
That marks the path of Hell.*

VI

*With screaming wires the little plane
Dives toward the shell-torn ground.
It levels off with a sudden lurch,
And lands with a jolting bound.*

VII

*The plane stops rolling;
It has come to a halt at the foot of a little hill.
The scene is ghastly silent;
The pilot—limp and still!*

VIII

*He makes no move to leave the plane,
He does not try to rise;
The pale moon casts its weird light
Upon his glassy eyes.*

IX

*Upon the ground beneath the wing
A crumpled paper lies;
Within its fold the tale is told
Of why he took the skies.*

X

*And flew away o'er hostile land
To spy upon the foe.
A dangerous task—reward is death!
A real man had to go!*

XI

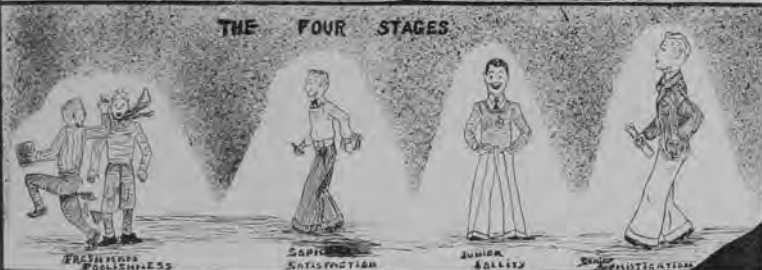

*Just who he was, from whence he came,
This rider of the skies,
No one will really ever know—
He met the fate of spies.*

THRIFT HEATERS

Give Mother More Leisure

There is much clothing to wash and launder and a lively demand for plenty of hot water during school days. Mother doesn't mind all this, however, if she has purchased a new THRIFT GAS WATER HEATER. It automatically provides all the hot water required for the family needs and greatly lightens the work of keeping the children and the home happy, healthful and clean.

With the Thrift you can budget your cost for water heating and know in advance what it will be every month.
