THE JANUARY
AND JUNE
SENIORS OF
JOHN MARSHALL
HIGH SCHOOL
FOREWORD

After witnessing the presentation of the senior annuals of three previous classes, we offer our version in this, the 1939 John Quill. The classes of January and June 1939 have tried to edit a book that will appeal to all Marshallites now, and will, through the years, recall vividly the experiences and achievements of our high school days. If this aim is wholly accomplished, our satisfaction will be enduring.

IN MEMORIAM

Homer Vary, member of the class of January, 1939, whose memory remains with us as we close our high school days.
For the help they have given us during our stay at Marshall, the classes of 1939 will always be grateful to our principal and advisers.
Come on, you candid camera fan.
The day is bright; the light is right.
The photo muse is napping.
But you can call her to your side;
A gentle shake, and she's awake.
To aid you in your snapping.

Just see that boating senior there.
He proudly crow; his manner shows
A graduate's satisfaction;
So take your camera from its case;
Don't hesitate; he may not wait:
The time has come for action!

And here we have a sleeping miss;
Just contemplate her blissful state;
Can you afford to scorn it?
Your album page is rather bare.
So you can see that certainly.
This picture should adorn it.

But now let's wander out-of-doors;
The soccer field should surely yield,
A picture every minute.
Quick! Snap that angry water boy!
His canine pet has just upset.
The ball, and all that's in it.

The library next, where learning reigns,
This pretty maid, emotions swayed.
Her choice of books is making.
Just snap her as she takes a book.
It's not Shakespeare she's choosing here.
It's Taylor's life she's taking.

And last let's visit city streets,
Where we may yet a lesson get,
From someone's occupation.
Let's photograph that sandwich man.
Conditions show he did not know.
The worth of education.

From senior's pride to city streets—
And now we can, dear photo fan,
Preserve them for the ages.
We'll first develop... What! No film!
But never fear; we have them here.
On "John Quill" section pages.

Activities
To be elected an officer of the Students' Association is the greatest honor the student body of John Marshall can bestow upon one of its members. The responsibility of these offices includes working with the Cabinet and Forum to plan and lead school activities and to have charge of relationships with the community and other schools.
"Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed"—With this famous quotation in mind, Marshall's Forum and Cabinet have acted accordingly. The Forum, the legislative body, was composed of one representative from each homeroom. The Cabinet, the executive body, was composed of members of the Forum and school at large. Suggestions of the student body concerning Students' Association activities have been brought to the Cabinet and Forum meetings through their representatives. In accordance with these suggestions, the Forum and Cabinet have planned the various Student Association and school affairs.
Homeroom presidents are elected by the members of the homeroom at the beginning of each term.
This year, their duties have included keeping homeroom members in order during the homeroom period and reading announcements which the teacher may want made. The girls' presidents have charge of keeping attendance at girls' club. They also help to plan the programs for the meetings.
The great chain of responsibility in the success of the Student Association of John Marshall would be dealt a severe blow without the iron clasp of the sales managers.

Their willingness and cooperation to get all the students to join the Student Association has never before reached the height that it did this year. Their unfailing FLUCK in selling tickets to basketball games and Student Association dances, and other important events in Marshall has also set a worthy record. The Student Association may well be proud of the work done by sales managers this year.
The Trans-Lake Study Group has effected a new method of promoting friendly relations with Canadian neighbors. The group, composed of history students, is divided into small units which pursue certain subjects of particular interest to the two schools involved.

During the past year co-operatives, changing foreign governments, and the history of the United States and Canada have been noteworthy topics. Delegates from John Marshall and Northern Vocational School in Toronto met at the respective schools to discuss these national and international problems. Radio broadcasts presenting results of study also played a large part in the Trans-Lake activities.
Because of the fine support that students extended to the Docket, a paper which has received honor ratings consecutively for the last two years, it entered its second year as a weekly paper. Students known for their literary ability have maintained a high standard of workmanship under the assistance of Mr. Miller. The weekly paper, although somewhat smaller than the monthly issue, contains up-to-the-minute news. The staff enlarged its efforts to bring about a presentation of social, governmental, sporting and personal events.
The John Quill Staff employed a new plan this year in an effort to put forth the best John Quill in history. At the head of each section of the book was an editor assisted by a committee of seniors and a faculty adviser. The editors were, in turn, responsible to the editor-in-chief and the managing editor.

At the beginning of the term every senior filled out a questionnaire stating the person he thought most capable for each job. From this list, and from application blanks, advisers picked the editors and the editors their committees.
Cheer, cheer for John Marshall High!
Cheer for the Orange and Blue,
Cheer for our orchestra and band—
They’re out there, just playing for you.

Everyone can feel the Marshall spirit rise when the band plays the “Marshall Cheer Song” or “Alma Mater” at a basketball game. Even the players sense the rhythm and fighting spirit of the Marshallites. A game could not be a complete success without the extra abundance of pep and vitality thus supplied. And neither could assemblies be a complete success without the orchestra.
The outside traffic patrol of John Marshall does a great deal in preventing accidents in the vicinity of the school. One may see its "officers" on every corner in all kinds of weather doing their job to promote safety.

It is the responsibility of the lunchroom patrol to see that the lunchroom is kept clean and orderly during lunch periods. Through their efforts, accidents are efficiently handled.

These two patrols do much towards keeping the school a safe as well as attractive place to be.
When a teacher applied for films to supplement class work, it was the duty of an operator to be at the proper room at the specified time. He had to know how to operate the various projectors, repair damaged film, and to perform other important duties.

STAGE CREW

The stage crew, under the guidance of Mr. Myers, arranged scenery and lights and provided appropriate sound effects for all activities on the stage.

Radio operators had charge of radio and public address systems through which programs and announcements pass to various rooms of the school.

The 1938 edition of the John Marshall soccer team enjoyed the most successful season in years, finishing tied for third place. Six varsity men of 1937 returned to form the nucleus of the team. These six veterans plus several promising newcomers formed a strong fighting machine that never let up until the final whistle had blown.
BASKETBALL

Made up mostly of returning veterans, the 1938-1939 cage edition opened its season by defeating a strong Spencerport team in the annual opening game. Two of the veterans, Hartwell Weeks and Robert Keegan were chosen co-captains of the varsity. The team did well in both league and non-league games, finishing the season in a tie for third place.

The reserve team, captained by Peter Harrington, made a very creditable showing.

The Marshall swimming team began the 1939 season with many veterans and excellent new swimmers. Under Mr. Gerace's guidance, the team had a very successful season, finishing in third place, one notch above last year's standing.

The success of the 1938 baseball team can be attributed to the fine pitching of Keegan and Bleau, plus the defensive ability and splendid spirit of the entire team. The highlights of the season were a winning streak of five of the last six games and the selection of Bob Keegan for the All Scholastic team. The prospects for the 1939 season are bright, for the same team, with few exceptions, will take the field for John Marshall.

TRACK

The undying stamina, fortitude and splendid spirit of all participants placed the 1938 track team well up in the first division. This fine record can be attributed to the excellent work of Douglas Coster and Raymond Hall, who sparked the team in the hurdles and shot put, respectively. Graduation of these two stars did not dim the outlook for the 1939 team because of an abundance of up-and-coming sophomore prospects.
GIRLS' SWIMMING

Swimming clubs, meeting on Wednesday and Friday afternoons, draw the attention of many Marshall girls. Red caps signify beginners who are just learning how to swim. Green caps represent intermediate swimmers who are taught to improve their strokes, and white caps are worn by advanced swimmers who are taught to dive and swim expertly. Mrs. Holcombe and Miss O'Connor are advisers and teachers of this club.

Although badminton is a comparatively new game in the sports curriculum at Marshall, it is, nevertheless, very popular with its many devoted followers. Volleyball, an equally popular sport, is played with a great deal of enthusiasm and good sportsmanship. Both of these games are under the direction of Miss VanDeWalle.
CROSS COUNTRY

A young team and a new coach upheld the standards of Marshall High on the cross country course last fall. Mr. Schantz, working with an inexperienced squad, built up a team which placed well in the standings of the high school loop.

BOWLING

Each Tuesday afternoon during the past bowling season, Marshall's keglers met the bowlers of other schools at Buonomo's. Although the team did not finish high in the league, the pin topplers, under the captaincy of Jack Dengler, rolled some good games.

CHEERLEADERS

"The Marshall Rah! Hit it!" Thus a Marshall cheerleader of 1939 might have yelled for support at a basketball game. The fall term cheering squad, which introduced this cheer, and the spring group of rafter raisers did an excellent job of rousing Marshall spirit.

The 1939 tennis team, under the direction of Mr. Wright, is off to a promising start with four veterans, Len Wolk, John Williams, Jack Handy, and Ed Maher. Members of last year's team absent from the picture are Marvin Kaplan and George Dixon.

Bobby was breezing into the dance hall with his usual late and spectacular entrance, the only unusual detail being that it was I breezing in beside him. I realized at the time that Bobby thought I was overdoing it and more or less cramping his style, but I wasn't going to let my new dress and brushed up hair do be outdone by his already threadbare display of ego. Bobby is my cousin and takes me to such a grand dance as this, or any dance for that matter, only when it is expedient and convenient, the profit and convenience being entirely his. This time it seemed that the girl already had a date for the dance so he took me ("dragged" was his word for it) and planned to cut. This he explained quite elaborately and thoroughly so I wouldn't be so disillusioned as to think that his opinion of me had changed at all.

Now as we stepped into the bright lights and motion with the gaiety of the music and dancing colors, I began to feel for the first time that perhaps I was going to enjoy this dance after all, in spite of Bobby. My spirits continued to rise as a crowd rushed toward us with the usual boisterous greeting for Bobby. Of course, since I was standing right next to him, they had to give me the greeting, too, or else stumble over me. They all greeted me, except one, and he stumbled. I looked down to see whether I should ever be able to wear my shoes again but I stopped when I saw the feet that had stepped on them. They were shed in tremendous receptacles of rigid leather and should (if a firm foundation means anything) last forever.

My first thought was of Lil' Abner and it was confirmed as my eyes traveled up, seeing that the bottom of his pants almost reached his ankles, with his coat sleeves following suit. When I came to his shirt and tie (horrors, both plaid?) I knew I shouldn't go on, but as usual my curiosity won without much difficulty and the shock was even worse than I had feared.

When I got past his chin (which was done with considerably more time and difficulty than you can imagine) the way became indescribably worse and ended in a pile of hay-colored kinks stacked as high on top of his face as his chin extended below. Right now he was making a strange series of noises which I finally decided was a bass giggle but which sounded more like an ancient Ford refusing to start on a cold morning.

Wishing to be rid of the matter as quickly as possible, I turned to start a conversation with the person next to me and for the first time realized that there was no person next to me. My "mountaineer" friend and I were standing alone staring at each other while the rest of the world went dancing by. He was asking me to dance and before I could think of a good reason not to, I, feeling like Beauty's Beast, was pushed through a throng of graceful dancers.

I was sure he had asked me to dance, but his version of the word "dance" rather puzzled me. To him it evidently meant setting his teeth, leaning forward, grabbing a girl, and shoving—a position to me has always suggested a person putting his nose to the grindstone. Now and then he narrowly missed pushing me into one or two other couples, and it was in one of these lapses that I asked him what his name was (not very original, but the best I could think of at the time). As I inquired, it occurred to me what a ridiculous question it was, as the answer would obviously be Zeke. There, however, my usually dependable intuition failed me, for his name was Roger.

The music had stopped, once more leaving Roger and me awkwardly facing each other. Completely exhausted and quite unequal to another such round, I suggested we sit out for awhile. The next dance found us sitting on the sidelines trying desperately to think of something to say. Then I caught sight of Bobby, who appeared to be having the best of good times, mostly for my benefit. I sent him a silent, pathetic appeal, but his only answer was a silly grin as he continued enjoying himself. Angered and humiliated, I turned to Roger with a sudden flow of conversation which at first brought only an awed, gaping stare.

Before the next dance started I saw Bobby working his way toward us. As we danced away from the still puzzled Roger, Bobby remarked with marked superiority, "You do get yourself into the worst messes!"

I winced and sent up a thankful prayer for Bobby as I replied in my most indifferent tone, "Oh, I don't know, I think he's kind of cute," and thought, "If his name were only Zeke!"

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Walking through a crowded department store one summer afternoon, a friend and I came upon a counter selling knickknacks and other oddities. In the midst of the counter of bright shining objects stood two stalwart little wooden dolls. On inquiring, we were told that the little Hungarian dolls were book marks. We immediately decided that we would buy them, although we knew that when the time came to mark a book, a piece of newspaper would do the job.

As we made our way home we passed the public library. The idea immediately occurred to us to go and look up two fashionable Hungarian names for our little friends.

We walked slowly up the long flight of stone steps and entered the great, silent building. The librarians were busily walking to and fro, precisely and noiselessly moving books from one shelf to another. An old wooden clock ticked away the hours on the opposite wall. Here and there we could see sitting at reading tables a few students intent upon their books.

Recalling our noble motive for entering this institution of literary treasures, we approached a shelf of books labeled “Travel in Foreign Countries”. Running our eyes over the books, now and then we picked out one and thumbed eagerly through the pages in search of Hungarian monikers.

Intent upon our search we had not noticed the arrival of a thin little woman with neatly dressed hair and kindly blue eyes. She quietly inquired if she could help us. We carefully explained to her our burning desire to acquire some information on Hungary. She nodded and moved busily off in the opposite direction. Presently she returned carrying three large heavy volumes.

We sat down at a nearby table and began to work. We noticed that the librarian was discussing our problem with a second woman who immediately hurried out in another direction. Getting out paper and pencils, we appeared to the most observing eyes to be taking down notes from the wealth of material surrounding us. Our librarian, smiling on two such eager students of history, assured us that she would find us still more material. We gratefully thanked her and resumed our reading. Finally, with an excited exclamation, my friend announced that she had found what she was looking for, and had found a suitable name for my doll also. We carefully copied down the names and marched triumphantly by the librarian’s desk. She smiled kindly at us and inquired as to whether we had found sufficient material. We assured her we had and thanked her again.

Today my little Hungarian, Bela Khan, dangles from a chain, and Sigmund Hougowsky stands guard on my friend’s dressing table. Little does that librarian realize that, appropriately enough, she is the godmother of a book mark.

PIONEER'S FAREWELL

Oh, the wind blows o’er the Old Country,
With a tang of the icy spray.
And it whips our sails into billowing sheets,
And speeds us upon our way.

Now behind us the shores of the land we have left.
Show up dinner and dinner each night,
And before us horizons with unbroken rim.
Urge us on with unknown delight!

For we’re leaving the land of our ancestors’ fame.
And we’re leaving our homes and our friends.
And we’re putting behind us the king’s iron rule.
And the churches we dare not attend.

But whatever our reasons for leaving our homes.
We have shared but one common desire.
For the thought of a land where we’ll always be free.
Has set all of our longings afire!

Though we’ve heard of the hardships that lie ahead.
Of the Indians that lurk in each tree.
Yet we’re ready to face every dangerous task.
For the sake of our own liberty!

So—farewell to the shores that have just dropped from sight.
And each bond from that land we must sever.
For the pioneer spirit has fixed our blood.
And we’re liberty’s children forever!

THE OLD SCHOOL

Do you remember the old school
Its friendliness and fun.
The good times that we had there
With the new school just begun?
Those pounding pipes;
The children playing on the hills
That stood outside the office.
Where the nurse dispensed her pills.
The teacher in the next room
Whose voice came thru the wall.
The teaching on Marshall Day.
The French class down the hall.
Music from the choir’s tower.
Mrs. Spencer’s speech.
The posters that fastened the walls
Around election week.
The mad rush to the lunchroom.
Our old unbeaten teams.
The slanting ceiling in the room.
Where Miss Osman’s supreme.
The very few assemblies.
Mr. Myers’ crowded stage.
Larry “sans” his title.
Singing was the rage.
Miss Mayo’s penny lectures.
Mr. Snyder’s dreams.
Of a school that wouldn’t fall apart
Or crack around the seams.
The good old locker system.
The ‘coms’ that seldom worked.
The long, long hall we often ran.
The home work that we shirked.

Remember?

MARY LOUISE FRANCE.

The crowd on the flying field was enormous. Photographers and newspaper reporters dashed hither and yon in an effort to obtain pictures and last words of Harry Lane, who was about to take off for a non-stop flight across the ocean. Every one was talking at once, yet what they said amounted to nothing. Harry was in a daze—he had been for the last twenty-four hours—and he could tell nothing of what had happened. People were shaking his hand, slapping him on the back, wishing him luck. Finally he was in the plane, ready to take off. Then suddenly he knew what was going on. He taxied the ship across the field, raised it from the ground, and pointed its nose toward the East. His last recollection was of the crowd below, waving and cheering loudly.

Lane was soon out over the ocean, and his mind began to clear. It seemed impossible now that this was really he, Harry Lane, on a non-stop flight to Europe, who a scant two years ago had been merely a mechanic at the flying field from which he had just taken off. Well, he had started it, and he was determined to finish it at Paris. How wonderful it would be when he finally landed! His goal would be accomplished. What if he didn't make it? "I've got to," he thought, "for Betty!"

His thoughts now went back to the West where he knew Betty was waiting, hoping, praying for him. If he made it, they could be married soon. He thrilled again at thought of that night a month ago when she had promised to marry him. How he longed for her then. Just to have her near him, helping him just by her presence.

Spurred on by thought of her, Harry climbed higher and looked toward the North. Far below he could see the choppy waves of the ocean. How cold and restless they looked, waiting, eager to devour whatever might become their prey. Lane shuddered as he looked. "I've got to make it!" he thought again.

Soon he began to feel drowsy. The steady hum of the motor became monotonous, and to keep awake Harry sang, talked aloud, anything to keep awake and able to pilot the plane. He wondered what time it was. Suddenly it occurred to him that he hadn't been conscious of time for ages. He looked at his wrist-watch. It was nearly four hours since he had left the flying field on Long Island. He began to figure how long it would take him to reach Paris. "Ought to make it in thirty hours," he figured. "Not any more, anyway—maybe less—I don't know."

Suddenly Lane began to feel hungry. He didn't remember having eaten anything since the day before. He had had a marvelous steak dinner. Then he thought of his home—of the delicious meals his mother cooked. He could just taste that fried chicken and apple pie. Oh, how he wished he were sitting down to a big family dinner, his father at the head of the table, carving, his mother bringing in steaming dishes of food. He reached for the knapsack which contained sandwiches, bars of chocolate and a thermos bottle of coffee. A mere sandwich in place of all those things of which he had been thinking! "I hope there is some decent food in Paris or wherever I land! I couldn't survive more than a day on these!"

"I must be halfway across by now—wonder if I really will make it? Betty! Yes, of course, I will! Can't land here—in the ocean—" and he shuddered. "Two thousand dollars—marry Betty—" Harry was drowsy again. Suddenly he was aroused by a sputtering sound. The motor—it started to miss. He struggled to get the plane under control. It started to drop. Then the motor was going again. The plane rose and Lane sighed. It would be all right now—but it wasn't! The plane suddenly took a dive and went spinning through the air. "It's all over now," thought Harry. "No, it can't be. Come out of it in a minute—climb higher. How fast the plane is going—those waves seem to be coming right toward me!" Lane saw suddenly a great many things—Betty with a stricken look in her eyes—his mother and dad—how terrible for all of them! He just couldn't die. But it was all over now. He would soon be buried under those cold, relentless waves.

As the plane hit the water, the waves seemed to part for a minute, then close forever over the plane and its human sacrifice to aviation.
GOING UP

Slowly, “Gramp” Sloan rose from his warm bed, slipped into his clothes, and entered the cold kitchen. His aged hands trembled with excitement as he started a blaze in the old stove. A breakfast of hot bacon and coffee so rejuvenated the old man that his lips puckered in an attempt to recover his long lost art of whistling as he hitched up old Dobbin. The road lay clear and coffee so rejuvated the old man that his lips puckered through his brain.

His own grandson, his own flesh and blood, who had attained such a high position in the city, had asked him to ride with him this day of days—His mind flashed back to his first auto ride, to the joy, to the nervousness that accompanied that ride.

And now, this! Ah, but his grandson was a fine boy—So absorbed had he become in his thoughts that he almost failed to notice that he was nearing his destination. With greetings and handshakes over, he allowed his grandson to lead him through the nearly deserted halls to the machine. A mechanic glanced up as the grandson spoke to him.

“Yes, sir, all ready except for a few minor adjustments.”

When the mechanic had finished, the young man straightened his uniform and stepped into his pride and joy, followed closely by the old man. As they started to rise from the ground, a smile of assurance from the younger man made the grandfather forget himself momentarily and he watched with interest his offspring’s manipulation of the controls. As their speed increased, the man’s heart seemed to fly also, but a tight band of fear closed around it as he suddenly remembered that between him and the ground was nothing but air. A queer sensation in his ears was dispelled by swallowing, as directed by his grandson.

It seemed as though they had been flying in space for centuries when suddenly, with a sickening lurch they began to descend. A thin, whining sound permeated the air around them and still the younger one seemed unperturbed, unafraid. Faster and faster they dropped, like a hawk swooping down upon a defenseless chicken. Then they stopped, not with a crash, but gently, as if they’d been caught in the hands of some giant. The young man opened the door for the older one, who staggered out nervous and exhausted, but proud; and why shouldn’t he be proud? It isn’t everyone who has a grandson who runs one of the new, high speed express elevators in a skyscraper.

THE OAK TREE’S FATE

The long limbs of the oak tree
Stretched themselves on high,
Through the white mist of the morning
Into the pale blue sky.
It shivered under the impact
Of a mighty blow.
It trembled, it tottered, it fell.
What happened? Who will know?

Eugene Rogers

THE “I'M ALONE”

The ship was gliding down the bay,
Riding the salty foam.
And I chanced to hear a seaman say,
“It is the good ship 'I'm Alone.'

Her sails were billowing sunny white,
And when she passed the town.
A cry arose above the night,
"She's as fast as 'The Flying Cloud.'

Late that night a storm arose,
And sturdy she proved to be.
For she held her course and bared her nose,
And kept onward out to sea.

But late that night her fate was known,
A fate that was meant to be.
For now the good ship 'I'm Alone'
Belongs to the deep green sea.

MOODS

I am happy
The brightly lighted city
Is beckoning to me.
With gayety and laughter
That's what I want to see.

I am content
A comely chair at twilight
Beside a crackling fire
With endless dreams to must from.
Is all that I desire.

I am sad
A dusty road before me,
A walk my only task,
With country fields so lovely.
Is all that I shall ask.

Virginia Buckley

MURDER

The night spreads a silent dark mantle
Through which little stars try to peep.
The street is empty, deserted,
The city has settled for sleep.
The tower clock’s striking midnight
With solemn and echoing tone,
And at the last stroke, through the doorway
A figure steps, alone.
It silently creeps down the dark street
On a murder’s mission, we know,
It cautiously crouches, its eyes filled with fire
And strikes out a death-dealing blow.
Then it drags the helpless victim
Back to its villainous den.
There, pussy will have her supper—
Then—out for a mouse again.

THE ART OF FISHING

Have you ever stood by the banks of a stream, breathlessly feeling the fishing rod you hold jerk and quiver? From the feel of the pole you can tell the fish must be a big one, ten pounds easily. Suddenly you draw a deep breath and pull him in. A beauty! A huge, wriggling, squirming rainbow trout, shining in the sun! What a thrill! But then, I wouldn't know - I've never done it.

I have stood ankle-deep in soft, cold mud, waiting patiently for two or three hours, only to find, every time I pulled the line, that the poor worm had been devoured alive. Miraculously enough, the line never so much as trembled while the feast was in progress. It was a great thrill at first. I was going fishing! I would certainly come home with no less than a half a dozen delectable trout and if my beginner's luck held out, I might even be able to spare a few as gifts to the various neighbors.

We went at dusk. It was a warm summer evening and the river, calm and placid, reflected the last orange and red streaks that marked the western sky. After crawling down a narrow, steep trail, still muddy and slippery from the last rainstorm and sliding the last few feet thru tall, wet grass, we at last reached the place where we were going to fish. With extreme distaste I picked up a worm and tried to bait the hook, calmly pretending to be an experienced hook-barter. After tying the unfortunate creature in a firm knot to insure his remaining securely on the hook, I cast the line far out over the water. At last it would have gone far out if it hadn't caught the branch of a tree and tangled itself into intricate knots. At last, however, I managed to untangle the line and cast it fairly successfully.

Then I sat down on a log and waited. The mosquitoes had evidently been awaiting this moment, for it seemed as though I was the only one they bothered. It was not merely a chance encounter but rather an organized attack, cleverly planned and viciously executed. The only way to avoid being eaten alive was to get up and jump around, swatting and shooing them away. Still we waited for a bite from those elusive fish. After what seemed like several hours, somebody startled us by shrieking, "A bite, a bite!" It was on my line! In a second, with my heart in my mouth, I was reeling him in. Never for a moment did I doubt but that I had hooked a magnificent trout, a monster from his weight. At last with a mighty jerk I landed him. At my feet he landed, a huge, slimy, squirming eel! Someone, much less cowardly than I, unhooked him and scornfully tossed him back.

I then decided that I didn't care so much; I bought a glorious sport as I had imagined I would. For the next two hours we waited, baited, reeled hooks, and swatted ineffectually at the mosquitoes which had attacked us. The only note of excitement occurred when one of the group landed a small bullhead. The rest of us stared with envy at this superior being who had actually caught a fish. At last we decided that fishing was no fun anyway and retreated, discouraged, wet, muddy, disgusted and infinitely wiser.

This was my first fishing experience. It was also my last! From now on I shall content myself with buying fish from the corner store and visiting the aquarium. My compliments to all of you lovers of nature who aspire to spending all of your leisure hours casting and reeling in the big fellows - I am not one of you. My advice to all would-be fishermen is this: Take along two things on your next fishing trip - a bottle of insect spray and an exciting detective novel. When the line jerks pretend not to see it or give a superior laugh and return to your book. But after all, why not stay home?

Cornelia Barber.
THERE'S ONE IN EVERY FAMILY

It doesn't take much concentration on anyone's part to decide who is the official messenger in the average American home. Of course we all know it is little brother. I don't quite know why he should be selected for the job, because big brother is just as capable of running errands as little brother.

The job he is recruited for the most often is running to the store. No matter if it is just to get a package of toothpicks, or a bushel of apples, he goes. If he protests to big brother, who, because of his size and strength should go for the bushel of apples, he is met with this reply, "I'm busy. Take your cart."

Even though little brother is reluctant in having to go to the store for the apples, he would much rather run for ten bushels of apples than have to go uptown on an errand for big sister. Usually this errand is to purchase some personal articles for her, anything from a pair of stockings to a hair ribbon. You can just imagine the disgust that emanates from little brother when he gets the contents of those choice bits of sentimentality. Can often bribe big brother because sometimes he, little brother, reads the contents of the notes and big brother wouldn't want any of his friends to get wind of the reasons.

The next job in importance is acting as a messenger between big brother and big brother's girlfriend. There is some consolation in the performance of this duty, for big brother's girlfriend usually has a choice bit of candy or fruit for him, and some sort of expression like, "Here's a dime for your troubles." Then too, he can often bribe big brother because sometimes he, little brother, reads the contents of the notes and big brother wouldn't want any of his friends to get wind of the contents of those choice bits of sentimentality.

Then too, little brother has many duties within the home which come under the classification of errands. Whenever any member of the family needs something and it isn't at his finger tips, little brother chases after it. Here is an example for an average day in the life of little brother, as far as errands are concerned. First, he goes upstairs to get a couple of bobby pins for big sister. Then he chases downstairs into the cellar to get a hammer for big brother who has suddenly grown ambitious and has decided to hang up a picture for mother. Mother doesn't give little brother any rest either, because she sends him up into the attic for her baby of the family. His only hope is that some day there will be a new heir to the family fortune, who will also inherit the job of being the official messenger for the home.

MY BLINDNESS

I like to sit alone and think.
Of dreams and days gone by.
Of happenings which seem to live
With time which seems to fly.

To think about the sky at night,
The stars that brightly gleam.
The silence of the moon in flight.
The music of this scene.

To feel the sun's own warming rays,
Upon shadowed eyes.
The earthy smell of spring's first days
That makes my feelings rise.

Into my mind all this is brought.
Which time can not erase.
And knowing I have all these thoughts.
My blindness I can face.

BEOWULF

Then said the good King Hrothgar to Beowulf the Geat,
"Where goest thou the mighty strength to do this daring feat?

Then answered him the Geatman, victorious in the fray,
"When I was young, O King, I ate my Wedoc every day.

"I have heared," the King went on, "that them did keep afloat.
For seven days and seven nights, alone, without a boat.
Pray tell us," said the King of Danes, with ever increasing fervor.

"How didst thou do this mighty deed without a life preserver?"
"I was simple," chantad Beowulf in the manner of a Scop.
"I filled the pockets of my mail with gentle three soap.
Outside the walls of mead hall a crowd of people stood.
They stamped their feet and shouted as loudly as they could.

The King of Danes was troubled. To Beowulf he said,
"Why are these people shouting there? Why aren't they home in bed?"

The Great One, then, of Geatland he answered with a laugh,
"They're shouting there, O King, because they want my autograph."

THE WAY OF A FISH

In a winding stream
On a summer day
A gay little fish
Was busy at play.

Like a toy balloon
Let loose to float.
He was dipping himself
In the path of a boat.

Then all of a sudden
He leaped too high.
And a fisherman spied him
With keen eye.

His hook was long.
His boat was near;
And from the boat
He cast his line.

The fish was hungry,
And up you see,
The boat didn't last long,
And neither did he.

ELEANOR CROWLEY
OUR SUNDAY AFTERNOON WITH PEGASUS

Chug! Grunt! Shudder! Wheeze! Ugh! Chug! Hooray! We're off!
Yes, the car is finally started. I agree with you, it is a surprise. Almost every Sunday Pegasus takes us out for a ride. Yes, she takes us. If we don't go where she wants to go—well, then we don't go at all, for she is spoiled and very set in her ways.

One by one, the family climbs in. Father counts; one is missing. Mother counts; we are all there. Now we are ready to go. Amid shouts from the children, shrill directions from Grandma, and the frantic wavings of mother's hand, we finally manage to back out of the driveway.

The next question is where to go. Peg seems to beturning a little more to the right than the other way, so we push in that direction.

Grandma tells Bobby to turn the window up. He won't. An argument ensues, ended by Father's stern, "Robert, close the window!" He now inquires whether it is all right to turn. Mother screams through Jack's yodeling, "Yes, John, I think so." Father obeys, and almost collides with a 1938 luxury liner. Oh! well, all's well that ends well.

At last—the open country. Through the fingers-and-nose marked window we catch glimpses of rural autumn. We smell the fresh, sweet air and smile; we are serenely happy.

Pegasus is happy too. She is feeling fine. Her cough is gone, she is all cleaned up, and has just had a filing dinner. Six whole gallons! And a quart of oil for dessert.

Ahead we see the motorist's jinx, the newer cars delight; a hill. A steep hill. Pegasus has seen it too, for she is slowing up. If only she doesn't become stubborn! The children cross their fingers; Father grips the wheel; Grandma clutches Bobby, much to his discomfort; and Mother, cool, calm Mother just bites her lips and sits still.

Peg has reached the hill. She is pushing valiantly. Onequarter is gone. Half is gone. Slower and slower goes Peg. We are almost at a standstill. Several cars sail past. My kingdom for a new car! We have reached the three quarters mark. Will she make it? Chug—chug—chug—the top! We made it! We fly down the other side—just as good as ever, except that the water is boiling over.

This is a common occurrence. In fact, it happens every time there is a steep hill. Now Father is stopping at a gas station for some water, both for the car and for Bobby. Bobby promptly spills—or is it dumps—his in my lap and is rewarded with a slap in the general direction of his ear. I, in turn, am hit in the nose. Mother, seeing what is coming, separates us with her ample form. On again! Always ahead!

No—not always. Peg is beginning to cough. It must be the cool air. She wants to go back. We do so.

The homeward journey is always pleasant. Pegasus knows there is a good bed waiting for her—and we know that when we get home there will be good food and beds for us.

Everything is running smoothly. The family begins to sing. Father beams at Mother and at Bobby drowsing on her lap.

Soon we reach the city limits. One more worry, and then we're home. Sometimes Pegasus gets panicky in a crowd. Through the downtown district we rattle and roar. Down Lake Avenue, with only a few shudders and shakes of nervousness from our Peg! Around the corner, in the driveway. Home!

But all is not well! Jack left one garage door shut, and Father drove through. There is an ominous sound of splintering wood.

Father gets out, looks, pushes the car back. He climbs back in with, "Not too much harm done." We drive in. In the process of getting out, Jack's finger is caught in the door. What a yell! But he'll pull through. He always does. Grandma hurries into the house to take care of Jack's finger. She is sure that blood poisoning will set in. Father locks the door, and we go into the house. Another afternoon gone.

NORMA GRAFE
GOING OUT FOR THANKSGIVING

As I sank into the depths of the most comfortable living room chair, and was enjoying a book, I overheard the ominous words of Mother as she answered into the telephone. "Oh, we would love to come!" I was so aroused by curiosity to discover where we were going that I bounced from the chair, only to sink back a moment later not as contented as before. The family was again invited to the White's for Thanksgiving! I began to review my experiences of the preceding year. Upon arriving, we received a very gracious welcome. While Dad and Mr. White listened to the broadcast of the Cornell-Pennsylvania football game, Mother helped Mrs. White prepare the dinner. I sat and filled in time by drawing pictures.

I was tired of this, I just sat and filled in time by drawing pictures. As I sank into the depths of the most comfortable living room chair, and was enjoying a book, I overheard the ominous words of Mother as she answered into the telephone. "Oh, we would love to come!" I was so aroused by curiosity to discover where we were going that I bounced from the chair, only to sink back a moment later not as contented as before. The family was again invited to the White's for Thanksgiving! I began to review my experiences of the preceding year. Upon arriving, we received a very gracious welcome. While Dad and Mr. White listened to the broadcast of the Cornell-Pennsylvania football game, Mother helped Mrs. White prepare the dinner. I sat and filled in time by drawing pictures.

Since I had had an early breakfast, I was raving with hunger by the time dinner was served. I was very happy with my plate heaped with delicious food, and was anticipating second helpings, until I noticed that Irene was daintily pecking at her food and was refusing many things that were passed to her. I found it necessary to restrain my appetite and appear more ladylike. Donald's frequent requests for more and more white meat gave his mother great embarrassment and inclined all present toward the idea that his long legs surely must be hollow.

After dinner, we returned to the recreation room, where my young hostess became immersed in a book of the 'Orphan Annie' type. A glance through the bookcase revealed only books of a similar kind, which did not interest me. For the rest of our visit, I entertained myself by looking out the window at the scenery. When I tired of this, I just sat and filled in time by drawing pictures.

That night I resolved that the only place to spend Thanksgiving is at home. There one is allowed to entertain himself in any way he wishes. His appetite is always encouraged. So we were invited to the White home again! I picked up my book and resumed my story, not quite as contented as before.

ON POSING FOR A PHOTOGRAPH

Today is the day. There is no escaping. I must go to the studio to have my face photographed. My appointment is at 9:15. I must hurry or I shall not get there on time. Into my coat, on with my gloves, a hurried good-bye, and I am gone like a whirlwind.

A black cat suddenly crosses my path. My heart skips a few beats, but I hurry on. A streetcar is in sight. I run—and then I slip on the ice. Down I go, sprawling like a spider on the sidewalk. I pick myself up, feel all my bones, and again start to run. I catch the streetcar, and also my breath.

I sit and pray the conductor will hurry. At last we arrive. I step off the car and start to cross the street. A policeman waves his arms wildly. I start at him, wondering whether he is sane. Then suddenly a new thought seeps into my mind: The lights are wrong and I am standing in the middle of traffic. I close my eyes and plunge through an opening. There is the curb, at last.

Now I am in the studio, waiting nervously for the photographer to appear. Time flies. I begin wondering if this is the right day. A lady appears. "Will you step this way, please?" she says. "You can fix your hair here." I think to myself, "Do I look so disheveled that she notices"? and peer into the mirror. No, I am all right. I enter the room where the cameras are waiting. Soon a little man appears.

He looks at my eyes and at my hair. I begin to worry. He takes my arms and arranges them at queer angles. He tells me to look at a certain point and then darts behind the camera. "Be calm," he says, but how can I, while wondering why my neck does not feel more like itself? Then once more he appears before me. He makes a face. I laugh. He takes the picture. My breathing becomes more regular. He takes three more pictures. I am free! The agony is over. Joyously I rush from the room. I meet a friend. She asks, "What is it like?" I boldly reply, "It was great fun!" and then mutter to myself, "Don't you believe it!"
