of the WEST HIGH SCHOOL

Rochester, New York

June, 1934

The Grand Old Man "West High"

Soft deep shadows
Fall across the old man's aging brow.
The half-written book rests
Now on steady knees.
His kindly eyes scan
The written page,
Dreaming the while
Of that which he has written.

* * *

Then rousing slowly
With half a sigh
He takes the feathered pen
And scratches carefully—
JUNE '34, WEST HIGH.

—John McHugh

To Mr. Donald W. Keyes, in appreciation of his genial personality, intelligent counsel, and talented direction, we dedicate this, our Senior Occident.

CLASS WILL

W

E, the class of June 1934, West High School, City of Rochester, being of hazy mind and doubtful senses, do hereby declare this our last will and testament, and heaven help us now.

WE BEQUEATH:

- 1—To succeeding classes, our physically and mentally exhausted pedagogues.
  - 2—To future editors, the OCCIDENT NEWS, with all its thankless duties.
  - 3—To the janitor, that huge supply of hot air furnished by our many members. (Maybe he can beat the study halls with it.)
  - 4—To Miss Manchester and Mr. Coon, a pile of unreturned absence slips accumulated throughout the past four years.
  - 5—To the succeeding love stricken couples, the posts and statues we monopolized during our periods of affliction.
  - 6—To Mr. Sauer, the sum of twenty-seven cents, to help swell the coffers of his failing school treasury.
  - 7—To Mr. Stowell, with sincere purpose, a mythical orchid for his untiring efforts on the Student Council.
  - 8—To Discobolus and Winged Victory and their plaster friends around the halls, an apology for the practical use we made of them.
  - 9—To the Sock and Buskin Club, best wishes for continued success. (And perhaps some day it will have a treasury instead of supporting several other activities.)
  - 10—To succeeding generations, a varied collection of armaments to painfully exterminate some of those droning assembly speakers to whom we were forced to listen.
- And, to the school as a whole, with its splendid and understanding staff of teachers, we leave an endless line of future graduates, confident that you will inspire and encourage them as you have done us.

UNSEEN NOISES OF THE NIGHT

ENZA DIPONZIO

WHEN we were nine and seven, we invented a game to circumvent Mother's design of having us go to sleep early. We had to go to bed at eight-thirty, and we were allowed no lights or playthings, but go to sleep we would not. The game was simple as all good games really are—we just lay in the dark and listened. The first one to hear five noises and identify them won the game. Of course a sense of honor was necessary. One didn't just imagine noises. (Our game really should be listed in one of those weighty treatises on child training as one "for the development of honesty and good sportsmanship.") As I remember, my "sportsmanship" consisted mainly in heatedly accusing Evelyn of cheating if she beat me too often, for such a defeat was an insult to my age and station. (I had skipped the third B because of an overcrowded section.)

The summer was best for the game, for Eve and I spent the summer at a cottage in a lakeside community which furnished all the noises of the city, country, and shore. On stormy nights we couldn't play well. Rain beating out its staccato rhythm on the shingled roof; the oncoming, rushing, gurgling waves; the wind whose eerie, whistling song ran through the grasses; and shutters banging against the cottage—shut out all other sounds.

Usually the game went this way: Tense, straining silence, and the steady putt-putt of a motor boat fading into silence. The Browns were out for a night of fishing. I listened again. Click-click down the walk, with a whiff of deep blue perfume. (Perfume odors were all colors in our game.) That was Mrs. Black going to a party. The next noise was easy. Jim was taking Nellie, his decrepit and remarkable Ford, out for the evening. Several sickly sputters and mournful chokes were followed by the cheerfully loud explosions and grinding of gears that proclaimed success. I heaved a sigh of relief. Sometimes Nellie was a bit temperamental. It was a long time before I could hear the next—soft music, laughter, and the snapping of wood fire. A bit later the tantalizing smell of sizzling hot dogs tortured us, who "weren't allowed" roasted hot dogs at night. (We had hygienically boiled ones at luncheon.) My fifth noise was the low, growling rumble of a freight train rounding the curve, but before I had heard it, Eve had won again, with the angry buzzing of a fly caught between the screens.

In our second game I would work harder, determined to win. Toot, toot! The trolley impudently announced its coming around the curve. Next, I heard the sounds of running water and hoarse whispers of "Gee, it's cold," and "Where's my towel?" Next door, Tom and Ed were enjoying the shivers of a shower after their evening swim. After a few minutes of noisy quiet—the announcing medley of sound in which no single one can be identified—there was a sudden blare of music. Will, our next door neighbor, had succeeded in getting sounds from his hand-made radio set. The next noise was a familiar one—Sir Timothy's growls at the shadows under the rose bushes where she thought a field mouse was lurking. Mother heard her too, and called for her to come in for the night. Mother was almost as strict with our pussy as she was with us. I triumphantly announced my five sounds. Eve yawningly agreed it was "one up" and we started a third game.

The heavy, groaning noise of the shutters banging on the cottage was my first noise. Drowsiness left us completely after hearing that noise; we were alert and all attention. Next I heard the chimes of the hugh grandfather clock in the hallway. One, two, three, four—ten times the chimes pealed forth their bubbling notes. It was ten o'clock, we were not asleep, and our game was progressing beautifully. After a few minutes of darkness and silence, the headlights of an approaching automobile flashed in our room. The beam of light searchingly swept the walls and ceiling and then just as quietly as it came, it disappeared. The sound of the motor faded gradually away in the distance. Another few minutes of restless quietness ticked away into the kingdom of time. Rain drops were gently falling on the shutters and roof. Soon it was raining fast, a sound I love to hear. For the next five minutes

I let my imagination run loose and dwell upon my fancies and delights. For that reason Evelyn won again. She had won two games and I only one. With a stronger, and more determined mind to win the next game I started a fourth one.

About this time there was a lull, and we were conscious of the constant lap—lap of the water on the sand, and of the gentle slapping sound against the supports of the pier. The sounds became fainter and fainter until there were none. We were both sound asleep.

Janet McCord's one-act play, FOR THE LOVE OF ANNABELLE, has been awarded Honorable Mention.

INARTICULATE

Silently, terribly,
I cry, I scream, I strain,
To clutch the stifling void that is my brain
And bring forth all the things that would be said—
Dim and cloistered shapes that vaguely float around
Just waiting to be found.

"You're dumb and sluggish and inert."

No, I'm not. Just waiting, waiting,
'Till these ghosts of genius ripen
And tumble out upon the earth
In thundering streams of Startling . . . insignificance.

—Virginia Clark.

Mention in the Mabel Hope Spinning
Competition.*]

» » BASHFULNESS « «

ANGELO MADONIA

I pity bashful men, who feel the pain
Of fancied scorn and undeserved disdain,
And bear the marks upon a blushing face,
Of needless shame, and self-impos'd disgrace.

—Cowper.

SINCE my early childhood, I have undergone terrible agonies because of this very weakness that Cowper mentions. Without apparent warning and at the most peculiar moments my face turns a deep crimson hue similar to that of the tomato; my hands wander about in search of some object to grasp; words turn to stone; and I feel as conspicuous as a new-born babe.

Many theories have been proffered by physicians, psychologists, and other intellects as to the possible causes of these seemingly insane antics. Some cause heredity, others a complex of inferiority that has been developed in the individual, and still others a lack of knowledge in the afflicted one of the rules of social decorum. But whatever the causes, the results are evident enough and I will cite them from personal experience.

When only a youngster I had difficulty in approaching an acquaintance on a thoroughfare without turning a cherry-red, fidgeting, and bringing a look of sympathy to the face of the acquaintance which disconcerted me all the more. I could not endure this very long; so, now I avoid the encounter. If I have a chance to (before being seen) and I usually do, for my subconscious mind is always on the alert, I either conceal myself in a nearby yard or cross the street and pretend to be deeply occupied in doing nothing. Of course, I fail because of my flaming features, and, consequently, a storm of protest rises from those whom I avoided.

Another device I have been forced to adopt comes to my aid when we have company at home. Sometimes, on such occasions, I am in a room that may be entered at any moment by the visitors, or from which my mother may call me to greet the guests. At the first sound I become panic-stricken. I dread the meeting. Then desperate, and regardless of the weather, I rush to open a window, leap out, and visit a friend for the rest of the evening. But again I am unsuccessful in avoiding attention. In fact I invite more.

In the first place, my mother has told of my presence to her guests who are eager to see such a "great big boy", and, when I suddenly disappear, they usually suspect the motive. At our next meeting they rebuke me for avoiding them, and again I suffer those agonies that I have mentioned. But that is not all. I also have to make explanations to the folks at the home of my friend. Knowing me only too well, they hint and suggest reasons for my sudden and dishevelled appearance. Thus doubly do I pay for an action prompted by the senseless acrobatics of my mind when controlled by my affliction.

However, there is one confession that I must make. In practically all cases it is the fairer sex that brings about these acrobatics. For this reason dances, parties, and even school activities have been taboo in my life. Time and time again, have friends essayed to "crash" me through my reserve, but to no avail. The appearance of a member of the female species completely routs any show of bravado on my part.

In the class room where I have no choice in the matter of attending, I am considered a very healthy boy. My cheeks usually have a tincture of delicate crimson and my features indicate by the perspiration suffusing them a vigorous existence. Whenever attention is directly or indirectly focused on me, if all eyes are not on me for the sake of the point at issue, they soon are because of the gymnastics of my limbs and the color of my face. This is especially true when I am criticized, scolded, or make a mistake—as if I were infallible. Yet the

At Seventeen » »

I shall remember, as the years go by,
And shall not be afraid; for newly sprung,
Like flowers, along the path I take, shall lie
The April songs my old child-heart had sung.
I shall not smile at thoughts I kept apart,
Or things I said; and all my out-grown tears
Shall be as armor to my silent heart
Grown tired with answering the solemn years.
I shall remember how I loved the rain,
And wind and sun; and strange and rare
Was Death to me, like some cloud dark with pain
To hide the blue. Yet knew I it was there!
Let me not fling my youth's brave heart away,
Lest I may need it for a lonelier day.

And After » »

I cannot say how soon have come the years,
And sooner gone; I know my soul can tell
How life brings laughter, mingled with the tears
To such as I, who loved it over-well.
Long, long ago, my youth's heart went away.
An older heart replaced it bye and bye,
(But when the hour or year I cannot say,
Yet know I now a heart can never die.)
Nor does it hurt to smile at trifling things
I thought so precious and so solemn then;
The hour has fled that song and laughter brings.
I shall not trouble to remember when.

Yet why, when April comes, all silvered rain,
Does my heart quicken with some older pain?

—JEAN ENNIS.

PAINFUL EXTRACTION

RUTH McALLISTER

PAINLESS EXTRACTION — so reads a dentist's sign, but it fools us not a bit; the extraction is far from painless. Just so does that well known dentist, adolescence, work havoc.

If I remember rightly, my first encounter with this awe-inspiring creature was around the tender age of fourteen years. It happened when I, to my sore grief, found I could no longer enjoy the hitherto intriguing game of paper-dolls. Oh! I did not surrender without a fight. On the contrary, I, trying to hold my interest, devised all sorts of romantic and adventurous escapades for my family of pulp, but I failed sadly and finally had to fly the white flag. Of course, I had to find some substitute for my lost pastime and so I began to pay frequent visits to the neighboring library and there I would delve into all sorts of literature. My former hunger for blood-curdling mystery and inane Bobbsey-Twinish stories seemed to have been suddenly satiated, but only to be replaced by a gnawing pang for romance and thrills. Therefore, I came home with my arms loaded and read until I would be compelled by no meaningless words to retire.

For about a year after this, nothing drastic seemed to happen. I'm sure that I was still quite childish in actions, for many times I heard, in horrified tones, "Won't you ever grow up?" Perhaps that admonition took some effect; perhaps something within me became ashamed and blushed at such youngish pranks, for my third year in high-school saw the dawning of, maybe I could say, a "new woman". This new personage had her good side, for in her was awakened an interest in fashion and she ventured into that ancient art sponsored by Xantippe, by making herself a very loud (the word describes perfectly) pair of pajamas. Those very same pajamas seemed to stick a spur into the side of my pride, for, instead of stopping after the one attempt, I kept on and soon had a small wardrobe to exhibit.

But the "new woman" also had bad traits. Just consult my mother about them. I am very sure that she will tell how many times she was on the verge of making me the victim of a nerve-specialist. I can now, looking back on it all, laugh, but it certainly was no farce at the time. I would weep copious tears over some rather "sticky" novel or movie and then fly into a tantrum when ridiculed. I can positively say that I never needlessly missed so many school-days as I did during my Junior year. But am I to be blamed? When I would awake in the morning, something resembling a sledge-hammer rhythmically pounding within me seemed to say, "There's nothing in school; there's a good book at home; say you are ill." Talk about temptation! With head bowed, I think of the numerous times I yielded. But, after a few times of this so-called "sickness", my mother caught on and told me in so many words to "snap out of it". Mothers are pals!

During the summer between my junior and senior years, time and time again I had to stage a battle with spells. Now, of course, I didn't go around, armed with stick and banner, proudly proclaiming that I was fighting oncoming AGE. Probably my mother and I were the only ones in on the secret. Oh! It hurt me to find that all my ideas were changing. It certainly is no pleasant feeling to roll out of bed in the morning, a possessor of an entirely new view-point upon a once settled idea. Rather like a Jekyll and Hyde combination. Then suddenly one day, without the aid of tonics or complicated analyses by specialists, I found myself cured of the inner hammering and the rather "cracked" condition of my brain. What a grand and glorious feeling!

Then dawned a new life for me. Suddenly I discovered I could make muffins and that these selfsame delicacies could be partaken of without the slightest danger to the partaker's digestive tract. I reveled in dough. Please do not confuse the meaning. I harassed my poor mother to distraction and wasted not a few eggs and little flour in my experiments. Thus I, with my floury hands and self, treaded a new and more joyous path. Fall rolled around again and the school bells summoned. It's long been a wonder to me why none of my classmates noted the change in me; I felt it so keenly myself. It was a pleasure to get up those beautiful autumn mornings and the heretofore bor-finest display of my ability is seen when I am accused of some misdeed. Guilty or innocent I blush, I stammer, I try to explain, but fail miserably. So, I keep quiet, and leave the matter in the hands of my accuser, hoping that he is as wise as a Solomon. Usually he is not, and believing me guilty, acts accordingly. So, I am humiliated and suffer for days at a time. In fact, seldom are anxiety and suffering not my bed-fellows, since the tortures of the bashful are ever present.

The most peculiar phenomenon, however, occurs in the classroom, an assembly, or any other gathering, regardless of sex. At some time during the proceedings, usually when there is extraordinary quiet, I feel a wave of unrest and inner commotion seize me. I try to shake it off by disregarding it, but instead, it increases until I am freely perspiring and strikingly blushing. I begin to worry, knowing that those nearby are going to notice my plight. Soon they do and that finishes me. I continue to blush until my spirit is completely broken and I sit back exhausted. Then, and only then, am I relieved of what I call self-inflicted punishment.

Now, this is utter foolishness, and though I know that it is difficult to alter natural deficiencies, a little thoughtfulness would aid a great deal. I would be satisfied if only one condition were remedied, i. e. if those—especially girls—who delight in urging a display of the timid one's power of discoloration, would dispel their desire to see a fellow-human squirming under their taunts of "How cute you blush," "Is his face red!" and "What pretty colors he has on his face."

PAINFUL EXTRACTION

ing school-day became more like play to me, something to be anticipated. I was a senior! I even indulged in those renewed sports, bicycling and roller-skating, with a new air, a certain dignity. My growing pains were over, but I walked right into new experiences. But they were not so bad; my family noticed them before I even became aware of them. For instance, independence, Queer how subtly it creeps up and takes one a victim. I became ensnared rather early in the fall, but thought nothing of it until I heard my casualness and ease in accepting invitations being discussed. My goodness! It was true! When I reflected, it became clear how I would absolutely forget that I still had a mother who might like to know where I was going. I tried to conquer this bad habit, but I guess I was too far gone. How much easier to say, "Yes, I'll go," then look at mother and remark, "It's all right, isn't it, mom?" Then the desire to follow Garbo's example, to be alone. Suddenly, I discovered that it was no longer a punishment to be in solitary confinement. I actually enjoyed solitude—of course, for only short periods. In those precious moments, such delightful books and poems could be read. Yes! I had finally surprised myself by overcoming my former distaste for poetry.

Ah me! I am on the brink of womanhood and I know not whether to smile or weep. Childhood was such fun, but perhaps grown-upness will be better. I believe I'll give it a try.

THE STORY OF ROCHESTER

By DOROTHY DeVITO

IT WAS in 1788 that the Seneca Indians sold 2,600,000 acres of land to Phelps and Gormham for $5,000 and an annuity of $500 forever. They, in turn, made a contract with "Indian" Allen, the first white settler, to run a mill in return for a strip of land along the Genesee river. After passing through several hands, it came to the attention of Colonel Rochester, Major Carroll, and Colonel Fitzhugh. They were men of good character and vision who became interested and finally purchased the tract in 1803 for $17.50 an acre.

When Colonel Rochester took up residence here in 1818, the settlement already was thriving. They had established pony express, erected a church, were publishing a weekly newspaper, had set up merchant stores, built a school, established a stage as far as Canandaigua, and taken the census showing a population of 331 persons. In 1817 the settlement became the incorporated village of Rochesterville.

Rochester's situation on the Genesee River and the water power from the falls, that was excellent for industry, are responsible for our city's early growth along with the opening in 1825 of the Erie Canal. The canal brought an on-rush of settlers from all parts to the almost unknown "West".

From that time Rochesterville grew very rapidly. Various railroads sprang up, adding to the natural facilities of transportation. With the increase of industry came the need of wider railroad network, until most small lines were merged into the New York Central lines. The Baltimore, Rochester, and Pittsburgh and Lehigh also aided in transportation of our manufactured products.

Although industry began with flour milling, we have an almost endless variety today. The Eastman Kodak Company, established after the Civil War, is a great asset in our industrial life, exporting its products to all parts of the world. Bausch and Lomb and Shur-on Optical plants also export their manufactured articles to all parts of the world, even to Africa. Gleason Company producing gears and gear machinery is the largest in the world. The variety also includes Stromberg-Carlson, manufacturing telephones and radios; General Railway Signal, producing signal equipment for railroad; and Ritter Dental, supplying all necessary dental instruments. There are many large shoe, clothing and machinery factories of note. On the whole Rochester is both fortunate and versatile.

Rochester's banks and trust companies in their development kept pace with the growth of the city's industrial life. The conservative method of operation and the broad vision of those in charge have proved an inestimable benefit. No failures of consequence are recorded in the history of the city.

Although the settlement erected a school house before 1818, our educational system really began in 1857, when 200 pupils received instruction at No. 1 School on Fitzhugh Street now occupied by the Board of Education. It later served as the first high school and was taken over by the Board of Regents in 1862. The city grew rapidly and soon afternoon sessions were necessary. This led to the building of East High School in 1903, and two years later of our own West High School.

In 1850 the University of Rochester was founded, because of a desire on the part of the residents for an institution for broader and more liberal education. In the last eighty years the University has become one of the most outstanding institutions of its kind. Prominent men have made generous gifts for its maintenance and enlargement. The School of Dentistry and Medicine, opened in 1925 through the efforts of Mr. Eastman and others, is controlled and operated by the Medical University faculty in conjunction with Strong Memorial Hospital and the Dental Dispensary. In connection with the musical interests of U. of R. are the Eastman School of Music, Kilbourne Hall, and the Eastman Theatre.

We cannot fully appreciate the magnitude of our park and playground systems until we happen to visit some other city not quite so fortunate. Our park system was organized in 1888 under the supervision of Dr. E. M. Moore and a committee. After corresponding and planning with park authorities from other cities, the first steps were taken in finding suitable park sites. Genesee Valley Park with

DEBATING CLUB

The West High School Debating Club has, during the past year, innovated several new policies. In January Mr. Stowell, who had been the club's adviser for two years, transferred to another organization and Mr. Naramore of the English Department cast his lot with the Debating Club. Secondly, the debates have been changed from economic and political questions to questions of vital interest to a high school student.

During the past year, the membership has been increased from six to twenty members. The present membership promises, therefore, a very alive and active club for the next two years.

The present officers of the club are: Edgar Erb, president, Allegra Hayes, vice-president, and Janet Dibble, secretary.

SCIENCE CLUB

The Science Club has now become a permanent organization in West High School. It is composed of an active group of students who are interested in engineering as a career.

During the past year the club has had many speakers at its meetings who have given excellent advice and interesting facts to the members.

The present officers of the club are: Robert Dicke, president; William Strosser, vice-president; Alice Sly, secretary, and Walter Smearing, publicity manager.

SOCK AND BUSKIN

The Sock and Buskin Club, the dramatic organization of West High, has carried on its high standard of performance in the productions, "Royal Family" and "Lightnin'." This club is composed at present of about one hundred members. Forty of these are active members who make up the nucleus of the club. They are elected from the associate members after they have participated in a major production and have been considered eligible by the membership committee. Sometime during June the club will present its final play of the year.

The club officers for this year are: Ross Weller, president; Raymond Welch, vice-president; Valerie Brandt, secretary.

FRENCH CLUB

The French Club is an organization whose purpose is the development of a facility in the art of speaking French. Students who show a proficiency in their class work are eligible for membership. Meetings are held bi-weekly throughout the year. The business meeting and the programs given after the business meeting are conducted in French. The programs consist of plays, discussions, games, and singing and are sponsored by the various classes.

The officers of the club this year are: Dorothy Ross, president, Ralph Celento, vice-president; Frances Lagarias, secretary.

CHESS CLUB

For the past two years West High School has had an active Chess Club. During this time the program of the club has included various tournaments among the members. The winners of these have been formed into teams that have represented the West High School in the inter-scholastic meets which have been arranged from time to time by the secretary. In its history the club has been defeated once by Benjamin Franklin High School. It has at all other times won the games with Madison, Monroe, East and Benjamin Franklin High Schools. This term Mr. Stowell acted as adviser.

Roger Harnish served as president, Robert Dicke, vice-president, and Irving Baxter as secretary-treasurer.

APENNINE CLUB

The Apennine Club is a social organization of the West High School students who are of Italian ancestry. Business meetings, dances, and discussions are regularly held.

The officers are: Joseph Esposito, president, Roger Valente, vice-president, Alba Santolla, secretary, Eugene Provenzano, treasurer.

OPTIMATES

A year ago the Epsilon Chapter of the Optimates was organized in the West High School. It is a club composed of the honor students in the various Latin classes. The object of the club is to foster an appreciation of Latin culture. Social meetings are also held from time to time.

The officers consist of the Consuls, who this year are Ruth McAllister, Angelo Madonna; Scriba, Adele Miller; Nuntius, Janet Dibble; Aedile, Donald Perkins; Quaestor, Evelyn Hyde.

BASKETBALL

West High's basketball five finished its season in a tie for fifth place with Marshall in the Inter-scholastic league, winning eight games and losing ten. The Occidentals under the co-captaincy of Ed Pulvino and Frank Cordaro got off to a bad start in dropping the first four games. West snapped out of its long losing streak with a spectacular victory over the championship East quint in a game in which, for the first time, the Occidentals clicked to easily outplay East 29-22. Then West again fell back and finished the first round in eighth place with a record of three victories and six defeats.

Starting the second round strengthened by the addition of Neil Fisher and Corky Thomas, West at last found its stride and after dropping two to Franklin and Monroe, defeated in turn Jefferson, Madison, Charlotte, Vocational, and John Marshall. East, however, was on the long end of a 26-15 score in its final battle with West. Pulvino and Cordaro led the team scoring with 145 and 78 points respectively.

BOWLING

A young bowling team ended its season in fifth place. The inexperience of the majority of the bowlers counted heavily against them with only Manager Rapp and Jack Wood back from last year's team. However, West finished the season's play in a good place, and in the Individual Finals Dick Gysel capped third place.

SPRING SPORTS

West has been represented this spring in baseball, track, golf, and tennis. Coach Hulek again turned out an excellent nine that was at or near the top of the league all season. Vic Caccamise pitched splendid ball, striking out sixteen batters in both the Charlotte and Madison frays. Gordon Gray, Myron Fahy, and Captain Jim Welch led the hitters.

TRACK

Coach Smith's track team won one and lost three meets this year. All the meets were triangular and West came in second in all but one when the Occidentals defeated Monroe and Charlotte by the score of 55 to 50 to 5. Neil Fisher in the 220 hurdles and broad jump was West's leading point getter.

GOLF

Captain-Manager Dominic Paris led his golf team through a victorious season. West copped its first three matches by sizable margins. Dan Gaskill and Sam D'Amato alternated in No. 1 position with Harrison and Paris completing the four.

TENNIS

Dick Byers was the player-manager of West's tennis squad which breezed through its season's play. Tack and Schewe along with Byers represented the Occidentals in the singles and Bob Birmingham and McClements in the doubles.

THE STORY OF ROCHESTER

540 acres was finally secured. Highland and Seneca Parks and finally Durand-Eastman and Cobbs Hill Parks were annexed.

Rochester has also had her share of famous citizens. Among these are Susan B. Anthony, an active worker for woman suffrage and education; Dr. E. Mott Moore, first president of Park Bureau, and an ardent enthusiast in that field; Dr. David Jayne Hill, one-time President of the University of Rochester, and ambassador to Germany; Henry Alva Strong, wealthy financial backer of Eastman Kodak Company; and George W. Aldridge, Sr., well known political leader.

Steady development has marked the first 100 years of Rochester's history as a city. It has been a progress in every phase of civic life and has brought fame and renown to her name. It is not amiss to express the hope that all the centuries of her future history may be marked by just as sure a step forward.

THE FACULTY'S PET JOKE IS WORTHY OF REPETITION:

An algebra teacher found in a sheaf of homework one paper signed "Mae West." Puzzled, she tried to trace the culprit, but in vain.

Then up stood a small girl, saying, "Please, ma'am, it was me."

"But why? Your name is not Mae West."

"No, ma'am; but—" the little face brightened, "but I done 'em wrong."
