DEATH TAKES ROSCOE HAGEN, LAUNDRY MAN

Rochester - Biography
Proprietor of Star Palace
Succumbs to Illness
at Watkins

Dec Aug 25, 1930
Roscoe A. Hagen, owner of the Star Palace Laundry, died yesterday at Watkins, where he went a few weeks ago to recuperate after a nervous breakdown.

Mr. Hagen was born in Rochester in 1880 and always lived here. He attended the public schools and the University of Rochester. He left the University in 1904 and the following year entered the laundry business, which since has claimed his attention. About a year ago he became the sole proprietor of the Star Palace Laundry, when his cousin and former business associate, George B. Caudell, went with the Kelso Laundry.

Funeral arrangements are to be announced later. Mr. Hagen, who lived at 343 Oxford Street, leaves his widow, Mrs. Louise Joyce Hagen; four daughters, Suzanne, Anita, Joyce and Jean Hagen, and his mother, Mrs. Arthur K. Hagen.

Walter's Caddy Days in City Recalled by Writer

By SAMUEL POTTER BURRILL

The winning of the open tournament by Bobby Jones stamps him as the greatest amateur the game of golf has ever known. Jones is young and in his prime. If he continues, he will lead his fields for at least five years.

Last year, Rochester's native golfing ace, Walter Hagen, at the age of 36 won the British open championship for the third time. Eleven years older than Jones, the Haig still remains the colorful professional of the world. Is Hagen through? They have been saying so for the past half-dozen years. Millions stand ready, however, to answer a thunderous negative from the uttermost ends of the civilized globe. Though he failed to win another open world championship this year, millions await his next comeback. With a little better luck, a little better start and a return of the perfect timing skill, Hagen is never down and out.

So long as he says he is out to win, he usually wins. His admirers hope for another setto between Hagen and Jones, with both at top form. Golf has come to be largely a question of psychology, in the super class.

Country Club Caddie

This is not a story of politics or of golf. It's a reminiscent flare-back to the Rochester days of the former decade in the beginnings of the new sport that had recently been imported into the United States. Then it was only known to a few experts and a comparative handful of enthusiasts.

It seems difficult to visualize the merry, smiling, handsome little Irish caddie at the Rochester Country Club in the world champion of the great international sport, who has stood three times before the flower of British nobility to receive the world cup at the hands of the heir to the throne.

I am no sort of a golfer. I was first base on the varsity nine for a year in the golden days of youth. That lets me out, athletically speaking. But I always had a liking for the Rochester caddie, though my actual acquaintance was slight, being confined to that of a spectator of a romance that blossomed before my eyes. Indirectly, I was a mere looker-on, when he came courting the little girl with whose father I was associated in ward politics.

Good Fitcher, Slugger Also, During Youth

Walter had just started Rochester and the rest of the United States by winning the national open. That was, I think, in 1914. He threatened first in 1913, only three strokes behind Francis Oulmet. Hagen won his first brilliant victory in 1914, as he did his astonishing victory in England last year, in the typical Hagen way. Hagen competed the year prior, when Oulmet tied Ray and Vardon in the national open and then trimmed both veterans in the play off. Hagen, the Rochester youngster, was not quite ready, but he was knocking. He was no accident in 1913.

One year later, at Midlothian, Hagen won. He beat Chick Evans by a single stroke, making his usual smashing victory at the last hole. He pulled his drive into a terrible rough and then played a perfect pitch onto the green. An eight-foot putt; and Chick needed a deuce to tie. He almost made it; not quite.

So Hagen became a golf immortal at the age of 22 years. The Country Club caddie of Rochester reached the Olympian heights at an early age and has continued longer to defend his laurels as the world top-notch than any man in the game.

Always there is the same dash and nerve that makes the Haig unbeatable in a pinch. At the end of 15 years of active work in the field as a professional he finds only Bobby Jones, an amateur, his rival.

Caddie Day Courtship

For a number of years I mixed in Rochester politics in a more or less desultory way, serving as a member of the old Fourth Committee for a time. Ward politics in Rochester in those pre-Volstead days centered around certain hotels. The old Clinton Hotel, corner of South Avenue and Court Street, only recently remodeled, was the political center of the Fourth for years. The late Col. N. P. Pond of the Democrat and Chronicle was our advisor. The proprietors were, first, George H. Mehl, who died, and, later, George Johnson.

Johnson was the father of a pretty, dainty little girl whom Walter came courting some six nights a week. He had been attentive in his caddie days and he continued his wooing when he won the promotion to Country Club professional. He married about the time he won the national open to become a permanent golf figure of all time.

It was a boy and girl romance that blossomed before our eyes at the old Clinton Hotel. The same sort of romance that flourished in thousands of cities and hamlets. The handsome, confident, smiling Irish boy and the sweet little maid were a couple that elders liked to watch. When the romance blossomed, the hard-boiled ward committeemen rejoiced. It was Walter's last appearance in the old Rochester life. Soon thereafter he went as professional to a richer Detroit country club. A few months later he found the profits of independent professionalism sufficient to justify his resignation as the representative of any individual golf club.

I never renewed the acquaintance after Hagen left Rochester. All I know of his golfing career in the next dozen years has been found in the sport pages of the newspapers of the United States. There are hundreds of golf editors far more capable of treating that phase in the colorful career of the world master. But the story of the beginnings in the caddie days in Rochester is not often told. It's well worth telling.

Golf vs. Baseball

Hagen was a born athlete, of course. He was a sandlot ball player with a famous curve and an eye for the ball with a baseball bat in his hand. "Silk" O'Loughlin, most famous of umpires in the American League, was sponsor of all embryonic "Babe" Ruths in Rochester in those days. "Silk" started to make a professional ball player out of Hagen. There is not the slightest doubt but that Hagen would have made a baseball player if he had continued. He might have made a major league pitcher. With his natural eye for batting he might have been a slugger of home runs on the diamond instead of a hitter of unbeatable golf on the greens.

"Silk" was a leader of men as his fame in the American League demonstrated. He believed in Hagen as a potential possibility. He brought out Heine Groh, who is still in the game, and he brought out Andy Weidenmann, who retired years ago as a major league catcher to shine in Monroe County politics, occupying at the present time the job of collector of the port of Rochester. "Silk" sought to foster the boyish ambition of Hagen as a sandlot kid.

Back in 1906 or thereabouts, Walter became a caddie at the Rochester Country Club, too. For several seasons he alternated between the sand lots and the country club greens. It was apparently a toss-up whether he made baseball or golf his life job; how and for what ultimate destiny he trained that wonderful body, that natural batting eye, that innate gift of perfect timing, that co-ordination of muscle and mind, that combination of skill and nerve that makes champions.

His Chum, Phil Ogden

Phil Ogden, one of the best amateur golfers of Cleveland at the present time, was a caddie with Hagen in the boyhood days at the Rochester Country Club. There are caddies and caddies. Some are bag carriers and some are coming champions. Hagen and Ogden were rivals for high golfing honors. Ogden had the gift that took him far in amateur circles in his later business career in Cleveland. He is the son of Charles E. Ogden of Rochester, former member of assembly from Monroe County, former city assessor of Rochester, for many years private secretary under Mayor Edgerton and later for a time under Mayor O'Neill. Withal one of the most eloquent of campaign orators in municipal and county campaigns. We were together in the Penn Yan Academy in boyhood days.

The boy, Phil, had no apparent predilection for politics or public speaking. After his college course he went to Cleveland to engage in business and has made good in a worth-while way among the young business men of that city.

Amateur vs. Professional

Phil always made golf his avocation, not his vocation. He never aspired to rival Hagen, but he is today far from an ordinary golfer. In 1925 he was champion of the Chagrin Valley Club—the Van Sweringen estates club—and its leading point getter in the district inter-club matches. For the past year or two Ogden has let business encroach more and more on his golf. He still ranks, however, among the leading amateurs in the Cleveland district.

It's a quarter of a century or more since the two kids, Hagen and Ogden, carried the bags for the bankers, lawyers, professional men and industrial magnates of the Rochester Country Club. Golf was accounted rather a silly game by the average man, who knew nothing about it then. Hagen had to be good to keep at it rather than to surrender completely to the lure of the sandlot.

Ogden in discussing the old caddie days once told me some most interesting Hagen reminiscences, when he was caddie mate in 1906, 1907 and 1908.

"Caddies at that time," said Ogden "had more chance to play than the boys do now. We had quite a few caddie team matches and tournaments. Hagen was never beaten but once in his life. That was in a team match with the Oak Hill Club caddies by a boy named Frank Rogers. His defeat was so unusual that all the caddies and many of the club members never forgot it."

"Hagen played No. 1 on our caddie team" continued Ogden. "He always won. No one thought of beating him. When he was 12 years old, we were all sure he would be national champion some day. That's how much better he was than the rest of us."

Coming and Going

Ogden told how Hagen started so young at such a pace. Hagen lived only a half-mile from the country club course, that is about four miles from the center of the city, off East Avenue. It so happened that a couple of holes led off in the direction of his home and a couple more came back up to the club house. Hagen played these holes every day, two when he came to work and two when he went home. That's the sort of golfer the boy was at the age of 12 years. Ogden recalled the most thrilling match he ever played when he and Hagen played nine holes against the club professional—and won. Ogden says modestly, however, that Hagen rather than himself was responsible for the very unusual winning.

"Hagen was always a kidder," noted Ogden. "He never seemed to take the game so seriously, but all the time he was studying it far more than the rest of the boys. He could laugh things off where lots of boys would get discouraged."

What a characteristic comment on the work of the mighty Haig, who has laughed off many a match game at the last hole, winning by sheer nerve in the tight places!

Ogden quit caddying in 1909. College and business called him. Golf was only a diversion, not a life job. He never aspired to become a professional. He is the amateur champion of an aristocratic country club; Hagen has won the British open championship three times, breaking all records.

A couple of years after Ogden quit caddying, he played a round with Hagen. "I was perfectly worn out," he said, "at the way his drives had developed since last I played with him. In the two years his skill in distance driving and timing had become uncanny. I knew then he was ready to arrive soon."

That flaming spirit will never be quenched until long after ordinary men would retire. The spirit that made Hagen smile at the last hole with two to go, while he was a caddie, is invincible.

Hagen and His Latest Cup

Walter Hagen and his newest cup, which he won with the British open championship.

Seen and Heard

By Henry W. Clune

When Walter Hagen first went to Europe to compete in the British Open, a championship which he won for the fourth time on Friday, he took a press agent and four trunks filled with clothing. His venture in quest of what in those days was considered the supreme title of the golfing world had been sponsored and backed by young "Al" Wallace, broker, who was known as Detroit's "millionaire kid." With the sudden acquisition of riches, Wallace had become a golf bug; he had selected Hagen in a big money pool at the North and South in Pinehurst one Spring, and, thoroughly sold on the Rochester home-bred, he persuaded him to quit his post as professional at the Rochester Country Club and take up a similar position at the new Oakland Hills Golf Club just outside of Detroit.

In the British Open that year Hagen finished something like 56th.

The only things this ordinary breaker of course records shattered on his first visit to England were a lot of precedents that dated back almost to the beginnings of the ancient and honorable pastime. There was, for instance, the question of the dining tent in which the professionals were supposed to have their lunch.

In England the caste system still prevails in sports. A professional is a professional and an amateur is a gentleman. The professionals, in tournaments in which they engage with gentlemen, lunch in a tent; the gentlemen eat in the clubhouse.

Walter was new to the country and its customs. "Eat in a tent," he remarked, when the proposition of lunch was advanced on the first day of the qualifying round. "Oh, my no. They haven't any strawberries on the table."

So Mr. Hagen hired an airplane, which was reposing nearby, and flew over to a pretty little inn, in a not distant hamlet, where strawberries were listed on the luncheon card. He returned to the course full of strawberries, and shot an even more scandalous round than he had in the morning.

The English had their tongue in their cheek. Although he was arrayed in the most brilliant golfing clothes ever displayed at an important golfing affair in England, Hagen's game was terrible. By the second day of the tournament the English were admitting that Hagen was a great showman, but a flop as a golfer. How, they asked themselves, could this over-decked clothes horse ever have won the American championship? The sporting journals had a merry time about him.

So far as anyone could observe, however, the debonair Walter was not at all chagrined by his sorry showing in England.

"Don't worry, I'll bring that mug for the British open back to the States," he predicted to this writer, shortly after his return home. "The breaks were against me this year."

The next year he went back and won. And he has won three times since.

It is interesting to recall the different kid who was Walter Hagen before he won his first big championship, the American Open, when he was still a professional at the Rochester Country Club. In those days Hagen didn't even own a pair of knickers. Instead of the carefully selected neckscarfs that now tone so perfectly with his general sarterial scheme, he wrapped a bandana handkerchief around his neck. They used to call him "Hagen," and order him to fetch their clubs. The title "Mr." came to him synchronously with his winning of the American championship.

Seen and Heard

When Wallace first asked Hagen to go to Detroit, the boy was actually afraid to leave his native heath.

"Ah, no one knows me out there," he said. "In Rochester I can walk along the street, and most everyone knows me. I'd be like a fish out of water in Detroit."

"You're a sucker if you stay in Rochester," a friend advised him earnestly. "You can win all the titles there are, and still live here, and they'll never forget you were a caddy. Even a golf champion is without honor on his home town links."

One night, after several days of indecision, Hagen called the writer on the telephone. "Come on up to the Seneca," he said. "I got something to tell you."

The writer went. Walter sat in the Pompeian room with his wife. The table was covered with vichy water bottles (Walter learned about the contents of other bottles only after he left Rochester). "What do you think?" he asked nervously.

"Oh, tell him, Walter," said Mrs. Hagen. "I've decided to make the plunge," Hagen announced. "I'm going to Detroit."

Some of the professionals who campaigned with him used to tell a story about Hagen when he made his first trip south. He wasn't at all the cock-sure fellow he is now, especially when off the golf course. His social attributes were exceedingly limited; he had mastered only one dance step—the one-step. He essayed a one-step with a pretty girl on the dance floor of a swell resort hotel, one night. When he was in full career the other pros bribed the orchestra to switch to a fox-trot, and Walter was left cold and utterly stranded.

Hagen became quite a fellow after he reached Detroit. He learned to smoke—and learned other things. He began to dress; he bought a big and flashy looking car. But the Mrs. Hagen of that day had known him when he still wore his red bandana handkerchief.

One evening the writer, then employed by a Detroit newspaper, was invited to the Hagen home for dinner. Walter came in from the club with the little freckled-faced kid who used to caddy for him. Mrs. Hagen brought on the dinner, a fire meal, with ham as the piece de resistance.

"Aw, say," complained the lord and master contemptuously, as he glanced at the platter. "We got that ham again?"

"Say, kid," replied Mrs. Hagen, "there was a time when, if we had ham on the table, you thought it was your birthday."

Second District

IN the hope of being able to reclaim the Second Assembly District this year, the Republican organization has selected Charles R. Haggerty, insurance man, of the 21st Ward, as its candidate to oppose the Democratic incumbent, Assemblyman Joseph DiFede.

Haggerty is a newcomer in politics and is a protege of Supervisor Otis A. Barber, Republican leader of the 21st

Ward, who rates him as "real political timber" and of the kind, in Barber's opinion, that will insure a return of the Second District to the Republican column.

This district withstood many desperate Democratic assaults in the old days before the Democrats secured a foothold in Monroe County and, strangely enough, it was the first to give way to the Republican party's foe in the presidential and gubernatorial election in 1932 when George B. Kelly, now state senator in the 45th District, crashed through to victory, sending Harry B. McKay, then Republican assemblyman to defeat.

Kelly was re-elected in 1933 and was succeeded in 1934 by Joe DiFede, another Democrat, who may or may not have been aided by the fact that Governor Lehman was running for re-election. Republicans predict DiFede will face a harder fight this year, as no state candidates are up for election. They bank on Mr. Haggerty to do the trick.

Haggerty is in his 32d year. He has already served nine years as a Republican ward committeeman in the First District of the 21st Ward. He is a member of the insurance firm of Hayes, Sharp and Haggerty Inc. He attended East High School and has been identified with various civic and social organizations. He is married, has one daughter and resides at 22 Beverly Street.

Recognition for years of faithful service came yesterday to two well-known Rochester agents of the Buffalo Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who were retired and their names placed on the company Roll of Honor.

One is Joseph Dickinson Haines, 79 Kenmore Avenue, who served 47 years in the Company. Charles W. Rowland, Olean, is retired after completion of 48 years of service.

Entered Work in 1880

Mr. Haines, one of the last of the old school of Rochester branch agents, was born at Pomeroy, Pa., March 3, 1865, and when 16 in February, 1880, entered service of the Company as messenger at Philadelphia, which he held until Aug. 1, 1880, when he resigned to take a business course at Bryant & Stratton's Private School at Philadelphia, Pa., May 25, 1883, he again returned to the Pennsylvania, as clerk in the General Agent's Office at Mantua Transfer, Philadelphia. In September, 1903 he was appointed agent at Rochester, which he held until April 30, when he was assigned to special duty.

Throughout his career he displayed unusual interest and activity in community affairs, being a member of the Masonic Order, Rochester Chamber of Commerce, Traffic Council, Genesee Valley Club and the Brick Presbyterian Church.

Montgomery as president and Mr. Halbleib, general manager and vice-president.

Richard T. Halliley Dies Unexpectedly; Singing Instructor

Stricken as He Gives Lesson at Eastman Music School—Took Part in Many Productions of Civic Association

Richard T. Halliley, 44, popular baritone and instructor at the Eastman School of Music died unexpectedly this morning, Nov. 12, 1935, in his studio at the school.

Struck down by heart disease as he was giving a 9 o'clock voice lesson, Mr. Halliley closed a career in music that had brought him before the public in concerts and operatic productions here and taken him on a tour of the United States and of England, his native country.

He died before attendants of the Genesee Hospital ambulance could reach the studio. Coroner Richard A. Leonardo issued a certificate of death from heart disease.

Vladimir Rosing, formerly head of the opera department of the music school, heard Mr. Halliley sing in Winnipeg, Ontario, in 1925 and was responsible for his invitation to join the American Opera Company, then being formed at the Eastman School. Later the singer became a member of the faculty of the school and extended his activities to include the directorship of music at Baptist Temple and Lake Avenue Baptist Church.

Born in England

Mr. Halliley was born in Liege, England, in 1891 and obtained his musical education in London, where he studied with Harry Chivers Wilson at the William Shakespeare School of Music. He was chosen as a student of great promise to tour the United States with Percy Grainger, English composer, in 1922. For two years before coming to Rochester, the singer was director of music in the Young Methodist Church, Winnipeg, and leader of the Winnipeg Choral Union of 350 voices, five times winner of national voice competitions.

Richard T. Halliley

Rochester audiences heard the baritone in the first production of the Civic Music Association, "The Chocolate Soldier," eight years ago. Since then he had appeared frequently in association - sponsored light opera ventures, as soloist with the Civic Orchestra, in concert and in church programs. One year ago he sang a leading role in "Madame Butterfly" and would have been heard in "Tosca" this fall, if ill-health had not prevented.

Praised by Hanson

Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, was grieved when informed of the death. "Both as a singer and a teacher," he said, "Richard Halliley has made a large contribution to the School of Music and to the city of Rochester. His was a talent used for the happiness of thousands of listeners and in support of every worthwhile phase of community music."

A comment from Arthur M. See, executive secretary of the Civic Music Association, pointed out the singer's rare ability to give vivid interpretation to both dramatic and humorous roles and expressed keen appreciation of the loss to the theatergoing public of the city.

Mr. Halliley is survived by his wife, Helen H. Halliley, and two young sons, Jack and Jerry Halliley. Two sisters are living in England. Arrangements for the funeral have not been completed. His home was at 2069 Ridge Road West.

My Favorite Sport
and Why

INSPECTOR FREDERICK W. HAMILTON

This is the tenth of a series on My Favorite Sport and Why. Naturally, Inspector Frederick W. Hamilton loves hunting and fishing best, for hunting and fishing is also his business. But he has thousands of followers. Tomorrow? Wait and see.

UNLIKE a dramatic critic who cannot act in a play, Inspector Frederick W. Hamilton, of the district office of the New York State Conservation Commission, is a dyed-in-the-wool hunter and trapper.

He began activities with guns, fishing rods and traps as a youth and, although he also indulged in football, baseball, basketball and tennis, his yen for outdoor life was never completely satiated except when he was out hunting.

Packing off on a shooting, fishing or trapping trip means much to Inspector Hamilton because he likes the idea of being out with one or two congenial friends. The hard, vigorous life of the out-of-doors, away from cities, has for him a powerful appeal.

Too, inasmuch as his duties take Mr. Hamilton to the fields during the open seasons he happily combines business with pleasure. And you can't blame him for liking that.

Archbishop Hanna Quits Prelate Post

Native of Rochester at 75
Renowned as Churchman
And Labor Mediator

Archbishop Edward J. Hanna, head of the Catholic Diocese of San Francisco since 1915, who was born in Rochester and formerly held the chair of dogmatic theology at St. Bernard's Seminary, resigned his post in San Francisco yesterday at 75.

his reason for leaving the high office through which he became one of the most powerful of the Roman Catholic leaders in America and one of the most beloved men in California. At one time it seemed certain that he would be appointed a cardinal. During the Roosevelt administration he has become outstanding as a labor mediator.

Last year Archbishop Hanna headed the National Longshoremen's Board named by President Roosevelt to act in the coastwise strike of marine workers and he held that post until the main issues of the strike were settled late in the fall.

He served for a time as California commissioner of immigration and is a past president of the National Catholic Welfare Council. The Italian government decorated him for his work in California among residents of Italian ancestry.

Born in Rochester July 21, 1860, he received his early education in public and parochial schools. He was graduated by Rochester Free Academy in 1878, was sent to the American College at Rome and was ordained to the priesthood and appointed a professor of the American College in 1885.

Returning to Rochester in 1887 he taught in St. Andrew's Seminary and with the opening of St. Bernard's Seminary was appointed to the chair which he held until he was consecrated as auxiliary bishop of California. In 1915 he became archbishop.

John Joseph Mitty, coadjutor archbishop of the diocese and former bishop of Salt Lake, will be Archbishop Hanna's Successor, it is generally understood.

In his letter of resignation the archbishop said:

"I asked the Holy See three years ago to send me the bishop of Salt Lake to help me in the government of the Archdiocese. In asking that he be sent with the title of coadjutor archbishop with the right of succession, I was looking forward to the time when I could resign my office into his hands.

County Treasurer-Elect

Jesse B. Hannan, Republican candidate for county treasurer, wore the smile of victory today after his defeat of James I. Morrall, Democratic incumbent.

JESSE B. HANNAN, whom Tom Broderick, Republican county chairman, selected as the party's candidate to oppose James I. Morrall for county treasurer this year, is a Perinton farmer who comes from colonial stock.

Supervisor Hannan can properly be termed a man who has followed in his father's footsteps, for his father was a farmer and he was also a supervisor, and supervisor of the same town which his son now represents in the Monroe County board. Even before that the name of Hannan was familiar to every Republican and Democrat in the vicinity of Fairport, which is Mr. Hannan's home town, for his father's father was the first supervisor Perinton had and his great-grandfather fought in the Revolutionary War.

But all that is past history, as they say, and so is the fact that Supervisor Hannan once before was picked out of his quiet surroundings to make a run for an office which is rated politically higher than the office of supervisor. That was in 1931 when Harry J. Bareham, then Republican county leader, designated him for member of Assembly in the First District. But Supervisor Hannan elected to run again for supervisor and declined the designation, which gave District Attorney Daniel J. O'Mara his first political opportunity.

Supervisor Hannan was born in Perinton, June 2, 1888. He was educated in the Fairport public and high schools and in Rochester Business Institute. He is a member of Fairport Lodge, F. & A. M.; Hamilton chapter, R. A. M.; past president of Fairport Rotary, president of Monroe County Farm and Home Bureau Association, member of Fairport Grange, Fairport Lodge of Moose, Rochester Chamber of Commerce and First Congregational Church of Fairport.

To Hold E. N. Handy Service Monday

Funeral services for Elwood N. Handy, a long-service employe of the Eastman Kodak Company, will be held from the home at 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. Handy died of pneumonia yesterday afternoon, Feb. 14, 1935, only six weeks after his retirement as a foreman in the shipping department at the Kodak Office.

Born in Rochester, Feb. 23, 1867, Mr. Handy graduated from grammar school and entered high school. He left school to work for a grocer for a time, and then went into the grocery business for himself on Monroe Avenue. Subsequently he worked for the L. P. Ross Shoe Company, and then entered the shipping department of the Kodak Office.

At the time of his retirement Mr. Handy had been with the Kodak Company nearly 40 years.

He is survived by his widow, Anna Keele Handy; two sons, Clayton Elwood and John E. Handy of Rochester, and a daughter, Alma Margaret, now Mrs. Ewart Bolton of Kirkland Lake, Ontario, Canada.

Burial will be in Irondequoit Cemetery.

Hanson Chosen Good Will Ambassador to Germany

Will Travel, Conduct Orchestras Under an Oberlaender Award

New York, June 21—(AP)—The Oberlaender Trust awards to outstanding workers for the promotion of good will between the United States and all German-speaking countries for this year were announced today.

Recipients are Dr. Alice Hamilton, Harvard Medical School, of Boston; Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester; Mr. and Mrs. Julian Harris, writers, of Atlanta; Dr. Robert A. Millikan, director of the California Institute of Technology, of Pasadena; John Nolen, Cambridge, Mass., city planning and landscape architect, and Dr. Walter Williams, president of the University of Missouri.

To Promote Public Welfare

The Oberlaender Trust was founded by Gustav Oberlaender of Reading, Pa., as a part of the Carl Schurz Memorial Foundation, Inc., for "the support of American citizens who are actively engaged in work that concerns the public welfare, such as editors and writers, public health workers, professors and students who are engaged in research work that is of special interest to the American people."

The awards offer opportunity for travel and study in Germany. Each recipient is permitted to arrange itineraries and contacts. The amounts of grants vary according to the work of the individual.

Dr. Hamilton, a specialist in industrial sickness insurance, will study communicable occupational diseases. Mr. Nolen is already en route to Germany.

Mr. Harris is news director of the Atlanta, Ga., Constitution, and Mrs. Harris is a widely known writer. They plan to study preparations and public opinion in Germany and Austria.

DR. HOWARD HANSON

Dr. Millikan will return the visit of Prof. Albert Einstein.

Believes Acceptance a Duty

Dr. Hanson, in comment on his selection for this mission as representative of American musical endeavor, said he felt that acceptance was for him almost a duty and that in consultation with Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the University of Rochester, and with George Eastman, he found them of the opinion that he should accept the mission if possible, in consideration of his direction of the Eastman School of Music and other engagements of importance. These responsibilities will make Dr. Hanson's European mission of comparatively short duration, but of sufficient length of time to enable him to do what seems most expedient to be done.

The fact that the Carl Schurz Foundation, as represented by its secretary, Wilbur K. Thomas, after due consideration selected the work being done in behalf of American creative music as the most significant among national musical projects of the day, and likewise deemed the American Composers' Concerts project of the Eastman School in initiative and accomplishment the most efficient and outstanding example of this, influenced Dr. Hanson in his acceptance. Then, too, he states that he

Dr. Hanson will conduct orchestral concerts with programs of American music with leading orchestras in several cities in Germany, of which Berlin will be one, and in Vienna. He will seek contacts with leading composers and educators of Germany and Austria, with a view to giving them as clear an idea as possible of music conditions in this country, and of getting from them a survey of conditions in their own countries, of musical trends and problems and of the aims of composers. He will seek to bring back this information and offer it in such form as to be useful in this country. He will gather program material of modern German and Austrian works with a view to performances in this country.

Hanson Honored by Election To Arts, Letters Academy

Recognition of outstanding achievement came to Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, yesterday when he was notified of his election to membership in the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Doctor Hanson is the first Rochesterian so honored. Election came in recognition of Doctor Hanson's work as composer, conductor and educator. As composer, he may claim the opera "Merry Mount," presented last year by the Metropolitan Opera Company, as well as several symphonic numbers which have been played by leading American and foreign orchestras.

His work as a educator and director has enabled him to encourage a hearing for young American composers through the institution of the American Composers Concerts here. These programs, begun several years ago in Kilbourn Hall, now attract capacity audiences to the Eastman Theater. Several of the present leaders of American musical composition have had their first hearing through Doctor Hanson's programs. His interest in American music caused him to be invited to conduct the Berlin orchestra a year ago.

Doctor Hanson has been director of the Eastman School of Music since 1924.

American Academy of Arts and Letters was founded in 1898 by action of the American Social Science Association. The original group consisted of William Dean Howells, Augustus Saint Gaudens, Edmund Clarence Stedman, John La Farge, Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), John Hay and Edward A. MacDowell. Membership in the group gradually has been increased to 150.

Other contemporary musicians elected to the institute are Charles Martin Loeffler, Dr. Walter Damrosch and Deems Taylor.

TRUST PRIZE IS PRESENTED TO DR. HANSON

Head of Eastman School of Music Awarded for Outstanding Work in Promotion of Good Will.

Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, has been chosen for one of the Oberlaender Trust awards in recognition of outstanding work for promotion of good-will between this country and German-speaking nations.

The award offers opportunity for travel and study in Germany, with the amounts varying according to the work of the individual.

Dr. Hanson felt that acceptance of the award was for him a duty. He will conduct orchestral programs of American music with leading orchestras in several cities in Germany and Austria this summer. He also will seek contacts with German educators and composers with an idea of giving them as clear an idea as possible of musical conditions in this country.

Other recipients of the prizes were Dr. Alice Hamilton of the Harvard Medical School; Mr. and Mrs. Julian Harris, writers of Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. Robert A. Millikan, director of the California Institute of Technology; John Nolen, Cambridge, Mass., city planning and landscape architect and Dr. Walter Williams, president of the University of Missouri.

The Oberlaender Trust was founded by Gustav Oberlaender of Reading, Pa., as part of the Carl Schurz Memorial Foundation for the "support of American citizens who are actively engaged in work that concerns public welfare."

Joseph J. Hanss, veteran barber, pursues his trade as he tells of old times in Rochester.

Joseph J. Hanss Finds Men Shave Selves More Nowadays and Get More Haircuts Than in the Good Old Days of Beards and Collar-Length Tresses

Shaves were a dime, haircuts 20 cents, and a good customer had himself shaved twice a week in the days when Joseph J. Hanss, veteran Rochester barber, started in to learn the trade as an apprentice to his father.

That was in 1877, when Mr. Hanss was 13. Today he's still on the job, though his price scale has increased somewhat, putting in a full day's work every day of the year, with time off only on Sundays. Until 15 years ago or so he didn't even have that, for in the good old days of the old fashioned barber shop when good customers had their private mugs lettered with their names Sunday was a busy working day for the barber.

Today Mr. Hanss has his shop in the Mercantile Building, within a stone's throw of the shop his father maintained on North Street near Main Street East. His father, Valentine Hanss, came from Germany as a young man and was one of Rochester's best known barbers until his death in 1884.

Today Joseph Hanss serves members of the fifth generation of one family which patronized his father, and members of the fourth generation of another. He estimates that since he began he has removed several tons of hair and whiskers.

Few men shaved themselves in those days, Mr. Hanss recalls. One of his customers remarked, back in the 1880's: "Joseph, I must be one of your best customers. I get myself shaved three times a week and have my hair cut twice a year."

Nowadays 90 per cent of his customers shave themselves daily, Mr. Hanss says. They also, however, have their hair cut somewhat more frequently, and hair restorers, champoos and other extras are called for more often. Men still like the privacy and sociability of the old time shop, however. When women began frequenting barber shops Mr. Hanss found that his old customers didn't exactly welcome them, and as a consequence, though his shop gleams with tile, shining mirrors and modern equipment, it's still conducted on the stag plan.

Since starting in the trade Mr. Hanss hasn't taken one vacation so far. There'll be plenty of time for that in the future, he says; he enjoys his work and the comforts of his home and doesn't feel the need of holidays. He has attended St. Joseph's Church since his childhood, being head usher there now and the affairs of the church are one of his principal interests. Mrs. Hanss and he have six children and 12 grandchildren.

Brig. Gen. Abram Harbach, Former Rochesterian, Dies

Death Comes at Age of 93 in California
—Was Civil, Spanish War Veteran

MAR 11/24/33

Brig. Gen. Abram A. Harbach, former resident of Rochester, who served during the Civil War, put in 30 years among the Northwest Indians, served in Cuba during the Spanish-American War and was in action in the Filipino insurrection in the Philippines, died yesterday in Santa Barbara, Calif., after an illness of a year.

General Harbach was 93 years old. He had been retired since May 28, 1902, when, to use his own words, he decided "he had had enough of soldiering," and requested retirement.

Then, after 40 years of service he came back to Rochester to make his home for several years at the Otis Homestead in Lyell Avenue, built by his brother-in-law, the late Maj. Gen. Elwell S. Otis. About eight years ago he left Rochester to make his home in California.

Three Relatives Here

A former member of the Genesee Valley Club and the Rochester Country Club, General Harbach is survived by three relatives in Rochester. C. Arthur Poole, city engineer and former city manager, was his nephew and Mrs. Grace Otis and Mrs. W. F. Johnson were nieces.

General Harbach was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 14, 1841. When the Civil War began he enlisted and served for three years as a sergeant in Company E, First Iowa Infantry. Upon his return home he found his father and brother had enlisted and so he returned to the service, this time joining Company H, 11th United States Infantry. His brother was killed in action and his father died of war wounds. General Harbach continued his military career and within six months had received a second lieutenant's commission. A year found him promoted to first lieutenant, and in January, 1867, he became captain in the 20th United States Infantry. He was breveted for gallant and meritorious services at the Battle of Gettysburg.

Married General's Sister

Ordered to duty among the Indians of the Northwest country, Captain Harbach entered upon a service which was destined to cover 30 years, and it was during this time that he met General Otis and later the general's sister, whom he married.

In 1894 he was promoted to major of the 18th United States Infantry and three years later became a lieutenant colonel of the 3d Infantry. He served in the Santiago campaign in Cuba during 1898 and in 1900 went with his units to the Philippine Islands for active duty. He was made colonel in the First Infantry in 1899 and on Mar. 16, 1902, was promoted to brigadier general.

For many years General Harbach was a figure in the city life of Rochester, his military bearing and upright carriage everywhere attracting attention. He often walked the two miles from his house to the city and back, leaving his automobiles in the garage, and often, too, he participated in a game of golf, his favorite outdoor sport.

Mr. Harned was a member of Yonnonadio Lodge of Masons, Hamilton Chapter and Monroe Commandery.

Funeral services will be conducted Tuesday at 2 p. m. in Central Church parlors. The Rev. Raymon M. Kistler, D. D., pastor, will officiate.

He had been a Methodist minister for 60 years and last May was given custody of the Genesee Conference cane, symbolic of the preacher who has served longest in the conference.

Death came suddenly today at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Robert C. Gray, Ridge Road, Webster. Until a week ago, the Rev. Mr. Harris had taught a Sunday School class at Webster and had continued to perform duties of a clergyman when called upon, although he retired from his last pastorate in 1918.

He had been pastor of churches in Alma, Evans, Hamburg, Gowanda and Buffalo in the Buffalo District. Then he came to the Rochester district and served at Honeoye Falls, LeRoy, North Avenue Church in Rochester, Livonia, Oakfield and Webster, his last charge.

The Rev. Mr. Harris is survived by a son, George W. Harris of Harrison, N. Y.; three daughters, Mrs. Gray, Mrs. M. J. Whiteside of Tacoma, Wash., and Mrs. W. G. Woodcock of West Webster; also five grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Private funeral services will be conducted Thursday morning, with burial in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Buffalo.

SPORTS RANKS LOSE NOTABLE AMATEUR SHOT

Harry Harrison, Once World Champion with Rifle, Passes Away

Harry Harrison, one of the foremost amateur sportsmen of the county and well-known sporting goods dealer, died suddenly last night at his home at 397 Post Avenue. He was 54 years old.

Mr. Harrison was born in Rochester and attended the public schools here. His great love for the open caused him to enter the sporting goods business; and for a period of more than 30 years, the Harry Harrison sporting goods store in State Street was known to every hunter and fisherman in this section.

It was with rod and gun that Mr. Harrison caused his name to be flashed into many sections of this country and Canada. He formerly held the world's record for rifle rapid fire. Only a few years ago he won the Grand American preliminary handicap for shot-gun marksman at Vandalia, Ohio, and followed this success by capturing the Canadian title, two of the most highly prized titles available to breakers of clay targets.

About 15 years ago, Mr. Harrison was one of the men who brought the state championship to Rochester, and traps were set up at Ontario Beach Park, the guns shooting out over the lake. He was instrumental in the formation of the Riverside Gun Club and later the Flower City Gun Club, and was also an active shooter in the Finger Lakes League. He was one of Rochester's most dependable guns during the season just past. His last effort over the traps was at the annual clambake of the Izaak Walton League at Manitou Beach, when he broke 50 straight.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison were familiar figures at nearly every big shoot in the country, Mrs. Harrison being one of the best known woman shooters in the country.

He became ill in his store last Friday and went home. He went to bed Sunday and never got up.

He was a member of Yonondio Lodge 163, F. and A. M., A. A. S. R., Damascus Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and Rochester Lodge of Elks.

Besides his wife, Mrs. Inez H. Harrison, he leaves a sister, Mrs. John N. Hillyard of this city who is on her way to Rochester from her cottage in New Brunswick, Canada.

PRIVATE RITES ARRANGED FOR CHARLES HART

T. O. Dec 10 '29.
Socially Prominent Business Man Dies Unexpectedly of Golf Injuries
—Was World War Vet.
Rochester Public Library
54 Court St.

Charles H. Hart, well-known socially and in the business world, died unexpectedly yesterday at his home, 1564 St. Paul Street, aged 35 years.

Mr. Hart served overseas for two years with the Eighth Company, Fifth Regiment, United States Marines, and after his honorable discharge became active in business. He was a member of the firm of the Rochester branch of the C. A. Dunham Company of Chicago and of the Luster Chemical Company of Rochester.

As president and incorporator with his brother Silsby P. Hart of Hartlawn, Inc., Mr. Hart was in the midst of a venture to open within the coming week one of Rochester's most pretentious establishments to serve motorists with gasoline, accessories and stand delicacies at East Avenue and Fairport Road.

Mr. Hart's great-grandfather, Henry S. Potter, was one of the founders and first president of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Mr. Hart was a descendant of one of Rochester's pioneer settlers. He was a member of the Locust Hill Country Club and the Flower City Gun Club.

Early in the week Mr. Hart suffered a severe spinal injury while playing golf, in which he dislocated several vertebrae. After treatment, it was decided to send him to Strong Memorial Hospital yesterday, but he died before he could be taken there.

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth P. Hart; his mother, Mrs. Henry Conolly of East Avenue; a sister, Mrs. Burbank C. Young, and two brothers, Silsby P., manager of the Automobile Club of Rochester Tour Bureau, and James C. Hart.

Funeral services will be private.

VAST VOICE WINS VOTES FOR HART

Meistensaenger Makes Baritone Bid for Council

Shoe Dealer Will Make Melodious Contest for Office

By J. CODY WALLER

There are singers and singers in this municipal election campaign—professors and professors, maestros and maestros.

But there is only one "meister-saenger" who can lead the choir, direct the quartet, oblige at weddings and funerals, and not strain a chord of his baritone throat. For good political measure he knows most of the old and the new families of his district.

Mr. Voter, meet John Hart, Democratic nominee for Northeast district councilman.

Who could be happier, more lovable than John Hart?

Music for the music master; such well rounded-out tones of choral singers of the Maennerchor—John Hart has them all, and if you loiter too long, well, you'll finish a member of the Rochester Male Chorus.

ENTHUSIASM FOR MUSIC

There is a festival of music in the "meistersaenger," and there is a harvest of it and politics in John Hart. Such enthusiasm for choral music—ach, what's the use?—and such confidence for politics. Here's Hart speaking:

"The Republicans wish we would blast everything so they could knock us down with answers. But this is different. We'll take care of them in city, and county, and the election will take care of the situation."

"There is no doubt about the outcome. There is no foolishness."

JOHN HART

Harmony in City Government As Well as Music His Goal

In this campaign, The Democrats speak when they hope to knock down worn out ten pins, and that's what they'll knock down in this election."

John Hart has had experience in knocking down Republican ten pins. Some years back when Herbert B. Cash was county superintendent of poor, Hart ran against him. George W. Aldridge was at the height of his power, and the Republicans went to the polls merely to establish plurality records.

But Cash had a tight squeeze. He beat Hart by 1,200 votes. That was the nearest to victory for the county Democrats in more than a quarter of a century until Jim Morrill came along last year and was elected county treasurer.

HAS HIS POPULARITY

Hart, it must be borne in mind, ran well strictly because of his popularity. He still has that.

Hart is a native son who went to St. Joseph Church school to be grounded in German; to St. Bridget Church school to get acquainted with the Irish and was graduated from the Rochester Free Academy to establish his Americanism.

His greatest interest, aside from his business, is music. He was an active member of the old Rochester Maennerchor, a famous singing society, and was a member of St. Bridget's Church Choir in the days when it had the reputation of having the best choir in the city.

When the Maennerchor passed out of existence he organized the Rochester Male Chorus and housed it in his own building at Broad and Pine streets, a piece of property he refused to sell to the city several years ago, preferring to retain it as a home for his Male Chorus. He is a member of St. Joseph's Church and of several societies.

THE odd member in the City Council.

That's John Hart, Democratic candidate for re-election in the Northeast District, where he was elected two years ago to serve out the last half of the unexpired four years' term of the late William F. Durnan.

Councilman Hart is the odd member because he's a bachelor—the only one in the Council. If he should win again and Sam D. Dicker be elected there'll be two.

Councilman Hart is a Fifth Warder, the first councilman that old ward has had. He resides at 519 Clinton Avenue North and, in a business way, he has followed in his father's footsteps. He is a retail shoe dealer and has the same store at 465 Main Street East his father had before him and in which he was a clerk.

LEO HART DIES AT 53, HEAD OF PRINTING FIRM

Gained Wide Renown
For Publication of Fine Books
Dec. Sat. Mch. 9 1935

Leo Hart, 53, head of the Printing House of Leo Hart, founded by him 30 years ago, died unexpectedly yesterday (Mar. 8, 1935) in his home, 309 Seneca Parkway, of a heart attack.

Mr. Hart won wide recognition for his printing of fine books, many of which have been widely exhibited.

Rochester was always his home. He was born here and attended public schools and the old Rochester Free Academy. He founded the firm in 1905, opening a small printing shop and steadily progressed. The firm has two plants, one at St. Paul and Andrews Streets and the other at 1778 Clinton Avenue North.

In 1932 the American Institute of Graphic Arts selected a volume, Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," with illustrations by Rockwell Kent, published by the Leo Hart firm, as one of the 50 best books produced in the United States in 1931. Mr. Hart had at that time only recently begun publication of finer books and the volume selected was exhibited in New York and England. The 50 books later formed part of a traveling exhibit and were displayed in the larger cities of the country. The original Kent drawings were exhibited at the Memorial Art Gallery here.

Firm in Commercial Field

Then in October, 1933, the firm was expanded from an organization devoted exclusively to publication of limited editions to the printing of regular commercial editions. Title of the first edition under this heading was "The Travels of Marco Polo," in the Marsden translation. It was published in November of that year, with an introduction by Manual Komroff and decorations by William Addison Dwiggins. It was profusely illustrated and contained 500 pages.

Mr. Hart said that he had expanded his business by the publication of recognition by the printing trade, book collectors and students of such editions as "Venus and Adonis." "A Dissertation Upon Roast Pig," with hand colored drawings by Wilfrd Jones, "Bibliographica Typotheca" by Horace Hart and "The Christian-Jewish Tragedy" by Conrad Fery Moehli-man. Printing — limited editions was continued.

"Bibliographica" Honored

"Bibliographica Typotheca" was singled out for high honors by the Limited Editions Club of New York City in 1933, as one of the most important books of its kind.

Mr. Hart was a member of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, the Rochester Club, Ad Club, American Institute of Graphic Arts, the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. He was a member of Temple Berith Kodesh.

Besides his wife, Ethel, he is survived by two sons, Horace and Robert; a brother, Alfred Hart, and two sisters, Mrs. Sam Kaplan and Mrs. A. Levinson, all of Rochester.

Leo Hart

Born and educated in Rochester, Leo Hart early devoted himself to the printing business.

He set up a small shop and from the first sought to uphold the highest standards in his product.

This soon won for his firm a wide reputation for fine printing. Some of the books that came from his presses received special commendation from such bodies as the American Institute of Graphic Arts and were exhibited in select collections of the finest examples of American printing.

In recent years the firm had added to printing of limited editions, regular commercial work.

Leo Hart built up his business by thorough mastery of the printing art, as expressed in artistic craftsmanship. He assuredly upheld consistently in his line of work Rochester's reputation for quality production.

His death at 53 is a loss to Rochester and to all lovers of fine printing and will be keenly felt by all who knew this able and useful man.

Silsby Potter Hart

Funeral services for Silsby Potter Hart, 38, descendant of a prominent pioneer family and manager of the tour bureau of the Automobile Club of Rochester will be held Wednesday at 3 p. m. at 137 Chestnut Street.

Mr. Hart died yesterday, Jan. 12, 1936, in Highland Hospital, after a six-day illness of pneumonia.

Ranked as one of the city's leading bridge expert and a several time holder of city pair and team of four titles, he had a wide circle of friends, many of them gained through contacts at the Automobile Club where he had served since 1925 in charge of servicing routes.

He was a grandson of Henry S. Potter, one of the founders of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

A physical incapacity prevented active service when the United States entered the World War and he served overseas for nearly a year with the Knights of Columbus as transportation officer at their Paris headquarters.

A brother, Charles Hart, who died several years ago as the result of a golfing accident, was wounded overseas while with the Marines.

He was a member of the Rochester Press Club, having served several years as assistant financial editor of the old Post Express and the Hearst newspaper here.

His body will rest at the family home, 1077 Harvard Street, until the funeral. Interment will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Active bearers will be James L. Angle, William F. Holmes Jr., Paul L. Hill, John Dwyer, Carl Emerson, and Robert J. Nicholson.

Henry Deane, Murray De Leeuw, William Wash, Frank Luelan, Arthur Stafford, George C. Donahue, James M. Mangan, Park W. Gillespie, Lyle Bullock, Sperry Matson, Scott Boyer, Charles Gertner, Harry Conolly, Harold Royer Howard Eichorn and Harry T. Giddings.

Sentiments of his scores of friends in the Rochester Contract Bridge Club, of which he was a member of the board of governors, was expressed today by Orris Crosley, president of the club:

"His fine sense of sportsmanship and invariable courtesy is a loss which the bridge club cannot replace. He was a thoughtful, considerate partner and a true gentleman, at the bridge table or away from it. His fellow members have sustained a loss words cannot express."

Friends Express Sorrow

The Rev. David Lincoln Ferris, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Rochester, and a close friend, expressed the loss felt by the membership of the automobile club:

"As one of his closest friends I always had the greatest admiration for his truly remarkable memory for road conditions and routings. I never left the city without consulting him. He was always the same, a perfect gentleman and a splendid character. His loss is shared with sorrow by his friends within and out of the club."

George C. Donahue, secretary of the Auto Club, in commenting on his associate's passing, said:

"We worked together for 10 years and in all that time I never heard Silsby Hart indulge in an argument and never heard him criticized by any individual. His passing will be felt by all of us here at the club and by his many friends."

Supreme Court Justice William F. Love, president of the Auto Club, said:

"Silsby Hart was a fine citizen and a splendid chap in every way. His even temper and his ability won all with whom he came in contact. He will be greatly missed by all of us."

Funeral Service Set For C. L. Hartmann

Carl L. Hartmann, 50, president of C. L. Hartmann Corporation, who died yesterday (Nov. 30, 1935), will be buried from St. Augustine's Church at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. A short prayer service at the home, 73 Marlborough Road, will be conducted at 8:30 o'clock.

Mr. Hartmann, a native of Germany, came to this country in 1912, to aid in the building of a Brooklyn factory for Eiserman Magneto Company of Stuttgart. He went from there to Buffalo and came to Rochester in 1914. Here he incorporated the Starter & Ignition Service, which later was changed to C. L. Hartmann Corporation and which broadened its scope to take in radios, washing machines, oil burners and other articles.

A graduate of the University of Stuttgart, Germany, where he specialized in electrical engineering, Mr. Hartmann won a wide reputation as an inventor in the automotive electrical field soon after he came to this country.

He is survived by his wife, Amelia Hartmann; a son, C. L. Hartmann Jr.; two daughters, Amelia and Helena, and a sister in Germany.

WILLIAM T. HASSETT, assistant manager of Hotel Rochester, was born in New York City.

July 15, 1878, and came to Rochester in 1903. He spent the greater part of his life in hotel work. Before coming to Rochester he was engaged successively by the old Windsor Hotel, the Hoffman House and the Knickerbocker Hotel.

Mr. Hassett is a member of the Rochester Hotelmen's Association, Rochester Hotel Clerks' Association, the Chamber of Commerce, Knights of Columbus and the Rochester Automobile Club. He lives at 43 Quentin Street.

J. H. HASTE, KODAK PARK HEAD, DIES

Had Been with East-

WITNESSED GREAT
GROWTH OF PLANT

Rochester Public Library
Made General Manager at Park in 1906;
Beloved Figure

James H. Haste, for more than 20 years general manager of the Kodak Park plant of the Eastman Kodak Company, of which he was a director, died last evening shortly before 7 o'clock at Strong Memorial Hospital after an illness of little more than a week.

Mr. Haste was associated with the Eastman Kodak Company for some thirty-two years, was a director of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank, and an active participant in civic projects for the past quarter of a century. He was born in Yorkshire, England, March 28, 1867 and came to New England with his parents at the age of 4.

Graduated from Phillips Academy at Andover in 1893 and in 1896 received his degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, completing his college work in only three years. The year following his graduation he came to the Eastman Kodak Company. He organized the chemical plant department, after a year of experimentation in which he worked out a process of manufacturing nitro-cellulose which was adaptable to large scale production and of the utmost importance in the production of motion picture film.

Kodak Director Dies

JAMES H. HASTE

For several years he served as assistant to Frank W. Lovejoy, at that time general manager of the Kodak Park plant, and in 1906 he succeeded to the position of general manager. Within the last five or six years he was elected to the board of directors of the company. The Kodak plant, which is one of the most modern factories in the world, has grown enormously during the time Mr. Haste has been associated with it and he had come to be a beloved figure and gained the loyal support of all with whom he was associated.

He has no immediate relatives in this country. The death of his wife, Hannah Hichcliff, occurred last July, and a few days preceding his illness he had gone to Boston to inspect a new mausoleum just completed in the Forest Hill Cemetery. To this mausoleum he had arranged to remove the body of Mrs. Haste from its present resting place in the vault at Mount Hope Cemetery.

Ill Number of Years

Mr. Haste had been in ill health for a number of years and two years ago spent several months in Honolulu in an effort to improve his condition. No arrangements had been made for the funeral last night, although those associated with him stated that funeral services undoubtedly would be conducted at his home, 50 Hawthorne Street, and that burial would be made in Boston. A niece and sister of Mrs. Haste, notified yesterday of his critical condition, left Andover in the afternoon and will arrive in Rochester this morning.

Mr. Haste was a member of the Genesee Valley Club, Oak Hill Country Club, Rochester Amateur Athletic Association, Rochester Rose Society, University Club of Rochester, Technology Club of Rochester, American Chemical Society, Archeological Institute of America and New York State Archeological Association. Mr. Haste was a subscriber to the Rochester Community Players and the Memorial Art Gallery.

Two Pay Tribute

A spokesman for the Eastman Kodak Company paid earnest tribute to the part Mr. Haste has played in building up the company, saying that the efficient growth of the Kodak Plant into its present position among great industrial plants of the world was due largely to his remarkable ability and his devotion to the interests of the company.

Thomas C. Lannin, president of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank, said of Mr. Haste:

"The community suffers a great loss in the death of Mr. Haste and I have lost a genuine friend. His sound judgment and interest in banking problems were the source of much inspiration to those who knew him. A man of kindly spirit and keen interest in his fellow associates, he was endeared to those who knew him, and his death leaves me aggrieved."

HAYDEN FAMILY SURVIVORS DIE WITHIN WEEK

Retired Merchant
Follows Sister
To Grave

J. Alexander Hayden of the pioneer Rochester furniture family, died yesterday, Nov. 27, 1935, in New York, a day after the funeral of the only other immediate member of the family.

His sister, Mrs. Anna Eloine Hayden, Reid, 80, died Monday in New York.

Mr. Hayden had not lived in Rochester for almost 40 years. His summer home was in Huntington, L. I., and his winter home in Clearwater, Florida.

He was a son of James E. Hayden, who started one of the city's first furniture stores in 1846 in Front Street. Following the death of Mr. Hayden Sr., the company changed names several times, finally developing into the present Hayden Company.

Golf And Bridge Offer Best Escape From Worry, Avers Insurance Agent

The two most perfect means of escape from business cares are golf and bridge, according to A. Gould Hatch, insurance agent of 4 Nottingham Circle.

Mr. Hatch has pursued the tiny white ball across the links in Summer and looked into the pasteboard faces of kings and queens on long winter evenings. He has tried other forms of sport and amusement, but says he finds these two the mainstays of relaxation. No one can think of any worry while in a good contest at either pastime, he says.

Mr. Hatch has played golf since going into business for himself six years ago. At that time daylight saving was popular and he found little difficulty getting away from his office early enough in the afternoon for a round or two. He says he became so interested in the game he found it necessary to set aside certain periods for play to prevent spending too much time away from his work.

In later years with the abolition of daylight saving time a problem has presented itself, and he has been forced in a measure to give up his favorite outdoor sport.

He already has plans for next Summer, however, whereby he will be able to get to his country club three times a week.

Joseph W. Hayes Dies in New York

Joseph W. Hayes, director of research for the Crowell Publishing Company and former Rochesterian, died in New York City of heart disease Sunday night. He was 54 years old.

Born in Rochester, Mr. Hayes attended the University of Rochester in 1898. He was a member of Alpha Delta Fraternity. He received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Chicago in 1910, for studies in applied psychology. Mr. Hayes was on the faculty at Chicago as professor of psychology until 1917, when he left to accept a major's commission in the United States Army. During the war he served as chief psychological examiner at Camps Upton, Dix and Humphries.

After the war he became, in 1919, a partner in the Walter Dill Scott Company, industrial engineers, and directed studies in management for several large corporations. In 1921 he joined the advertising department of the Crowell Publishing Company.

Alexander Hayden was president of the concern from 1880 until 1920, when the family sold its interest. For some years he had been identified with the wholesale and distributing end in New York and continued his work there until his retirement in 1925.

Surviving is his widow, Elizabeth. The body is being brought to Rochester and funeral services will be tomorrow in Mt. Hope Chapel. Burial will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Answering Questions His Major Task for 30 Years

JOHN A. HAYES

This is the thirty-third of a series of articles devoted to the loyal men and women who have given long years of service to a single business. They have seen tiny shops expand to giant companies and many of them have enjoyed the friendship of the founders.

If it's information you want, see John A. Hayes, oldest employe of Hotel Powers. He has been dispensing it thirty years, as head porter and "mobile information bureau."

Nothing is barred with John—
"any subject under the sun." Take it to John, and if he can't answer it, put it down in your diary as one of life's mysteries.

John, who was born in County Cork, came to this country some time ago. He has been in the hotel business since the island was established, and Castle Garden, at the Battery, New York, was used to segregate the boys and girls from "over there." Immigration inspectors were kind in those days, John recalled, and he had to stay at Castle Garden only one day.

Powers Hotel came into existence on July 7, 1880, but it was almost twenty years afterward when John joined it as head porter. Up to that time, he had functioned in the same capacity at Hotel Livingston, then run by George W. Sweeney, who is now manager of Hotel Commodore, New York. John came to Rochester forty-three years ago.

John is genial. He is willing to make reservations on two trains for the guests at Powers, in case they are not sure which one they wish to take, and then take it on his own shoulders to get the railroad authorities to cancel the other.

John succeeds in this where others might fail, because he "olls" the "ways" with a keen Irish humor that infects even the dullest senses. His remarks are droll, and he would have made good on the stage, no doubt. There may be still a chance for him in the "talkies" but John won't hear of anything like that.

Although he could have retired long ago in comfort, John likes his work. He is on the job from noon every day until late at night, not because he has to, but because he "loves" to answer questions.

He can regale you with wonderful tales about foolish questions. But John won't laugh when one is asked. He looks serious as a judge, and answers it, no matter how obvious. John is not the wisecracker who would say: "No, no the train won't stop in Rochester—it will make a detour."

ROCHESTERIANS ON STAGE HERE

By MARY GILMORE

Rochester will be applauding overtime this week, NRA or no NRA.

It's all because a Rochester man and a Rochester girl are back home as members of "The Student Prince" cast on the RKO Palace stage.

Charles Hedley plays the royal role of "the Prince." And Madeleine Woodhead is "the Countess."

In Jay Golden's office this morning, they shared a merry "isn't it terrible?" for the local snow storm and (even accustomed as they are to stage appearances) a special thrill for playing to a crowd at home.

Hedley, member of the American Opera Company when it started here, has already been renewing old friendships in town.

West High school and University of Rochester graduate, East High School teacher and American Opera Company member, he has plenty of friends made before as well as after he tossed away school books for music. He smiled:

"I did most of my visiting around yesterday. After the show starts—there's no time at all!"

Charming in dark green ensemble was Miss Woodhead, daughter of the late Detective Albert Woodhead. Using "Sue Franklin" as her stage name, she is happily "back with the show." Two years ago, she was a member of "The Student Prince" road show company.

Between shows now, Hedley is looking over his opera library and brushing up on foreign languages. When Spring comes, he expects to return here for special studies at the Eastman School of Music in preparation for an opera tour of large cities next Summer.

WILLIAM HEINRICH TAKEN BY DEATH

William Heinrich, 74, president of Heinrich Motors, died today at his home, 234 Lake Avenue.

Mrs. Heinrich was born in Montreal, Feb. 28, 1860, and came to Rochester about 70 years ago. He was founder of the Credit Rating Corporation, president of the Upper Lake Avenue Business Men's Association, president of the Grand View Beach Association, a life member of the Elks, member of Genesee Falls Lodge, F. and A. M., Damascus Temple, Monroe Commandery, Rochester Auto Dealers' Association, a member of the Federation of Musicians, and was at one time manager of the Park Band.

He is survived by his widow, Katherine; two sons, Lawrence William and Joanthan Harvey; a daughter, Elizabeth Mary; four grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Kogler of Rochester, Mrs. Harvey Tanner of Spartanburg, S. C.; and a brother, Frederick of Spartanburg.

Masonic funeral services will be conducted Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the home. The Rev. William C. Compton, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, will officiate. Burial will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

He's Proud He Made First Stromberg Switchboard

Journal Feb 28 - 1930

ANDREW HENRICKSON

This is the fifth of a series of articles devoted to the loyal men and women who have given long years of service to a single industry. They have seen tiny shops expand into giant plants, and many of them have enjoyed the friendship of the founders of these industries.

Central Library of Rochester and Monroe County
Historic Scrapbooks Collection

Andrew Henrikson, who is now in point of service of the Stromberg-Carlson Manufacturing Company, whose family tree goes back to Viking ancestors that roamed the seven seas when Odin was "god" and Thor his "thunderer," will celebrate his seventy-third birthday tomorrow.

The occasion will, in addition, mark his completion of thirty-eight years of continuous service in the business of making telephone switchboards.

Henrickson holds many records, but one he treasures most is his participation in the construction and installation of the first telephone switchboard built by Stromberg-Carlson. That happened no less than thirty-five years ago. Henrickson was sent with it to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

RECALLS OLD PARTNERS

Henrickson, who retains the quaint accent of the Swede in his speech, regaled his listeners with tales about the partners, Alfred Stromberg and Andrew Carlson.

"Make it better than possible," was Stromberg's motto, Henrickson said, and he used to tell his employees that no matter how well a thing had been done, "it was never too good for the public."

Henrickson, who is bronzed of features and rugged in physique in spite of his seventy-odd years, told how he came to America from a little Swedish town called Sem-rithshavn.

"That happened in February, 1878," he said reminiscently. "It took the vessel on which I was one of 200 passengers, twenty-one days to cross the Atlantic.

"On the banks of New Found-land, we ran into a storm which caused the ship to roll so badly, that all, including the captain and the 'sea dogs in the fo'cas'le,' were pale from sea sickness.

"Personally, I didn't care whether the ship kept afloat or went to the bottom—I was that sick. However, we did reach New York, and I arrived in Chicago March 4, 1878.

"Crime waves, bootleggers, barons were unknown, and one could walk along Michigan Avenue without the fear of being drilled by machine gun bullets."

BEGAN AS CABINETMAKER

A cabinet maker by trade, Henrickson went into that business as soon as he had saved enough money to rig out a place for himself. By 1892, he had established a shop that attracted Stromberg, who was then operating his plant in Chicago, with the result that the latter bought Henrickson's shop and engaged him as a switchboard maker.

October 4, 1904, he came to Rochester, after the factory moved here, and has been here ever since.

"We built the switchboard for the old Main Exchange in Stone Street," said Mr. Henrickson, "and it was well received. T. W. Finucane and other Rochester capitalists prevailed on Stromberg to bring his plant to Rochester, and the association thus formed has succeeded beyond expectations."

Frederick L. Heughes
HEUGHES, HEAD
OF STEEL FIRM,
DIES, AGED 82

Director of Wilder, Granite Buildings, Powers Hotel and Chamber of Commerce Succumbs

Frederick Lee Heughes, president of the F. L. Heughes & Co., structural steel workers, died this morning at his home, 15 Strathallen Park, at the age of 82 years.

Mr. Heughes had been in ill health several months.

He was born in Rochester in 1850, the son of William Heughes, one of the first book publishers. He served an apprenticeship in his father's printing office and received his education in public schools, graduating from the old Free Academy in 1866.

After school he returned to the printing business and later invented and patented a press for printing in colors, a working model of which is in the patent office at Washington.

He later entered the employ of W. H. Cheney as bookkeeper and was promoted to the position of general manager. It was here that he saw the general use that could be made of rolled girders. In 1878 he became an iron contractor and since the fall of 1879 had been in the building business. Some of the buildings erected by him were the Wilder, Granite, Sibley, Lindsay & Curr, Powers Hotel, German Insurance, the new Chamber of Commerce, Court House.

Mr. Heughes was a member of Genesee Falls Lodge, Hamilton Chapter, Monroe Commandery and the Shrine, all Masonic Lodges. He recently resigned from the Rochester Club.

Funeral services will be conducted Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Mt. Hope Chapel.

DEATH TAKES

I. HERSHBERG AT AGE OF 70

Came Here from England and Founded Clothing Firm
Fifty Years Ago

STUDENT OF BUSINESS

Loved His Work, Did Much to Develop Industry in Rochester

Isaac Hershberg, founder and former head of Hershberg & Company and credited with much of the constructive development of the clothing industry in Rochester, died yesterday at his home, 31 North Goodman Street.

Mr. Hershberg, who was 70 years old, had been in ill health for several years, but had been confined to his home only since Saturday with a heart attack. He was born in Germany on Nov. 28, 1858.

Came Here 50 Years Ago

Mr. Hershberg was head of one of the pioneer Jewish families of the city, as he came here to engage in the clothing industry 50 years ago, and had lived in Rochester since that time. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Ellen Hershberg; four daughters, Mrs. Harry Silverman of Rochester, Mrs. Sol L. Levy of Buffalo, Mrs. Samuel Goldberg of New York City, and Mrs. Moses Albert of Montreal; three sons, Samuel I. Haskell L. and Saul N., all of Rochester; a sister, Mrs. Ida Prensky of Rochester, and nine grandchildren.

Funeral services will be conducted at the home at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, with Rabbi Morris Berman of Temple Beth El, of which Mr. Hershberg was one of the earliest and most active members, officiating. Interment will be made in Mount Hope Cemetery.

Mr. Hershberg began his work in the clothing manufacture business at Leeds, England, where he had been sent from Germany at the age of 11 when his parents died. At 17, he became connected with one of the most prominent tailoring firms of Leeds, and two years later married Miss Ellen Rosenthal, then entering the custom tailoring business under his own name. At Leeds was one of his sons, Samuel Hershberg, who succeeded his father as head of the company when its founder died a few years ago when his health began to fail.

Liked Conditions in America

As he heard travelers laud clothing made in America as superior both as to style and workmanship to that made in England, Mr. Hershberg determined to study the finished product and the methods of manufacture used in New York.

From his meager savings of 50 years ago he withdrew enough funds to buy a round trip ticket from Leeds to New York, but the second half of the ticket was destined never to be used. Landing in New York after leaving his wife and child in England, Mr. Hershberg began to study tailoring here, but casually met a former acquaintance of Leeds, and was told of the possibilities for clothiers in Rochester. Mr. Hershberg was at once impressed with the trade opportunities of this city, and quickly saw ahead bright prospects for success in the manufacture of clothing—there were at that time few clothing manufacturers in Rochester.

Mr. Hershberg first engaged in business in Atwater Street, now Central Avenue, where he operated a small tailor shop employing 12 persons. This building was torn down to make room for the New York Central Station, and Mr. Hershberg, with the financial aid of one of the leading manufacturers of the city, established a new business in McDonnell Avenue, now Baden Street, employing 35 workers.

Business Expanded Fast

The Hershberg business soon outgrew these quarters, and the manufacturer erected a three-story building in Clinton Avenue North, utilizing the top floor of the building and employing 100 men and women.

In 1892, Mr. Hershberg and Isaac H. Garson formed a partnership under the name of Hershberg & Garson and began manufacturing clothing in the old Childs Building, St. Paul and Mortimer streets, which occupied the site of the Smith, Beir & Gormly Building, directly opposite the present factory of Hershberg & Company.

A year later the business again required larger quarters and the building on the northeast corner of Andrews and St. Paul Street was occupied. In 1897, the partnership was dissolved and the firm name was changed to Hershberg & Company. Meyer Dinkelspiel then became associated with the organization. In 1899, Hershberg & Company occupied one-half of its present building, and in three years took over the entire building for its manufacturing business.

Mr. Dinkelspiel died in 1905, and Samuel I. Hershberg was admitted to partnership in the firm.

Buffalo Bill

The 89th anniversary of the birth of Col. William F. Cody today finds his Rochester double and admirer, Col. F. Judson Hess known to many as "Buffalo Bill," busy putting finishing touches on a huge scrapbook of clippings concerning the life of the great plainsman and showman.

Colonel Hess who bears a marked resemblance to Buffalo Bill, began his associations with the Cody family as a child. He has vivid recollections of the old Wild West Show idol and once played with the Cody children who are now buried in Mount Hope Cemetery.

In the library of his home at 245 Plymouth Avenue South, Colonel Hess today displayed his prized scrapbook of Cody clippings which he has been collecting for many years. It has grown year by year until it now contains several hundred pages and thousands of newspaper and magazine articles.

PASTOR HEYD CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

Zion Lutheran Members Give Minister $1,250 To Mark
25th Year.

Rev. Ernest Heyd, pastor of Zion Lutheran Church, at Grove and Stillson Streets, celebrated his 25th anniversary as pastor of the congregation yesterday, preaching the anniversary sermon from a pulpit bedecked with palms and flowers by Dorcas Society of the church.

The congregation raised a purse of $1,250, which was given Pastor Heyd at a reception tendered him by societies of the church. Arthur G. Seitz acted as master of ceremonies.

Sermon Reminiscent.

His sermon was reminiscent of his earliest contracts with the congregation, when he came to Rochester as a student at Wagner College, in which Zion Church was keenly interested. Pastor Heyd attended its services and later married a young woman from its membership, Mrs. Amelia Bender Heyd, deceased. He held pastorates in Albany and Lyons before being called to his present charge in 1900.

At the time of his coming, 25 years ago, the congregation had been split by a dissension in which about half left to form a new congregation, so the beginning was not under very auspicious conditions. By faithful labor on the part of Pastor Heyd and a nucleus which he rallied to the cause, the congregation took a new lease on life and has grown steadily, so that today it is still one of the very influential factors in Lutheranism in this section, upholding its record of nearly 100 years.

Rev. Mr. Heyd is the eighth pastor Zion Church has had since its foundation in 1833 and the only one to have served it for 25 years. It is the oldest Lutheran congregation in Rochester and is looked to as the "mother church," having started many of the other churches of its denomination which today flourish in different parts of the city as missions.

Zion Church has had many innovations begun during the incumbency of Pastor Heyd, among them a practical rebuilding of the interior and complete renovation in 1923. The council of the church consists of: A. G. Seitz, P. C. Wagner, A. Karweik, C. Wagner, E. J. Villnow, H. Weidel, C. Weidel, W. J. Kannevisher, C. J. Kannevisher, B. Louk, N. Barnes, L. Raetz, F. Snow, J. Keller and A. Kunz.

Joseph W. Hicks Who Served Firm 66 Years
Passes at 81

Joseph W. Hicks, dean of New York State Railway employees, who drove a horse-car up Main Street hill and ended by serving as assistant to the company's president, died today at 11:30 a. m. in Genesee Hospital.

Known to his associates as "J. W." and one of the most faithful of railway employees, he was eighty-one. In August he would have completed his sixty-sixth year in the company's employ.

Up to February of this year he had appeared each morning at his desk, reporting daily at 6 a. m., a custom he followed for many years. He had been in the hospital only a few days.

For many years on the anniversary of his entrance into the company's service, "J. W." recalled for newspaper reporters the days when Rochester's street cars were drawn by horses.

He served first as stable boy and later took charge of the horse barns for the old Rochester City and Brighton Railways. He welcomed the advent of electricity to replace horse power, because he declared the job of pulling the horse-cars was too hard on the animals.

Mr. Hicks leaves his widow, Elizabeth; a daughter, Mrs. Homer West of Scranton, Pa.; a son, Ralph of Buffalo; two brothers, George and Thomas, both connected with the street railways, and a sister, Mrs. James Hermance of Rochester. The body will rest at funeral parlors at No. 683 Main Street East.

Bishop Hickey Resigns Because of Ill Health and Is Elevated to Archbishop

D. C. Oct. 31, 1928

FREHER

RT. REV. THOMAS F. HICKEY

Pope Confers High Honor in Recognition of Prelate's Great Services to Church; Msgr. O'Hern to Administer Diocese

Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Hickey, D. D., has resigned as Catholic Bishop of Rochester, and has been honored by Pope Pius by being made archbishop and being appointed to the See of Viminacium.

Announcement of Bishop Hickey's resignation was made as follows through Rt. Rev. John F. O'Hern, administrator of the Diocese of Rochester:

Ill Health Prompts Action

"The action of the Bishop was prompted by ill health, which, with the demands on his strength of a growing diocese made it increasingly difficult to meet all the duties connected with the episcopate. For nearly 25 years Bishop Hickey has exercised the office of a bishop in the Diocese of Rochester; first as coadjutor to Bishop Bernard J.

McQuaid on Jan. 18, 1909. The 20 years of earnest work in building up the Kingdom of God has left its mark on the Bishop, and with the advancing years has made it evident to him that the burden was becoming too heavy for one not in the prime of vigor and the best of physical health.

"Pius X on the occasion of accepting Bishop Hickey's resignation wished to bestow added honor upon him for his years of service; he raised him to a dignity above any yet bestowed on him, appointing him to the archiepiscopal see of Viminaciano, making him an archbishop with the title, Most Reverend Thomas F. Hickey.

"Bishop Hickey was born on Feb. 4, 1861, in the City of Rochester. His parents, Jeremiah Hickey and Margaret Griffin, lived at the time in a house on what is now Clinton Avenue South just south of Alexander Street. He was baptized at St. Mary's Church, and after a course in the grammar school entered St. Andrew's Seminary to study for the priesthood. His studies in philosophy and theology were made in St. Joseph's Provincial Seminary at Troy, and on completion of the course he was ordained to the priesthood in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Rochester, by Bishop McQuaid, on March 25, 1894. He was made assistant pastor of St. Francis de Sales Church, Geneva, on April 4, 1894, leaving there to become pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Moravia, in 1898, Aug. 26. on March 10, 1895, Bishop McQuaid appointed him to the chaplaincy of the State Industrial School, where his labors for three years made an impression that has remained in the hearts of all with whom he dealt there. He was made pastor of St. Patrick's Cathedral on Jan. 31, 1898.

Made Bishop Coadjutor

"When Bishop McQuaid desired a helper in his work, the Holy Father selected the rector of the cathedral, and Bishop Hickey was consecrated Bishop of Berenice, a titular see in Africa, and made coadjutor to Bishop McQuaid, with the right of succession to the see. On the death of Bishop McQuaid on Jan. 18, 1909, Bishop Hickey became bishop of Rochester. This office he now resigns because of continued ill health.

"The office of archbishop, to which Most Rev. Thomas F. Hickey has been elevated, as an evidence of the appreciation of the Holy Father for his years of valued service, is one of the highest digni-ties conferred by the church, being cardinal. His diocesan and his friends outside the Catholic Church will rejoice in this signal honor conferred on him by the highest authority in the church.

Msgr. O'Hern Administrator

"The Holy Father has also appointed, according to an official communication received in the city today from the Apostolic Delegate in Washington, Rt. Rev. Msgr. John F. O'Hern as Apostolic Administrator of the vacant diocese, effective immediately.

The Diocese of Rochester comprises 7,081 square miles in the western part of New York State, including nine counties; it has a Catholic population of over 200,000. There are 156 parishes, with 265 priests; a parochial school population of over 32,000 in 68 parochial schools. Three asylums care for the sick, one home for the aged. There are six high schools and academies, one college for women, one preparatory seminary with 115 students, and one theological seminary with 255 students.

Founder of Aquinas

"One of the greatest monuments to Bishop Hickey is the Aquinas Institute, a Catholic high school for boys with a registration of over 800 boys. The new mother house of the Sisters of St. Joseph on East Avenue in Pittsford, the new Mercy High School in Blossom Road under the charge of the Sisters of Mercy, the two new parishes of Our Lady of Good Counsel on the West Side, and Our Lady of Lourdes on the East Side, make up the closing works of the Bishop in the development of diocesan institutions. Other plans for development of new parishes are on the books about to be opened up and for which property has already been secured.

"All the charitable institutions in the city are free from debt, and the healthy financial condition of all diocesan institutions is reflected in the substantial and regular reduction of church indebtedness throughout the diocese, as revealed in the financial reports submitted at the close of each year."

Birthday Greetings

To Rochesterians

The Times-Union congratulates Robert Hickson, William C. Daley and Norman H. Davidson on their birthday anniversaries.

ROBERT HICKSON, with Hickson Electric Company, was born in London, England,

March 1, 1846. He sailed for London, Canada in 1855, and has lived in Rochester for 61 years. Many years back Mr. Hickson entered the picture frame business with Newell & Turpin. At the end of 20 years, he took over the company which was situated on Front Street.

Mr. Hickson entered the services of the Hickson Electric Company in 1919. His son, Lawrence G. Hickson, is now president of the organization.

DEATH CLAIMS AUGUSTUS HILL AT AGE OF 92

Was Present When Lee Surrendered to Gen.
Grant at Appomatox—
Burial in Oil City

R.V.C. 12/1/32
Augustus A. Hill, 92, of 26 Favor Street, one of Rochester's oldest Civil War veterans, died at his home Wednesday night after an illness of a week.

Mr. Hill celebrated his 92d birthday last Oct. 14 and on that date recalled that he was present when Gen. Robert E. Lee, commander of the Confederate forces, surrendered to General Grant at Appomatox Court House.

The aged veteran was born at Warren, Pa., Oct. 15, 1841, and enlisted in Capt. G. H. Warren's Company I, 25th Regiment, United States Colored Troops, Feb. 5, 1864. He was mustered out at Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1865.

His regiment was part of General Grant's division and Mr. Hill sometimes served as the commander's orderly. He knew that assignment on the day of the historic surrender and was handed General Lee's sword after the Confederate leader had surrendered it to General Grant.

He took part in the battles of Gettysburg, Richmond and Chattanooga, three of the war's major engagements. He had an exciting experience on a voyage from Philadelphia to New Orleans during which the steamer "Suhwanee" sprung a leak and soldiers and sailors were forced to bail for 48 hours to prevent the ship from foundering.

For the greater part of his life after the war Mr. Hill lived at Oil City. He came to Rochester in his declining years to make his home with his daughter, Mrs. Gertrude Simms. He also leaves another daughter, Mrs. Laura Jenkins, and four sons, Guy, Thomas, Ulysses and Charles, and nine grandchildren.

Funeral services will be conducted at Memorial A. M. E. Zion Church tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Burial will be at Oil City, Pa.

There are now 56 Civil War veterans surviving in Monroe County.

FORMER HEAD OF U. R. NOTED DIPLOMAT

R.V.C. Rochester, Pa. 12/1/32
Dr. David Jayne Hill, former president of the University of Rochester, ambassador to Germany under President Roosevelt, and noted author, educator and historian, died early today in Washington, according to a dispatch from that city.

Doctor Hill was eighty-one. Up to his death he had taken part in a limited social life and had maintained close touch with governmental and international affairs.

His last visit to Rochester was in October, 1930, on the occasion of that institution's dedication of its $10,000,000 College for Men on the riverside campus.

Dr. Hill was head of the university here from 1890 to 1896. He also served as president of Bucknell University from 1879 to 1888.

In 1898 he was appointed assistant secretary of state and served in that capacity five years under John Hay. For long intervals, when Hay was ill, he was acting secretary of state.

DAVID JAYNE HILL

He began his diplomatic career in 1903 when he was appointed minister to Switzerland. Two years later he was made minister to the Netherlands.

In 1907, after considerable opposition from Emperor William, the cause of which was never made public, Dr. Hill's appointment by President Roosevelt as ambassador to Germany was approved.

He served until 1911, when he resigned, giving no reason.

After the Peace Conference of 1919, Dr. Hill took an active part in the fight against the League of Nations, declaring he could see no reason why the United States should expect satisfaction or justice under an association of nations. He also opposed admission of Germany to the league.

Born at Plainfield, N. J., Dr. Hill studied at Bucknell University and at Berlin and Paris. He resigned his office of president of the University of Rochester in 1896 to study law and diplomacy. President McKinley recalled him from Europe to take the post of minister to Switzerland.

While in Washington, Dr. Hill occupied for several years the chair of European Diplomacy in the School of Comparative Jurisprudence and Diplomacy.

His writings on questions of government and international relations are widely known. He also was the author of biographies of Washington Irving and William Cullen Bryant.

Subjects—Former Ambassador to Germany—Head of University Here from 1888 to 1896

Dr. David Jayne Hill, man of world affairs and one-time president of the University of Rochester, died today in Washington at 81.

Doctor Hill was a distinguished scholar, an undisputed authority on international law, historian, author of books on a wide variety of subjects, and successively U. S. minister to Switzerland, to the Netherlands and ambassador to Germany.

From 1888 to 1896, Doctor Hill was president of the University of Rochester. He came here from Bucknell University, where he had served as president from 1879. When he resigned his post here to study diplomacy there ensued two brief terms of acting presidencies under Profs. Samuel A. Latimore and Henry F. Burton. Then in 1900, Dr. Rush Rhees, now president, was chosen.

Doctor Hill had paid several visits to Rochester in recent years. In 1924 he delivered the Phi Beta Kappa commencement address in Kilbourn Hall. Two years later he returned to give the Cutler foundation lecture and in October 1930 attended dedication ceremonies at the University's new River Campus.

Dr. Hill's diplomatic career began in 1898 when he was appointed assistant secretary of state under John Hay. He was acting secretary of state for long intervals when Hay was ill. Dr. Hill was said to have been the connecting link between the American delegation to the first Hague conference and the administration. He was such a successful "link" at the conference he was selected to be a member of the second conference at The Hague.

He served as assistant secretary of state until 1903, and then resigned only to be appointed U. S. minister to Switzerland.

In 1905 he was appointed minister to the Netherlands and held that office until 1907.

Goes to Germany

In 1908 Dr. Hill was named ambassador to Germany by President Roosevelt. He resigned July 1, 1911, and it was rumored at the time that he was in bad favor with the German administration, that the Kaiser disliked him and that he was asked to resign by the Germans. This was denied by both Roosevelt and Dr. Hill. Dr. Hill said his real reason for resigning was that he was not sufficiently wealthy to keep up with his position as ambassador.

In 1914 Dr. Hill again came into the political spotlight when he announced that he would be a candidate for the Republican New York senatorial nomination to succeed Elihu Root. This announcement received approval in New York and throughout the country but Dr. Hill was defeated at the direct primaries by James W. Wadsworth.

R.V.C. Rochester, Pa. 12/1/32
Dr. David Jayne Hill
A Rochester scholarship is poorer today through the death of Dr. David Jayne Hill. To Rochester he occupies a special niche because of his eight years as president of the University of Rochester, but to the world at large he was a diplomat, an author, a scholar and an authority on international law and history. He was an example of a brilliant intellect studiously trained to the mastery of political science. It was once said of him that "he read everything." He was a scholar by natural gifts, by inclination and by deliberate choice, and his useful career of almost 81 years bore proof that knowledge is indeed power.

Dr. Hill's eight years with the University of Rochester left an indelible mark. Even today he is thought of as a kind of Rochester possession, although more than thirty years have passed since he made his home here and his subsequent career carried him far afield. Dr. Hill was only 39 when he came to the university on recommendation of the retiring president, Dr. Martin B. Anderson. For nine years before that he had been president of Bucknell College. Before he was 40 he had written an impressive literary output, including biographies and treatises on social science. His retirement from the university here in 1896 marked the end of an important period in the institution's development, in which growth was consistent and prestige steadily on the ascendant.

The public career of Dr. Hill is a matter of national record. His Rochester friends followed it with peculiar interest. As assistant to Secretary of State John Hay, as minister to Switzerland and the Netherlands and as ambassador to Germany during the Roosevelt and part of the Taft administrations, Dr. Hill became a world figure. The incident of the Kaiser's opposition to his appointment, followed by a complete establishment of friendly relations, has always had an element of mystery, but was only a minor note in a distinguished record. Whatever Dr. Hill undertook to do was well done, and his voice, on whatever subject he chose to raise it, carried weight.

Dr. Rhees Gives Tribute to His Predecessor

Dr. R. H. Rhees, president of the University of Rochester, yesterday paid the following tribute to Dr. David Jayne Hill, former president of the university, who died yesterday in Washington:

"The death of Dr. David Jayne Hill brings to a close a long and useful life, which attained recognition from his contemporaries beyond that which is won by most men.

"Rochester has claimed him as, in a special sense, her own son since his residence here as president of the university. Among many services to that institution one of the most valuable was his persistent effort to rebuild the university to the general life of our city.

"At the outset in 1850 that tie was close and strong. Under some unexplained influence the city and the university had grown apart by 1890. President Hill set himself resolutely to close up the gap. His personality and his ability were effective to that end.

"A more genial friend or a more loyal patriot it would be difficult to name. His passing severs one more link between the university of today and the past, out of which it has developed."

David L. Hill Takes Rest After Spending 40 Years On Rochester Newspapers

By Robert D. Burns

David L. Hill, dean of Rochester newspapermen, for more than 40 years a chronicler and editor of daily human events in this city and Western New York, has laid down his facile pen and is going abroad to obtain leisure for study. It's not strange that he seeks time for study. He has always been a student of men and public affairs, and now that his family is brought up and happily married, it's back to the books and especially the parchments for this veteran of printer's ink.

Oddly enough the man, who has described the doings of more people for the reading public than any other news writer in the history of Rochester, balks at any publicity concerning his own movements. He was seen at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Prescott M. Dean in Gregory Hill Road today, and with the grace and courtesy of the old school made this hard-boiled interviewer to understand that there was nothing doing on a photograph or his plans for the future. "Just wait till I die," he said, and it looks as if it's going to be a long wait, for the veteran appears to be bursting with good health, and is alive with energy and full of the contentment that comes at the end of years of good work well done.

Mr. Hill is a lawyer as well as journalist. He was city editor of the Union and Advertiser when that giant, William Purcell, was thundering from the editorial page. Later he was state editor for the old Herald in the regime of Louis M. Antisdale. More recently he wrote and compiled legal articles for the Daily Record. Now he has retired and is going to study without fear of distractions.

Last evening the veteran journalist gathered a few old friends about him at the Columbus Civic Center, where he gave a little dinner. In this group were Dr. Frederick W. Zimmer, John Scott Clubb, cartoonist of The Times-Union staff; Charles B. Stillson and William D. Manning of the Democrat and Chronicle.

It would help a lot if David L. Hill in the leisure of the months he plans to spend in the British Isles wrote his memories of Rochester life and its public men and women of the last 40 years.

rites Planned for David Hill, Ex-News Dean

Editor and Lawyer
Succumbs at Age of 80

Dean of Rochester newspapermen, lawyer and one of the oldest alumni of University of Rochester, David Lowe Hill, 80, died yesterday in Canandaigua at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James H. Thompson.

Funeral services will be held from the home of his daughter, Mr. Prescott Dean, 127 Gregory Hill Road, Monday at 2:30 p. m., the Rev. Charles C. W. Carver of Christ Church officiating. Bearers will be members of the old "13 Club. Burial will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

Mr. Hill was recognized for his vigor, geniality and versatility, all of which qualities were shown six years ago when, at the age of 74, he surprised his friends by taking a winter's voyage to England, in the southern part of which he stayed five months studying the life of the English people in their villages. It also was shown when, after the death of Louis M. Antisdale a decade ago, he resigned as state editor of the Rochester Herald, of which Mr. Antisdale was editor, and opened a law office downtown. But always he returned to his first love, newspaper work.

Born in Albany County Aug. 25, 1855. He attended Williams College for one year and was elected to Delta Psi fraternity. He transferred to the University of Rochester and was graduated in the class of 1878. He was prominent in athletics while in college. It was at the university that Mr. Hill got his first taste of newspaper work as editor of The Campus, U. of R. weekly publication. His first daily newspaper work was on the Union and Advertiser.

years he studied law and was admitted to the Bar and practiced for some time. He then returned to newspaper work, taking a position with the Post Express. Later he served 20 years as city editor of the Union and Advertiser. Then he went to The Herald, where he worked in various capacities for many years. He then took his second fling at the Bar, but returned again to the Herald, with which he stayed until it was acquired by The Democrat and Chronicle. He then joined the staff of the Daily Record, daily legal paper, from which he resigned in 1929.

Besides Mrs. Dean, Mr. Hill is survived by four other daughters: Mrs. James H. Thompson, Mrs. Maurice G. Lynn, Mrs. John H. Chase and Mrs. Edward W. Wilder of Churchville; a sister, Mrs. Arthur B. Wilder of Woodstock, Vt., and 13 grandchildren.

Collected Furniture
He took a keen interest in his sports and hobbies, with golf, football, music and the collection of antique furniture, china and pottery furnishing his major avocations.

He married in 1894 Anna Harvey Smith, who survives him, with a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Hill Macey of Bronxville; four sons, Weston Whittemore Hill of Pel-

J. LAWRENCE HILL, world traveler and technician who observes his birthday anniversary today, was born in Burton-on-Trent, England, and when a young man sailed to Australia and New Zealand, working in the carriage and automobile body business in both countries for some 10 years. He later continued his profession in other countries including South Africa and Honolulu, and finally landed on American soil in California where he lived for five years.

Mr. Hill entered the service of the Pierce-Arrow Company in Buffalo and constructed their first limousine body. In 1904, he came to Rochester as designer and superintendent of construction for the Cunningham Company, and five years later he embarked on a private business career as a member of the Gabel-Hill Company. In 1914 he organized the J. Lawrence Hill Company and two years later bought the garage and store building which were occupied by his company until the recent construction of his new garage, supply house and parking station on the same site, the corner of Broad Street and Plymouth Avenue.

Mr. Hill's residence is at 40 Warwick Avenue.

John N. Hilliard Former Rochester NewsWriter, Passes

Death of John Northern Hilliard, 63, author, newspaperman, and press agent for Howard Thurston, the magician, today brought sorrow to scores of Rochesterians who had known him here in the days, beginning in 1896, when he was a member of the editorial staff of the old Rochester Post Express.

Mr. Hilliard was found dead in a hotel room in Indianapolis last night. He was a native of Palmyra, N. Y., and had served on the Chicago Press, and Chicago Herald in various capacities besides the Post Express here. He had contributed to the Boston Transcript, the New York Sun and many magazines.

When Louis Wiley, now business manager of the New York Times, retired as business manager of the Post Express in 1896, the late Francis B. Mitchell took over the paper and began to gather a staff of able writers, Joseph O'Connor, whose column "The Rochesterian" was one of the first columnist departures in Western New York journalism; Jacob A. Hoekstra, historian and literary critic; Hugh Pendexter, at present a novelist and magazine contributor living at his island home on the coast of Maine and at that time court reporter; Mr. Hilliard, literary and dramatic critic, and even then an authority on magic.

Others of that staff included: J. Redfern Mason, music critic and an authority on music; William H. Samson, managing editor and an authority on American and Indian lore; Frank Patchin, detective story writer, and boy story author. This group was active from 1896 to 1910. The editorial contributors included Dr. David Jayne Hill, then president of the University of Rochester and Charles Elliott Fish, Regent of the University of New York.

The city and editorial staff of those days had for members George S. Crittenden, Samuel P. Burrill, Willard A. Marakle, now assistant industrial commissioner, State Bureau of Workman's Compensations; Fred A. McGill, Nathaniel S. Olds, Ralph Olcott, Rochester attorney; Louis A. Es-son, Walter S. Green, now in the New York State Bureau of Farms and Markets; Ernest R. Willard, later editor of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle and now retired president of Rochester Chapter, American Red Cross; Alexander Otis, New York attorney. The surviving members of that staff of 1896 are Nat Olds, Pendexter, Es-son, Green, Otis, Marakle, Mason, Willard, and Otis Hicks.

Mr. Hilliard, according to Mr. Marakle, was a "great pal," loved books, and bought books in preference to clothes. He had a special chair built with a book rest so he could propel himself around his library without having to get up, if he wanted a volume.

The remark heard often in those days, Mr. Marakle said was:

"A great trio was born in Western New York: John Hilliard, Sam Blythe and Sam Hopkins Adams."

Dr. Charles Lane Hinchler, 57, of 403 Alexander Street, member of a Rochester pioneer family, died Sunday, Aug. 26 at the General Hospital. He was stricken with a heart attack a week ago Saturday.

Doctor Hinchler was born in North Greece Dec. 24, 1876. He was a descendent of William Hinchler, the first white settler on the lake shore between the Genesee and Niagara rivers. He moved with his family when four years of age to Kent in the town of Carlton, where he received a district school education. He then was graduated from the Brockport State Normal School in 1896 and from the University of Rochester in 1903. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi fraternity. His university course was followed by a term of four years in Johns Hopkins Medical School, Baltimore.

Following his examination in New York State he was associated for a time with Dr. Charles Barbour and served as house officer in the Park Avenue Hospital, where he met Miss Josephine Kechn, assistant head nurse, whom he married. He later opened an office on North Street and then moved to 204 Alexander Street.

Dr. Charles L. Hinchler

He had for several years been a member of the staff of the General Hospital, Strong Memorial Hospital, State and Monroe County Hospital.

Doctor Hinchler was a member of the American Medical Association, the Academy of Medicine, Monroe County Medical Association, New York Medical Society, the Pathologist Society and Yonondio Lodge of Masons. He was also secretary of the milk commission of the Monroe County Medical Society.

During the World War he served as major in Base Hospital 19 and was in France a year, where he was identified with hospitals at the front.

Doctor Hinchler is survived by his widow, Josephine, and a daughter, Mrs. Josephine Hartshorn of East Aurora; a brother, Millard F. Hinchler of Morton; two sisters, Mrs. Harry R. Warren of Kent and Miss Madge R. Hinchler of Brooklyn.

NO STEPS YET FOR HOCHSTEIN MEMORIAL

But Musicians Are Hopeful
Something Will Be Done.

Feb 27-1919 B+C

DAVID HOCHSTEIN.
(From latest photograph.)

"When the war called David Hochstein away at the beginning of 1917," says the Musical Courier, "his position as one of the very finest violinists America had ever produced was thoroughly established."

The Literary Digest in supplementing these remarks says, in part: "American losses in the field of the arts through the war are small in comparison with European losses, but a special niche in our memorial structure should be reserved for the artists, the poets and the musicians who had turned from their careers in increasing the sum of human happiness to enlarge the sphere of human freedom. David Hochstein's name must now be included among those laureled heroes who sleep in France."

From all parts of the country letters are pouring in praising the young artist and testifying to his promise of becoming one of the most famous American artists.

In view of all this, Rochester musicians to whom he had endeared himself, and Rochester in general, have expressed the desire that a memorial worthy of him be created in his name. Although no plan has been formulated, the hope is expressed that some steps will be taken soon. And the musicians feel that this would not be singling out Hochstein the soldier and paying tribute to him, but would be paying tribute to Hochstein the genius.

Tablet In Memory Of David Hochstein To Be Unveiled In Eastman Music School

Young Rochester Violinist Who Was Killed in the War
Had Won High Place in Musical World—

Veterans of 206th Infantry

Give Tablet.

R-T-U 5-29-23

The memory of Lieutenant David Hochstein, the young violinist who was killed in the war, will be fittingly honored on October 12 when a bronze memorial tablet will be unveiled in the Eastman School of Music, five years to the day after his death. The tablet is presented by the veterans of the 206th Infantry, in which regiment Lieutenant Hochstein served as assistant band leader from the time he entered the service on October 1, 1917, until he was sent to the fourth officers' training school on August 1, 1918.

If young Hochstein had lived it is believed that he would have become one of the world's great violinists; already he had won a high place for himself among concert violinists and many tributes from leading musical authorities. The "Hochstein tone" was a thing of individual and rare musical beauty which those who heard it will not forget, and his keenly sensitive musical temperament lent special charm to whatever he interpreted.

David Hochstein was born in Rochester, February 16, 1893 the son of Jacob and Helena Hochstein. He received his education in the public schools of Rochester and was graduated from East High School, class of 1910. Completing his training in Rochester, he went to Europe for additional instruction from Auer, the great Russian violinist. He played abroad and on his return to New York, attaining success and popularity. After his first appearance in New York he was deemed by some of the leading musical critics as one of the best of American violinists.

Like others who attended the fourth in command of the Second Battalion Officers' Training School, Hochstein of that regiment.

was graduated sooner than was anticipated to fill in the gap caused by a great number of casualties among line officers in the fighting in September, 1918, and immediately after graduation was assigned to the 60th Infantry. On the morning of October 12, 1918, while penetrating the German positions, Hochstein, who was in command of the headquarters runners, was killed going through the woods to their objective at Bois de Rappes, just north of the little town of Cunel. He was buried at Bois de Rappes but through some mistake, caused in all probability by absence from Hochstein's body of identification tags, it is not known just where his body was interred. Despite the efforts of Colonel Vidmer and others who have interested themselves in the case and have had the records of the Bureau of Graves Registration thoroughly searched, it has not been possible to determine where Hochstein's body is now interred, but as Colonel Vidmer puts it, "I like to believe that Hochstein is the unknown soldier whose remains lie in Arlington."

On October 8, 1918, Hochstein played the violin at Nancy and was referred to by the newspapers as a master of his instrument. This was the last time he played in public.

Further announcement of time of unveiling will be made later. It is now planned to have Colonel Vidmer, who was recently in attendance at the Horse Show, and who is connected with the office of chief of cavalry, present at the unveiling. Colonel Vidmer headed the committee that raised the funds for the memorial, the treasurer being Colonel Archibald C. Thacher of New York city, former adjutant of the 306th Infantry and later

Musicians of Rochester will soon announce the date of a concert in honor of Hochstein to which the parents of all the boys who gave their lives "over there" will be invited.

lodgings, affording, with other buildings, accommodations for 335 men.

Has Helped Hundreds of Children

The religious work has been directed by Mr. Hines with vigor and success. Besides the regular evening meetings, frequently addressed by the ministers of Rochester churches, a flourishing Sunday school has been maintained, affording instruction and guidance for hundreds of children who otherwise might not receive the benefits of such training.

"The trustees and the general public recognize the fact that these achievements are due to the sterling character, the untiring labor, and the capable direction of Mr. Hines," said Mr. Denton. "During the thirty-nine years of his administration, Front Street has changed greatly, and no one can measure the share of the mission in that transformation."

"The trustees regret exceedingly that Mr. Hines has found it impossible to continue to carry the burden of so large a work, but it is gratifying to know that he will still reside in Rochester, and from time to time will give those in charge the benefit of his counsel and advice."

Resignation of Albert E. Hines as superintendent of the People's Rescue Mission and his appointment as superintendent emeritus in recognition of his 39 years of faithful service were announced at a dinner tendered Mr. Hines by the institution's board of trustees at the Central Y. M. C. A. last night.

The dinner was arranged by Eugene C. Denton president, and Joseph L. Humphrey, secretary, for the board. Mr. Denton presided.

Mr. Hines was appointed superintendent in 1892. At that time the mission was at 171-173 Front Street, to which it recently had removed from 36 Exchange Street, where it had been carried on since Oct. 31, 1889. Mr. Hines came to Rochester from New Brunswick, N. J., where he had been in charge of the Young Men's Christian Association for some time.

The mission then occupied two stores, which were used as an auditorium for the nightly meetings, and upstairs were lodgings for a limited number of men. The work steadily progressed, the public promptly responding to Mr. Hines's able leadership.

In November, 1893, a woodyard was opened at 141 Front Street, which gave employment to a number of men and furnished a test of their avowed determination to lead better lives, and was carried on for several years. In 1899, as the result of an appeal to the people of Rochester, the mission purchased the substantial four-story building, Nos. 134-138 Front Street, and, after adequate repairs and improvements, entered up a greatly enlarged work there.

In 1903, the trustees, moved by the crowded condition of the building, purchased a site in the rear, at Andrews Street and the river front and erected a four-story building, which was soon fully occupied. In 1915 was purchased the annex property at Market and Front Streets, which is used for

Hock Stands for 'All Together' Spirit in Politics, Civic Life

LOUIS C. HOCK

By J. CODY WALLER
"Alle zusammen!"

That's what "all together" is in Deutsch! It's "alle zusammen" in the Maennerchor or the Beethoven Society, and "all together" in Republican politics.

Meet Louis C. Hock, Northeast District Republican candidate for Council, a staunch believer in "all together" for vocal or political efforts. He provided harmony for the German singing societies and now he is 100 per cent. for Republican harmony. Why?

"Politics is new to me. My best contribution has been the occasional loaning of my automobile for use at the polls.

"I have learned considerable since I was nominated for the Council. It is that the men on my ticket who have seen service in the Council are an upstanding delegation of responsible citizens, men who have the interests of all the city at heart and who would not do wrong knowingly for party or church.

'I'M FOR THEM'

"I am for them as we stand all together and know that the public interests can be served as well as it is humanly possible in their hands."

"Alle Zusammen! All together." So we have the dignified choral singer, fraternalist and novice politician, Louis C. Hock!

Hock is a Rochesterian of an old-fashioned beginning. He came here at three and has been doing conservatively well since. Like many another, he had only to complete a grammar grade school education, learn a trade and all would be well.

The German idea was to bring a trade, learned in the German army, to America, settle in a German neighborhood, buy your shoes of a Deutschlender, your grocery of another Deutschlender; have your house painted by a neighbor German and so on.

SURE OF ASSOCIATES

"Alle zusammen!" Everything all together and all would be well. That's the way it was. So it came that the Germans became such substantial citizens, not alone in Rochester but wherever they stopped.

So it came about that Louis C. Hock sits back in his insurance office, with all the success of a banker or broker, still able to sing in the Maennerchor, convinced that his associates on the Republican ticket, all of whom are of experience in the City Council, are equally substantial citizens in whose hands the affairs of municipal government are safe and to continue safe for the indefinite future.

He came from one of the German neighborhoods of the Fifth Ward, where the Germans built among themselves for their own stability and a future for their children.

He went to St. Michael's School and to the woodworking plant of his uncle, Leonard Vogel, still the woodworking plant of Vogel and Binder. Louis C. Hock would become a woodworker like his cousins, Leonard and Emil Vogel, and perhaps later on an architect. But first he would master the trade of woodworking. Proficient at that he could go as high as the skies. But always he would have woodworking to fall back upon, if a trade became necessary to the earning of bread and butter.

STUDIED ARCHITECTURE

At thirteen he went to Vogel and Binder's. At sixteen he began to study architecture at Mechanics Institute. He studied at night. Mechanics Institute then was located in Exchange Street. Classes were small and often died aborning. This was the fate of his class in architecture. It died before Louis Hock was well begun. Mechanical draughting was substituted. That died, too.

After nine years of mastering woodworking at Uncle Leonard Vogel's Hock abandoned the lathe and overalls for insurance. That was twenty-eight years ago.

Meanwhile he had become a warm believer in organization. It was inherent in the German neighborhood idea transplanted from the fatherland and the backbone of organization politics of America.

Hock had participated in the organization of the first interior woodworkers' union in Rochester. He was its first secretary. The union did not survive then, although one which has replaced it flourishes today.

As a Fifth Warder and afterwards as a resident of the Seventeenth Ward where he now lives in Saranac Street, Hock was strong for "Alle zusammen" of the choral singing world, the all together of politics.

He joined the Knights of St. John, eighteen years ago, and the Knights of Columbus since, and never has weakened in either. He was secretary of the Knights of St. John for fifteen years, and president of Commandery No. 4 for five years.

He was a director of the Knights of Columbus, and is now faithful navigator of the Fourth Degree of the Knights of Columbus.

He is also a pillar of St. Michael's Church, where he has been a consistent attendant since he came here at the age of three.

Just how Hock got into politics he can't explain. Republican leaders make it clear. They were searching around for an "all together" German-American. Somebody suggested his name, and the leaders swooped down upon him. They would not permit him to say anything.

He hasn't said anything until now—that he is proud to be on the Republican ticket.

Frank Koch, deputy welfare commissioner, and Eugene M. Scheid, former Seventeenth Ward supervisor, were boys and men with Hock. They all attended St. Michael's School together; they sang in the Maennerchor together and were Seventeenth Ward Republicans.

"Alle zusammen!"

They even play golf together, although none of them has played much in these close-quarter days.

But Hock has a daughter, Catherine, who plays enough for the whole Hock family. She wins all trophies for women at the Ridgemont Country Club. A son, George M., is his associate in insurance. He doesn't golf much, either, because of business, and the idea of running into the daughter-sister member of the family as a champion is so attractive, especially if she insists upon making it a family party. Louis C. Hock's wife is the former Josephine M. Clapp of Elmira.

Leaves with Umbrella, Gift Of Associates, and Makes Way for Jacob Weber

John C. Hoffman, the 74-year-old Cupid of the City Hall, yesterday went permanently out of office with a brand new umbrella, the gift of his associates in the adjoining offices.

For 18 years Mr. Hoffman has been the city's marriage license clerk. He took office on Jan. 2, 1914. Because of a law that says a man of Mr. Hoffman's years can't play Cupid any longer, he shoved his darts back into his quiver, put the cap on his fountain pen, locked the doors of his desk, and went out with his new umbrella at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

When he began his task, 18 years ago, he first signed up a couple who have stood the test of time. On Jan. 2, he first issued a license to Charles L. Brinker and Catherine E. Hempel. Mr. and Mrs. Brinker now live at 310 Hazelwood Terrace, and have a daughter, Miss Harriet Brinker.

Yesterday, in closing out his last day's work, Mr. Hoffman wrote out in his careful script a license for Ernest Fliegauf of 45 Hudson Avenue and Miss Gertrude Geisen of 321 Meigs Street. That was his last official act. After that, he accepted the umbrella presented by City Clerk Thomas P. O'Leary with a neat little speech, and departed.

Mr. Hoffman doesn't look his age. He doesn't look it within 20 years. What he will do now, he doesn't know.

Jacob Weber, Mr. Hoffman's predecessor in the marriage license office, who retired from the position of clerk to become an alderman, will succeed Mr. Hoffman.

Long A Sailor

When Philip G. Hoffman, president of the New York Auto Tire & Supply Company, isn't devising a means of making customers conscious of his favorite brand of tire his mind turns to yachting in general and the Rochester Yacht Club in particular.

Mr. Hoffman, who lives at 686 Seneca Parkway, spends practically as much time at his hobby as he does at his business, and the wish often finds its way into his thoughts that the hours of a day were 48 instead of 24.

He is interested equally in sail and power cruising, has been president of the Irondequoit Yacht Club and is now commodore of the Rochester Yacht Club, to which office he was re-elected in December.

Mr. Hoffman has owned some sort of water craft since boyhood, first the raft of young adventure, then the boat for fishing, and later the yacht for pleasure.

Speaking of fishing it might be mentioned that Mr. Hoffman has done considerable small-mouth bass fishing off Cape Vincent, another hobby. He is also an enthusiastic duck hunter.

His chief interest this year, however, is in the development of a defender for Canada's Cup which his club held for 25 years and, he adds, intends to maintain.

Death today claimed George C. Hollister, 76, for decades a potent figure in the Rochester real estate and lumber business.
