WEST HIGH SCHOOL

Edited by the Class of June, 1923

West High School
Rochester, N. Y.

History of West High School

WEST High School came into existence in 1905, at a cost of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The campus contains seven acres and there are fifty-seven rooms in constant use in the school.

For the first five years, Mr. Weet served successfully as principal with a force of thirty-nine teachers. At his resignation, to become assistant superintendent of schools, Mr. Bennett, in 1910, succeeded him and still, in 1923, heads the executive staff of the school. Under him is a force of eighty-three teachers to instruct approximately two thousand pupils.

In 1908 the Athletic field was bought with a fund raised by the students.

In 1911 football was abolished.

In 1913 the present system of school from eight-thirty to two-twenty was inaugurated.

In 1917 West High plunged fervently into war work with splendid results.

In 1918 plans were laid for an orchestra, band and Glee Club, all of which have proved very successful.

In 1921 eleven hundred dollars was raised for the Chinese Relief Fund.

In 1922 the moving picture machine was installed.

In 1922 a Library Drive to obtain more books was successfully carried out.

The Rooter

IN response to a widely voiced desire for a school paper as well as a magazine, the ROOTER was established this year by Paul Herrick and Miss Parker. The theory advanced was that up-to-the-minute news of sports and local events were stale by the time the OCCIDENT appeared, and that there was plenty of news to fill both. This plan would allow the OCCIDENT more space for budding literary artists, and at the same time give a more detailed and up-to-the-minute account of weekly events.

It was planned that the four page paper which sported the title of "THE ROOTER" should appear every Monday and contain a detailed writeup of the game of the Friday before. The theory was all right, and the execution of it was little short of marvelous. The students in general have absolutely no idea of the work entailed in planning, obtaining material for, and publishing such a thing as either the OCCIDENT or THE ROOTER. The little paper was invariably snappy, instructive, amusing, and generally pleasing. Everybody was delighted with it.

However, the paper appeared weekly during the entire basketball season, after which it was discontinued. Everybody was sorry to see it go, and honestly felt a twinge of real remorse that he had not quite done his part in failing to support (and it was only a matter of three cents), such a fine, satisfying and peppy little paper as THE ROOTER had proved itself to be.

THE ANNUAL

Track

Although track has taken a slump lately the prospects for this year's team are bright. The team is well balanced, having good men for the field events as well as the track. The interclass track meet brought to light some new material which should considerably strengthen the team. A large schedule has been planned, and great things are expected of our "spikesters."

Swimming

The swimming team started out the season handicapped by the loss of several veterans of last year's team. The success of the season cannot be properly gauged by the record of the meets won and lost, as a good foundation has been developed for the success of the sport in the future.

Wrestling

A new sport has sprung into prominence in West High this year, namely, wrestling. The surprisingly large crowds which attended the matches speak well of the growing popularity of this sport. Coach Hulek turned out a team worthy of praise, and in the coming years wrestling is bound to take its place with basketball and baseball.

The Athletic Season of 1922-23

The year 1922-23 has found a great athletic revival all over the country and in West High in particular. Not since the days of interscholastic football in Rochester, have West High students turned out in such great numbers to support and participate in athletics of all kinds. The spirit of the student body has been of the highest type at all times—rejoicing in victories and developing a “never say die” spirit with defeat. The various records of the past season point to success in the future and the class of June, 1923 can feel justly proud of having seen during its Senior year, the beginning of this epoch in the history of West High School athletics.

Girls' Basketball

In the first game of the season, the girls, following the example of their brothers, defeated East High in a game marked by little or no opposition. While they were not so successful in the later games, the season was in every way a success.

MR. CLUTE

MR. SPOUSE

West High Music

THE first rehearsal of the Band and Orchestra was held under Mr. Maddy, in 1918. At that time the musicians were mostly beginners with practically no musical experience. So after a year of futile attempts at playing good music, they disbanded.

In 1920, Mr. Fay took charge. But this time, the players had acquired some experience, and, under his most excellent directing, progressed rapidly. The musical work in the schools increased so rapidly, that Mr. Fay gave over the West High Orchestra to Mr. Clute in 1922.

Since that time, he has worked untiringly in the behalf of both the Band and Orchestra and we have seen the results. Mr. Clute cannot be praised too highly for his zeal, patience and skill.

Our music has grown steadily better and better. Anyone who has heard the performances of the organizations in their infancy would not recognize them now. For they have passed from that state where noise is music, to another where they successfully render a good version of the masterpieces.

An assembly now, without music, is a dull and cheerless affair, and what would the games be without the merry blare of the band?

But, successful as they are, the West High Band and Orchestra are just beginning to do real things. In the past two years, they have given two concerts which easily excelled anything of their kind ever before produced in Rochester. They have performed a real service for West High-ers in teaching them to appreciate the real thing. Formerly, if anything but "jazz" were played, the "studes" fidgeted boredly. But now they listen eagerly to the delightfully appropriate selections offered and invariably clap and stamp for more.

Let us give full credit to Mr. Clute and the members of the Band and Orchestra and offer our appreciation and support to their untiring efforts.

Walter Taylor, '23.

The Glee Club

The West High Glee Clubs have been doing things ever since the school started in 1905, here's a little reminder of some of them.

Each year they have given a concert at the School, called the Annual Home Concert. They have sung at Thanksgiving time at the Eastman Theater, the Temple Theater and the Baptist Temple.

They have appeared at Convention Hall before the Teachers' Conventions held there and have participated in the ceremonies at the opening of Schools.

We have not room to quote all the occasions when the Glee Clubs held forth so successfully, but must add the important facts that:

"Pinafore" was given last year and was a huge success—also that the 1923 Concert was held May 25 at the School when the members of the Clubs and Mr. Spouse provided a treat that it was well worth while coming a long way to hear.

STUART MENZIES

Class Prophecy

HAS the jury reached a verdict? said the judge slowly. Immediately silence pervaded the court room. I hurriedly glanced about the hall while my troubled brain was harassed by reminiscent thoughts. There was Stuart Menzies, the judge, in all his dignity and austerity. At his right sat the plaintiff, George Esterly, and his attorney, George Jackson. The plaintiff carefully scrutinized my countenance to see with what emotion I would receive the jury's verdict, which would either condemn or acquit me. His face was lighted with a cynical smile as if he were sure that he would win the case, and that he at last had me where he wanted me. On the right of this relentless foe was Clayton Kennedy, who, with Earl Grau, was conducting the prosecution. They both looked so cruelly triumphant, that to reassure myself I glanced down at George Silberstein and Philip Garbutt, my attorneys. They were waiting with breathless attention to hear the pronouncement of the verdict. They had strained every nerve to save me from the cruel accusations of the opposition. They had even managed to have the jury composed of my West High school-mates.

I again glanced at these beings who held my fate in the balance, but all I could see through the haze of fear, was the printed record of the jury which George Silberstein had shown me.

1. Myrtice Splitt—The original designer of Tut gowns.
2. Esther Kindelen—Cartoonist.
3. Anthony Picciotti—Labor Union leader.
4. Dorothy Conn—Milliner.
5. Virginia Arnold—China painter.
6. Margaret Bevan—Telephone girl.
7. Lois Weller—Dressmaker.
8. Russell Colton—Watch maker.
9. Florence Freeman—Governess.
10. Harold Millott—Butcher.
11. Velma Dokter—Teacher of Mathematics.

The foreman of the jury, Dudley Sheeler, was standing with an expression of utter gloom on his face. He too had evidently been thinking over old times, as the judge again thundered, "Has the jury reached a decision?"

"It has," muttered Dudley. "We find the prisoner guilty of killing time in the third degree Centigrade." I was doomed!

A sigh was heard from the spectators. Looking that way I saw Bessie Broadbridge, Charlotte Peckham, and Ruth Witters, all applying handkerchiefs to their orbs. Helen Waugh, with Marion Tuttle and Lillian Coyle, who were of a more demonstrative nature, was obliged to retire from the room. They were gallantly assisted by the door-tenders, Leonard Mingus and Wilson Ives. I had learned from my attorneys that these former class-mates of mine had become artists (?) in Greenwich Village. This partly accounts for their temperamental nature, although judging from the sort of assistance they received, I was in doubt as to the real cause of their tearful collapse. Constance Polla, the wealthy divorcee of Baron Sands, came sauntering up the aisle. She had been represented in the divorce proceedings by the lawyers, Kennedy and Grau. From this group I turned my attention to the clerks of the court who were none other than Clifford Wing and Katrela Maston, busily taking down the details of my doom.

At this juncture, Judge Menzies solemnly pronounced, "The convicted shall be electrocuted until he is dead—dead—dead, at dawn tomorrow!"

Accordingly I was roughly seized by the turn-key whom I vaguely recognized as Floyd Akins. He hurried me off to my cell to await my doom. A little later Floyd mechanically shoved in some food, and with it a box of roses from George Caswell, the florist. He said he was sorry not to be present in the court room when I was convicted, but he hoped he could "Say it with Flowers." He certainly did, as I had hay fever all the evening.

I have always heard that the suspense before being electrocuted is worse than the ordeal itself. So I thought it best to occupy my mind as much as I could by reading a pamphlet on the "Prevention and Means of Combatting Fires," sent to me by Theodore Case, chief of the fire department. He said he had heard of my misfortune, and thought I might be interested, especially at such a time. He added that he had told Bob Clothier, a dealer in men's furnishings, to send me a palm beach suit. They always were thoughtful fellows.

Around 99 P. M., just as I was thinking about retiring, realizing I had a long journey before me on the morrow, into my cell walked Richard Cromwell and Gordon Cowles. They informed me that they remembered me at West High, and had come to cheer me up. I later found out that they were in partnership in the undertaking business, and had really come to win a new victim.

After the departure of these cheery guests, I threw myself on my downy couch, endeavoring to divert my mind, by thinking of the happy and innocent times I had had at West High. I was thus engaged, and half asleep, when Akins, the gloomy turn-key, again appeared. He yawned indifferently and explained that he had come to ask if I had any last requests to make, as he might forget to ask me in the morning.

At that moment exhaustion became dictator over my consciousness, and I sank into sleep. Floyd's hair began to whiten and grow long. His uniform gradually faded into a white shroud. In his right hand, in place of his keys, he held a whetstone, and in his left hand a scythe gradually was formed from his night stick. Lastly his shoes were changed into sandals. I immediately recognized the product of this metamorphosis as Father Time. His lips, grim with age, parted, and he repeated in a hollow voice, the question just asked by the turn-key.

"Show me," I said in answer, "the rest of my West High classmates whom I haven't seen today. This is my last request."

The specter gravely whetted his blade, prophesied, "At midnight thou shalt see them," and vanished.

At twelve, the spirit again appeared. In his hand was a brightly burning candle which lit up the cell, in a dazzling white light. The figure at last said, "Follow me." Accordingly I arose and followed. I was suddenly conscious of very rapid motion which lasted but a minute. My guide held aloft his candle, crying, "Behold the living!"

Immediately I recognized the familiar scene of the principal's office at West High. Lynn Nicholson, the principal, was conversing with Genevieve Reidenbach, the girls' adviser, and Helen Ryan, an English teacher. It appeared that one of the girls was about to be expelled.

"Well, you see," explained Lynn, "her home life is poor. She has been brought up by a governess, Vivienne Peters, who is very inefficient. Her father, a window-cleaner, divorced her mother, Edna Rossney, on the grounds of the breakfast coffee. They are still fighting about the alimony."

Passing from this acrimonious scene to the corridor, I spied Esther Haines, Flora Sigel, and Elizabeth Stone. They had evidently come back to visit their Alma Mater. From their conversation I gathered that Esther had gained considerable fame as a golf champion. Flora and Elizabeth had just returned from the Philippines, where they had been doing missionary work.

My guide then led the way to the library where Ruth Asmus was presiding over the dusty volumes. She was recommending to a student, a book on etiquette, written by Florence McCormack and Betty Graul.

In room 307 I found Marjorie Keith and Erva Kent, who were Latin teachers, talking over things in general. In Erva's hand I noticed a Latin text by Louise Leadley. Incidentally I also noted that the book was published by McNab and Pettengill of New York City.

"I received a letter from Ruth Greene yesterday," said Marjorie. "You know she is with Harriett Neun, teaching in a school in Paris. She also said that they were invited to a reception held by Harry Sylvester. Harry is minister to France."

Marjorie also mentioned that Jennie Jacques and Thelma Hoesterey are in France endeavoring to improve their accent, as they are planning to teach French in West High later on.

The ghost then moved on and I followed; passing through the nether regions of the old school, I recognized Bill Cobb playing the part of janitor, Elizabeth Herrick acting as gym teacher, and Alice Cravath in charge of the lunch room.

Of course we could not fail to visit the smoking parlor of West High. However in place of the old familiar names, "Ballagh and Sattler," we saw "Holloran and Scott." My grim guide led the way through the closed door. Inside we saw, sure enough, Walt and Judson viley tempting the innocent youth of the school.

Through the murky screen of tobacco smoke I was able to distinguish Tom Harrington in the garb of a gob. He was growling around, telling tales of the brutishness of his superior officer, Kenneth Mathews, on the good ship, "Soap Bubbles."

"By the way," said Tom to Judson, "I saw John Couper, and Ray Webber posing as cops on the water-front when we pulled into New York bay, the last time. They surely didn't mind having everybody know they were cops. They were foolin' around lookin' for trouble until they spied a hobo loafin' around. They both wanted the honor of arresting him, especially as he turned out to be Waldemar Hurst."

Fortunately we soon left this depraved den and I found myself in front of the White House entrance with my solemn guide pointing to an approaching limousine, which drew up at the curb. I was somewhat surprised to see Harry Courtney descend from the chauffeur's seat, and open the door. Lester Langenburger, the stock broker, was the first to emerge from the machine, and his partners in business, Dorothy Cotrael and Gerry Baker. Strange as it may seem, Dorothy and Gerry seemed to be on good terms. Lester escorted the ladies to the door, my guide and I following.

The door was opened by a tall, stately butler, in green and gold livery, whom I recognized as Lowell MacMillan. As he ushered them into the reception hall they didn't dare speak, but I know he recognized them, as he gave them a sly little wink. As I approached the receiving line, I couldn't help feeling proud that I had been in the same class at school with the President, Paul Herrick.

All this time I was conscious of hearing dulcet strains of music. One glance was enough to convince me that I had seen the members of the orchestra before. Milt Seager and Harold East were violinists, Reg Westbrook coaxed the saxophone, while Walt Taylor slid the trombone. At the piano I recognized Garratt Crebbin, and at his right Ray Beckwith played the drums. Thurlow Hasley was clarinetist and Harry Drost played the flute. It was rather jazzy for a White House reception. The people appeared to enjoy it though.

In one corner of the room I saw poor Gordon Grant, a member of the House of Representatives, surrounded by Helen Tanger, Ruth Groves, and Doris Morrill, who were also members of the House. It looked as if Gordon was rather popular with the ladies. This group was being eyed with scorn by Milton Lewis and William Lauterbach, who stood aloof, as they boasted of being senators.

Of course Barbara Beach was present, having just returned from Europe, where she is editor of a French political newspaper. She was conversing with Marguerite Caverly and Esther Diver, who were doing social settlement work in the Bowery of New York City.

From the conversation, it was evident that they had heard from other West High people. Alice Jones and Naomi Klick were travelling the country, demonstrating Jell-o. It also appeared that Elizabeth Roblin and Marion Perrin had set up a private school for young girls in Kalamazoo.

"Miss Beach, I believe," I heard a voice exclaim. "I'm very glad to see you again, after all these years."

I turned to recognize the Secretary of State, Edward Vragel. He continued talking with Barbara, telling her that he had heard Margaret Young and Buenita Campbell in a joint recital. Both are pianists of unusual ability. He also said that he had met Dorothy Miller and Alice Strobel at the recital. It seemed they are studying anthropology in a Western college.

Barbara said that she had been told that Herbert Loeffler was endeavoring to earn his bread and butter by practicing painless dentistry. It appeared that at present he is hiring Grace Davie and Eola Dunton as his assistants.

The evening wore merrily on, while my attendant and I watched, invisible to others, in the middle of the evening Genevieve Lyon came into the reception hall. She had just arrived from abroad, and intends to lecture in this country on spiritualism.

At last the butler, Charles Groff, appeared with the grub. He pompously dispensed the refreshments with the aid of Henrietta Young and Elva Woods, who act as the President's chief waitresses.

As the guests departed, my taciturn guide moved on until I noticed Abraham Meyer nervously scribbling down shorthand notes. Glancing at one of the overturned sheets I read that Esther Mohr and Harold Wollenhaupt were having a successful engagement with the Metropolitan Opera Company. Further down I saw the familiar names of Alfred Perrot, Ben Del Monico and Orpha Lindsay in the Boston Symphony orchestra. Alford and Ben, of course, were violinists and Orpha was rivaling Orpheus himself, at the harp, according to Abraham's account.

I was rudely interrupted here by my spirit guide. He had grown considerably older, and his candle was rapidly getting shorter. "Time is fleeting," he warned in a husky voice. We therefore, hurried out of the White House, just in time to see Charles Fincout drive away in a big car—he was the chauffeur).

On our turning around about 180 degrees the scene was immediately changed to an exposition held at Rochester. Here I saw Alma Heib and Anna Dowling trying desperately to sell a bristleless hairbrush, for bald people, to Ruth Holmes. Ruth, who is a hair dresser, was very irate to have the demonstrators think that she was bald.

At another booth I recognized Katherine Church and Marguerite Bennett endeavoring to convince George Lane, a book agent in the adjacent stall, of the unsurpassable advantage of noiseless chewing gum, invented and patented by Eleanor Byers.

Farther down the aisle I perceived a large throng gathered about a fiery soap box orator. He was no other than Raynal Andrews.

On emerging into the open air, I beheld two aeroplanes, soaring above, while "Betty" Kindelen and Donna Lavery daringly performed acrobatic feats. I found later that Herbert Levinson was piloting one of the machines. He always was going up in the air for nothing at all.

As I approached the beach, a very dramatic incident took place. A man out in the watery waves was calling desperately for aid. His cries were heard by the two women life guards on the beach, Amy Kaiser and Marjorie Ferris. A heroic rescue was effected and John Horner, the drowning man, was saved. He said he'd been a farmer all his life and hadn't had much time to learn to swim. He was all right after Beverly Ward, a nearby physician, administered artificial respiration.

The next scene which was presented was in a theater during a vaudeville performance. Elizabeth Harry and Lillian Fuhrmann were appearing as magicians. All went well until they filled a bottle of "Old Crow" out of a silk hat. The riot which resulted threatened to curtail the evening's performance. The second act was a real old time, wild and woolly melodrama. Ada Arthur took the part of the "shero." The villain with his pointed mustache and gleaming teeth was represented by Laurence Steele. Irving Briggs took the part of the good-hearted hero, who gets a sliver in his hand from patting his enraged rocking horse. The entire act nearly became a fizzle because the hero had much difficulty in extricating the cruel particle of wood from his hand. The little sister who always asks the embarrassing questions was represented by Marion Rossney, while Grace Miller took the part of the kind old mother. The act was so well done that Geraldine McIntyre and Lois Mabbutt, spectators, fainted when the villain shot the hero and carried off the heroine. Beatrice Holliger and Iris Keller, ushers in the theater, were obliged to drag the prostrate forms to an exit for air.

The following performance was the inevitable stale joke discourse, intermingled with chorus girls, dances and songs. Charles Hallock was the joke cracker, while Anna McKinney was the famous woman ventriloquist. I am sure some of the jokes given by Charles and Anna that night, were dug out of King Tut's tomb. The chorus was made up (they were made up all right) of Marjorie Costello, Izora Emery, Marie Farrow, Margaret Thurston, Lois Smith, Helen Whipple, Eleanor Kemp, Dorothy Henry and Virginia Wagner.

The concluding act was a dance by Mildred Alexander, Margaret Simms and Janet Williamson on a tight rope. All went well until the rope broke, causing the discontinuance of the act. However, the management was glad to announce that the world renowned jugglers would finish out the act. Forthwith the Gugini brothers rolled out. Samuel swallowed swords, while Joseph walked on his eye-teeth.

From this frivolous scene my guide instantaneously transported me to a church. The chief attraction was an afternoon wedding. While we waited in the vestibule, Lillian Stoneburg and Margaret Scanlon swept by. Margaret, I later learned, was editing a society journal, "The Scanlan Scandals." Lillian was a designer and had come to the wedding for the sole purpose of getting ideas for new styles. These guests were quickly followed by Edythe LeFevre and Doris Lyons, partners in a hairdressing establishment. From their conversation I gathered that Lucille Miller, Mildred Jones and Marjorie Mattice had also planned to attend the wedding. However, they were nurses and were obliged to stay on duty at the hospital because the head nurse, Virginia Morse, had mistaken some bichloride of mercury tablets for aspirin, and given them to Jeanette Hillhouse. It is certain that Jean will never have another headache.

The guests were formally ushered to their respective seats by the ushers, Wesley Johnson, Austin Grapenstatter, Ogden Fitzsimmons, Edward Sheridan, Stanley Isbister and Harry Balton. At the organ I recognized Duane Osburn. He soon piped up with the "Matrimonial Blues." He always was a tactful cus.

At last the bride, Thelma Wright, came gracefully up the aisle. Lois Wahl was the maid of honor, while Thelma Detweiler, Harriet Boldt, Florence Armstrong, Mary Allen, Edna Graves and Aurelia Marchant were the bridesmaids. The opposing forces consisted of Franklin Mullan, best man, with the groom, Baron Something-or-other. The services were conducted by the Rev. Robert Bailey, D. D.

Some of the other guests present were Adolf Rittman and Howard Rowley. In order to come to the wedding they had left their astronomical laboratory, where they have been discovering movie stars. Thelma White and Frances Warren were also present. As they are now architects, they came to interest the bride and groom in plans for a new home.

At this time my guide looked at his light and seeing that it was almost gone said, "Thou must read, if thou would'st know. Behold!" I now saw a newspaper before me and realized that I must hurry if I was to complete my recollections of my former classmates. On the front page there was a brief notice that Arthur Schlueter, the sculptor, had been hired by Congress to erect a statue of the famous poet, Paul Mitchell, in the Congressional library. Ruth Halladay, Fannie Boyer, Marie Meyer and Elizabeth Williams had presented a petition to the Governor, Reed Rowley, that the use and sale of all tobacco be prohibited. Stacey Statius, professor in Harvard University, had been made ambassador to Greece. Underneath was an announcement that a scentless onion had been manufactured by the noted household chemist, Alice Payne.

On the sporting page was a cartoon by Arthur Groff. I also noticed that Bill Lutz had pitched a ball game of eighty-one strikes. The manager has now cut down the team to a pitcher and catcher. Farther down I noticed that Mildred Smith had carried off the prize for the 100 meter dash of the Olympic games, while Elsie McKelvie set a new record in high hurdles.

On the editorial page appeared a very favorable book review written by Mary Hillen, the librarian for the League of Nations. The book was called "Rhymes of a Forester and His Dog," by Frank Reed.

Turning now to the advertising section, I saw that Frederick Wahl and Marguerite Ridgely were giving dancing lessons. Helen Benton was employed by the "Foolish Four" Motor Company to instruct their women customers in the art of driving. Another section announced that Esther Clarke and Elsie Boltz had set up a detective agency. Fred Fish announced that he desired a position as an expert seal trainer. It sounded consistent. Marie Kewley and Mildred Lodder desired students to learn the "Hunt and Peck" typewriting system. Jacques Hammond and George White were opening their modern studio for first class photography. Marion Donovan, head of the humane society, desired a secretary to take down the last wills and testaments of the doomed animals. Millard Moynihan, a wealthy jeweler, advertised for a trustworthy clerk. Those desiring fancy Persian or Angora cats were directed to apply to Sadie Manzler and Mildred Mender, who have been raising cats since the fall of the Persian Empire. Barton Edgerton had received a doctor's degree and was establishing a "horse-pital" where he and Frederick Arnold were planning to build up a veterinary practice. The 47th National Bank also advertised for a messenger. Those interested were to apply to Stephen McNall, the president. Bill Bacon and Al Stalker announced that after tuning the West High piano, they were ready to take over the most difficult cases of piano tuning. The Secretary of the Y. W. C. A., Eleanor Croston, announced that they had secured Lillian Boehler as swimming teacher and that those interested in joining should see either Emma Louise Goodwillie or Lois Clark, who were assistant secretaries in the membership drive.

The Spirit then slowly vanished and I was awakened by Norman Werner and Kenneth Martin, who had heard of my conviction and had come to my aid. Norman was Secretary of the Board of Pardons, and Kenneth was heading the Prison Reform League. Together they had appealed to the Governor on the ground that Russel Colton, on the purty, was prejudiced on killing time as he was a watch-maker, and before my eyes they held the blessed vision of my pardon!!

History Class June, '23

June 20, 1930.

Dear Helen:

This afternoon as I was looking through a box in which I had placed a number of old keepsakes, I found the diary which I kept while I was in West High. Looking through it brought back to my mind the memory of the splendid times we had. Our June, '23 class certainly was a peppy, spirited class, wasn't it? I've copied here a few extracts from the diary because I was sure you'd be as interested as I.

November 23, 1919—Mother and I came up to school in the evening for Freshman Reception. We went around to all my teachers. There was an entertainment in the Assembly. Mr. Bennett said that our class was the largest that had ever entered.

December 5, 1919—I learned today that the June, '23 boys had won the class soccer championship. We shine!!

May 11, 1920—Plans started for some sort of a picnic or May walk. Judging from the interest shown it's bound to be a success.

May 22, 1920—We girls had our picnic at Corbett's Glen. We started in morning, took lunch, wore old clothes. Had a wonderful day and a wonderful time. Everyone started home, happy, none the worse for falling in the stream.

October 31, 1920—First joint party, a Hallowe'en Masquerade. Stunts in the assembly, eats, and peppy music for dancing, although boys were most prominent along the walls (perhaps for moral support).

November 5, 1921—We had another Hallowe'en Masquerade. This was even better than the one last year. Everyone was better acquainted, and the boys had lost most of their (?) bashfulness.

April 2, 1922—Tryouts for Junior Play. Mrs. Ellis said that she had never seen a greater display of interest by any other class. The play is going to be "The Little Teacher" by James Matthew Barrie. It has a very interesting plot. The two Junior classes combine for this.

April 28, 1922—Junior Play. Play turned out well in every detail. Everyone enjoyed it and said that there was real talent shown.

May 26, 1922—Junior Dance. The decorations were tiny paper roses and foliage which formed a bower over the whole corridor. In the center was a fountain. All the committee work was done splendidly, and the affair was proclaimed a success.

November 17, 1922—One of the big events of the year, the Senior Dance. We held it at Madison Junior High in order to have more floor space. Both January and June, '23 combined in the efforts and shared in the success of it.

December 8, 1922—Senior classes gave "Quality Street." Margaret Simms took the leading part. "Couldn't have been better" so exclaimed the "Rooter."

April 6, 1923—Assembly today! Mr. Bennett announced the Honor Roll. The largest in the history of West High!

Doesn't the remembrance of these few dates make you feel all alive and tingly with the spirit that we had back in high school? I guess our mothers and dads were right when they said that our high school days would be among the happiest in our life, but, we were doubly fortunate in being in the June, '23 class, weren't we?

I've dug up so much of the past that I haven't time for a real letter, but I'll write more later.

Love,

ELEANOR.

CLASS COUNCIL

Class Will

WE, the deceased class of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, being of equable temper, brilliant mind, and general good looks, feeling exceedingly sorry for any school which is so unfortunate as to lose our valued presence, must, nevertheless, depart and leave behind us, this, our hindmost will and anthropomological testament, in other words, that is to say, in manner following:

First—To the boys' and girls' gymnasiums—SPACE.

Second—To Ted Dimon, a package of Life Savers for Safety's Sake in appearing late at the office.

Third—To those Whom It May Concern, one arm chair with head rest and footstool to match, to be Placed Under the Office Clock.

Fourth—To Gerald O'Dell, we bequeath one "What's Wrong With This Picture?"

Fifth—To the Undergraduates who shall tread the platform in Assembly, we leave one Congoleum rug.

Sixth—To Merit Hutchinson we devise one package of Yeast Foam Tablets in hopes that he may rise.

Seventh—To the beloved lunchroom we leave six carpet sweepers and two dozen table cloths.

Eighth—To Marve Howk, we bequeath one season ticket to Otto's Dancing Class.

Ninth—To the West High Elevator, we devise one bell boy namely, Bill Whaley, having a blue uniform and brass buttons thereupon, to see that the famous elevator is kept in good running order.

Tenth—To Miss Fannie A. Pratt, we give a set of Walter Camp's "Daily Dozen."

Eleventh—To Miss Cook and Mr. Rourke, after having advised this class, we devise one bottle of smelling salts each, for use in recovering from the after effects of the above advising.

Twelfth—To the Science Club bulletin board in the first floor corridor, we bequeath one fire alarm for use when the contents of the aforementioned bulletin board become too inflammatory.

Thirteenth—To the entire executive force of West High School, we leave our sincere thanks for their benevolence, patience, and co-operation.

Fourteenth—To Mr. Bennett, Miss Manchester and Mr. Sias, we bequeath our blessings. They'll need 'em!

Fifteenth—To the illicit paths leading to the Carlines, we devise at least three tons of chestnut burrs to be sprinkled thereupon, the which we hope will prevent the future prodigies of West High from treading on the above thereupon.

Sixteenth—To Bobby Fisher, we bequeath a "Skin You Love to Touch."

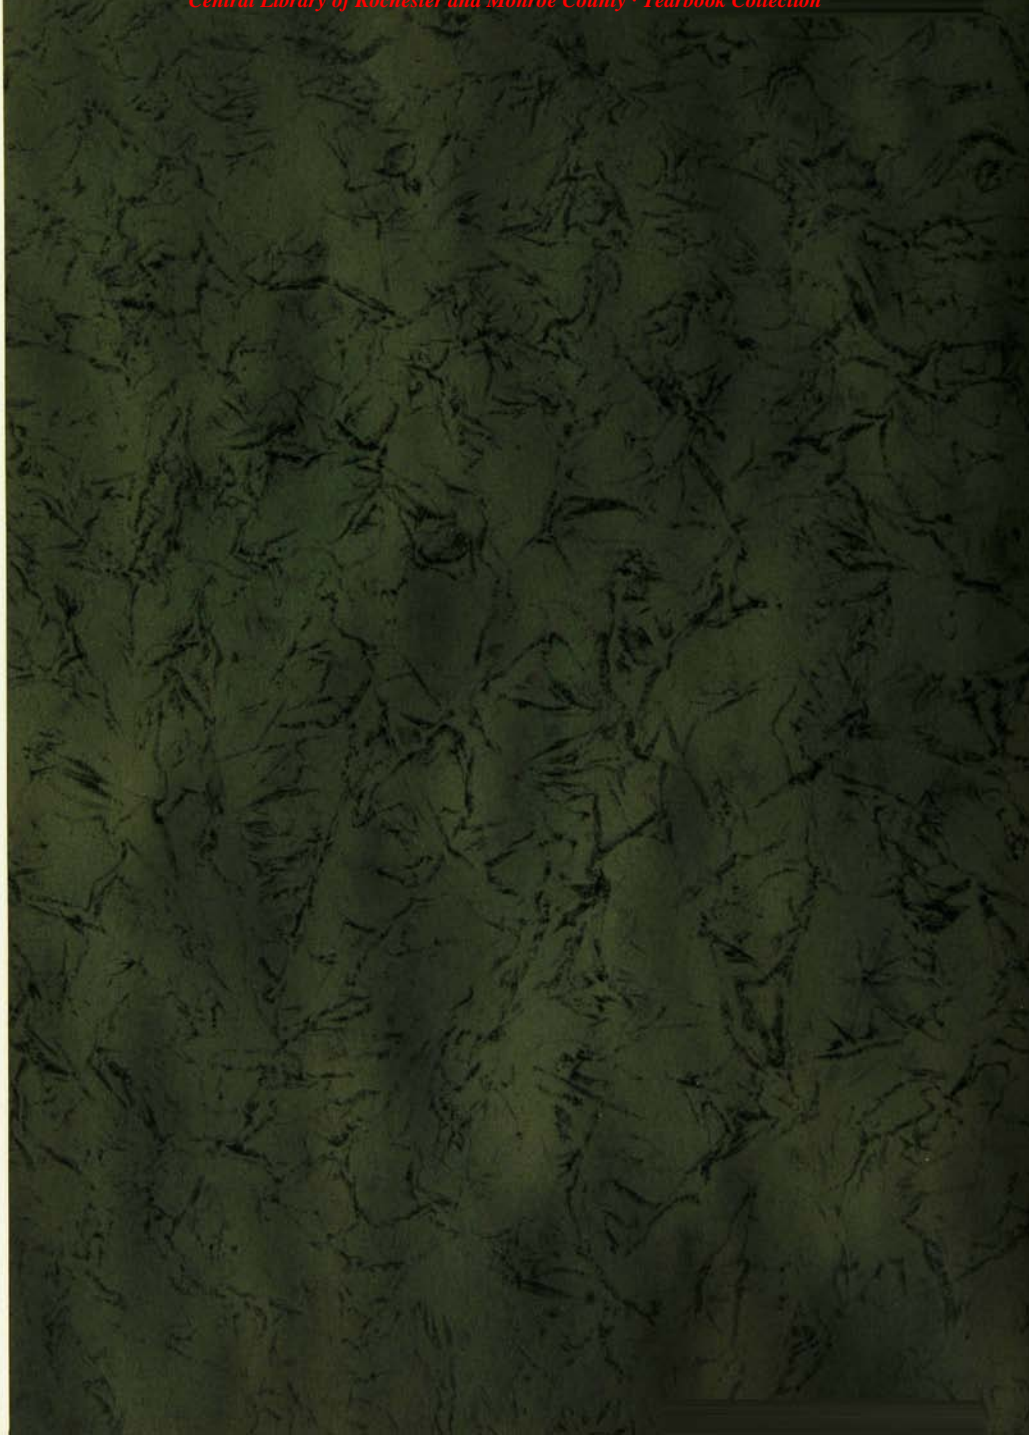

Seventeenth and Lastly—One eiderdown-trimmed and fur lined overcoat to the Flying Victory who has always worried us because she looks chilly.

Given under our united "Boots and Saddles" and sealed with the well known LePage's Glue (sticks, there's a reason) this eighth day of the month of June and so on and so forth, Amen, Finis, The End.

Temperature has a definite effect upon health.

Upon the ability of man to adapt himself to the varying degrees of heat and cold depends to a large extent on the condition of his bodily health.

This accounts for the universal interest in temperature. People want to know "How cold it is?" or "How warm it is?" because of that instinctive feeling that scientific guidance in this particular is necessary.

Here Tycos Thermometers step to the aid of humanity.

They direct with precision our control of the heat factors in life.

These heat conditions affect our health during our hours of work, rest and leisure. Proper control of them means healthfully heated homes, offices, factories; well cooked food prepared without waste; fewer calls on the doctors now overworked in the task of keeping the nation well.

With Tycos Thermometers as a guide in temperature factors you are assured of accuracy, vital indeed in temperature indications.

Manufactured by an organization that produces over 8000 instruments to measure and control heat conditions, Tycos Thermometers represent a point in development invaluable to a nation bent upon living less wastefully and more scientifically.

A MAN IS JUDGED BY HIS APPEARANCE

One of the most simple ways to improve one's appearance is to keep the hair well dressed. Exquisite Hair Cream is a delightful preparation for the hair and is not in any way oily or greasy and it will bring out the natural gloss of the hair—Beware of imitations.

The Name WALK-OVER

What it stands for

A system of shoe factories and shoe stores covering the face of the earth.

Founded by George E. Keith 49 years ago.

An organization of trained men who have devoted their lives to perfecting and selling shoes.

Its one object is to give every day to every man and woman who comes to a Walk-Over store the utmost in style, fit, and wear—to do this at a price saving.

NO BETTER FUN THAN CANOEING

And no canoe more satisfactory than the Old Town Canoe. The Old Towns are refined Indian models built on steel forms making them true to line. They are covered with a special canvas filled with a secret preparation which render the same long-lived and absolutely waterproof. A little care will make your Old Town last from twelve to fifteen years—many good looking Old Towns over twenty years old still in use around Rochester.

There are models for big water, for river and stream work, for white water and long portage.

It will be to your advantage to reserve your canoe now from the carload lot we have in stock, as you save quite a bit in the price of freight and the price of decorations over canoes specially ordered during the summer season.

THE GREAT OUTDOORS

That is the goal of your thoughts as summer rounds into form and school days are fast becoming but a memory.

Oh, what good times, you will have, in the camp, at the seashore, in the mountains, at the lake—wherever it may be! And there'll be tennis and baseball and golf and fishing and swimming—and Oh, Boy—just to think of it!

Before you actually go we hope to supply you with the necessary luggage, clothing, camp equipment, and various sporting goods supplies you will need—don't forget that we have all these things and can take the best of care of you.

Here's hoping we may have a hand in making your vacation this year the very best ever.

SIBLEY, LINDSAY & CURR CO.

HAVE YOU GIVEN THIS SUBJECT CAREFUL THOUGHT?

After graduation from West High, will your further studies fit you for some definite occupation in industrial or professional life?

Year after year, here at Mechanics Institute, young men and women are finding it possible to obtain well paying positions as the results of their training in courses in Industrial, Household and Applied Arts.

These are practical subjects that find a response in business life; and the opportunities along these lines offer unlimited possibilities.

And, too, the advantage of being able to live at home while studying has its economic value.

A personal visit to the Institute will be worth while. Any day is visiting day.
